Bot.: An old genus of Artocarpaceæ, formed to include the cow-tree of South America. The genus is now made a synonym of Brosimum, and the cow-tree is named B. Galactodendron.

gą-lăc'-tō-gŏgues, gą-lăc'-tą-gŏgues, s. pl. [Gr. γάλα (gala), genit. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk, and ἄγω (agō) = to induce.]

Med.: Medicines which promote the secretion of milk.

găl-ăc-tŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Gr. γάλα (gala), genit. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk, and μέτρον (metron) = a measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the quality of milk by its specific gravity; a lactometer. It consists of a stem and bulb, the latter charged with shot serving as ballast, so that it floats upright in the milk, the relative specific gravity being indicated by the centesimally graduated stem.

găl-ăc-tŏph'-ą-gĭst, s. [Gr. γάλα (gala), genit. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk, and φαγεῖν (phagein) = to eat.] One who subsists on milk.

găl-ăc-tŏph'-ą-gŏŭs, a. [Gr. γάλα (gala), genit. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk, and φαγεῖν (phagein) = to eat.] Feeding or subsisting on milk.

ga-lăc-tō-phor-ĭ'-tĭs, s. [Gr. γάλακτο-φορος (galaktophoros) = giving milk: γάλα (gala) = milk, and φόρος (phoros) = bearing; suff. -itis = denoting inflammation; Fr. galactophorite.]

Med.: Inflammation of the lacteal ducts.

găl-ăc-tŏph'-ôr-oŭs, a. [Gr. γάλα (gala), genit. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk, and φερω (pherō) = to bear, to produce.]

Ord. Lang. & Anat.: Producing milk; sometimes applied to the Lacteal ducts (q.v.).

ga-lăc-tō-pŏĭ'-ĕt'-ĭc, a. & s. [Gr. γάλα (gala), genit. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk, and ποιητικός (poiētikos) = making or tending to make; ποιέω (poieō) = to make.]

A. As adj.: Increasing or tending to increase the flow of milk.

B. As subst.: A substance which increases or tends to increase the flow of milk.

ga-lăc'-tōse, s. [Gr. γάλα (gala), genit. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk, and Eng. suff. -ose (Chem.) (q.v.).]

Chem.: $C_6H_{12}O_6$, also called Arabinose. Obtained along with dextrose by boiling milk sugar [Lactose] with dilute sulphuric acid, neutralizing with chalk; filtering, from the filtrate the galactose crystallizes out first. It can be purified from dextrose by being less soluble in absolute alcohol. Galactose crystallizes in large rhombic prisms, which melt at 142°; they are very soluble in hot water, insoluble in absolute alcohol and in ether. It reduces four moleeules of cuprie sulphate. Nitric acid, sp. gr. 1·2, oxidizes it into mucic acid. It does not ferment with yeast. By the action of sodium amalgam it is converted into dulcite.

gal-age, s. [Sp. galocha = a wooden shoe.] A clog; a wooden shoe. [Galoche.]

> "My heart-blood is well-nigh frorne, I feel;
> And my galage grown fast to my heel."
> Spenser: Shepheards Calender; February.

ga-lā'-gō, s. [Fr. galago, from the African name (?).]

Zool.: Galagos. A genus of Lemuridæ. The species have large orbits, so as to suit their nocturnal habits. They feed chiefly on fruits, devour vegetable gum, and inhabit the continent of Africa.

ga'-lăm, s. [An East Indian word (?).] See etym. and compound.

galam-butter, s.

Chem.: A solid fat resembling palm oil, obtained from Bassia Parkii and other species. It melts at 43°, and is soluble in ether. By saponification it yields stearic and palmitic acids; called also Shea-butter.

ga-lăn'-ga, ga-lăn'-gal, ga-lăn'-gāle, s. [Fr., Sp., & Ital. galanga; O. Fr. galingal; Arab. chalan, khalandj; Pers. khulandj = a tree from which wooden bowls are made.]

1. Bot.: Various species of Alpinia, specially A. Galanga, A. racemosa, A. Allughas, and A. pyramidalis.

2. The rhizomes of Alpinia Galanga, a native of China and Java. They are aromatic, and contain a volatile oil and a crystalline substance called Kaempferide. There are several other roots called by this name: they are used as an aromatic medicine in China.

găl'-ant, *gal-aunt, a. & s. [Gallant.]

găl-ăn'-thŭs, s. [Gr. γάλα (gala) = milk, and ἄνθος (anthos) = blossom, flower.]

Bot.: Snowdrop. A genus of Amaryllids, tribe Amarylleæ. The perianth is six-partite, campanulate, the three outer sepals spreading, the three inner smaller; erect, emarginate, no crown. Two species are known; both grow in Europe. Galanthus nivalis is the common Snowdrop, which may, in the opinion of Sir Joseph Hooker, be really wild in Herefordshire and Denbighshire. It flowers from January to March. [Snowdrop.]

găl-an-tine', s. [Fr., from a root gal-, seen in Ger. gallerte = jelly; cf. Lat. gelo = to congeal.]

Cookery: A dish of veal, sucking-pig, chicken, or other white meat, freed from bone, tied up, boiled, covered with a jelly, and served cold.

ga-lănt'-ly, a. [A corrupt. of gallant (q.v.).]

galanty show, s. A miniature shadow pantomime. Sometimes the figures are thrown upon a screen by a magic lantern.

> "That reminiscence of the nursery, the galanty-show."—Cassell's Technical Educator, pt. x., p. 244.

găl-ą-pĕc'-tīte, s. [Ger. galapectit, from Gr. γάλα (gala) = milk; πηκτός (pēktos) = curdled, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A variety of ordinary Halloysite, from Anglar. (Dana.)

Găl-ą-tē'-ą, s. [Lat.]

1. Class. Myth.: A sea-nymph, daughter of Nereus and Doris, and passionately fond of Acis, a shepherd of Sicily, whom the Cyclop Polyphemus, out of jealousy, killed with a fragment of broken rock.

2. Astron.: [Asteroid, 74].

găl-ą-thē'-ą, s. [Galatea.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Galatheidæ (q.v.). Galathea strigosa is found in the Mediterranean, in Cornwall, &c.

găl-ą-thē'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galathea, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of decapod Crustaceans, sub-order Anomoura, which they connect with the Macrura.

Ga-lā'-tĭ-ąn (tĭ as shĭ), a. & s. [Gr.]

I. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Galatia, a country of Asia Minor, lying south of Paphlagonia, west of Pontus, and north-east of Phrygia. It was originally a part of Phrygia, but the Gauls or Celts having invaded Asia in several bodies, conquered and settled in this country about B.C. 241, whence the name.

2. As subst.: A native or inhabitant of Galatia.

¶ St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians:

Scripture Canon: A New Testament Epistle, stated in ch. i. v. 1 to have been written by the Apostle Paul, a claim admitted by the ancient church universally, and by nearly all the ablest modern critics. It is one of the four epistles considered by Ferdinand Baur as genuine. St. Paul, who generally, it appears, used an amanuensis, wrote this epistle with his own hand (vi. 11). It was penned just after a visit by the apostle to the Galatian church (i. 6). Two such visits had taken place; the first, during which he founded the Galatian church, was about A.D. 51 or 50 (Acts xvi. 2); the second was about A.D. 55 (Acts xviii. 23). In ch. iv. 16 a first visit is alluded to, implying that there had been a second. The epistle, then, was not penned till at least A.D. 55, and probably not until A.D. 57 or 58, during the first part of the Apostle's residence at Ephesus (xix. 10). The subscription at the end of the epistle which shews that it was written from Rome, though accepted by Baur, is rejected by most critics. The Galatian church consisted mainly of Gentile converts. On these Paul did not impose the yoke of the Mosaic ritual, though he was willing to tolerate its use among the Jewish proselytes. No sooner had he departed, however, than Judaising teachers appeared in the Galatian church, represented that Paul was not on a level with the Apostles originally chosen, but a mere subordinate agent whom they had sent forth; that his teaching with regard to the law of Moses was in conflict with that of Peter, and that circumcision was indispensably necessary to salvation. In reply to these teachers, Paul showed that he was a real Apostle (i. 15, &c.), and that he met the other apostles on such a footing of equality, that on one occasion he had withstood Peter to the face when he was to be blamed (ii. 11–14, &c.). He reproaches them for their fickleness in so quickly turning from the pure to the perverted gospel (i. 6–9; iii. 1, &c.), exhorts them not to relapse from Christian liberty into the bondage of Judaism (iii., iv., v.), and concludes with practical exhortations (vi.).

găl'-ăx, s. [Gr. γαλαξαῖος (galaxaios) = milky, milk-white; γάλα (gala) = milk; in allusion to the milk-white spikes of flowers.]

Bot.: A genus of Diapensiaceæ or of Pyrolaceæ. Galax aphylli, a small plant growing wild in the southern part of the United States, is sometimes seen in gardens here.

ga-lăx'-ĭ-as, s. [Gr. γαλαξαῖος (galaxaios) = milky.]

Ichthy.: The typical genus of the family Galaxiidæ (q.v.).

ga-lăx'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galaxias, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ichthy.: A family of Teleostean fishes, sub-order Physostomata. It was founded by Prof. Muller. They are akin to the Salmonidæ, but are destitute of an adipose fin and scales.

găl'-ax-ў, *ga-lăx'-ĭ-ăs, *gal-ax-ie, s. [Fr. galaxie, from Lat. galaxias, from Gr. γαλαξίας (galaxias) = the milky-way, γάλα (gala), gen. γάλακτος (galaktos) = milk.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II.

> "The galaxy, that milky way
> Which nightly, as a circling zone, thou seest > Powdered with stars." Milton: P. L., viii. 579.

2. Fig.: An assemblage of splendid persons or things.

> "The crowded, yet clean and luminous galaxies of imagery, diffused through the works of Bishop Taylor."—Dr. Parr. (Latham.)

II. Astron.: The Milky Way. It constitutes nearly a great circle inclined to the equinoctial at an angle of about 63°, and cutting that circle in right ascension 0h. 47′ and 12h. 47′, so that the northern and southern poles are situated, the one on right ascension 12h. 47′, declination N. 27°, and right ascension 0h. 47′, declination S. 27°. The milky appearance of the great belt or zone now described arises from the blended light of countless multitudes of stars, each doubtless a sun to some system of planets. Sir Wm. Herschel estimated that at one portion of the Milky Way 116,000 stars passed through the field of the telescope in a quarter of an hour, and on another occasion 258,000 stars in forty-one minutes. Here and there the Milky Way divides, especially at one spot, where there is a separation into two portions, somewhat resembling the projecting sides of a fishtail. Sir W. Herschel believes that stars are not scattered at tolerably uniform intervals through space, but are congregated at particular spots. The solar system is in a stratum of stars, the thickness of which is inconsiderable compared with its length and breadth. The sun is situated near the middle of the stratum, in proximity to the front, where it subdivides into two streams. Looking laterally to the right or left one sees out of the marching regiment of stars into comparatively vacant space, but looking forward or backward the front or rear can be seen blended together so as to constitute the appearance called the Milky Way. Among the other popular names given to the Galaxy are Jacob's Ladder, the Way to St. James's, Watling Street, &c.

găl'-bą, s. [A corruption of calaba, the West Indian name of the tree.] A durable wood produced by Calophyllum Calaba. [Calophyllum.]

găl'-bą-nŭm, s. [Lat. galbanum; Gr. γαλβάνη (galbanē); Heb. חֶלְבְּנָה (chhelbenah), from חֵלֶב or חֶלֶב (chhēleb) = fatness.]

1. Phar.: A gum resin obtained from an umbelliferous plant, Ferula galbaniflua. It is imported from Persia and India. It occurs in translucent masses of brownish yellow agglutinated tears, which have a peculiar smell, and a bitter acrid taste. It yields when distilled with water about seven per cent. of a volatile oil, having the formula $C_{10}H_{16}$, boiling at 160°; the residue, after boiling with milk of lime, and then precipitating the filtrate with hydrochloric acid, yields yellow resin, soluble in alcohol and ether. When the alcoholic solution of this resin is saturated with hydrochloric acid gas it yields umbelliferone. The purified resin yields by destructive distillation a blue oil, which boils at 289°, and has the formula $C_{20}H_{30}O$. It is said to be identical with the blue oil obtained from chamomile. Galbanum fused with caustic potash yields resorcin $C_6H_4(OH)_2$ (1-3). Galbanum is used to prepare Emplastrum Galbani, and is given internally as a stimulating expectorant.

2. Scrip.: The translation, galbanum, in Exod. xxx. 34, is probably correct. It was one ingredient in the holy anointing oil.

găl'-bu-la, s. [Lat. = a yellow bird, supposed to be the female of the Golden Oriole.]

Ornith.: Jacamar. The typical genus of the family Galbulinæ (q.v.). Example: Galbula paradisea, the Swallow-tailed Kingfisher of Surinam.

găl-bu-lī'-næ, s. pl. [Lat. galbul(a), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: Jacamars, a sub-family of Halcyonidæ (Kingfishers), which to a certain extent it connects with Meropidæ or Bee-eaters. They have a long, straight, greatly-compressed bill; the wings of moderate length, the fourth quill longest; the central feathers of the tail very long. They have generally metallic plumage, green being the most frequent colour. They are found in South America and the West Indies, building in holes in trees. They sit on low naked branches on the forest paths, whence they dart upon butterflies.

găl'-bu-lŭs, s. [Lat. = the nut of the cypress-tree.]

Bot.: A collective fruit, allied to the Strobilus (Cone-proper), but differing only in being round, and having the heads of the carpels much enlarged. Example, the Juniper.

gal-der, *gal-dere, s. [A.S. galdor, gealdor; Icel. galdr.] A charm, an enchantment.

"Heo bigolen that child mid galdere swithe stronge." Layamon, ii. 384.

gāle (1), s. [Dan. gal = mad, furious; cf. Icel. gola = a breeze; galdrahridh = a storm raised by spells; Ir. & Gael. gal = vapour, smoke.]

I. Literally:

1. A wind; specifically, one stronger than a breeze, but less violent than a tempest; it is usually used in conjunction with some qualifying adjective: as a gentle gale, a strong gale, a fresh gale, &c.

"Both shores were lost to sight, when at the close Of day a stiffer gale at East arose."
Dryden: Ovid; Metamorphoses x.

2. A breeze, a current of air.

"While every gale is peace, and every grove Is melody." Thomson: Spring, 873.

II. Fig.: A quarrel, a disturbance, a breeze, a tumult; noisy excitement.

"Then the music touched the gates and died,
Rose again from where it seemed to fail
Stormed in orbs of song, a growing gale."
Tennyson: Vision of Sin, 25.

¶ For the difference between gale and breeze, see BREEZE.

gāle (2), s. [A.S. gafol = rent, tribute.] A periodic payment of rent or custom; an instalment of money. [GAVEL.]

"He has offered 20 per cent. reduction on all rent due, which would amount to £40, and 60 per cent. on a single gale."—Daily News, Oct. 5, 1881.

¶ Hanging gale: (See extract).

"Mr. Litton said it would be better to abandon the use of the term hanging-gale, as there was no such term in the Act. A hanging-gale meant a gale still left unpaid at each payment of rent."—Standard, Nov. 30, 1882.

gale-day, s. The day on which an instalment of rent is due.

"The rents were not demanded till the expiration of twelve months after the gale-day."—Standard, Nov. 30, 1882.

gāle (3), gagel, *gall, *gaul, *gayle, *gaylle, s. [A.S. gagol; Dut. gagel.]

Bot.: Myrica Gale; its full English name is Sweet Gale. It is called also Bog Myrtle. It is a twiggy shrub, two or three feet high, occurring in bogs and moors on the Highland mountains and elsewhere, ascending to the height of 1,800 feet. It is found also on the Continent, in Northern Asia, and in North America. The flowers are in catkins; the leaves are covered with a waxy pubescence. It yields wax, resin, benzoic acid, and tannin. [MYRICA, MYRICACEÆ.]

"Gale; mirtus; mircetum est locus ubi crescunt."—Cathol. Anglicum.

gāle (4), s. [A.S. gál.]

1. A song.

"The nyghtyngale
In wode maketh miry gale." Alisaunder, 2,547.

2. A noise, chatter.

"Listenith now and letith gale." Alisaunder, 2,047.

gāle (5), s. [GAOL.]

gāle (1), v.i. [GALE (1), s.]

Naut.: To sail; to sail fast.

gāle (2), gail, *galyn, v.i. [A.S. galan; Icel. & Sw. gala; Dan. gale = to cry, to sing.] To cry, to sing, to croak.

"Whan the Sompnour herd the Frere gale."
Chaucer: C. T., 6,414.

gāle (3), v.t. [GALE (2), s.]

Min.: To acquire the right of working, as a mine.

gā'-lē-a, s. [Lat. = a helmet, usually of leather, whereas the cassis was generally of metal.]

1. Anat.: The amnion.

2. Bot.: Helmet; the arched upper lip in some labiate flowers: example, Lamium album.

3. Palæont.: A fossil echinoderm, shaped like a helmet.

4. Pathol.: A headache extending all over the head.

5. Surg.: A bandage for the head.

găl'-ē-ăs, s. [GALLEAS.]

Naut.: A low-built French galley worked with sails and oars.

gā'-lē-āte, gā'-lē-āt-ĕd, a. [Lat. galeatus, from galea = a helmet.]

I. Ord. Lang.: Covered with a helmet or helmet-shaped covering.

"A galeated echinus copped." — Woodward: On Fossils.

II. Technically:

1. Bot.: Helmeted; having a Galea (q.v.).

2. Ornith.: Having a crest of feathers on the head like that of a helmet; crested.

găl-ĕ-çy'-nŭs, s. [Gr. γαλῆ (galē) = a weasel, and κυών (kuōn), genit. κυνός (kunos) = a dog.]

Palæont.: A genus of Viverridæ, from the Pliocene of Œningen. It seems intermediate between the civets and the dogs. (Nicholson.)

gă-lē'-gą, s. [Etym. somewhat doubtful; considered to be probably from Gr γάλα (gala) = milk, and ἄγω (agō) = to draw, to induce; these plants being said to increase the milk of the animals eating them.]

Bot.: Goat's Rue; the typical genus of the subtribe Galegeæ (q.v.). They have pinnate leaves, and long axillary racemes of lilac or white flowers. They are found in the Mediterranean region, and extend to Persia. Galega officinalis was formerly used in fevers and convulsions.

gą-lĕg'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galeg(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A subtribe of Loteæ (q.v.).

găl'-ĕ-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. gale(us) (q.v.), and f. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ichthy.: A family of Squalina (Sharks). They have small spiracles, two dorsal fins, both of them destitute of spines, and an anal fin. [GALEUS.]

găl-ĕ-mô'-ta, găl-ĭ-mē'-ta, s. [A native word.] (See the compound.)

galemeta-wood, s.

Bot.: The native name in Jamaica for Bumelia salicifolia.

gą-lē'-mys, s. [Gr. γαλῆ (galē) = a weasel, and μῦς (mus) = a mouse.]

Zool.: A genus of Soricidæ (Shrews), often called Mygale; a name, however, which is yet more commonly applied to a genus of spiders. Galemys, or Mygale moschata, Linnæus's Castor moschatus, is the Musquash or Musk-rat, called by the French Desman. It is found in Russia. Galemys or Mygale pyrenaica, occurs at the foot of the Pyrenees. [MYGALE.]

gą-lē'-ną, s. [Lat., from Gr. γαλήνη (galēnē) = stillness of the sea; so called from its supposed property of quieting the violence of disease; Fr. galène.]

* 1. Ord. Lang.: A supposed remedy or antidote for poison.

2. Min.: [GALENITE].

gą-lĕn'-ĭc (1), gą-lĕn'-ĭc-ąl (1), a. [Eng. galen(a); -ic, -ical.] Pertaining to or containing galena.

gā-lĕn'-ĭc (2), gā-lĕn'-ĭc-ąl (2), a. [See def.] Pertaining to Galen, a celebrated physician, born at Pergamus, A.D. 131, and said to have died at Rome about A.D. 200, or his method of treating diseases; remedial.

Gā'-lĕn-ĭşm, s. [From Galen, the physician, and Eng. suff. -ism.] The doctrines, or method of treating diseases taught by Galen.

Gā'-lĕn-ĭst, s. [From Galen, and Eng. suff. -ist.] A follower or disciple of Galen; a Galenite. (Massinger: Parl. of Love.)

Găl'-ĕn-ĭsts, s. pl. [Named from their founder, Galen or Galenus Abrahana de Haan. (Def.).]

Ecclesiol. & Ch. Hist.: An Anabaptist sect, one of two into which the Waterlanders split in 1664. Galen, their founder [Etym.], was a doctor of medicine and a minister among the Mennonites at Amsterdam. He is said to have taught that the Christian religion was not so much a body of truths to be believed as of principles to be obeyed. His enemies accused him of having Socinian proclivities, a charge from which the States-General acquitted him on September 14, 1663.

† gā'-lĕn-īte (1), gą-lē'-ną, s. [Lat. galen(a) = (1) lead ore; (2) the dross of melted lead; -ite (Min.).]

Min.: An isometric, metallic ore with cubic cleavage. It occurs also tabular, or, rarely, fibrous. Hardness, 2·5 to 2·75; sp. gr. 7·25 to 7·70; lustre, metallic; colour and streak, lead-grey. Compos.: Sulphur, 13·4; lead, 86·6 = 100. It sometimes contains a small amount of silver, zinc, antimony, &c. Varieties: (1) Ordinary galena. (2) Argentiferous galena. (3) Galena, with impurities of arsenic, antimony, &c. Under this head are ranked Bleishweif, Targionite, and Steinmannite. (4) Galena containing an excess of sulphur. It includes supersulphuretted lead. (5) Targionite (q.v.). It is very abundant in parts of the United States and in many other countries, as Sweden, Germany, Britain, &c. Most of the lead of commerce is extracted from it, and often much silver.

 Gā'-lĕn-īte (2) [From Galen, and Eng. suff. -ite.] A physician.

"Not much unlike a skilful Galenite."
Sylvester: Du Bartas; The Trophies.

gą-lē-nō-çĕr'-ą-tīte, s. [Lat. galena; Gr. κέρας (keras), genit. κέρατος (keratos) = the head, and Eng. suff. -ite (Min.).]

Min.: The same as PHOSGENITE (Dana.); called in the British Museum Catalogue Cromfordite (q.v.).

găl-ĕ-ŏb'-dŏ-lŏn, s. [Gr. γαλεόβδολον (galeobdolon) = a blind nettle; γαλέη (galeē) = a weasel, and βδόλος (bdolos) = a fetid scent.]

Bot.: Weaselsnout. A sub-genus of Lamium (q.v.). The old Galeobdolon luteum, the Yellow Weaselsnout or Yellow Archangel, is now Lamium Galeobdolon. It is found in hedges and copses, chiefly on chalk and limestone, from Yorkshire south. Abroad it extends through Northern Europe to Western Siberia.

găl-ĕ-ō-çĕr'-dō, s. [Gr. γάλεος (galeos) = a shark, and κέρδω (kerdō) = a fox.]

Palæont.: A genus of Sharks founded upon teeth obtained from the cretaceous rocks, and from the Eocene of the Isle of Sheppey.

găl-ĕ-ō'-dēş, s. [Gr. γάλη (galē) = a weasel, and εἶδος (eidos) = form, appearance.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Galeodidæ (q.v.). Galeodes aranoides is found in the sandy deserts of the Eastern Hemisphere, and is said to annoy camels, and inflict an envenomed wound on man.

găl-ĕ-ŏd'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galeod(es), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Arachnida (Spiders), order Adelarthrosomata. It is sometimes called also Solpugidæ. The falces or mandibles are very large and chelate; the maxillary palpi are in the form of long feet; there are two eyes on the front of the head; the cephalothorax and abdomen are distinctly separate from each other and both segmented, and the respiration is by tracheæ. The animals are nocturnal and predatory; they inhabit the warmer regions.

găl-ĕ-ō-pĭ-thē'-çĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galeopithec(us) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: Flying Lemurs. A family of Mammalia, order Insectivora, which, however, it connects with the Quadrumana. It contains only the genus Galeopithecus (q.v.).

găl-ĕ-ō-pĭ-thē'-cŭs, s. [Gr. γαλέη (galeē) = a weasel, and πίθηκος (pithēkos) = an ape, a monkey.]

Zool.: Flying Lemur; the typical and only genus of the family Galeopithecioæ (q.v.). They have a membrane extending from the nape of the neck to the forelegs, and thence to the hind ones and the tail. This enables them to take long leaps from tree to tree. It is, however, only a parachute to support them in the air, not a wing to enable them to fly like bats. They occur in the Indian Archipelago. The best-known species is Galeopithecus volans, found in Malacca, Sumatra, and Borneo.

găl-ĕ-ŏp′-sĭs, s. [Lat. galeopsis; Gr. γαλεόψις (galeopsis), from γαλέη (galeē) = a weasel, and ὄψις (opsis) = appearance. The comparison is between the corolla of the plant and a weasel's head.]

Bot.: Hemp-nettle. A genus of Labiatæ (Lamiaceæ), family Lamidæ. The calyx is campanulate, the anther cells opposite, bursting transversely by two valves. British species: (1) Galeopsis Ladanum, the Red; (2) G. dubia, the Downy; and (3) G. Tetrahit, the Common Hemp-nettle. G. versicolor, the Large-flowered Hemp-nettle, is reduced by Sir Joseph Hooker to a sub-species of No. 3. No. 2 is employed by country people in Britain as a pectoral medicine.

găl-ĕr-ĭc′-ŭ-lāte, a. [Lat. galericulum, dimin. of galerus = a hat or cap.]

Botany, &c.:

1. Covered as with a hat or cap.
2. Having a tuft or plume. (Paxton.)

† găl′-ĕr-īte, s. [Lat. galer(us) = a hat or cap; -ite (Min.).] [Galerites.]

Palæont.: An echinid of the genus Galerites (q.v.).

găl-ĕr-ĭ′-tēs, s. [Galerite.]

Palæont.: The typical genus of the family Galeritidæ (q.v.). They are found chiefly in the chalk.

găl-ĕr-ĭt′-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galerit(es) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Palæont.: A family of Echinoderms, order Echinoidea. [Galerites.]

 gal-ern, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A north wind. (Evelyn: Complete Gardener.)

găl-ĕr-û′-ca, s. [Lat. galerum = a helmet-like covering for the head; a cap, a bonnet.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Galerucidæ. Six species are British.

găl-ĕ-rŭ′-cĭ-dæ, s.pl. [Mod. Lat. galeruc(a), and Lat. fem. pl. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of tetramerous beetles, subtribe Cyclica. They are by some comprehended in the Chrysomelidæ. The length of the antennæ is half that of the body or less. They are of the same thickness throughout, or thicker towards the end, and the insects themselves are ovoid, oval, or nearly hemispherical.

ga-lĕs′-tēs, s. [Gr. γαλέη (galeē) = a weasel, and λῃστής (lēstēs) = a robber.]

Palæont.: A genus of mammalia, founded on remains from the Purbeck Beds, which are of upper oolitic age. It seems to have been an insectivorous and marsupial mammal.

găl′-ĕts, s. pl. [Fr. galet = a pebble, a shingle.] The splinters of stone broken off by the stroke of the mason's chisel. Also called spauls.

găl′-ĕ-ŭs, s. [Mod. Lat., from Class. Lat. galeos; Gr. γαλεός = a kind of shark or dog-fish.]

Ichthy.: The typical genus of the family Galeidæ. Two species occur in Britain. One is Galeus vulgaris, which is six feet long, and destructive to the fisheries. It is called the Common Tope, the Penny Dog, and the Miller's Dog. The other, Mustelus lævis, is smaller, has flat teeth, feeds chiefly on crustaceæ, and is called in Cornwall the Raymouthed Dog.

gā′le-wŏrts, s. pl. [Eng. gale, and worts.]

Bot.: The name given by Lindley to the Myricaceæ, of which Myrica Gale is the type. [Gale, Myrica.]

găl′-ĭ-a, s. [Gall.]

Med.: A medical preparation containing gall.

găl-ĭ-ā′-çĕ-æ, găl′-ĭ ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gali(um) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ; -eæ.]

Bot.: Stellates, an order of Epigynous Exogens, alliance Cinchonales. The name Stellates, formed from Stellatæ, given by Ray in A.D. 1690, refers to the star-like appearance of the flowers. The order consists of herbaceous plants, with angular stems, whorled exstipulate leaves, and minute flowers. Calyx superior obsolete or four, five, or six-lobed. Corolla monopetalous, valvate, rotate, or tubular, its divisions the same in number as those of the calyx, as are the stamens. Fruit a didymous indehiscent pericarp, with two cells and two seeds. Seven or eight genera and from 300 to 320 species are known; all from cold and temperate regions, or, if from hot countries, then from hills. British genera, Galium, Rubia, Asperula, and Sherardia (q.v.). Sometimes the Galiaceæ are reduced to a sub-order of Rubiaceæ, the latter category being made to include also the Cinchonads.

 gā′-lĭc, a. [Gaelic.]

Ga-lĭç′-ĭ-an, a. & s. [See def.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Galicia, a province in the north-west of Spain.

B. As subst.: A native or inhabitant of Galicia.

Găl-ĭ-lē′-an, Găl-ĭ-læ′-an (1), a. & s. [From Galilee; Eng. adj. suff. -an.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Galilee (q.v.).

B. As substantive:

I. Geog.: A native or inhabitant of Galilee.

II. History:

1. The followers of Judas the Gaulonite, who resisted the payment of the tax imposed by Quirinius, the Cyrenius of St. Luke (Luke ii. 1), and gave the Romans trouble till the capture of Jerusalem by Titus in A.D. 70.

2. (Pl.) A name applied to Jesus and His disciples, from the intimate connection they had with Galilee (Matt. xxvi. 69; Mark xiv. 70); hence applied by Pagans and Mohammedans, as a term of reproach, to Christians generally.

> "And wounds by Galileans given,
> The surest pass to Turkish heaven."
> Byron: The Giaour.

Găl-ĭ-lē′-an (2), a. [After Galile(o); Eng. suff. -an.] Pertaining to or invented by Galileo, the celebrated astronomer.

Galilean-telescope, s.

Optic instru.: A telescope of the simplest construction, like an opera glass. It has only two lenses, one an object-glass, the other a diverging or concave eye-piece.

Găl′-ĭ-leē, s. [Gr. Γαλιλαία (Galilaia); Heb. גְּלִילָה (Gelilah), from גָּלִיל (galil) = (as subst.) a circle, a region, (as adj.) rolling, turning. See def. 1.]

1. Geog.: A Roman province, comprehending all the north of Palestine west of the Jordan. As the term Asia began with a small patch of territory in Asia Minor, but gradually had its meaning extended till it took in all the Asiatic continent, so the word Galilee was first applied to a fragment of the tribe of Naphtali, constituting its northern portion (Joshua xx. 7; 2 Kings xv. 29). It was mostly inhabited by Gentiles (Isaiah ix. 1; 1 Maccab. v. 20–23). In the New Testament times the word had the more extended meaning, and we learn from Josephus that there were an Upper and a Lower Galilee.

2. Arch.: A porch or chapel at the entrance of a church. The galilee at Lincoln Cathedral is a porch on the west side of the south transept; at Ely Cathedral it is a porch at the west end of the nave; at Durham it is a large chapel at the west end of the nave, which was built for the use of the women, who were not allowed to advance farther into the church than the second pillar of the nave. In the galilee were also deposited corpses previous to interment, and religious processions were formed. The name is derived from the expression in the Bible, "Galilee of the Gentiles." At Durham the bishop's consistory-court was also held in the galilee.

găl-ĭ-mā′-tĭ-a (tĭ as shĭ), s. [Fr., prob. a form of galimafrée = Galimaufray (q.v.), but traditionally said to be derived from the confusion of an advocate who, pleading the case of a man named Matthew, from whom a cock had been stolen, used the words Galli Mathias = the cock's Matthew, instead of Gallus Mathiæ = Matthew's cock.] Nonsense, confused or nonsensical language; an absurd mixture of words.

găl-ĭ-mĕ′-ta, s. [Galemeta.]

găl′-ĭn-gāle, s. [O. Fr. garingal; Fr. galangal; Ger. galgant.]

Bot.: Cyperus longus, a perennial, tall sedge, with an umbellate cyme, and erect, red-brown glumes. It is found in the south of England, Wales, and the Channel Islands, but is very rare. (Sir Joseph Hooker.)

> "The rote is gingeuir and galingale."
> Land of Cockayne, 71.

găl-ĭn-sō′-ga, s. [Named after Don M. M de Galinsoga, a Spanish botanist.]

Bot.: A genus of Compositæ. Only one or two species are known. Galinsoga parviflora has been introduced into Britain from Peru, and has rooted itself in cultivated fields, and on roadsides at Kew and elsewhere. (Sir Joseph Hooker.) găl-ĭn-sō′-gŏ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galinsog(a); and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A sub-tribe of Senecionideæ, type Galinsoga.

gal-ĭ-on-gee, s. [A Turkish word.] A sailor.

> "All that a careless eye could see
> In him was some young gallongee."
> Byron: Bride of Abydos, ii. 9.

găl′-ĭ-ŏt, găl′-lē-ŏt, găl′-lĭ-ŏt, s. [Fr. galiote, from Low Lat. galeota, dimin. of galea = a galley; Sp. galeota; Ital. galeotta.]

Naut.: Formerly, a galley propelled by sails and oars, having one mast and sixteen to twenty seats for rowers; used by most of the maritime nations of continental Europe, and called by substantially the same name in the Romance languages. Now a strong and cumbrous, bluff-bowed, two-masted vessel, used in the Dutch merchant service.

GALIOT.

> "Finding the same deep enough to harbour therein gallies and galliots in good number, proceeding further, he found a very open place."—Hackluyt: Voyages, iii. 313.

găl-ĭ-pē′-a, s. [The name given to the plant in Guiana; Fr. galipée, galipier.]

Bot.: A genus of Rutaceæ, tribe Cusparia. Galipea officinalis or G. Cusparia, the latter called also Bonplandia trifoliata, furnishes Angostura bark (q.v.).

găl′-ĭ-pŏt, s. [Fr.]

Comm.: The French name for the white viscid resin which exudes from the stem of Pinus maritima, after an incision has been made. The name is probably derived from the vessels in which it was collected or preserved. [Gallipot.]

gā′-lĭ-ŭm, s. [Lat. galium; Gr. γάλιον (galion) = the Yellow Bedstraw (Dioscorides), from γάλα (gala) = milk, which some species of the genus are used to curdle.]

Bot.: A genus of plants, the typical one of the order Galiaceæ (q.v.). Corolla rotate, four-cleft; stamens four; fruit didymous or dry, often hispid or tubercled. About 150 species are known, eleven of them British: (1) Galium verum and (2) G. Cruciata, perennial, with yellow flowers; (3) G. palustre, (4) G. uliginosum, (5) G. saxatile, (6) G. sylvestre, and (7) G. Mollugo, perennial, with white flowers and very minute, glabrous, smooth granulate or rough fruit; (8) G. boreale, perennial, with white flowers and hispid fruit; (9) G. Aparine, (10) G. tricorne, and (11) G. parisiense, annual, with white or greenish flowers, large fruit, and the angles of the stem and the margins of the leaves prickly. No. 5, the Smooth Heath Bedstraw, flowers from July to September on heathy spots and hilly pastures to such an extent as in some places to whiten the ground. No. 1 is the Yellow Bedstraw, which also is common. Its flowers are used to curdle milk. No. 9 is the Goose-grass or Cleavers, which is abundant in hedges; the hooked fruits cling to the coats of animals, and are thus widely diapersed. An extract of G. rigidum, a foreign species, has been used successfully in epilepsy, as has an extract of No. 7. The torrefied grains of various species of Galium are a good substitute for coffee.

gâll (1),  gallo, s. [A.S. gealla; O. Northumb. galla; cogn. with Dut. gal; Icel. gall; Sw. galla; Dan. galde; Ger. galle; Lat. fel; Gr. χολή (cholē).]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II.

"Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk. Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success."—Arbuthnot: On Diet.

(2) The gall-bladder.

"The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iii., ch. iii.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Anything exceedingly bitter.

"Io mi mete gave thai galle to be."
E. Eng. Psalter; Ps. lxvii. 22.

(2) Rancour, malignity, bitterness.

"The time hath been when no harsh sound would fall
From lips that now may seem imbued with gall."
Byron: English Bards & Scotch Reviewers.

* (3) Anger; bitterness of mind.

(4) Cool impudence; brazen assurance; obnoxious effrontery. (Slang.)

II. Physiol.: The same as Bile (q.v.).

¶ Gall of Glass: The neutral salt skimmed off the surface of crown-glass; also called Sandiver (q.v.).

gall-bladder, s.

Anat.: A pear-shaped membranous sac, three or four inches long by one and a half broad, lodged obliquely in a fossa on the under surface of the right lobe of the liver. The neck, which is shaped like the letter S, bends downwards and terminates in the cystic duct.

"He had at divers times found worms in the gall-bladder in persons he had opened at Duseldorp."—Derham: Physico-Theology, bk. viii., ch. vi. (Note.)

gall-duct, s.

Anat.: A duct which conveys the bile; a Bile-duct (q.v.).

gall-pipe, s. The same as Gall-duct (q.v.).

 gall-wet, a. Full of gall or bitterness.

"Or do the relic ashes of his grave Revive and rise from their forsaken cave?
That so with gall-wet words and speeches rude, Controul the manners of the multitude."
Bp. Hall: Satires, bk. ii. (Prol.)

gâll (2), s. [O. Fr. galle, from Lat. galla = a gall-nut; Dut. galnoot; Fr. gale, noix de gale; Ital. galla; Ger. gall-apfel.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Gen. (Bot.): A morbid excrescence on the leaf or leaf bud of any plant, arising probably from the puncture of a cynips. These small hymenopterous insects deposit their eggs on the leaves, &c., of various plants, each species being limited to a single plant, or even a single part of one; thus there is a Cynips ficus carice on the common fig, a Cynips fagi on the beech, and a Cynips quercus folii on the leaves of the common oak. The so-called oak-apples are not fruits but morbid excrescences produced by Cynips terminalis, so called because it deposits its eggs at the extremity of the shoots on the tree. Some galls have at times been mistaken for fungi, but proper care can distinguish between the two.

2. Spec. (Bot. & Comm.): The galls of commerce are produced by the puncture by Cynips gallæ tinctoria of the leaf-bud of Quercus infectoria, or more rarely of some other species of oak. In the hole made by the insect, an egg is deposited, in due time to be developed into a larva, which eats its way out when it comes to the perfect state. One variety is white or yellow, another green, grey, or black. The best galls come from Smyrna and Aleppo. With the salts of iron they yield a fine black colour, and are used in the manufacture of ink.

"The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them."—Derham

II. Pharm.: Galls are used in pharmacy for the preparation of Gallic acid (q.v.). Official preparations of gall-nuts are Tinctura Gallæ (tincture of galls), Unguentum Gallæ (ointment of galls), and Unguentum Gallæ cum Opio (ointment of galls with opium). Gall nuts are useful on account of the Tannin (q.v.) and gallic acid contained in them. Tannin is a powerful astringent, and is useful in affections of the alimentary canal, also applied locally to suppress hæmorrhage from the gums, lips, nose, &c. Preparations of gall-nuts should not be given with salts of iron, infusions and decoctions containing alkaloids, salts of lead, antimony, &c., nor with gelatine, as these substances give precipitates with tannic acid.

¶ Gall of the Earth:

Bot.: (1) A composite plant, Mulgedium floridanum; it is so called on account of its bitterness [Mulgedium]; (2) Nabulus Fraseri.

gall-insects, s. pl.

Entom.: The hymenopterous tribe Gallicola, of which the type is the genus Cynips (q.v.), see also Cynipidæ, and Gall (2), s.

gall-nut, s. [Gall (2), s., II.]

gall-oak, s. Quercus infectoria, the oak from which the galls of commerce are obtained. [Gall (2).]

gall-steep, s.

Dyeing: A bath of nutgalls, for the process of galling in Turkey-red dyeing. [Gall (2), v.] gâll (3),  galle, * gaule, s. [Icel. galli; Ital. galla; M. H. Ger. galle; Dut. gal, gale = scurf, scab.] [Gall (1), v.]

1. A wound or sore on the skin caused by rubbing.

"If eny wight wold claw us on the galle."
Chaucer: C. T., 6,521.

2. A spring or wet place in a field; a spot when the grass has been worn off; a bare place in a crop.

gâll (1),  gall-en, * gall-yn, v.t. & i. [O. Fr. galler = to gall, to fret, to itch; galle = a galling, a fretting, itching of the skin, from Lat. callus = a thick, hard skin.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To fret or wear away the skin of by rubbing; to excoriate; to hurt or break the skin of by friction.

"Galling his kingly hands, haling ropes."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, v. 1.

2. To fret away; to break or damage the surface of by rubbing.

"And the Gabriell riding asterne the Michael, had her cable gauld asunder in the hawse with a piece of driuing yce."—Hacklugt: Voyages, iii. 66.

3. To hurt by rubbing or touching.

"I am loathe to gall a new-head wound."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., i. 2.

4. To wear away the grass in a field.

"For galling of pasture get home with thy wood."
Tusser: Husbandrie, lvii. 31.

II. Figuratively:

1. To impair, to wear away, to damage.

"He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being galled with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth."
Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 4.

2. To annoy, to harass.

"Leisley then commanded three hundred horse to advance into the riuer, whom the musqueteers from behind the works so galled, as they were enforced to retire."—Baker: Charles I. (an. 1640).

3. To fret, to vex, to cause annoyance and grief.

"The necks of mortal men having been never before galled with the yoke of foreign dominion, nor having had experience of that most miserable and detested condition of living in slavery."—Raleigh: Hist. of the World, bk. ii., ch. i., § 12.

B. Intransitive:

* 1. To fret; to be teased, vexed, or annoyed.

2. To annoy, to tease, to vex, to fret, to grieve.

"My opinion still is, that a large demand at once, with a prospect of being thereby relieved from certain galling taxes, would be more willingly submitted to than the present mode of fluctuating and irritating taxation."—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii., p. 183.

* 3. To act in a galling manner; to say galling things; to scoff.

"I have seen you glecking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice."—Shakesp.: Henry V., v. 1.

¶ For the difference between to gall and to rub, see Rub.

gâll (2), v.t. [Gall (2), s.] To impregnate with a decoction of galls.

Găl'-la, s. [An African word. (See def.)]

1. One of a race inhabiting the east and south of Abyssinia. They belong to the Kaffir family.

2. The language spoken by the Gallas. It is the principal spoken language of Abyssinia.

Galla-ox, s. A variety or sub-variety of ox (Bos Taurus), generally white, with small hunch, black muzzle, small bones, and high legs. The horns turn up vertically, are of a pale horn colour, extremely bulky, and nearly four feet in length. Found in the Galla country. (Major Chas. Hamilton Smith.)

* gal-la-glass, s. [Gallowglass.]

gâll-ăm'-ĭc, a. [Eng. gall (2); -amic (Chem.).] (See the compound.)

gallamic-acid, s.

Chem.: $C_7H_7NO_4$. Crystallizes in large plates which are slightly soluble in cold water. It is obtained by boiling a mixture of two parts of tannin with one part of ammonium disulphate, and six parts of ammonia, till the solution no longer smells of ammonia, and recrystallizing out of water. Gallamic acid is decomposed by alkalies, therefore it is probably an amide.

găl'-lant, gal-lănt', * gal-ant, * gal-aunt, * gal-launt, a. & s. [O. Fr. gallant (Fr. galant), pr. par. of galer = to rejoice; gale = show, mirth; Ital., Sp., & Port. gala = ornament, festive attire; Sp. & Ital. galante.] [Gala.]

A. As adjective:

1. Gay, showy, splendid, well-dressed, magnificent.

"In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes; Youth at the prow, and Pleasure at the helm."
Gray: The Bard.

2. Fine or noble outwardly; specious.

"Hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle."
Shakes.: Julius Cæsar, iv. 2.

3. Brave, high-spirited, daring, magnanimous, courageous, heroic, noble.

"He spake, and eight brave sons straightway
All followed him, a gallant band?"
Wordsworth: White Doe of Rylstone, ii.

4. Courtly, polite towards ladies, of courteous manners. (In this sense pronounced gal-lănt'.)

5. It is commonly used by speakers in referring to an officer of the army or navy, as, My gallant friend.

B. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A brave, high-spirited or daring person.

"Exclaim not, gallants! question not."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, v. 17.

2. A gay, fashionable or courtly man.

"In youth, 'tis said, a gallant free,
A lusty reveller was he."
Scott: Rokeby, iii. 21.

3. A wooer; a ladies' man; one who pays court to ladies.

"As to Theodora, they who had been her gallants when she was an actress, related that dæmons, or nocturnal spirits, had often driven them away to lie with her themselves."—Jortin: Ecclesiastical History.

* 4. One who pays court to ladies for a lewd purpose.

"One that is well-nigh worn to pieces with age to shew himself a young gallant."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives, ii.

* II. Naut.: A top-sail.

¶ To stoop gallant:

Naut.: To lower the top-sail.

gal-lant', v.t. & i. [Gallant, a.]

A. Transitive:

1. To pay court to ladies; to wait on or pay attention to a lady; to escort a lady.

2. To handle or manage in a fashionable manner.

"I teach young gentlemen the whole art of gallanting a fan."—Addison: Spectator, No. 102.

B. Intrans.: To gallivant or gad about idly.

"It is as thoroughly believed among the country folk as the gospel, that the witches are in the practice of gallanting over field and flood after sun-set, in the shape of cats and mawkins."—The Steam-boat, p. 141.

* găl'-lant-ĕd, a. [Eng. gallant; -ed.] Gallant, well-dressed.

* găl'-lant-ĭse, s. [Eng. gallant; -ise.] Gallantry, gallant bearing.

"Gray-headed senate and youth's gallantise."
Sylvester: Du Bartas, wk. i., day 6, 90a.

găl'-lant-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gallant; -ish.] Fond of gallivanting or strolling about; gadding about.

"A weak, fickle, freakish, bigotted, gallantish, or imperious woman."—Bruce: Life of Knox, i. 421. (Note.)

găl'-lant-lĭ,* ga-lant-ly,* ga-launt-ly, adv. [Eng. gallant; -ly.]

1. In a gallant, gay or showy manner; showily, handsomely.

"The wayes echwhere are gulantly paued with foure square stone, except it be where for want of stone they use to lay bricke."—Hacklugt: Voyages, vol. ii., pt. iii., p. 63.

2. In a gallant, brave, daring or noble manner; bravely; nobly; heroically.

"And oot a moment will he bide,
Till squire or groom before him ride;
Headmost of all he stems the tide,
And stems it gallantly."
Scott: Marmion, vi. 22.

3. Like a gallant; in a gallant manner.

găl'-lant-nĕss, s. [Eng. gallant; -ness.]

* 1. The quality or state of being gallant; gayness; magnificence.

2. Bravery, gallantry, heroism.

"That which gives to human actions the relish of justice, is a certain nobleness or gallantness of courage (rarely found), by which a man scorns to be beholding for the contentment of his life, to fraud or breach of promise."—Hobbs: Of Man, pt. i., ch. xv.

găl'-lan-trў, s. [O. Fr. gallanterie; Fr. galanterie, from galant = gallant (q.v.).]

* 1. Show, splendor, magnificence of appearance; handsomeness.

"Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all The English youth flock to their admiral."
Waller: Instructions to a Painter, 9.

2. Bravery, high courage, heroism, nobility.

"As a friend to the house of Brunswick, I cannot but rejoice in the personal safety, and in the personal gallantry too, of so distinguished a branch of it [the Duke of York]."—Anecd. of Bp Watson, vol. i., p. 369.

3. Politeness or courteous bearing towards ladies.

"These [the fair sex] compose half the world, and are by the just complaisance and gallantry of our nation the more powerful part of the people."—Steele: Spectator, No. 4.

4. Court paid to women for lewd purposes; vicious love or pretence of love; lewdness, profligacy, debauchery.

5. A number of gallants; gallants collectively.

"Followed with England's gallantry and pride."
Drayton: The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

găl'-lāte, s. [Eng. gall(ic); suff. -ate (Chem.) (q.v.).]

Chem.: A salt of Gallic acid (q.v.).

găl'-la-tūre, s. [Sp. galladura, from Lat. gallus = a cock.] The tread of a cock.

"Whether it be not made out of the grando, gallatura, germ or tread of the egg, as Aquapendente and stricter enquiery informeth us, doth seem of lesser doubt."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iii., ch. xxviii.

gâll'-bŭsh, s. [Eng. gall = gale (3), and bush.]

Bot.: The Gale or Sweet Gale.

găl'-lē-ăss,* gal-li-ass, s. [Fr. galeasse; Ital. galeazza.]

Naut.: A heavy, low-built vessel, carrying generally three masts and three tiers of guns. It was propelled both by sails and oars, and had thirty-two seats for rowers, who were generally slaves, six or seven at each oar. A tower-like structure was at the stern, and a castellated structure in the bows.

GALLEASS.

"And while they were proceeding on in this maner, one of their great galliasses was so furiously battered with shot, that the whole nauy was faine to come vp rounder together for the safeguard thereof."—Hacklugt: Voyages, vol. i., p. 597.

găl'-lē-ĭn, s. [Gall (2), and (phthal)ein.]

Chemistry: Gallein. Pyrogallolphthalein. $C_{20}H_{10}O_7$, or $O_2\langle C_6H_2(OH)\rangle O\langle C_6H_4\rangle C{=}O$.

Obtained by heating for some hours, one part of phthalic anhydride with two parts of pyrogallol from 190° to 200°, then dissolving the fused mass in alcohol, precipitating with water, and recrystallizing from dilute hot alcohol. It forms small crystals which are red-brown by reflected, and metallic green by transparent light. Gallein is nearly insoluble in cold water, slightly soluble in ether, and very soluble in alcohol. It dissolves in caustic potash with a red color, which is turned blue by excess of alkali. Soluble in ammonia with a violet color. Gallein is used as a dye.

 găl'-lē-ŏn,* găl'-lĭ-ŏn, s. [Sp. galeon, from Lat. galea = a galley (q.v.); Ital. galeone.]

Naut.: A large ship used by the Spaniards

SPANISH GALLEON.

in their commerce with South America. They usually had four decks.

"No more than the Raleighs and Drakes considered themselves as thieves when they divided the cargoes of Spanish galleons."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

gâll'-ẽr, s. [Eng. gall (1), v.; -er.] One who or that which galls.

găl-lēr'-ĭ-a, s. [Ital. galleria; Low Lat. galeria = a gallery, from the covered passage which the larva makes with wax, &c., in the beehives which it invades. (McNicholl.) Agassiz derives the name from Gr. γαλέρος (galeros) = pleasant.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Galleridæ (q.v.). Two species live in beehives, doing great damage.

găl-lēr'-ĭ-an,* găl-lēr'-ĭ-ęn, s. [Fr. galérien.] A galley-slave.

"The advantage, if any, stands for the gallerian."—Gentleman Instructed, p. 183.

găl-lēr'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. galler(ia), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of moths, tribe Pyralidina. The antennæ are simple, the basal joint generally with a tuft of scales beneath the labial palpi, short in the male, long and porrected in the female. Larva with sixteen legs, feeding on wax in beehives. Four British species. (Stainton.)

 găl'-lēr-ĭĕd, a. [Eng. gallery; -ed.] Furnished with a gallery or galleries.

găl'-lēr-ў,* gal-ar-y,* gal-ler-ie, s. [O. Fr. gallerie (Fr. galerie), from Ital. galleria, from Low Lat. galeria = a long portico, a gallery; Sp. & Port. galeria.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A room or apartment of much greater length than breadth, serving as a means of communication between the different rooms of a building; a corridor.

"Searching all wounded the long galleries;
And the voyd courtes." Surrey: Virgil; Æneis ii.

2. A room used for the exhibition of pictures or other works of art; hence, a collection of pictures, statues, &c.

"As fine a gallery of pictures as any burgomaster of Amsterdam."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiv.

3. A partial story in a room for auditors, musicians, &c.; a platform projecting from the walls of a room, and supported by brackets, pillars, or consoles, and overlooking the ground-floor: as a gallery in a church, theatre, &c.

"Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them."—Graunt.

4. The occupants of a gallery at any performance; generally with the imputation of their being low-bred and devoid of taste.

"The galleries would certainly lose much of their veneration for the theatrical kings, queens, and nobles if they were to see them behind the scenes, unbedizened."—V. Knox: Spirit of Despotism, 23.

¶ To play to the gallery: To court the applause of the vulgar.

* 5. An ornamental walk or apartment in gardens formed by trees.

"In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbours, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree."—Sidney.

II. Technically:

1. Fort.: A covered passage in a work, either for defence or communication, as one beneath the counterscarp and loopholed, or communicating between the enceinte and an outwork. A gallery in a scarp having embrasures becomes a casemate.

2. Min.: An adit or drift in a mine, either as a means of working, of drainage, or of ventilation.

3. Naut.: A balcony projecting from the afterpart of a ship, as the quarter-gallery, stern-gallery.

¶ Whispering gallery: [Whispering].

gallery-class, s. A large class taught while seated in a gallery.

gallery-furnace, s. A furnace used in the distillation of green vitriol, consisting of a long gallery containing two or three tiers of retorts, 100 in each row. The gallery is a flue traversed by the flame of a fire. The neck of each retort projects through the walls of the gallery, and enters an exterior receiver.

gallery-hauling, s.

Min.: A passage driven on the dip of the vein.

gallery-hit, s.

Cricket: A showy stroke, such as would be appreciated by a non-critical spectator.

gallery-keeper, * gallary-keeper s. A person in charge of a gallery.

"Thirty pounds given to the gallary-keepers at St. Margaret's Church."—Whitelock: Memorials; Charles I (an. 1645).

gallery-picture, gallery-painting, s. A picture in which the figures or animals represented are life-size or larger; a landscape of more than five feet in width.

 gâl'-lĕss,* gaul-less, a. [Eng. gall (1); -less.] Free from or without gall or bitterness.

"Such mild and gaulless spirits, so receptive of virtuous impressions."—Bates: Athurst's Funeral Sermon.

 gal-le-tyle, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A gallipot (q.v.).

"Make a compound body of glass and galletyle: that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass."—Bacon: Physical Remains.

găl'-leў,* gal-al,* gal-aie,* gal-ay,* gal-e,* gal-eie, s. [O. Fr. galie, galiee, from Low Lat. galea = a galley; M. H. Ger. galê, galîé,; Fr. galère; Ital. & Sp. galera.]

1. Nautical:

(1) A low, flat-built vessel with one or more rows (banks) [Bank, s., II. 9] of oars, said to have been invented by the Corinthians 700 B.C. The biremes, triremes, quinqueremes, &c., were galleys having so many banks of

ANCIENT GALLEY.

COIN OF ALLECTUS, Showing a Roman Galley.

oars—two, three, five, &c. The pentecontori had fifty oars in a single tier.

"And for those boats, longæ naves, or gallies, Pliny saith, that Ægesias ascribeth the device to Paralus: and Philostephanus to Jason: Cteslas to Samyras; and Sephanus to Semiramis: Archimachus to Ægeon."—Raleigh: History of the World, bk. I., ch. viii., § 3.

(2) A low, flat-built vessel with one deck, and navigated with sails and oars, formerly common in the Mediterranean. They varied in length from 100 to 200 feet, the smaller being called half-galleys, and the smallest-sized quarter-galleys. They carried as many as twenty oars on each side, each worked by several men, generally slaves. They were two-masted, and had two lateen sails. The largest were called galleasses. [Gallease.] They were of 130 feet keel, 30 feet beam, three masts, thirty banks [Bank, s., I. 1] of two oars each, each oar manned by six chained slaves. They were introduced into France in the reign of Charles VI., and manned by criminals. [Galley-slave.] He kept forty in his service. They were abolished by Louis XV. in 1748.

(3) Any boat of a large size; a state barge.

"And each proud galley, as she passed,
To the wild cadence of the blast Gave wilder minstrelsy."
Scott: Lord of the Isles, I. 15.

(4) A clinker-built boat for ship's use, from 28 to 36 feet long, and with a beam equal to one-fifth of its length. It is light and sharp, carrying from ten to twelve oars, and is used for speedy rowing on expeditions. It usually has six alternate oars rowed by a picked crew.

(5) An open boat used on river waters by Custom-house officers, river-police, and formerly by press-gaogs, &c.

(6) The cook-house on board ship, which is on deck, or in a forward part of the vessel.

2. Distill.: A Gallery-furnace (q.v.).

3. Print.: An oblong tray which receives matter from the composing-stick, and on which it is arranged in a column or page. The galley has a ledge on both sides and at top, half an inch in height. From this it is taken to the imposing-stone and arranged in a chase. The galley sometimes has a groove to admit a false bottom, called a galley-slice.

galley-fire, s.
Naut.: A ship's fire-place.

galley-halfpence, s. pl. [Galley-half-penny.]

 galley-halfpenny, s. A base coin, so called from being smuggled in in the galleys which brought merchandise from Genoa. It was in circulation in the time of Henry IV.

 galley-house, s. A boat-house.

"These galley-houses are 50 or 60 paces from the river side; and when they bring the galleys into them, there is a strong rope brought round the stern of the vessel, and both ends stretched along, one on each side."—Dampier: Voyages (an. 1688).

galley-pepper, s. Coal-ash. [Galley, 1 (6).]

galley-slave, s. A criminal condemned to work in the galleys.

"Worse than the deeds of galley-slaves broke loose.
She loses in such storms her very name,
And fierce licentiousness should bear the blame."
Cowper: Table Talk, 337.

 găl'-lĕy-foist, * gal-ly-foist, s. [Eng. galley, and foist (q.v.).]

Naut.: A state barge, such as that used by the Lord Mayor of London when attending at Westminster in state.

"Out of my doores, you sons of noise and tumult, begot on an ill May day, or when the gallyfoist is afloate to Westminster."—Ben Jonson: Silent Woman, iv. 2.

găl'-lĕy-wŏrm, s. [Gallyworm.]

gâl'-flȳ, s. [Gall (2), s.]

Găl'-lī, s. pl. [Lat.; said to be from Gallus, a river in Phrygia, which made those mad who drank its waters.]

Roman Antiq.: The priests of Cybele at Rome. They carried round the image of Cybele like people in a state of frenzy, rolling their heads, beating their breasts to the sound of flutes, and uttering dreadful predictions. Great indecencies took place in connection with the festival of the goddess they worshipped, which occurred at the vernal equinox. The Galli alone, of all the heathen priesthood in ancient Rome, were permitted to ask alms from the people.

găl'-lĭ-ăm-bĭc, s. [Lat. galliambicus = a song used by the Galli or priests of Cybele.]

Pros.: A kind of verse, consisting of two iambic dimeters catalectic, the last wanting the final syllable.

 găl'-lĭ-an, a. [Lat. Galli(a) = Gaul; Eng. adj. suff. -an.] Of or pertaining to Gaul or France; French.

"An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves A Gallian girl." Shakesp.: Cymbeline, I. 7.

găl'-lĭ-ard, * gal-ye-ard, * gay-lard, a. & s. [Sp. gallarda = (a.) pleasant, gay, lively, (s.) a kind of lively Spanish dance; O. Fr. guillard, gaillart; Port. galharda; Ital. gagliardo.]

* A. As adj.: Merry, gay, frisky, brisk, active, lively.

B. As substantive:

* 1. Ord. Lang.: A merry, gay, brisk, or lively person.

2. Music: [Gaillard].

 găl'-lĭ-ard-ĭşe, s. [Fr.] Merriment, mirth, liveliness, exuberant gaiety.

"I am no way disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company."—Browne: Religio Medici.

 găl'-lĭ-ard-nĕss, s. [Eng. galliard; -ness.] The quality of being galliard; gaiety, merriment, liveliness.

"His sprightly pleasance and galliardness abate."—Gayton: Festivous Notes on Don Quixote.

găl'-lĭ-ăss, s. [Galleass.]

Găl'-lĭc (1), a. [Lat. Gallicus, from Gallia = Gaul, France.] Of or pertaining to Gaul or France; French; Gallican.

găl'-lĭc (2), a. [Eng. gall (2), s.; -ic.] Of, or pertaining to, or derived from galls.

gallic acid, s.

Chem.: $C_7H_6O_5 + H_2O$ or $C_6H_2(OH)_3{\cdot}CO{\cdot}OH + H_2O$. Trioxybenzoic acid. Gallic acid occurs in several plants, as Sumach, Dividivi; in the leaves of Arctostaphylus uva ursi; in the roots of Helleborus niger, Veratrum album, Colchicum autumnale, Cephalis ipecacuanha; in the bark of Strychnos nux vomica; in red wine, &c. Gallic acid can be prepared synthetically by fusing di-iodoxybenzoic acid with caustic potash. It is also formed by powdering gallnuts, which contain tannin, and exposing them moistened to the air for a month, at a temperature of 70°, and is then extracted with boiling water, the crystals redissolved in boiling water, and decolorised by animal charcoal. The spores of Penicillium glaucum convert tannin into gallic acid. It is also prepared by boiling tannin with dilute sulphuric acid, which converts the tannin into gallic acid and glucose, $C_{27}H_{22}O_{17} + 4H_2O = 3C_7H_6O_5 + C_6H_{12}O_6$. Gallic acid crystallizes in white, silky needles, which lose their water of crystallization at 120°, and melt with decomposition at 222° to 240°. Soluble in three parts of boiling water, and in 130 parts of water at 12°; also soluble in alcohol and in ether. Pure gallic acid does not precipitate gelatine, albumen, or alkaloids. It gives a bluish-black colour with ferric salts; soluble in excess of Fe_2Cl_6. Dry gallic acid heated to 210° gives off CO_2, and yields pyrogallol, $C_6H_3(OH)_3$. By the action of nitric acid it is oxidized to oxalic acid. Gallic acid forms salts which are called gallates. Dry gallic acid triturated in a mortar with potassium permanganate, takes fire, and gives out sparks. Gallic acid has a sour, astringent taste. It reduces gold and silver salts, and is used in photography. It is a monatomic acid, and also a triatomic phenol; therefore, four atoms of hydrogen can be replaced by metals. Gallic acid is sometimes used in medicine instead of tannin.

Găl'-lĭ-can, a. [Lat. Gallicus = Gallic, French.] Of or pertaining to Gaul or France; as, the Gallican Church.

Găl'-lĭ-can-ĭşm, s. [Eng. Gallican; -ism.] Principles in the French Church, opposed to Ultramontanism.

¶ As early as 1438 the Pragmatic Sanction (q.v.), to a certain extent protected the liberties of the Gallican Church against the encroachments of Rome. This was suspended in 1516 by the Concordat with Leo X., which was less favourable to the Gallican Church. On March 12, 1682, the French clergy issued a declaration that the Papal authority in France is limited to spiritual matters, and that it is subject to the decision of a General Council. This manifesto was condemned by successive Popes in 1682, 1690, 1706, and 1794.

Găl-lĭç'-ĭ-nīte, găl-lĭt'-zĕn-īte, s. [From Ger. galitzenstein, the name of the mineral, implying that it is from Galicia, where it is not known to occur.]

Min.: The same as Goslarite (q.v.).

Găl'-lĭ-çĭşm, s. [Eng. Gallic (1); suff. -ism; Fr. Gallicisme.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language; a French expression or idiom.

"In English I would have gallicisms avoided."—Felton: On the Classics.

 Găl'-lĭ-çīze, * Găl'-lĭ-çīşe, v.t. & i. [Eng. Gallic (1); -ize.]

A. Trans.: To adapt or make conformable to the French idiom or language; to Frenchify.

"Being very much gallicised in my character."—Sydney Smith: Letters, 1835.

B. Intrans.: To adopt a French style; to use Gallicisms.

găl-lĭc'-ō-la, găl-lĭc'-ō-læ, s. pl. [Lat. galla = a gall, an oak-apple, and colo = to inhabit.]

Entom.: Gall-flies, gall-insects. A tribe of Hymenopterous insects; sub-order Petiolata. The antennæ have from thirteen to fifteen joints, the wings only a few nervures, there is an ovipositor bent within the body in the form of the letter S. Its puncture leads to the production of galls. [Gall (2), Gall-insects, Cynipidæ, Cynips.]

 găl-lĭ-găs'-kĭned, a. [Eng. galligaskin(s); -ed.] Wearing galligaskins.

 găl-lĭ-găs'-kĭns, * gal-lo-gas-coins, s. [A corrupt. of O. Fr. gargues ques = greguesque = Greekish, from Ital. Grechesco = Greekish. (Wedgwood.) Cf. Prov. Eng. gregs = a kind of breeches or hose; Fr. greguesques.]

1. Large open breeches; wide hose.

2. Leather gaiters worn by sportsmen.

"My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury and encroaching frosts,
By time subdued—what will not time subdue?—
An horrid chasm disclose."
Philips: Splendid Shilling.

 găl-lĭ-mā'-tĭ-a (ti as shĭ), s. [Galimatias.]

 găl-lĭ-mâu'-frȳ, s. [Fr. galimafrée = a hash.]

1. A hash, a hotch-potch, or hodge-podge of scraps of meat.

"Delighting in hodge-podge, gallimaufries, forced meats, &c."—King: Art of Cookery, let. 9.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

"They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't."—Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

gâl'-lĭn, s. [Eng. gall (2), s.; suff. -in (Chem.).]

Chem.: Gallin, $C_{20}H_{14}O_7$, or, $O[C_6H_2(OH)_2]_2{\cdot}CH{\cdot}C_6H_4{\cdot}CO{\cdot}OH$. Obtained by long boiling gallein with zinc dust and ammonia, then acidifying with dilute H_2SO_4 and shaking out with ether. It crystallizes out of ether in fine needles, and quickly reddens in the air. It can be used as a dye instead of logwood.

găl-lĭ-nā'-çē-æ, găl-lĭ-nā'-çē-ī, s. pl. [Lat. gallinaceus = pertaining to poultry, from gallina = a hen.]

Ornith.: A sub-order of birds, order Rasores, of which it is the type. The bill is convex, the upper mandible arched over the lower one, the nostrils over-arched by a cartilaginous membrane, the wings are short, the legs strong, the hallux elevated above the anterior toes so as merely to touch the ground in walking. In the males the back of the tarsus is generally furnished with a spur, which may be used as an offensive weapon. The birds are generally polygamous, the males more brilliantly coloured than the females. It is divided into about eight families, Tetraonidæ (Grouse), Perdicidæ (Partridges), Phasianidæ (Pheasants), Pteroclidæ (Sand-grouse), Turnicidæ (Bush-quails), Megapodidæ (Mound birds), Cracidæ (Curassows), Tinamidæ (Tinamous). The term Gallinacei is occasionally used in a more extensive sense, being applied to all the Rasores. [GALLINÆ.]

găl-lĭ-nā'-çē-ạn (or cean as shạn), s. [Lat. gallinaceus, from gallina = a hen; gallus = a cock.] One of the order Gallinacea.

găl-lĭ-nā'-çē-ŭs (or ceous as shŭs), a. [Lat. gallinaceus.] Of or pertaining to the Gallinaceæ.

"A circumstantial resemblance between the stomachs of gallinaceous fowls and the structure of cornmills."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. xv.

găl-lĭ'-næ, s. pl. [Lat. nom. pl. of gallina = a hen.]

Ornith.: An order of birds established by Linnæus. It has now become the sub-order Gallinacei (q.v.).

găl lĭ-nā'-zō, s. [Sp.]

Ornith.: The Spanish-American name for the Turkey-buzzard. [CATHARTES.]

gâll'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GALL, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. Lit.: The act of making sore by rubbing off the skin.

2. Fig.: The act of vexing, irritation, or chafing.

gâll'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. galling: -ly.] In a galling manner; so as to gall, vex, or irritate.

gâll'-ĭng-nĕss, s. [Eng. galling: -ness.] The quality or state of being galling.

"I never found that people discontented with their own church-government (the gallingness of whose yoke is the grand scare-crow that frights us here)."—Boyle: Works, ii. 39.

găl'-lĭ-nĭp-pĕr, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Entom.: A large mosquito.

găl-lĭ-nĭv'-ō-roŭs, a. [Lat. gallina = a hen, and voro = to devour.] Feeding or living upon fowls.

găl-lĭn-sĕc'-tạ, s. pl. [Lat. galla = an oak-apple, a gall nut, and insecta, pl. of insectum = an insect.]

Entom.: A tribe of Homoptera, consisting of the family Coccidæ (q.v.). [GALL-INSECTS.]

găl'-lĭn-ụ-lạ, s. [Lat. gallinula = a pullet, a chicken, dimin. of gallina = a hen.]

Ornith.: Gallinule. The typical genus of the sub-family Gallinulinæ. Bill short, straight, the margins not inflexed, the cutting edges of the upper mandible folding over the lower one. Toes simple, without any marginal membrane. The only British species is Gallinula Chloropus, the Moor-hen (q.v.).

găl'-lĭ-nule, s. [GALLINULA.]

Ornith.: An English book-name for the genus Gallinula (q.v.).

găl-lĭn-ụ-lĭ'-næ, s. pl. [Lat. gallinul(a), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ (q.v.).]

Ornith.: Water-hens. A sub-family of Rallidæ (Rails). They have the base of the ridge of the bill dilated into a soft oblong plate, occupying part of the forehead. They are aquatic birds, swimming and diving well, feeding on insects, worms, mollusca, besides seeds of grasses and other plants.

găl-lĭ-ō-nĕl'-lạ, s. [GAILLONELLA.]

găl'-lĭ-ŏt, găl'-lĕ-ŏt, s. [GALIOT.]

Găl-lĭp'-ō-lĭ, s. [See def.] A town in Italy.

Gallipoli oil, s. An inferior kind of olive oil brought from Gallipoli.

găl'-lĭ-pŏt, s. [A corrupt. of O. Dut. gley-pot, from gleye; Dut. gley = potter's clay.]

1. A small glazed earthenware vessel, used for containing medicines, jams, preserves, &c. According to Stow they were introduced into England about A.D. 1570, by J. Andries and J. Jansen, potters, from Antwerp, who settled in Norwich, where they followed their trade.

"Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outsides apes, owls, and satyrs, but within, precious drugs."—Bacon: Apophthegms.

* 2. A contemptuous name for an apothecary.

"It's Vidler the apothecary . . . you said you had gallipots enough."—Thackeray: Newcomes, ch. xiv.

găl-lĭ'-zĕn-ĭto, s. [GALLICINITE.]

găll'-ĭ-ŭm, s. [Gallia, in honour of France.]

Chem.: Gallium, a metallic element, symbol Ga, atomic weight 69·9. Gallium is a triad element. Specific heat 0·079. It was discovered by a French chemist, Lecoq de Bois-baudram, in zinc blende; but Mendelejeff had shown in his periodic law, that an element must exist having intermediate properties between aluminium and indium; he called this supposed element ekaluminium. The metal is obtained by dissolving the blende in sulphuric acid and placing in the solution plates of zinc till the disengagement of hydrogen becomes slow, but is still perceptible, by which means the greater portion of the copper, lead, cadmium, iridium, thallium, silver, mercury, selenium, arsenic, &c., contained in the ore is precipitated; the clear filtered liquid is then heated with a large excess of zinc, the resulting gelatinous precipitate, consisting chiefly of alumina, basic salts of zinc, and gallium, is redissolved in hydrochloric acid, and again heated with zinc, which gives a precipitate, in which the gallium is more concentrated. This precipitate is redissolved in hydrochloric acid, the solution is treated with hydrogen sulphide, and the filtered liquid, after expulsion of the H_2S, is fractionally precipitated with ammonium carbonate, till the solution of the resulting precipitate in hydrochloric acid no longer gives any indication of the presence of gallium when examined by the spectroscope. The precipitates are collected and dissolved in sulphuric acid, and cautiously evaporated till the free sulphuric acid is expelled; the residue when cold is digested with water till it is dissolved, the nearly neutral solution is boiled, the basic gallium sulphate is precipitated and filtered while hot, and then dissolved in a small quantity of sulphuric acid, treated with excess of potash till the precipitate is redissolved, and then precipitated by a stream of CO_2. Finally the gallium oxide is redissolved in the smallest quantity of sulphuric acid, the solution mixed with excess of slightly acid ammonium acetate, then H_2S gas is passed through the liquid; the filtered acetic solution is diluted with water, and heated to boiling, whereby the greater part of the gallium is precipitated as oxide; this precipitate is filtered off hot, washed with boiling water, and redissolved in sulphuric acid, and the solution mixed with a slight excess of potash, and filtered, whereby a pure alkaline solution of gallium is obtained. Metallic gallium is obtained by the electrolysis of this alkaline solution, platinum electrodes being used, and the positive electrode being larger than the negative on which the metallic gallium is precipitated, which is detached by dipping the platinum plate in warm water and bending it backwards and forwards. Gallium is a silver-white metal, which melts at 30°, but remains liquid for weeks at 0°. Cooled to −15° it crystallizes. Gallium is a hard metal, very slightly malleable, and leaves a bluish-grey trace on paper; when melted it adheres to glass; it does not tarnish in the air. Its specific gravity is 5·95. It gives a brilliant violet line in the spectrum. When heated in the air it oxidizes on the surface, and does not volatilize. It dissolves in hydrochloric acid with disengagement of hydrogen. It is scarcely attacked by nitric acid in the cold; when heated it dissolves slowly with evolution of nitrous fumes. It forms salts.

gallium-chloride, s.

Chem.: $GaCl_3$, is colourless, crystalline, and deliquescent.

gallium-oxide, s.

Chem.: Gallium oxide is obtained by igniting the nitrate, which leaves a white friable mass.

gallium-salts, s. pl.

Chem.: Gallium-salts are precipitated by ammonia. If redissolved by hydrochloric acid, and again precipitated by ammonia, the precipitate is soluble in excess. Potash gives a precipitate which is soluble in excess, sodium carbonate gives a white precipitate, an ammoniacal solution of gallium chloride, or sulphate, is precipitated by acetic acid; hydrogen sulphide does not precipitate gallium from slightly acid solutions; sulphide ammonium does not give a precipitate with the ammoniacal solutions of pure chloride or sulphate of gallium; if zinc is present the gallium is precipitated along with the zinc. Potassium ferrocyanide gives a yellow precipitate with strongly acid solutions of gallium chloride (Watts: Dict. Chem.) gallium-sulphate, s.

Chem.: $Ga_2(SO_4)_3$, is very soluble in water, when mixed with ammonium sulphate and evaporated, it yields octohedral crystals of gallium ammonium alum.

găl-lĭ-vănt', * gall-a-vant, v.i. [Prob. a corruption of gallant (q.v.).]

1. To gad about with or after one of the opposite sex; to flirt.

"You were out all day yesterday, and gallivanting somewhere, I know."—Dickens: Nicholas Nickleby, ch. lxiv.

2. To run about after trivial matters; to fuss; to bustle.

găl'-lĭ-văt, s. [Perhaps from Dut. galei = a galley, and vat = a vessel.]

Naut.: A large swift sailing galley or small vessel used on the Malabar coast. They are seldom over seventy tons burden, are two-masted, and carry small swivel guns.

găl'-lĭ-wăsp, s. [First element (galli) doubtful; second, Eng. wasp; cf. gallyworm.]

Zool.: Celestus occiduus, a small lizard, family Scincidæ, found in the West Indies. It is an object of terror to the inhabitants, but is really harmless.

* gal-loc, s. [A.S.] The herb Comfrey.

* gal-lo-glash, gal-lo-glass, * gol-lo-glass, s. [GALLOWGLASS.]

găl-lō-mā'-nĭ-a, s. [Lat. Gall(ia) = Gaul; o connective, and Eng. mania (q.v.).] A mania for or excessive love of French fashions, customs, literature, &c.

găl'-lŏn, * gal-on, * gal-one, * gal-oun, * gal-un, s. [O. Fr. gallon, jallon, jalon, from Low Lat. galona = a gallon.]

* 1. A pitcher, of whatever capacity.

"A man beringe a galoun of water schal renne to you."—Wycliffe: Mark xiv. 13.

2. A measure of capacity for liquid or dry goods, generally the former, containing four quarts or eight pints. The United States standard gallon contains 231 cubic inches, or 8·3389 lbs. avoirdupois of distilled water at its maximum density, and with the barometer standing at 30 inches. This is the same as the old English wine gallon. The old corn gallon contains 268·6 cubic inches, and the old ale gallon 282 cubic inches. The English imperial gallon now in use contains 277·274 cubic inches.

"Fresh water comes out of the rocks; but so slowly, that it yields not above forty gallons in twenty-four hours."—Dampier: Voyages (1682).

* găl-lôon', * gă-lôon', s. [Fr. & Sp. galon; Ital. gallone.]

Fabric: A narrow cotton fabric for binding shoes, &c; a narrow binding stuff with threads of gold and silver; a silk, woollen, or mixed tape for edging, binding, or shoe-strings.

"Lace and ribbons, silver and gold galloons, with the like glittering gewgaws, are so many lures to women of weak minds or low educations."—Addison: Spectator, No. 15.

* găl-lôon', * gă-lôon', v.t. [GALLOON, s.] To braid or bind with galloon.

"Those enormous habiliments . . . slashed and galooned."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. i., ch. vii.

găl'-lŏp, * galop, v.i. [Fr. galoper, from O. Flem. walop = a gallop, an extension of O. Low Ger. wallen = to boil; A.S. weallan; O. Sax. wallan; Skt. valg = to gallop.]

A. Intransitive:

I. Literally:

1. To move or run with leaps at great speed, as a horse.

2. To ride at a very rapid pace; to ride a horse which gallops.

"An officer might mount and gallop beyond reach of danger in an hour: but the private soldier must stay and be butchered."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

II. Fig.: To move very fast; to hurry; to scamper.

"Who doth he [time] gallop withal?"—Shakesp.: As You Like It, iii. 2.

B. Trans.: To cause to run at great speed: as, To gallop a horse.

găl'-lŏp, s. [Gallop, v.]

1. The motion or pace of a horse when he runs at full speed, in which he moves by springs, bounds, or leaps, the forefeet being lifted very nearly together, and, while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hind-legs almost at once.

"Their troop came hard upon our back,
With their long gallop, which can tire
The hound's deep hate, and hunter's fire."
Byron: Mazeppa, xii.

2. A kind of dance; a Galop (q.v.).

¶ Hand-gallop: A slow or gentle gallop, between a canter and a gallop.

găl-lŏp-ade', s. [Fr. galopade.]

1. Manège: A sidelong or curvetting kind of gallop.

2. Mus.: A Gallop (q.v.).

găl-lŏp-ade', v.i. [Gallopade, s.] To gallop; to move about briskly; to dance a gallopade.

"The shock-head willows two and two,
By rivers galloped." Tennyson: Amphion 40.

găl'-lŏp-ĕr, s. [Eng. gallop; -er.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A horse that gallops.

"Mules are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

2. A man who gallops on a horse, or who makes great haste.

3. One who is always running about.

"If abroad I am a gadling goose; when I return, you are a fine galloper."—Guardian, No. 132.

* II. Ordnance:

1. A carriage on which small guns were carried; it had shafts so as to be drawn without limbers.

2. A light fieldpiece.

"On which Sir John [Cope] advanced two gallopers, which presently dislodged them, and 'tis said killed about a dozen of them."—Lord Loudoun: Account of the Battle of Preston; Trial of Sir John Cope, p. 139.

galloper-gun, s.

Ord.: A small gun carried on a galloper. [Galloper, II.]

* găl'-lŏp-ĭn, s. [Fr. galopin, from galoper = to gallop.] A servant for the kitchen; a scullion; a cook's boy.

"Dyet for the kitchen and gallopins."—Archæologia, xv. 7.

găl'-lŏp-ĭng, pr. pa., a., & s. [Gallop, v.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Lit.: Moving or running at a gallop.

2. Fig.: Very rapid in its progress; as, a galloping consumption, one which soon arrives at a fatal termination.

C. As subst.: The act of moving at a gallop.

"I did heare
The galloping of horse." Shakesp.: Macbeth, iv. 1.

galloping-consumption, s.

Pathol.: Acute pulmonary phthisis, in contradistinction to chronic phthisis. Named on account of its usually very rapid fatality.

găl-lō-tăn'-nĭc, s. [Pref. gallo-, and tannic.] [Tannine.]

* găl'-lōw (1), găl'-lŷ, v.t. [A.S. agælwan = to stupefy.] To frighten, to terrify, to affright.

"The wrathful skies Gallow the very wanderers of the dark."
Shakesp.: Lear, iii. 2.

* găl'-lōw (2), v.t. [Gallow, s.] To hang; to put to death by hanging.

"With grete Jewes he is galwed."—Legend of the Holy Rood, p. 132.

* găl'-lōw, s. [Gallows.]

* gallow-clapper, s. A term of reproach or contempt.

gallow-grass, s. Hemp, as furnishing halters for the gallows.

* gallow-tree, * galow-tree, * galowe-tree, s. A gallows.

"The more buxum wyll he bee,
That he were borowyd fro the galow tree."
Le Bone Florence of Rome; Ritson, vol. iii.

Găl'-lō-wăy, s. [See def.]

1. The name of a district in the south of Scotland, comprehending the shire of Wigton, and the Stewartry of Kircudbright.

2. A species of horse of a small size, but very hardy and enduring.

"Tradition reports that this kind [galloways] of horses are sprung from some Spanish stallions, which swam on shore from some of the ships of the Spanish armada, which were wrecked on the coast, and coupling with the mares of the country, peopled the kingdom with their posterity. They were much esteemed and of a middling size, strong, active, nervous, and hardy, and were called Gallaways, from being first known in the country which bears that name."—Berenger: On Horsemanship, vol. i., p. 205.

3. A breed of cattle, generally dark in colour, indigenous to Galloway.

galloway-dyke, s. A wall built firmly at the bottom, but no thicker at the top than the length of the single stones, loosely piled the one above the other.

"The cheapest, the most valuable, the most speedily raised, the most lasting, and the most general fence is the galloway-dike."—P. Auchterderran, Stat Acc., i. 451.

galloway-nag, s. A galloway.

* găl'-lōw-glass, * găl'-lō-glass, s. [Ir. galloglach = a heavy-armed soldier; from giolla = a man-servant, a gillie, and gleac-aim = to wrestle.] The name given to a heavy-armed foot-soldier in Ireland and the western islands. It is opposed to kerne (q.v.).

"A puissant and mighty power
Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., iv. 9.

găl'-lōwş, * gal-ewes, * gal-owes, * gal-os, * gal-ous, * galwes, s. [A.S. galga, gealga = a cross, a gibbet; cogn. with Icel. galgi = a gallows; Dan. & Sw. galge; Dut. galg; Goth. galga = a cross; Ger. galgen = a gallows. Properly a plural form, but the true singular gallow is not now used. A double plural form is even found, as gallowses.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. An instrument or apparatus on which criminals are executed by hanging. It is usually constructed of two posts with a cross-beam on the top, from which the criminal is hanged by a rope passing round his neck.

"No Indian prince has to his palace
More followers than a thief to the gallows."
Butler: Hudibras, pt. ii., c. i.

* 2. A wretch who deserves to be hanged; a gallows-bird.

"Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.
Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2.

* 3. One of a pair of braces used for supporting the breeches. (In this sense it has the plural gallowses.)

"Those indispensable articles of decent attire denominated gallows."—Warner: Literary Recollections, i. 100.

II. Technically:

1. Agric.: The central core of four Indian cornstalks interlaced diagonally, and bound at the intersection, forming a stool or support for cut corn, which is bound around it to form a shock. (American.)

2. Print.: The rest for the tympan when open.

3. Steam-Eng.: The frame supporting the beam of a steam-engine.

gallows-bird, s. A wretched person who deserves the gallows.

"I ne'er minced ape nor gallows-bird."—Reade: Cloister & Hearth, ch. xxviii.

gallows-bitts, s.

Naut.: A strong frame erected amidships on the deck to hold spare spars.

* gallows-clapper, s. [Gallow-clapper.]

* gallows-faced, a. Rascally-looking; hang-dog.

"Thou gallows-faced vagabond."—H. Brooke: Fool of Quality, ii. 16.

gallows-frame, s.

1. The frame of a gallows.

2. The same as Gallows, II. 3.

* gallows-free, a. Saved from hanging.

"Let him be gallows-free by my consent.'
Dryden: Absalom & Achitophel, ii. 431.

gallows-maker, s. One whose trade it is to build gallows.

"The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, v. 1.

* gallows-ripe, a. Ready for hanging.

"Loose again, as one not yet gallows-ripe."—Carlyle French Revolution, pt. ii., bk. v., ch. iii.

gallows-stanchions, s.pl.

Naut.: The same as Gallows-bitts (q.v.).

gallows-top, s.

Naut.: A crosspiece of timber tenoned on to the gallows-bitts at or near the top.

găl'-lōw-şĕş, s.pl. [Gallows, I. 3.]

* găl'-lōwş-nĕss, s. [Eng. gallows; -ness.] Badness, rascality.

"I never knew your equals for gallowsness."—G. Eliot: Adam Bede, ch. vi.

găl'-lōwş-trēe, s. [Eng. gallows, and tree.] The gallows.

"Ho! Provost Marshal! Instantly Lord Denzil to the gallowstree!"
Scott: Rokeby, vi. 23.

gâlş, s. [Gall, s. (2).]

gâll'-sĭck-nĕss, s. [Eng. gall, and sickness.] A kind of remitting bilious fever occurring in the Netherlands; Walcheren fever.

gâll'-stōne, s. [Eng. gall, and stone.]

1. Of Man: A biliary concretion, chiefly consisting of cholesterine and colouring matter, forming in the gall-bladder. Gallstones are commonest in advanced life, sedentary occupations, females, or from over-indulgence, and in habitual constipation, and during their passage to the intestine accompanied by the most intense agony, not always depending on the size of the stone. In one case, post-mortem, in a female in advanced life, the writer counted eighty-three gallstones, varying in size from a small marble to a pin's head.

2. Of the inferior animals: An animal calculus found in the gall-bladder of oxen. This concretion varies a little in colour, but is in general of a beautiful golden yellow, more powerful than gamboge, and is highly reputed as a water-colour. Nevertheless its colour is soon changed and destroyed by strong light, though it is not subject to alteration by impure air.

găl'-lŭs, s. [Lat. = a dunghill cock.]

Ornith.: A genus of Phasianidæ, sub-family Phasianinæ (q.v.). Gallus domesticus is the domestic fowl; G. bankivus, the jungle fowl of Java. This latter was the original at least of the British game-cock, if not even of the other varieties of the domestic fowl.

gâl'-lŷ (1), gall-ie, a. [Eng. gall (1), s.; -y.] Like gall; bitter as gall.

"And who that is jelous, and aye in a drede Is full of melancolie and gallie ire."
Chaucer: Remedy of Love.

gally-worm, s.

Zool.: Polydesmus, a genus of Millepedes.

gâl'-lŷ (2), a. [Eng. goll (3), s.; -y.] Wet, moist, worn. Applied to land where the grass has been worn away.

* găl'-lŷ, v.t. [Gallow (1), v.] To frighten.

* găl'-lŷ, s. [Galley.]

* gal-ly-gas-coynes, s. [Galligaskins.]

* găl'-me�², s. [Ger. galmei, from Eog., &c., calamine (q.v.).]

Min.: The same as Calamine (q.v.).

gą-lōçhe', gą-lōshe', gǫ-lōshe', gǫ-lōsh', s. [Fr. galoche = a wooden shoe, a clog, from Low Lat. calopedia = a clog; Gr. καλοπόδιον (kalopodion), dimin. of καλόπους (kalopous) = a shoemaker's last: κᾶλον (kalon) = wood, and πούς (pous), genit. ποδός (podos) = a foot.]

1. A patten, clog, or wooden shoe.

"Ne were worthy to unbocle his gatoche."
Chaucer: C. T., 10,869.

2. An over-shoe, worn to keep the feet dry.

3. A legging, a gaiter, covering the upper part of the shoe and the bottom of the leg.

* gą-loon', s. & a. [Galloon.]

găl'-ŏp, s. [Fr.] [Gallop.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A gallop.

II. Music:

1. A lively dance in 2-4 time, originally a separate and independent dance, but now also forming a portion of a set of quadrilles.

2. The music to which this dance is performed.

* găl'-ô-pĭn, s. [GALLOPIN.]

ga-lōre', s. or adv. [Irish and Gael. go leòr = enough : go = to, and leòr = enough.] Plenty, abundance, in plenty.

ga-lōshe', s. [GALOCHE.]

ga lôu-bêt (t silent), s. [Fr.]

Mus. : A small flute of a primitive character with three holes, similar to the Picco pipe.

* gal-ox-ic, s. [GALAXY.]

* galpe, v.i. [A.S. gulpian = to applaud; O.Sax. gulpôn = to cry out, to boast; M. H. Ger. gulpen = to bark.]

1. To cry out, to yelp.
2. To gape, to yawn.

"Whau a man galpeth than me croyseth him."
Trevisa, v. 389.

3. To belch.

* galp-er, s. [Eng. galp(e); -er.] One who gapes or yawns.

* gaī-ship, * gol-sipe, s. [A.S. gâlscipe.] Lechery, lasciviousness.

* gâl'-sŏme, a. [Eng. gall (1), s. ; suff. -some.] Bitter, malignant.

"Galsome bitterness, and wilful fraud and falsehood."—Bp. Morton.

gâlt (1), s. [GAULT.]

* galt (2), * galte, s. [Icel. galti = a boar.] A young sow or boar when castrated.

"Galt, a yonge hogge or sow. Porcetra."—Huloet.

ga-lŭn'-ça, s. [Name in some East Indian languages.]

Pharm. : An Indian febrifuge, prepared from the stems of Tinospora verrucosa and T. cordifolia.

găl-văn'-ĭc, a. [Ital. Galvan(i), and Eng. &c., suff. -ic.] Of or belonging to Galvani. [GALVANISM.]

galvanic-battery, s.

Elect. : A number of connected galvanic cells.

galvanic-cell or pair, s.

Elect. : A combination of two metals in a liquid chemically acting upon one to a greater extent than upon the other.

galvanic-electricity, s.

Elect. : Chemical or dynamical electricity.

galvanic-moxa, s.

Elect. : A term applied by Fabré Palaprat to the application of platinum rendered incandescent by a galvanic current, as a cauterising agent of the nature of a moxa.

galvanic-pair, s. [GALVANIC-CIRCUIT.]

galvanic-pile, s.

Elect. : A column of alternate plates, such as zinc and copper. [VOLTAIC-PILE.]

galvanic-shock, s.

Elect. : A shock felt by a nerve placed or connected with an inductive coil charged by a galvanic cell.

găl-văn'-ĭ-cal, a. [Eng. galvanic; -al.] The same as GALVANIC (q.v.).

găl'-va-nĭsm, s. [Named after Aloysius Galvani, who was born at Bologna in 1737, published in 1791 his celebrated work, Aloysii Galvanii de viribus Electricitatis in Motu Musculari Commentarius, and died in his native town in 1798.]

Physics: The branch of electric science to which an experiment by Galvani gave birth. His wife, who was making soup from frogs, happened to put them, after being skinned, in proximity to a charged electrical machine belonging to her husband. On touching them with a scalpel their legs became greatly convulsed. Galvani on his return was told what had occurred, and repeated the experiment on several occasions. He united the lumbar nerves of a dead frog with its crural muscles by a metallic circuit. He came to the erroneous conclusion that animal electricity existed in the nerves and muscles of frogs, &c. In this explanation Galvani ignored the metallic connecting wire. His contemporary, Volta, gave attention to this, and found that the contraction of the limbs is more energetic when the connecting arc is made of two metals instead of one. He therefore inferred that the metals took the active part in producing the contraction, and the disengagement of electricity was due to their contact, and that the animal parts constituted only a conductor, and at the same time a very sensitive electroscope. In 1793 he published these views, and in 1800 first described and constructed what has since been called after him the Voltaic pile. [PILE; see also BATTERY, B. III. 4.] Febroni, observing that the discs of zinc in the pile became oxidized in contact with the acidulated water, considered, as did Woolaston and Davy, that the oxidation was the chief cause why electricity was disengaged. Now Voltaic piles have nearly given place to Voltaic or Galvanic batteries, of which there are many varieties. [BATTERY, B. III. 4.]

găl'-va-nĭst, s. [Ital. Galvan(i); Eng., &c. suff. -ist.] A proficient in galvanism.

găl-va-nī-zā'-tion, s. [Eng. galvaniz(e); -ation.]

1. The act or process of galvanizing.
2. The state of being galvanized.

găl'-va-nīze, v.t. [Eng. galvan(ic); Eng., &c. suff. -ize.]

I. Of metals:

(1) To affect with galvanism.

(2) To plate with gold, silver, &c., by means of galvanism.

2. Of the human or animal frame: To restore to consciousness from a fainting fit, &c., by means of galvanic action.

3. Of immaterial things: To give life, spirit, or vitality to.

găl'-va-nīzed, pa. par. & a. [GALVANIZE, v.t.] galvanized-iron, s.

1. Properly: Iron coated with zinc by galvanic deposition.

2. Less properly: Iron coated with zinc without galvanism. The iron being cleaned by dilute acid and friction, is heated and plunged into a bath of melted zinc covered with sal-ammoniac, and stirred up till the surface becomes coated with zinc.

găl'-va-nī-zĕr, s. [Eng. galvaniz(e); -er.] One who or that which galvanizes.

găl-va-nō-, pref. [Galvan(i), -o connective.] Relating to Galvani, the discoverer of galvanism.

găl-va-nō-câus'-tĭc, a. [Pref. galvano- (q.v.), and Eng. caustic.]

Elect. & Med. : Relating to the use of heat generated by galvanism as a caustic.

găl-văn'-ō-glўph, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Gr. γλυφή (gluphē) = an engraving.] An engraving produced by the process of galvanoglyphy (q.v.).

găl-va-nŏg'-lў-phў, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Gr. γλύφω (gluphō) = to hollow out, to engrave.]

Engraving : A process in which the ground is spread on a clean zinc plate and etched. Succeeding coats of varnish are spread by a roller on the ground, avoiding the obliteration of the lines, which become deeper with each coat. The finished plate becomes a matrix for a reverse impression obtained in the electro-bath, and this reverse is used to print from in the ordinary manner.

găl-va-nŏ'-ō-graph, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Gr. γραφή (graphē) = a drawing, a delineation.] A picture produced by galvanography (q.v.).

găl-văn-ō-grăph'-ĭc, a. [Eng. galvanograph(y); -ic.] Produced by or in any way connected with the process of galvanography (q.v.).

găl-va-nŏg'-ra-phў, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Gr. γραφή (graphē) = a drawing, a delineation.]

Engraving : A process of Austrian origin, by which a plate of silvered copper is covered by an artist with different coats of a somewhat transparent pigment, so that on the dark portions the paint is thick and raised, and the surface is relatively depressed in the light tints. A copy of this is made by the electrotype process; the darker being now the deeper portions, the whole forms an intaglio, like a copperplate, and is printed from by the copperplate-printing process.

găl-va-nŏl'-ō-gĭst, s. [Pref. galvano-, Gr. λόγος (logos) = discourse, and Eng., &c. suff. -ist.] One who describes the phenomena of galvanism; a writer on galvanism.

găl-va-nŏl'-ō-gў, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Gr. λόγος (logos) = discourse.] A description of galvanism; a treatise on its phenomena.

găl-văn-ō-măg-nĕt'-ĭc, a. [Pref. galvano-, and Eng. magnetic.]

Elect : The same as Electromagnetic (q.v.).

găl-va-nŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Gr. μετρον (metron) = a measure.]

Elect. Machine : A multiplier; a very delicate apparatus for determining the existence, direction, and intensity of currents. It was invented by Schweigger, in Germany, in 1819, just before Ørsted, in Denmark, in the same year, discovered the law of directive action, which a fixed current excites at a distance on a magnetic needle. In connection with the construction of the Indicator telegraph (q.v.), Ampere, Arago, Schilling, Gauss, Weber, Alexander, all used the principle, but it was carried out in a superior manner to any by Cooke and Wheatstone in 1837. The galvanometer consists of a magnetic needle suspended by a filament of silk, and surrounded in the plane of the magnetic meridian by a copper wire, forming a complete circuit round the needle in the direction of its length. The actions of the four branches of the circuit, give the North Pole the same direction. The coiling of the copper wire in the direction of the needle multiplies the current. By making several, though not an indefinite number of circuits, all insulated, the action of the instrument becomes more powerful, and the deflection of the needle greater. If there be two or three thousand turns of fine wire, with their coils carefully insulated by means of silk and shellac, currents of high intensity will be generated.

GALVANOMETER.

¶ (1) Differential galvanometer :

Elect. Mach. : An instrument designed to ascertain a difference in the intensity of two currents. It consists of a needle like that in an ordinary galvanometer, round the frame of which are coiled two wires of the same kind and size, completely isolated from each other, and with binding screws, so that separate currents can be passed through each of them. If the currents are of the same intensity, but in different directions, there is no deflection, but, where the needle is deflected, one of the two currents differs from the other.

(2) Marine galvanometer :

Elect. Mach. : A galvanometer designed to test the insulation of submarine cables, and at the same time unaffected by the pitching and rolling of the ship. It consists of several thousand coils of copper wire-insulating. In the centre of the coil is a slide carrying the magnet; it is attached to a mirror of thinly silvered glass. A single fibre of silk is stretched across the slide, to this the mirror and magnet are attached in such a manner that the fibre exactly passes in every position through the centre of gravity. The slide fits into a groove in the coil, and the whole is enclosed within a wrought-iron case, with the aperture in front, and a wrought-iron lid on the top. There are also an adjusting magnet and a scale.

găl-văn-ō-mĕt'-rĭc, a. [Pref. galvano-, and Eng. metric (q.v.).] Pertaining or relating to the measurement of magnetic currents.

găl-vạn-ō-plăs'-tĭc, a. [Pref. galvano-, and Eng. plastic.] Of or belonging to the art or process of electrotyping (q.v.).

găl-văn'-ō-scōpe, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Gr. σκοπέω (skopeō) = to look at anything.]

Elect. Mach.: An instrument for measuring the strength of galvanic currents. Example, a magnetic needle.

găl-văn-ō-scŏp'-ĭc, a. [Eng. galvanoscop(e); -ic.] Pertaining to a galvanoscope.

găl-vạn-ō-thĕr-mŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Pref. galvano-, and Eng. thermometer.]

Mach.: An instrument for measuring the heating effect of a galvanic current.

* gal-ver-ly, adv. [A corrupt. of deliverly (q.v.).] Cleverly, capitally.

"A light gennet that is young and trotteth galverly."—Wriothesley. To Sir T. Wyatt, Oct. 1537.

* galwes, s. [Gallows.]

* gam, s. [Game.]

ga'-mạ, s. [Port., = a doe.] See compound.

gama-grass, s.

Bot.: Tripsacum dactyloides. It is regarded in Mexico as very valuable for fodder.

* gamaieu, s. [Cameo.]

gạ-ma'-sĕ-ī, gạ-măs'-ĭ-dēş, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gamas(us) (q.v.); Lat. masc. pl. adj. suff. -ei, or masc. and fem. -idcs.]

Zool.: A tribe of Arachnida (Spiders), order Acarina. The forceps is didactylous, the palpi projecting or very distinct, and in the form of a thread. They generally attach themselves to the bodies of beetles.

gạ-măsh'-ĕs, gạ-măçh'-ĕs, s. pl. [O. Fr. gamaches; Ital. gamascie = splatterdashes; O. Fr. gambe (Fr. jambe) = the leg.]

1. High boots, buskins, or startups.

2. Short splatterdashes worn by ploughmen.

gạ-măss', s. [N. Amer. Indian squamash.]

Bot.: The biscuit root, Camassia esculenta.

găm'-ạ-sŭs, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Zool.: The typical genus of Gamasei (q.v.).

găm'-bạ, gambe, s. [O. Fr. gambe; Fr. jambe; Ital. gamba = the leg.]

Her.: The whole foreleg of a lion or other beast. If couped or erased near the middle joint, it is a paw.

găm'-bạ (1), s. [Low Lat. = a hoof.]

Comp. Anat.: The elongated metacarpus or metatarsus of the Ruminantia and Solidungula.

găm'-bạ (2), s. [Ital.] [Gamb.]

Music:

I. A stringed instrument of the viol sort, called also Viola da gamba, with six strings, weaker in tone and smaller in size than the violoncello, so called because it was held between the knees of the player, as distinguished from Viola da braccia, played on the arm. [Viola; Viol-de-gamboys.]

GAMBA.

2. An organ-stop, the pipes of which are, in continental organs, generally cylindrical, of small scale, and well cut up, but sometimes conical in shape. Its tone is pungent, and not unlike that of a violin or violoncello. In England the Bell Gamba is more commonly met with. (Stainer & Barrett.)

găm ba'-dō (1), găm-bā'de, s. [Ital. gamba = the leg.]

1. A leather legging for equestrians. It is wrapped around the leg, reaching from the knee to the foot, and is fastened at the side by clasps.

"The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week."—Dennis: Letters.

2. A kind of leather case attached to a saddle in place of stirrups.

* găm-ba'-dō (2), s. [Gambol.] A gambol, a frolic.

* gam-bauld, s. [Gambol, s.]

gam-beer, s. [Gambier.]

* găm'-bĕ-şŏn, * găm'-bī-şŏn, * gam-bas-sowne, * gaum-bi-soun, * gam-e-son, s. [O. Fr. gambaison, gambeson.]

Old Armour: A body-covering, stuffed with wool, and padded in parallel lines of needle-work. It was worn beneath the hanberk of a knight as a padding for the armour. The surcoat was also quilted with cotton wool. An early and curious example may be seen in the surcoat of Edward the Black Prince, which is still suspended over his tomb in Canterbury Cathedral.

GAMBESON.

găm'-bĕt, găm-bĕt'-ta, s. [Fr. & Prov. gambette; Ital. gambetta.]

Ornith.: Totanus gambetta, Linnæus's Tringa gambetta, the Redshank or Gambet snipe. In summer it is brown above with black spots, in winter it is almost of a uniform grey-brown; its legs are red. Found in Scandinavia, in Iceland, and in the Arctic regions.

găm'-bĭr, găm'-bĭĕr, s. [A Malayan word.]

Pharm.: An extract from the leaves of Uncaria gambir, a cinchonaceous plant. It is a simple astringent. It is chewed by the Malays with betel leaf and areca, specially to relieve aphthous eruptions of the mouth and fauces. It is called also Terra japonica.

* găm'-bĭ-şŏn, s. [Gambeson.]

* gămb'-ĭst, s. [Ital. gamba; Eng. suff. -ist.]

Music: A performer on the viol di gamba.

găm'-bĭt, s. [Fr.; Ital. gambetto = a tripping up; gamba = the leg.]

Chess: A chess-opening; the sacrifice of a pawn in the beginning of the game in order to obtain a favourable position for attack.

găm-ble, v.i. & t. [Formed from game (q.v.) by the addition of the suff. -le, the b being excrescent, as in humble, number, &c.

A. Intrans.: To play or game for a stake.

"Where neither strumpets' charms, nor drinking-bout, Nor gambling practices, can find it out."
Cowper: Tirocinium, 246.

B. Trans.: To waste or squander in gambling; followed by away; as, He gambled away all his property.

găm'-blĕr, s. [Eng. gambl(e); -er.] One who gambles; one given to gambling or playing for a stake.

"The appointment of a ruined gambler to such a trust would alone have sufficed to disgust the public."
—Macaulay: Hist. of Eng., ch. vi.

găm-bō'ge (or găm-bō'ge), s. [A corrupt. of Cambodia, the name of the district in Annam, where it is found.]

1. Chem.: Gamboge, or camboge, is a gum resin containing about 70 per cent. of resin, and 24 per cent. of soluble gum. It is obtained by piercing the bark of Garcinia morella, var. pedicellata, a tree belonging to the order Guttiferæ, growing in Cambodia, Siam, and the south part of Cochin China. The juice is allowed to harden in bamboo reeds, hence it occurs in commerce in the form of pipes which are striated externally. Gamboge is hard brittle, breaking with a yellow-brown vitreous conchoidal fracture, its powder is a bright yellow colour, it is inodorous, has a slight taste, but when chewed is acid. When rubbed with water the gum dissolves, forming a yellow emulsion with the suspended resin. Gamboge is soluble in alcohol and in ammonia. The resin can be extracted by ether: it is a hyacinth-red colour, and yields a yellow powder; it dissolves in alkalies with a deep red colour; the resin fused with caustic potash yields phoroglucin, iso-uvitic acid, pyrotartaric acid, and an amorphous syrupy acid. Gamboge is used as a pigment in water-colour painting. By the action of nitric acid it is oxidized into picric and oxalic acids. An inferior kind of gamboge in the form of flat cakes is prepared in Ceylon from Hebradendron gambogioides.

2. Pharm.: Gamboge is used in the preparation of Pilula Cambogiæ Compositæ, Compound Gamboge Pill, composed of gamboge, Barbadoes aloes, compound powder of cinnamon, hard soap, and syrup. Gamboge acts as a drastic hydragogue purgative, it causes vomiting and griping, it is seldom given alone, but combined with cream of tartar in cases of dropsy, or with calomel in cerebral disease. In large doses gamboge is a powerful irritant, causing inflammation of the alimentary canal, which may end fatally.

găm-bō'ğ'-ĭ-ạn (or ō as ô), a. [Eng. gambog(e); -ian.] Of or pertaining to gamboge.

găm-bō'ğ'-ĭc (or ō as ô), s. [Eng. gambog(e); -ic.] Pertaining to or obtained from gamboge.

găm'-bŏl, * gam-bold, * gam-bole, * gam-boll, v.i. [Gambol, s.]

1. To frisk or skip about; to frolic; to dance; to play in frolics.

"Bears, tigers, ounces, pards, Gambolled before them." Milton: P. L., iv. 345.

* 2. To leap, to start.

"I the matter will record, which madness Would gambol from." Shakesp.: Hamlet, III. 4.

găm'-bŏl, * gam-bauld, * gam-bold, * gam-boll, s. [O. Fr. gambade = a gambol, from Ital. gambata = a kick; gamba = the leg.] A skipping or dancing about; a frolic; a caper; merriment, sport.

"All kind of freedom of speech was then [in their Saturnalia] allowed to slaves even against their masters; and we are not without some imitation of it in our Christmas gambols."—Dryden: Juvenal. (Dedic.)

☞ For the difference between gambol and frolic, see Frolic.

* gam-bone, s. [Gammon, s. (1).] A gammon.

găm'-brĕl, s. [Ital. gambrella, dimin. of gamba = a leg.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. The hind leg of a horse.

"As appears it hath, by the weight which the tendon lying on a horse's gambrel doth then command."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. i., ch. v.

2. A bent stick like a horse's hind leg; used for suspending carcasses.

II. Arch.: A gambrel-roof (q.v.).

gambrel-roof, s.

Arch.: A roof with two sets of rafters at different inclinations; a mansard roof.

gambrel-roofed, a. Having a gambrel or mansard roof.

* găm'-brĕl, * găm'-brĭl, v.t. [Gambrel, s.] To truss or hang up by means of a gambrel.

"[I'll] carry you gambrilled thither like a mutton."
Beaum. & Fl.: The Nice Valour iv. 1.

găm-broŏn' s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Fabric: A kind of twilled linen cloth for linings.

gāme, * gam, * gam-en, * gam-myn, * gam-yn, * gome, s. & a. [A.S. gamen, gomen = sport, game; O. Sax. gaman; Icel. gaman; Dan. gamen = mirth; O. H. Ger. gaman; M. H. Ger. gamen = joy; O. Fris game, gome; Sw. gamman.]

A. As substantive:

* 1. Sport, merriment, glee.

"At is game, iol, and gle." Land of Cockayne, 48.

2. Jest, as opposed to earnest.

"As mocking boys in game themselves forswear."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, I. 1.

* 3. A frolic, a gambol.

"Thereto she coude skip, and make a game,
As any kid." Chaucer: C. T., 3,259.

4. Any contrivance, arrangement, or institution designed to afford recreation, sport, or amusement; as, the game of cricket, or of football; in the plural, contests in different sports, as wrestling, running, &c.

"There the youthful Nortons met To practise games and archery."
Wordsworth: White Doe of Rylstone, c. v.

5. A single match or contest in any sport: as, a game of chess, a game of cricket.

6. The requisite number of points or advantages to be gained in order to obtain the victory in a game.

* 7. Field sports: as hunting, coursing, shooting.

"Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes."—L'Estrange.

8. Animals pursued or taken in field sports; specif., animals so termed in the Game-laws: as pheasants, grouse, &c.

"The offence of destroying such beasts and fowls as are ranked under the denomination of game, was formerly observed to be an offence in all persons alike, who had not authority from the crown to kill game, by the grant of either a free warren, or at least a manor of their own. But the laws, called the game-laws, also inflicted additional punishments on persons guilty of this general offence, unless they were people of such rank or fortune as were therein particularly specified. All persons, therefore, of what property or distinction soever, that killed game out of their own territories, or even upon their own estates, without the king's licence expressed by the grant of a franchise, were guilty of a first original offence, of encroaching on the royal prerogative."—Blackstone: Comment., bk. iv., ch. 13.

9. The object of pursuit.

"Therefore in towns and cities they abound,
For there the game they seek is easiest found."
Cowper: Tirocinium, 520.

10. A recreation, diversion, or pastime.

"An intellectual game pursued With curious subtility."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. iii.

11. A scheme, design or object planned.

"This seems to be the present game of the crown, and that they will begin no other till they see an end of this."—Temple.

12. A contest or trial of skill of any kind.

"In this political game, the great lottery of power is that into which men will purchase with millions of chances against them."—On Shortening the Duration of Parliaments.

* 13. Amorous sporting, gallantry.

"Set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, iv. 5.

B. As adjective:

1. Of or pertaining to such animals as are considered as game; as, a game preserve.

2. Plucky, enduring, spirited.

3. Ready, willing, prepared. (Slang.)

"'I dare say we can beat him.' 'I am game to try.'"
—C. Reade: It's Never too Late to Mend, ch. xxi.

¶ (1) To die game: To maintain a resolute, bold, or determined attitude to the last.

(2) To make game of: To turn into ridicule; to delude, to humbug.

"Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal, to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities?"
Milton: Samson Agonistes, 1,331.

game-bag, s. A bag used by a sportsman to hold the game killed by him.

"The entire concern weighs less than an ordinary game-bag, and can be made by an ordinary basket-maker."—Field Library, i. 218.

game-certificate, s. A license to kill game or to deal in game.

game-egg, s. An egg from which game-cocks are bred.

"Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,
To make the fowl more furious for the fray."
Garth: Dispensary, iv. 106.

game-laws, s. The laws defining and regulating the preservation of game. They define what animals are to be considered as game, and regulate the times during which such animals may be legally killed.

game-license, s. A license to kill or deal in game.

 game-place, s. A place or course where games were held.

 game-play, s. Games in amphitheatres, &c.

 game-player, * game-plaicr, s. One who acts; a juggler.

"Counterfaite pageants and joglings of game-plaiers."—Caluine: Foure Godlie Sermons, ser. 4.

game-preserver, s. A landowner who preserves game for his own sport or profit; esp., one who preserves it so strictly that the animals become a nuisance and a source of loss to his tenants or neighbours.

gāme, * gam-en, * gamne, v.i. & t. [A.S. gamenian; Icel. gamna.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To play at any sport or diversion; to amuse oneself; to take part in a game.

"Pleide and gamenede ech with other."
Floriz & Blanchefleur, 81.

2. To gamble; to play for a stake; to play at cards, dice, or other games with a view to win money or other thing wagered upon the issue.

"There was he gaming. Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 1.

B. Transitive:

1. To please, to amuse.

"Y wot no gameth the no gle."
Legend of S. Gregory, 162.

2. To gamble away; to risk.

"It is for fear of losing the inestimable treasure we have, that I do not venture to game it out of my hands for the vain hope of improving it."—Burke: Reform of Representation.

gāme, a. [Perhaps the same as cam = crooked.] Crooked, bent: as, a game leg. (Slang.)

"St. Ronan catching hold of the devil's game leg."—Scott: St. Ronan's Well, ch. i.

gā'me-cŏck, s. [Eng. game, and cock.] A cock bred for fighting.

"They manage the dispute as fiercely as two game-cocks in the pit."—Locke.

gā'me-fōwl, s. [Eng. game, and fowl.] Fowls bred or kept for cockfighting.

"Should never gamefowl hatch their eggs again."
Cowper: Task, iii. 312.

 gā'me-fūl, * gam-ful, gome-ful, a. [Eng. game; -full(l).]

1. Full of sport or mirth; mirthful; sportive.

"Ich am gomeful and gled."
St. Marherete, p. 10.

2. Full of game.

"Of gamefull parkes, of meadowes fresh."—P. Holland: Camden, p. 290.

 gā'me-fūl-lȳ, * gam-ful-ly, adv. [Eng. gameful; -ly.] In a merry, sportive manner.

"Whose gaume othere nought takynge gamfully."—Trevisa, vii. 111.

gā'me-kēēp-ĕr, s. [Eng. game, and keeper.] A person employed to look after game, and see that it is properly preserved and not poached.

"No southern lord could feel any confidence that, if he ventured to resist the government, even his own gamekeepers and huntemen would stand by him."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

 gā'me-lĕss, a. [Eng. game; -less.] Destitute of game.

gā'me-lȳ, * game-liche, * gam-li, * gam-liche, a. & adv. [Eng. game; -ly.]

 A. As adj.: Merry, sportive.

"Mi gode gameliche game gurte to grounde."—Relig. Antiq. ii. 8.

B. As adverb:

* 1. Merrily, gaily.

"William gamli to his gomes gan for to sele."
William of Palerne, 3,382.

2. In a game, plucky, or courageous manner; pluckily.

gā'me-nĕss, s. [Eng. game; -ness.] The quality or state of being game or plucky; pluckiness.

"There was no doubt about his gameness."—T. Hughes: Tom Brown at Oxford, ch. xxiv.

 gā'me-sŏme, * gam-sum, a. [Eng. game, and suff. -some.] Inclined to play or sports; merry, mirthful, sportive, gay, frolicksome.

"Thus ran she, gamesome as a colt."
Tennyson: Talking Oak, 121.

 gā'me-sŏme-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gamesome; -ly.] In a gamesome, merry, sportive, or frolicsome manner.

"The fatter the ox is, the more gamesomely he goes to the slaughter."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

gā'me-sŏme-nĕss, s. [Eng. gamesome; -ness.] The quality or state of being gamesome; sportiveness, gaiety, merriment.

gā'me-stĕr, s. [Eng. game, and suff. -ster.]

1. One who joins in any game; a player.

"Like gamesters, who, with eager zeal, Talk the game o'er between the deal."
Lloyd: A Familiar Epistle, &c.

* 2. Specif.: One who plays at any game for a stake; a gambler; one who is addicted to gaming.

"The gamester may have cast his cards away."
Cowper: Conversation, 313.

* 3. A merry, frolicsome person. (Shakesp.: Henry VIII., i. 4.)

* 4. A prostitute.

"[She] was a common gamester to the camp."
Shakesp.: All's Well That Ends Well, v. 3.

¶ Used, in Berkshire, either with or without the adjective old, to designate a cudgel-player.

"The players are called 'old gamesters'—why I can't tell you—and their object is simply to break one another's heads."—Hughes: Tom Brown's School-days, ch. ii.

 gā'me-strĕss, s. [Eng. gamester; -ess.] A female player or gambler.

"This [character], I need not tell you, is that of a gamestress."—Miss Burney: Camilla, bk. x., ch. v.

 gām'-ēȳ, a. [GAMY.]

găm'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γάμος (gamos) = marriage.]

Zool.: Of an ovum, sexual; requiring sexual congress to make it develop. (Opposed to an organic ovum which is capable of development by parthenogenesis.) (Herbert Spencer.) găm'-ĭn, s. [Fr.] A street Arab; a boy neglected and allowed to run about the streets.

 gām-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GAME, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or habit of playing for money or other stake; gambling; addiction to gambling.

"Gaming is a principle inherent in human nature. It belongs to us all."—Burke: On Economical Reform.

gaming-house, s. A house where gaming is carried on; a hell.

gaming-table, s. A table appropriated to gambling.

"A jest calculated to spread at a gaming-table, may be received with a perfect neutrality of face."—Goldsmith: The Bee, No. i.

 găm'-ma, * gam, * gamme, s. [Ital. gamma; O. Fr. game; Fr. gamme; Sp. & Port. gama; Icel. gammi.]

1. Ord. Lang.: The third letter (γ) in the Greek alphabet.

2. Music: The Gamut (q.v.).

"Gamme of songe. Gamma."—Prompt. Parv.

găm-mā-dĭ-ŏn, găm-mā'-tĭ-ŏn, s. [Eccles. Gr. = Eccles. Lat. gammadium.]

Ecclesiol. & Ch. Hist.: A cruciform ornament embroidered on or woven into ecclesiastical vestments both in the West and East. It takes its name from being composed of four gammas, placed back to back, forming a voided Greek cross ⌗. Du Cange (Gloss. Græc., fig. vii.) depicts SS. Nicholas and Basil in robes thus ornamented. This dissembled cross played an important part in the Discipline of the Secret, the gamma as a numeral signifying the Trinity, and by its rectangular form typifying the chief corner-stone of the Church. There is probably no connection between the Fylfot (q.v.), and the gammadion, which may still be seen on church bells in the counties of Derby, Lincoln, and York, and on Edyngdon's effigy at Winchester.

găm-măr'-ĭ-dæ, s. [Lat. gammarus (q.v.), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Crustaceans, order Amphipoda. Essential character, the possession of large foot-jaws covering the whole mouth. Chief genera Gammarus, found in fresh, and Talitrus (Sandhopper), in salt water.

 găm-mar'-ō-līte, s. [Lat. gammarus (q.v.), and Gr. λίθος (lithos) = stone.]

Paleont.: A fossil gammarus, or some crustacean of a certain affinity to it; a fossil crawfish.

găm'-ma-rŭs, s. [Lat. gammarus, cammarus; Gr. κάμμαρος (kammaros) = a kind of crab or lobster.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Gammaridæ (q.v.). Gammarus pulex is the freshwater shrimp. The specific name pulex means that it leaps when on the land like a flea. [PULEX.] In the water it swims on its side.

găm-mā'-tĭ-ŏn, s. [GAMMADION.]

 gamme, s. [GAMMA.]

găm'-mĕr, * găm'-mar, s. [A corrupt. of grammer, itself a corrupt. of grandmother (q.v.): cf. gaffer.] An old wife; an old lady.

"Old gammer Gurton, a right pleasant dame."
Drayton: The Moon-calf.

găm'-mŏn (1),  gam-on, * gam-bone, s. [O. Fr. gambon (Fr. jambon), from gambe = a leg, from Lat. gamba = a joint of the leg; Ital. gambone.] The buttock or thigh of a hog salted and dried; the lower end of a flitch.

"Gammons of the tusky boar,
And savoury haunch of deer."
Scott: Marmion, iii. 8.

găm'-mŏn (2), s. [The same as Mid. Eng. gamen = game, play.]

I. Literally:

1. A game, the same as BACKGAMMON (q.v.).

2. The act of gammoning; the state of being gammoned.

"If a gammon is won, the players throw for first play."—Field, Oct. 27, 1883.

II. Fig.: A hoax, a humbug, an imposition.

"They're the victims of gammon, Samivel; they're the victims of gammon."—Dickens: Pickwick, ch. xxvii.

* găm'-mŏn (3), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Naut.: The same as GAMMONING (q.v.).

"We learnt that they had broke their forestay and the gammon of their bowsprit."—Anson: Voyage Round the World, bk. i., ch. vii.

găm'-mŏn (1), v.t. [GAMMON (1), s.] To make into bacon; to salt and dry in smoke.

găm'-mŏn (2), v.t. [GAMMON (2), s.]

1. Lit.: To beat in the game of backgammon, by clearing one's own table of all the men before the opponent has been able to get all his men home, and withdraw any of them from the table.

2. Fig.: To hoax, to humbug, to impose upon.

"Lord Bacon couldn't have gammoned her better."
T. Hood: Tale of a Trumpet.

găm'-mŏn (3), v.t. [GAMMON (3), s.]

Naut.: To fasten a bowsprit to the stem of a ship by several turns of a rope.

gammon-plate, s. [GAMMON-SHACKLES.]

gammon-shackles, s. pl.

Naut.: A ring to which the gammoning is made fast; it is formed on the end of an iron plate bolted to the stem, called the gammon-plate.

găm'-mŏn-ĭng, s. [GAMMON (3), v.]

Naut.: Seven or eight turns of a rope passed over the bowsprit, and through a large hole in the stem or knee of the head, alternately, and serving to bind the inner quarter of the bowsprit close down to the ship's stem, in order to enable it the better to support the stays of the fore-mast. After all the turns are drawn as far as possible, the opposite ones are braced together under the bowsprit by a frapping.

gammoning-hole, s.

Naut.: A hole cut through the knee of the head, and sometimes one under the standard in the head, for the use of gammoning the bowsprit.

¶ Screw gammoning:

Naut.: A chain or plate fastened by means of a screw used in some vessels for convenience in bracing up the bowsprit when required.

găm'-mŭt, s. [GAMUT.]

găm'-mȳ, a. [Prov. Eng. gam = to make sticky.] Sticky.

* gam-ner, s. [Mid. Eng. gamen = game; -er.] A gambler.

"Blasphemy which suche gamners use."—Ascham: Toxophilus, p. 66.

găm-ō, pref. [Gr. γάμος (gamos) = a marriage, a wedding.]

Biol.: By sexual union, real or figurative.

găm'-ō-ĝĕn'-ĕ-sĭs, s. [Pref. gamo-, and Gr. γένεσις (genesis) = origin.]

Biol.: Generation by means of union of the sexes; the same as HOMOGENESIC. (Herbert Spencer.)

găm-ō-ĝĕ-nĕt'-ĭc, a. [Lat., Gr., &c. gamogene(sis); Eng. suff. -tic.]

Biol.: Pertaining or relating to Gamogenesis (q.v.).

găm-ō-morph'-ĭsm, s. [Gr. γάμος (gamos); μορφή (morphē) = form; Eng., &c. suff. -ism.]

Biol.: That stage of development in organized sexual beings, in which the transformations take place in the constitution as to make the spermatic or germinal parts reach maturity; puberty.

găm-ō-pĕt'-ą-loŭs, a. [Pref. gamo-, and petalous.]

Bot.: Monopetalous; but as, morphologically viewed, each petal was theoretically distinct, they are assumed to have been wedded or united to each other. Thus a five-cleft monopetalous corolla is looked on as one with five petals, united to form a divided one.

găm-oph'-ȳl-loŭs, a. [Pref. gamo-; Gr. φύλλον (phullon) = a leaf, and Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Composed of leaves united by their edges.

găm-ō-sĕp'-ą-loŭs, a. [Pref. gamo-; Eng. sepal (q.v.); and Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having but one sepal, composed however theoretically of as many sepals as the one has divisions. [MONOPETALOUS.]

gămp, s. & a. [After Sarah Gamp, a nurse in Dickens' Martin Chuzzlewit, represented as always carrying a large umbrella, very gouty in the middle.]

A. As subst.: An umbrella.

B. As adj.: Bulging. (Of an umbrella.)

"Grasping his gamp umbrella at the middle with his powerful hand."—Macmillan's Magazine, Nov. 1881, p. 62.

găm-sĭ-grā'-dīte, s. [Named from Gamsigrad, in Servia, where it occurs.]

Min.: Aluminous iron-manganese, amphibole, Dana's twelfth and last variety of amphibole.

găm'-ŭt, * găm'-mŭt, * gam-uth, s. [A compound of O. Fr. game, game and ut. According to Brachet, Guy of Arezzo [born about A.D. 990], used to call the series of seven notes of the musical scale by the mark γ [gamma]. The notes he named a, b, c, d, e, f, and g, the last giving the name to the series. Ut is the old Latin name for the first note in singing, now called do. The notes were named by the same Guy of Arezzo after certain syllables of a Latin hymn to St. John, as follows:—

"Ut queant laxis resonare fibris
Mira gestorum *fa*muli tuorum
*Sol*ue pollutis *la*biis reatum.
Sancte Johannes"

The last term si being made up of the initial letters of the two last words.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II.

2. Fig.: The whole course or extent.

II. Music:

* 1. The first or lowest note in Guy's scale of music.

2. A scale on which the notes in music are written or printed; it consists of lines and spaces, the notes printed on which are named after the first seven letters of the alphabet.

"When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song; others will undertake
By the same gamut changed to equal it."
Donne: Elegy 11.

gām'-ȳ, a. [Eng. gam(e); -y.]

1. Resembling or having the flavour of game; high.

2. Game, plucky, courageous.

găn, pret. of v. [A.S. ginnan = to begin (pa. t. gann, pa. par. gunnen.] [BEGIN, GIN, v.] Properly = began; but in Middle English commonly used as an auxiliary verb, with the simple force of did.

"Not with less dread the loud Ethereal trumpet from on high gan blow."
Milton: P. L., vi. 60.

* găn, v.i. [GO, v.]

* gan, s. [GANE, s.]

* gănch, * gănsh, * gaunch, v.t. [Fr. gauche; Ital. gancio; Sp. gancho = a hook.] To impale by dropping on to hooks, as the Turks do malefactors.

"Take him away, ganch him, impale him, rid the world of such a monster."—Dryden: Don Sebastian, iii. 2.

găn'-dĕr, * gan-dre, * gan-dur, * gan-dyr, s. [A.S. gandra, gaara; cogn. with Ger. gänserich; the d is excrescent.] [GOOSE.] The male of the goose.

"On waxen pinions soar without a fall, Swift as the prondest gander of them all."
Cowper: Anti-Thelyphthora.

gander's-wool, s. Feathers.

* găn'-dĕr, v.i. [GANDER, s.] To ramble, to wander, to gad.

"Nell might come gandering back in one of her tantrums. —H. Kingsley: Geoffrey Hamlyn, ch. x.

* gane, * gone, v.t. [A.S. gánian.] To yawn.

* gāno, s. [GANE, v.] The mouth or throat.

"To behald his ouglie ene twane,
His teribill vissage, and his grislie gane."
Douglas: Virgil, 250, 29.

găng, * gange, v.i. [A.S. gangan.] [GANG, s.; GO, v.]

1. To go, to move, to travel.

"Bynd thaine togidder continually in thi hart, and festin thame fast about thi hals, quhen thow gangis let them gang with the."—Abp. Hamiltoun: Catechisme (1552), fo. 79 a.

2. To walk; applied to a child.

"Quhen thow was young, I bure the in my arme, Full tenderlie till thow begouth to gang."
Lyndsay: Warkis (1592), p. 224.

3. To proceed, in discourse.

"Of Cornikle quhat suld I tary lang?
To Wallace agayue now breiffly will I gange."
Wallace: i. 144.

4. To travel on foot; as opposed to riding.

"This night I maun be hame afore I sleep.
Gin ganging winna do't, though I sud creep."
Ross: Helenore, p. 39.

5. To pass from one state to another.

"The fassouns and the ritis, that nocht gang wrang, Of sacrifice to thaym statute I ask."
Douglas: Virgil, 443, 9.

6. To proceed in any course of life.

"Thair is now (sais he) na damnatioun vnto thame that ar in Christ Jesu, quhilk gangis nocht efter the flesh, bot efter the spirit."—Abp. Hamiltoun: Catechisme (1552), fo. 74 b.

7. To have currency; to be in circulation. (Lit. & fig.)

"The said penny of gold to haue passage and gang for xxx. of the saidis grotis."—Acts Jas. IV. (1488), c. x. (ed. 1566).

8. To be in a state of being used; as, a ganging coal-pit, i.e., a coal-pit in which operations are carried on.

¶ (1) To gang away: To faint, to swoon.

(2) To gaag one's gait: To take oneself off.

(3) To gang out of oneself: To be distracted.

(4) To gang together: To be married.

(5) To gang to: To set; said of the sun.

(6) To gang to gait: To go abroad.

(7) To gang with: To go to wreck.

găng, gŏng, s. [A.S. gang, gong; Icel. gangr = a going, a gang; cogn. with Sw. gång = a going; Dut. gang = course, passage; Dan. gang = walk, gait; Goth. gaggs = a way, a street; Ger. gang = a way, a vein or streak in a mine.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of going or moving; gait, motion.

"He foryiaf . . . haiten and lamen richte gang."—O. Eng. Homilies, p. 229.

* 2. A journey.

"He ferden forth wel feole dawen gong."
Layamon, i. 55.

* 3. A privy, a gong.

"That mowe be likened to a comune gonge."—Chaucer: Parsones Tale, p. 346.

4. A number of persons going in company; hence, a number of persons associated or combined for a particular purpose; it is used in a depreciatory or contemptuous sense, as of disreputable or unfortunate persons.

"These men '. . . were distributed into gangs, and bestowed on persons who enjoyed favour at court."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

5. A number of workmen or labourers engaged on a particular work under one overseer or foreman.

"We works in gangs from three to five men."—Mayhew: London Labour, &c., ii. 488.

6. A term applied to a set of tools attached together or to a common stock as to act together; as a gang of bits, a gang-plough, a gang-saw, &c.

7. The channel of a stream, or the course in which it runs; a water-course. [WATER-GANG.]

"In the actioun for the wrangwis broiking of the said Robertis grond & land of Auchinane, & drawing of the watter out of the auld gang, & for dinerss vtheris causis," &c.—Act. Dom. Conc. (1493), p. 307.

8. A ravine; a gully.

9. As much of anything as one goes for or carries at once.

10. A field for the pasture of cattle; a run.

II. Min.: A course or vein; also the rock or earth inclosing the ore; a gangue.

* gang-bye, s. A go-by. (Scotch.)

"Mercy on me, that I suld live in my auld days to gi'e the gang-bye to the very writer! Sheriff-clerk!!"—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xlii.

gang-cask, s.

Nautical:

1. A small cask for bringing off water in boats

2. The cask in which drinking-water for immediate use is kept on deck.

gang-cultivator, s.
Husb.: A cultivator in which a number of cultivator-shares are stocked in such a way as to be driven in a set; usually attached to a carriage on which the driver is mounted.

gang-edger, s. A machine in which a movable and a stationary circular saw are mounted on one arbor for the purpose of dressing boards of uniform width as they come from the log.

gang-master, s. The employer, overseer, or foreman of a gang of men or labourers employed on some particular work.

gang-plough, s. Several ploughs stocked in one frame, generally supported on wheels, and ridden by the ploughman.

gang-punch, s. An arrangement of a number of punches in a single stock for punching fish-plates, or other things.

gang-saw, s. An arrangement of sawa placed parallel in a gate, so as to make a number of kerfs simultaneously, dividing the timber into planks at one operation.

gang-thereout, a. Vagrant, vagabond; leading a roaming life.

"I am a lone woman, for James he's awa to Drumshourloch fair with the year-aulds, and I darena for my life open the door to ony of your gang-thereout sort o' bodies."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. i.

gañ-ga, s. [Sp.] A name given to the birds of the genus Pterocles or Sandgrouse (q.v.).

găñg'-a-ble, a. [Eng. gang; -able.]
I. Passable. (Applied to a road that can be travelled.)
2. Tolerable.
3. Used in reference to money that has currency; current.

găñg'-bŏard, s. [Eng. gang, and board.]
Nautical:
I. A board with cleats, forming a bridge reaching from the gangway of a vessel to the wharf; a gang-plank; a gangway.

"As we were putting off the boat, they laid hold of the gangboard, and unhooked it off the boat's stern."—Cook: Second Voyage, bk. iii., ch. iv.

2. A plank within or without the waist for a sentinel to pace.

găñg'-dāys, s. pl. [A.S. gangdagos.] Days of perambulation, or of walking through the bounds of a parish, in Rogation-week. The clergy and parishioners walked round the fields and meadows, carrying banners, torches, and the images of saints, and sprinkling holy water on every side, believing that by this means they would ensure an abundant harvest, and protect the new-sown crop against the incursions of destructive animals. The origin of the practice is not clearly ascertained, according to some authorities it is an adaptation of a pagan custom. [Lustration.]

"In this tyme was institut the processioun of the gangdayis in Fraunce, thre dayis afore the Ascensioun day, be Mamertius byshop of Vyen."—Bellenden: Cron., bk. ix., ch. vi.

* gange, v.t. [Gang, v.]

găñg'-ĕr, * gang-ar, s. [Eog. gang; -er.]
1. A walker, a goer, a mover.

"The stringhalt will gae aff when it's gaen a mile; it's a weel kenn'd ganger; they ca' it souple Tam."—Scott: Roy Roy, ch. xxvii.

2. A pedestrian; one who travels on foot, as distinguished from one mounted on horseback.

"And gif ony complaynt be of silk ridaris or gangaris, the kyng commandis his officiaris till arest thame, & put thame vnder sikkir borowis quhill the kyng be certifyit tharof."—Acts Jas. I., 1424 (ed. 1814), p. 1.

3. The overseer or foreman of a gang of labourers employed on some particular work, as, the ganger of a gang of platelayers on a railway.

"The ganger, or head of the working gang, who receives his orders from the inspector, and directs the men accordingly."—Mayhew: London Labour & the London Poor, ii. 487.

Găn-gĕt'-ĭc, * Găn'-gĭc, a. [Lat. Ganget-(icus); Lat., Eng., &c. Gang(es), and Eng. suff. -ic.] Of or pertaining to the river Gangea; having its habitat in the river Ganges.

Gangetic-crocodile. Gangetic-gavial, s. [Gavial.]

găñg'-ĭñg, pr. par., a., & s. [Gang, v.]
A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).
C. As subst.: The act of going, travelling, or proceeding; progress.

"The bailye continewit the ganging of the actioun."—Aberd. Reg. (1548), v. 20.

ganging-furth, s. Exportation.

"Ane article for ganging furth of fische."—Acts Jas. VI., 1581 (ed. 1814), p. 214.

ganging-gear, s. The machinery of a mill.

ganging-goods, s. pl. Goods that can be easily removed; movables.

ganging-plea, s. A long-continued or permanent process in a court of law.

"But I thought you had some law affair of your ain to look after—I have ane myself—a ganging-plea that my father left me."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. iii.

* găñ'-gle, v.i. [Janole.] To chatter, to prate.

"To comene ganglende and to moche spekinde."—Ayenbite, p. 226.

găñ'-glĭñg, a. [Eng. gang; dim. suff. -ling.] Straggling.

găñ'-glĭ-ăc, găñ'-glĭ-al, a. [Eng. ganglĭ(on); -ac, -al.] Relating to a ganglion.

găñ'-glĭ-āt-ĕd, a. [Eng. ganglĭ(on); -ated.] Having ganglions; intermixed with enlargements at the intersections.

găñ'-glĭ-form, găñ'-glĭ-ō-form, a. [Eng. ganglion, and form.] Having the form, shape, or appearance of a ganglion.

găñ'-glĭ-ŏn, s. (pl. găñ'-glĭ-a). [Lat., from Gr. γάγγλιον (gangglion) = a tumour near a tendon.]
I. Anatomy:
(1) Human:
(a) A small mass of vascular neurine, situated in the course of a nerve, and distinct both from the brain and from the spinal cord. The sympathetic system of nerves consists of a series of ganglia, extending on each side of the vertebral column, from the head to the coccyx, connecting with all the other nerves of the body. Each ganglion is a distinct centre, giving off branches in four directions, superior, inferior, external, and internal. They are divided into cranial ganglia, cervical, thoracic, &c.
(b) A lymphatic gland.
(2) Comp.: A centre of the nervous system, containing nerve cells, and receiving and giving out impressions. (Huxley.)
2. Surg.: A globular indolent tumour, situated on the course of a tendon. It is produced by the elevation of the sheath of the tendon and the infusion into it of a viscid fluid.
3. Bot. (Pl.): The mycelium of certain fungals.

ganglion-cells, s. pl.
Anat.: The same as Nerve-cells (q.v.). The are called also Ganglionic-corpuscles.

găñ'-glĭ-ŏn-a-rў, a. [Eng. ganglion; -ary.] Composed of ganglia.

găñ-glĭ-ō-neŭr'-a, s. [Gr. γάγγλιον (ganglion) [Ganglion], and νεῦρα (neura) pl. of νεῦρον (neuron) = a sinew, a tendon, a nerve.] Zool.: The name given by Rudolphi and Ehrenberg to the Articulata and Mollusca, in which the nervous system is ganglionic. Grant describes the nervous system of the Articulata as diplo-neurose, and that of the Mollusca as cyclo-gangliated.

găñ-glĭ-ŏn'-ĭc, a. [Eog. ganglion; -ic.] Pertaining to a ganglion or ganglia; as, the ganglionic nerves.

ganglionic-corpuscles, s. pl.
Anat.: The same as Ganglion-cells (q.v.).

ganglionic-nerves, s. pl.
Anat.: The same as Sympathetic-nerves (q.v.).

găñ-glĭ-ō-nī'-tĭs, s. [Eng. ganglion; suff. -itis.] Pathology:
1. Inflammation of a nervous ganglion.
2. Inflammation of a lymphatic ganglion.

găñ'-glĭ-oŭs, a. [Eng., &c., ganglĭ(on); Eng. suff. -ous.] Zool.: Of or belonging to a ganglion. (Owen.) găñg'-plănk, s. [See Gangboard.]

găñ-græ'-na, s. [Lat.] [Ganorene, s.] găñ'-grĕl, găñ'-grĭl, găñ'-ga-rĕl, a. & s. [Eng. gang; -rel.]

A. As adjective:
1. Walking.
2. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

"He's nae gentleman, nor drap's bluid o' gentleman wad grudge twa gangrel puir bodies the sheiter o' a waste house."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. iii.

B. As substantive:
1. A wandering person; one who strolls from place to place; a vagabond.

"How scho is tute-mowit lyk ane aep;
And lyk a gangrel onto graep."
Dunbar: Maitland Poems, p. 97.

2. A child beginning to walk.

"Nory now a gangrel trig was grown."
Ross: Helenore, p. 13.

* găñ'-grē-nāte, v.t. [Eng. gangren(e); -ate.] To gangrene; to cause a gangrene in; to mortify.

"So parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated and mortified, become black."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. vi., ch. xx.

găñ'-grēne, * gan-green, s. [Fr. gangrène, from Lat. gangræna; Gr. γάγγραινα (gangraina) = an eating away; γραιῳ (graiō) = to eat.]
I. Literally & Technically:
1. Pathol.: A tendency to death or mortification, but stopping short of the complete process. It may affect an organ, such as the lung, but this is rare, or the soft tissues, which is common, particularly of the foot, especially in the aged, as senile gangrene. When part remains alive it is gangrene, when it is completely dead sphacelus. So in bone, cariea and necrosis occur, the first as gangrene or incomplete, the second as sphacelus or complete death. Degeneration differs from gangrene in not becoming isolated or putrid, but, if not absorbed, remaining in continuity with surrounding parts. Gangrene of soft parts is usually termed sloughing. Necramia, or death of the blood, and sequestrum, or a dead piece of bone, are examples of gangrenous lesions.

"She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay
By cutting hope, like a lopped limb, away."
Waller: Of the Queen, 25.

2. Bot.: A disease ending in the putrefaction of the parts affected or of the whole plant.
* II. Fig.: A moral festering or corruption.

"The very substance of the soul is festered with them; the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured."—Addison: Spectator, No. 90.

găñ'-grēne, v.t. & i. [Fr. gangrener.] [Gangrene, s.]
A. Transitive:
1. Literally:
(1) To cause a gangrene in; to mortify.

"But to accuse the Gospel of severity on this account, would be just as rational and as equitable, as to charge the surgeon with cruelty for amputating a gangrened limb."—Porteus, vol. ii., ser. 1.

* (2) To make corrupt or vicious.

"This dyscrasie and gangrened disposition does always suppose a long or a base sin for their parent."—Bp. Taylor, vol. i., ser. 20.

B. Intrans.: To become mortified.

* găñ-grĕ-nĕsç'-ent, a. [Eng. gangrene; suff. -escent = Lat. -escens.] Becoming gangrened or gangrenous; tending to mortification.

găñ'-grē-noŭs, a. [Eng. gangren(e); -ous.] Affected with gangrene or mortification; mortified; gangrened; indicating gangrene or mortification.

"The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black, and gangrenous."—Arbuthnot: On Aliments.

găñg'-tīde, s. [Eng. gang, and tide (q.v.).] The same as Gangweek (q.v.).

găñgue, s. [Gang, s.]
I. Smelting: The superfluous earthy matter of a smelting-furnace.
2. Mining: The mineral matters in which metallic ores are imbedded.

găñg'-wāy, s. [Eng. gang, and way.]
I. Ordinary Language:
1. A passage or means of temporary access to a place or building, consisting of an inclined plane of planks; specif., the opening in the bulwarks of a vessel by which persons come on board or disembark; also the temporary bridge affording means of passing from the ship to the shore, or vice versa.

"I had hardly got into the boat, before I was told they had stolen one of the ancient stanchions from the opposite gangway, and were making off with it."—Cook: Second Voyage, bk. ii., ch. ix.

2. In the House of Commons a narrow passage running across the House, and dividing the seats on each side into two parts. Above the gangway, that is, near the Speaker's end of the House, sit the Ministry and Opposition with their respective adherents, the former on the Speaker's right, the latter on his left. Below the gangway sit the neutral or independent members, whence the phrase To sit below the gangway, as applied to a member, expresses that he is independent and not bound to either party.

II. Mining: A main level, applied chiefly to coal mines.

¶ To bring to the gangway:

Naut.: To punish a sailor by seizing him up and flogging him. The expression derives its force from the fact that before the abolition of corporal punishment in the service, sailors about to be flogged were tied to a grating in the gangway, where the sentence was carried out.

găng'-week, s. [Eng. gang, and week.] Rogation-week, when the bounds of parishes are perambulated or beaten. [GANGDAYS.]

găn'-il, s. [Fr.] A kind of brittle limestone.

găn'-ĭs-tẽr, găn'-nĭs-tẽr, s. [A local word; etym. doubtful.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A kind of grit or hard sandstone found under certain coal-beds in the lower coal measures of Derbyshire, Yorkshire, &c. Properly, it is a siliceous variety of fire-clay.

2. Metall.: A refractory material used for lining the Bessemer converters. It consists of crushed or ground siliceous stone, mixed with fire-clay. Its object is to save the iron converter from destruction by the heat of the charge. Ground quartz, sand, and fire-clay.

"The lining consists of ganister ground fine, moistened, and rammed down upon the iron frame."—Cassell's Technical Educator, pt. xi., p. 226.

găn'-jah, gŭn'-jah, s. [Mahratta and Hind. ganja. See def.]

Bot.: The term used in India for the leaves or young leaf-buds of the hemp-plant (Cannabis sativa), which are frequently rubbed between the hands, added to tobacco, and smoked, to increase the power of the more harmless narcotic. In many cases the ganga is smoked by itself for the purpose of intoxication. [BHANG.] (Herklots & Jaffur Sheerreef.) găn'-nĕt, * gan-et, * gante, s. [A.S. ganot; cogn. with Dut. gent = a gander; O. H. Ger. genazo; Mid. H. Ger. ganze.]

Ornith.: The genus Sula, and specially the species S. alba, often called S. bassana, the Soland (i.e., Solent) goose. [BOOBY, SOLAND-GOOSE, SULA.]

găn-ō-çĕph'-ą-lą, s. pl. [Gr. γάνος (ganos)= brightness, and κεφαλή (kephalē) = the head.]

Palæont.: In Professor Owen's classification, a group of Labyrinthodonts, characterised by having their heads covered with shining plates. The chief genus is Archegosaurus, which is, perhaps, a larval form.

găn-ō-çĕph'-ą-loŭs, a. [GANOCEPHALA.] Having the head covered with shining polished plates; pertaining or belonging to the ganocephala.

găn-ō'-dŭs, s. [Gr. γάνος (ganos) = brightness, and ὀδούς (odous) = tooth.]

Palæont.: A numerous genus of fossil Chimæroid fishes found chiefly in the Great Oolite of Stonesfield.

găn-ōid, a. & s. [Gr. γάνος (ganos) = brightness, and εἶδος (eidos) = form, appearance.]

Palæontology:

A. As adj.: Having a brilliant surface; pertaining to the scales of the extinct fishes mentioned under B., or to those fishes themselves. [GANOID SCALES.]

B. As subst.: The fishes of the order Ganoidei (q.v.).

ganoid-scales, s. pl.

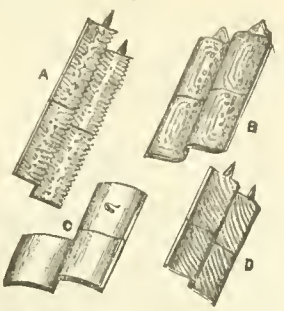
Palæont.: Scales generally of an angular



GANOID-SCALES OF
A. Enrynotus crenatus; B. Dapedius granulatus; C. Palæoniscus Voltzii; D. Amblypterus striatus.

form, and composed of horny or bony plates, covered with a thick layer of shining enamel.

găn-ōid'-ąl, a. [Eng., &c., ganoid; -al.]

Palæont.: The same as GANOID, adj. (q.v.).

găn-ōĭ'-dĕ-ąn, a. [Eng., &c.. ganoid; -ean.]

A. As adj.: The same as GANOID, a. (q.v.).

B. As substantive:

1. Sing.: The same as GANOID, s. (q.v.).

2. Pl.: The order Ganoidei (q.v.).

găn-ōĭ'-dĕ-ī, gąn-ōĭ'-dĕ-ą, s.pl. [Masc. or neut. pl. of Mod. Lat. ganoideus.] [GANOID.]

Ichthy.: The name given by Agassiz to one of the four orders into which, chiefly for palæontological purposes, he divided the class of Fishes. It has since been adopted by Profs. Müller, Owen, Huxley, &c., but with certain modifications. The essential character of the fishes belonging to the order is that they have Ganoid scales (q.v.). These constitute the exoskeleton. The endoskeleton is cartilaginous instead of osseous. There are generally two pairs of fins; the first ray is usually a strong spine. The tail is generally heterocercal. The few living species are mostly freshwater, but marine forms must once have abounded. The ganoids commenced at least as early as the deposition of the Upper Silurian Rocks, and have continued, though their relative importance is much diminished, till now. The order has been divided into:—

Section 1.—Lepidoganoidei. Sub-orders: (1) Amiadæ: (2) Lepidosteidæ; (3) Platysomidæ; (4) Crossopterygidæ; (5) Acanthodidæ.
Section 2.—Placoganoidei. Sub-orders: (1) Ostracostei; and (2) Choudrosteidæ.

găn-ō'-mą-līte, s. [Gr. γάνωμα (ganōma) = brightness, brilliance; suff. -lite.]

Min.: A silicate of lead and manganese, represented by the formula $(PbMn)SiO_3$. It occurs massive, without cleavage, associated with native lead and other minerals at Långban, Wermland, Sweden. It was described by Nordenskiold. (T. Davies, F.G.S.) gąn-ŏm'-ą-tīte, s. [Gr. γάνωμα (ganōma), genit. γανώματος (ganōmatos) = brightness, brilliance, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: An impure iron sinter with some oxide of cobalt, &c. Found at Joachimsthal and Andreasberg. (Dana.) The Brit. Mus. Cat. makes it a variety of Diadochite (q.v.).

* gansch, * gaunch, v. [Perhaps the same as GNASH (q.v.), or from gane = to yawn.] To make a snatch with open jaws; to snarl, to bite.

* gansch, * gaunch, s. [GANSCH, v.]

1. A snatch at any thing.

2. A stab, a prick.

"I have heard my father say, who was a forester at the Cabrach, that a wild boar's gaunch is more easily healed than a hurt from a deer's horn."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. ix.

3. The act of gaping wide.

4. The person who gapes in this manner.

* gant, * gaunt, v. [GANE.] To yawn by opening the mouth. (Douglas: Virgil, 87, 55.)

* gant, * gaunt, s. [GANT, v.] A yawn.

"Thare clamour was ful skant,
The soundis brak with gaspyng or ane gant."
Douglas: Virgil, 181, 18.

* gânt'-lĕt (1), s. [GAUNTLET.]

gânt'-lĕt (2), gâunt'-lĕt, * gantc-lope, * gant-lope, s. [Gantlope is the most correct form, being nasalized from Sw. gatlopp = a running down a lane, because the offender has to run between two files or rows of soldiers, &c., who strike him as he passes; gata = a gate, a lane, and lopp, a course, a running; löpa = to run, cogn. with Eng. leap (q.v.). The spelling gauntlet arose from a confusion with gantlet (1), a form of gauntlet (q.v.). (Skeat.)]

Mil.: A kind of military punishment, in which the prisoner, stripped to his waist, had to run between two files of soldiers armed with sticks or other instruments, with which they struck him as he passed.

¶ To run the gauntlet:

1. Lit.: To suffer the punishment described above.

"Some said he ought to be tied neck and heels; others, that he deserved to run the gantelope."—Fielding: Tom Jones, bk. viii., ch. xi.

2. Fig.: To run or pass through a course of severe treatment, criticism, or opposition.

"To print is to run the gantlet, and to expose ones self to the tongues-strappado."—Glanvill: On Dogmatizing. (Pref.)

* gant-lope, * gante-lope, s. [GANTLET, (2).]

gănt'-trў, s. [GAUNTREE.]

* gan-ye, * gain-ye, * gen-yie, * gayn-yhe, s. [Prob. the same as gin (2) (q.v.).]

1. An arrow; a dart; a javelin.

"Sche that was in that craft ryght expert,
Glidis away vnder the fomy sels,
Als swift as ganye or fedderit arrow fiels."
Douglas: Virgil, 323, 46.

2. An iron gun, as opposed to the use of bow and arrow.

"We may nocht fle fra yon barge wait I weill, Weyll stuft thai ar with gwn ganye of steill."
Wallace, x. 816.

Găn'-ў-mēde, [Lat. Ganymedes.]

1. Class. Mythol.: The son of Troa and Callirhoë; Jupiter carried him off and made him his cupbearer.

2. Astron.: One of the satellites of Jupiter. Discovered by Galileo at Padua, Jan. 7, 1610.

* găn'-zą, s. [M. H. Ger. ganze = O. H. Ger. ganazo; Sp. gansa = a gander.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which in the fictitious narrative of Cyrano de Bergerac (1649) the chariot of Gonzales is represented as being drawn to the moon.

"They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And savour strongly of the ganzees."
Butler: Hudibras, pt. ii., c. iii.

gāol, * gayhol, * gayl, jāil, s. [O. Fr. gaiole, guole, from Low Lat. gabiola, dimin. of gabio = a cage, from Lat. cavea = a cage, a coop; cavus = hollow; Fr. geôle; Sp. gayola, jaula; Port. gaiolo; Ital. gabbiuola.]

1. Lit.: A prison; a place of confinement for persons legally committed to custody for any crime or offence against the law; a jail.

"The gaol of Oxford was crowded with prisoners."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

* 2. Fig.: Any place of confinement.

"Small eggs appear,
Dire fraught with reptile life; alas, too soon
They burst their filmy gaol, and crawl abroad."
Grainger: Sugar-cane, bk. ii.

* gāol, v.t. [GAOL, s.] To commit to gaol; to imprison.

"Gaoling vagabonds was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example."—Bacon.

gaol-bird, s. A person who has been in gaol; an incorrigible rogue.

"Liberating the gaol-birds in Alexandria."—Pall Mall Gazette, Oct. 5, 1882.

gaol-delivery, s.

1. Lit. & Law: A judicial process, by which gaols are delivered of the persons confined in them, either by trial, or by discharging those against whom the grand jury fail to find a true bill.

"It was their [the Council's] pleasure that I [Mountain] should be delivered, if that I would be a conformable man to the Queen's proceedings, and forsake heresy, or else to remain in prison until the next sessions of gaol-delivery."—Strype: Memorials, vol. iv., ch. xxii.

* 2. Fig.: A freeing or delivery from imprisonment or confinement.

"Were it known to all
What life our souls do by this death receive, Men would it birth or gaol-delivery call."
Davies: On the Soul.

gaol-fever, s. [Jail-fever.]

¶ Commission of gaol-delivery:

Law: A commission by which judges or others named therein are empowered to try and deliver every prisoner, who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever or before whomsoever indicted, or for whatever crime committed. So that, one way or other, the gaols are in general cleared, and all offenders tried, punished, or delivered, twice, and, in the populous districts, thrice, or oftener in every year. (English.) gāol'-ẽr, gayl-er, gail-er, jāil'-ẽr, s. [Eng. gaol; -er.] The keeper of a gaol or prison; one in charge of prisoners legally committed; a jailer.

"She [Elizabeth] called him always her gaoler."—Burnet: History of the Reformation (1558).

gāol'-ẽr-ẽss, s. [Eng. gaoler; -ess.] A female gaoler.

"My saucy gaoleress assured me that . . ."—Richardson: Clarissa, ii. 72.

găp, gappe, s. [From Gape, v. (q.v.); Icel. & Sw. gap = a gap; Dan. gab = mouth, gap.]

I. Literally:

1. An opening, a breach, as in a hedge, a wall, a fence, &c.

"Such a gappe they made theron That a cart onlade myght yn gon."
Sir Ferumbras, 4,988.

2. A narrow passage or path.

"The foremost Tartar's in the gap, Conspicuous by his yellow cap."
Byron: Giaour.

II. Figuratively

1. A breach.

"The loss of that city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of Christendom."—Knolles: Historie of the Turkes.

2. An opening; a passage; a means of entrance or exit; an avenue.

"The gap which for just considerations wee open unto some, letteth in others through corrupt practices."—Bp. Hooker: Ecclesiastical Polity, bk. v., § 81.

3. A hiatus, a blank, a void, a vacuity.

"Then follows an immense gap, in which, undoubtedly, some changes were made by time."—Burke: Abridgment of English History, bk. ii., ch. vii.

* 4. A defect, a flaw.

"If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour."—Shakesp.: Lear, i. 2.

¶ To stop a gap: To repair a defect or weak point; to supply a temporary want.

"The kyng entendinge to stoppe two gappes with one hushe, sent Syr Gylbert Talbot, and the other two ambassadors, principally to Bishop Jully, and by theim sent also to the Duke of Urbyne, the whole habite and coller of the noble ordre of the gartier."—Hall: Henry VIII. (an. 22).

(2) To stand in the gap: To expose oneself to danger in order to protect some person or thing.

"I sought for a man that . . . should stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it."—Ezekiel xxii. 30.

¶ For the difference between gap and breach, see Breach.

gap-way, s. A way through.

gap-wide, s. Wide open.

gap-window, s.

Arch.: A long and narrow window.

găp, v.t. [Gap, s.]

1. To indent or notch, as the edge of a sword.

2. To breach, to open a passage through.

"Ready! take aim at their leaders, their masses are gapped with our grape."
Tennyson: Defence of Lucknow, iii.

gāpe, gap-en, gap-yn, v.i. [A.S. geāpan, from geāp = wide; cogn. with Dut. gapen; Icel. gapa; Sw. gapa; Ger. gaffen; Dut. gabe = to gape, yawn.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

"Be not gapynge nor ganynge, ne with thy mouth to powt." Babees Book, p. 135.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

"The lazy sluggard yawning lies Before thy threshold, gaping for thy dole."
Carew: Cœlum Britannicum.

3. To stare with open mouth in wonder, surprise, astonishment, or perplexity.

"When I came to that court I gaped aboute."
P. Plowman's Crede, 809.

* 4. To desire eagerly; to long. (Followed by at or after.)

"Ne lenger don hym efter hire to gape." Chaucer: Troilus, 508.

* 5. To manifest eager expectation.

"He gapes to catch the droppings of my lord."
Pitt: Epistle to Mr. Spence.

* 6. To manifest a desire to devour, destroy, or overcome.

"They have gaped upon me with their mouth."—Job xvi. x.

* 7. To cry with open mouth.

"Ye rude slaves, leave your gaping."—Shakesp.: Henry VIII., v. 4.

8. To open wide; to part asunder, so as to display a fissure, chasm, or breach.

"May that ground gape and swallow me alive!"
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., i. 1.

* 9. To open; to leave a hiatus.

"There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cæsura in this poem."—Dryden.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between gape, stare, and gaze: "Gape and stare are taken in the bad sense; the former indicating the astonishment of gross ignorance; the latter not only ignorance but impertinence; gaze is taken always in a good sense, as indicating laudable feeling of astonishment, pleasure or curiosity." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

gāpe, s. [Gape, v.]

* I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: The act or state of gaping; a yawn.

2. Fig.: The act or state of longing after; earnest desire or expectation.

"The mind is not here kept in a perpetual gape after knowledge."—Addison.

II. Zoology:

1. The width of the mouth, as of birds, fishes, &c., when opened.

2. (Pl.): A disease in young poultry, characterized by much gaping. It is caused by the presence of a hematoid worm (Fasciola trachealis) in the windpipe.

gape-seed, s. Gaping; astonishment; surprise or perplexity; the effect produced on an ignorant person by some strange or wonderful sight or exhibition.

gāp'-ẽr, s. [Eng. gap(e); -er.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: One who gapes or opens the mouth wide in yawning, astonishment, surprise, or perplexity.

"Nothing in them but the scenicall strutting, and furious vociferation, to warrant them to the ignorant gapers."—Ben Jonson: Discoveries.

2. Fig.: One who longs, craves or looks earnestly for anything.

"The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth."—Corew: Survey of Cornwall.

II. Technically:

1. Ornith. (Pl.): Eurylaiminæ, a sub-family of Muscicapidæ (Flycatchers). They are called also Broad bills. [Eurylaiminæ.]

2. Zool.: The molluscous genus Mya, type of the family Myacidæ. Whilst the shells of many bivalves close completely, the Mya gapes posteriorly, whence its English name. [Mya.]

gāp'-ĭng, gap-yng, pr. par., a., & s. [Gape, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Literally:

1. The act of opening the mouth wide; yawning.

* 2. A gape; a chasm.

* II. Fig.: An eager longing after, a desire.

"Theyr gapyng was to receiue the offerings and giftes from al quarters about, and to giue nothyng agayne."—Bale: Apology, fo. 38.

gaping-stock, s. An object of open-mouthed wonder.

"I was to be a gaping-stock and a scorn to the young volunteers."—Godwin: Mandeville, ii. 40.

gāp'-ĭng-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gaping; -ly.] In a gaping manner.

găp'-tōōthed, a. [Eng. gape, and toothed.] Having gaps or interstices between the teeth.

gar, s. [A.S. gár = a spear, a weapon; Icel. geirr; O. H. Ger. ger.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A spear, a dart.

"Brennes . . . lette glide his gar."
Layamon, i. 218.

2. Zool.: The Garfish (q.v.).

¶ Gar is used as an element in some proper names derived from the Anglo-Saxon, as in Edgar = happy weapon, Ethelgar = noble weapon.

gar, v.t. [Icel. göra; Dan. gröre; Sw. göra; Ger. garen.] To make, to compel, to constrain. (Scotch.)

"That gars me grete and grone."
Towneley Mysteries, p. 227.

† Găr-am-ăn'-tic, a. [Lat. Garamanticus. See definition.]

Geog. & Hist.: Pertaining to the Garamantees, a people in the North of Africa; Libyan Carthaginian.

Garamantic carbuncle, s.

Min.: The Carthaginian Carbuncle, now called the Garnet (q.v.).

găr'-ạn-cĭn, gar'-ạn-cine, s. [Fr. garance = madder; -ine (Chem.).]

Chem.: A colouring matter produced by the action of sulphuric acid upon madder. It has a higher tinctorial power than madder itself. (Fownes.)

găr'-ạn-găn, s. [Javanese.]

Zool.: A species of ichneumon, Herpestes javanicus, found in Java.

garaus, adv. & s. [Garouse.]

găr'-ạ-văn-çeş, găl'-ạ-văn-çēş, s. [Sp. garbanza = a chick pea.]

Bot.: Properly Cicer arietinum [Gram], but used also of some species of Dolichos (q.v.).

garb (1), garbe (1), s. [O. Fr. garbe; from O. H. Ger. garawi = preparation, dress, gear; O. H. Ger. garawen; M. H. Ger. gerwen = to get ready; O. H. Ger. garo; M. H. Ger. gar, gare = ready; Sp., Port., & Ital. garbo = grace, garb; cf. A.S. gearwa = preparation, clothing; Eng. gear, gare.]

* 1. Demeanour, conduct.

"First for your garb, it must be grave and serious,
Very reserved and lock'd; not tell a secret
In any terms, but to your father."
Ben Jonson: The Fox, iv. 1.

* 2. Fashion, mode, or manner of doing anything.

"He could not speak English in the native garb."
Shakesp.: Henry V., v. 1.

3. Fashion of dress, clothing, clothes, vesture, apparel; especially applied to an official or other distinctive dress.

"The use of the old national garb was interdicted."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

4. Outward appearance or show.

"Hypocrisy, the gift of lengthened years, Matured by age, the garb of prudence wears."
Byron: Childish Recollections.

garb (2), garbe (2), s. [Fr. = a sheaf, from O. H. Ger. garba.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A sheaf.

2. Her.: A sheaf, usually of wheat; if of other grain the kind must be expressed. It is used as an emblem of summer.

garb, v.t. [Garb, s.] To clothe.

"These black dog-Dons Garb themselves bravely."
Tennyson: Queen Mary, iii. 1.

gar'-bage (bage as bĭğ), gar-bash, gar-bish, s. [Etym. doubtful. Skeat considers it probably = garble-age, from garble (q.v.).]

1. Lit.: The bowels of an animal; the offal; the refuse animal or vegetable matter of a kitchen; refuse generally.

"They are eager to fish up the nastiest garbage thrown overboard from any European ship."—Smith Wealth of Nations, bk. i., ch. viii.

2. Fig.: Anything worthless or offensive, as immoral or obscene writings.

"Lust, though to a radiant angel linked,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage." Shakesp.: Hamlet, i. 5.

* gar'-bage (bage as bĭğ), v.t. [Garbage, s.] To gut or clean fish; to eviscerate.

"Pilchards . . . are garbaged, salted, hanged in the smoake."—P. Holland: Camden, p. 186.

garbe, s. [Garb (2).]

garbed, a. [Eng. garb (1), s.; -ed.] Dressed habited.

* gar'-bel (1), s. [Garble, s.] gar'-bel (2), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Shipbuild.: The same as Garboard (q.v.)

* gar'-bĭdğe, s. [Garbage, s.]

* gar'-bĭsh, s. [Garbage, s.] gar'-ble, * gar-bel, * gar'-bell, v.t. [O. Fr. * garbeler, grabeller = to garbell spices, also to examine precisely, sift nearly (Cotgrave); Sp. garbillar = to sift; Ital. garbellare = to garbell wares (Florio), from Sp. garbillo = a sieve or sifter, from Pers. ghurbil = a sieve; Arab. ghirbál. (Skeat.)]

* 1. To sift or cleanse corn from dust or other foreign bodies; to bolt; to separate the fine or valuable parts from the coarse and worthless.

"To garble, to cleanse from dross and dirt, as grocers do their spices, to pick or cull out."—Phillips: The New World of Words.

* 2. To pick and choose, to select quite fairly.

"The protectors and proctors whereof claimed a priviledge to themselves, to garble the live pigs in the markets of the city."—Fuller: Worthies.

3. To select or pick out such parts as may suit a particular purpose; to sophisticate; to mutilate so as to convey a false impression.

"But you, who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake."
Dryden: Hind & Panther, iii. 226.

* gar'-ble, s. [Garble, v.]

1. Anything which has been sifted, or from which the coarse parts have been removed.

2. Garbage; the coarse or refuse parts picked out from goods, drugs, &c.; refuse.

3. A low mean fellow.

"Did not the lady smile upon the garble?" Wolcot: P. Pindar.

gar'-blĕr, s. [Eng. garbl(e); -er.]

* 1. One who garbles, sifts or cleanses from coarse or worthless matters; specif. a public official in London who looked after the purity of drugs, spices, &c.

2. One who garbles, mutilates, or sophisticates anything by picking out such parts as suit his particular purpose.

"A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it."—Swift: Examiner, No. 19.

gar'-bŏard, s. [Etym. of first element doubtful; Eng. board.]

Shipbuild.: The first plank fastened to the keel of a ship.

garboard-strake, garboard-streak, s.

Shipwright.: The range of planks nearest to the keel. In the merchant service, the rabbet to receive the garboard-straka is made along the upper edge of the keel. In the navy, a groove is made half-way down the keel to receive the garboard-strake.

* gar'-bŏil, * gar-boile, * gar-boyle, s. [O. Fr. garbouil; Ital. garbaglio = a disorder, a tumult; Sp. garbullo = a crowd, a multitude.] A tumult, an uproar, a commotion.

"Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read What garboils she awaked."
Shakesp.: Antony & Cleopatra, i. 3.

* gar'-bŏil, v.t. [Garboil, s.] To throw into confusion; to upset; to disturb.

"Here would be a precedent to tip down so many lords at a time, and to garboil the house."—Burnet: Own Time (an. 1677).

* garçe, s. [Garse.]

gar-çĭn'-ĭ-a, s. [Named after Laurent Garcin, an oriental traveller.]

Bot.: A genus of Guttifers, the typical one of the tribe Garcinieæ. It consists of opposite leaved trees, with a yellow resinous juice, and generally unisexual flowers with four sepals, four petals, many stamens in from one to four bundles, and a two to ten-celled ovary with a single seed in each cell. The fruit of Garcinia Mangostana is the highly-prized Mangosteen (q.v.). The fruits of G. pedunculata, G. cornea, and G. Kydiana are also eaten, but are not greatly valued. Garcinia Cambogia and other species of the genus furnish Gamboge (q.v.).

gar'-çĭn-ĭ-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. garcini(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.] * gar'-çi-ŏn, s. [Fr. garçon.] A boy; a servant.

Bot.: A tribe of Clusiaceæ (Guttifers), type Garcinia (q.v.).

"Waited on by William de Merton, their garcion."—Fuller: Camb. Univ., i. 48.

* gar'-crŏw, s. [Etym. of first element doubtful, perhaps Lat. garrio = to chatter (cf. garre (1), v.); Eng. crow.] A jackdaw.

"Strutted like a garcrow."—Chayce Drollery, p. 67. (1656.)

* gard (1), s. [A.S. geard = a yard.] A yard, a garden. (Beaumont.)

* gard (2), s. [Guard.]

* gard, v.t. [Prob. the same as) guard (q.v.).] To trim, to bind, to edge.

"Those of the forewarde vnder the Duke of Norffolke, were apparelled in blue coats garded with redde."—Stowe: Henry VIII. (an. 1544).

* gard'-ançe, s. [Guardance.]

gard'-ant, guard'-ant, a. [Fr.]

Her.: Applied to any animal (except the hart, buck, stag, or hind), represented full-faced or looking at the observer, whether the animal be rampant, passant, or otherwise. A beast of chase represented full-face is said to be at gaze.

GARDANT.

* gar'-de-brāçe, * gard'-de-bras (s silent), * gard-brace, s. [Fr. gardebras, from garder = to guard, and bras = the arm.]

Old Arm.: A piece of armour fastened to the elbow-plates, and covering the elbow and upper part of the arm.

"Salad, speare, gard-brace ne page."
Chaucer: Dreme, 1,554.

gar-den (as gard'n), * gar-din, * gar-dyn, * gar-dyne, s. & a. [O. Fr. gardin (Fr. jardin), from O. H. Ger. gartin, genit. & dat. of garto = a yard, a garden; Ger. garten; A.S. geard = a yard; Goth. gards; Welsh gardd; Mid. Eng. garth.] [Yard.]

A. As substantive:

1. An enclosed piece of ground, appropriated to the cultivation of herbs, fruits, flowers, or vegetables. A kitchen garden is one appropriated to the cultivation of herbs and roots for food or domestic purposes; a flower-garden is one appropriated, as its name expresses, to the cultivation of flowers and ornamental shrubs.

"A gardener who cultivates his own garden with his own hands, unites in his own person the three different characters of landlord, farmer, and labourer."—Smith: Wealth of Nations, bk. i., ch. vi.

2. A place particularly fruitful, well-cultivated, or delightful; a very pleasant spot.

"The pleasant garden of great Italy."
Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, i. 1.

B. As adj.: Pertaining to, produced or used in a garden; as garden tools.

garden-balsam, s.

Botany:

1. Properly: The garden variety of the Balsam, Impatiens Balsamina, called also Balsamina hortensis. (Treas. of Bot.) [Balsam.]

2. Less properly: Justicia pectoralis. (Loudon.) garden-bean, s.

Bot.: Vicia Faba.

garden-beetles, s. pl.

Entom.: The Carabidæ (q.v.).

garden-close, s. An enclosed garden.

"When the repast was ended, they arose
And passed again into the garden close."
Longfellow: Student's Tale.

garden-cress, s.

Bot.: Lepidium sativum.

garden-engine, s. A wheelbarrow tank and pump for watering gardens; a garden-pump.

garden-flea, s.

Entom.: Haltica, a genus of leaping beetles.

garden-flower, s. A cultivated flower.

garden-glass, s.

1. A bell-glass for covering plants.

2. A globe of dark-coloured glass, generally about eighteen inches in diameter, placed on a pedestal, in which the surrounding objects are reflected.

* garden-gout, s. The venereal disease.

garden-house, s.

1. A summer-house.

* 2. A brothel.

3. A privy. (Southern States of America.)

garden-mites, s. pl.

Zool.: The small Arachnidans of the family Trombidiidæ (q.v.).

garden-mould, s. Rich mellow earth or mould fit for a garden.

"They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

garden-nail, s. A cast nail with a pyramidal head, used for nailing up climbing plants, vines, and wall-fruit trees to brick walls.

garden-plot, s. A separate portion or bed of a garden laid out with flowers, vegetables, shrubs, &c.

garden-pump, s. A barrow pump for watering gardens, washing carriages and windows. It has a suction-hose and a discharging-hose and nozzle.

garden-rocambole, s.

Bot.: Allium ophioscordon. (Paxton.) garden-seat, s. A seat for croquet-grounds or garden-walks.

garden-shears, s. Large shears for clipping hedges and trees or for pruning.

garden-spider, s.

Zool.: Epeira diadema. [Epeira.]

garden-stand, s. A stand or frame on which flowers are placed.

garden-stuff, s. Plants growing in a garden; vegetables, herbs.

garden-syringe, s. A form of syringe for watering plants, sprinkling them with insect-destroying solutions, or to produce a moist heat in hot-houses.

garden-tillage, s. The cultivation of plants, vegetables, and flowers in a garden; gardening.

"Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

garden-walk, s. A walk through a garden.

"As down the garden-walks I move."
Tennyson: In Memoriam, ci. 6.

garden-warbler, s. Sylvia hortensis. [Becafico.]

garden-ware, s. The produce of gardens; garden-stuff.

"A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

garden (as gard'n), v.i. & t. [Garden, s.]

A. Intrans.: To lay out or cultivate a garden; to cultivate flowers, herbs, fruit, vegetables, &c., in a garden.

"When ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately sooner than to garden finely, as if gardening were the greater perfection."—Bacon: Essays; Of Gardens.

* B. Trans.: To cultivate as a garden.

* gardenage (as gard'nĭj), * gar-din-age, s. [Eng. garden; -age.]

1. The act or science of gardening; horticulture.

"He read to me very much also of his discourse about gardenage."—Pepys: Diary, Nov. 5, 1665.

2. Garden-stuff; vegetables.

"The street was appropriated to the sale of fish and gardenage."—Man: Hist. of Reading, p. 147.

gardener (as gard'-nĕr), * gar-din-er, s. [Eng. garden; -er.] One whose occupation is to attend to or cultivate a garden.

gardener's-garters, s. pl.

Bot.: Two grasses, (1) Digraphis arundinacea variegata (Treas. of Bot.), and (2) Arundo donax versicolor (Paxton); the terms variegata and versicolor indicating that these are the striped varieties of the two species.

* gar-den-ĕs'que (que as k), a. [Eng. garden; -esque.] A term applied to a free unconventional style of laying out a garden; resembling a garden.

"On my own side of the river the scene is more gardenesque."—Mayne Reid: Quadroon, ch. xix.

* gar'-dĕn-hood, s. [Eng. garden; -hood.] The idea or appearance of a garden.

"A covered passage which took off from the garden-hood."—Walpole: Letters, iii. 279.

gar-dē'-nĭ-a, s. [Named after Alexander Garden, M.D., of Charleston, in South Carolina, a correspondent of Ellis and of Linnæus.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the Cinchonaceous family Gardenidæ. In India the fruit of Gardenia campanulata is reputed to be cathartic.

gar-dĕn'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. garden(ia), and suff. -ic (Chem.) (q.v.).] Derived from or in any way connected with the genus Gardenia (q.v.).

gardenic-acid, s.

Chem.: Obtained by the action of dilute nitric acid on Gardenin (q.v.). Gardenic acid crystallizes from chloroform in deep carmine red needles, which melt with decomposition at 223°. It is insoluble in water, petroleum, and carbon disulphide, nearly insoluble in ether and in benzene, easily soluble in dilute alkalies.

gar-dĕn'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gardenia, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Cinchonads, tribe Cinchoneæ (q.v.).

gar'-den-ĭn, s. [Eng., &c. garden(ia), and suff. -in (Chem.) (q.v.).]

Chem.: A substance obtained from dekamali gum, a resin of Gardenia lucida. It forms yellow crystals, which melt at 164°. It is insoluble in alkalies, almost insoluble in water, soluble in alcohol, ether, and in hot hydrochloric acid.

gardening (as gard'-nĭng), pr. par., a., & s. [GARDEN, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or occupation of cultivating a garden; horticulture; work in a garden.

"They take exceeding paines and bee most curious in gardening."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xx., ch. v.

gardenless (as gard'n-lĕss), a. [Eng. garden; -less.] Destitute of or without a garden.

gardenly (as gard'n-ly), a. [Eng. garden; -ly.] Like or as befits a garden.

"Managed in a gardenly manner."—Marshall: Rural Economy.

gardenship (as gard'n-shĭp), s. [Eng. garden; -ship.] Gardening, horticulture.

gar'de-rōbe, s. [Fr.] A wardrobe.

"An aquitance & discharge to the Earle of Dumbar of the kings jewels & garderob."—Table unprinted Acts, Jas. VI., Parl. 18.

gar'de-vī-sūre, s. [Fr.]

Her.: A vizor, from its protecting the face.

garde-vy-ance, garde-vi-ant, s. [Fr. garde de viandes.] A cabinet.

"Quhaire he leit blude it was no lawchtir,
Full mony instrument for slawchtir
Was in his garderyance."
Dunbar: Bannatyne Poems, p. 20, st. 5.

gar'-dŏn (I), s. [Fr. & Sp. gardon.]

Ichthy.: A small freshwater fish, Leuciscus Idus. It is a kind of roach.

gar'-dŏn (2), s. [GUERDON.]

gar-dy-loo', s. [Fr. gardez (vous de) l'eau = take care of the water, a cry used in Scotland by a person about to empty the chamber utensils out of the window into the street.] A shout of warning.

"She had made the gardyloo out of the wrang window."—Scott: Heart of Midlothian, ch. xxvii.

gāre, * gāir, a. [GARE, v.]

1. Keen; ready to do execution.

"With heding sword, bayth felloun, scharp, and gare." Douglas: Virgil, 194, 53.

2. Greedy; rapacious; covetous; parsimonious.

"Friends appeared like harpies gare,
That wished me dead."
Ramsay: Poems, i. 309.

3. Eager in the acquisition of wealth.

4. Active in the management of household affairs.

gare-fowl, s.

Ornith.: The now extinct Great Auk (Alca impennis).

gāre (1), s. [Etym. doubtful.] Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep.

gāre (2), s. [GARE, a.] A state of eagerness or excitement.

"The multitude hastened in a full and cruel gare to try the utmost hazard of battle."—P. Holland: Ammianus Marcellinus, p. 412.

gāre (3), s. [GORE, s.]

gare, * gaure, * gaur-en, v.i. [A variant of gaze (q.v.).] To stare.

"With fifty garing heades a monstrous dragon stands vpright." Phaer: Virgil; Æneidos vi.

gar-fan'-gĭl, s. [Etym. doubtful; cf. GAR, s.] An eel-spear.

"Gurfangil or elger. Anguillaria, anguillare."—Prompt. Parv.

gar'-fĭsh, * gar-fysche, * gar-fysshe, gar, s. [Eng. gar, and fish.]

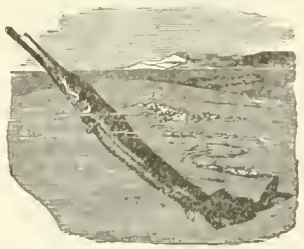
Ichthy.: The English name of Belone, a



GARFISH.

genus of Pikes, and specially of the common species Belone vulgaris. [BELONE.]

gar'-gal-īze, v.t. [Eng. gargle; -ize.] To gargle.

gar'-ga-nĕt, s. [CARCANET.]

gar'-ga-nĕy, s. [First element doubtful, second apparently from A.S. ganet = a fen duck.]

Ornith.: One of the names for a duck, the Summer Teal, Anas Querquedula. It is found in the Himalaya Mountains and various other parts of India, and in Britain in the summer.

gar-găn'-tu-an, a. [From Gargantua, the giant in Rabelais.] Immense, enormous, prodigious.

gar'-gar-ĭsm, * gar'-gar-ĭsme, s. [Fr. gargarisme, from Lat. gargarismus, from Gr. γαργαρισμός (gargarismos), from γαργαρίζω (gargarizō) = to gargle.] A gargle; a preparation used to wash the mouth or throat in cases of inflammation, ulcers, &c.

"Such as are not swallowed, but only kept in the mouth, are gargarismes used commonly after a purge."—Burton: Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 378.

gar'-gar-īze, * gar'-gal-īse, v.t. & i. [Fr. gargariser, from Lat. gargarizo, from Gr. γαργαρίζω (gargarizō) = to gargle.]

A. Transitive:

1. To gargle; to wash or rinse with any medicated liquor.

"Therewith gargalise your mouth fastinge untill the fleume be purged out of your heade."—Sir T. Elyot: Castel of Helth, bk. iv., ch. iii.

2. To use or apply as a gargle.

"And vinegar put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth it also."—Bacon: Natural History, § 685.

B. Intrans.: To use a gargle; to wash or rinse the mouth with a gargle.

"Gargarising, if it be not discreetly used, may do more harm than good."—Sir T. Elyot: Castel of Helth, bk. iv., ch. iii.

gar'-gat, * gar'-gĕt, s. [O. Fr. gargate; ital. gargatta; Sp. & Port. garganta.]

1. The throat.

"And Dan Russel the fox start up at once,
And by the garget bente chaunteclere."
Chaucer: C. T., 15,341.

2. A distemper in cattle accompanied by a swelling of the throat and neighbouring parts.

"The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

3. A disease in the udder of cows, arising from inflammation of the lymphatic glands.

4. A distemper in hogs, accompanied with staggering and loss of appetite.

5. An American name for Phytolacca decandra, a plant employed in medicine as a cathartic and emetic. Also called Poke or Pokeweed.

gar'-gĭl, gar'-gôls, s. [Fr. gargouille = the weazand of the throat.] A distemper in geese, affecting the head.

gar'-gle, v.t. [Fr. gargouiller, from gargouille = the weazand of the throat; Lat. gargolio = the gullet; Ger. gurgel = the throat; gurgeln = to gargle; Lat. gagarizo, from Gr. γαγγαρίζω (gargarizō) = to gargle.] [GARGARIZE.]

1. To wash, as the mouth or throat, with some medicated liquor, which is prevented from passing down the throat by a gentle expiration of the breath.

"They comb, and then they order every hair;
Next gargle well their throats."
Dryden: Persius, sat. 1.

2. To use as a gargle.

"Let the patient gargle this as often as need requires."—Boyle: Works, v. 349.

* 3. To warble; to sound in the throat.

"Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throat a song."
Waller: To Mr. Henry Lawes.

gar'-gle, s. [GARGLE, v.]

1. A medicated liquid used for washing or rinsing the mouth or throat.

"His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure."—Wiseman: Surgery.

2. A distemper in hogs, indicated by staggering and loss of appetite.

"The same is holden to be good for the heale of the squinancie or gargle in swine."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xxv., ch. v.

gar'-glĭ-ŏn, s. [Etym. doubtful; cf. GARGLE, s.] An exsudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard, immovable tumour. (Quincy.) gar'-gôl, gar'-gĭl, gar'-gle, s. [GARGLE, s.] A distemper in hogs; garget.

"The signs of the gargal in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

gar'-gôyle, gar'-gôil, gŭr'-gôyle, * gar-gyll, * gar-gylle, s. [Fr. gargouille = the weazand of the throat; Sp. gorgola = a gargoyle. [GARGLE, v.]

Arch.: A quaintly-formed head of a man or animal, employed as a decorative adjunct for the rainwater from a roof. The most common form was that of a dragon projecting from the roof-gutter, but the varieties are innumerable. They were used in all styles of architecture, and are many of them of a most hideous appearance.

GARGOYLE.

găr-ĭ-băl'-dĭ, s. [Named after Gen. Garibaldi.]

1. A kind of jacket worn by ladies, and so called from its resemblance to the red shirt worn by Garibaldi and his men.

2. A kind of hat so named for the same reason.

gär'-ĭsh, * gāir'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gar(e) v.; -ish.]

1. Staring, dazzling, gaudy, showy; attracting or exciting attention.

"In thee the wounded conscience courts relief, Retiring from the garish blaze of day."
Byron: Elegy on Newstead Abbey.

* 2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

"Fame and glory transports a man out of himself—it makes the mind loose and garish."—South: Sermons, iii. 382.

gär'-ĭsh-lў, adv. [Eng. garish; -ly.]

1. In a staring manner.

"Starting up and garishly staring about, especially on the face of Eliosto."—Hinde: Eliosto Libidinoso. (1606.)

2. In a dazzling, gaudy, ostentatious manner.

"Trimmed up garishly."—Westfield: Sermons, p. 65. (1646.)

gär'-ĭsh-nĕss, s. [Eng. garish ; -ness.]

1. The quality or state of being garish, dazzling, gaudy, or showy.

"The garishness, neatness, and riches of silken garments."—Florio : Montaigne, p. 145.

2. Extravagance of joy or emotion ; flightiness of temper.

"A singular corrective of that pride and garishness of temper."—South, vol. ix , ser. 5.

gar-i-soun, *garc-i-soun, *gar-y-soun, *gar-y-sone, s. [O. Fr. garison, guarison, warison ; Fr. guérison.]

1. Health, healing.

"[He] that was vre garysoun."
Castl of Loue, 868

2. A gift, a present, a supply of money or valuables.

"And gene hem gret garysoun hem non arm to do."
Robert of Gloucester, p. 409.

gar-i-soun, v.t. [Garisoun, s.] To heal.

gar-it, *gar-yt, s. [Garret.]

gar'-land, *gar-lond, *ger-land, *ger-lond, s. [O. Fr. garlande ; Fr. guirlande ; Ital. ghirlanda ; Sp. guirnalda ; Port. girnalda.]

I. Ordinary Language :

1. Literally :

* (1) A royal crown ; a diadem.

"In the adoption and obtaining of the garland, I, being seduced and provoked by similar counsel, did commit a naughty and abominable act."—Grafton : Chronicle of King Richard III.

(2) A wreath ; a chaplet of branches, flowers, feathers, or even of precious stones, intended to be worn on the head like a crown.

"Weave fresh garlands every day, To crown the smiling hours."
Cowper : To Rev. Mr. Newton.

2. Figuratively :

* (1) That which crowns or ennobles ; an emblem of glory ; a source of glory.

"Call him noble that was now your hate, Him vile that was your garland."
Shakesp. : Coriolanus, i. 1.

(2) A collection of short printed pieces, especially of poems or ballads ; an anthology.

"In the reign of James I. they [ballads of a certain description] began to be collected into little miscellanies, under the name of Garlands."—Percy : Essay on the Ancient Minstrels.

II. Technically :

1. Arch. : An ornamental band round the top of a tower.

2. Nautical :

(1) A grommet or ring of rope, made selvage fashion, and used to place around a mast or spar when taking aboard or stepping a mast.

(2) A bag-net used by sailors to hold provisions.

(3) A collar of ropes wound round the head of a mast to keep the shrouds from chafing.

(4) A large rope-grommet for retaining shot in its proper place on deck ; also a band of iron or stone used for a similar purpose on shore.

garland-flower, s.

Bot. : (1) The genus Hedychium (Loudon), (2) Daphne Cneorum, (2) Pleurandra Cneorum. (4) Erica persoluta. (Paxton.)  garland-rose, s. Rosemary.

gar'-land, v.t. [Garland, s.] To deck with a garland.

"A troop of little children garlanded."
Keats : Endymion, i. 110.

gar'-land-lĕss, a. [Eng. garland ; -less.] Without a garland.

gar'-land-rў, s. [Eng. garland ; -ry.] Filleting.

"The lavished garlandry of woven brown hair amazed me."—C. Brontë : Villette, ch. xiv.

garled, a. [Etym. doubtful.] Variegated, streaked, spotted.

"Red and fallow deere, whose colours are oft garled white and blacke."—Harrison : Description of England, p. 225.

gar'-lĭc, * gar-lek, * gar-lekke, * gar-lick, * gar-lik, s. [A.S. gárlēac, from gár = a spear, and leác = a leek.]

1. Bot. : Allium sativum, a perennial plant with a compound bulb composed of ten or twelve smaller ones called cloves, flat, narrow, erect, and pointed leaves, flowers akin to those of the onion, whitish or pinkish. It is used in Sicily, and some parts of Provence. It is cultivated in Portugal and other parts of the continent. The peasantry eat their bread with slices of it, though it has a disagreeable odour and a pungent taste.

2. Pharm. : Like other species of Allium, it is stimulant, diuretic, and expectorant, but being mild in its operation, is used for diet rather than medicine.

¶ (1) Field garlic :

Bot. : Allium oleraceum, a British plant, but rare.

(2) Hedge-garlic :

Bot. : Sisymbrium Alliaria.

(3) Honey-garlic :

Bot. : The genus Nectaroscordum.

garlic-eater, s. One who eats garlic : hence used by Shakespere in the sense of a low fellow, from the fact of garlic having been largely eaten by the lower classes in Rome. (Shakesp. : Coriolanus, iv. 6.)

garlic-mustard, s.

Bot. : Sisymbrium Alliaria, formerly called Erysimum Alliaria, a British plant. It is termed also Sauce-alone and Jack-by-the-hedge.

garlic-pear, garlick-pear, s.

Bot. : Crateva gynandra, a capparid. It is a tree thirty or forty feet high, bearing a fruit which has a smell of garlic. The bark of the root blisters like cantharides. It grows in Jamaica.

garlic-scented, a. Scented with garlic. [Garlic-shrub.]

garlic-shrub, s.

Botany :

(1) Bignonia alliacea, the Garlic-scented Trumpet flower.

(2) Petiveria alliacea, the Garlic-scented Petiveria.

gar'-lĭck-wŏrt, s. [Eng. garlic, and wort.]

Bot. : Sisymbrium Alliaria ; hedge-garlic.

gar'-lĭck-ў, a. [Eng. garlic ; -y.] Like garlic ; having the taste or smell of garlic.

gar'-mĕnt, * gar-ne-ment, * gar-mente, * gar-ni-ment, s. [Fr. garnement, from garnir = to garnish, adorn, fortify ; O. Sp. guarnimiento ; Ital. guarnimento ; Low Lat. guarnimentum, garniamentum.] An article of dress or clothing, as a coat, a dress, a gown, &c. ; anything which serves to cover as a dress ; a vestment ; apparel ; habit.

garment-cutter, s. A machine having a descending cutter of a given shape, which cuts from a pile of cloth beneath it a number of pieces of its own size. The die is shifted for the next piece, and so on for each piece which goes to make up the garment. Used in large clothing manufactories.

garment-measurer, s. A measuring scale for laying out garments. The vertical and lateral scales are graduated for obtaining the sizes and proportions of the figure, being adjusted to agree with the measures as taken in the usual manner. At the upper end are scales adapted to the width of the back and the height of the shoulder.

 gar'-mĕnt-ĕd, a. [Eng. garment ; -ed.] Covered or provided with as with a garment ; dressed.

"A lovely lady garmented in light From her own beauty." Shelley : Adonais, v.

gar'-mĕnt-ūre, s. [Eng. garment ; -ure.] Garments, clothes.

 garn, s. [Yarn.]

garn-windle, s. A reel for winding yarn.

 gar-ne-ment, s. [Fr.] A Garment (q.v.).

"And many a perled garnement
Embroidered was again the daie.' Gower, i.

gar'-nĕr, * gar-nyr, * ger-ner, * ger-nere, * gcr-niere, * grey-ner, s. [O. Fr. gernier, from Lat. granaria = a granary, from granum = grain ; Fr. grenier ; Sp. granero ; Ital. granajo ; Port. granel.] A granary ; a place where corn is stored for preservation. [Granary.]

"The Volsces have much corn ; take these rats thither To gnaw their garners." Shakesp. : Coriolanus, i. 1.

gar'-nĕr, v.t. & t. [Garner, s.]

A. Transitive :

1. Lit. : To store into a garner ; to gather into a garner.

"On a very considerable area of land round Canterbury the corn had all been garnered."—Standard, Sept. 2, 1882.

2. Fig. : To store up, to treasure, to lay up.

"There, where I have garnered up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life."
Shakesp. : Othello, iv. 2.

 B. Intrans. : To be stored up.

"The wrath that garners in my heart."
Tennyson : In Memoriam, lxxxii.

gar'-nĕred, a. [Eng. garner ; -ed.] Stored in or gathered into a garner.

"On him alone the curse of Cain Fell, like a flail on the garnered grain."
Longfellow : Slave in the Dismal Swamp.

gar'-nĕt (1), gar-nette, *gra-nat, s. [A corruption of granat, from O. Fr. granat ; Fr. grenat, from Low Lat. granatus = a garnet, from its resemblance in colour, and partly in the form of the crystal, to the grains or seeds of the pomegranate ; granatus = having seeds ; granum = a grain ; Sp. granate ; Ital. granato.]

* 1. Ord. Lang. : The pomegranate. Called also Apple-garnet. (Wedderburn.)

2. Min. : An isometric transparent or translucent brittle mineral, with dodecahedral cleavage, sometimes with twin crystals, having an octahedral composition-face. It occurs also massive and lamellar. Hardness, 6·5—7·5 ; sp. gr., 31·15—4·20 ; lustre, vitreous to resinous ; colour, red, brown, yellow, white, or black, with a white streak. Compos. : Silica, 35·75—52·11 ; alumina, 15·22—27·25 ; protoxide of iron, 24·82—39·68, &c. There are three leading varieties : (1) Alumina garnet, in which the sesquioxide is mainly alumina ; (2) Iron garnet, in which it is chiefly sesquioxide of iron ; and (3) Chrome-garnet, in which it is principally sesquioxide of chrome. Under these are ranked Grossularite, Pyrope, Almandite, Spessartite, Andradite, Bredbergite, and Ouvarovite (q.v.). These, with typical garnet, constitute Dana's garnet group of minerals.

"Without the aid of yonder golden globe Lost were the garnet's lustre, lost the lily."
Smart : Goodness of the Supreme Being.

¶ (1) Bohemian Garnet :

Min. : The same as Pyrope (q.v.).

(2) Oriental Garnet :

Min. : The same as Almandite (q.v.). It is called also Precious Garnet.

(3) Tetrahedral Garnet :

Min. : The same as Helvite (q.v.).

(4) White Garnet :

Min. : The same as Leucite (q.v.).

garnet-blende, s.

Min. : Zinc blende ; sulphate of zinc. [Zinc.]

gar'-nĕt (2), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

1. Carp. : A hinge of the shape of the letter T laid horizontally—thus ⊢, the cross-bar being attached to the hanging-stile or post.

2. Naut. : A sort of purchase. Fixed to the main-stay as a hoisting-in tackle, but useful in other positions indicated by names, such as clew-garnet, &c. [Clew-garnet.]

garnet-hinge, s. [Garnet (2), s. (1).]

 gar-nĕt-er, * gar-net-our, s. [Garner.] The keeper of the garner or granary.

gar'-nĭsh, * gar-nysch-yn, v.t. [Fr. garnissant, pr. par. of garnir = to warn, to defend, to garnish ; Low Lat. garniso ; A.S. warnian, wearnian = to beware of ; O. S. wernian = to refuse ; O. Fris. wernia = to give a pledge.]

I. Ordinary Language :

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages ; to adorn ; to set off.

"Next in order came x. chariots garnished and wrought with siluer and gold."—Grenade : Quintus Curtius, fo. 24.

* 2. To fit with fetters. (Slang.)

3. To supply, to furnish, to equip.

* 4. To fill.

"All the streets were garnished with the citizens standing in their liveries."—Bacon : Henry VII.

* 5. To set off.

"And therefore this auctour's answere garnished with these three gaye wordes of astate, nature, and condicion, is deuised but for a shifte."—Bp. Gardner : Explication, fo. 130.

II. Technically:

1. Cook.: To embellish, as a dish, with something laid round it.

"No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitchcock'd eel."
King: Art of Cookery, 18.

* 2. Law: To warn; to give notice to.

¶ To garnish a table: To set the dinner-service on.

garnish-bolt, s.

Build.: A bolt having a chamfered or faceted head.

* garnish-money, s. A commission for trouble taken.

"Defalking the four thousand garnish-money."—Ben Jonson: Magnetic Lady, v. 6.

gar'-nĭsh, s. [Garnish, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. An ornament; a decoration; an embellishment.

"Naked she flies to merit in distress,
And leaves to courts the garnish of her dress."
P. Whitehead: Honour.

* 2. A service or set of table utensils, generally consisting of twelve pieces.

"At whiche departing the king gaue to the admyral of France a garnishe of gilt vessell, a payre of couered basons gilt."—Hall: Henry VIII. (an. 10).

3. Fetters.

4. A fee; especially, money paid by a prisoner on his going to prison as a fee to his fellow-prisoners. This was forbidden by 4 Geo. IV., c. 43, § 12.

"It was the custom of the place for every prisoner, upon his first arrival, to give something to the former prisoners to make them drink. This, he said, was what they called garnish."—Fielding: Amelia, ch. iii.

II. Technically:

1. Cook.: Things laid round a dish as an embellishment.

* 2. Law: The act of warning an heir; abolished by 6 George IV., c. 105.

gar'-nĭshed, pa. par. & a. [Garnish, v.]

A. As pa. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

I. Ord. Lang.: Ornamented, decked out, embellished.

"From many a garnished niche around, Stern saints and tortured martyrs frowned."
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, v. 30.

II. Technically:

1. Cook.: Embellished or set off with things laid round.

2. Her.: Applied to any charge provided with an ornament.

gar-nĭsh-ēē', s. [Eng. garnish; -ee.]

Law: A person who has received notice not to pay any money which he owes to a third party, who is indebted to the party giving the notice.

"A judge may, on his application, order all debts, owing by any third person, who is called the garnishee, and is allowed to dispute his indebtedness to the judgment debtor, to be attached to answer the judgment debt."—Blackstone: Comment., bk. iii., ch. 16.

gar'-nĭsh-ĕr, s. [Eng. garnish; -er.] One who garnishes.

gar'-nĭsh-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Garnish, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of ornamenting, decorating or embellishing; a decoration, an embellishment, an ornament.

"In the seasoning, the dressing, the garnishing, and the setting forth."—Fielding: Tom Jones, bk. i., ch. i.

gar'-nĭsh-mĕnt, s. [Eng. garnish; -ment.]

I. Ord. Lang.: An ornament; an embellishment; a decoration.

"Third persons, riff-raff, and others standing in the chambers for a garnishment."—Strype: Memorials; Henry VIII. (an. 1527).

II. Law:

1. A warning or legal notice to the agent or attorney of an absconding debtor to appear in court or give information.

2. A warning or legal notice not to pay money, &c., to a defendant, but to appear and answer to a plaintiff creditor's suit.

3. A fee.

* gar'-nĭsh-rў, s. [Eng. garnish; -ry.] Garnishment, decoration.

"Whose eyes, calm as their flocks, Saw in the stars mere garnishry of heaven."
R. Browning: Paracelsus, iii.

* gar'-nĭ-ṣŏn, * gar'-nĕ-ṣŏn, * gar-nĭ-soun, * gar-ny-son, s. [Fr. garnison; Sp. guarnicion; Port. guarnição; Ital. guarnizione.] A guard, a protection. [Garrison.]

"And understondeth that the grettest strength or garnisoun that the rich man may have."—Chaucer: Tale of Melibeus.

* gar-nĭ-tūre, s. [Fr., from Low Lat. garnitura, from garnio = to furnish.] Furniture; ornamental appendages; embellishment; decorations.

"Rude and antique garniture Decked the sad walls and oaken floor."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, vi. 12.

garns-dorf'-ite, s. [Named from Garnsdorf, near Saalfeld, in Saxony (?), where it occurs.]

Min.: The same as Pissophanite (q.v.).

gar-oök'-ŭh, s. [Pers. or Arab. (?).]

Naut.: A vessel of the Persian Gulf, having a length of from 50 to 100 feet, a short keel, and a long overhanging prow and stern. It is used principally for fishing purposes.

gą-rŏt'te, s. & v. [Garrote.]

gą-rŏt'-tĕr, s. [Garrotter.]

gąr-ôu', s. [Fr.]

Phar.: The name given in France to Mezereum bark, used in that country and sometimes here as a vesicant.

* găr'-oŭs, a. [Lat., garum = pickle.] Pertaining to or resembling garum.

"This humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation."—Browne.

gar'-pike, s. [Eng. gar, and pike.] The same as Garfish (q.v.).

* găr'-ran, * găr'-rŏn, s. [Ir. garran = a strong horse, a hackney; Gael. gearran.]

1. A small species of horse; a galloway; a hack.

"When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garrans to walk."—Spenser: State of Ireland.

2. A garron-nail.

garron-nail, s. A kind of large nail of different sizes; a spike-nail.

* gar-ran-ty, s. [Guaranty.]

* garre (1), v.i. [Lat. garrio.] To chatter, to prate, to scold.

"Garringe or childinge in to us yuele wordis."—Wycliffe: 3 John 10.

* garre (2), v.t. [Gar, v.] găr'-rĕt (1), * gar-ett, * gar-ette, * gar-ite, * gar-yte, * gar-ytte, s. [O. Fr. garite = a watch-tower, a look-out; garir = to watch, to preserve; O. H. Ger. warjan; Fr. guérite; Sp. garita; Port. guarita.]

* 1. A watch-tower; a look-out; a tower.

"Then was that lady sett
Hye up in a garett
To beholde that play." Tryamoure, 721.

2. An upper apartment of a house, immediately under the roof; an attic.

"History was too much occupied with courts and camps to spare a line for the hut of the peasant or for the garret of the mechanic."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

garret-master, s. A maker of household furniture on his own account, who sells his manufacture to the furniture dealers.

"The garret-masters are a class of small trade-working masters supplying both capital and labour."—Mayhew: London Labour & London Poor, iii. 233.

garret-story, s. The uppermost story of a house.

* găr'-rĕt (2), s. [Etym. doubtful.] The colour of rotten wood.

"In some pieces white, and some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret."—Bacon. (Johnson.) găr'-rĕt, v.t. [Etym. doubtful.] To insert, as small pieces of stone in the joints of coarse masonry.

găr'-rĕt-ĕd, * găr'-rę-tĕd, a. [Eng. garret; -ed.]

* 1. Furnished with or protected by battlements or turrets.

"A square structure with a round turret at each end, garretted on the top."—Fuller: Worthies: Cornwall.

2. Furnished with a garret or garrets.

găr'-rĕt-ēēr', s. [Eng. garret; -eer.] One who lives in a garret. (Applied to poor authors.)

"Garreteers, who were never weary of calling the cousin of the Earls of Manchester and Sandwich an upstart."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxv.

găr'-rĕt-ĭng, s. [Garret, v.] Small splinters of stone inserted in the joints of coarse masonry.

găr'-rĭ-ṣŏn, s. [Fr. garnison.] [Garnison.]

Military:

1. A body of troops stationed in a fort or fortified place to defend it from the enemy, or to keep the people around in subjection.

"Taxes remit, and garrisons withdraw."
Thomson: Liberty, iii. 272.

2. A fort or fortified place manned with soldiers, guns, &c.

"A few garrisons at the necks of land, and a fleet to connect them, and to awe the coast."—Burke: Abridgement of English History, bk. i., ch. iv.

3. The state of being stationed in a fort or fortified place for its defence; a doing duty in a garrison.

"Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies."—Spenser: State of Ireland.

4. Winter quarters for troops.

găr'-rĭ-ṣŏn, v.t. [Garrison, s.]

1. To place troops in, as in a fort or fortified place; to man with troops.

"Lest the enemy should have garrisoned those places before we came thither."—Ludlow: Memoirs, viii. 307.

2. To defend or secure with garrisons; as, To garrison a country.

3. To place in a state of defence; to fortify.

"Melgar made some show of resistance, garrisoned his house, and menaced the rabble with a shower of grenades."—Macaulay. Hist. Eng., ch. xxiv.

găr'-rŏn, s. [Garran.]

găr'-rŏt (1), s. [Mahn places it under garrot (2).]

Ornith.: Clangula, a genus of Ducks, and specially C. vulgaris or chrysophthalmus, or Fuligula clangula, found in Britain. [Clangula, Golden-eye.]

găr-rŏt' (2), s. [Garrote.]

Surg.: A tourniquet formed of a band and a stick, the former being twisted by the revolution of the latter.

gar-rŏt'e, gąr-rŏt'te, s. [Sp. garrote = a cudgel . . .; a strangling by means of an iron collar; from garra = a claw: cogn. with Wel. and Corn. gar = the shank of the leg; Ir. carr = the leg; Breton gar, garre; Port. garrote; Fr. garrot.]

1. A Spanish instrument of execution. The victim, usually in a sitting posture, is fastened by an iron collar to an upright post, and a knob operated by a screw or lever dislocates the spinal column, or a small blade severs the spinal cord at the base of the brain.

2. The act or mode of punishing described in 1.

3. A robbery by means of garrotting.

gar-rŏt'e, gąr-rŏt'te, v.t. [Garrote, s.] [Fr. garrotter.]

1. To strangle by means of a garrote.

2. To rob by compressing the throat until the victim becomes insensible. Robberies of this kind were very prevalent in 1862-3, and in the latter year an act was passed punishing them by flogging. They were usually carried out by three men—the forestall, or look-out in front, the backstall, or look-out behind, and the ugly man, or nasty man, the actual perpetrator.

3. To cheat at cards by concealing one or more cards at the back of the neck.

gar-rŏt'-ĕr, gar-rŏt'-tĕr, s. [Eng. garrote, v.; -er.] One who garrotes another; one who robs by means of garrotting.

găr'-rų-lăx, s. [Lat. garrulus = prattling, and suff. -ax.]

Ornith.: A genus of Corvidæ (Crows), subfamily Timalinæ (Babblers). Carrulax leucolophus is the Laughing Crow of India, and G. chinensis, the Indian Black-faced Thrush. (Dallas.)

găr-ru-lī'-næ, s.pl. [Lat. garrul(us) (q.v.), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: A sub-family of Corvidæ (q.v.), containing the Jays. They have a slight notch near the tip of their upper mandible, their nostrils concealed, their wings rounded, and their tarsi and toes strongly acutellated. Found in both Eastern and Western hemispheres. [GARRULUS.]

găr-rū'-lĭ-tў, s. [Fr. garrulité, from Lat. garrulitas; from garrulus = talkative; garrio = to chatter, to prattle; Sp. garrulidad; Ital. garrulità.] The quality or state of being garrulous or talkative; loquacity, talkativeness.

"With an amiable garrulity hardly to have been expected."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vii.

găr'-rụ-loŭs, a. [Lat. garrulus; Ital. & Sp. garrulo.] Inclined or given to much talking; talkative, loquacious, prating, chattering.

"Indulgent listener was he to the tongue Of garrulous age."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. i.

¶ For the difference between garrulous and talkative, see TALKATIVE.

găr'-rụ-loŭs-lў, adv. [Eng. garrulous; -ly.] In a garrulous, talkative, or loquacious manner; loquaciously, talkatively.

găr'-rụ-loŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. garrulous; -ness.] The quality or state of being garrulous; loquacity, garrulity.

găr'-rụ-lŭs, s. [Lat. = chattering, prattling.]

Ornith.: The type of the sub-family Garrulinæ (q.v.). Garrulus glandarius is the Jay (q.v.).

găr'-rў-a, s. [Named after Nicholas Garry, secretary of the Hudson's Bay Company.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the order Garryaceæ (q.v.). It contains two ornamental shrubs, Garrya elliptica, from North California, and G. laurifolia, from Mexico.

găr-rў-ā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. garry(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: Garryads. A genus of Diclinous Exogens, alliance Garryales, of which it is the type. It consists of shrubs having opposite, exstipulate leaves, and flowers arranged in pendulous amentaceous racemes, within connate bracts. Wood without concentric zones or dotted ducts; flowers unisexual amentaceous; male flower sepals, four; stamens, four, alternate, with the sepals inelastic; female flower calyx, superior two-toothed; ovary, one-celled style, two setaceous; ovules two, pendulous, with long funiculi; pericarp indehiscent, consisting of a two-seeded berry. Known genera, two; species, six. (Lindley.) găr'-rў-ăds, s.pl. [Mod. Lat. garry(æ): -ads.]

Bot.: The name given by Lindley to the order Garryaceæ (q.v.).

găr'-rў-al, a. [Mod. Lat. garry (a); -al.]

Bot.: Pertaining to Garrya, or the Garryaceæ (q.v.), as the Garryal Alliance.

găr-rў-ā'-lēs, s.pl. [Mod. Lat. garry(a); Lat. masc. or fem. suff. -ales.]

Bot.: An alliance of Diclinous Exogens, having monochlamydeous, sometimes amentaceous, flowers, inferior fruit, and a minute embryo lying in a quantity of albumen. Orders, Garryaceæ and Helwingiaceæ (q.v.).

garse, *gaar-cyn, v.t. [O. Fr. garser.] To bleed.

"To garse: scarificare."—Cathol. Anglicum.

garse, *gaarce, *garce, *gerse, s. [Low Lat. garsa.] [GASH, s.]

1. A cut, a gash.

"A garse or gash, incisura."—Levins: Manip. Vocabulorum.

2. The act of bleeding.

gar-son, s. [Fr. garçon = a boy, a servant.] A menial servant. (Toland.)

gar'-sŭm, *gar-summe, *ger-some, s. [A.S. gĕrsum = treasure; Icel. gersemi.]

1. Treasure, valuables, property.

"He us yeue . . . gold and garsume."
Lydgate, i. 40.

2. An earnest penny; a fine on entering into a tenancy.

gar'-ten, s. [GARTER.]

gar'-tĕr, s. [O. Fr. gartier, jartier, from O. Fr. garret; Fr. jarret = the ham of the leg, from Bret. gar, garr = the shank of the leg; Ir. cara = the leg; Wel. & Corn. gar; Fr. jarretière; Sp. jarretera.] [GAGROTE, s.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A string or riband by which a stocking is held upon the leg.

"Let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their garters of an indifferent knit."—Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, Iv. 1.

2. In the same sense as II. 3 (2).

3. The badge of the Order of the Garter.

"The garter, blemished, pawned his knightly virtue."
Shakesp.: Richard III., Iv. 2.

II. Technically:

1. Carp.: A semicircular plate, acting as a key, which passes through a slot in the wooden jaw of a bench-vice, and enters an annular groove in the cylindrical neck of the bench-screw, so that when the latter is unscrewed it brings out the jaw.

2. Circus (Pl.): The tapes held up for a performer to leap over.

3. Heraldry:

(1) The same as ¶ (1).

(2) The Order of the Garter. [¶ (2).]

(3) The half of a bend.

¶ (1) Garter King-at-Arms: The principal King-at-Arms in England, by whom arms are granted and confirmed under the authority of the Earl Marshal. [EARL MARSHAL.] His duties are to attend upon the Knights of the Garter at their installation and other solemnities; to intimate their election; to suspend their banners over their stalls in St. George's Chapel at Windsor; to superintend and marshal their processions, &c. The office was created by Henry V. in 1420.

(2) The Most Noble Order of the Garter: The most illustrious Order of British Knighthood, instituted at Windsor by Edward III., about August, 1348, probably on the occasion of some tournament, and as a revival of the Round Table of King Arthur. How much truth there is in the legend which connects the badge and title of this order with the Duchess of Salisbury it is impossible to say, but the story is in no way inconsistent with the spirit of those times. The Order consists of the Sovereign and twenty-five companions, of whom the Prince of Wales is always one. Recent statutes provide for the admission of foreign Sovereigns. The Bishop of Winchester is Prelate of the Order, the Bishop of Oxford Chancellor, and the Dean of Windsor Registrar. Knights are distinguished by the initials K.G. after their names, which take precedence of all other titles except those of royalty. The stalls of the knights are in St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle. The insignia of the Order and the Garter, with the motto, Honi soit qui mal y pense (Dishonour to him who thinks ill of it), the star of eight points, enclosing the cross of St. George, the collar, and the lesser George or jewel, added by Henry VIII. The ribbon, originally black, was changed to sky-blue by Elizabeth, and at the accession of the House regnant, the present dark blue ribbon, from which the jewel is worn pendent, was adopted. (Boutell.)

STAR AND JEWEL OF THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.

gar'-tĕr, v.t. [GARTER, s.]

1. To fasten or tie up with a garter.

"He being in love, could not see to garter his hose; and you, being in love cannot see to put on your hose."—Shakesp.: Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 1.

2. To invest with the Order of the Garter.

"Brydges' wide-wasting hand, first gartered knight."
J. Philips: Cider, i.

gar'-tĕr-fĭsh, s. [Eng. garter, and fish.]

Ichthy.: The Scabbard-fish, Lepidopus argyreus. [LEPIDOPUS.] It belongs to the Cepolidæ or Riband-shaped family of Fishes.

gar'-tĕr-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GARTER, v.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb).

 B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the garter.

C. As subst.: The act of tying with a garter;

"Where to should I disclose
The gartering of her hose."
Skelton: Boke of Philip Sparow.

gar'-tĕr-snāke, s. [Eng. garter, and snake.]

Zool.: The Snake genus Eutania. There are two species, Eutania sirtalis and E. ordinata, the latter in the Southern States of North America, the other more widely diffused over the Union. Their bite is not venomous.

garth (1), s. [Icel. gardhr = an enclosure.]

 1. A close, a croft, a garden, an enclosure.

"The garth eke closed is in dyvers wyse."—Palladius: Husbandrie, i. 783

 2. The grass area between or within the cloisters of a religious house.

3. A dam or weir in a river for catching fish.

garth (2), *garthe, *gerth, s. [Icel. gjord.] A band or girth. [GIRTH.]

garth'-măn, s. [Eng. garth (1), and man.] The owner of a garth or weir for catching fish.

găr'-ŭm, s. [Lat.] A kind of fish-sauce, prepared from several kinds of fish, particularly the scomber, but formerly from the garus; a pickle made of the gills and blood of the tunny.

gar'-vĭĕ, gar'-vĭĕ-hĕr-rĭng, s. [Etym. doubtful.] The name in Scotland for the Sprat (q.v.).

"They are often very successful in taking the smaller fish, such as herrings, garvies, or sprats, sparlings or smelts."—P. Alloa: Statist. Acc., viii. 597.

găs, s. & s. [Dut. gas = a word introduced by the Flemish chemist, Van Helmont, who was born in A.D. 1577. Cf. Dut. geest = spirit.] [GHOST.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II. 2.

2. Fig.: Empty talk; froth.

II. Technically:

1. Chem.: A gas is a substance possessing the condition of perfect fluid elasticity, and presenting under a constant pressure a uniform rate of expansion for equal increments of temperature, but when gases reach their maximum densities they behave like vapours. All gases can be condensed into liquids by cold and pressure. Some of the elements, as oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, chlorine, and probably fluorine, are gases at ordinary temperatures. Atmospheric air is a mechanical mixture of 77 parts by weight of nitrogen, and 23 of oxygen, or 79 volumes of nitrogen mixed with 21 volumes of oxygen. Gases are formed by the dry distillation of animal and vegetable substances, which yield carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, ammonia, nitrogen, hydrogen, sulphur dioxide, hydrogen sulphide, and hydrocarbons. Gases as carbon dioxide and hydrogen sulphide are given off during putrefaction; carbon dioxide during fermentation. Ordinary gas used for burning, &c., is prepared by the dry distillation of coal. [COAL-GAS.] Gases are prepared in the wet way by the action of mineral acids on different substances. The resulting gases may be collected: (1) by reception in an exhausted vessel; (2) by displacement of air, the delivery tube proceeding from the generating vessel is made to pass down to the bottom of the receiver placed with its mouth upwards; this method is used for gases which are heavier than air, and are dissolved by water, as chlorine, &c.; (3) collection over liquids, generally mercury, or water; a jar or bottle is filled with the liquid and inverted over a trough filled with the same liquid, and the end of the delivery tube proceeding from the gas-generating apparatus is inserted beneath the mouth of the jar, so that the gas may rise in bubbles through the liquid, displace it, and so fill the vessel with gas. Gases are absorbed by liquids in some cases, the gas forming a chemical compound with the liquid, in other cases the gas has no chemical action on the liquid. Generally the amount of gas absorbed in the latter case decreases with increase of temperature, and the weight of gas absorbed varies directly as the pressure. Charcoal has the property of absorbing many gases, especially ammonia, hydrochloric acid, sulphuretted hydrogen, and sulphurous acid. The specific gravities of elementary bodies in the gaseous state, are for the most part in the same ratio as their atomic weights, but the specific gravities of phosphorus and arsenic are twice as heavy, and mercury and cadmium only half as heavy as their atomic weights. The specific gravity of any compound gas or vapour, referred to hydrogen as unity, is equal to half its molecular weight.

2. Comm.: The gas of commerce is carburetted hydrogen (CH_4). Its frequent disengagement in coal mines with resultant explosions, generally fatal to many lives, has caused the miners to give it the name of "fire-damp." In parts of the world it issues from crevices or holes in the strata in so moderate and continuous a stream, as to burn with a huge jet instead of exploding. This phenomenon is seen in China, in America, and other places, the best-known locality, however, being Baku on the Caspian, where a fire temple is reared with officiating priests of the Parsee faith, who regard the flame as a symbol of the divinity. The ignition of carburetted hydrogen may be seen in any coal fire. It has recently been discovered that giant jets of apparently similar gas flames exist in the sun, and are one main source of its light and heat.

Illuminating Gas: Gas was distilled from coal as early as 1688, was conveyed in pipes in 1750, and first used for illuminating purposes in 1792. Its use in London began in 1807, and the streets of London and Paris were lighted by gas in 1815. In the United States it was gradually introduced during the succeeding twenty years, and extended till it was very widely employed. Its use is now being considerably curtailed by the electric light.

Natural Gas: Within recent years natural gas, which issues from wells bored deeply into the rocks, has come into great use in parts of the United States, being particularly abundant in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, &c. The city of Pittsburgh is lighted by it and most of its industrial establishments operated by heat obtained from it. It consists mainly of marsh gas. The supply is beginning to show signs of exhaustion, and does not seem likely to be available for many years in the future. The origin of natural gas is a mystery which scientific research has as yet failed to solve. Various theories have been proposed, some ascribing it to a vegetable, some to an animal origin, while some writers consider it as originating in chemical changes in the primitive rocks. In Pennsylvania the natural gas used as fuel has replaced coal to the annual amount of 12,500,000 tons.

B. As adj.: In any way pertaining or relating to or worked by gas.

gas-alarm, s. [Gasoscope.]

gas-apparatus, s. Apparatus for the manufacture or preparation of various gases.

gas-bath, s. A bath heated by gas.

gas-blowpipe, s. A form of blowpipe designed to be attached to a gas-pipe, for using gas instead of oil or alcohol. The atmospheric air is driven through the centre tube, adding force and giving a cylindrical form to the flame, which issues at an annular opening.

gas-bracket, s. A branch proceeding from a wall and having on its end a burner or burners.

gas-burner, s. The jet-piece at which the gas issues. It consists of a slit or of a number of orifices disposed so as to produce the shape of flame required. The fish-tail flame is made by two oblique orifices at an angle of about 60°, so as to cause the jets to cross each other; the object is divergence, to spread the gas and bring the carburetted hydrogen in contact with the air. The cock-spur burner has three apertures, one central and the others divergent. The union burner has a row of holes so disposed that the jets nearly touch and coalesce, each maintaining in part its distinctiveness. The bat's wing has a slit aperture instead of holes, giving a flat, fan-like flame. The beak has a round, smooth hole $\frac{1}{25}$ inch in diameter. An ordinary gas-burner consumes from four to six cubic feet of gas per hour, according to size. [Argand.]

gas-check, s. [Gas-ring.]

gas-coal, s. Any coal, as cannel-coal, used for manufacturing gas.

gas-company, s. A joint-stock company formed to supply gas to the inhabitants of a certain district, at certain prices per 1,000 feet.

gas-condenser, s. The second in the series of apparatus in the manufacture of gas, consisting of a series of convoluted pipes, surrounded by water. The gas from the retorts is passed through the condenser to rid it of the tar. The condenser gathers about eight or ten gallons of tar from the gas produced by about 2,000 pounds of coal.

gas-engine, s. A kind of engine in which the motion of the piston is caused by the combustion or sudden production or expansion of gas mixed with air in a closed cylinder.

gas-fitter, s. A workman who lays the pipes and puts up fixtures for gas.

Gas-fitter's gauge: An arrangement by which the tightness of the joints in a line of pipes is ascertained. The pipes being filled with air by a pump, the pressure gauge in connection therewith remains stationary if the joints are perfect. If the gauge fall, ether may be admitted to the interior and the escape detected by a torch.

gas-fixture, s. A gas-bracket, a gaselier.

gas-furnace, s.

1. A small furnace, much employed for laboratory purposes, and which is so arranged as to receive the maximum heating powers of the gas without regard to its illuminating purposes. Various forms have been contrived.

2. A furnace of which the fuel is gas from burners suitably disposed in the chamber for the purpose required. Steam-boilers and metallurgic furnaces are sometimes heated in this manner.

gas-gauge, s. An instrument for ascertaining the pressure of gas. A bent graduated tube containing water or mercury, open at one end and with the other screwed into the vessel containing the gas.

gas-generator, s. A chamber in which gas is evolved. The term includes: the retort in which volatile hydrocarbons are evolved by heat, as in the ordinary gas-apparatus; the machine in which air is saturated with the vapour of liquid hydrocarbon; and the machines in which carbonic-acid gas is evolved for aerating water or other purposes.

gas-governor, s. A small gas-holder into which the gas enters, and from which it is passed to the mains with a regulated pressure. The velocity of gas in the mains increases in the ratio of the square root of the pressure, so that by adding to this it may either be driven more rapidly or to a greater distance.

gas-heater, s. An apparatus contrived for the application of gas to specific purposes of heating.

gas-indicator, s. An instrument connected to the main pipe, which indicates by the rising and falling of a spring piston, or a weighted gas-holder, the pressure of gas in the pipe.

gas-jet, s.

1. A jet or spout of flame issuing from a gas-burner.

2. A gas-burner.

gas-lamp, s. A lamp, the light of which is furnished by gas, as a street lamp.

gas-lantern, s. A frame of glass for enclosing one or more gas-burners.

gas-liquor, s. An ammoniacal liquor extracted from coal in the distillation of gas. Eight or ten gallons of ammoniacal liquor are extracted from the gas produced from 2,000 pounds of coal, and it is treated by manufacturing chemists, who extract about fourteen ounces of sulphate of ammonia from one gallon of the liquor. A larger yield of ammonia is obtained by adding a small quantity of lime to the coals before they are distilled. (Brit. Assoc., 1883.)

gas-main, s. A principal gas-pipe leading from the works, and having branches and distributing pipes. Gas mains are laid in sections, the small end of one entering the wide socket of the adjacent section. A packing of hemp dipped in tar is driven in to form a joint; over this is a luting of clay, within which is poured hot lead. The mains are laid with a gradual slope, and at the foot of each incline, or where two descending slopes meet, a reservoir is formed to collect water of condensation. This chamber has an iron cover into which is fixed a pipe, which descends nearly to the bottom of the reservoir. At the summit of the pipe is a screw, which admits the attachment of a pump, by which the liquid in the reservoir is removed.

gas-meter, s. A machine for measuring the quantity of gas passing through it. Citizen Seguin described a gas-meter at the sitting of the National Institute of France, on October 6, 1797. The wet-meter was invented by Clegg, in 1807, and improved by Crosley in 1815. The dry-meter was invented by Malam in 1820, and improved by Defries in 1838. Many improvements and variations have been added since. In the wet-meter there is a box filled to a certain level with water or other liquid. Inside this an axis is journalled with a series of buckets, each containing a certain quantity of gas, supplied by a stream of it coming in from a pipe. The buckets rotate, allowing the gas to escape by a pipe at the upper part of the meter, a series of multiplying gear-wheels indicating its amount. The principle of the dry register is that of a bellows alternately filled with gas and emptied, the number of times this occurs being recorded by a register. There are other forms of gas-meter gas-oven, s.

Metall.: The oven in which the waste gases taken from the top of the blast furnace are employed for heating the air for the blast.

gas-pipe, s. A pipe for the conveyance and distribution of gas. Service-pipes are of various metals, wrought-iron tubing being now more common than any other. The sections of distributing-pipe have screw-socket couplings. A gas-pipe made of brass or copper is liable to have a deposit of a compound of acetyline C_2H_2 with copper formed in it. This explodes when heated.

Gas-pipe tongs: [Gas-tongs].

gas-puddling, s.

Iron-works: The puddling of iron by the use of gases instead of solid fuel.

gas-purifier, s. An apparatus in which gas is purified of its sulphur compounds. The purification of gas by passing it through lime-water was introduced in 1807. The ordinary illuminating gas, after having been evolved in the retort, its tar eliminated in the condenser, and its ammonia abstracted in the washer, is passed through the purifier, which removes the sulphur and renders the gas fit for consumption.

gas-register, s. An instrument by which the pressure of gas is indicated and recorded. The rate of pressure is not uniform, but varies with the season and the hour. An ordinary pressure during the day is $\frac{8}{10}$ of an inch; that is a pressure which will raise a column of water in a tube to that height. At night the pressure is increased according to the hour and the season; the quantity burnt in winter is double that consumed in summer; more gas is burning at 9 p.m. than at 12 p.m.; and more at the latter hour than at 3 a.m.

gas-regulator, s. A device to equalize the flow of gas, notwithstanding varying pressure in the main, and the variations produced by the turning on or shutting off gas to or from burners in a building.

gas-retort, s. The chamber in which carbonaceous matter is distilled to produce illuminating gas. Gas-retorts are made of iron or clay, and each in shape is a segment of a cylinder, the flat side forming the floor. These are set in a brick furnace, with their open ends presented outward ready for charging.

Gas-retort charger: An apparatus for introducing the charge of coal into a retort, or removing the coke therefrom. [Steam-stoker.]

gas-ring, s.

Ordnance:

1. A thin plate of steel or copper, perforated to the exact size of the calibre of the gun, and used as a face-plate to the breech-block in Sharp's breech-loading rifle, and Broadwell's breech-loading ordnance, adopted by the Prussian Government. The breech-block is chambered out larger than the hole in the plate, so that the gas from the explosion of a charge flies back into the chamber and presses the plate or ring forward against the breech of the gun; a gas-check.

2. A thin flanged plate of copper or gun-metal fixed to the base of a projectile to prevent the escape of gas forward, and serving also to rotate the shot. (Voyle.) gas-service, s. Gas-fittings or fixtures; pipes, burners, &c., for gas.

gas-socket, s. The metallic socket which slips over the tip of a burner, and connects the gas-tubing therewith.

gas-stove, s. A stove heated by gas for cooking or warming purposes.

gas-tank, s. A gasometer or gasholder.

gas-tar, s. The tar condensed in the tubes when gas is distilled from coal; commonly called coal-tar. Of late years it has been found that the tarry products of gas manufacture are of the highest value; from these hydrocarbons many artificial fruit-essences are prepared, and they are the source of all those beautiful dyes, mauve, magenta, and others grouped under the general term of aniline colours. [ANILINE, COAL-TAR.]

gas-tight, s. Sufficiently tight or close to prevent the escape of gas.

gas-tongs, s. pl. Tongs for pinching gas-pipes, holding them while screwing joints together, or screwing gas-burners into their sockets.

gas-washer, s. An apparatus which receives the gas from the condenser. The office of the washer is to remove the ammonia, which affects the quality of the gas and is otherwise injurious.

gas-water, s. Water through which gas has been passed to purify it.

gas-works, s. pl. A manufactory where gas is distilled for illuminating purposes.

gas, v.t. & i. [GAS, s.]

A. Transitive:

Cotton-manuf.: To burn or singe off the divergent fibres or fluff from yarn. [GASSING.]

B. Intrans.: To make use of empty talk; to froth.

găs-ą-liĕr', s. [GASELIER.]

Găs'-coñ, a. & s. [Fr.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Gascony.

B. As substantive:

1. A native or inhabitant of Gascony.

2. A boaster; a gasconader.

găs-cŏn-ā'de, s. [Fr. gasconnade, from Gascon = an inhabitant of Gascony, a district the inhabitants of which had the reputation of being great boasters and blusterers.] A boast or boasting; bravado, bluster, vaunting, bragging.

"I tell you, without any gasconade, that I had rather be banished for my whole life."—Bolingbroke: Letter to the Earl of Peterborough.

găs-cŏn-ā'dc, v.i. [GASCONADE, s.] To boast, to brag, to bluster.

găs-cŏn-ād'-ĕr, s. [Eng. gasconad(e); -er.] One who gasconades; a boaster, a bragger, a blusterer.

* gas-coynes, s. pl. [GASKINS.]

găs'-crŏmh, s. [Gael. cascromh, from cas = a foot, crom = crooked.] An instrument of a semicircular form, resembling a currier's knife, with a crooked handle fixed in the middle, used for trenching ground; properly Cascromh.

"Even the savage Highlandmen, in Caithness and Sutherland, can make more work, and better, with their gascromh, or whatever they call it."—Scott: Pirate, ch. ii.

găs-ĕ-fī-cā'-tion, s. [GASIFICATION.]

găs'-ĕ-fȳ, v.t. [GASIFY.]

găs-ē'-ĭ-tȳ, s. [Eng. gase(ous); -ity.] The quality or state of being gaseous; gaseousness.

găs-ĕ-lĭĕr', găs-ą-lĭĕr', s. [Formed from gas, with a curious imitation of chandelier (q.v.).] A frame with brackets or branches for burning gas, as a chandelier for candles.

"Standing right under the central gaselier."—Black: Adventures of a Phaeton, ch. iii.

gă'-şĕ-ŏŭs, a. [Eng. gas; e connect.; -ous.]

1. Lit.: Of the nature of gas; in the form of gas.

"The substance employed, whether it be fluid, gaseous, elastic, electrical, or none of these, or nothing resembling these, is unknown to us."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. vii.

* 2. Fig.: Without substance or reality; unreal, flimsy, empty.

gā'-şĕ-ŏŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. gaseous; -ness.] The quality or state of being gaseous; gaseity.

găsh (1), v.t. [Mid. Eng. garse.] [GASH, s.] To make a gash or deep wide gaping cut in, especially in flesh.

"Gash thyself, priest, and honour thy brute Baal."
Tennyson: Aylmer's Field, 644.

găsh (2), v.i. [Etym. doubtful.] To talk a great deal; to chatter, to prattle, to gossip.

"The couthy cracks begin when supper's o'er,
The cheering supper gars them gibly gash."
Fergusson: Poems, ii. 56.

găsh (3), v.i. [Fr. gauche = awry; Ger. gosche = grinning or opening the mouth in scorn.]

1. To project the under jaw.

2. To distort the mouth in contempt.

găsh (1), s. [A corrupt. of Mid. Eng. garse, garsshe, or garsh.] [GARSE.]

1. A deep and wide cut or wound, especially in flesh.

"The uproar, the blood, the gashes, the ghastly figures which sank down and never rose again, spread horror and dismay through the town."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

* 2. A mark or scar of a wound.

"I was fond of back-sword and cudgel-play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar."—Arbuthnot.

găsh (2), s. [GASH (2), v.]

1. Prattle, chatter, talkativeness.

2. Pert language.

găsh (3), s. [Etym. doubtful.] A projection of the under jaw.

gash-gabbit, a.

1. Having the mouth distorted.

"A' teethless and gash-gabbit
The bags that night."
D. Anderson: Poems, 125.

2. Having a long projecting chin.

găsh, a. [Etym. doubtful. Jamieson suggests that it is an abbreviation of Lat. sagax = sagacious.]

1. Shrewd and intelligent in conversation; sagacious.

"Nay, never look gash or grim at me, man."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxv.

3. Trim, well-dressed.

* găsh'-fûl, a. [Eng. gash (1), s.; ful(l).] Ghastly, hideous, frightful.

"A gashful, horrid, ugly shape."—Gayton: Festivous Notes on Don Quixote.

* găsh'-lĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gashly; -ness.] The quality or state of being ghastly, horrid, or dismal; dismalness, ghastliness.

* găsh'-lȳ, a. [Apparently a corrupt. of ghastly (q.v.).] Ghastly, terrible, inspiring dread, dismal.

"By all that is hirsute and gashly."—Sterne: Tristram Shandy, v. 215.

găs'-hōld-ĕr, s. [Eng. gas, and holder.] A Gasometer (q.v.).

găs-ĭ-fĭ-cā'-tion, s. [Eng. gasify; c connective; suff. -ation.] The art or process of converting into gas.

găs'-ĭ-fȳ, v.t. [Fr. gazéfier.] To convert into gas or an aëriform fluid, as by the application of heat, a chemical process, &c.

găs'-ĭ-form, a. [Fr. gazéiforme.] Of the nature or form of gas; gaseous, aeriform.

găs'-kĕt, s. [Fr. garcette = a gasket, a cat-o'-nine tails; Sp. garceta = a gasket.]

1. Naut.: A plaited cord by which the sails, when furled, are bound close to the yards or gaffs.

2. Steam-engin.: A strip of leather, tow, or textile fabric, to form a packing or caulk a joint.

* găs'-kĭns, s. [GALLIGASKINS.] Wide, loose breeches or hose.

"If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, i. 5.

găs'-light (gh silent), s. [Eng. gas, and light.]

1. The light produced by the combustion of coal gas.

2. A gas-jet.

găs-lĭght-ĭng (gh silent), s. [Eng. gas, and lighting.] The act or system of lighting a place or district by means of gas.

găş'-ŏ-lĭne, s. [Eng., &c., gas; Lat. ol (eum) = oil; -ine.] A light grade of petroleum.

găş-ŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Eng. gas; o connective; and meter.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A large vessel for the storage of gas before it is distributed to the streets and houses for illuminating purposes. It is usually a large hollow cylinder, closed at the top, with the lower end immersed in water; the cylinder rises or falls according to the amount of water displaced by the gas.

II. Chemistry:

1. An instrument or apparatus for measuring, collecting, preserving, or mixing gases.

2. An instrument for measuring the quantity of gas employed in any experiment.

găş-ō-mĕt'-rĭc, a. [Eng. gas; o connective; and metric (q.v.).] Of or pertaining to gasometry, or the measurement of gases.

gasometric-analysis, s. A mixture of gases is analysed by the Endiometer (q.v.), or by passing the mixture of gases through a series of tubes filled with different liquids, which absorb certain of the gases, the volume of the remainder being measured and corrections made for temperature, pressure, &c. Water absorbs hydrochloric acid, hydrobromic acid, and hydriodic acid; caustic potash absorbs H_2S, HCl, CO_2, SO_2, HCN, &c.; pyrogallic acid dissolved in caustic potash absorbs oxygen; concentrated sulphuric acid and other liquids are also used. For the methods employed in gas analysis consult Gasometrische Methoden von R. Bunsen.

găş-ŏm'-ĕ-trȳ, s. [Eng. gas; o connective; and Gr. μέτρον (metron) = a measure; Fr. gazométrie.] The science, act, or practice of measuring gases; that branch of chemical science which treats of the nature and properties of gases.

găş-ŏph'-ą-nĕr, s. [Eng. gas, and Gr. φαίνω (phainō) = to show.] An indicator of the presence of poisonous gases. It is described as a lump of boracic acid, heated to redness in chlorine, and blown into a bulb. Carbonic acid, sulphuretted hydrogen, and other deleterious gases, give peculiar reactions on the bulb, and indicate their presence.

găş'-ō-scōpe, s. [Eng. gas, and Gr. σκοπέω (skopeō)=to see.] An instrument for detecting the presence of carburetted hydrogen in the atmosphere. It is used, or should be, in coal-mines, to give an alarm when a dangerous and explosive condition of the air supervenes. It may also be applied to detect a leak in the gas-apparatus of a building. [GAS-ALARM.]

gasp, * gaspe, * gasp-yn, v. i. & t. [Icel. geispa = to yawn; Sw. gaspa; Dan. gispe. Gasp is a frequentative from gape (q.v.).]

A. Intransitive:

1. Lit.: To open the mouth wide in laborious respiration; to breathe heavily and with difficulty; to respire convulsively.

"Gasping to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iii. 3.

* 2. Fig.: To pant eagerly; to crave earnestly.

"Or heene thine eyes attemp'red to the yeere, Quenching the gasping furrowes thirst with raine?"—Spenser: Shepheards Calender; April.

B. Trans.: To emit or utter with gasping; or pantings.

"Happy if with my latest breath
I may but gasp his name."
Charles Wesley.

¶ Sometimes followed by away, forth, out, &c.

"And with short sobs he gasps away his breath."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneis ix. 553.

¶ To gasp after: To long eagerly for; to desire vehemently.

"The Castilian and his wife gasped after their liberty."—Addison: Spectator, No. 198.

gasp *, [GASP, v.] The act of gasping or opening the mouth to catch the breath; labonred or convulsive respiration; a short, painful catching of the breath.

"Egelred shortly gaue
A quiet gaspe or twaine"
Warner: Albions England, bk. iv., ch. xxii.

¶ At the last gasp: On the point of death; in the last extremity.

"His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last gasp." Shakesp.: Cymbeline, I. 6.

gasp'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GASP, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: A gasp; a short painful catching of the breath.

"And the foam of his gasping lay white on the turf,
And cold as the spray of the rock-beating surf" Byron: Destruction of Sennacherib.

gasp'-ĭng-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gasping; -ly.] In a gasping manner; with gasps.

"My breath came gaspingly and thick."
Byron: Prisoner of Chillon, xi.

Găs-sĕr-ĭ-an, a. [Named after an anatomist, Gasseri (?).]

Anat.: For def. see etym. and compound.

Gasserian-ganglion, s.

Anat.: The ganglion of the fifth pair of cranial nerves.

găs'-sĭng, s. [GAS, v.]

Cotton-man.: The process of burning the divergent fibres or fluff from yarn. The loose filaments are burned off by passing the yarn quickly through a gas-flame. The yarn is thus prepared for tread, lace, and hosiery. An average yarn loses about one-eighteenth part in the operation.

gassing-frame, s.

Cotton-man.: An apparatus for gassing yarn. It has a row of jets about twelve inches apart, and a little hood above each. The yarn is led from one bobbin to a second, which is rotated by being pressed against a rotating roller. The yarn in passing between the reels traverses to and fro through the flame, passing over pulleys.

găs'-sȳ, a. [Eng. gas; -y.]

1. Lit.: Pertaining to or containing gases; gaseous.

2. Full of empty talk.

"As when we call an empty and sophistical but ready talker gassy."—Whitney: Life & Growth of Language, p. 17.

* gast, * gaste, v.t. [A.S. gǽstan = to terrify.] To frighten, to terrify, to make aghast.

"I knowe no gome that is gast of they grete wordes."
Gawaine & the Grene Knight, 325.

* gast (1), s. [GHOST.]

* gast (2), s. [GAST, v.] A fright, a state of terror.

"The woman in a gast, and pale as death, comes and tells her lady who had stolen her things she missed."—Law: Memorialls, p. 220.

* găs-tĕr, v.t. [Eng. gast; -er.] To frighten.

"Either the sight of the lady has gastered him, or else he's drunk."—Beaum. & Flet.: Wit at Several Weapons, ii. 1.

găs-tĕr'-ĭ-a s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, allnding to the enlarged base of the flowers.]

Bot.: A genus of Liliaceæ. Paxton enumerates forty-two species, some with varieties, as introduced into Britain.

găs-tĕr-ō-, găs-trō-, pref. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr), genit. γαστέρος (gasteros), by syncope, γαστρός (gastrós) = the belly.]

Zoology:

1. Gen.: The belly; the under part of the body.

2. Spec.: The stomach.

găs-tĕr-ō-car'-pĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Pref. gastero- (q.v.); Gr. καρπός (karpos) = fruit, and Lat. fem. pl. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Ceramiaceæ, sub-order Cryptonemeæ (q.v.).

găs-tĕr-ō-eō-mа, s. [Pref. gastero-, and Gr. κόμη (komē) = hair.]

Paleront.: The typical genus of the family Gasterocomidæ (q.v.).

gas-tĕr ō-cŏm'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gasterocom(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Paleront.: A family of Crinoidcans, occurring in the Devonian rocks.

găs-tĕr-ō-mȳ-çĕ'-tēş, găs-tĕr-ō-mȳ'-çĭ, s. pl. [Pref. gastero- (q.v.), and Gr. μύκης (mukēs), genit. μύκητος (mukētos) = a mushroom.]

Bot.: An order of Fungals, called also Lycoperdaceæ (q.v.). The spores are generally quaternate on distinct sporophores, hymenium inclosed in a peridium. Lindley divides the order, which he calls also Lycoperdaceæ, into six sub-orders, (1) Podaxineæ, (2) Hypogæi, (3) Phalloidei, (4) Trichogastrea, (5) Myxogastres, and (6) Nidulariacei.

găs-tĕr-ō-mȳ-çĕ'-toŭs, a. [Mod. Lat. gasteromycetes (q.v.); Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Of, belonging, or relating to the Gasteromycetes (q.v.).

găs-tĕr-ŏph'-ĭl-ŭs, s. [Pref. gastero- (q.v.), and Gr. φιλέω (phileō) = to love; φίλος (philos) = loved; in poetry (but rarely) loving.]

Entom.: A genus of two-winged Insects, family Œstridæ (Bot-flies). Gasterophilus equi, the larva of which at one stage of its career inhabits the stomach of the horse. The perfect insect lays its eggs on the skin of the animal, choosing situations which it can reach with its tongue when it licks itself. By this process the eggs are transferred to the stomach. When the larva is mature it is excreted, and makes its final transformation in the earth or in dung.

găs'-tĕr-ō-pŏd, s. [GASTEROPODA.] One of the Gasteropoda.

găs-tĕr ŏp'-ō-da, s. pl. [Pref. gastero- (q.v.); Gr. πούς (pous), genit. ποδός (podos) = a foot, and Lat. neut. pl. suff. a.]

1. Zool.: Gasteropods. The most typical, though not the most highly-organized class of the sub-kingdom Mollusca. Its essential character is that the under side of the body constitutes a single muscular foot, on which the animal creeps or glides. Most of the Gasteropoda have univalve shells, a few have them tubular or conical; in one the shell is multivalve, and in some it is internal or wanting. Most of the spiral shells are dextral, a few are sinistral. Some have an operculum closing the aperture of the shell. The animal has a head furnished with two, four, or six tentacles, or these are wholly wanting. There is a mantle, in the folds of which the shell is produced. Some breathe air, the others water. Cuvier divided the Gasteropoda into eight orders, (1) Pectenibranchiata, (2) Scutibranchiata, (3) Cyclobranchiata, (4) Tabulibranchiata, (5) Pulmonata, (6) Tectibranchiata, (7) Inferobranchiata, and (8) Nudibranchiata. Woodward and others have divided the class into four orders only. (1) Prosobranchiata, including the first four of Cuvier's orders, (2) Pulmonata, corresponding to his 5th, (3) Opisthobranchiata, comprehending his 6th, 7th, and 8th orders; and (4) Nucleobranchiata, which Cuvier had made a distinct class—Heteropoda (q.v.). The Prosobranchiata have been arranged in two divisions: Siphonostomata and Holostomata; and the Opisthobranchiata also in two: Tectibranchiata and Nudibranchiata.

2. Palæont.: Gasteropoda occur in all the formations from the Upper Cambrian rocks till now. Those of the Cambrian formation are few in number, but from this period forward they steadily increase, both in numbers and variety. Of the Palæozoic genera almost all are extinct. During that period the Holostomata were most abundant, the Siphonostomata, or siphon-possessing forms, being almost or entirely without representatives. The latter became predominant in the secondary and tertiary strata. A host of new Gasteropods appeared in the Jurassic period, and many of the modern families had their origin in the Cretacious epoch. The fossil forms known are exceedingly numerous, but few types are extinct, the Gasteropods having been highly persistent. The Pulmonata, from being many of them land animals, are less fully represented: the Nudibranchiata, from the absence of the shell, not at all.

găs-tĕr-ŏp'-ō-doŭs, a. [Mod. Lat. gasteropod(a); Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Zool.: Using the belly or the whole under-part of the belly as a foot to crawl by; of or belonging to the Gasteropoda (q.v.).

găs-tĕr-ŏs-tē'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gasteroste(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ichthy.: Sticklebacks. A family of spiny-finned fishes, by some separated from the Gurnards (Triglidæ), but united with them by others. There are bony plates on part of the order; other parts are unprotected even with scales. But these fishes have formidable defenca in the strong and sharp spines of their tina. In place of depositing their apawn and leaving the young fry when hatched to cater for themselves as best they can, the male stickleback constructs a nest formed of vegetable matter, within which his mate deposits her eggs. These he defends with great courage and tenacity, attempting with his spines to rip up any fish which approachea the nest.

găs-tĕr-ŏs'-tĕ-ŭs, s. [Pref. gastero- (q.v.), and Gr. οστέον (osteon) = a bone.]

Ichthy.: A genus of spiny-finned fishes. [GASTEROSTEIDÆ.] Seven species are known in Britain. Gasterosteus trachurus or aculeatus is the Rough-tailed Stickleback of books, the English Banstickle, and the Scotch Sharplin. It is found both in fresh and salt water, while G. Spinachia, the Fifteen-spined Stickleback, called in Cornwall the Great Sea-adder, is exclusively marine.

găs-tĕr-ō-thă-lăm'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Pref. gastero- (q.v.), and Lat. thalamus, from Gr. θάλαμος (thalamos) = an inner chamber, a bed-chamber.]

Bot.: A tribe of Lichenaceæ. The shields are always closed or opened by the irregular separation of the thalloidal covering. Nucleus enclosed, containing asci deliquescing or shrivelling up. (Lindley.)

* găst'-fûl, * gast-full, a. [Eng. gast (2), s.; -full (l).]

1. Frightful, ghastly, terrible.

"Gastful as a thynge that moveth one to drede: espouentable."—Palsgrave.

2. Frightened, fearful, afraid.

"Who is a ferdiful man, and of gastful herte?"—Wycliffe: Deut. xx. 8 (Purvey.)

* găst'-fûl-nĕss, s. [Eng. gastful; -ness.] The quality or state of being ghastly or gastful; ghastliness.

"It breeds a kind of irksome gastfulness."—Sidney: Arcadia, p 405.

* gast'-lī-nĕss, s. [GHASTLINESS.]

* gast'-lȳ, a. [GHASTLY.]

* gast'-nĕss, * gast-nesse, * gaist-nes, s. [Eng. gast; -ness.] Terror, fear, fright, amazement.

"Do you perceive the gastness of her eye."
Shakesp.: Othello, v. 1.

găs-tor'-nĭs, s. [Named after Gastoo M. Plante, its discoverer, and Gr. ὄρνις (ornis) = a bird.]

Paleront.: A huge fossil bird from the Eocene; one either of the Natatores or of the Cursores. The only known species is the Gastornis parisiensis of the Paris basin.

găs-træ'-a, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gaster), genit. γαστρός (gastros) = the belly.]

Paleront.: A hypothetical genus of animals consisting simply of a sac or stomach, with an ectodermal and endodermal layer of cells. This simple organism Hæckel assumes to have been the first animal generated on the earth, and the germ from which the whole animal kiogdom with its infinite diversities was gradually evolved.

* găs-trăl'-ğȳ, găs-trăl'-ğĭ-a, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr), genit. γαστρός (gastros) = the belly, and ἄλγος (algos) = pain; Fr. gastralgie.]

Pathol.: A nervous pain in the stomach, without fever.

* gas-trel, * cas-trel, s. [KESTREL.]

găs'-trĭc, * găs'-trĭck, a. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr); genit. γαστρός (gastros) = the belly; Eng., &c. suff. -ic.]

Anat. & Path.: Of, belonging to, or referring to the stomach.

gastric-catarrh, s. Disordered stomach. [GASTRITIS.]

gastric-fever, s. Sub-acute inflammation of the stomach, but also a term in common use to denote enteric fever (q.v.).

gastric-juice, s.

Anat.: A colourless liquid secreted by the atomach, containing about 98·5 per cent. of water; when evaporated to dryness and burnt, the ashes consist chiefly of sodium chloride. The gastric juice also contains a free acid, probably hydrochloric acid, and a peculiar substance called pepsine (q.v.), to which, and the presence of the free acid, the power of digesting food possessed by the gastric juice appears to be due. An artificial gastric juice can be formed by extracting pepsine from the coats of the stomach by means of glycerine, and adding to the filtered liquid an aqueous solution containing 0·1 per cent. of hydrochloric acid.

"The gastric juice, or the liquor which digests the food in the stomachs of animals, is of this class. Of all menstrua, it is the most active, the most universal."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. vii.

gastric-system, s.

Anat.: The parts of the body by means of which digestion is carried on.

găs'-trĭc-al, a. [Eng. gastric; -al.] Pertaining to the stomach or good living; gastronomical.

"What kind of genius is your lordship's gastrical chef?"—Disraeli: Vivian Grey, bk. ii., ch. ii.

găs'-trĭ-çĭşm, s. [Eng. gastric; -ism; Fr. gastricisme.]

Pathol.: The medical tenet that most diseases are produced directly or indirectly by indigestible materials in the stomach.

găs-trĭd'-ĭ-ŭm, s. [Gr. γαστρίδιον (gastridion), dimin. of γαστριον (gastrion), γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly.]

Bot.: A sub-genus of Agrostis. Gastridium lendigerum, the Nit-grass, now called Agrostis australis, is a colonist naturalised on sandy marshes from Norfolk south and west to Cornwall. (Sir Joseph Hooker.)

găs-trĭl'-ô-quĭşm, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly; Lat. loquor = to speak, and Eng. suff. -ism.] The same as VENTRILOQUISM (q.v.).

găs-trĭl'-ô-quĭst, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly; Lat. loquor = to speak, and Eng. suff. -ist.] A ventriloquist (q.v.).

găs-trĭl'-ô-quŏŭs, a. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly; Lat. loquor = to speak, and Eng. suff. -ous.] Speaking or seeming to speak in the belly; ventriloquous.

găs-trĭl'-ô-quỵ, s. [GASTRILOQUOUS.] The act or art of speaking in the belly; ventriloquism.

găs-trĭ-marg'-ĭşm, s. [Gr. γαστρίμαργος (gastrimargos) = insatiable; Eng. suff. -ism.] A preternaturally ravenous appetite.

"Be not addicted to the foul vice of gastrimargism and belly chear."—Optick Glass of Humors. (1639.)

găs-trī'-tĭs, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr), genit. γαστρός (gastros) = the belly; suff. -itis (q.v.).]

Pathol.: Inflammation of the stomach, either acute or chronic, usually most severe at the pyloric orifice, generally caused by corrosive or irritant poisons, but chiefly from the use of raw spirits, accompanied by nausea, sickness, &c., and in severe cases followed by congestion. It seldom occurs in persons of temperate habit.

găs-trō-, pref. [GASTERO-.]

gastro-colic, a.

Anat.: Pertaining to the stomach and to the colon: as, the gastro-colic omentum.

gastro-duodenal, a.

Anat.: Pertaining to the stomach and the duodenum: as, the gastro-duodenal artery, the gastro-duodenal plexus.

gastro-epiploic, a.

Anat.: Pertaining to the stomach and the omentum: as, the gastro-epiploic plexus, the gastro-epiploic vein.

gastro-phrenic, a.

Anat.: Pertaining to the stomach and to the diaphragm: as, the gastro-phrenic ligament.

gastro-pneumonic, a.

Anat.: Pertaining to the stomach and to the lungs: as, the gastro-pneumonic mucous membrane.

gastro-splenic, a.

Anat.: Pertaining to the stomach and to the spleen: as, the gastro-splenic ligament or omentum.

găs-trō-brăn'-chŭs, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Gr. βράγχιον (brangchion) = a fin.]

Ichthy.: Ilag, a genus of fishes, called also Myxine, the typical one of the Myxinidæ (q.v.). [HAG, MYXINE.]

găs'-trō-çēlc, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr), genit. γαστρός (gastros) = the belly, and κήλη (kēlē) = a tumour.]

Pathol.: Hernia of the stomach.

găs-trō-chæ'-nă, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Gr. χαίνω (chainō) = to yawn, to gape.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Gastrochænidæ (q.v.). Recent species known ten, widely distributed, some from Britain; fossil twenty, the latter from the Lower Oolite onward. Gastrochæna modiolina perforates shells and limestone.

găs-trō-chæ'-nĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gastrochæn(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Molluscs, section Siphonida, and the sub-section, with the pallial line sinuated. The shell is equivalve and gaping, with thin edentulous valves united by a ligament, and sometimes when adult cemented in a shelly tube; adductors two; the animal elongated, truncated in front, produced behind into two very long contractile siphons. The species burrow in mud or stone. Chief genera Gastrochæna, Saxicava, Clavagella, and Aspergillum.

găs'-trō-chēne, s. [GASTROCHÆNA.]

Zool.: A book name for the molluscs of the genus Gastrochæna (q.v.).

găs-trŏc-nē'-mĭ-ŭs, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Gr. κνήμη (knēmē) = the leg.]

Anat.: For def. see etym. and compound.

gastrocnemius-muscle, s.

Anat.: A muscle which rises above by two thick tendinous heads from the condyles of the femur, and ends below in the tendo Achillis. (Quain.)

găs-trō'-dĭ-ă, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Gr. ὀδούς (odous), genit. ὀδόντας (odontos) = a tooth, in allusion to the top of the column.]

Bot.: A genus of Orchids, family Gastrodidæ (q.v.). The tubers of Gastrodia sesamoides, the native potato of Tasmania, were eaten by the natives of that island, but are watery and insipid. (Lindley.) găs-trō'-dĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gastrod(ia), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Orchids, tribe Arethuseæ.

găs-trō-dўn'-ĭ-ă, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Gr. ὀδύνη (odunē) = pain.]

Pathol.: Pain in the stomach, usually accompanying gastritis, although also found in other complaints, such as dyspepsia or indigestion.

găs-trō-ĕn-tĕr-ī'-tĭs, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Mod. Lat., &c., enteritis (q.v.).]

Pathol.: Inflammation of the mucous membrane, both of the intestines and of the stomach.

găs-trŏl'-ă-tĕr, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and λατρεία (latreia) = worship.] One whose god is his belly.

"The first were called Engastrimythes, the others gastrolaters."—Urquhart: Rabelais, bk. iv., ch. lviii.

găs-trŏl'-ă-trŏŭs, a. [GASTROLATER.] Belly-worshipping.

"The vanity we perceived in the dresses of the gastrolatrous coquillons."—Urquhart: Rabelais, bk. iv., ch. lviii.

găs-trō-lō'-bĭ-ŭm, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr), syncopated genit. γαστρός (gastros) = the belly, and λοβός (lobos) = a lobe.]

Bot.: A genus of papilionaceous plants, tribe Podalyrieæ, sub-tribe Pulteneæ. The species, which are numerous, are natives of the south-western parts of Australia, where Gastrolobium bilobium, G. spinosum, and other species are very poisonous to cattle.

găs-trŏl'-ô-gў, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse.] A discourse or treatise on the stomach.

găs-trō-măl-ā'-çĭ-ă, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Gr. μαλακία (malakia) = softness, from μαλακός (malakos) = soft.]

Pathol.: Softening of the stomach.

găs'-trō-măn-çў, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and μαντεια (manteia) = prophecy, divination.]

1. A kind of divination among the ancients by means of words seemingly spoken in the belly.

2. A kind of divination by means of glasses or other round transparent vessels, in the centre of which figures appeared by magic art.

găs'-trō-mўth, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and μυθος (muthos) = a word.] One whose voice appears to come from his belly; a ventriloquist.

găs'-trō-nōmc, s. [Fr.] [GASTRONOMY.] One who is given to good living; an epicure.

găs-trŏn'-ô-mĕr, s. [GASTRONOME.] A gastronome, an epicure.

găs-trō-nŏm'-ĭc, găs-trō-nŏm'-ĭc-al, a. [Fr. gastronomique.] Pertaining or relating to gastronomy.

găs-trō-nŏm'-ĭc-al-lў, adv. [Eng. gastronomical; -ly.] In a gastronomical manner; as an epicure.

"A large number of those [Fungi] collected, after being authoritatively identified, were carried home to be experimented upon gastronomically."—Daily Telegraph, Oct. 16, 1883.

găs-trŏn'-ô-mĭst, s. [Eng. gastronom(y); -ist.] One given to good living, an epicure; one versed in gastronomy.

găs-trŏn-ô-mў, s. [Gr. γαστρονομία (gastronomia), from γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and νομία (nomia) = use, usage; Fr. gastronomie.] The art or science of good living; epicurism; the pleasures of the table; the art of dining; the principles of cooking.

găs-trō-pā'-chą, s. [Pref. gastro- (q.v.), and Gr. παχυς (pachus) = thick.]

Entom.: A genus of lepidopterous insects; family Bombycidæ. Gastropacha quercifolia is the Lappet moth, sometimes called the Oak Lappet moth. The larva feeds on sloe, willow, and other trees and shrubs. That of an allied species G. ilicifolia feeds on the bilberry. (Stainton.) găs'-trō-pŏd, s. [GASTEROPOD.]

găs-trŏp'-ô-da, s. [GASTEROPODA.]

găs-trŏp'-ô-doŭs, a. [GASTEROPODOUS.]

găs-tror'-ą-phĕ, s. [Gr. γαστροῤῥαφία (gastrorrhaphia), from γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and ῥαφή (rhaphē) = a sewing, a suture; ῥάπτω (rhaptō) = to sew; Fr. gastrorraphie.]

Surg.: A suture uniting a wound of the belly, or some of its contents.

găs-tror'-ą-phў, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and ῥαφή (rhaphē) = a sewing; ῥάπτω (rhaptō) = to sew.]

Surg.: The act or operation of sewing up a wound of the belly, or of some of its contents.

găs-trŏs'-cō-pў, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and σκοπέω (skopeō) = to view.]

Med.: An examination of the abdomen in order to discover disease.

găs-trŏs'-tō-mў, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and στόμα (stoma) = the mouth.]

Surg.: The act or operation of making an artificial opening into the stomach for the purpose of introducing food when it cannot be taken in the natural way, by reason of some obstruction or stricture in the gullet.

găs-trŏt'-ô-mў, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gastēr) = the belly, and τομή (tomē) = a cutting, τέμνω (temnō) = to cut; Fr. gastrotomie.]

Surg.: The act or operation of cutting into or opening the abdomen.

găs-trŭ'-lą, s. [Gr. γαστήρ (gaster) = the belly.]

Zool.: The name given by Hæckel to young sponges, and also to young animals of the Cœlenterata when they have attained only to that stage of development in which there are two layers of cells, an outer and an inner one, enclosing a central stomach-like cavity which communicates with the outer water by a single opening.

gat, pret. of v. [GET, v.]

gat, s. [GOAT.]

gătch'-ĕrs, s. pl. [Etym. doubtful.]
Min.: The after-leavings of tin.

gāte (1), *gat, *gaytt, *yate, *yet, s. [A.S. geat = a gap, an opening; cogn. with Dut. gat = a hole, an opening; Icel. gat = an opening; gata = a way, a street; Sw. gata = a street, a lane; Dan. gade = a street; Goth. gatwo; Ger. gasse; O. H. Ger. gazi, guzza; M. H. Ger. gazze. The root is seen in A.S. gitan = to get, to arrive at. (Skeat.)]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) A way, a road, a path, an avenue, a passage, a street.

"Thon canst ful wel the richte gate
To Lincolne." Havelok, 846.

(2) A way, a manner, a fashion.

"None other gates was he dighte Bot in thre gayt skynnes." Perceval, 658.

* (3) A procession.

"All the griesly monsters of the sea Stood gaping at their gate."
Spenser: F. Q., III. iv. 32.

(4) A large door, giving entrance to any large building, court, or place.

(5) A light open frame of timber or metal, used to open or close the entrance into an enclosure of any kind, as a field, a garden, a courtyard; such a frame extending across a road, as at a turnpike, a level crossing, &c.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Anything which shuts or bars a passage.

"The gates of hell are open night and day."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid vi. 192.

(2) An entrance, an opening.

"Swift as quicksilver it courses through The natural gates and alleys of the body."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, i. 5.

(3) An entrance, an opening, an opportunity.

"Auria had done nothing but wisely and politicly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war."—Knolles: Historie of the Turkes.

II. Technically:

1. Carp.: A sash or frame in which a saw is extended to prevent buckling or bending.

2. Locksmith.: One of the apertures in the tumbler for the passage of the stub.

3. Founding:

(1) An ingate. The aperture in a mould through which the metal is poured. The runner conducts the metal from the ingate to the hollow in the mould, where it forms a casting. The piece of metal which occupies the ingate and runner is called a sprue, and is knocked off the casting.

(2) The sprue or piece of metal cast in the gate; a sullage-piece.

4. Hydraulic Engineering:

(1) The valve which admits the water to the bucket of the water-wheel (q.v.).

(2) A sluice, admitting or shutting off water to or from a lock or dock.

¶ (1) To stand in the gate or gates:
Scrip.: To occupy a position of advantage or defence.

(2) To break gates: At Oxford and Cambridge Universities to remain out of college after the hour to which a student has been restricted. [GATE, v.] gate-chamber, s.

Hydraul. Engin.: A recess in the side wall of a canal-lock, which receives the opened gate, so that it shall not project into the lock-chamber.

gate-channel, s.
Found.: The gate, geat, or git, through which molten metal is admitted to the mould. [GATE, s., II. 3 (1).]

gate-door, * gaytt-dore, s. The outer or street door of a house.

gate-hook, s. A gate-hook is that part of a gate-hinge which is driven into the post and sustains the leaf attached to the gate.

gate-house, s. A house at or near a gate, to accommodate the gate-keeper; a house over the gateway or entrance to a city, palace, abbey, castle, &c., and forming the residence of the gate-keeper. The gate-house also forms the entrance to a private mansion, to any public, municipal, or collegiate building, &c. In the Early English architecture gate-houses, now sometimes called lodges, were large and imposing structures of great elegance.

gate-man, s.
1. A man in charge of a gate; a gate-keeper.
2. The lessee or collector of tolls at a toll-gate.

gate-meeting, s. A meeting for races, &c., when a charge is made for admission to the grounds; a meeting where gate-money is taken.

"Few of these athletes care to compete at gate-meetings."—Daily News, July 14, 1881.

gate-money, s. Money charged or paid for admission to enclosed grounds where any sports are carried on.

"Hitherto, the teams which have come over have received half the gate-money taken during their matches—that is, sixpence a head for every spectator."—Field, Oct. 27, 1883.

 gate-penny, s. A tribute paid by the customary tenants for leave to pass through one or more of their lord's gates for the more easy passage to and from their own lands.

gate-post, s. One to which a gate is hung or which it shuts against, and which are known respectively as the swinging or hinging post, and the shutting post.

gate-road, s.
Min.: A gate-way (q.v.).

gate-saw, s. A mill-saw which is strained in a gate or sash to prevent buckling. [GATE, s., II. 1.]

gate-shutter, s.
Found.: A spade or paddle which closes the channel against the molten metal when the mould or bed is full, and turns it in another direction to other moulds or beds.

 gate-trip, s. A footstep, a gait.

"Favouring with gate-trips Iulus." Stanyhurst: Virgil; Æneid i. 675.

 gate-ward, s. The keeper of a gate.

"Now loud the heedful gate-ward cried—
'Prepare ye all for blows and blood.'"
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 4.

gate-way, s. [GATEWAY.]

gate-wise, adv. [GATEWISE.]

 gate-works, s. pl. The works or structures about a gateway.

"Where'er Tantallon faced the land, Gate-works and walls were strongly manned."
Scott: Marmion, vi. 2.

gāte (2), s. [GOAT.]

gāte, v.t. [GATE (1), s.]
1. To supply or furnish with a gate.
2. At Oxford and Cambridge Universities to confine a student who has been guilty of some infraction of college discipline, within the gates of his college; to compel him to be within the gates at a certain hour earlier than his fellow-students. (In the former case the verb is used absolutely, in the latter the hour is specified.)

"He won't hurt you much, Giglamps. Gate and chapel you."—Cuthbert Bede: Verdant Green, pt. i. ch. xii.

gate, * gatte, pret. of v. [GET, v.]

gāt'-ĕd, pa. par. or a. [GATE, v.]

gā'te-lĕss, a. [Eng. gate; -less.] Without a gate or entrance; having no gate.

"To enter without force a gateless tower."—Machin: Dumb Knight, v. 1.

gaten, s. [GATTEN.]

gā'te-vēin, s. [Eng. gate, and vein.]
*1. Ord. Lang.: A main channel or means of communication. (Lit. & fig.)

"For he—for he,
Gate-vein of this heart's blood of Lombardy
(If I should falter now)—for he is thine!"
Browning: Sordello, bk. i.

2. Anat.: A large vein conveying the blood from the abdominal viscera into the liver; the vena porta.

gā'te-ward, gā'te-wards, adv. [Eng. gate; suff. -ward, -wards.] Towards or in the direction of a gate.

"Down gatewards to the barn his course he steers."
Ross: Helenore, p. 47.

gā'te-wāy, s. [Eng. gate, and way.]
I. Ordinary Language:
1. Literally:
(1) An opening; a passage; a way of entrance.

"Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

(2) A frame, arch, or the like, in which a gate is hung; a structure at an entrance or gate, designed for ornament or defence.

"A gateway, last remains
Of that foundation of domestic care Raised by his hands."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vii.

* 2. Fig.: A passage or opening; a means or way of egress or ingress.

II. Min.: A level or gallery in a mine, along which the minerals are carried.

găth'-ĕr, * gad-dren, * gad-er, * gad-er-en, * gad-er, * gad-ir, * gadre, * gad-yr, v.t. & i. [A.S. gadrian, gaderian, from A.S. gader, gador = together; Dut. gaderen = to collect, from gader = together; O. Fris. goduria, guderia, gadria; M. H. Ger. gateren, geteren.] [TOGETHER.]

A. Transitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. To collect or bring together, as a number of separate things into one place, or into one aggregate body.

"Jacob said unto his brethren, Gather stones; and they took stones and made an heap."—Genesis xxxi. 46.

2. To draw together from a state of diffusion or expansion; to bring together in folds or plaits, as a dress.

3. To assemble, to congregate. (Followed by together.)

"When he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together."—Matthew ii. 4.

4. To get in, as harvest.

"Gathered like ripe sheaves into the garner."—Gilpin: Sermons, vol. ii., ser. 50.

5. To select and take; to choose out. (Followed by from.)

"Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen."—Psalm cvi. 47.

6. To pluck, to pick, to pick up.

"Where Proserpin gathering flowers Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis
Was gathered." Milton: P. L., iv. 269.

7. To heap up; to accumulate by saving and bringing together piece and piece.

"He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor."—Proverbs xxviii. 8.

8. To acquire, win, or gain, with or without effort.

"I of him will gather patience."
Shakesp.: Much Ado About Nothing, v. 1.

9. To bring or draw together into one interest or body. (Followed by to or unto.)

"I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him."—Isaiah lvi. 8.

10. To deduce by inference; to infer; to collect logically; to know by inference.

"Gather the sequel by that went before."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, i. 1.

* 11. To wrinkle, to pucker; to contract: as, To gather the brows.

12. To plough a ridge in such a way as to throw the soil towards the middle of the ridge.

"This is done by drawing the first furrow down the centre of the ridge and then ploughing towards the sides. Generally speaking, the whole arable land of the country is formed into ridges either flat or gathered. In clay soil, or land any way subject to wet, the ridges are double gathered, and of fifteen feet broad."—Agr. Surv. Ber., p. 192.

II. Technically:

1. Bookbind.: To collect and place in consecutive order the printed sheets of a book. The pile of sheets is folded, gathered, collated, stitched, and bound.

2. Needlework: To draw together by a thread passing through; to pucker; to draw into folds or plaits.

"I'm confident it will look better when gathered."—Cibber: Careless Husband.

B. Intransitive:

I. Literally:

1. To be collected together; to collect; to come together; to unite.

2. To become larger by accretion; to grow in size or extent.

"Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came into them."—Bacon: Henry VII.

3. To assemble; to congregate together.

"The inhabitants of Catteynes gathered and came gateward thither, to attend the issue of all matters."—Gordon: Hist. Earls of Sutherland, p. 354.

4. To generate pus or matter; to come to a head, as a sore.

"The ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it."—More: Decay of Piety.

5. To infer; to collect logically; to deduce.

"The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, iv. 3.

6. To approach; to come near.

"I like to see the gathering and growling of a coming storm."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. viii.

II. Fig.: To ripen.

"Now does my project gather to a head."
Shakesp.: Tempest, v. 1.

¶ (1) To gather aft a sheet:

Naut.: To haul in the slack of it.

(2) To gather breath:

(a) Lit.: To take breath; to respire freely.

(b) Fig.: To have respite from any calamity.

(3) To gather one's self together:

(a) To collect all one's strength for some exertion.

(b) To recover from a surprise.

(4) To be gathered to one's fathers:

Script.: To die.

(5) To gather ground: To gain ground.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between to gather and to collect: "To gather signifies simply to bring to one spot; to collect annexes also the idea of binding or forming into a whole; we gather that which is scattered in different parts: thus stones are gathered into a heap; vessels are collected so as to form a fleet. Gathering is a mere act of necessity or convenience; collecting is an act of design or choice." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

găth'-ĕr, s. [Gather, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A plait or fold of cloth drawn together and held in position by a thread passing through; a pucker.

"Lay this silver plain all along the gathers."—Cibber: Careless Husband, v. 6.

* 2. The pluck of an animal. (Cotgrave.)

II. Vehic.: The inclination forward of an axle journal, or spindle, usually one-tenth of its diameter. The amount of gather depends upon the amount of taper. A perfectly cylindrical spindle requires none. The inclination downward is also dependent upon the taper, and is called the swing. The latter renders the dishing of the wheel necessary, in order that each spoke as it comes to the bottom position may be vertical. If a taper spindle be made without any gather, the tendency of the wheel is to slip outward against the linchpin or nut. If the gather is in excess, the boxing of the hub rubs hard against the butting-ring of the axle.

găth'-ĕr-ą-ble, a. [Eng. gather; -able.]

1. That may or can be gathered together.

2. That may or can be collected, deduced, or inferred.

"The priesthood of the firstborn is gatherable hence."—Godwin: Moses & Aaron, i. 6.

găth'-ĕr-ĕr, s. [Eng. gather; -er.]

1. Ord. Lang.: One who gathers, collects, or assembles things; a collector; one who gathers or gets in a crop.

"Faithfully collected by a discreet gatherer out of all the Bulls."—Clarendon: Religion & Policy, ch. ix.

2. Sewing-mach.: A device which brings the cloth together in folds or plaits, so as to be sewn in crimps. It may consist of a tongue whose end pushes against and puckers up the material in advance of the action of the needle.

găth'-ĕr-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Gather, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of collecting or assembling together.

2. An assemblage, a collection, a crowd, a concourse.

"Wherefore call on us, oh King?
What may mean this gathering ?"
Byron: Athama.

3. A collection of charitable contributions.

"Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come."—1 Corinthians, xvi. 2.

4. A tumour suppurated or ripened; a collection of pus; an abscess.

II. Technically:

1. Bookbind.: The selection and arranging of a set of sheets according to signatures, to form a book.

2. Carp.: An assemblage of beams supporting a scuttle.

¶ Gathering of the wings: The lower part of the funnel of a chimney.

gathering-board, s.

Bookbind.: A horseshoe-shaped table, on which sheets are laid to be gathered or collated, so as to form a book. A more convenient way is to arrange the sheets on a long straight table, the first half on one side and the latter half on the other, so that the gatherers may follow each other consecutively, knocking up and depositing the complete book on an adjoining table.

gathering-coal, s. A large piece of coal, used for keeping in the kitchen fire through the night, and put on the embers after they have been gathered together.

"Another demand for large blocks of coals, is, for the servants to make what is termed gathering-coals in the kitchen."—Bald: Coal-Trade of Scotland, p. 60.

gathering-hoop, s. A hoop used by coopers to draw in the ends of the staves so as to allow the hoop to be slipped thereon.

gathering-peat, s.

1. A fiery peat which was sent round by the Borderers, to alarm the country in time of danger, as the fiery cross was by the Highlanders.

2. A gathering-coal (q.v.).

gathering-word, s. A war-cry, a rallying word.

"Their gathering-word was Bellenden."
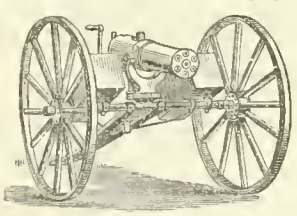
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 10.

Găt'-lĭng. [The name of the inventor.]

Gatling-gun, s. A machine-gun which has a cluster of barrels and a charging breech



GATLING-GUN.

at which the cartridges are automatically loaded into the barrels and fired in succession. [Mitrailleuse.]

găt'-tęn, gat-en, găt'-ţon, găt'-tĕr, găt'-tĕr-ĭdġe, s. [Prov. Eng.] (For def. see compound.)

gatton-bush, gatter-bush, gatteridge-tree, s.

Bot.: (1) The dogwood (Cornus sanguinea). (2) Euonymus europæus. (3) Viburnum Opulus.

găt'-ĭe, s. [Some Indian languages.] A gum obtained from Acacia arabica, the Babool, or Gum Arabic tree. (Treas. of Bot.)

 găt-toothed, * gat-tothud, a. [Etym. of first element doubtful; Eng. toothed.] A word of doubtful meaning: probably = goat-toothed; hence, lustful, wanton.

"Sche cowde moche of wandryng by the weye.
Gattothud was sche, sothly for to seye."
Chaucer: C. T., 470.

gâub (1), s. [Gob.]

gaub-line, s. [Gob-line.]

gâub (2), s. [Some Indian languages.]

Bot.: The astringent medicinal fruit of Diospyros Embryopteris. (Treas. of Bot.)

gâu-çhar'-o, s. [A South-American word.]

Ornith.: For def. see etym. and compound.

gauchare-bird, s.

Ornith.: The Oil-bird of South America, Steatornis caripensis. It is of the goatsucker family. [Steatornis.]

 gauche (au as ō), s. [Fr.] Left-handed; hence, awkward, clumsy.

 gauçh'-ĕr-ie (au as ō), s. [Fr.] An awkward action; awkwardness, clumsiness, bungling.

"Looking over any little gaucheries to which his bashfulness might give birth."—Cuthbert Bede: Verdant Green, pt. ii., ch. ii.

ga-ú'-çhō, s. [A South American word.] A native of the Pampas of La Plata, and of Spanish descent. The Gauchos live by cattle-breeding, and are noted for their skill in horsemanship and the use of the lasso and the bolas.

"The Gaucho is invariably most polite and hospitable. I did not meet with even one instance of rudeness or inhospitality."—Darwin: Voyage Round the World, ch. viii., p. 156.

gâu'-çÿ, * gâu'-çĭe, * gâw'-sÿ, a. [Etym. doubtful.] Big and lusty; plump, stately, portly.

gâud (1), s. [Gad, Goad.] A goad; the driving of horses in the plough.

"Fu' tilythe he whistled at the gaud."
Burns: Young Jockey.

 gâud (2),  gawd, s. [Lat. gaudium = joy, delight.]

1. An ornament, a trinket, finery, show, ornamentation.

"No, Lady! in old eyes like mine, Gauds have no glitter, gems no shine."
Scott: Lord of the Isles, iv. 22.

2. A trick, a jest.

"Thynke wel that it is no gaude."
Chaucer: Troilus, ii. 351.

 gâud, * gâude, v.i. & t. [Lat. gaudeo = to rejoice.]

A. Intransitive:

I. To rejoice, to be merry.

"Gauding with his familiars."—North: Plutarch.

2. To make a show; to show off.

B. Trans.: To adorn with gauds; to decorate, to ornament, to set off.

"Gauded with gold and precious stones."—North: Plutarch, p. 137.

gaud-e, a. [Gaudy.]

gaude-day, s. A festive day; a holiday. [Gaudy, s.]

"And then, Lovel, you must know I pressed you to stay here to-day, the rather because our cheer will be better than usual, yesterday having been a gaudé-day."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xiv.

 gâu-dĕ-a'-mŭs, s. [Lat. = let us rejoice: 1 pers. pl. pres. subj. of gaudeo = to rejoice.] A feast or merry-making.

 gâud'-ĕr-ÿ, s. [Eng. gaud; -ery.] Finery, show, ornaments; ostentatious display of dress, &c.

"Gaudery is a pitiful and a mean thing, not extending further than the surface of the body."—South: Sermons, vol. v., ser. 11.

 gâudeş, * gaudyes, s. pl. [Gaud (2), s.] The larger beads in a rosary, marking the Mysteries, or subjects for meditation. [Rosary.]

"Item, ane pair of bedis of curale with vi gaudeis of perle estimat to x crownis of wecht."—Inventory (a. 1516), p. 26.

 gâud'-fûl, a. [Eng. gaud; -ful(l).] Joyful, showy.

gâu-dĭ-çhâu'-dĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gaudichaudi(a) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -æ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Malpighiaceæ, type Gaudichaudia (q.v.).

gâu-dĭ-çhâu'-dĭ-ą, s. [Named after Charles Gaudichaud, the naturalist who accompanied Freycinet, in his voyage round the world.]

Bot.: The type of the tribe, Gaudichaudeæ (q.v.).

gâud'-ĭ-lў, adv. [Eng. gaudy: -ly.] In a gaudy manner; showily; with show or ostentation.

"Nor, in one hand, fit emblem of thy trade,
A rod; in t'other gaudily array'd
A hornbook."
Churchill: Gotham, iii.

gâud'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gaudy; -ness.] The quality or state of being gaudy; showiness; ostentatious finery or ornamentation.

"The modern invention of multiplying the works of the artists by devices which require no ingenuity, has prostituted the ornaments of a temple to the gaudiness of a suburban villa."—Knox: Essays, No. 67.

 gâud'-ĭsh, * gaud-ishe, a. [Eng. gaud; -ish.] Gaudy, showy.

"Now in their gaudishe ceremonies they were taken for God's deuine seruice."—Bale: Votaries, pt. i.

gâud'-lĕss, a. [Eng. gaud; -less.] Destitute of ornaments.

gâud-ў, a. & s. [Eng. gaud; -y.]

A. As adjective:

* 1. Gay, merry, festive.

"Let's have one other gaudy night; call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls once more."
Shakesp.: Antony & Cleopatra, iii. 13.

2. Ostentatiously fine; showy; tastelessly gay or fine.

"Nowhere else had he been dazzled by the splendour of rows of booths, where knives, horn spoons, tin kettles, and gaudy ribands were exposed to sale."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

* B. As substantive:

1. A feast or festival; a university term.

"He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow."—Cheyne.

2. Gaiety, gaudiness.

"All the glittering gaudy of silk and silver."—Gentleman Instructed, p. 553.

gaudy-day, s. A festival, a holiday, a gaudy. (Tennyson.)

gâud'-lĕd, a. [Eng. gaudy; -ed.] Made gaudy, fine, or showy.

"Not half so gaudied for their May-day mirth." Southey.

gauf'-fẽr (au as ō), v.t. [Fr. gaufrer = to figure cloth, velvet, &c.] To plait, to crimp, to goffer.

"The ancient Egyptians gauffered their linen by pressing it between fluted boards."—Knight: Dictionary of Mechanics.

gauf'-fẽr-ĭng (au as ō), pr. par., a., & s. [GAUFFER.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of crimping or plaiting; goffering.

gauffering-iron, s. A crimping iron for gauffering frills, &c.

gauffering-press, s. A press in which pieces of fabric cut to the shapes of leaves, petals, &c., are pressed between dies to confer the ridges, indentations, creases, and other irregular features of the natural object.

gauffering-tool, s. A tool for giving the roundness, fluting, crimping, or other peculiar form to leaves, petals, calices, &c., for the construction of artificial flowers or sprays. The material is cambric, jaconet, and fine muslin, crape, gauze, taffeta, satin, and velvet, according to the natural appearance of the flower represented. Various other materials are necessary: silk thread, wire, wax, beads, floss-silk, chenille, gum-water, starch, gold-leaf, kid, colours, nap of cloth, &c.

gāuġe, gāġe, v.t. [O. Fr. gauger, jauger = to gauge, measure, from Low Lat. gaugia = the standard measure of a cask, a word related to Eng. gallon (q.v.).]

I. Literally:

1. To measure or ascertain the contents or capacity of, as of a pipe, cask, barrel, &c.

2. To measure in any way.

"Gauged ye depnesse of the dyche with a speare."—Berners: Froissart; Cronycle, vol. i., ch. cclxix.

II. Fig.: To measure in respect to capability, power, or quality; to appraise; to value; to estimate; to form an opinion of the value.

"Nay but I bar to-night; you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, ii. 2.

gāuġe, gage, s. [GAUGE, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) A measure; a standard of measurement.

"This plate must be a gage to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by."—Moxon: Mechan. Exerc.

(2) The measurement or capacity of a cask, &c., as gauged.

"The gager shall always leave with the brewer a note of his gage, so that he may not be further impo ed on."—Marvel: Works, vol. i., p. 315

2. Fig.: A standard by which to measure the value, capability or extent of anything.

"Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles or parentage."
Young: Love of Fame, sat. 3.

II. Technically:

1. Mach.: An instrument for determining distances, sizes, proportions, as the carpenters' gauges of various kinds; sheet-metal and wire gauges, which are standards of measurement of thickness; test-gauges or templets, by which work in detail is made to an exact set of standards, so that the pieces may be assembled.

2. Join.: A simple instrument made to strike a line parallel to the straight side of a board.

3. Nautical:

(1) The depth to which a vessel sinks in the water.

(2) The position of a ship with reference to another vessel and the wind; when to the windward she is said to have the weather-gauge, when to the leeward the lee-gauge.

4. Physics: An instrument for determining the condition of a fluctuating object: as a tide, stream, rain, water, wind, current gauge, &c. [METER.]

5. Plastering:

(1) The quantity of plaster of Paris added to plastering mortar to facilitate setting.

(2) Fine mortar with an addition of plaster of Paris for a finishing coat.

6. Print.: A strip of reglet with a notch cut in it to indicate the length of a page.

7. Rail. Eng.: The width between the rails on a line of railway. In Great Britain the narrow gauge is 4 feet 8½ inches, the broad gauge 7 feet between the rails. The narrow gauge is the prevalent one. In Ireland the gauge is 5 feet 3 inches.

8. Slating: The length of a shingle, slate, or tile which is exposed to the weather. Also called the margin. The hidden portion is called the cover. Shingles are much used in the United States, except in the cities, where they are now replaced by other materials. They are 18 inches long, and expose 6 inches. That is the gauge. There are thus three thicknesses on a roof. Plain-tiles are 10½ inches long, and have a gauge of 6½ inches. Pan-tiles are 14½ inches long; gauge, 10 inches. Slates vary in length and size. The gauge is usually nearly half the length, so that the slates have a little over two thicknesses on the roof.

9. Type-found.: A piece of hard wood, variously notched, used to adjust the dimensions, slopes, &c., of the various sorts of letters.

gauge-cock, s.

Steam-engine: One of two or more stop-cocks which are screwed into the boiler, one above the level at which water ought to stand in the boiler, and the other below it. The ejection of steam and water respectively from the cocks indicates the water-level in the boiler to be between the two gauge-cocks. Steam from both shows the water to be too low; water from both shows the water to be too high.

gauge-glass, s.

Steam-engine: A strong, vertical, glass tube, connected at its ends by two cocks to the boiler, and forming an indicator of the depth of water in the boiler. It is illuminated at night by a lamp.

gauge-ladder, s. A square timber frame for raising the ends of wheeling planks in excavating. A horsing-block.

gauge-lathe, s. A lathe designed to turn out chair-rounds, banister-columns, and all similar objects in which the cylindrical form is modified by contraction or enlargement of diameter, the formation of beads, &c., so as to present curves or broken lines in its contour.

gauge paper-cutter, s. A machine having a guillotine-knife descending with a draw-cut upon a pile of paper on a table. An adjustable fence regulates the gauge, or size.

gauge-pile, s.

Pile-driving: A preliminary pile to mark the desired course.

gauge-point, s.

Gauging: The diameter of a cylinder that is one inch in height, and has a content equal to a unit of a given measure.

gauge-rod, s. [GAUGING-ROD.]

gauge-saw, s. A saw having an adjustable frame or clamp, which determines the depth of kerf. Used by comb-makers and others.

gauge-stuff, s. A stiff and compact plaster used in making cornices, mouldings, &c. It consists of two-thirds fine mortar and one-third plaster of Paris, with a little water.

gauge-wheel, s. A wheel attached to the forward end of a plough-beam, to gauge the depth of furrow.

gāuġe'-a-ble, a. [Eng. gauge; -able.] That may or can be gauged.

gāuġed, pa. par. or a. [GAUGE, v.] gauged-arches, s. pl. Arches built with gauged brick (q.v.).

gauged-brick, s. Bricks for arch-building, moulded or rubbed to a wedge shape to suit the radius of the soffit.

gauged-piles, s. pl. [GAUGE-PILE.]

gauged-stuff, s.

Plast.: [GAUGE, s., II., 5 (2)].

gāuġ'-ẽr, * gāġ'-ẽr, s. [Eng. gaug(e); -er.] One who gauges; specifically, one who gauges casks, &c.; an excise-officer.

"To provide against the exactions of gaugers."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. x.

gāuġ'-ĭng, * gāġ'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GAUGE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or science of ascertaining the measure, capacity, or contents of casks or vessels.

gauging-caliper, s. A tool in which are combined dividers, inside and outside calipers, and a graduated double scratch-guage. It is graduated to 16ths, 32nds, and 64ths of an inch.

gauging-rod, s. An exciseman's or inspector's measuring staff, for determining the interior dimensions of casks and other vessels holding liquids.

 gâul, * gaule, * gawle, * goul, * gowle, * youl, * yowle, v.i. [Icel. gaula.] To cry, to howl, to yowl.

"Summe gouleden, and summe dude brenne."
Old Eng. Miscell., p. 224.

Gâul (1), s. [Lat. Gallus = a Gaul; Gallia = Gaul, France.]

1. A name of ancient France.

2. A native or inhabitant of Gaul.

 gâul (2), s. [GALE.]

† gâul'-ĭn, s. [A Jamaica negro word.]

Ornith.: Various Egrets. [EGRET.]

 gâul'-ĭng, * gawl-yng, * goul-yng, * yowl-yng, s. [GAUL, v.] A crying, a howling, a yowling.

"With gawlyng and grete, the grettist among."
Destruction of Troy, 8,675.

Gâul'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. Gaul; -ish.] Pertaining to Gaul or the Gauls; Gallic.

gâult, s. [Originally the name given to the rock in the south-east of England, but now adopted and rendered universally current by geologists.]

Geol.: The lowest member of the Upper Cretaceous group of rocks. It occurs in the south-east of England, where it is usually about 100 feet thick. On the Continent it exists in the Alps and elsewhere. Here it is a dark-blue marl, sometimes intermixed with greensand. The most characteristic cephalopods are those called Hamites and Scaphites. In 1870, Lyell estimated the known British Ammonites in the Gault at twenty-one, of which eight were peculiar to it, ten more being found also in the overlying Chloritic series.

gâult, v.t. [GAULT, s.]

Agric.: To dress land with gault.

"The process of gaulting or claying the soil."—Stephens: Book of the Farm, 2,124.

gâul-thër'-ĭ-ą, s. [Named after Gaulther, a Canadian physician and botanist.]

Bot.: A genus of Heathworts, family Andromedidæ. The berries of Gaultheria procumbens, G. Shallon, G. hispida, and G. antipoda are eaten. A tincture of Gaultheria oil, or oil of wintergreen, can be used as tea, and the fruit steeped in brandy produces bitters. (Lindley.) gaultheria oil, s.

Chem.: Oil of wintergreen, a volatile oil obtained by distilling with water the leaves of Gaultheria procumbens, an ericaceous plant growing in New Jersey and Canada. It is used for scenting soap. It consists of the methyl ether of salicylic acid, $C_6H_4(OH)\cdot CO\cdot OCH_3$, and a small quantity of terpene called Gaultherilene. It does not give a red colour with nitric acid if pure.

gâul-thĕr'-ĭ-lene, s. [Eng., &c. gaultheri(a), l connective, and -ene (Chem.).]

Chem.: A hydrocarbon of the terpene series, $C_{10}H_{16}$, occurring in the oil of wintergreen, obtained by distilling the oil with a strong aqueous solution of caustic potash: methylic alcohol, water, and gaultherilene distil over, and salicylate of potassium remains in the retort; the distillate is washed with water and then dried. Gaultherilene is a colourless oil, smelling like pepper, and boiling at 160°.

gâum, v.t. [Cf. Mid. Eng. and Fr. gomme = gum.]

1. Ord. Lang.: To smear. (Halliwell.)

2. Tech.: To cover with a preservative solution.

"Edward the Confessor's Chapel, as it appeared before Westminster Abbey was gaumed with ——'s brown varnish."—Athenæum, Dec. 9, 1882, p. 780.

gâun, gawn, s. [A corruption of gallon (q.v.).] A small tub or lading vessel.

gâun, pr. par. of v. [Go, v.]

gâunch (1), v.t. [Ganch.]

gâunch (2), v.i. [Gansch.] To snarl; to snatch at anything with open jaws.

gâunch, s. [Gaunch, v.] A bite; a snatch at anything with open jaws.

gâunt, * gawnte, * gant, a. [Etym. doubtful. Skeat suggests a connection with Norw. gand (= gant) = a thin, pointed stick, a tall and thin man.] Attenuated, thin; lean as with fasting or sickness.

"But his gaunt frame was worn with toil."
Scott: Marmion, i. 28.

gaunt-at-the-door, s. A booby; an indolent bumpkin.

"He gave but little application to his lessons, so that folk thought he would turn out a sort of gaunt-at-the-door, more mindful of meat than work."—Galt: Ann. of the Par., p. 333.

gâunt (1), v.i. [A.S. ganian.] To yawn.

"He observed the captain was gaunting grievously."
—Scott: Heart of Midlothian, ch. xlv.

* gâunt (2), v.t. [Gaunt, a.] To make lean.

"Ravening woolfdams vpoackt and gaunted in hunger." Stanyhurst: Virgil; Æneid ii. 366.

gâunt'-lĕt, * gant-let, s. [Fr. gantelet = a gauntlet; gant = a glove, from O. Sw. wante = a glove; Dan. vante; Dut. want = a mitten.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. In the same sense as II. 1.

2. A long glove worn by ladies, covering the hand and wrist.

3. A mitten.

II. Technically:

1. Old Arm.: A glove of leather, covered with plate-metal to correspond with the other parts of the armour, and originally made without separate fingers, they being covered by large overlapping plates.

"When a knight's glove was a steel gauntlet, such a distinction would be reasonable enough."—Tylor: Early Hist. Mankind, ch. iii.

2. Surg.: A sort of bandage used to cover the hand and wrist, like a gauntlet.

¶ (1) To take up the gauntlet: To accept a challenge. (Lit. & fig.)

(2) To throw down the gauntlet: To challenge, to defy. (Lit. & fig.)

"The company threw down the gauntlet to all the maritime powers in the world."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiv.

gâunt'-lў, adv. [Eng. gaunt; -ly.] In a gaunt manner or state; leanly.

gâunt'-nĕss, s. [Eng. gaunt; -ness.] The quality or state of being gaunt or lean; leanness, thinness.

gâun'-treēş, gân'-treēş, s. [Prov. Eng. gaun = a tub, a cask, and Eng. tree = wood.] A stand or frame on which casks stand in a cellar. [Trfe.]

"So young nor so handsome as to tempt a man to follow her to the gauntrees."—Scott: Old Mortality, ch. viii.

gâur, ga-ûr', s. [The name of the animal in some Hindoo languages; cf. Mahratta gaya; Hind. gae, gao = a cow, and wr, the root from which Lat. urus, also aur in aurochs, comes.] [Aurochs.]

Zool.: A very large, fierce, and untameable ox, Bos gaurus, found in the Ramghur jungles in India. The adult male is six feet high at the shoulder, twelve feet long to the end of the tail, and above seven feet six inches in girth; the eyes are said to be blue; the forehead more arched than in the common ox, covered with whitish wool; hair on the other parts, smooth, shining brown; tail short, tufted.

"The Major has shot . . . many a gaur, rhinoceros, and elephant."—C. Kingsley: Two Years Ago, ch. xviii.

gâur'-a, s. [Gr. γαῦρος (gauros) = exulting in, majestic, from the splendid appearance of some species.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gaureæ (q.v.). The species are beautiful. Some have pink, some scarlet, some purple, and some yellow flowers.

* gaure, * gaur-en, v.i. [Gaze, v.] To gaze, to stare.

"Rounen for to gauren on this mon."
Chaucer: C. T., 8,824.

gâur'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gaur(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Onagrads, type Gaura.

gâuzo, * gawse, s. & a. [Fr. gaze, from Gaza in Palestine, where it was first manufactured; Low Lat. gazzatum.]

A. As substantive:

1. Lit. & Fabric: A light, transparent silk or cotton stuff. In gauze-weaving, between every two casts of the shuttle, the warp-threads are turned or twisted after receiving the woof from right to left, and the reverse, alternately, between each throw of the shuttle, so that the weft-threads are separated from each other, and a light, transparent texture produced. Gauzes have been occasionally made of thread, but the name has always signified a silk fabric.

2. Surgery: A gauzy fabric impregnated with antiseptics is known as antiseptic gauze.

"Brocados, and damasks, and tabbies, and gawses, Are by Robert Ballentine lately brought over."
Swift: An Excellent New Song.

3. Fig.: Any slight, open material resembling this fabric: as, wire-gauze.

B. As adj.: Made of or resembling gauze; gauzy.

"In another case, we see a white, smooth, soft worm, turned into a black, hard, crustaceous beetle with gauze wings."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. xix.

gauze-dresser, s. One whose occupation is to dress or stiffen gauze.

gauze-loom, s. A loom for weaving gauze.

gauze wire-cloth, s. A textile fabric, either plain or twilled, made of brass, iron, or copper wire, of various degrees of fineness. It is used for sieves, safety-lamps, respirators, &c.

gâuz'-ў, a. [Eng. gauz(e); -y.] Made of or resembling gauze; thin, like gauze.

găv'-aŭl-ĭng, * gav-aul-ling, * gav-awl-ling, s. [Etym. doubtful.] Gadding about in an idle or dissipated way.

"But thir jocose gavaulings are worthy of the occasion."—Galt: The Entail, iii. 282.

gāve, pret. of v. [Give.]

găv'-ęl (1), s. [O. Fr. gavelle, gavile; Fr. javelle = a small heap of corn, from Low Lat. capella; Lat. capulus = a handful; capio = to take hold; Sp. gavilla; Port. & Ital. gavela; cf. Wel. gafael = a hold, a grasp.]

I. Originally, a small parcel of grain in the straw. Now, enough of the grain to be bound into a sheaf; the grain is raked from the harvester platform in gavels. Binding makes it a sheaf. A stook, or collection of sheaves placed on end, leaning together and mutually supporting, is a shock.

2. The ground. (Provincial.)

"Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

găv'-ęl (2), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

1. A mason's setting maul.

2. A presiding officer's mallet.

* gāv'-ęl (3), s. [Gable.]

* gāv'-ęl (1), * gav-ele, * gov-el, s. [A.S. gafol = tribute; Low Lat. gabulum, Sp. gabela; Port. & Ital. gabella.]

1. Tribute, toll, custom.

"Hæbte heom senden here gauel of thissen londe."
Layamon, i. 413.

2. Interest, usury, extortion.

"Ine thise heste is uorbode roberie, thiefthe, stale, and gauel."—Ayenbite, p. 9.

gā'-vęl, *ga-vell, *ga-vel-yn, v.t. [Gavel (1), s.] To collect into gavels or small heaps to be bound into sheaves.

"Gavelyn corne or otherlyke. Manipulo."—Prompt. Parv.

* gā'-vęl-çĕs-tĕr, s. [Eng. gavel, and Lat. sextarius, in the term sextarius vectigalis.] A certain measure of rent-ale. [Oak-gavel, Tolchester.] (Wharton.) gā'-vęl-ĕr, s. [Eng. gavel (4), s.; -er.] One who exacts or collects tribute, custom, or duties; a usurer; an extortioner.

"The poure . . . that is yualle in the hand of gauelers."—Ayenbite, p. 135.

* gā'-vęl-ĕt, s. [Eng. gavel (4), s.; dim. suff. -et.]

Law: An ancient and special cessavit in Kent, where the custom of gavelkind continues, by which the tenant, if he withdraw his rent and service due to his lord, forfeits his lands and tenements.

* gā'-vęl-ĭng, * ga-vel-inge, s. [Eng. gafel (1), s.; -ing.] Usury, extortion.

"Dyadliche zenncs the uerste is gauelinge."—Ayenbite, p. 34.

* gā'-vęl-kĭnd, s. & a. [Ir. gabhailcine, from gabhail = a receiving, a tenure, and cine = race, tribe, family.]

A. As substantive:

Law: A custom, now only surviving in Kent, whereby the lands of a person dying without a will descended to all the sons in equal shares, and the issue, whether male or female, of a deceased son, inherited the father's part. In default of sons the land descended to the daughters, and in default of daughters to the brothers, sisters, or their issue.

"The custom of gavelkind in Kent, and some other parts of the kingdom (though perhaps it was also general till the Norman conquest) ordains, among other things, that not the eldest son only of the father shall succeed to his inheritance, but all the sons alike; and that, though the ancestor be attainted and hanged, yet the heir shall succeed to his estate, without any escheat to the lord."—Blackstone; Comment., introd. § 3.

B. As adj.: Held under the custom described in A.

"Thus the rule of gavelkind tenure, by which all the sons take in equal shares, remains unaltered."—Blackstone: Comment., bk. ii., ch. 11.

gā'-vęlled, a. [Eng. gavel (or gavelkind); -ed.]

Law: A term applied to lands held under the tenure of gavelkind.

* gā'-vęl-măn, s. [Eng. gavel (4), s., and man.] A tenant liable to tribute.

* gā'-vęl-mĕd, s. [A. S. gafolmæd, from gafol = tribute, and mæd = a meadow.]

Law: The duty or work of mowing meadow grass, or cutting meadow-land, required by the superior from his customary tenants.

gav-el-ock, * ga-vel-ok, s. [A.S. gafoluc = a spear, a weapon; Icel. gaflok, gaflak; O. Fr. gavelot; Fr. javelot; Ital. giavelotto, M. H. Ger. gabilot.]

1. A spear, a javelin.

"Gavelokes also thicke flowe
So gnattes ichil avowe."
Arthour & Merlin, p. 338.

2. An iron crowbar.

"The air sall haue ane pick, a mattock, ane gavelok, ane shool, ane ax, ane pair of turkissis, ane handsaw."—Balfour: Practicks, p. 235.

gā'-vĭ-al, gā-vĭ-ā-lis, s. [Hind. ghartyal, the r of which, in the handwriting of the person who first wrote home from India regarding the animal, being mistaken for v, the word was Englished gavial, with the Mod. Lat. form govialis.]

I. Of the form gavial:

Zool.: The Gangetic Crocodile (Gavialis gangetica), called also the Common Gavial. It has a large cartilaginous protuberance containing the nostrils at the end of the snout. Ælian knew this. The gavial is about twenty-five feet long; it feeds chiefly on fish, and does not as a rule attack man. It is not confined to the Ganges, but is found in some other large Indian rivers.

II. Of the form gavialis:

1. Zool.: A genus of Crocodiles (Crocodilia), sub-order Procœlia of Owen, Eusuchia of Huxley. The jaws are very long and sub-cylindrical, dilated and convex to the end; the teeth very numerous and all nearly equal in size. The hind feet are indented at the external edge, and palmated to the end of the toes. [CROCODILIA.]

2. Palæont.: The genus first appears in the Upper Cretaceous rocks. (Huxley, in Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxxi. (1875), 431-2.) It occurs in British Eocene rocks, with true crocodiles and alligators, though these are now restricted to particular regions, and never occur together. Gavialis is found also in the Eocene of North America, though it is now confined to Asia. (Nicholson.) ga-vŏtte, ga-vŏt', s. [O. Fr. gavote; Fr. gavotte; Ital. gavotta: originally a dance of the Gavots or people of Gap, in the department of the Upper Alps, and the old province of Dauphiné.] A dance tune of a lively yet dignified character, of French origin, in common time. The description of the dance, "a brisk round for as many as will," identifies it with the country dance, and the form of the tune supports this resemblance. The gavot seems to have been more popular as an instrumental piece than as a dance, and to have been a favourite movement in suites, lessons, and sonatas from the latter part of the seventeenth century, the time when the word appears to have been brought into use.

"The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument."—Arbuthnot.

gâw, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

1. A furrow or small trench made for drawing off water.

"Gaw is that slit or opening made by a plough or spade in the side of a pond, loch, or stagnated water, by which it is drained off."—P. Kilmaurs. Agric. Statist. Acc., ix. 354. (Note.)

2. A hollow with water springing in it.

gaw-fur, gaw furrow, s. A furrow for drawing off water.

"As soon as a field is sown and harrowed, the gaw-furs, as they are provincially called, are neatly and perfectly cleared with the spade and shovel."—Agric. Surv. E. Loth., p. 172.

gâw'-bŷ, s. [GABY.]

gâwd, s. [GAUD.]

* gâw'-en, v.i. [A variant of gape (q.v.).] To gape, to stare.

"Ne make thou name men gawen on me."
Seyn Julian, 125.

gâwk, *goke, *gowke, s. [A.S. geác = a cuckoo; cogn. with Icel. gaukr; Dan. giög; Sw. gök = a cuckoo; O. H. Ger. gouh; M. H. Ger. gouch; Ger. gauch = a cuckoo, a simpleton; Lat. cucus = a cuckoo.]

1. A cuckoo.

"Thare galede the gowke one grevez fulle lawde." Morte Arthure, 927.

2. A simpleton; a foolish, silly fellow.

"A certain gawk, named Chevalier de Gassand."—Carlyle: Miscellanies, iv. 98.

gâwk, v.i. [GAWK, s.] To play the fool.

gâw'-kŷ, *gâw'-kĭe, a. & s. [Eng. gawk; -y.]

A. As adj.: Foolish, silly, stupid.

"As for the town of Brighton, it's what I would call a gawkie piece of London."—Ayrshire Legatees, p. 283.

B. As subst.: A foolish, silly, or stupid person; a simpleton.

"Or gentle born ye be; but youth,
In love you're but a gawky."
Ramsay: Poems, ii. 299.

gâw'-lĭn, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A species of sea-fowl.

"The Gawlin is a fowl less than a duck; it is reckoned a true prognosticator of fair weather; for when it sings, fair and good weather always follows, as the natives commonly observe."—Martin: Western Islands, p. 71.

gâwn, s. [GAUN, s.]

* gawne, v.i. [YAWN.]

gâwn'-trēe, s. [GAUNTREE.]

gâw'-sĭĕ, a. [GAUCIE.]

gāy, *gai, *gaie, *gaye, a., adv., & s. [Fr. gai, from M. H. Ger. gæhe, (O. H. Ger. gâhi, kâhi; Ger. jähe) = quick, sudden, rash, lively; Port. gaio; Ital. gajo.]

A. As adjective:

1. Excited with, or full of merriment; merry, jovial, lively, sportive.

"Preferring me to parents, and the choir Of gay companions, to the natal roof."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. ii.

2. Pleased, happy, cheerful, blithe.

"A gay or pensive tenderness prevailed."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. iv.

3. Showy, gaudy, fine; bright in colour; brilliant.

"Can imagination boast, Amid its gay creation, hues like hers?"
Thomson: Spring, 470.

4. Given to pleasure or lust; dissipated; of loose morals: as, a gay woman.

5. Excited with drink; intoxicated.

B. As adv.: Pretty, moderately, passably, fairly: as, gay gude = pretty good. (Scotch.)

* C. As substantive:

1. An ornament, a picture.

"Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gays and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives' tales."—L'Estrange: Fables.

2. A show, gaiety.

"Given in deede to follow every gaye."
Breton: Toys of an Idle Head, p. 28.

¶ For the difference between gay and cheerful, see CHEERFUL: for that between gay and showy, see SHOWY.

* gay-cards, s. pl. Court cards.

† gay-science, s. Literature, poetry, especially the erotic compositions of the Troubadours.

gaŷ'-al, gȳ'-al, s. [Hind. gayal, gavaï; Bengali gobaygoru; Sansc. gavaya.] [GAUR.]

Zool.: An ox, Bibos (or Bos) frontalis (or gayeus), with horns depressed at the base and directed outwards. It is wild on the mountain ranges forming the Eastern frontier of Aracan, Chittagong, Tippera, and Silhet, between Bengal and Further India. It is a dull, heavy animal, of gentle disposition, lowing like a buffalo rather than a common ox, but not wallowing in the mire like the former animal. It breeds with the common Indian bull.

gāy'-bīne, s. [Eng. gay, and bine.] A popular name for several showy, twining plants belonging to the genus Pharbitis.

gāy'-dī-ăng, s. [A native word.]

Naut.: A vessel of Annam, resembling a junk. It carries two or three masts with triangular sails, and is employed in carrying heavy cargoes from Cambodia to the Gulf of Tonkin.

* gāy'-ę-tў, s. [GAIETY.]

* gāy'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gay; -ish.] Rather gay, or inclined to merriment or joviality.

* gay-ler, s. [GAOLER.]

gāy-lŭs'-site, s. [Named after Nicolas François Gay Lussac, a celebrated chemist and physicist, who was born in 1778, and died in 1850.]

Min.: A monoclinic translucent mineral; its hardness 2 to 3; its sp. gr. 1·92 to 1·99. Compos.; carbonate of soda 34·5; carbonate of lime 33·8; water 30·3 = 100. Found in Maracaibo and in Nevada, in salt lakes. It can be produced artificially. (Dana.)

gāy'-nĕss, * gay-nesse, s. [Eng. gay; -ness.]

1. The quality or state of being gay; gaiety, fineness, finery.

"Our gayness and our gilt are all besmircht With rainy marching in the painful field."
Shakesp.: Henry V., iv. 3.

*2. Choice language. (Fairfax.)

* gāy'-sŏme, a. [Eng. gay; -some.] Full of gaiety; gay, merry, jovial. (Chapman.)

gāy'-yoû, s. [A native name.]

Naut.: A narrow flat-bottomed fishing-boat, used in Annam, carrying two or three masts, and usually covered in the middle with a flat roof.

Găz-a-rī, s. pl. [A corruption of Gr. καθαρόι (katharoi) (?) = pure. (Mosheim.)]

Ch. Hist.: A name given, especially in Italy, to the Paulicians and sects confounded with them.

gāze, * gase, v.i. & t. [Sw. dial. gasa = to gaze, stare, connected with ghast (q.v.).]

A. Intrans.: To fix the eye intently; to look earnestly or eagerly, as in curiosity, admiration, astonishment, or anxiety. (Followed by at, on, or upon, when the object is expressed.)

"Dismissed, again on open day I gazed
At houses, men, and common light: a gazed."
Wordsworth: Female Vagrant.

* B. Trans.: To view steadfastly; to fix the eyes on earnestly or attentively; to stare or gaze at.

"Straight toward heaven my wondering eyes I turned And gazed awhile the ample sky."
Milton: P. L., viii. 250.

¶ For the difference between to gaze and to gape, see GAPE.

gāze, s. [GAZE, v.]

1. The act of gazing or looking intently at anything; an earnest, eager look; a look of curiosity, attention, admiration, or anxiety.

"He meanwhile shunned the public gaze with a haughty shyness which inflamed curiosity."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiii.

* 2. That which is gazed at; that which causes one to gaze.

"Betrayed, captive, and both my eyes put out;
Made of mine enemies the scorn and gaze."
Milton: Samson Agonistes, 14.

¶ At gaze; At a-gaze:

* (1) Ord. Lang.: As one gazing or staring; gazing earnestly.

"And make the sun to stand at gaze, Till he forgot his way."
Drayton: The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 1.

(2) Her.: Applied to an animal, as a hart, buck, stag, or hind, represented full-faced, or with the face directly to the front. (GARDANT.]

* gāz-ēē', s. [Eng. gaz(e); suff. -ee.] One who or that which is gazed at.

"Such a group would relieve both parties—gazer and gazee."—De Quincey: Autobiog. Sketches, i. 157.

* gą-zē'-bō, * gą-zeē'-bō, s. [GAZE, v.] A summer house commanding an extensive view.

* gā'ze-fŭl, a. [Eng. gaze; -ful(l).] Gazing; looking earnestly, anxiously, or intently.

"Then look, who list thy gaze-full eyes to feed With sight of that is fair."
Spenser: Hymn of Heavenly Beauty.

* gā'ze-hŏûnd, * gā'se-hŏûnd, s. [Eng. gaze, and hound.] A hound which hunts by sight, not by scent, as a greyhound.

"See'st thou the gazehound I how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destined deer."
Tickel: On Hunting.

* gā'ze-lĕss, a. [Eng. gaze; -less.] Unseeing not looking, sightless.

"Desire lies dead upon the gazeless eyes."
Woolcot: P. Pindar, p. 98.

gą-zĕl'-lą, s. [GAZELLE.]

* 1. Zool.: A genus of Antelopes, of which the gazelle (q.v.) is the type. There are other species, as Gazella albifrons, the Blesbok; G. euchore, the Springbok; and G. pygarga, the Bontebok. These three are all from S. Africa.

2. Palæont.: The genus occurs in the Upper Miocene of Greece.

gą-zĕl'-le, s. [Arab. ghazâl, ghazâlah; Fr. gazelle; Sp. gazela; Port. gazella; Ital. gazzella.]

Zool.: A kind of antelope, Gazella dorcas, formerly called Antilope dorcas. Dorcas is Latin, from Greek δορκάς (dorkas), which is from δέδορκα (dedorka), the perfect tense of δέρκομαι (derkomai) = to look, to see, with reference to the large bright eyes of the animal. From this characteristic and its general gracefulness, it was sometimes used for a Greek female name, as in the case of Dorcas, who made garments for the poor (Acts ix. 36—end). The horns are rounded, thick, and black; the hair on the body light yellow on the back, while on the lower parts a broad band exists along each flank, a bunch of hairs on each knee, and a deep pouch at each groin. It lives in North Africa, is gentle in character, but when a herd is attacked, it forms a circle presenting an array of horns, so as to leave no safe means to allow the assailant to break the ring of defence. Nevertheless, the gazelle is largely preyed on by the lion. It furnishes a constant theme for Arabic poetry.

gą-zĕl'-lĭne, a. [Eng. gazell(e); suff. -ine.]

Zool.: Akin to the gazelle.

¶ Major Charles Hamilton Smith has a Gazelline group of antelopes.

gā'ze-mĕnt, s. [Eng. gaze; -ment.] Gaze, view, sight.

"Then forth he brought his snowy Florimele, Whom Trompart had in keeping there beside,
Covered from people's gazement with a veile."
Spenser: F. Q., V. iii. 17.

gāz'-ĕr, s. [Eng. gaz(e); -er.] One who gazes; one who looks earnestly, eagerly, or anxiously at any sight; a spectator.

"Tower Hill was covered up to the chimney tops with an innumerable multitude of gazers."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

gą-zĕt'te, *gazet, s. [Originally an Italian word, meaning a small coin current at Venice, newspapers being first published there, and, being sold for a gazette coin, came to be called Gazettes.]

* 1. The above-mentioned coin.

"If you have a stool it will cost you a gazet, which is almost a penny."—Coryat: Crudities, vol. ii., p. 15.

2. A newspaper; a printed sheet, printed periodically, and containing an exact account of events of public or private interest. Specif., an official journal published in London, Dublin, and Edinburgh, containing a list of those appointed to any public office or commission, legal notices, lists of bankrupts, &c. The London Gazette appeared first on August 22, 1642.

"The next gazette mentioned that the King had pardoned him [the Duke of Monmouth] upon his confessing the late plot."—Burnet: Own Time (an. 1684).

¶ Johnson says that in the eighteenth century the pronunciation of the word was frequently găz'-ĕtte, as appears from the following lines—

"The senate's thanks, the gazette's pompous tale."
Johnson: Vanity of Human Wishes. 177.

"Like the last gazette or the last address."
Pope: Ep. to Sat. ii. 227.

gą-zĕt'te, v.t. [Gazette, s.] To insert or publish in a gazette; to announce or publish officially: as, His promotion is gazetted.

găz-ĕt-teër', s. [Eng. gazette; -er.]

* 1. A writer for a gazette; a writer of news.

"And monumental brass this record bears,
'These are—ah no! these were—the Gazetteers.'"
Pope: Dunciad, ii. 314.

* 2. A gazette, a newspaper.

"Glasses and bottles, pipes and gazetteers.
Thomson: Autumn, 558.

3. A book containing descriptions and statistics of natural and political divisions—countries, cities, towns, rivers, mountains, &c.—in the whole or any portion of the world, alphabetically arranged; a geographical and topographical directory.

găz-ĕt-teër'-shĭp, s. [Eng. gazeteer; -ship.] The office or post of a publisher or writer of news.

gāz'-ĭng, *gas-yng, pr. par., a., & s. [Gaze, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of looking earnestly, eagerly, or anxiously at anything.

"Thei be very desyrous of newe thinges, and straunge sightes, and gasynges."—Hall: Henry VII. (an. 11.).

gāz'-ĭng-stŏck, *gaz-yng-stocke, s. [Eng. gazing, and -stock.] A person gazed at with scorn or abhorrence; an object of curiosity and contempt.

"We were not onely a gazyngstocke to the worlde, whiche defieth Christe, . . . but also to the Deuels themselfes."—Udal: Corinthians iv.

găz'-ō-gēne, s. [Fr. gazogène; from gaz = gas, and Gr. γεννάω (gennaō) = to produce.]

Mach.: An apparatus for manufacturing aërated or "soda" water. There are two glass globes, one placed above the other. There is a long funnel used to fill the lower globe with water, then a tube, running vertically through the two globes, is closed by the stopper, and bicarbonate of soda and tartaric acid are placed in the upper globe by means of a small funnel. The stopper is then withdrawn and the long tube inserted and screwed closely down. If, after remaining closed about two hours, the screw stopcock at the top be opened, the carbonated water will flow out. [Seltzogene.]

găz'-ō-līte, s. [Fr. gaz = gas; o connective, and Gr. λίθος (lithos) = stone.]

Min.: The same as Ærolite (q.v.).

găz'-ō-lȳtes, s. pl. [Fr. gaz = gas, and Gr. λυτός (lutos) = soluble; λύω (luō) = to dissolve.]

Chem.: The name given by Berzelius to those simple substances capable by their union with other simple substances of forming permanent gases. They were one of four classes of bodies into which simple substances were divided, the others being metals, metalloids, and halogens.

gaz-oń', s. [Fr., from O. H. Ger. waso; Ger. wasen = a turf.]

Fortif.: A piece of sod used as a revetment or lining for parapets and earthen banks.

găz-zā'-tŭm, s. [Low Lat.] [Gauze.]

Fabric: A fine species of silk, or linen stuff, like gauze.

G clef, s. The character placed at the beginning of a stave, to indicate the pitch of the notes. [Clef.]

G dur, s. [Ger.] The key of o major.

ge-, pref [A.S.] A common prefix in Anglo-Saxon. With nouns it often gives a collective sense to the word to which it is prefixed; as, fera = a traveller: gefera = a companion. To neuter verbs it often gives an active force; as, winnan = to fight: gewinnan = to win; ridan = to ride: geridan = to reach by riding. Frequently it appears to be a simple augment. It is common in past participles, appearing later as i or y, as yclept. It also appears now as a or e, as in alike = A.S. gelic, among = A.S. gemang, enough = A.S. genóg, genóh.

ġēal, *gell-yn, v.i. [Fr. geler; from Lat. gelo = to freeze.] To freeze, to congeal.

"Wer't no for houp, that darling bliss,
That cheers us wi' a fancied kiss,
Our very hearts wou'd geal."
Tarras: Poems, p. 19.

ġēal, s. [Geal, v.] Extreme coldness, frostiness.

gēan, s. [Fr. guigne; Sp. guinda; Low Lat. guindolum, and guina. According to Diez, cognate also with the following words, gu being replaced by v; Ital. visciola; O. H. Ger. wihsela; N. H. Ger. weichsel; Mod. Gr. βίσινον (bisinon). Littré.]

Bot.: The wild cherry, Prunus avium, by some botanists made a distinct species, but by Sir Joseph Hooker arranged as a sub-species of Prunus cerasus. It is a tree with flaccid drooping leaves, drooping peduncles, the calyx tube contracted at the top, the lobes sub-acute serrate, the petals sub-erect. Drupe black, the stone adhering to the flesh. It is believed to be wild in Britain. It occurs also on the continent of Europe, in North Africa, and in Western Asia to the Himalaya mountains. The fruit is excellent. The tree is the origin of the Morella cherry.

ġeant, s. [Giant.]

ġēar, *geir, *ger, *gere, s. [A.S. gearwe = preparation, dress, ornament; gearwian = to prepare, fit out; gearu = ready; cogn. with O. Sax. garuwi = gear; Icel. görvi, gjörvi; O. H. Ger. garawi; M. H. Ger. garwe = gear; O. Sax. garn; O. H. Ger. garo = ready; Eng. yare. Gear is a doublet of garb (q.v.).]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. That which is prepared for dress, outfit or ornament; dress; ornaments.

"I fancy everybody observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again."—Addison: Guardian.

† 2. Military outfit or accoutrements; arms.

"Then fond he armor and other gere."
Torrent of Portugal, 707.

3. The harness or furniture of domesticated animals; tackle or equipment for horses or cattle.

"[Pallas] then took her angry run At king Eumelus, brake his gears."
Chapman: Homer; Iliad.

¶ In this sense it is common in the United States, and different kinds of harness are indicated by the names single gear, double-gear, lead-gear, hip-strap gear, Yankee-gear, &c.

4. Goods; property generally.

"I shall appear some harmless villager, Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear."
Milton: Comus, 167.

5. Tools; implements; household necessaries.

6. Material; stuff.

"If fortune be a woman, she is a good wench for this gear."—Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, ii. 2.

* 7. Matter; business; affair.

"I will remedy this gear ere long!"
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., iii. 1.

* 8. Manner; habits; customs.

"Wysse me fro my wylde gerys."
Penitential Psalms, p. 28.

* 9. Anything of no value; rubbish; trash. (Latimer.)

II. Technically:

1. Machinery:

(1) Furniture, rigging, tackle (jeers), apparatus, and appurtenances of an implement: e.g., expansion-gear, valve-gear, pump-gear, plough-gear; the working-parts of a locomotive; the rigging of a spar or sail; the running parts of a wheeled vehicle, as the fore-gears, hind-gears, referring to the fore-axle and its wheels, the hind-axle and its wheels. To the former is attached the tongue and fore hounds, to the latter the hind hounds. Each carries its bolster. The term is also applied to other mechanical devices by which motion is transmitted; as change-gear, chain-gear, back-gear, overhead-gear: or by which parts are operated, as hoisting-gear.

(2) A cog-wheel. [Gearing.]

2. Naut.: A general term for the ropes, blocks, &c., belonging to any particular sail or spar: as, the mainsail gear, &c.

¶ (1) Running gear:

Naut.: Running rigging.

(2) Pump-gear, windlass-gear: The tackle belonging to the pumps, windlass, &c.

(3) To throw anything out of gear:

(a) Lit.: To disconnect gearing or couplings.

(b) Fig.: To cause anything not to work smoothly; to disturb.

"The most important body of facts with which history makes us acquainted is thrown out of gear."—Mallet: Bases of Belief, pt. iv., § 14.

gear-cutter, s. A machine for making cog-wheels by cutting out the material between the teeth.

gear-gatherer, s. A money-making man. (Scotch.) gear-wheel, s. Any cog-wheel, whether crown, spur, internal-cogged, bevel, or lantern, is a gear-wheel. The essential feature is the possession of cogs, which act upon the cogs of another wheel in the train or series to impart or transmit motion. [Gearing.]

ġēar, *geir, v.t. [Gear, s.] To dress; to harness; to put gear on.

"That all maner of men . . . be reddy horsit and geirit."—Acts James II. (1456), ch. lxii.

geare, v.t. [Jeer, v.] ġēar'-ĭng, s. [Eng. gear, s.; -ing.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Harness, tackle.

2. Mach.: A train or series of wheels with cogs for transmitting motion; the parts in machinery by which motion is communicated. In spur-gearing the teeth are arranged round either the concave or convex surface of a cylindrical wheel in the direction of radii from the centre of the wheel, and are of equal depth throughout. In bevelled-gearing the teeth are placed upon the exterior periphery of a conical wheel in a direction converging to the apex of the cone, and the depth of the teeth gradually diminishes from the base.

gearing-chain, s.

Mach.: An endless chain transmitting motion from one toothed wheel to another.

gearing-rails, s. pl. The ladder-like rails at the side of a cart or waggon; the raves.

ġē-ark'-sų-tīte, s. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = earth, and Eng., &c. arksutite (q.v.).]

Min.: A dull, white, earthy mineral, like kaolin. Compos.: Fluorine 41·18, aluminum 13·75, lime 19·25, soda 2·46, water 20·22. Occurs in Greenland with cryolite. (Dana.) ġēar'-mĕnt, s. [Eng. gear; -ment.] Rubbish, trash.

ġēas'-ŏn, geaz-on, *ges-on, *ges-oun, a. [A.S. gǽsne = empty, barren.] Scarce, uncommon, unusual.

"The lady, hearkning of his sensefull speech, Found nothing that he said vnmeet nor geason."
Spenser: F. Q., VI. iv. 37.

ġē-as'-tĕr, ġē-as'-trŭm, s. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth, and ἀστήρ (astēr) = a star. So called from the stellate appearance of the species when burst and lying on the ground.]

Bot.: Earth stars. A genus of gasteromyce-tous fungi, sub-order Trichogastres. It was formed by Micheli to include the Puffballs having astellated volva. They are small fungi, often of a brown colour, found chiefly in the South of England in pine-woods and pastures during the autumn months. Geaster hygrometricus, as the name implies, readily absorbs and retains moisture.

ġēat (1), s. [A.S. geotan = to pour; Low Ger. geten.]

Found.: The hole or channel through which molten metal descends into the mould.

* ġēat (2), s. [JET.]

gēave, v.i. [Etym. doubtful.] To look in an unsteady manner.

"Callant, clap the lid down on the pat: what hae they't hinging geaving up there for?"—Perils of Man, i. 55.

ġē'-băng, s. [A Javanese word.]

Bot.: (For def. see compound).

gebang-palm, s.

Bot.: Corypha Gebanga. It is a native of Java, where the leaves are used for thatching, plaiting, &c., and the root for diarrhœa, while a kind of sago is prepared from the interior of the trunk.

geb-ble, gab-ble, s. [Fr. jabot.] The crop or craw of a bird.

ġē'-bĭ-ą, s. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth, and βία (bia) = strength, force, power, might.]

Zool.: A genus of long-tailed decapodous Crustaceans, family Thalassinidæ. Type Gebia stellata, a crab about an inch and a half long found on the coasts of England.

Gē'-bĕr, s. [GUEBRE.]

ġĕ-car-çī'-nĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gecarcin(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: Land Crabs. A family of short-tailed Crustaceans, containing various tropical land crabs. They live often at a distance from the sea in dry woods in burrows, which they excavate, sallying forth by night in quest of food. At a certain season they migrate in numbers to the sea to deposit their eggs.

ġĕ-car-çī'-nŭs, s. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = land, and καρκίνος (karkinos) = a crab.]

Zool.: Land Crab. The typical genus of the family Gecarcinidæ (q.v.).

ġĕ-çĭ-nī'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gecin(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: A sub-family of Picidæ (Woodpeckers), established by Mr. George R. Gray, in which the ridge of the bill is near its dorsal line. Type, Gecinus (q.v.).

ġĕ-çī'-nŭs, s. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth, and κινέω (kineō) = to move.]

Ornith.: The typical genus of the sub-family Geciniæ (q.v.). Gecinus (Picus) viridis is the Green Woodpecker of Britain. [WOODPECKER.]

* ġĕck, s. [Ger. geck; Dut. gek = a coxcomb, a simpleton. Cf. also A.S. gēac = a cuckoo.] [GECK, v., GAWK.]

1. A toss of the head in derision or contempt; a taunt, a gibe.

2. An object of scorn, derision, or contempt; a dupe.

"And to become the geck and scorn O' the other's villany."
Shakesp.: Cymbeline, v. 4.

ġĕck, v.t. & i. [Dan. giecker = to jest, to jeer.] [GECK, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To deride; to laugh or sneer at.

2. To befool, to cheat, to trick.

"Hame to the Prowest it was directit;
But ye shall heir whow he was geckit."
Legend: Bp. St. Androis; Poems (16th cent.), p. 336.

B. Intrans.: To sneer, to deride; to manifest contempt or derision.

"During our whole journey she gecked and scorned at my northern speech and habit."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xxxiii.

ġĕc'-kō, ġĕk'-kō, s. [Fr. gecko; Mod. Lat. gekko, said to be imitated from the sound of the animal's voice.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Geckotidæ (q.v.). Gecko verus is common in India and the adjacent countries, being often seen on the walls of rooms or running up the window-panes. The spider "which taketh hold with her hands, and is in king's palaces" (Prov. xxx. 28), seems to be not a genuine arachnidan, but a gecko lizard.

GECKO.

ġĕc-kŏt'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Eng., &c. gecko, t connective, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Lacertilia (Lizards), sub-order Pachyglossa. The eyes are large, the tongue not very protrusible, the teeth numerous, the toes furnished below with imbricated plates, or adhesive discs, which exude a viscous fluid. These, acting like the suckers of the domestic fly, enable the animals to walk up panes of glass or go along the ceilings of rooms. They feed on insects. There are many species in the hotter parts of both the Old and the New Worlds. Though reported venomous, they are really harmless. For Gecko verus see Gecko. The Croaking lizard, Thecadactylus laevis, is common in the boiling-houses on estates in Jamaica.

ġĕd, ġĕdd, s. [Icel. gedda; Sw. gädde; cf. Icel. gaddr; A.S. gād = a goad.] [GOAD, s.]

Zool.: The pike. (Scotch.)

"A gedd, or a dish of perch now and then."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxxvi.

ġēd'-rīte, s. [From Gedres, in France, near which it occurs.]

Min.: A variety of Anthophyllite, with microscopic black spinels.

ġeē, jeē, v.i. [Prob. a variant of go (q.v.). Mahn refers the second and third senses to Fr. deá, used to turn a horse to the left, in Switzerland to the right; Arm. dia, diou; Ir. deas = to the right hand.]

* 1. To agree, to fit, to suit.

2. To go or turn to the off-side; used as a direction to horses.

3. To move faster: as a teamster cries to his horses, gee-up.

geēr, s. [GEAR, s.]

geēse, s. pl. [GOOSE.]

geēst, s. [Low Ger. geest, geestland = dry, sandy land; O. Fris. gēst, gēstlond, from gāst = barren.] Alluvial matter on the surface of land, not of recent origin.

geēz, s. [Arabic.] A dialect of Arabic, called also Literary Ethiopic, the ancient language of Abyssinia. It is not now a spoken language, having been superseded by the Amharic. Its literature reaches back to the fourth century.

Gĕ-hĕn'-ną, s. [Lat. Gehenna; Gr. Γέεννα (Geenna), Γαιεννα (Gaienna), from Heb. גֵּיא הִנֹּם (Ge Hinnom), the valley of Hinnom: גֵּיא (gai) גֵּי (ge), and גַּי (ge), and חִנֹּם (Hinnom). (See def.).]

1. Scrip. Geog.: A valley anciently belonging to a man, Hinnom, of whom nothing is known (Josh. xviii. 6), and inherited by his son or sons, whence it is called the Valley of the Son of Hinnom (Josh. xv. 8), or of the children of Hinnom (2 Kings xxiii. 10). In Joshua it is described as lying south of Jebusi, the Jebusite capital, which afterwards became Jerusalem (xviii. 16). Here, during the later period of the Jewish kings, men made their sons and daughters pass through the fire to Molech or Moloch, the Ammonite fire-god (2 Kings xxiii. 10; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6), or actually burnt them in the fire (2 Chron. xxviii. 3). Tophet was in it (2 Kings xxiii. 10), and a prophetic passage mentions the size and fierceness of the fires there burning for the "king" [Molech means king] (Isaiah xxx. 33). Josiah put an end to these cruel practices, and defiled the place (2 Kings xxiii. 10). It was doomed afterwards to become an overcrowded cemetery (Jer. vii. 32). When the Jews outgrew all love of human sacrifice, they regarded the place with horror, the Rabbins deeming it the gate of hell. [2.] The valley, which the Arabs call Gehennam, is thoroughly known. It is narrow and deep, with rugged limestone cliffs, excavated for tombs, and the mountain sides overtopping all.

"The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence And black Gehenna called, the type of Hell."
Milton: P. L., i. 405.

2. Scrip. Doctrine: Hell, the place of punishment, the sufferings of the lost being compared to those of the children sacrificed to Moloch. [1.]

"Whosoever shall say Thou fool, shall be in danger of the hell of fire (Greek, Gr. Gehenna of fire)."—Matt. v. 22 (Revised Version).

ġēh'-lĕn-īte, s. [Ger. gehlenit. Named by Fuchs after his colleague Gehlen.]

Min.: A greyish-green or brown tetragonal mineral; its hardness 5·5 to 6; its sp. gr. 2·9 to 3·1; its lustre resinous or vitreous; its fracture uneven to splintery. Compos.: Silica 29·9; alumina 21·5; sesquioxide of iron 6·6; lime 42·0 = 100. It has feeble double refraction. It is known native only in the Fassa valley, but occasionally occurs among the scoriæ of furnaces. (Dana.) ġē'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth; -ic.] Earthy, pertaining to or derived from earth; terrene.

geic-acid, s. [ULMIC-ACID.]

geī'-čr-īte, s. [From Geyer in Saxony, where it occurs.]

Min.: The same as Leucopyrite (q.v.).

ġē'-īne, s. [Gr. γήινος (gēinos) = mortal; subject to decay.] [ULMIN.]

geĭz-en, gĭz-zen, v.i. [Sw. gisna = to dry up; Icel. gisin = dried.] To become dry and shrink for lack of moisture; to wither; to fade.

"Gude-will, man, is a grizen'd tub that hauds nae liquor."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxv.

ġĕk'-kō, s. [GECKO.]

* ġĕl'-ą-ble, a. [Lat. gelo = to congeal; gelu = frost.] That may or can be congealed; capable of being converted or concreted into a jelly.

ġĕl'-ą-dą, s. [An Abyssinian word (?).]

Zool.: A baboon closely allied to Hamadryas, discovered by Ruppel in Abyssinia, and in consequence named Gelada rüppellii. It figures in the list of the Zoological Society as Theropithecus gelada.

ġĕl-a-læ'-an, a. [Named after Gelal-u-Din, Sultan of Khorassan.]

Chron.: See etym. and compound.

gelalæan-era, s.

Chron.: An era introduced by Gelal-u-Din and commencing March 4, A.D. 1079. (Sir Harris Nicolas, &c.)

ġĕ-lăs'-ĭ-mŭs, s. [Gr. γελάσιμος (gelasimos) = laughable, from γελάω (gelaō) = to laugh. What is ludicrous about the matter is to see such marine-looking animals as crabs aabore, and flourishing an abnormally large claw in the face of their foes.]

Zool.: [CALLINO CRAB].

* ġĕ-lăs'-tĭc, a. & s. [Gr. γελαστικός (gelastikos) = inclined to laugh; γελάω (gelaō) = to laugh.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to laughter.

"Expandlug the gelastic muscles."—T. Browne: Works, ii. 140.

B. As subst.: Laughter, merriment.

"When he had made up his mind to a dreadful course of drastics, should find that gelastics had been substituted."—Southey: Doctor, ch. extraord.

ġĕl'-ą-tĭġ'-ĕn-oŭs, a. [Eng. gelatine, and Gr. γεννάω (gennaō) = to produce.] Producing or yielding gelatine.

gelatigenous-tissues, s. pl.

Anat.: Animal tissues which, on being treated with boiling water, yield gelatine. These are the skin, the serous membranes, the cellular sheaths of the muscles, the organic portion of bone, &c.

ġĕ-lăt'-ĭ-nāte, v.i. & t. [Eng. gelatin(e); -ate.]

A. Intrans.: To become converted or concreted into a substance like jelly.

B. Trans.: To concrete or convert into a substance like jelly.

ġĕ-lăt-ĭ-nā'-tion, s. [Eng. gelatin(e); -ation.] The act or process of converting into a substance like jelly; the state or process of becoming gelatinated.

ġĕl'-ą-tĭne, ġĕl-ą-tĭn, s. & a. [Fr. gélatine; Sp., Port., & Ital. gelatina, from Lat. gelatus = frozen, pa. par. of gelo = to cause to freeze; gelu = frost, cold.] So named from the tendency which the substance has to congeal and become to a certain extent solid.

A. As substantive:

Chem.: Gelatin, $C_{75}H_{124}N_{24}O_{29}$. ? Animal glutin, obtained by treating bones with dilute hydrochloric acid, which dissolves the mineral constituents of the bone, consisting of phosphates and carbonates of calcium, magnesium, &c., and leaves the bone cartilage. [OSSEIN.] This, when boiled for a long time with water, dissolves, and forms gelatine, which can be purified by dissolving in hot water and precipitating by alcohol. A pure variety is obtained from the swimming-bladder of the sturgeon, or other species of Acipenser. Impure gelatine, called glue, is prepared by boiling down pieces of hide, horn, hoof, cartilage, &c., with water under pressure. Pure gelatine is amorphous, transparent in thin plates, of a yellowish-white colour; it has neither taste nor smell, and is neutral to vegetable colours; it is insoluble in alcohol and in ether. In contact with cold water it swells up, and is soluble in hot water. It is not precipitated by acids, except by tannic acid, which gives a flaky precipitate, which is insoluble in water, alcohol, and ether: this reaction takes place in the formation of leather (q.v.). The aqueous solution of gelatin turns the plane of polarization to the left. Gelatin subjected to dry distillation yields methylamine, cyanide of ammonium, pyrrol, &c.; by oxidation with sulphuric acid and manganese dioxide, or with chromic acid mixture, it yields hydrocyanic acid, acids of the fatty series, benzoic aldehyde and benzoic acid, &c. Gelatine boiled with caustic potash yields glycocine and leucine. Gelatine contains about about 50 per cent. of carbon, 6·6 of hydrogen, and 18·4 of nitrogen; when pure it probably contains no sulphur. Moist gelatine exposed to the air rapidly putrefies, the liquid becoming first acid, but afterwards it gives off ammonia. Dry gelatine is unaltered by the air. Gelatine gives no precipitate with lead acetate, alum, or ferrocyanide of potassium. A mixture of gelatine with potassium dichromate becomes, when exposed to the action of light, insoluble in water.

B. As adj.: Composed of, or in any way connected with gelatine; gelatinous.

ġĕl-ą-tĭn'-ĭ-form, a. [Eng. gelatin(e); i connective; -form.] Having the form of gelatine; gelatinous.

ġĕ-lăt'-ĭn-ĭze, v.t. & i. [Eng. gelatin(e); -ize.] The same as GELATINATE (q.v.).

ġĕ-lăt-ĭ-nō-, in comp. [GELATINE.] Containing gelatine.

gelatino-sulphurous, a. Consisting of gelatine and sulphur.

ġĕ-lăt-ĭ-nō'-sī, s. pl. [Mas. pl. of Mod. Lat. gelatinosus = gelatinous.]

Zool.: The name given by Cuvier to his second order of Polypi. He includes under it his genera Hydra, Corine, Cristatella, Vorticella and Pedicellaria. (Cuvier, ed. Griffith.)

ġĕ-lăt'-ĭ-noŭs, a. [Eng. gelatin(e); -ous.] Of, pertaining to, or consisting of gelatine; resembling, or of the nature or consistency of gelatine; viscous, jelly-like gelatinous-lichens, s. pl.

"The gelatinous substance being nothing but the half-digested remains of earthworms, on which these birds feed."—Pennant: British Zoology; Common Gull.

Bot.: Lichens having a gelatinous thallus. Examples: Iceland Moss (Cetraria islandica), and Reindeer Moss (Cladonia rangiferina).

gelatinous-tissues, s. pl. [GELATIGENOUS TISSUES.]

ġĕld, *ġĕlt (1), s. [A.S. geld, gild = tribute, custom; O. Sax. geld; O. Fris. jeld; O. H. Ger. gelt; Goth. gild; Ger. & Dut. geld = money, tribute.]

1. Money, tribute, compensation, ransom. Generally, in composition, as Dane*gelt*, or Dane*geld* (q.v.).

"Free from all gelts and payments."—Fuller.: Waltham Abbey, p. 7.

2. A guild (q.v.).

 ġĕld (2),  geldē, a. & s. [GELT.]

ġĕld, * geel-dyn, * gelde, * gel-den, * gel-dyn, * gild, v.t. [Icel. gelda; cogn. with Sw. galla; Dan. gilde.] [GALT, GELT.]

I. Lit.: To castrate, to emasculate; to deprive of the power of generation.

"Som beeth igilded that gildeth hem self for the kyngdom of God."—Trevisa, v. 53.

 II. Figuratively:

1. To deprive of any essential part; to mutilate.

"Bereft and gelded of his patrimony."
Shakesp.: Richard II., iii. 1.

2. To clear or free from anything immodest or obscene; to expurgate.

"They were diligent enough to make sure work, and to geld it so clearly in some places, that they took away the very manhood of it."—Dryden: Juvenal. (Pref.)

 ġĕld'-ą-ble (1), a. [Eng. geld, v.; -able.] That may or can be gelded.

 ġĕld'-ą-ble (2), a. [Eng. geld (1), s.; -able.] Liable to pay taxes.

ġĕld'-ĕr (1),  geld-ere, s. [Eng. geld, v.; -er.] One who gelds or castrates; a gelding.

"Geld later with gelders, as many one do,
And look of a dozen to geld away two."
Tusser: Husbandrie.

ġĕld'-ĕr (2), s. [GUELDER.]

gelder-rose, s. [GUELDER-ROSE.]

 ġĕld'-hood, * geld-hede, s. [Eng. geld, v.; -hood.] Barrenness.

ġĕld'-ĭng, * geld-inge, * geld-yng, * geld-ynge, * gueld-ing, pr. par., a., & s. [GELD, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Literally:

1. The act of castrating; castration.

2. One who has been gelt or castrated; applied—

* (1) To men, and equivalent to the more modern word eunuch (q.v.).

"And whenne thei weren come up of the watir, the spirit of the Lord ravysched Filip, and the geldynge say him no more."—Wycliffe: Acts viii. 39.

(2) To animals; specifically, a castrated horse.

"A coach and ten geldings for the more easy conveying of him to Mosco."—Hackluyt: Voyages, i. 459.

 II. Fig.: An emasculating or depriving of strength or force.

"Gelding, signifieth a subduing of our affections, and taming the foul lust of pleasure, vnto the will of reason."—Wilson: The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 97.

ġĕ-lĕch'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Gr. γηλεχής (gēlechēs) = sleeping on the ground; Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of Moths, tribe Tineina. It contains 173 British species, more than a fourth of the whole number. (Stainton.)  ġĕl'-ĭ-çīde, s. [Lat. gelicidium, from gelu = frost, and cado = to fall.] A frost. (Coles.)  ġĕl'-ĭd, * gel-ed, a. [Lat. gelidus, from gelu = frost.] Extremely cold or cool.

"By gelid founts and careless rills to muse."
Thomson: Summer, 208.

ġĕl-ĭd-ĭ-ā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gelidi(um), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: A family, tribe, or order of rose-spored Algæ, and belonging to the group Desmiospermeæ, i.e., those bearing necklaces of spores. Some of the foreign species are very beautiful. Type, Gelidium (q.v.).

 ġĕ-lĭd'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. gelid; -ity.] The quality or state of being gelid; extreme cold.

ġĕl-ĭd'-ĭ-ŭm, s. [Dimin. of Lat. gelidus = icy cold, from gelu = icy coldness.]

Bot.: The typical genus of Gelidiaceæ (q.v.). Gelidium corneum is a common seaweed with a red pinnated horny frond from two to six or eight inches high.

 ġĕl'-ĭd-lў, adv. [Eng. gelid; -ly.] In an extremely cold manner; coldly, frigidly.

 ġĕl'-ĭd-nĕss, s. [Eng. gelid; -ness.] Extreme cold; gelidity.

ġĕl-ĭn'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [From Lat. gel(o) = to cause to freeze; fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Bot.: Cells in algals secreting vegetable jelly. (Treas. of Bot.)

 gell (1), v.i. [Ger. gellen.] To tingle: to thrill with acute pain.

"Your wounds they will both glow and gell, Sow full sore, and be full ill." Sir Eger, p. 12.

 gell (2), v.i. [Icel. geil = a crack, a fissure.] To crack in consequence of heat; a phrase used concerning wood which cracks in drying.

gell (3), v.i. [GALE, v.] To sing loudly; to bawl in singing; to yell.

 ġĕll (1), v.t. & i. [GEAL, v.]

A. Trans.: To form into a jelly, to congeal.

B. Intrans.: To assume the consistence of jelly; to set.

 gell (1), s. [Etym. doubtful.] A leech.

gell (2), s. [GELL (2), v.] A rent, crack, or split in wood.

"I stevellit backe, and lowten doune, set mal nebb to ane gell in the dor."—Hogg: Winter Tales, ii. 41.

gell (3), gill, s. [GILL (♑, s.]

Bot.: A labiate plant, Nepeta Glechoma.

 gel-loch, s. [GELL (3), v.] A shrill cry, a yell.

"We'll never mair scare at the poolly-woolly of the whaup, nor swirl at the gelloch of the ern."—Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 288.

gel-lock, s. [A corrup. of gavelack (q.v.).] An iron crow-bar.

 ġĕl'-lў, s. & a. [JELLY.]

A. As subst.: Jelly.

B. As adj.: Clotted.

"They softly wipt away the gelly blood."
Spenser: F. Q., III. iv. 40.

 ġĕ-lōs'-cō-pў, s. [Gr. γέλως (gelōs) = laughter, and σκοπέω (skopeō) = to see.]

Antiq.: An old kind of divination by the laughter of any person; the inferring or discovering the qualities, &c., of any person by the nature of his laughter.

 ġĕl'-oŭs, a. [JEALOUS.]

ġĕl'-sĕ-mĭne, s. [Eng., &c. gelsem(ium), and suff. -ine (Chem.) (q.v.).]

Chem.: An alkaloid, $C_{22}H_{38}N_2O_4$, occurring in the root of Gelsemium sempervirens. It is an amorphous transparent mass, slightly soluble in water, soluble in alcohol and in ether. It tastes bitter and is poisonous; when it is dissolved in sulphuric acid, and potassium dichromate is added, the solution turns a cherry-red colour, then violet, and then green.

ġĕl-sē'-mĭ-ŭm, s. [Ital. gelsomino = jasmine.]

1. Bot.: A genus of Loganiaceæ, or, in the opinion of some, of Bignoniaceæ. Gelsemium nitidum or sempervirens, a climbing shrub with fragrant yellow flowers, is the Carolina Jessamine. It has been introduced into British greenhouses.

2. Phar.: Tincture of gelsemium root is used in America as a sedative; in overdoses it causes death by paralysis of the respiratory muscles.

ġĕlt, pa. par. [GELD, v.] ġĕlt, * geld, * gelde, * gild, * yeld, a. & s. [Icel. geldr; O. Sw. galder; Sw. gall; Dan. gold.] [GELD, v.]

A. As adjective:

I. Literally:

1. Castrated, gelded.

"Geldynge or gelde horse. Canterius."—Prompt. Parv.

 2. Barren, unfruitful.

"Elesabeth thi cosyn, that is cald geld
She has conceyfied a son."
Towneley Mysteries, p. 78.

 II. Figuratively:

1. Emasculated; having lost the power of generation.

"Elde maketh me geld an growen al grai."
Early English Poems, p. 143.

2. Weak, feeble, spiritless.

"Myn gomenes waxeth gelde." Lyric Poems, p. 24.

B. As subst.: A gelding.

"The spayed gelts they esteem the most profitable." —Mortimer: Husbandry.

* gĕlt (1), s. [GILT.] Tinsel or gilt surface; or perhaps gold.

"I won her with a girdle of gelt, Embost with bugle about the belt."
Spenser: Shepheards Calender; Feb.

* gĕlt (2), s. [GELD (1), s.] ġĕm, * gemme, s. [O. Fr. gemme, from Lat. gemma = a bud, a gem; Ital. gemma; Sp. yema; Port. gomo, gemma.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A precious stone, as the diamond, ruby, emerald, &c., especially when cut and polished for ornamental purposes; a jewel.

"The shining circlets of his golden hair . . .
Instarred with gems and gold, bestrow the shore."
Pope: Homer; Iliad xvii. 55.

* 2. A bud. [GEMMULE.]

"From the joints of thy prolific stem
A swelling knot is raised, called a gem."
Denham: Of Old Age, 576.

3. Anything resembling a gem in beauty or brilliancy; as a drop of dew.

4. Anything of the greatest value, beauty, or rareness.

II. Zool.: The same as GEMMULE (q.v.).

¶ Artificial gems: Factitious stones are made of very pure, fusible, highly transparent, and dense glass, usually called paste or strass. The composition is silica, potassa, and oxide of lead, with some other ingredients at times, and metallic oxides for colouring. The beauty depends upon the clearness and the exact imitation of the natural gem, and also upon the care and skill in the cutting.

¶ Obvious compounds are gem-adorned (Byron); gem-illumined, gem-surpassing, gem-tipt (Cowper), &c.

gem-cutting, s. The surfaces of gems are cut into facets to increase their brilliancy. The greater the natural brilliancy, the fewer facets are required to obtain a given brilliancy.

gem-engraving, s. The art of engraving on gems. It is performed by small revolving wheels or points charged with diamond dust, emery, &c., according to the hardness of the gem. It is also called Gem-sculpture, or Lithoglyptics (q.v.). [CAMEO, INTAGLIO.]

gem-sculpture, s. The same as GEM-ENGRAVING (q.v.).

* ġĕm, v.t. & i. [GEM, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To adorn with gems, jewels, or precious stones.

2. To bespangle or adorn, as with gems.

"In the vase mysterious fling Pinks and roses gemm'd with dew."
Jones: Muse Recalled.

3. To put forth in buds.

"Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread Their branches, hung with copious fruit, or gemmed
Their blossoms." Milton: P. L., vii. 325.

B. Intrans.: To put forth the first buds.

Gĕ-ma'-ra, s. [Aramæan גְּמָרָא (gemara), which according to Buxtorf is = supplement or complement, but according to Dr. Samuel Davidson is = doctrine, being derived from גָּמַר (gamar) = to learn.]

Hebrew Literature: One of the two leading portions of the Talmud, which is divided into the Mishna or Text, and the Gemara or Commentary. [TALMUD.]

* gĕ-mar'-ĭc, a. [Eng. gemar(a); -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Gemara.

ġĕm'-ĕl, s. [Lat. gemellus = twin, paired; Sp. gemilo; Ital. gemello; O. Fr. gemeau.]

* I. Ordinary Language:

1. One of twins.

"Gemels apereden in the wombe."—Wycliffe: Genesis xxxviii. 27.

2. A hinge. [GEMEL-HINGE.]

"A stone-wrought door of no meane weight:
Yet from itselfe the gemels beaten so
That little strength could thrust it to and fro."
Browne: Britannia's Pastorals, bk. ii., s. 2.

II. Her.: A term applied to two bars or barrulets, placed parallel to each other.

"Two gemels, silver, between two griffins passant."
—Strype: Life of Smith, ch. i., note a.

gemel-hinge, s.

Locksmith.: A hinge consisting of an eye or loop and a hook.

gemel-ring, s. A ring with two or more links; a gimbal.

gemel-window, s.

Arch.: A window with two bays.

ġĕm-ĕl-lär'-ĭ-a, s. [Lat. gemellaria, gemellar = a vessel for holding oil.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Gemellariadæ (q.v.). The cells are joined back to back, all the pairs facing the same way.

ġĕm-ĕl-lär-ĭ'-a-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gemellar(ia), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.] Zool.: A family of infundibulate polyzoa, sub-order Cheilostomata. It was founded by Prof. Busk. The cells are opposite in pairs, the polyzoary continuous.

ġĕ-mĕl'-lī, s. pl. [GEMELLUS.]

* ġĕm-ĕl lĭp'-a-roŭs, a. [Lat. gemellus = twin, and pario = to bring forth.] Bearing or producing twins.

ġĕ-mĕl'-lŭs (pl. ġĕ-mĕl'-lī), s. [Lat. = twin.]

Anat.: One of two small twin muscles in the thigh. There is a gemellus superior and a gemellus inferior.

* ġĕm'-ĕnt, a. [Lat. gemens, pr. par. of gemo = to groan.] Groaning. (Blount.)

* ġĕm'-ĭn-al, s. [Lat. geminus = twin-born.] A pair, a doublet.

"The often harmony thereof softened the verse more than the majesty of the subject would permit, unless they had all been geminals or couplets."—Drayton. Barons' Wars. (Pref.)

* ġĕm'-ĭ-nāte, a. [Lat. geminatus, pa. par. of gemino = to double; geminus = twin-born.]

Bot.: United or collected in pairs.

geminate-flowers, s. pl.

Bot.: Twin flowers; flowers produced in pairs.

geminate-leaves, s. pl.

Bot.: Leaves arranged in pairs; leaves springing from the same node, but not opposite to each other.

* ġĕm'-ĭ-nāte, v.t. [Fr. géminer; Ital. geminare; Sp. geminer.] [GEMINATE, a.] To double.

"W is but the v geminated in the full sound."—Ben Jonson: English Grammar.

* ġĕm-ĭ-nā'-tion, s. [Lat. geminatio, from geminatus, pa. par. of gemino = to double.]

1. The act of doubling; duplication.

"They admit a gemination of principal parts."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iii., ch. xv.

2. Duplication; reduplication; an increasing twofold.

"If the evill be in the sense and in the conscience both, there is a gemination of it."—Bacon: Colours of Good & Evil, § 8.

ġĕm'-ĭ-nī, s. pl. [Masc. pl. of Lat. geminus = twin, produced at the same birth with another.]

Astron.: The third of the zodiacal constellations [♊]. The name is given from two conspicuous stars, α and β Geminorum, the former named after the example of the Greeks Castor; the latter, Pollux. If an imaginary line be drawn through the belt of Orion and two bright stars in the line of the belt, it will nearly pass through Gemini. If again Regulus and Aldebaran be above the horizon, and the space between them be equally divided, the point of bisection will be in Gemini. Castor is a remarkable binary star of the first magnitude, Pollux is of the second. The sun enters the third sign of the zodiac which is different from the actual constellation about May 21, and passes from it to Cancer about June 21.

¶ Gemini (geminy, jiminy) is used as a kind of mild oath or interjection; but in this case the word is, according to Mr. Palmer (Folk-Etymology), identical with Ger. O Gemine; Dut. Jemy, Jemini, which are shortened forms of Lat. O Jesu Domine, or perhaps merely from Jesu meus; Ital. Giesu mio.

ġĕm-ĭ-nĭf-lŏ-roŭs, a. [Lat. geminus = twin, double; flos (genit. floris) = a flower; Eng. adj. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Twin-flowered; having two flowers growing together.

* ġĕm'-ĭn-oŭs, a. [Lat. geminus = twin.] Double; in pairs; twin.

"Christians have baptized these geminous births and double consuscencies, with several names, as conceiving in them a distinction of souls."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iii., ch. xv.

* ġĕm'-ĭ-nў, s. [GEMINI.] A pair, a brace, a couple.

"I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

ġĕm ĭ-tōr'-ĕs, s. pl. [Lat. gemitus = a sigh, a groan, from gemo = to sigh, to groan. The name is not a good one. Gemo does not mean to coo, and the cheerful love-song of the pigeons is neither a sigh nor a groan.]

Ornith.: Cooers. The same as the sub-order Columbacei (q.v.). It contains the pigeons.

ġem'-ma (pl. ġĕm'-mæ), s. [Lat. = a bud eye, or gem of a plant.]

I. Botany:

1. The name given by Linnæus to a leaf-bud, as distinguished from the flower-bud of a plant.

2. (Pl.): Minute green bodies in the cystulæ or open cups which constitute the fructification of Marchantia. They occur also in some Mosses and Hepaticæ.

II. Zool. (Pl.): The buds produced by any animal, whether detached or not.

* ġĕm-mā'-çē-oŭs (or ceous as shŭs), a. [Lat. gemmā; Eng. adj. suff. -aceous.] Pertaining to gems or leaf-buds; of the nature of or resembling gems.

ġĕm'-mæ, s. pl. [GEMMA.]

ġĕm'-man, s. [A vulgar contraction of gentleman (q.v.).] A gentleman. (Vulgar.)

"At home, our Bow-street gemmen keep the laws,
And here a sentry stands within your calling."
Byron: Beppo, 86.

* ġĕm'-ma-rў, a. & s. [Eng. gem; -ary.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining to gems or jewels.

"The principle and gemmary affection is its translucency."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. ii., ch. i.

B. As substantive:

1. A depository for gems; a jewel-house. (Blount.)

2. A knowledge of gems.

"In painting and gemmary Fortunato was a quack."
—E. A. Poe: Cask of Amontillado.

ġĕm'-māte, a. [Lat. gemmatus, from gemma = a gem.]

Bot.: Having buds.

* ġĕm'-māt-ĕd, a. [Lat. gemmatus.] Adorned or set with gems or jewels.

ġĕm-mā'-tion, s. [Lat. gemmatus = (1) bearing gems, (2) bearing buds, from gemma = a gem, a bud; Fr. gemmation.]

I. Botany:

(1) The act of budding; specif. the production of buds in the axils of the floral leaves, the former developing into new flowers or inflorescences. This is seen occasionally in Scabiosa and Dipsacus.

(2) The manner in which young leaves are folded up in a bud before it opens; vernation.

† (3) The time when buds come forth.

2. Zool.: Generation by the development of buds, which in some species, as Cheroma, grows out of the forepart of the body, and in others, as Vorticella, from the hind part near the stem, or from the stem itself, from which the young animal soon detaches itself. (Owen.) Nicholson considers that the simplest form of gemmation is seen in the power possessed by a crustacean to replace a lost limb. Another form of it is when a foraminifer, consisting of a little sphere of sarcode, develops a second one like the first, than a third one like the second, till quite a group of these little globes has been formed, after which the whole are surrounded by a complex shell. Another kind of it is seen in the Flustra, in which a single polypide, by developing a series of buds which remain in contact with the parent stem, finally makes the complex sea mat, which the unobservant mistake for an algal. This is called continuous gemmation. When, as is the case of the fresh-water Hydra, the new beings developed from buds become disconnected from their parents, and set up a separate existence, the phenomenon is called discontinuous gemmation. Finally when the young individuals remain within the body of the parent till that parent dies, this is termed internal gemmation. It occurs in some polyzoa. (Nicholson.)

ġĕm'-mĕls, s. pl. [GEMEL.] A pair of hinges.

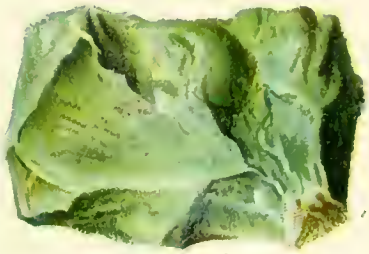
PRECIOUS GEMS AS THEY ARE FOUND.

1 TOURMALINE (New York).
2 TOURMALINE (Ural).
3 CHRYSOPRASE.
4 EMERALD (Peru).
5 CHRYSOBERYL (Ural).
6 TURQUOISE.
7 DIAMOND.
8 SPINEL RUBY.
9 GARNET.
10 TOPAZ (Ural).
11 AQUAMARINE (Ural).
12 LAPIS-LAZULI.
13 BLOODSTONE.
14 TOPAZ (Brazil).
15 OPAL.
16 AMETHYST.

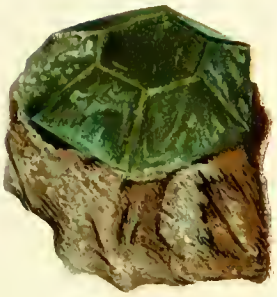
1

2

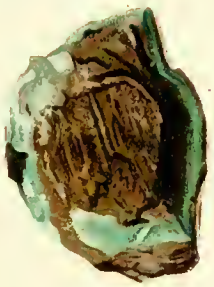


3

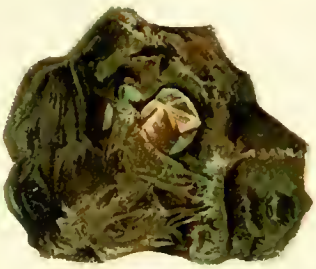
4



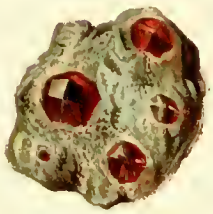
5



6



7



8

9

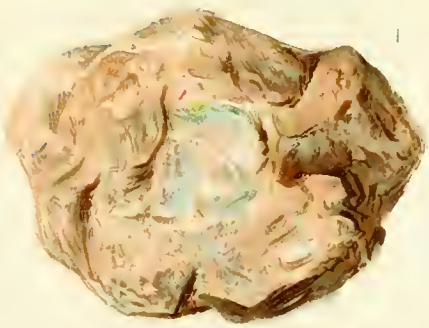
10

11

12

13

14



15

16

ǧĕm′-mĕ-ŏŭs, a. [Lat. gemmeus, from gemma = a gem, a bud.]

1. Pertaining to or of the nature of gems.

"Sometimes we find them in the gemmeous matter itself."—Woodward: On Fossils.

2. Resembling gems.

"The blue is of an inexpressible splendour, the richest cerulean glowing with a gemmeous brilliancy."—Pennant: British Zoology; Gemmeous Dragonet.

ǧĕm-mĭf′-ĕr-ŏŭs, a. [Lat. gemmifer, from gemma = a gem, a bud, and fero = to bear; Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Reproducing by buds, as vegetables, and certain animals of the lowest class, as Hydrozoa; gemmiparous.

* ǧĕm′-mĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gemmy; -ness.] The quality or state of being gemmy; spruceness, smartness.

* ǧĕm′-mĭng, s. [Eng. gem; -ing.] The science of gems; collecting of gems.

ǧĕm-mĭ-păr′-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. gemmipar(ous); -ity.]

Zool.: The state of being gemmiparous (q.v.).

ǧĕm-mĭp′-ą-roŭs, a. [Lat. gemma = a gem, a bud; pario = to bring forth, and Eng. adj. suff. -ous.]

I. Ord. Lang.: Producing gems or buds.

II. Zool.: Propagating itself by new individuals, issuing in buds from the body of the parent. [GEMMATION.]

* ǧĕm-mŏs′-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. gemmos(us) = full of or set with gems; Eng. suff. -ity.] The quality of being a gem or jewel; abundance of gems.

* ǧĕm′-mų-lar, a. [Eng. gemmul(e); -ar.] Pertaining to or of the natura of gemmules.

ǧĕm′-mule, s. [Fr. from Lat. gemmula, dimin. of gemma = a gem, a bud.]

1. Botany:

(1) The plumule of the embryo in a seed.

(2) The terminal bud of the plumule.

(3) An ovule.

(4) The bud of a moss.

(5) One of the reproductive spores of an algal.

2. Zoology:

(1) An embryo of a radiated animal at the stage when it resembles a ciliated monad.

(2) An encysted mass of sponge-particles, from which new ones are produced. (Huxley.) ǧĕm-mų-lĭf′-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Lat. gemmula = a little gem or bud; fero = to bear, and Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Bearing gemmules.

ǧĕm′-mў, a. [Eng. gem; -y.]

1. Full of gems; set with gems; bright, glittering.

"Famed Oberon with damasked robe so gay,
And gemmy crown." Philips: Past. 6.

2. Containing gems.

"Not venal, you request no eastern stores,
Where ruddy waters lave the gemmy shores."
Grainger: Tibullus; Elegy ii., bk. ii.

3. Spruce, smart, neat.

* ǧĕm′-ō-nў, s. [Lat. Gemoniæ [scalæ] = the Sad Steps (cf. the Bridge of Sighs), situated on the Aventine Hill, leading to the Tiber, to which the bodies of executed criminals were dragged by hooks, to be thrown into the river.] Pain, torment.

"Anguish through every member flies
And all those inward gemonies
Whereby frail flesh in torture dies."
Oldham: To the Memory of Mr. C. Morwent, xxxiii.

gĕ-mō′te, s. [A.S. gemót.] A meeting; the court of a hundred. [MEET, MOOT, MOTE.]

gĕms′-bŏk, gĕms′-hŏc, s. [Ger. gemsbock = the male of the chamois: gemse = chamois, and bock = buck.]

Zool.: An antelope, Oryx Gazella, called by Pallas Antilope Oryx, of a heavy stout build, about five feet long, three feet two inches high, with straight horns from two to two and a half feet long. It is of a rusty brown colour, variegated with black and white. It is a fierce animal, dangerous when wounded to hunters, and at times holding even the lion at bay. It inhabits the karroos of Southern Africa. Pennant called it the Egyptian Antelope, but it is not found in the Nile valley.

"And the gemsbok and eland unhunted recline
By the skirts of grey forests o'erhung with wild vine." Thos. Pringle: Afar in the Desert.

gĕms′-horn, s. [Ger.]

Music:

1. An instrument made of the horn of the chamois goat.

2. An organ-stop, 8, 4, or 2 feet in length, the pipes of which, generally of metal, are taper-shaped, being only about one-third the size at the top that they are at the mouth,

GEMSHORN.

with a tone somewhat lighter than a cylindrical stop of the same scale at the mouth, and very musical. It was first introduced here by Father Smith, who placed one in the choir organ at the Temple. It passed out of sight for many years, but was reintroduced by the late Mr. William Hill. (E. J. Hopkins, in Grove's Dict. of Music.)

-ǧĕn, suff. [Gr. γεννάω (gennaō) = to produce.]

Chem.: A suffix, as in hydro*gen*.

ǧĕn, s. [Pers.]

Bot., Phar., &c.: Persian manna. [MANNA.]

ǧĕ′-na, s. [Lat. gena = the cheek; Gr. γένυς (genus) = the under jaw; Sans. hanu = the jaw.]

† I. Anat.: The upper part of the face, between the nose and ears.

2. Zool.: A sub-genus of Gasteropoda, genus Stomatella. Found in the seas of Southern Asia, &c.

ǧĕ-năp′pe, s. [From the place of its manufacture.]

Fabric: A worsted yarn, whose smoothness enables it to be conveniently combined with silk, and so well adapted for braids, fringes, &c.

gendarme (as zhaṅ-darm′), s. [Fr.]

1. Lit.: One of the armed police of France. They are divided into horse and foot gendarmes. They are all picked men, and are usually selected from the military forces for their courage and good character. They are divided into brigades, and a number of brigades form a departmental company.

"When the Peers withdrew, it seems the proofs about his design of raising the North, or the city, or of the killing the gendarmes, did not satisfy them."—Burnet: Hist. of the Reformation (an. 1551).

¶ The gens-d'armes were originally the king's horse-guards only, but afterwards the king's gardes-du-corps; the musketeers and light-horse were reckoned among them. There was also a company of gentlemen (in number about 250) bearing this name.

2. Fig.: (See extract).

"Pollinger and his followers were nearly brought to a standstill by one of those projecting pieces of rock which are called gendarmes; apparently from their frequently stopping travellers."—Saturday Review, Feb. 17, 1883, p. 208.

gendarmerie (zhaṅ-darm′-rĕ), ǧĕn-dar′-mĕr-ў, * gen-darm-or-y, * gen-dar-mour-ie, s. [Fr. gendarmerie.]

* 1. A body of armed men.

"To have the gendarmery and bands of horsemen . . . in a readiness."—Strype: Memorials, 1551.

2. The body of gendarmes.

ǧĕn-dą-rŭs′-są, s. [A corruption of the Indian name.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe or section Gendarusseæ (q.v.). The only known species, Gendarussa vulgaris, is from India. When its leaves and stalks are rubbed, they emit a not unpleasant smell. After being roasted they are given in India in chronic rheumatism with swelling of the joints. (Lindley.) ǧĕn-da-rŭs′-sĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gendarussa(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe or section of Acanthaceæ.

* gende, a. [GENT, a.] ǧĕn′-dĕr (1), * gen-dre, * gen-er, * gen-dyr, s. [Fr. genre, from Lat. genere, ablat. sing. of genus = a kind, a kin; Ital. genere = kind; Sp. & Port. genero.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. A kind, a sort, a class.

"Our bodies are our gardens . . . If we will supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many, the power or corrigible authority of this lies in our will."—Shakesp.: Othello, i. 3.

* 2. A class or rank of people.

"Why, to a public court I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bear him."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 7.

* 3. A sex.

4. In the same sense as II.

II. Gram.: One of those classes or categories into which words are divided according to the sex, natural or figurative, of the objects which they represent; a class of words distinguished by similarity of ending, such ending marking a distinction in sex, as seen in adjectives, nouns, participles, &c.; a grammatical category in which words of a similar ending are classed together. In English, words denoting males are said to be of the masculine gender, those denoting females of the feminine gender, and those denoting things of no sex of the neuter gender. Grammatical gender is that which is marked by different terminations, as dominus (m.), domina (f.). Grammatical gender existed in Anglo-Saxon, but went out of use gradually after the Norman Conquest.

"Gender is a grammatical distinction, and applies to words only. Sex is a natural distinction, and applies to living objects."—Morris: Outlines of English Accidence, § 66.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between gender and sex: "Gender signifies properly a genus or kind; sex signifies the habit or nature. The gender is that distinction in words which marks the distinction of sex in things: there are, therefore, three genders, but only two sexes. By the inflections of words is denoted whether things are of this or that sex, or of no sex. The genders, therefore, are divided in grammar into masculine, feminine, and neuter; and things are divided into male and female sex." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

ǧĕn′-dĕr (2), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Music: A Javanese musical instrument, introduced into England by Sir Stamford Raffles. It consists of a row of parallel metallic plates supported horizontally by two strings passed through the respective nodal lines of the plates. Underneath each plate is an upright bamboo, containing a column of air of such a height as to reciprocate the sound of the plate above.

ǧĕn′-dĕr, * gen-dre, v.t. & i. [A contr. form of engender (q.v.).]

* A. Transitive:

1. To beget, to produce.

"And all old Ocean genders in his round."
Thomson: Castle of Indolence, i. 34.

2. To produce, to cause; to give rise or origin to; to breed.

"Foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strife."—2 Timothy ii. 23.

* B. Intrans.: To breed, to copulate.

"A cistern for foul toads To gender in." Shakesp.: Othello, iv. 2.

* ǧĕn′-dĕr-ĕr, * gen-drer, s. [Eng. gender, v.; -er.] One who begets or gives birth to; an engenderer.

"His fadir and modir, gendrers of hym."—Wyclife: Zechariah xiii. 3.

ǧĕn′-dĕr-ĭng, * gen-drynge, pr. par., a., & s. [GENDER, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of engendering; the thing engendered.

"I . . . bebelde . . . his gendrynge in his kyndes."
Chaucer: House of Fame, ii. 457.

* ǧĕn′-drûre, s. [O. Fr. (en)gendrure.]

I. The act of begetting or procreating.

"The sinewis of his stones of gendrure ben foldid togidere."—Wyclife: Job xl. 12.

2. That which is engendered; produce, issue.

"Gentille gendrure to make."
Robert de Brunne, p. 253.

ǧĕn-ĕ-ą-ǧĕn′-ĕ-sĭs, s. [Gr. γενεά (genea) = race, stock, family, and γένεσις (genesis) = origin, source.]

Biol.: The same as PARTHENOGENESIS (q.v.).

ǧĕn-ĕ-ą-lŏǧ′-ĭc-al, * ǧĕn-ĕ-ą-lŏǧ′-ĭc (or ǧĕn-ē as ǧē-nē), a. [Eng. genealog(y); -ic, -ical.]

1. Of or pertaining to the descent of families; exhibiting the succession of families from a progenitor.

"There are many incidental verities, historical, geographical, genealogical, chronological, &c."—Waterland: Works, viii. 106.

2. According to the descent of a person or family from an ancestor: as, a genealogical order.

"The golden fruit of true patriotism, real personal greatness, and nobility unindebted to a genealogical table."—V. Knox: Letters to a Young Nobleman, let. 55.

genealogical-tree, s. The genealogy or succession of a family from a progenitor drawn out in the figure of a tree, with the root, stem, branches, &c.

ġe-nĕ-a-lŏġ'-ĭe-al-lȳ, adv. [Eng. genealogical; -ly.] In a genealogical manner; according to genealogy.

ġĕ-nĕ-ăl'-ô-ġĭst, s. [Eng. genealog(y); -ist; Fr. généalogiste; Sp. & Port. genealogista.] One who is skilled in tracing the genealogy or descent of families.

"With whatever delight the Cumbrian genealogist might pursue the line of his ancestry."—Lord Teignmouth: Life of Sir W. Jones.

ġĕ-nĕ-ăl'-ô-ġĭze, v.i. [Eng. genealog(y); -ize.] To investigate or trace the genealogies or descents of families.

ġĕ-nĕ-ăl'-ô-ġȳ, ġĕ-nĕ-ăl'-ô-ġĭe, ge-nel-o-gie, s. [Fr. généalogie, from Lat. genealogia, from Gr. γενεαλογία (genealogia) = an account of a family: γενεά (genea) = birth, race, descent, and λογία (logia) = an account; λόγος (logos) = a discourse; λέγω (logō) = to tell, to speak of; Ital. & Sp. genealogia.]

I. The history or account of the succession of families; an enumeration or exhibition of descent in the natural order of succession; a pedigree.

"This is the genelogie from S. Margarete the quene Of kynges hi & bi in kynde that has bene."
Robert de Brunne, p. 111.

2. A pedigree, a lineage; the descent of a family from a progenitor.

"The ancients ranged chaos into several regions; and in that order sucessively rising one from another, as if it was a pedigree or genealogy."—Burnet: Theory of the Earth.

* 3. Offspring, generation.

"Their several wives, and a joyous genealogy out of them."—Sterne: Sentimental Journey; The Supper.

ġĕn'-ĕ-arch, s. [Gr. γένος (genos) = a race, a tribe, and ἄρχω (archō) = to rule, to govern.] The governor of a tribe; the chief of a family.

ġĕn'-ĕr, s. [Fr geare.] [Gender, s.] A gender, in grammar.

"How mony generes is thare in ane pronowne?"—Vaus: Rudiment, Dd. iiij. b.

ġĕn'-ĕr, v.t. [Lat. genero, from genus (genit. generis) = a race. To gender, to generate.

ġĕn'-ĕr-a, s. pl. [Lat.] The plural of genus (q.v.).

ġĕn-ĕr-a-bĭl-ĭ-tȳ, s. [Eng. generable; -ity.] Capability of being generated or produced.

ġĕn'-ĕr-a-ble, a. [Lat. generabilis, from genero = to beget; Ital. generabile; Sp. generable.] Capable of being begotten, produced, or generated.

"But we speak here of the original life of the soul itself, that this is substantial, neither generable nor corruptible."—Cudworth: Intellectual System, p. 862.

ġĕn'-ĕr-al, gen-er-all, gen-er-alle, a., adv., & s. [Fr. général, from Lat. generalis = pertaining to a genus or race; genus (genit. generis) = a race; Sp. general; Ital. generale.]

A. As adjective:

1. Relating or pertaining to a whole genus, kind, class, or order; not special; not particular.

"They, because some have been admitted without trial, make that fault general which is particular."—Whitgifte.

* 2. Collective.

"Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., iii. 2.

3. Relating or pertaining to the whole community; public, common.

"Nor failed they to express how much they praised,
That for the general safety he despised
His own." Milton: P. L., ii. 481.

4. Common to many or the majority; extensive, though not universal.

"A writer of tragedy must certainly adapt himself more to the general taste."—Mason: Elfrida (Introd. Letters).

5. Not directed to any single or particular object; taking in the whole: as, To take a general view of a subject.

6. Lax in signification; not confined to any particular or special use or import; not specific; indefinite, vague.

"Where the author speaks more strictly and particularly on any theme, it will explain the more loose and general expressions."—Watts.

7. Not restrained by narrow or distinctive limitations; wide.

"No general characters of parties (call them either sects or churches) can be so fully and exactly drawn, as to comprehend all the several members of them; at least all such as are received under that denomination."—Dryden: Hind & Panther. (Pref.)

8. Common, usual, ordinary.

"I've been bold,
For that I knew it the most general way."
Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, ii. 2.

9. In all; taken or viewed as a whole or in the gross.

"His general behaviour vain, ridiculous."—Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1.

* B. As adv.: Generally, commonly.

"Should go so general current."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., iv. 1.

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The whole; that which comprehends or includes all, or the chief part; that which is general; opposed to particular; general principles.

"To conclude from particulars to generals is a false way of arguing."—Broome.

* 2. The public, the community; the general body of the people.

"'Twas caviare to the general."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 2.

* 3. That which is general or common to all.

"All our abilities, . . .
Severals and generals of grace."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, i. 3.

4. In the same sense as II. 2 (1).

"The war's whole art each private soldier knows,
And with a general's love of conquest glows."
Addison: The Campaign, 296.

* 5. A leader, a chief.

"The general of your woes."
Shakesp.: Romeo & Juliet, v. 3.

II. Technically:

1. Eccles.: The chief or head of an order, or of all the houses or congregations established under the same rule.

"After the bishops come the mitred abbots . . . with the generals of the religious orders."—Dr. H. Vaughan: Fear of Preparation for Vatican Council, ch. iii.

2. Military:

(1) One of the chief military officers of a country or government; the commander of an army or of a division or brigade; a general officer. They are known in order of rank as Generals, Lieutenant-Generals, Major-Generals and Brigadier-Generals.

(2) A general drum-call beaten in the morning, to give notice to the infantry to be ready to march. [Generale, (2).]

* 3. Naut.: An admiral.

"Amongst which ships (being all of small burthen) there was one so well liked, which also had no man in her, as being brought unto the generall [Sir F. Drake], he thought good to make stay of her for the service."—Sir F. Drake: West India Voyage, p. 5.

¶ In general, * In the general, * For the general: In the main; generally speaking; as a rule; for the most part.

"The cloth, in general, will resist water for some time; but that which has the strougest glaze will resist longest."—Cook: Third Voyage, bk. ii., ch. xi.

¶ General is commonly affixed to words expressive of rank or office; with the force of highest or senior: as, Adjutant-General, Attorney-General, Postmaster-General, Solicitor-General, Vicar-General, &c. (See these words.)

general-agent, s.

Law: A person authorized by his principal to sign all contracts, execute all deeds, and act in every way as his agent.

General Assembly, s.

Ecclesiol.: The highest court in the Established and Free Churches of Scotland. It meets statedly once a year for the purpose of receiving reports from the several committees, appeals from the synods, &c. It coosists of a certain number of representatives, one-half of them ministers, the other half elders, from the several presbyteries. It is presided over by a moderator, who is elected by votes at the commencement of each assembly.

general-bass, s.

Music: Thorough bass.

general-charge, s.

Scots Law: A charge the use of which is to cause the heir either to represent his ancestor or to renounce the succession.

general-council, s.

Ch. Hist.: [Council, Œcumenical].

general-court, s. A court of legislature.

general-dealer, s. One who deals in all the articles of daily use, instead of confining himself to one particular branch of trade.

general-demurrer, s.

Law: [Demurrer].

general-issue, s.

Law: An issue which traverses and denies at once the whole declaration, without offering any special matter whereby to evade it.

"As in trespass, non culpabilis, not guilty; in debt upon contract, nunquam indebitatus, that he never was indebted; in debt on bond, non est factum, it is not his deed; on an assumpsit, non assumpsit, he made no such promise: or in an action on a warranty, that he did not warrant, or on an agreement, that he did not agree. These pleas are called the general issue, because, by inporting an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the declaration, they amount at once to an issue: by which we mean a fact affirmed on one side and denied on the other."—Blackstone: Comment., bk. iii., ch. 11.

general-lien, s.

Law: The right to detain a chattel, &c., until payment be made not only for the particular article, but of any balance that may be due on a general account in the same line of business.

general-officer, s.

Mil.: An officer commanding an army, a division, or a brigade; a general.

general post-office, s. [Post-office.]

general-service, s.

Scots Law: A form of service carrying such heritable rights belonging to the ancester as do not require sasine, or such as were personally vested in him, no sasine having been taken on them by the ancestor, and it carries all that by the law goes to the heir-at-law. [Service.]

general-ship, s.

Naut.: A ship advertised by the owners as a general carrier, and not under special contract to any particular merchant or merchants.

general special-charge, s.

Scots Law: A writ passing the Signet, the object of which is to supply the place of a general service, and to vest, by a fiction of law, those subjects which would have required a general-service to have vested them in the heir.

general-staff, s.

Mil.: The staff of an army. [Staff.]

general-tail, s.

Law: An estate-tail where one parent only is specified whence the issue must be derived.

general-term, s.

Logic: A term which is the sign of a general conception or notion.

¶ General term of a series: That term from which any term whatever may be deduced, by assigning proper values to the arbitrary constants which enter it.

general-warrant, s.

Law: A warrant to apprehend all suspected persons, without naming any particular individual. The last general-warrant issued in England was that on which Wilkes was committed to the Tower, on April 30, 1763, for his attack on the king's speech in No. 45 of the North Briton.

"This warrant is unconstitutional, illegal and absolutely void: it is a general-warrant directed to four messengers, to take up any persons without naming or describing them with any certainty, and to apprehend them together with their papers."—Lord Camden: Charge to the Jury in Wilkes' case. (Dec. 6, 1764.)

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between general and universal: "The general is to the universal what the part is to the whole. What is general includes the greater part or number: what is universal includes every individual or part. The general rule admits of many exceptions: the universal rule admits of none. Human government has the general good for its object: the government of Providence is directed to universal good. General is opposed to particular, and universal to individual." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

ġĕn-ĕr-ā'-lĕ (pl. gĕn-ĕr-ā'-lĭ-a) (1), s. [Lat. neut. sing. of generalis = general.]

1. That which is general.

2. The usual commons in a religious house.

3. (Pl.): Generalities; general terms.

"Destined to serve as the generalia or first principles of the various arts."—J. S. Mill. (Ogilvie.)

ġĕn'-ĕr-ale (2), s. [Fr.]

Milit.: Formerly a beat of drum for the assembly of all the troops preparatory to a march or to going into action. When beaten unexpectedly it was the signal for the whole of the troops to assemble at the alarm-posts. (Voyle.)

"Hurrah, boys! the morning of battle has come,
And the generale's beating on many a drum."
Davis: Battle-Eve of the Brigade.

ġĕn'-ĕr-al-ĕss, s. [Eng. general; -ess.] A female general or commander.

"He hastily nominates generalesses." — Carlyle: French Revolution, pt. i., bk. vii., § 5.

ġĕn'-ĕr-al-ĭşm, s. [Eng. general; -ism.]

1. A general conclusion.

2. A platitude.

"He began with generalisms about humility."—Burton: City of the Saints, ch. v ĕn-ĕr-al-ĭs'-sĭ-mō, s. [Ital. & Sp.; Fr. généralissime.] A commander-in-chief; the chief commander of an army consisting of two or more grand divisions under separate generals. The term is not now in use in the British army.

"In case of any foreign invasion, the King was by law to be generalissimo, to command the people for their own safety."—Ludlow: Memoirs; King Charles's Case.

ġĕn-ĕr-ăl'-ĭ-tў, * gen-er-al-i-tie, s. [Fr. généralité, from Lat. generalitas, from generalis = general; Sp. generalidad; Ital. generalità.]

* 1. The state of being general; the quality of including species or particulars.

"Generalité. Generality, generalluess."—Cotgrave.

2. A general statement; a statement which is not specific, but applies to a whole class taken collectively; a statement which is not confined to any one particular case.

"To conclude under one consideration a specialtie and a generalitie."—Bp. Gardiner: Of the Presence of the Sacrament, fo. 53.

3. The main body; the bulk; the greatest part; the majority.

"The generality of men are prone to approve the laws and rules directing to justice, sincerity, and beneficence."—Barrow, vol. ii., ser. 7.

* 4. (Pl.): General affairs; the interests of the general public.

* 5. A district governed by a general.

ġĕn'-ĕr-al-īz-a-ble, a. [Eng. generalize); -able.] That may or can be generalized or reduced under a general rule, or referred to a particular class or genus.

"Extreme cases are, ipso nomine, not generalizable."—Coleridge. (Webster.)

ġĕn-ĕr-al-ĭz-ā'-tion, ġĕn-ĕr-al-ĭş-ā'-tion, s. [Fr. généralisation; Sp. generalizacion.] [GENERALIZE.]

1. The act or process of generalizing; the act of making general, or of bringing several objects agreeing in some point under a common or general name, head, or class; an extending from particulars to generals.

"This has led some philosophers to suppose that another faculty besides abstraction, to which they have given the name of generalization, is necessary to account for the formation of genera and species."—Stewart: On the Human Mind, pt. iv., § 1.

2. A general inference.

ġĕn'-ĕr-al-ize, v.t. & i. [Fr. généraliser; Sp. generalizar, from Lat. generalis = general (q.v.).]

A. Transitive:

1. To reduce to or arrange in a genus; to view in relation to a genus or genera; to bring, as a particular fact or series of facts, into relation with a wider circle of facts.

"The mind, therefore, makes its utmost endeavours to generalize its ideas, begins early with such as are most familiar, comes in time to those that are less so."—Bolingbroke: Essay on Human Knowledge, § 5.

2. To deduce or infer as a general principle from many particulars.

"A mere conclusion, generalized from a multitude of facts."—Coleridge. (Webster.)

B. Intrans.: To employ oneself in generalization; to generalize objects.

ġĕn'-ĕr-al-lў, * gen-er-al-i, * gen-er-al-liche, * gen-er-al-lye, adv. [Eng. general; -ly.]

1. In general; without specification or exact limitation.

"Generally we would not have those who read this work of Sylva Sylvarum, account it strange that we have set down particulars untried."—Bacon: Sylva Sylvarum. (Pref.)

2. Collectively; in a body; not partially or severally, but universally.

"I counsel that all Israel be generally gathered unto thee."—2 Samuel xvii. 11.

3. In the main; in general; for the most or greatest part; mainly, principally.

"Look, when you will, into sessions-papers, and other accounts of bad people, who have suffered for their crimes, and you will generally find they began by neglecting the sabbath."—Gilpin: Works, vol. ii., ser. 30.

4. In the main; without minute detail.

"Those who are driven into the fold are, generally speaking, rather made hypocrites than converts."—Dryden: Hind & Panther. (Pref.)

5. Ordinarily, commonly, usually.

¶ For the difference between generally and commonly, see COMMONLY.

 ġĕn'-ĕr-al-nĕss, s. [Eng. general; -ness.]

1. The quality or state of being general; wide extent, though short of universality.

"They had, with a general consent, rather springing by the generalness of the cause than of any artificial practice, set themselves in arms."—Sidney.

2. Commonness, frequency, usualness.

ġĕn'-ĕr-al-shĭp, s. [Eng. general; -ship.]

1. The office or rank of a general; command as a general.

"Thus those fifteen hundred horse which marched northward, within very few days were brought to nothing; and the generalship of the Lord Digby to an end."—Clarendon: Civil War, ii. 718.

2. A title of respect addressed to a general.

"Your generalship puts me in mind of Prince Eugene when he fought the Turks at the battle of Belgrade."—Goldsmith: She Stoops to Conquer, ii.

3. The skill of a general; military skill exhibited in the management of troops and the conduct of war; strategical skill.

"Cicero laughs, in one of his letters, at his generalship."—Bolingbroke: Letters on History.

4. The discharge of the functions of a general.

5. Judicious or skilful tactics or management generally.

 ġĕn'-ĕr-al-tў, s. [Eng. general; -ty.] The whole; the totality.

"The municipal laws of this kingdom are of a vast extent, and include in their generality all those several laws which are allowed as the rule of justice and judicial proceedings."—Hale: Prim. Orig. of Mankind.

ġĕn'-ĕr-ant, a. & s. [Lat. generans, pr. par. of generō = to beget, to gender (q.v.).]

A. As adjective:

* I. Ord. Lang.: Begetting, producing, generative.

"In such pretended generations the generant or active principle is supposed to be the sun, which, being an inanimate body, cannot act otherwise than by his heat."—Ray: On the Creation, pt. ii.

II. Math.: Acting as a generaut (q.v.).

B. As substantive:

I. Ord. Lang.: That which generates, begets, or produces; the generative principle or power.

"Some believe the soul made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant."—Glanvill: Scepsis Scientifica, ch. iii.

II. Math.: That which by its motion generates or is conceived as generating a line, figure, or solid body; thus, a circle revolving about its diameter as an axis is the generant of a sphere. [GENERATION.]

ġĕn'-ĕr-āte, v.t. & i. [Lat. generatus, pa. par. of genero = to produce; genus (genit. generis) = a race, offspring.]

A. Transitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. To beget, to propagate, to procreate.

2. To produce or bring into life; to give existence to.

3. To cause to be; to produce. (Of material things.)

4. To cause, to produce; to give origin or rise to. (Of immaterial things.)

"Yet we ought to remember that it is the nature of injustice to generate injustice." — Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xvi.

II. Math.: To trace out or form as a line, figure, or solid body by the motion of a point or a magnitude of inferior order.

"If a mathematical surface be moved according to a mathematical law, the volume swept over by it, in its motion, is said to be generated by it, and is a mathematical solid or volume."—Davies & Peck: Mathem. Dictionary.

 B. Intrans.: To beget, propagate, or procreate.

"Those creatures which being wild generate seldom, being tame, generate often."—Bacon.

ġĕn'-ĕr-āt-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GENERATE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or process of begetting, producing, or originating.

generating-function, s.

Math.: A term used by Laplace, in solving equations of differences, to denote any function of x considered with reference to the coefficients of its expansion in powers of x.

generating-line, or figure, s.

Math.: A line or figure by the motion of which a figure or solid is conceived to be generated or described.

generating-surface, s. The heating surface of a boiler; that on which heat is applied to generate steam.

ġĕn-ĕr-ā'-tion, * gen-er-a-cioun, * gen er-a-cyon, s. [Fr. génération, from Lat. generatio, from generatus, pa. par. of genero = to generate; Sp. generacion; Ital. generazione; Port. geraçâo.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of begetting, procreating or producing.

"So fertile be the floods in generation."
Spenser: F. Q., IV. xii. 1.

* 2. The act of producing, causing or giving rise or existence to.

"Seals make excellent impressions: and so it may be thought of sounds in their first generation."—Bacon.

* 3. Progeny; offspring; issue.

"The barbarous Scythian,
Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighboured." Shakesp.: Lear, I. 1.

4. A single succession or step in natural descent, as the children of the same parents; an age or period between one succession and another.

"Four generations of Stuarts had waged a war to the death with four generations of Puritans."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vii.

5. The people of the same period or age; those living at the same time.

"O faithless and perverse generation, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?"—Luke ix. 41.

* 6. A family; a race.

"Thy mother's of my generation."
Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, I. 1.

* 7. A pedigree, lineage, or descent.

"Thus from the fact of Lot, we derive the generation of Ruth, and blessed Nativity of our Saviour."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. v., ch. xxi.

* 8. An age.

"Every where throughout all generations and ages of the Christian world, no church ever perceived the word of God to be against it."—Hooker: Eccles. Polity.

II. Technically:

1. Math.: The formation of any magnitude by the motion of a point, or a magnitude of an inferior order. Thus, if a point move in accordance with any mathematical law, the path which it traces out is said to be generated by the point, and is a mathematical line. If a mathematical line be moved in accordance with a mathematical law, the surface in which it is always found is said to be generated by the line, and is always a mathematical surface. The moving point or magnitude is called the generatrix, and the law according to which the motion takes place is called the law of generation. (Davies & Peck.)

2. Phys. Anat.: The function which has for its object the propagation of the species, generation, presents many points of resemblance in plants and animals. In the former it is cryptogamic, or phanerogamic; in the latter non-sexual or sexual. In the cryptogamic and non-sexual generation, the new individual is developed by a separation of particles from the body of the parent, by which the new formation is nourished until it has so far matured as to be capable of an independent existence. (Todd & Bowman: Phys. Anat., vol. i., introd. p. 25.)

¶ (1) Alternation of generation, alternate generation.]

Biol.: [ALTERNATION].

(2) Equivocal, or Spontaneous generation:

Biol.: The view that some of the lower animals or plants, or the primordial form of one or other, or both of the animal and vegetable kingdoms may have sprung from lifeless matter without the intervention of any previously existing parent. Alleged instances of such equivocal generation were shown to be unfounded, but essentially the same view has been revived as an hypothesis by Hæckel and some evolutionists. It is called by Huxley abiogenesis (q.v.). For other kinds of generation, see Fissiparous, Gemmiparous, Larviparous, Oviparous, Pupiparous, and Viviparous

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between generation and age: "Those who are born at the same time constitute a generation; that period of time which comprehends the age of man is the age; there may therefore be many generations spring up in the course of an age; a fresh generation is springing up every day, which in the course of an age pass away, and are succeeded by fresh generations." (Eng. Synon.)

ġĕn'-ĕr-ā-tĭve, a. [Fr. générutif, from Lat. generatus, pa. par. of genero = to generate; Sp., Port., & Ital. generativo.]

I. Having the power or property of generating, procreating, or producing; pertaining to generation or production.

"They have the seed of regeneration by the ministerie of the church, which vseth to that end and purpose not onely the word, but the sacraments, both having generative force and vertue."—Hooker: Eccles. Polity, bk. v., § 59.

2. Prolific; fruitful.

"If there hath been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty upon the earth, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables?"—Bentley. (Todd).

generative-tissue, s.

Bot.: The same as FORMATIVE-TISSUE (q.v.).

ġĕn'-ĕr-ā-tŏr, s. [Lat., from generatus, pa. par. of genero = to generate; Fr. générateur; Ital. generatore.]

I. Ord. Lang.: One who or that which begets, generates, produces, or propagates; a propagator or procreator.

"Imagination assimilates the idea of the generator into the reality in the thing engendered."—Browne: Vulgar Errours.

II. Technically:

1. Aërated Water: An apparatus for generating carbonic-acid gas for charging soda-fountains, or bottles with aërated water.

2. Chem.: A term used to denote the elements or compounds from which a more complex substance is obtained. Thus ethyl, alcohol, and acetic acid are the generators of acetic ether; and benzoic acid and glycocoll are the generators of hippuric acid. By the action of acids or alkalies these substances can be resolved into their generators, and so the constitution of a complex body can be determined; thus, lecithin, a constituent of the brain, has the formula $C_{44}H_{90}N{\cdot}P{\cdot}O_9$; it has six generators, glycerin, phosphoric acid, stearic acid, glycol, methyl alcohol, and ammonia; therefore it is found to be a distearate glycerophosphate of choline, and choline has been found to be a trimethyl oxyethyl ammonium hydrate $(CH_3)_3N{\cdot}CH_2{\cdot}OH{\cdot}CH_2{\cdot}OH$.

3. Distill.: A retort in which volatile hydrocarbons are distilled from liquid or solid matters.

4. Music: A ground note, fundamental bass, root, derivative. The principal sound or sounds by which others are produced, as the lower c for the treble of the harpsichord, which beside its octave will strike an attentive ear with its twelfth above or c in alt, and with its fifteenth above or c in alt.

5. Steam: A vessel in which steam is generated from water, for use in a steam-engine, a heating apparatus, &c. The term was first applied to the Perkins steam-boiler, in which water in small quantity was heated to a high temperature. It is now specifically applied to a class of instantaneous generators. The name is now rapidly coming into use for all apparatus for generating steam, being held to be more correct than the usual term. [STEAM-BOILER.]

ġĕn'-ĕr-ą-trĭx, s. [Lat.]

Math.: A point, line, or figure which by its motion generates a line, figure, or solid.

ġĕ-nĕr'-ĭc, a. [Lat. gener(is) (genit. of genus) = a class, a kind; Eng. adj. suff. -ic; Fr. générique; Ital. & Sp. generico.]

I. Pertaining to a genus, class, or kind; comprehending the genus as distinct from the species or from another genus: as, a generic description, that is, the description of a genus; a generic difference, a difference in genus; a generic name, a denomination which comprehends all the species belonging to a particular genus, as of animals, plants, &c.; thus Felis is the generic name of animals of the cat kind, Canis of those of the dog kind, &c.

"Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit; yet this is but a general or generick difference."—Watts: Logick.

2. Very wide, comprehensive, or extensive; pertaining to large or comprehensive classes.

"This is a generic term, applicable to every sort of mental enjoyment indiscriminately."—Cogan: On the Passions, vol. ii., dis. iii., ch. i.

generic-area, s.

Bot., Zool., & Geog.: An area to which a genus is limited. When there is one spot within this area where representatives of the genus abound more than they do in other parts of it, this is called its metropolis.

* ġĕ-nĕr'-ĭc-ąl, a. [Lat. gener(is), genit. of genus = a kind; Eng. adj. suff. -ical.] The same as GENERIC (q.v.).

ġĕ-nĕr'-ĭc-ąl-lў, adv. [Eng. generical; -ly.] With regard to genus or generic characteristics.

"They are of the very specific gravity with those to which they are so generically allied."—Woodward.

ġĕ-nĕr'-ĭc-ąl-nĕss, s. [Eng. generical; -ness.] The quality or state of being generical.

"The question in dispute has no relation to the genericalness of the objects on which we think, but to the genericalness of thinking itself."—Answer to Clarke's Third Defence.

* ġĕ-nĕr-ĭf-ĭ-cā'-tion, s. [Lat. genus (genit. generis) = a kind, a class, and focio = to make.] The act of generalizing; generalization.

ġĕn-ĕr-ŏs'-ĭ-tў, s. [Fr. générosité, from Lat. generositas, from generosus = of noble birth; genus (genit. generis) = race, family; Sp. generosidad; Ital. generosità.] [GENEROUS.]

* I. Illustrious; of noble descent or birth.

"Their eyes are commonly black and small, noses little, nails almost as long as their fingers, but serving to distinguish their generosity."—Harris: Voyages, vol. i., p. 465.

2. In the ethical sense: That nobility of character which was once supposed to go with nobility of descent, but which is now known not to depend on birth, but to be present in certain individuals in all ranks of society, and absent from others of the high as well as the low.

"Generosity is the part of a soul raised above the vulgar. There is in it something of what we admire in heroes, and praise with a degree of rapture."—Goldsmith: The Bee, No. 3.

3. Liberality, munificence.

ġĕn'-ĕr-ŏŭs, a. [Fr. généreux, from Lat. generosus, from genus (genit. generis) = race, family; Sp., Port., & Ital. generoso.]

* I. Of illustrious or noble birth, descent, or extraction; nobly-born.

"The generous and gravest citizens Have hent the gates."
Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, iv. 6.

2. Noble, honourable, magnanimous; high-minded. (Of persons.)

"All men affect to seem generous, and will say, they scorn to be base."—Barrow, vol. i., ser. 19.

3. Noble, honourable, worthy of a high-minded person. (Of things.)

"And Edith lent her generous aid,
And wept, and Lorn for mercy prayed."
Scott: Lord of the Isles, ii. 25.

4. High-spirited; possessed of or showing high-breeding or blood.

"Actæon spies
His opening hounds, and now he hears their cries:
A generous pack."
Addison: Ovid; Metamorphoses iii.

5. Full of spirit or strength; strong, heating.

"The phlegm, even in this generous wine, was copious."—Boyle.

6. Full, overflowing, abundant: as, a generous table.

7. Liberal, munificent, openhanded, bountiful.

"Generous and charitable, prompt to serve."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vii.

8. Characterized by or manifesting liberality or munificence: as, a generous gift or action.

¶ For the difference between generous and beneficent, see BENEFICENT.

ġĕn'-ĕr-ŏŭs-lў, adv. [Eng. generous; -ly.]

1. With nobility of mind or character; nobly, magnanimously.

"Despise money generously, and forgive your enemy bravely."—Bp. Taylor: Sermons, vol. iii., ser. 10.

2. In a generous, liberal, or munificent manner; with generosity; liberally, freely, bountifully.

"'Tis better generously bestowed on those Than left the plunder of our country's foes."
Pope: Homer; Iliad xviii. 351.

* ġĕn'-ĕr-ŏŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. generous; -ness.] The quality or state of being generous; generosity, nobility, highmindedness, liberality.

"Had I not been encouraged by that generousness and sweetness of disposition."—Wilkie: Mercury. (Dedic.)

* ġĕ-nē'-şĭ ąl, a. [Eng. genesi(s); adj. suff. -al.] Of or pertaining to generation.

* ġĕ-nĕ-şĭ-ŏl'-ŏ-ġў, s. [Gr. γένεσις (genesis) = origin, source, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse.] The science or doctrines of generation.

ġĕn'-ĕ-şĭs, s. [Gr. γένεσις (genesis) = origin, source, birth, production, generation, creation, &c., from the obsolete root of γένω (genō), superseded by γεννάω (gennaō) = to beget, to engender, causal of γεγομαι (gignomai) = to come into being, to be born, to be produced.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of begetting, producing, or giving origin to; imagination; origin, source, beginning.

"The origin and genesis of poor Sterling's club."—Carlyle: Life of Sterling.

2. An explanation of the origin or source of anything.

3. Production.

"If the blood becomes choked with inert matter, there necessarily results a decreased genesis of motion."—Herbert Spencer: Psychol. (2nd ed.), i. 5.

4. In the same sense as II. 2.

II. Technically:

1. Math.: A term formerly used, meaning the same as generation. In the genesis of figures, the moving magnitude or point is called the describent; the guiding line of the motion is called the dirigent. [GENERATION, II. 1.]

2. Script. Canon: The first book of the Pentateuch, of the Old Testament, and of the Bible. In the Hebrew original, as well as in the Septuagint and all modern versions, it occupies this place. It is called in Hebrew בְּרֵאשִׁית (bereshith), which is its initial word, correctly translated in the authorised English version, "In the beginning." The opening chapter narrates the creation by God of this earth and all worlds (i. 1-16); ch. ii. 1-3 should have been added to this chapter. Chapters ii. 4—end to xi. 9, are occupied with archaic events in the history of the human race generally. At xi. 10 a genealogy begins, designed to give the pedigree of Abram or Abraham, "the father of the faithful," divinely selected from an idolatrous race and family (Joshua xxiv. 2) to found a race (the chosen Jewish one) who should be the special depositaries and defenders of true religion against other races more or less apostate or unenlightened. The remainder of the book gives the history of Abraham, and those of his immediate descendants who were special heirs of the promises made to him—viz., Isaac, Jacob, and the twelve patriarchs (Heb. xi. 9). Counting only from the creation of Adam to the last event in Genesis (the death of Joseph), the space of time is vast; but as the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and the Samaritan Pentateuchs all differ as to certain numbers, the exact amount cannot be stated.

The Jewish and, following it, the early Christian Church almost unanimously pronounced Moses the author of the work, deriving his knowledge of the events prior to his time either from direct revelation or from prior documents consulted under Divine guidance. In A.D. 1753 Astruc, an eminent French medical professor, attempted to point out two such documents, distinguishable by the fact that in one the Divine Being is called almost always אֱלֹהִים (Elohim), while in the other he is named יְהוָה (Jehovah). On the revival of this hypothesis in the present century, Hengstenberg and others contended against it, maintaining that in every case there was a reason why the Divine name which we find in the particular verse was chosen. Most critical scholars adhere to the opinion of Astruc, and perpetually speak of the Elohist—i.e., the writer who habitually calls God Elohim (q.v.)—and the Jehovist, who designates him Jehovah (q.v.). Hupfield and Boehmer assign the composition of Genesis to five writers: the Elohist, the second Elohist, the Jehovists, and the Later Editor or Compiler. Colenso reduces the five to four, making the second Elohist and the first Jehovist the same person, writing at different periods of his life. The bishop gives the following as probable dates of the several writers in Genesis, who, he thinks, possibly were the prophets whose names are appended:—

The first Elohist	B.C. 1100 to 1000	Samuel.
The second Elohist and first Jehovist	1060 to 1010	Nathan.
The second Jehovist	1035	Gad.
The Deuteronomist	641 to 621	Jeremiah.

There are many expressions common to the first Elohist and Ezekiel.

Omitting fractions of verses the following are the portions of Genesis attributed to the first Elohist, and they form a continuous narrative:—

Chapters i. ii. 1-3; v. vi. 9-11, 17-22; vii. 6-9, 11, 13-16, 18, 19, 21-24; viii. 1-5, 13-19; ix. 1-17, 28, 29; xi. 10-26, 31, 32; xii. 4-6, 12; xiii. 6, 12; xvi. 1, 3, 15, 16; xvii. 1-27; xix. 29; xxi. 2-5; xxiii. 1-20; xxv. 7-17, 19-21, 24-26; xxvi. 34, 35; xxviii. 1-9; xxix. 24, 29, 32-34; xxx. 1, 4, 13, 17-24; xxxi. 18; xxxv. 9-16, 19, 20, 22-29; xxxvi. 1-19, 31-40; xxxvii. 1, 2, 28, 36; xlvi. 6-27; xlvii. 7-11, 27, 28; xlviii. 3-7; xlix. 1, 29.

The second Jehovist is believed to have written little but ch. xiv.

The Deuteronomist is credited with—

Chapters vi. 4; x. 8-12; xv. 1-21; xviii. 18, 19; xxii. 14-18; xxiv. 59, 60; xxvi. 4, 5; xxxv. 8.

The rest of the book is attributed to the first Jehovist. The bishop believed the work unhistorical, though in no respect fraudulent. But the immense majority of Christians in this and other countries firmly hold that this old and venerable book was composed by Moses under the guidance of Divine inspiration, and that it is in every part of unimpeachable authority.

3. Biol.: The word is often used as the second element of a compound, as in biogenesis, biogenesis, homogenesis, heterogenesis, xenogenesis, &c. (q.v.).

ġĕn'-ĕt (1), gen-net, gen-ette (1), s. [Fr. gennete, from Sp. ginete = (1) a horse, (2) a light horseman from the Berber tribe of Zeneta, who supplied the Moorish Sultans of Grenada with a body of horse, on which they placed great reliance. (Wedgwood.)] A small-sized, well-proportioned, Spanish horse; a jennet.

ġĕ-nĕt' (2), ge-nette (2), jen-net, s. [Fr. genette = a kind of weasel, black-spotted and bred in Spain (Cotgrave), from Sp. gineta, from Arab. jarneit.]

I. Ord. Lang.: The fur of II., which is made up into muffs, tippets, &c.; hence, used for catskins made up in imitation of their fur, and used for the same purpose.

II. Zool.: Genetta vulgaris, or Viverra Genetta, a mammal belonging to the family Viverridæ. It is grey, spotted with black and brown, with a long tail, which is ringed with black and white. There is white also on the eyebrows, the cheeks, and the sides of the nose. Its fur is soft and fine. It is found from the South of France to the Cape of Good Hope, living on the banks of rivers or near springs. In Constantinople it is domesticated like a cat.

ġĕ-nĕth'-lĭ-ăc, ge-neth-li-ack, a. & s. [Fr. généthliaque, from Lat. genethliacus; Gr. γενεθλιακός (genethliakos), from γενέθλια (genethlia) = a birthday; γενέθλιος (genethlios) = pertaining to one's birthday; γίγνομαι (gignomai) = to be born.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to nativities as calculated by astrologers; showing the position of the stars at the birth of any person; calculating nativities.

B. As substantive:

1. A birthday poem or ode.

2. One who is versed in genethliacs; one who calculates nativities.

"Commend me here to all genethliacs, casters of nativities."—Adams: Works, i. 9.

3. (Pl.): The science of calculating nativities, or predicting the future events of life from the stars predominant at the birth.

ġĕ-nĕth-lĭ'-a-cal, ge-neth-li-a-call, a. [Eng. genethliac; -al.] The same as GENETHLIAC (q.v.).

ġĕ-nĕth-lĭ-ăl'-ō-ġў, s. [Gr. γενέθλια (genethlia) = birth, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse.] Divination as to the destinies of one newly-born; the act, art, or science of casting nativities; astrology.

ġĕ-nĕth-lĭ-ăt'-ĭc, ge-neth-li-at-ick, a. [GENETHLIAC.] One who is versed in genethliacs; one who calculates nativities.

ġĕ-nĕt'-ĭc, a. & s. [Gr. γεννητικός (gennētikos) = having the power of producing generation.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining to generation; relating to the origin or course of production of a thing.

 B. As substantive:

Med.: A medicine which acts on the sexual organs.

genctic-affinity, s.

Biol.: Affinity founded on resemblances existing from a very early age, and which therefore is presumed to imply original relationship. It is called also histological affinity.

genetic-spiral, s.

Bot.: A helix winding round the stem of a plant, and formed by the points of growth of all the branches. (Rossiter.) ġĕ-nĕt'-ĭ-cal, a. [Eng. genetic; -al.] The same as GENETIC (q.v.).

ġĕ-nĕt'-ĭ-cal-lў, adv. [Eng. genetical; -ly.] In a genetic manner; by means of genetics.

ġĕ-nĕttc', s. [GENET.]

ġĕ-nē'-va (1), s. [A corrupt. of Fr. genèvre, genièvre; Ital. ginefro, from Lat. juniperus = a juniper (q.v.).] A kind of spirit prepared chiefly from rye, by mashing, fermenting, and distilling. The spirit is returned to the still, mixed with juniper-berries, &c., and redistilled at a gentle heat.

Ġĕ-nē'-va (2), s. [See def.]

Geog.: The name of the chief town of Switzerland.

Geneva Award, s. The decision of the Court of Arbitration sitting in Geneva, in 1872, whereby Great Britain was directed to pay the United States $15,500,000 as indemnity for damages inflicted upon our commerce during the Civil War by the several Confederate cruisers which had been built or fitted out in British ports.

Geneva Bible, s. A Bible or translation of the Bible into English, made and published at Geneva, chiefly by Coverdale, Whittingham, Goodman, Pullain, Sampson, Gilby, and other English Protestant refugees. It was nearly finished when Mary died and Queen Elizabeth succeeded to the throne. It was reprinted in England in 1561, and went through at least fifty editions or impressions, being specially grateful to the English Puritans and the Scotch Presbyterians. Being a small quarto it largely superseded Cranmer's Great Bible, which was an unwieldy folio. It was the first English Bible which adopted the Roman instead of the obsolescent black type, and the first which recognised the division into verses; it was the first also which omitted the Apocrypha. From its stating, in Gen. iii. 7, that our first parents made themselves "breeches," it is sometimes called the Breeches Bible. That rendering, however, had occurred previously in Wycliffe's translation.

Geneva Convention, s.

Mild.: A Convention entered into by representatives of Switzerland, Baden, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Italy, France, Holland, Hesse, Prussia, Portugal and Wurtemburg, assembled at Geneva, signed August 22, 1864. Between that date and 1881 Great Britain, Greece, Turkey, Bavaria, Austria, Persia, Salvador, Servia, Montenegro, Chile, Bolivia, and the Argentine Republic became parties to the Convention. Certain changes and explanations were made, adopted and signed at Geneva in October, 1868, and in July, 1870, the Swiss Government announced that all the parties except Rome and Spain had formally agreed to these amendments. The chief provisions of the Geneva Convention are as follows:—

1. The neutrality of ambulances and military hospitals.

2. The personnel of such ambulances and hospitals, including sanitary officers and naval and military chaplains, to be benefited by the neutrality.

3. The inhabitants of a country, rendering help to the sick and wounded, are to be respected and free from capture.

4. No distinction to be made between the sick and wounded, on account of nationality.

5. A flag and uniform to be adopted, and an armlet for the personnel of ambulances and hospitals. The flag and armlet to consist of a red Greek cross on a white ground. The Turks use a red crescent in place of the cross.

The first great work accomplished was during the Franco-German war (1870-71) and in France, among the destitute people, subsequent to that conflict. During this period Red Cross Societies were organized in both countries under the provisions of the Geneva Convention, the value of whose work is incalculable. Miss Clara Barton, an American woman who had performed heroic service in our own country during the Civil War, and who served faithfully under the Red Cross in the Franco-German struggle, was largely instrumental in inducing the United States to become a party to the Convention, which was done on March 16, 1882 by Act of Congress with the approval of President Arthur. Prior to this, however, Miss Barton had organized an independent American Red Cross Society, of which she was and still is the president. The purpose of this society was not to confine its efforts to the battlefield, but to furnish relief in time of any national calamity. The noble work of this Society during the floods of 1884 and 1888, the yellow-fever epidemic in Florida, the Johnstown catastrophe, &c. is fresh in our memory; but perhaps the most notable act of the American Society and its heroic president, so far, is its praiseworthy effort to minister to the want of the stricken Armenians in far-off Asia Minor (1895-96). The insignia of the Red Cross Societies is a red cross upon a white ground (in Turkey a red crescent instead of a cross.) This appears on their field colors in connection with their respective national flags, on the ambulances, on the sleeves of the members in service, &c. The almost universal recognition of these noble and humane organizations denotes an unmistakable advance in the progress of civilization.

Geneva cross, s. A red Greek cross on a white ground; badge of Geneva Convention.

Ġĕ-nē'-van, a. & s. [Eng. Genev(a); -an.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Geneva Genevese.

B. As substantive:

1. Ord. Lang.: A native or inhabitant of Geneva; a Genevese.

2. Ch. Hist.: A follower or supporter of Genevanism; a Calvinist.

Ġĕ-nē'-van-ĭsm, s. [Eng. Genevan; -ism.] A term which has been applied to Calvinism, from the fact that its founder long lived at Geneva.

Ġĕn-ĕ-vē'şe, a. & s. [Fr. Genevois.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Geneva; Genevan.

B. As subst.: A native or inhabitant of Geneva.

 genge, s. [A.S.; Icel. gengi.] A company; attendants, followers.

"Him and his genge wel he fedde." Havelok, 784.

 genge, gengen, v.i. & t. [A.S. gengan = to go, to run; M. H. Ger. gengen.]

A. Intrans.: To run, to go.

"He gengeth wel swithe awai ward."
Owl & Nightingale, 875.

B. Trans.: To further; to advance; to help.

"All thatt Ice may gengenn the" Ormulum, 3,128.

ġĕ-nī'-al (1), a. [Gr. γένειον (geneion) = the chin.]

Anat.: Of or pertaining to the chin: as, the genial processes.

ġē'-nĭ-al (2),  ġē'-nĭ-all, a. [O. Fr. genial, from Lat. genialis = pleasant, delightful, from genius = genius, social enjoyment.] [GENIUS.]

 1. Natural; native; inborn; innate.

 2. Contributing to propagation; pertaining to marriage or procreation; generative.

"Thou glad Genius, in whose gentle hand
The bridall bower and geniall bed remain."
Spenser: Epithalamion.

 3. Presiding over marriage.

4. Enlivening; warming; contributing to cheerfulness and life; supporting life.

"For me kind Nature wakes her genial power."
Pope: Essay on Man, i. 133.

5. Characterized by geniality or kindly warmth of disposition or manners; sympathetically cheerful; jovial and inspiring cheerfulness: as, a genial disposition.

 6. Containing or exhibiting genius.

"Men of genius have often attached the highest value to their less genial works."—Hare. (Webster.) genial-gods, s. pl.

Class. Myth.: The powers supposed to preside over generation or propagation.

ġĕ-nĭ-ăl'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. genial; -ity.] The quality or state of being genial; a genial disposition; sympathetic cheerfulness or cordiality.

ǧē'-nĭ-ăl-lў, adv. [Eng. genial; -ly.]

* I. By genius or nature; naturally.

"Some men are genially disposed to some opinions."—Glanvill: Scepsis Scientifica, ch. xiii.

2. In a genial manner; so as to cheer and enliven; cheerfully; kindly; with geniality.

"Freshening his lazy spirits as he ran, Unfolded genially, and spread the man."
Cowper: Progress of Error, 412.

* 3. With pleasure, enjoyment, or happiness; happily.

"To taste but of the crumbs he scattered to stray and stranger birds like me was to feast genially."—C. Brontë: Jane Eyre, ch. xxii.

† ǧē'-nĭ-ăl-nĕss, s. [Eng. genial; -ness.] The quality or state of being genial; geniality.

ǧĕ-nī'-ăn, a. [Gr. γένειον (geneion) = the chin.]

Anat.: Of or pertaining to the chin.

ǧĕ-nĭc'-ŭ-lāte, ǧĕ-nĭc'-ŭ-lā-tĕd, a. [Lat. geniculatus, from geniculum = a knee or joint; dimin. of genu = a knee.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Kneed; knee-jointed.

2. Bot.: Knee-jointed; bent abruptly like a knee, as the stems of many grasses.

"A piece of some geniculated plant seeming to be part of a sugar-cane."—Woodward: On Fossils.

geniculate-ganglion, s.

Anat.: A gangliform enlargement on the facial nerve.

* ǧĕ-nĭc'-ŭ-lāte, v.t. [Geniculate, a.] To form a knot or joint in the stalk of a plant.

* ǧĕ-nĭe-ŭ-lā'-tion, s. [Lat. geniculatio, from geniculatus, from geniculum = a knee or joint.]

1. The act of bending the knee or kneeling; genuflexion.

"There are five points in question . . . geniculation at the eucharist, &c."—Bp. Hall: Remains, p. 307.

2. Knottiness; the quality of having knots or joints.

ǧĕn-ĭc'-ŭ-lŭm, s. [Lat. = little knee, dimin. of genu = a knee.]

Bot.: The name given by Jungius and others to the node of a stem.

ǧē-niō (pl. ǧē'-nĭ-ī) (I), s. [Jinnee, Jenil.]

* ǧē'-niĕ (2), * geny, s. [Fr. genie, from Lat. genius = genius (q.v.).] Genius, disposition, inclination; turn of mind.

"His geny being chiefly inclined to poetry."—Wood: Athenæ Oxonienses; Davenant.

ǧē'-nĭ-ī, s. pl. [Jinnee.] Fabulous beings regarded by the Arabians as intermediate between angels and men, and capable of assuming any form, or of becoming invisible at pleasure.

"Well might triumphant genii bear thee hence, Illustrious conqueror of common sense!"
Byron: English Bards & Scotch Reviewers.

* ǧō'-nĭ-ō, s. [Ital., from Lat. genius = genius (q.v.).] A man of a particular disposition or turn of mind.

"Some genios are not capable of pure affection."—Tatler.

ǧĕ-nĭ-ō-glŏs'-sŭs, s. [Gr. γένειον (geneion) = the chin, and γλώσσα (glōssa) = the tongue.]

Anat.: For def., see etym. and compound.

genioglossus-muscle, s.

Anat.: A fan-shaped muscle arising by a short tendon from the chin above the geniohyoid muscle, and entering the middle of the tongue to bring it forward.

ǧĕ-nĭ-ō-hў'-ō-glŏs-sŭs, s. [Gr. γένειον (geneion) = the chin; ὑοειδής (huoeidēs) = the hyoid bone, and γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue.]

Anat.; The same as Genioglossus (q.v.).

ǧĕ-nĭ-ō-hў'-ŏĭd, a. [Geniohyoideus.]

geniohyoid-muscle, s.

Anat.: A narrow muscle arising from the inferior of the two genial tubercles behind the symphysis of the jaw, and inserted into the anterior surface of the body of the hyoid bone. (Quain.)

ǧĕ-nĭ-ō-hў-ŏĭd'-ĕ-ŭs, s. [Gr. γένειον (geneion) = the chin, and ὑοειδής (huoeidēs) = the hyoid bone.]

Anat.: The geniohyoid muscle (q.v.).

ǧĕ-nī'-ō-plăs-tў, s. [Gr. γένειον (geneion) = the chin, and πλάσσω (plassō) = to mould.]

Surg.: The restoration of the chin after it has been injured.

ǧĕn'-ĭp, s. [Genipap.]

genip-tree, s.

Bot.: [Genipa].

ǧĕn'-ĭp-ă, s. [Genipap.]

Bot.: A genus of cinchonaceous plants, tribe Cinchoneæ, family Gardenidæ. It consists of fruit-bearing trees. Genipa americana, the Marmalade Box of Dutch Guiana, bears the genipap (q.v.). The fruit of G. brasiliensis is also eaten in Brazil, but, according to Martius, it is not fit to be used till it has become bletted, and is better preserved with sugar than fresh. [Genipap.]

ǧĕn'-ĭ-păp, s. [Genipap, or genepapa = the Guiana name.]

Bot.: The fruit of Genipa americana. [Genipa.] It is as large as an orange, is whitish-green, but has a dark-purple juice with an agreeable vinous taste. It is in much request in Dutch Guiana.

ǧĕ-nĭs'-tă, s. [Lat. genista, genesta = the broom, the Spanish broom; perhaps from Celt. gen = a small bush.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the subtribe Genisteæ (q.v.). It has the calyx shortly two-lipped and the lips deeply toothed. Seventy species are known. The Genista tinctoria is the Dyers' Greenweed. It yields a yellow dye. Ray says that the milk of cows feeding upon it is rendered bitter, and that this bitterness is retained in butter and cheese made from the milk. The Genista of Virgil and other Roman classics, is supposed to be G. hispanica, of Southern Europe, a plant with branched stiff spines. The name Plantagenet, applied to a dynasty of English Kings, comes from Planta Genista, though what plant is intended, whether the broom, or a species of Genista, is not known.

ǧĕ-nĭs'-tĕ-æ, s. pl. [Lat. genist(a), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A subtribe of papilionaceous plants, tribe Loteæ. It consists of shrubs with entire leaflets, and the stamens all united, instead of being diadelphous. Genera represented in Britain: Genista, Ulex, Cytisus (q.v.).

* ǧĕn'-ĭ-tal, * gen-ĭ-tall, a. & s. [O. Fr. genital, from Lat. genitalis = generative, from genitum, sup. of gigno = to beget.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining to generation or procreation; generative.

"These tenuous vapours . . . will doubtless compose as genital as matter as any can be prepared in the bodies of animals."—Glanvill: Pre-existence of Souls, ch. xiv.

B. As subst. (Pl.): Those parts of an animal which are the immediate instruments of generation; the privates, the sexual organs.

"That they worshipped the head of an ass, and even the genituals of their high priest."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. v., ch. vi.

ǧĕn'-ĭ-tĭng, *gĭn'-nĭt-ĭng, jĕn'-nĕt-ĭng, jūn'-ēat-ĭng, s. O. Fr. jeannet; Fr. jeannot, a dimin. of Jean = John, from their being ripe by St. John's Day, June 24th; cf. John-apple; or Eng. June, and eating. (Mahn, &c.)] A variety of apple which ripens early.

"In July come early pears and plums in fruit, genitings and codlins."—Bacon.

ǧĕn-ĭ-tī'-văl, a. [Lat. genitivus.] [Genitive.]

Gram.: Pertaining or relating to the genitive case.

ǧĕn'-ĭ-tīve, a. & s. [Fr. génitif = the genitive case, from Lat. genitivus = of or pertaining to generation, from genitum, sup. of gigno = to beget; Sp. & Ital. genitivo. The Latin genitivus casus = the genitive case, was a mistranslation of the Greek γενικη πτωσις (genikē ptōsis), which properly should have been translated casus generalis = the general case, or that case which denotes the genus or kind. (See extract from Max Müller under B.)]

A. As adjective:

* Gram.: A term applied to that case of nouns, adjectives, pronouns, &c., which pertains to or indicates origin, source, possession, or the like, or to the relation expressed by such a case. In English it is called possessive.

"The Hebrews express this union . . . by putting in the genitive case the word which expresses one of them."—Digby: Of Man's Soul, ch. ii.

B. As subst.: That case in the declension of nouns, adjectives, pronouns, &c., which denotes or indicates origin, source, possession, or the like. In English it is called the possessive case, and is the only case which retains a case ending.

"The Latin genitivus is a mere blunder, for the Greek word γενικη (genikē) could never mean genitivus. Genitivus, if it is meant to express the case of origin or birth, would in Greek have been called γεννητικη (gennētikē), not γενικη (genikē). . . . Genikē, in Greek, had a much wider, a much more philosophical meaning. It means casus generalis, the general case, or rather the case which expresses the genus or kind. This is the real power of the genitive . . . The termination of the genitive is, in most cases, identical with those derivative suffixes by which substantives are changed into adjectives."—Max Müller: Lectures on the Science of Language.

ǧĕn-ĭ-tō-, pref. [Lat. genitus, pa. par. of gigno = to beget.] Pertaining to generating, as the genito-crural nerve, the genito-urinary muscles.

* ǧĕn'-ĭ-tor, s. [Lat., from genitus, pa. par. of gigno = to beget.]

1. One who begets; a father, a sire, a progenitor.

2. One who originates.

"They, I say, that were the wise fathers and genitors of this purgatory, were, in my minde, the wisest of all their generation."—Latimer: Sermon before the Convocation.

3. (Pl.): The genitals.

"Wherein sponges or linen clothes beinge dept, shulde be layd on ye hed, & the genitores or leggs therewith washed."—Sir T. Elyot: Castel of Helth, bk. iv., ch. ii.

* ǧĕn'-ĭ-tūre, s. [Fr. géniture, from Lat. genitura, from genitus, pa. par. of gigno = to beget; O. Sp., Port., & Ital. genitura.]

1. Procreation, birth, generation.

"If a son marries his mother, she who is in authority greater by right of geniture, becomes minor in matrimonio."—Bishop Taylor: Rule of Conscience, bk. ii., ch. ii., rule 3.

2. The power of procreation.

"It abeuneth the geniture."—Venner: Treatise of Tobacco, p. 416.

3. (Pl.): The genitals.

ǧē'-nĭ-ŭs, s. [Lat.= a tutelar spirit of a person, inclination, wit, talent; Sp. & Ital. genio; Fr. génie.]

1. A tutelary deity, whose province it was to take care of every one from the time of his birth; the ruling or protecting power of men, places, or things.

"The genius and the mortal instruments Are then in council."
Shakesp.: Julius Cæsar, ii. 1.

2. The natural bent, disposition, or inclination of the mind; a particular natural talent or aptitude of mind fitting a man in an especial degree for some particular study, pursuit, or course of life; a peculiar natural structure of mind qualifying the possessor for a particular employment.

3. That natural power or faculty or combination of faculties of the mind which bears or brings forth, produces, discovers, or invents; intellectual endowment of the highest kind; superior power of invention or origination of any kind, or of producing original combinations; talent.

"The renowned university on which his genius had already begun to impress a peculiar character, still plainly discernible after the lapse of a hundred and sixty years, had sent him to the convention."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. x.

4. A person endowed with uncommon intellectual powers; a man of superior intellectual faculties.

"That age had produced no more inventive genius and no more daring spirit."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vii.

5. The distinguishing disposition, bent, character, or tendency; as of a nation, a religion, a language, and the like.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between genius, ability, talent, capacity, cleverness, and wisdom: "Genius implies high and peculiar gifts of nature, impelling the mind to certain favourite kinds of mental effort, and producing new combinations of ideas, imagery, &c. Talent supposes general strength of intellect, with a peculiar aptitude for being moulded and directed to specific employments, and valuable ends and purposes. Genius is connected more or less with the exercise of imagination, and reaches its ends by a kind of intuitive power. Talent depends more on high mental training, perfect command of all the faculties, memory, judgment, sagacity, &c. Hence we speak of a genius for poetry, painting, &c., and a talent for business or diplomacy. Among English orators Lord Chatham was distinguished for his genius; William Pitt for his pre-eminent talents, and especially his unrivalled talent for reply. Genius is the power of new combinations, wisdom the habitual employment of a patient and comprehensive understanding in combining various and remote means to promote the happiness of mankind. Abilities may be exerted in conduct, or in the arts and sciences, but rather in the former. Talents are the power of executing well a conception either original or adopted. Capacity is a power of acquiring. Cleverness designates mental dexterity and quickness." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

(2) For the difference between genius and intellect, see INTELLECT; for that between genius and taste, see TASTE.

 genius-chamber, * genyus-chalmer, s. The bridal chamber.

"War not also to me is displesant, Genyus-chalmer, or matrimonye to hant."
Douglas: Virgil, 99, 53.

genius-loci, s. [Lat.] The presiding or tutelary deity of a place; hence, the pervading spirit of a place or institution.

 ǧĕn'-lēşe, * ǧĕn'-tēşe, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Arch.: Elaborate carving in open work; the cusps or featherings in the arch of a doorway.

Ǧĕn'-ō-ēşe, a. & s. [Lat. Genoensis.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Genoa, a town in the north-west of Italy.

B. As subst.: A native or inhabitant of Genoa; the people of Genoa.

 genouillieres (as zhnôl-yär'),  gen-yllere, s. pl. [Fr., from Lat. genu = the knee.]

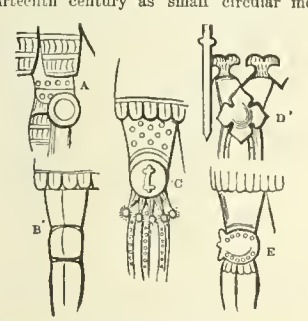
1. Arm.: Metal caps for covering the knees of an armed man. They first appeared in the thirteenth century as small circular metal



GENOUILLIERES.

A Plain Knee-boss or Knee-piece (1325). B. From the monument of the Black Prince in Canterbury Cathedral. (In this case the armour of coupiete plate has been attained, and here the genouillieres have articulations above and below.) C. From monumental brass of Thos. Cheyne, Esq. (1368), at Drayton Beauchamp, Bucks. D. From the tomb of Hartmann von Kronberg (1379), at Kronberg. E. From statue of a knight of the De Sulney family, in the church of Newton Sulney, Derbyshire. (Here the material of the cuissard passes beneath the boss, terminating in an escallop.) plates, when chain armour covered the leg, and led by degrees to the adoption of greaves and shin-pieces, and ultimately to entire plate armour. They were sometimes decorated with incised and gilt ornaments, and, in the fifteenth century, took a variety of fanciful forms.

"The strok . . . full oppon ys genyllere."
Sir Ferumbras, 5,631.

2. Fortification:

(1) A part of the interior slope of the parapet below the sill of an embrasure. It covered the lower part of a gun-carriage.

(2) The height of the parapet above the banquette in a barbette battery.

genre (as zhan'-re), s. [Fr., from Lat. genus (genit. generis) = a class, a kind.]

Art: A term applied to pictures of life and manners, which, for want of a definite character, are classed together as of a certain genre or kind. Under this title are comprised the grave episodes of life, which are to history what a single scene is to a drama, or a lyric to an epic poem. Also comic pictures of all kinds. . . The principal genre pictures consist of scenes of every-day life, and may be classified. In taking for its subject the events of daily life, genre-painting avoids religious themes as high and lasting, as well as historical subjects, which, though transitory, ought never to appear so. All the passing events of life, its characters and aims, offer fitting subject for genre-painting. (Fairholt.)

ǧĕns (pl. ǧĕn'-tēş), s. [Lat.]

Rom. Antiq.: A class or house, the individuals composing which were termed in reference to each other, Gentiles. Each gens was made up of a certain number of branches or families (familiæ), and each familia was composed of individual members. Several gentes made up the curiæ and tribes. The members of each gens bore a common name, as the Fabian gens, the Julian gens, &c., and were united by certain common religious rites.

gens-dar-mer-y, s. [GENDARMERY.]

 ǧĕnt, a. [O. Fr.; O. Sp. gento; O. Ital. gente, from Lat. genitus, applied to one of noble birth.] [GENEROUS.] Elegant, neat, handsome, comely, pretty, gentle.

"To wite of her maners, to se his body gent."
Robert de Brunne, p. 253.

ǧĕnt, s. [An abridged form of gentleman (q.v.).] A gentleman. (Vulgar.) ǧĕn-tēel', a. [The same word as gentle, the ee representing the sound of the O. Fr. i in gentil.] [GENTLE, a.]

1. Graceful or elegant in mien, appearance, form, or dress.

"I perched at will on every spray,
My form genteel, my plumage gay,
My strains for ever new."
Cowper: On a Goldfinch.

2. Polite, elegant in manners, well-bred, courteous, refined; having the manners of a well-bred person; free from vulgarity.

"A set of genteel good-natured youths fallen into such a manner of life would form almost an academy."
—Steele: Spectator, No. 230.

3. Free from vulgarity or buffoonery; treating of the habits, manners, or doings of good society.

"Their poets have no notion of genteel comedy."—Addison: On Italy.

4. Sufficient to maintain a person in a respectable and comfortable manner; furnishing a competence.

"Painting portraits and pictures in a genteel style of his own."—Walpole: Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv., ch. iii.

* 5. Neat, elegant.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between genteel and polite: "Gentility respects ranks in life; politeness the refinement of the mind and outward behaviour. A genteel education is suited to the station of a gentleman; a polite education fits for polished society and conversation, and raises the individual among his equals. There may be gentility without politeness, and vice versa. A person may have genteel manners, a genteel carriage, a genteel mode of living as far as respects his general relation with society; but a polite behaviour and a polite address, which qualify him for every relation in society, and enable him to shine in connection with all orders of men, is independent of either birth or wealth; it is in part a gift of nature, although it is to be acquired by art." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)  ǧĕn - tēel - ĭsh, a. [Eng. genteel; -ish.] Somewhat genteel.

 ǧĕn-tēel'-ize, v.t. [Eng. genteel; -ize.] To make genteel, to gentilize.

"Every one of them . . . genteelized along with him."—Sterne: Tristram Shandy, vi. 138.

ǧĕn - tēel'-lў, * gen - teel - y, adv. [Eng. genteel; -ly.]

1. Gracefully; with politeness or good manners; politely.

"He answered modestly and genteely."—Walpole: Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii., ch. iv. (Note.)

2. With grace, elegance, or neatness.

"[He] treated her genteely, so that, dressed,
She looked extremely well where'er she went."
Byron: Beppo, 23.

3. In a respectable manner; like people of fashion.

"Their customers are gone abroad to live genteelly at Lisle or Brussels."—V. Knox: Winter Evenings, Even. 9.

ǧĕn-tēel'-nĕss, s. [Eng. genteel; -ness.]

1. The quality or state of being genteel; elegance, grace; good-breeding; gentility.

"Next to him [Correggio] Parmegiano has dignified the genteelness of modern effeminacy, by uniting it with the simplicity of the antients and the grandeur and severity of Michael Angelo."—Sir J. Reynolds: Discourse 4.

2. The qualities befitting a man of birth or rank.

 gen-ter-ie, * gen-ter-y, * gen-trie, s. [GENTRY.]

 gen-ter-ise, s. [O. Fr.] Nobility; nobleness. [GENTRISE.]

"For love hath undertake That thes J. H. C. of hus genterise, shal jouste in Peers armes."
P. Ploeman, xxi. 51.

 gen-tese, s. [GENTESE.]

ǧĕnth'-ĭte, s. [Named after Genth, who, in 1851, described it under the name of Nickelgymnite.]

Min.: An amorphous mineral, containing serpeotine. It is opaque to translucent, is of a pale apple green or yellow colour, and has a greenish-white streak. Compos.: Silica, 33·6 to 35·4; protoxide of nickel, 30·4 to 30·6; protoxide of iron, 0·2 to 2·2; magnesia, 0·2 to 4·1; lime, 0·3 to 4·1; and water, 17·1 to 19·1. It occurs near Lake Superior, and in Spain. Rottisite (q.v.) may be a variety. (Dana.) ǧĕn'-tian (tian as shў-an), s. [Lat. gentiana (q.v.); Fr. gentiane.]

1. Bot.: The common name of the genus Gentiana (q.v.). There are more than 100 species, natives of north temperate regions, growing in high mountain pastures and meadows, which they embellish with their beautiful blue or yellow flowers. Gentian root, collected from several species, is used as an excellent bitter and stomachic. G. Catesbæi yields Gentian root in the United States. Of the species in this country G. crinita is particularly celebrated for the beauty of its flowers. The flowers of this genus are very attractive.

"See how the giant spires of yellow bloom
Of the sun-loving gentian, in the heat
Are shining on these naked slopes like flame.
Matthew Arnold: Empedocles on Etna. i. 2.

2. Phar.: Gentianæ Radix (Gentian Root), the dried root of Gentiana lutea. The root occurs in lengthened cylindrical pieces, from half-an-inch to one inch in diameter, and several inches long, wrinkled longitudinally, and often twisted; brown externally, yellow, tough, and spongy within; it has a sweet smell and a sweet and bitter taste. It is used to prepare Extractum Gentianæ (Extract of Gentian), Infusum Gentianæ compositum, Mistura Gentianæ (Gentian Mixture), and Tinctura Gentianæ Composita (Compound Tincture of Gentian). Gentian is a bitter stomachic tonic, which improves the appetite and gives tone to the stomach.

gentian-bitter, s.

Chem.: A peculiar bitter separated from the aqueous solution of the root Gentiana lutea by animal charcoal, and extracted therefrom by hot alcohol. It is yellow, uncrystallizable, and reduces an alkaline cupric solution. (Watts: Dict. Chem.) gentian-root, s.

Pharm.: [GENTIAN, 2, Pharm.].

gentian-spirit, s. An alcoholic liquor much drunk by the Swiss. It is made by the vinous fermentation of the infusion of gentian.

ǧĕn-tĭ-ā'-na (or tĭ as shĭ), s. [Lat. = the herb gentian (Gentiana lutea). Named after an Illyrian king, Gentius.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gentianeæ, the order Gentianaceæ, and the alliance Gentianales. It has the corolla tube subclavate, the anthers straight, and the stigmas two. About 150 species are known, chiefly in temperate regions. Five are British. [GENTIAN.] The common gentian root of the druggists is mostly Gentiana lutea. [GENTIAN-ROOT]. G. campestris and Amarella, British species, are domestic substitutes for it in England. G. punctata, pannonica, purpurea, &c., on the European continent, G. Kurroo, in the Himalaya Mountains, and G. Catesbæi, in the United States. G. cruciata has been used, but unsuccessfully, in hydrophobia.

ǧĕn-tĭ-ā-nā'-çē-æ (or tĭ as shĭ), s. pl. [Lat. gentian(a) (q.v.), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: An order of Perigynous Exogens, the typical one of the alliance Gentianales (q.v.). It consists of herbs or rarely of shrubs, with opposite entire exstipulate leaves, sessile, or having their petioles united into a sheath, often three to four-ribbed. Flowers generally regular. Calyx divided, inferior, persistent. Corolla monopetalous, hypogynous, generally regular and persistent. Stamens inserted upon the corolla, all in the same line, equal in number to the segments, and alternate with them. Ovary with two carpels, one or partly two-celled, many-seeded. Style one; stigmas two, right and left of the axis. The order is close to Apocynaceæ. It contains about 60 genera, and 450 known species. They are bitter and tonic. It is divided into two tribes, Gentianeæ and Menyantheæ (q.v.).

ġĕn'-tian-al (tian as shŷ-an), *a. [Mod. Lat. gentianalis.]

Bot.: Akin to Gentianaceæ or to Gentiana, as the gentianal alliance.

ġĕn-tĭ-an-ā'-lēş (or tĭ as shĭ), s. pl. [Masc. & fem. pl. of Mod. Lat. gentianalis, from Lat. gentiana (q.v.).]

Bot.: The Gentianal Alliance. An alliance of perigynous exogens, with dichlamydeous, monopetalous flowers, axile or parietal placentæ, and a minute embryo, or with the cotyledons much smaller than the radicle, lying in a large quantity of albumen. Lindley includes under it the orders Ebenaceæ, Aquifoliaceæ, Apocynaceæ, Loganiaceæ, Diapensiaceæ, Stilbaceæ, Orobanchaceæ, and Gentianaceæ.

ġĕn-tĭ-ā'-nĕ-æ (or tĭ as shĭ), s. pl. [Lat. gentian(a), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -ea.]

Bot.: A tribe of Gentianaceæ. They have the corolla imbricated.

ġĕn-tian-ĕl'-la (tian as shŷ-an), s. [Dimin. of Lat. gentiana.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A blue colour.

2. Bot.: A genus of Gentianaceæ, not sufficiently distinct from Gentiana. Gentiana acaulis is placed in it.

ġĕn'-tian-ĭn, ġĕn'-tian-ĭne (tian as shŷ-an), s. [Eng., &c. gentian; -in, -ine.]

Chem.: The same as Gentisine (q.v.).

gen-til, a. & s. [Gentle.]

ġĕn'-tīle, *gen-til, *gen-tyl, a. & s. [Fr. gentil, from Lat. gentilis = one belonging to the same class, a gentile, from gens (genit. gentis) = a clan; Sp. & Port. gentil; Ital. gentile. Gentile is thus a doublet of genteel and gentle (q.v.).]

A. As adjective:

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. Of or pertaining to any nation; national.

"Thou Proserpyne, quhilk by our gentil lawis Art rowpit liie." Douglas: Virgil, 121, 31.

* 2. Of noble or gentle birth; of high rank; noble.

"Noble men and gentile, and of heh burthe."—O. Eng. Homilies, p. 275.

* 3. Gentle, meek, lowly.

"The penaunce
That Pilot wikkedly wroghte
To Jhesu the gentile." P. Plowman, 5,669.

* 4. Worthy of a gentleman; genteel.

5. In the same sense as II. 2.

6. Used by the Romans to denote any person out of their pale.

II. Technically:

1. Gram.: Denoting the clan, race, or country; as, a gentile noun.

2. Scrip.: Other than Jewish; ethnic. [B. II.]

"The helpless condition of the Gentile world in the state of Gentilism."—Locke: Paraph. on Romans, ch. v., § 5.

B. As substantive:

* I. Ordinary Language:

1. One of the same clan or family.

"Gens in Latine betokeneth the race and sirname, so the Romanes had Cornelios, Sergios, Appios, Fabios, Æmilios, Pisoues, Julios, Brutos, Valerios, of which who were agnate, and therefore kept the name, were also gentiles."—Sir T. Smith: Commonwealth, bk. iii., ch. viii.

2. A person of noble or gentle birth; one of high rank.

"A partie of gentiles raised Edmond Yrenside into kyng."—Trevisa, vii. 99.

II. Scrip. (Pl.): All the nations of the world, excepting the Jews. In the Old Testament it is the rendering of the Hebrew word גּוֹיִם (goim) = peoples, nations, the pl. of גּוֹי (goi) = a nation, a people. At first it was used as a mere ethnological word, and quite respectfully, but as the Jews become more conscious of their privileges, they employed it more and more scornfully of the nations around (Gen. x. 5; Isa. lxvi. 16; Jer. xiv. 22). In the New Testament Gentiles is the rendering of the Greek ἔθνη (ethnē) = the pl. of ἔθνος (ethnos) = a number of people living together, a nation. St. Peter, moved by a vision, was the first of the Twelve to preach to the Gentiles (Acts x.), but the Apostle of the Gentiles was St. Paul (Gal. ii. 15).

"We who are Jews by nature and not sinners of the Gentiles."—Galatians ii. 15.

* ġĕn'-til-ĕsse, *gen-til-esce, *gen-till-esse, s. [Fr. gentilesse, from gentil = gentle (q.v.); Sp. & Port. gentileza; Ital. gentilezza.] The character, manner, or characteristics of a person of noble or gentle birth; courtesy, good breeding.

"Thet is the grettseste noblesse, and the hegheste gentilesse thet one may to hopye."—Ayenbite, p. 89.

* ġĕn'-til-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gentil(e); -ish.] Heathenish, pagan.

"A settled persuasion in Gentilish error."—Holinshed: England, bk. v., ch. xxv.

ġĕn'-til-ĭşm, *gen-til-isme, s. [Eng. gentil(e); -ism; Fr. gentilisme.] A state of heathenism; the worship of false gods.

"The Jewish natrologians, savouring of Gentilisme."—Mede: Works; Disc. xiii.

* ġĕn-tĭ-lĭ'-tial, a. [Lat. gentilitius.] The same as Gentilitious (q.v.).

"Directed toward gentilitial, tutelary, and local deities."—Farmer: Worship of Human Spirits, ch. iii., § 1.

* ġĕn-tĭ-lĭ'-tious, a. Lat. gentilitius, from gens (genit. gentis) = a race, a clan.]

1. Pertaining or peculiar to a nation; endemial, national.

"That an unsavoury odour is gentilitious, or national, unto the Jews, reason or sense will not induce."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iv., ch. x.

2. Pertaining or peculiar to a family; hereditary.

"The common sense cause of this distemper is a particular and perhaps a gentilitious disposition of body."—Arbuthnot: On Aliments.

ġĕn-tĭl'-ĭ-tў, *gen-til-i-tie, *gen-tyl-e-te, s. [Fr. gentilité, from Lat. gentilitas, from gentilis; Ital. gentilità; Sp. gentilidad.]

* 1. A state of gentilism or heathenism; paganism.

"When people began to espy the falsehood of oracles, whereupon all gentility was built, their hearts were utterly averted from it."—Hooker: Eccles. Polity, bk. v., § 2.

2. The quality or state of belonging to a certain race, clan, or family; a clan, a family.

"The surname is the name of the gentilitie and stocke, which the sonne doth take of the father alwaies, as the old Romans did."—Sir T. Smith: Commonwealth, bk. iii., ch. viii.

3. High or gentle birth; dignity of birth; high extraction.

"That drawl which he affected as a mark of gentility."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiv.

4. Elegance of manners, mien, or behaviour; easy, graceful behaviour; politeness, refinement.

"There is a certain gaiety and gentility diffused over it."—V. Knox: Essays, No. 38.

* 5. Those who are of noble or gentle birth; gentry.

"Gavelkind must needs in the end make a poor gentility."—Sir J. Davies.

* ġĕn'-til-īze, *gen-til-lize, v.t. & i. [Mid. Eng. gentil = gentle, gentile; Eng. suff. -ize.]

A. Trans.: To make or render gentle or gentlemanly.

"Your unworthy sons,
To gentilize with proud possessions."
Sylvester: Du Bartas, wk. i., day 3, 527.

B. Intransitive:

1. To act as or set up for a gentleman.

"Our yeomen too, that never armes have borne,
To gentilize it make themselves a scorne."
Withers: Satyrical Essays, p. 147.

2. To live like a gentile or heathen.

"God's known denouncement against the gentilizing Israelites."—Milton: Way to Establish a Free Commonwealth.

* gen-til-liche, *gen-til-li, adv. [Mid. Eng. gentil; -liche, -li, -ly.] In a noble manner; like a gentleman. [Gently.]

* gen-til-ry, s. [Mid. Eng. gentil; -ry.] Gentry.

ġĕn-tĭş'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. gent(ian); -isic (Chem.).] Contained in, derived from, or in any way connected with gentian (q.v.).

gentisic-acid, s. [Gentisin.]

ġĕn'-tĭ-sĭn, s. [Eng. &c. gent(ian); -in (Chem.).]

Chemistry:

Gentianin, $C_6H_3(OH)_2 \cdot CO \cdot C_6H_2(CH_3)\langle^{O}_{O}$

A substance occurring in the root of Gentiana lutea, from which it is extracted by alcohol. Gentianin forms large yellow, silky needles, which sublime between 300° and 400° with partial decomposition. Slightly soluble in water, soluble in boiling alcohol, easily soluble in alkalies; forming a yellow solution. When fused with caustic potash it yields acetic acid, phloroglucin, and oxysalicylic acid.

ġĕn'-tle, *gen-til, *gen-tille, *gen-tyl, a., adv., & s. [Fr. gentil = gentle, from Lat. gentilis = belonging to the same clan or family; gens (genit. gentis) = a race, a clan; Sp. & Port. gentil; It. gentile.] [Genteel, Gentile.]

A. As adjective:

1. Of noble birth; high-born; of good extraction. (Obsolete except in the expression gentle-folk.)

"Though he be not gentill borne,
Thou maiest well seine (this in soth)
That he is gentill." Romaunt of the Rose.

* 2. Pertaining to high rank or birth.

"That grey-haired man of gentle blood,
Who with her father had grown old."
Wordsworth: White Doe of Rylstone, v.

* 3. Noble in character, manners, or behaviour.

"Sir Henry that so gentil kolght was."
Robert of Gloucester, p. 559.

4. Soft; tender; sympathizing; destitute of harshness; easily softened.

"As much resentment as a very gentle heart is capable of feeling."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xv.

5. Soft and refined in manners; meek; quiet; mild; free from roughness, harshness, severity or acrimony.

"Innocent was, in all private relations, the meekest and gentlest of men."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

6. Docile; tractable; easily taught or led "Humility is gentle, apt to learn, Speak but the word, will listen and return."

Cowper: Expostulation, 454.

7. Tame; docile; not wild or turbulent.

8. Soft; mild; genial.

"When ruder gusts shall banish gentle May."
Sir W. Jones: A Turkish Ode.

9. Soothing; refreshing.

"Sleep, gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., iii. 1.

* 10. Lovely, sweet.

"The gentle lark mounts up on high."
Shakesp.: Venus & Adonis, 853.

* 11. Used in compellations as a term of affection, gratitude, or good-will.

"I thank you, gentle servant."
Shakesp.: Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 1.

12. Soft, slight, easy; not hard or rough: as, a gentle touch, a gentle push.

13. Soft, quiet; not loud: as, a gentle whisper.

B. As adv.: Gently.

"As gentle tell me of what honour was This Cressida in Troy."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, iv. 5.

C. As substantive:

1. A person of noble birth; a noble; a gentleman.

"I'll make him dance. Will you go, gentles?"—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 3.

2. A trained hawk.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between gentle and tame: Gentleness lies rather in the natural disposition; tameness is the effect either of art or circumstance. Any unbroken horse may be gentle, but not tame: a horse that is broken in will be tame, but not always gentle. Animals are in general said to be gentle who shew a disposition to associate with man, and conform to his will; they are said to be tame, if either by compulsion or habit they are brought to mix with human society. In the moral application gentle is always employed in the good, and tame in the bad, sense; a gentle spirit needs no control. A gentle expression is devoid of all acrimony, and serves to turn away wrath; a tame expression is devoid of all force or energy, and ill-calculated to inspire the mind with any feeling whatever." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) gentle-hearted, a. Of a gentle, mild, or tender heart or disposition.

(2) For the difference between gentle and soft, see Soft.

gentle-thistle, s.

Bot.: A name given by Dr. J. Hill to Carduus pratensis and Saussurea alpina from their thistle-like inflorescence and smooth foliage.

ĝĕn'-tle, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A maggot or larva of the flesh-fly, used in fishing.

"He will lie the three hot months bite at a flag-worm, or at a green gentle."—Walton: Angler.

* ĝĕn'-tle, v.t. [GENTLE, a.] To make gentle or genteel; to raise in rank; to ennoble.

"He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; be he never so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition."
Shakesp.: Henry V., iv. 3.

ĝĕn'-tle-folk (folk as fōk), s. [Eng. gentle, and folk (q.v.).] Persons of gentle birth or breeding; people of high rank or family. (Generally used in the plural.)

"The queen's kindred are made gentlefolk."
Shakesp.: Richard III., i. 1.

ĝĕn'-tle-măn, * gen-til-man, * jen-tle-man, s. [Eng. gentle, and man; Fr. gentil-homme; Ital. gentiluomo.]

* 1. A man of gentle or high birth and good position; every man above the rank of yeoman; strictly a man who bears a coat of arms.

"Esquires and gentlemen are confounded together by Sir Edward Coke, who observes, that every esquire is a gentleman, and a gentleman is defined to be one qui arma gerit, who bears coat armour, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family."—Blackstone: Commentary, bk. i., ch. 12.

2. One who by education, occupation, or income holds a position above menial service or ordinary trade.

"I have land and money, my friends left me well, and I will be a gentleman whatsoever it cost me."—Ben Jonson: Every Man out of his Humour, i. 2.

3. A man of honour and high principles.

"For what, I pray, is a gentleman, what properties hath he, what qualities are characteristical or peculiar to him, whereby he is distinguished from others and raised above the vulgar? are they not especially two, courage and courtesie? which he that wanteth is not otherwise than equivocally a gentleman, as an image or a carkase is a man."—Barrow, vol. iii., ser. 21.

4. A man of good breeding and politeness.

"As I am a gentleman, I credit him."
Shakesp.: Richard II., iii. 2.

5. Used as a polite equivalent for man; as in the plural used in addressing popular assemblies of men of any condition or character.

6. The servant or personal attendant of a man of rank.

"Let he called before us That gentleman of Buckingham's in person."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., i. 2.

¶ Gentleman-at-Arms: One of a company of forty gentlemen, called esquires, whose duty it is to attend the sovereign to and from the chapel royal and on other occasions of solemnity; a gentleman pensioner.

gentleman-commoner, s. A privileged class of commoners in the University of Oxford; they wear a special gown and a velvet cap. [FELLOW-COMMONER.]

gentleman-farmer, s. A man of property who occupies his own farm.

gentleman-pensioner, s. A gentleman-at-arms (q.v.).

* gentleman-usher, s.

1. Lit.: A court official whose duty it is to usher visitors into the presence of the sovereign.

"Sir Thomas More, the Sunday after he gave up his chancellorship, came to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone."—Camden: Remaines.

2. Fig.: One who acts as an introducer.

"It is from this honest heart that I find myself honoured as a gentleman-usher to the arts and sciences."—Steele: Spectator, No. 532.

gentleman's-buttons, s.

Bot.: The flowers of Scabiosa succisa.

* ĝĕn'-tle-man-hood, s. [Eng. gentleman; -hood.] The condition, character, or attributes of a gentleman.

"A delightful example of complete gentlemanhood."—Thackeray: Roundabout Papers, xx.

* ĝĕn'-tle-măn-ĭşm, s. [Eng. gentleman; -ism.] The state of being a gentleman; affectation of gentlemanliness.

* ĝĕn'-tle-măn-īze, v.t. [Eng. gentleman; -ize.] To raise or bring oneself to the condition of a gentleman. (Lytton.) ĝĕn'-tle-măn-like, a. [Eng. gentleman, and like.]

1. Like a gentleman or person of good birth and breeding; gentlemanly.

"Pyramus is a sweet-faced man: a proper man as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely gentlemanlike man."—Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, i. 2.

2. Pertaining to or becoming a gentleman; polite; courteous.

"They do not consider the pursuit of game in the liberal light of a gentlemanlike diversion."—V. Knox: Essays, No. 119.

ĝĕn'-tle-măn-lĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gentlemanly; -ness.] The quality or state of being gentlemanly; gentlemanly qualities or manners.

ĝĕn'-tle-măn-lỹ, a. [Eng. gentleman; -ly.]

1. Like a gentleman or person of good birth and breeding.

2. Pertaining to or becoming a gentleman; gentlemanlike.

ĝĕn'-tle-măn-shĭp, s. [Eng. gentleman; -ship.] The quality or condition of a gentleman.

ĝĕn'-tle-nĕss, * gen-tile-ness, * gen-til-nesse, s. [Eng. gentle; -ness.]

* 1. Gentle or noble birth; goodness of extraction.

"Forsine gentilnesse ne maketh thee nat gentill."—Chaucer: Boecius, bk. iii.

* 2. Nobility of manners; high principles; honour.

"The women louen worthinesse
Of manhode, and of gentilnesse,
For the gentiles he most desired." Gower, iv.

3. Softness of manners; sweetness of disposition; tenderness, kindness, mildness.

"But fare you well; perforce I must confess,
I thought you lord of more true gentleness."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 2.

* 4. Kindness, benevolence, goodwill.

"The gentleness of all the gods go with thee."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, ii. 1.

5. Softness; easiness; absence of roughness or hardness: as, the gentleness of a touch, a push, &c.

* ĝĕn'-tle-shĭp, * jen-tle-shippe, s. [Eng. gentle; -ship.] The quality or manners of a gentleman; gentlemanliness.

"Some in France, which will needs be jentlemen, whether men will or no, and have more jentleshippe in their hat than in their head, be at deadlie feude with both learning and honestie."—Ascham: Schole Master, bk. i.

* ĝĕn'-tlĕsse, s. [Fr. gentillesse.] Gentle or gentlemanly behaviour; gentleness.

ĝĕn'-tle-wŏm-an, * gen-til-wom-an, gen-til-wom-man, s. [Eng. gentle, and woman (q.v.).]

1. A woman of gentle or noble birth or breeding; a lady.

"Doth this sir Proteus Often resort unto this gentlewoman ?"
Shakesp.: Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. 2.

2. A woman who waits upon the person of a lady of high rank.

"The queue herself shall be led away captive, and her gentilwomen shal mourne."—Bible (1551); Of Nahum, ch. ii.

3. A term of civility to women. (Sometimes used in irony.)

"Tell a countrey gentlewoman that the wind is south-west, and the weather louring, and like to rain, and she will easily understand, 'tis not safe for her to go abroad thin-clad, in such a day, after a fever."—Locke: Human Understanding, bk. iv., ch. xvii., § 4.

ĝĕn'-tle-wŏm-an-like, a. [Eng. gentlewoman, and like.] The same as GENTLEWOMANLY (q.v.).

ĝĕn'-tle-wŏm-an-lỹ, a. [Eng. gentlewoman.] Like a gentlewoman or lady; becoming a lady.

ĝĕn'-tlỹ, * gen-til-ly, adv. [Eng. gent(le); -ly.]

1. Of high position or descent: as, one gently born.

2. With gentleness; softly, meekly; tenderly, mildly.

"He gently gan him to demaund of all That did betwixt him and the squire betide."
Spenser: F. Q., V. i. 23.

3. Softly; without roughness, violence, or harshness.

"O gently on thy suppliant's head, Dread goddess, lay thy chastening hand!"
Gray: Hymn to Adversity.

gently-budding, a. Filling out; becoming plump.

"Her graceful arms in meekness bending Across her gently-budding breast."
Byron: Bride of Abydos, i. 6.

* Ĝĕn'-too, s. pl. [Port. gentio = a heathen, a gentile.]

1. Gen.: The Hindoos in general.

2. Spec.: The Teloogoos or Telugus, a race shown by their language, which was not derived from the Sanscrit, to be of Turanian origin. They inhabit the region north of Madras near the Bay of Bengal.

* Gentoo-language, s. The Teloogoo.

* ĝĕn'-trĭçe, * gen-trise, * gen-ter-iee, s. [O. Fr. genterise.] Gentility, good descent, nobility. [GENTRY.]

"Yet that may come of idleness as weel as gentrice."—Scott: Redgauntlet, let. xi.

ĝĕn'-trỹ, * gen-ter-ie, * gen-ter-y, * gen-ter-ye, s. [A corrupt. of gentrice (q.v.).]

1. High birth; noble descent or extraction; rank.

"Also to have pride of gentrie is right gret folie; for oft time the gentrie of the bodie benimeth the gentrie of the soule."—Chaucer: Persones Tale.

* 2. An act becoming a person of good birth or position.

"What say we eke of hem that deliten hem in swearing, and hold it a genterie or manly dede to swere gret othes."—Chaucer: Persones Tale.

* 3. Civility, politeness, complaisance, courtesy.

"Shew us so much gentry and good-will,
As to extend your time with us awhile."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 2.

4. People of good position, as landed proprietors, merchants, &c.; persons of education, good breeding, and social status; the class below the nobility.

"So it was with Monmouth. In 1680 he had been adored alike by the gentry and by the peasantry of the west."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

ĝĕn'-tỹ, a. [Eng. gent, a.; -y.] Elegantly formed, neat, comely.

"See sweetly move her genty limbs, Like music notes o' lovers' hymns."
Burns: My Lady's Gown.

ĝĕn'-ŭ, s. [Lat. = a knee.]

Anat.: A bend; as, the genu of the corpus callosum; the genu of the optic tract.

ĝĕn'-ŭ-ănt, a. [Lat. genu = the knee.]

Her.: Kneeling.

* ĝĕn'-ŭ-flĕct, v.i. [Lat. genu = the knee, and flecto = to bend.] To bend the knee, particularly in worship.

ĝĕn-ŭ-flĕc'-tion, gĕn-ŭ-flexion (flexion as flĕk'-shŭn), s. [Fr. génuflexion, from Low Lat. genuflexio, from Lat. genu = the knee, and flexio = a bending; flecto = to bend; Sp. genuflexion; Ital. genuflessione.] The act of bending the knee, particularly in worship; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

"Englishmen who had no scruple about antiphonies, and genuflexions, altars and surplices."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. 1.

ĝĕn'-ŭ-ĭne, a. [Lat. genuinus = innate, inborn, genuine, from the same root as genus (q.v.); Fr. génuine; Sp. & Ital. genuino.]

1. Belonging to or coming from the true stock; real, true; not counterfeit, false, spurious, or adulterated.

"I grieved for Buonaparte with a vain
And all unthinking grief! for who aspires
To genuine greatness but from just desires,
And knowledge such as he could never gain."
Wordsworth: Sonnet, dedicated to Liberty, 1801.

2. Trustworthy; not false or double-faced: as, a genuine man. (Colloquial.) ĝĕn'-ŭ-ĭne-lỹ, adv. [Eng. genuine; -ly.] In a genuine manner; without falseness, adulteration, or foreign admixture; truly, purely, fairly, legitimately.

"He had genuinely raised a question which was distasteful to some portions of the House."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 7, 1882.

ĝĕn'-ŭ-ĭne-nĕss, s. [Eng. genuine; -ness.] The quality or state of being genuine; freedom from falseness, adulteration, or foreign admixture; purity; naturalness.

"St. Austin reasoned well in vindicating the genuineness of the Bible."—Watson: Apology for the Bible, let. 2.

¶ Christian apologists: The words genuineness and authenticity have been used in different senses by different writers. For the distinction between them, see AUTHENTIC, A. II. 1.

* ĝĕn-ŭ-ĭt-ỹ, s. [As if from Low Lat. genuitas; cf. ingenuity.] Simplicity; sincerity.

ġē'-nŭs (pl. ġĕn'-ĕr-a), s. [Lat.] Birth, descent, origin; a race, a kind.

I. Ord. Lang.: A class, a kind, a species.

"Rarity and density (which are the proper differences of quantity), cannot change the common nature of quant ity, their genus, which, by being so to them, must be univocal to them both."—Digby: Of Bodies, ch. xiv.

II. Technically:

1. Logic: A class of objects containing several species; a class more extensive than a species; a universal which is predicable of several things of different species.

"In the defining of words, which is nothing but declaring their signification, we make use of the genus, or next general word that comprehends it. Which is not out of necessity, but only to save the labour of enumerating several simple ideas, which the next general word or genus stands for; or, perhaps, sometimes the shame of not being able to do it."—Locke: On Human Understanding, bk. iii., ch. iii.

2. Mus.: Sort or class, especially used with reference to scales; as, the diatonic, chromatic, and enharmonic genera.

3. Science:

(1) Zool. & Bot. Classification: An assemblage of species or of sub-genera closely agreeing together in all essential characteristics, not found in any others of the sub-family or family to which they belong. It may be divided into sub-genera. Among animals, Mus is a genus containing, among other animals, both the domestic mouse and the rat, which, differing in size, &c., and being clearly distinct species, have still a community of structure obvious to all. So also among plants, the various species of the rose constitute the genus Rosa. In the Latin name of a plant or animal adopted by naturalists, the first word indicates the genus, and the second the species: as Mus musculus, Rosa spinosissima. In the English equivalent, the genus is the second word and the species the first, as, the Common Mouse, the Burnet-leaved Rose.

(2) Other sciences: Sometimes a classification like that adopted by naturalists is used in other sciences. Thus, of skin diseases there is a genus Acne with various species, Acne simplex, A. rosacea, &c.

¶ (1) Subaltern genera:

Logic: Terms which are alternately genera and species, genera to the lower, and species to the higher and wider conceptions.

(2) Summum genus:

Logic: The highest genus; a genus which is not considered as a species of anything; as being.

"The widest class, with which Abstraction ceases, is called the Highest (summum) Genus, because in this hierarchy of conceptions it is not brought under any other genus as its species, but is itself the genus to each conception in the series. Thus the—Individual is neither genus nor species.
Infima Species is never a genus.
Summum Genus is never a species.
Subaltern Genera are genera to those below them, and species to those above."—Thomson: Laws of Thought, § 50.

ġĕ-ō-, pref. [Gr. γεω (geō), put for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to land or earth; γέα γῆ (gea, gē) = the earth.] A frequent prefix in words derived from the Greek, and referring to the earth: as, geography, geology, &c.

ġĕ-ō-cā-lўç'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. geocalyx, genit. geocalyc(is); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Jungermanniaceæ, sub-order Jungermanneæ.

ġē-ō-cā'-lўx, s. [Pref. geo-, and Lat. calyx (q.v.).]

Bot.: The typical genus of the family Geocalycidæ (q.v.).

ġĕ-ō-çĕn'-trĭc, a. [Pref. geo-, and Eng. centric (q.v.).]

Astronomy:

1. As viewed from or having relation to the earth as centre; as, the geocentric latitude or longitude, or what is distinguished from the heliocentric—that is, as seen from the centre of the sun.

2. Having reference to the centre of the earth, as distinguished from any spot on its surface.

geocentric-latitude, s.

Astronomy:

1. Of a planet: Its latitude as seen from the earth.

2. Of a place on the earth's surface: The angle included between the radius of the earth through the place and the plane of the equator. It is contradistinguished from geographical latitude, which always exceeds it slightly in amount.

geocentric-longitude, s.

Astron. (Of a planet): The distance measured on the ecliptic between the geocentric place and the first point of Aries.

ġĕ-ō-çĕn'-trĭc-al, a. [Eng. geocentric; -al.]

Astron.: The same as GEOCENTRIC (q.v.).

ġĕ-ō-çĕn'-trĭc-al-lў, adv. [Eng. geocentric-al; -ly.] In a geocentric manner.

ġĕ-ō-çēr-ĕl'-līte, s. [Pref. geo-; Lat. dimin. of cēreus = wax-coloured, and suff. -lite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A white, brittle, and easily-pulverised mineral, containing carbon 79·24, hydrogen 13·21, and oxygen 7·55 = 100. Obtained from the dark-brown coal of Gesterwitz. It is called also Geoceric-acid. (Dana.) ġē-ō-çēr'-ĭc, a. [Pref. geo-; Lat. cera; Gr. κηρός (kēros) = wax, and suff. -ic.] (See etym. and compound.)

geoceric-acid, s.

Min.: The same as GEOCERELLITE (q.v.).

ġĕ-ŏç'-ĕr-īte s. [Pref. geo-; Lat. cera; Gr. κηρός (kēros)=wax, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A white waxy mineral, consisting of carbon 79·24, hydrogen 13·13, and oxygen 7·81, from the dark-brown coal of Gesterwitz. Akin to Geocerellite. (Dana.) ġĕ-ŏc'-ō-rēş, ġĕ-ōc-ō-rī'-zą, ġĕ-ōc-ō-rĭ'-zæ, s. pl. [Pref. geo-, and Gr. κόρις (koris) = a bug.]

Entom.: Land-Bugs. A section, group, or tribe of insects, sub-order Heteroptera. The antennæ are always visible, and the legs are formed for running. The bed bug is one of them. Mr. Westwood calls them Auricorizæ (Air-bugs), meaning that they breathe air, rather than Geocorizæ (Land-bugs), for some are found on the surface of water, some going far out even on the sea. There are nine sub-tribes or families: (1) Ploteres, (2) Riparia, (3) Reduvina, (4) Membranacea, (5) Bicelluli, (6) Cœcigenia, (7) Lygœodea, (8) Coreodea, (9) Scutata (q.v.).

ġĕ-ō-crō'-nīte, s. [Ger. geocronit; pref. geo-, and Gr. Κρόνος (Kronos) = Saturn, used by the alchemists for lead.]

Min.: An orthorhombic lead-grey, or greyish-blue mineral, of metallic lustre; its hardness 2 to 3; its sp. gr. 6·4 to 6·6; its compos.: Sulphur 16·5; antimony 16·7; lead 66·8 = 100. Found in Sweden, Spain, and Tuscany. (Dana.)

ġĕ-ō-çў'-clĭc, a. [Pref. geo-, and Eng. cyclic.]

1. Of or belonging to the revolutions of the earth.

2. Periodically encircling the earth.

geocyclic-machine, s. A machine for exhibiting the simple processes by which day and night and the seasons are produced.

ġē'-ōde, s. [Fr., from Gr. γαιώδης (gaiōdēs) = earthy, from γῆ, γαῖα (gē, gaia) = the earth.]

Mineralogy & Geology:

1. A term first introduced by German mineralogists to designate a hollow nodule of any mineral substance, often lined with crystals. Thus, at Oberstein, in Saxony, hollow balls of agate were found lined with crystals of quartz or amethyst. Geodes are found more or less in all volcanic rocks; they are occasionally of large size, at other times only of small dimensions.

"Nothing except an outer wall and foss remains; in part of which is a vast stratum of ferruginous geodes."—Pennant: Journey from Chester to London, p. 402.

2. The cavity in such a natural ball.

ġĕ-ŏ-dĕph'-a-ga, s. pl. [Pref. geo- (q.v.), and Gr. ἀδηφαγος (adēphagos)=gluttonous, greedy.]

Entom.: One of the two leading tribes of carnivorous beetles, comprehending those which live on land as distinguished from Hydradephaga, those inhabiting water. It contains the two families of Carabidæ and Cicindelidæ (q.v.).

* ġĕ-ŏ-dē'-şĭ-ąn, s. [Eng. geodesy; -an.] One versed in geodesy.

ġĕ-ō-dĕs'-ĭc, ġĕ-ō-dĕs'-ĭc-al, a. [Eng. geodes(y); -ic; -al.] The same as GEODETIC (q.v.).

"The first step in a geodesic survey consists in making a preliminary reconnoisance of the country to be surveyed."—Davies & Peck: Math. Dict.

* ġĕ-ŏd'-ĕ-şĭst, s. [Eng. geodes(y); -ist.] A geodesian.

ġĕ-ŏd'-ĕ-sў, s. [Gr. γεωδαισία (geōdaisia), from γῆ (gē) = the earth, and δαίω (daiō) = to divide; Fr. géodésie.] That branch of applied mathematics which determines, by means of observations and measurements, the figures and areas of large portions of the earth's surface, or the general figure and dimensions of the earth; that branch of surveying in which the curvature of the earth is taken into account. This becomes necessary in all extensive operations.

ġĕ-ō-dĕt'-ĭc, ġĕ-ō-dĕt'-ĭc-al, a. [Eng. geodes(y); -tic, -tical.] Pertaining to geodesy; carried out or determined by means of geodesy: as, a geodetic survey.

geodetic-line, s. The shortest line on the surface of an ellipsoid which can be drawn between two points. It is a characteristic property of this line that at every point of the curve, its curvature is less than that of any other curve of the surface through that point.

ġĕ-ō-dĕt'-ĭc-al-lў, adv. [Eng. geodetical; -ly.] In a geodetic manner; by means of geodesy.

ġĕ-ō-dĕt'-ĭcs, s. [GEODETIC.] The same as GEODESY (q.v.).

ġĕ-ō-dĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Eng. geod(e); i connective; Lat. fero = to bear, to produce, and Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Producing geodes.

ġĕof-rŏy'-a, ġĕof-fræ'-a, ġĕof-frœ'-a, s. [Named after M. E. F. Geoffroy, author of a Materia Medica. He died in 1731.]

Bot.: A genus of papilionaceous plants, tribe Dalbergieæ. The leaves are pinnate, the fruit in drupes instead of proper legumes. The bark of Geoffroya vermifuga and G. spinulosa is anthelmintic. It has a disagreeable smell and a sweet mucilaginous taste. The effects are drastic, emetic, purgative, and narcotic; in large doses it is poisonous. (Lindley.)

ġĕ-ō-ġĕn'-ĭc, a. [GEOGONIC.]

ġĕ-ō-ġlŏs'-sŭm, s. [Pref. geo- (q.v.), and Gr. γλῶσσα (glossa) = the tongue.]

Bot.: Earth tongue. A genus of ascomycetous fungi, sub-order Elvellacei. Some are black or brown, others green or purple. They occur chiefly in Europe, on closely shaven lawns, on pastures, and sphagnous bogs. None are eatable.

* ġĕ-ŏg-nō'-sĭs, s. [GEOGNOSY.] A knowledge of the earth.

"He has no bent towards the enlargement of our geognosis."—G. Eliot: Middlemarch, ch. xi.

* ġĕ-ŏg'-nŏst, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios)) = belonging to the earth, and γνωσις (gnōsis) = knowledge; Fr. geognoste.] One versed in geognosy; a geologist.

"The travellers have been such bad geognosts."—C. Kingsley: Life, ii. 141.

* ġĕ-ŏg-nŏs'-tĭc, a. [Fr. géognostique.] Of or pertaining to geognosy or geology; geological.

* ġĕ-ŏg-nŏs'-tĭc-al, a. [Eng. geognostic; -al.] The same as GEOGNOSTIC (q.v.).

* ġĕ-ŏg'-nō-sў, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), from γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and γνῶσις (gnōsis) = knowledge; γιγνώσκω (gignōskō) = to know; Fr. géognosie.]

I. Gen.: A term introduced by Werner to designate the science now termed geology.

2. Spec.: A description of the structure of the earth, as distinguished from geology, limiting the latter term to theoretical speculations regarding the processes by which it has been brought into its present state. This Sir Charles Lyell considered an unnecessary refinement of language.

ġĕ-ō-gŏn'-ĭc, ġĕ-ō-gŏn'-ĭ-cal, a. [Eng. geogon(y); -ic, -ical; Fr. géogonique.] Of or pertaining to geogony, or the formation of the earth.

ġĕ-ŏg'-ō-nў, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and γονή (gonē) = a generation, a begetting; Fr. géogonie.] A name sometimes given to the science which investigates the origin of the earth: cosmogony.

ĝĕ-ŏg'-ra-phĕr, s. [Eng. geograph(y); -er.] One who is versed in geography; one who writes a treatise on geography.

"Manichæus, or Manes, who was a Chaldean or Babylonian, was born about A.D. 240, and was a learned and ingenious man, and a good astronomer and geographer."—Jortin: Remarks on Eccles. History.

ĝĕ-ō-grăph'-ĭc, ĝĕ-ō-grăph'-ĭc-al, a. [Fr. géographique.] Of or pertaining to geography; containing a description of the physical structure and characteristics of the globe.

"In that vast region of China, which is enriched with so fertile a soil, and compriseth such variety of geographical parallels."—Boyle: Works, ii. 104.

¶ Royal Geographical Society: A society for the promotion of geographical research, which originated in London in 1830, one in Paris having been founded in 1821. The abbreviation for Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society is F.R.G.S.

geographical-latitude, s. [Latitude.]

geographical-mile, s. [Mile.]

ĝĕ-ō-grăph'-ĭc-al-lў, adv. [Eng. geographical; -ly.] In a geographical manner; with reference to geographical facts or relations; like a geographer.

"Here [Homer] introduces Minerva to let Ulysses into the knowledge of his country. How does she do this? She geographically describes it to him."—Pope: Homer; Odyssey, IV. (Note by Broome.)

ĝĕ-ŏg-ra-phў, s. [Fr. géographie, from Lat. geographia, from Gr. γεωγραφία (geōgraphia), from γεω (geō), for γῆιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and γραφία (graphia) = a description; γράφω (graphō) = to write.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. In the same sense as II. 1.

2. A school or other book treating of the science described under II.

II. Science:

1. Definition & divisions: A delineation or description of the earth as it at present is, leaving it to geology to investigate how it came into its present condition. It may be divided into three distinct sciences, Mathematical or Astronomical, Physical, and Political Geography. Mathematical geography views the earth as a planet; it investigates its relations to the sun, the moon, and other bodies belonging to the solar system. It gives attention to the angle at which its axis is inclined to the ecliptic, the position of the arctic and antarctic circles and the tropics of Cancer and Capricorn, the parallels of latitude, and the meridians of longitude. Sir John E. W. Herschel declares that, theoretically speaking, geography is a part of astronomy, and he treats it as such. He refers specially to the first department of the science. Physical geography treats of the present distribution of sea and land, the currents of the ocean, the climates of the several continents and islands. With regard to the land, it commences by indicating the position of the mountain chains and table lands, thus fixing the positions of the great rivers, to which attention is next turned. Then the position of the alluvial plains, the deserts, &c., is pointed out; the distribution of the plants over the surface of the earth, often called botanical geography, follows next; then that of the animals; and finally that of the several races of mankind. This branch of the science approaches those of geology, hydrology, meteorology, botany, zoology, and ethnology or anthropology. Finally, there follows political geography, which treats of the present distribution of political power over the world, the position and resources of the several empires, kingdoms, republics, &c., their populations and wealth, the capitals, other large cities, and the more thinly inhabited agricultural parts. This branch of the subject approaches the confines of history, the limits of almost every state not arising from the colonization of a new region, but, in the majority of instances, having been determined by the results of former battles.

2. Hist. of Geog.: Eratosthenes, B.C. 240, was one of the earliest ancient geographers of eminence; but the greatest names in this department were Strabo—who lived during the reigns of Augustus and Tiberius—and Ptolemy, who flourished about A.D. 139. The discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope and that of America in the fifteenth century, gave a great impulse to its modern advance. Various societies for the cultivation of geographical science have been founded, both in this country and in Europe. Of these the oldest is that formed in Paris in 1821. The Royal Geographical Society of London came next, in 1830.

"I now live in the house with a child, whom his mother has so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world, could readily point, being asked, to any country upon the globe, or any county in the map of England; knew all the great rivers, promontories, straits, and bays in the world, and could find the longitude and latitude of any place, before he was six years old."—Locke: On Education, §178.

* ĝĕ-ŏl'-a-trў, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γῆιος (gēios), from γῆ (gē) = the earth, and λατρεία (latreia) = worship.] The worship of the earth.

"To this succeeded astrology in the East, and geolatry in the West."—Cox: Mythol. of Aryan Nations, i. 95.

* ĝĕ-ŏl'-ō-ĝĕr, s. [Eng. geolog(y); -er.] A geologist (q.v.).

* ĝĕ-ō-lō'-ĝĭ-an, s. [Eng. geology; -an.] A geologist (q.v.).

ĝĕ-ō-lŏĝ'-ĭc-al, * ĝĕ-ō-lŏĝ'-ĭc, a. [Fr. géologique.] [Geology.] Of or pertaining to geology, or the science of the earth.

¶ Geological Society of London: A society formed in London in 1807, and to a certain extent an offshoot from the Royal Society of London. It has since done noble work for its special science, and at the end of 1882 had 1,360 ordinary, three honorary, and four foreign members, with thirty-nine foreign correspondents, in all 1,441. For many years publishing quarto Transactions, it in 1845 adopted the octavo size for the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, commenced in that year, and of which now (Dec., 1883), the thirty-ninth annual volume is nearly completed. The abbreviation for Fellow of the Geological Society is F.G.S. Many other Geological Societies exist: as, that of France, founded in 1830; that of Dublin in 1832, and that of Edinburgh in 1834.

geological-map, s. [Map.]

geological-survey, s. [Survey.]

ĝĕ-ō-lŏĝ'-ĭc-al-lў, adv. [Eng. geological; -ly.] In a geological manner; according to geology.

ĝĕ-ŏl'-ō-ĝĭst, s. [Fr. géologiste.] [Geology.] One versed in the science of geology.

ĝĕ-ŏl'-ō-ĝīze, v.i. [Eng. geolog(y); -ize.] To study geology; to make geological investigations; to discourse as a geologist.

ĝĕ-ŏl'-ō-ĝў, s. [Fr. géologie, from Gr. γεω (geō), for γῆιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth; γῆ (gē) = the earth, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse.]

I. The science which investigates the bygone history of the earth with the view of accounting for its present condition. It inquires into the successive changes which have taken place in the organic and inorganic kingdoms of nature, seeks out the causes of these changes, and traces the influence which they have exerted in modifying the surface and the external appearance of the earth. It is the province of physical and political geography to describe what the earth now is, geology attempts to furnish the reason why.

(1) Hist. of Geology: Though it is only during the present century that geology has started up into the vigour of manhood, yet its birth took place ages ago. Isolated geological observations or hypotheses occur abundantly in ancient literature. "As for the earth, out of it cometh bread; and under it is turned up as it were fire" (Job xxviii. 5); an anticipation of the Huttonian hypothesis. Egypt, according to Herodotus, is the gift of the Nile, that is, the river brought down the silt which constitutes the fertile soil of the Delta and other parts of Lower Egypt. Though there is a mixture of erroneous hypotheses in the statements attributed to Pythagoras, in Ovid's Metamorphoses, bk. xv., other parts would have done no discredit to Sir Charles Lyell. Pythagoras himself lived, it is thought, about 580 B.C., but the views handed down by Ovid were probably those of Pythagoreans in the Augustan age rather than those of Pythagoras. The best geologist of antiquity was the geographer Strabo, who lived in the first century A.D. For the long controversy regarding the nature of fossils, and if they were organic when they were entombed, see Fossil. Modern geology began with Werner, who was a Professor in the School of Mines, at Freyberg, in Saxony, in 1775. He believed that a series of universal formations had been deposited in succession from a chaotic fluid. Basalt was supposed to have had the same origin, but to this view various continental observers were opposed. The controversy spreading to Great Britain, Hutton, an Edinburgh physician, published in 1788 his Theory of the Earth, developed in a separate work in 1795. He assumed no causes but those now existing. He showed that geology and cosmogony were different. "In the œconomy of the world," he said, "he could find no trace of a beginning, no prospect of an end." He held basalt, granite, &c., to be of igneous origin. The Wesnerians were called Neptunists, their opponents Vulcanists. This controversy has long ceased to exist, the continued study of geology showing that a diversity of forces has been in operation. The science has greatly advanced in the present century, and is still actively prosecuted.

(2) The forces or causes in operation: After inquirers had outgrown the belief in fossils produced by the plastic power of nature or all entombed simultaneously by the Noachian deluge, the belief was entertained that there had been a series of creations and catastrophes, the latter causing the universal destruction of all pre-existing species. The belief was also entertained that some external causes, say the forces producing earthquake and volcanic action, were more potent in former times than now. This Prof. Huxley calls Catastrophism, which he defines to be any form of geological speculation which, in order to account for the phenomena, supposes the operation of forces different in their nature or immeasurably different in power from those which are at present in action in the universe. Sir Roderick Murchison was of this school, with many continental geologists.

The second school of geology is that called by Huxley Uniformitarianism. This looks only to causes now in operation for the explanation of geological phenomena. Of this school, preeminently a British one, Hutton was the founder, though it was Sir Charles Lyell that carried it forward to triumph. He showed the enormous changes which the causes now in operation are still producing, and that nearly every phenomenon, attributed to abnormally potent causes acting suddenly and briefly, could be produced by causes not more intense than those in action now, but operating through immense periods of bygone time. In his Principles of Geology, he examines aqueous causes, the action of water acting in connection with tides, currents, &c., in seas, rivers, and lakes, also the action of ice in all its forms. Next he inquires into igneous causes, volcanos, and earthquakes. Climate and organic life are also carefully investigated in the work.

The doctrine of the third school of geologists is called by Prof. Huxley Evolutionism; it accepts nearly the whole of Uniformitarianism, except the part referring to the development of organic life. In his later years Sir Chas. Lyell became an evolutionist. [Darwinism, Evolution, &c.]

(3) Geologic time: Both the uniformitarian and the evolutionist believe that they may draw to any extent on what he called the bank of time, which will be found "ready to discount any quantity of hypothetical paper." Sir Wm. Thomson holds that any such drafts must be limited "within some such period of time as one hundred millions of years;" and another natural philosopher considers the time at call only about sixty millions of years. Prof. Huxley believes the necessity for these limitations is not proved, though perhaps one, two, or three hundred millions of years might be enough to account for geological phenomena.

With regard to the subdivision of the time, long or short, at the geologist's command, the sedimentary strata having been laid down by water, the relative thickness of each stratum will measure the proportion of geologic time required for its deposition. This thickness, however, cannot be very closely estimated, from the great variations in different localities. In New York, for instance, the Silurian and Devonian rocks are but 1300 feet thick; in Pennsylvania these, with the Carboniferous, measure 40,000 feet. The whole thickness of stratified rocks is estimated at not less than 20 miles, of which about five-sixths belong to the Palæozoic or Primary formations. The series of rocks are not so complete in the United States as in Europe, and especially in Great Britain, where the thickness to the top of the Silurian is 60,000 feet, to the top of the Carboniferous 85,000 feet, and to the close of the series 100,000 feet.

(4) Geologic strata: For a list of these, see FORMATION; see also METAMORPHIC ROCKS.

(5) Other rocks: For these, see IGNEOUS ROCKS, VOLCANIC ROCKS.

(6) Fossils: For these, see FOSSILS; see also PALÆONTOLOGY.

(7) Applied geology: Geology applied to industrial or other practical purposes; as, for instance, to mining, drainage, railway tunnelling, &c.

ġē'-ō-măn-çẽr, s. [GEOMANCY.] A diviner or fortune-teller by means of geomancy.

"Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, daily delude the vulgar."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. i., ch. iii.

ġē'-ō-măn-çy, *ge-o-man-cie, *ge-o-man-cye, *gc-o-maun-ce, s. [Fr. géomance, géomancie, from Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and μαντεία (mantein) = prophecy, divination; Sp. & Port. geomancia.] A kind of divination by means of lines formed by little dots or points, originally on the earth, and subsequently on paper, &c.

"He taught them there openlye bothe in Latine and Greke, beside the art Magyck, Sortilege, Phisnomy, Palmestry, Alcumy, Geomancy, and Witchery, that was taughte there also."—Bale: Votaries, pt. i.

ġē-ō-măn'-tĭc, *ġē-ō-măn-tĭck, *ġē-ō-măn'-tĭc-al, a. [Fr. géomantique.] Of or pertaining to geomancy.

"Two geomantic figures were displayed Above his head, a warrior and a maid."
Dryden: Palamon & Arcite, ii. 614.

ġē-ō-măn'-tĭc-al-lȳ, adv. [Eng. geomantical; -ly.] In a geomantic manner; by means of geomancy.

ġē-ō-măn'-tỹ, s. [GEOMANCY.]

ġē-ŏm'-ē-tẽr, s. [Fr. géomètre, from Gr. γεωμετρης (geōmetrēs): γῆ (gē) = the earth, and μετρώ (metrō) = to measure.]

I. Ord. Lang.: One versed in geometry; a geometrician. (Boyle: Works, ii. 473.)

 II. Entom.: The name sometimes given to moths of the group Geometrina (q.v.).

ġē-ŏm'-ē-trạl, a. [Fr. géometral.] Pertaining to geometry; geometrical.

ġē-ō-mĕt'-rĭc, ġē-ō-mĕt'-rĭc-al, a. [Fr. géométrique, from Gr. γεωμετρικός (geōmetrikos).] [GEOMETRY.]

1. Of or pertaining to geometry; according to the rules or principles of geometry; done or determined by geometry.

"Surveying a place, according to my idea, is taking a geometrical plan of it."—Cook: Second Voyage, bk. iii., ch. vii.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

"The dimensions of his glorious face
Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass"
Blackmore: Creation.

3. Disposed in geometric figures.

"Geometrick jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius."—Grew: Museum.

geometric-chuck, s. A chuck having a radial slider to which the work is attached, the slider oscillating in a plane at right angles to the axis of motion, so as to produce curved lines in various patterns, as regulated by special devices.

geometrical-construction, s. The operation of drawing a figure, by means of right lines and circles. The geometrical construction of an algebraic expression consists in drawing a figure such that each of its parts shall have its representative in the expression, and that the relation between them shall be the same as that between their representatives in the given expression. (Davies & Peck.) geometrical-curve, s. The same as an ALGEBRAIC-CURVE (q.v.).

geometrical-decorated, a.

Arch.: A term applied to the earlier period of decorated architecture in England, in which the tracery and other ornamentation consisted of geometrical forms. [DECORATED.]

geometrical-drawing, s. Drawing with instruments, as opposed to freehand drawing.

geometrical-elevation, s.

Arch.: A design for the front or side of a building, drawn according to the rules of geometry, as distinguished from a perspective or natural elevation.

geometrical-lathe, s. A species of lathe used for making complicated patterns of interlacing lines to form an additional guard against the counterfeiting of banknotes, &c. It is adapted for more delicate and minute work than the cycloidal engine.

geometrical-locus, s. The curve or surface in which a point or line is always found moving, in accordance with an algebraic law. [LOCUS.]

geometrical-pace, s. A measure of five feet.

geometrical-pen, s. An instrument for drawing geometrical curves, in which the movements of a pen or pencil attached to a revolving arm of adjustable length are varied by changing the toothed wheels which give motion to the arm.

geometrical-plane, s. The same as GROUND-PLANE (q.v.).

geometrical-progression, s. A progression or series in which the terms increase or decrease by a common ratio or proportion, as, 1, 3, 9, 27, 81; 144, 36, 9, $\frac{9}{4}$, $\frac{9}{16}$, $\frac{9}{64}$, &c. [PROGRESSION.]

geometric-radius, s.

Gear.: The radius of the pitch circle of a cog-wheel. The real radius is that touching the crests of the teeth.

geometrical-solution, s. A solution of a problem effected geometrically; that is, by the aid of the right line and circle. This rejects all solutions made by aid of the higher curves, or by approximation.

geometric-square, s. An instrument for measuring distances and heights, and useful for its portability as well as for the facility, by the common rule of three, of solving most of the problems arising from its use. It is made of brass or wood, twelve or eighteen inches square, and the quadrant is graduated in each direction. The two sides opposite to the axial point of the alidade are graduated to 100 equal parts, with major divisions of ten of said parts. The 100 point finishes at the angle obliquely opposite the centre from which the arc is struck. One side represents the horizon, and the alidade with two sights is equal in length to the diagonal of the square. The alidade has divisions equal to those on the sides of the square.

geometrical-stairs, s. pl.

Building: A flight of stone stairs where the steps are secured into the wall at one end only, the other forming a continued string with an open newel.

ġē-ō-mĕt'-rĭ-cal-lȳ, *ġē-ō-mĕt'-rĭ-cal-lie, adv. [Eng. geometrical; -ly.] In a geometrical manner; according to the rules or laws of geometry.

"Sir Christopher Wren, afterwards, in the same year, geometrically demonstrated the equality of some curves to a strait line."—Derham: Physico-Theology, bk. v., ch. i. (Note 13.)

ġē-ŏm-ĕ-trĭ'-cian, s. [Eng. geometric; -ian.] One versed in geometry; a geometer; a mathematician.

"The great work, which entitles him to the highest place among the geometricians and natural philosophers of all ages and of all nations."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. viii.

ġē-ō-mĕt'-rĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. geometr(a); Gr. γεωμέτρης (geōmetrēs) = a land measurer, a geometer; Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: The typical family of the group or tribe of moths called Geometrina (q.v.). The antennæ of the male are often pectinated, the abdomen sometimes crested; the wings, green, generally entire rounded or angular; the larvæ rather elongate, stiff, often rough; the head generally bifid. Only eight species are known to occur in Britain. Among them are the Large Emerald, the Essex Emerald, the Green Emerald, and the Blotched Emerald. (Stainton.)

ESSEX EMERALD.

ġē-ō-mĕt-rī'-na, s. pl. [Lat. geometr(a), and neut. pl. adj. suff. -ina.] [GEOMETRIDÆ.]

Entom.: A group or tribe of moths. The antennæ are setaceous, frequently ciliated or pectinated; they are longer than the thorax. The body is generally slender; the wings broad, the posterior pair generally brightly coloured and exposed to view when the animal is at rest. The larvæ have, as a rule, only ten legs, hence they have to form a loop when they walk. There are 282 British species known, many of them gaily marked, some being of small size. The group contains seventeen families:—

(1) Ourapterydæ, (2) Ennomidæ, (3) Amphidasidæ, (4) Boarmidæ, (5) Boletobidæ, (6) Geometridæ, (7) Ephyridæ, (8) Acidaliadæ, (9) Caberidæ, (10) Macaridæ, (11) Fidoniidæ, (12) Zerenidæ, (13) Ligidæ, (14) Hybernidæ, (15) Larentidæ, (16) Eubolidæ, and (17) Sionidæ. (Stainton.)

ġē-ŏm'-ē-trīze, v.t. [Eng. geometr(y); -ize.] To act according to the rules or laws of geometry; to proceed geometrically; to recognize or apprehend geometrical quantities or laws.

"Nature geometrizeth, and observeth order in all things."—Browne: Cyrus' Garden, ch. iii.

ġē-ŏm'-ē-trỹ, * ġē-ŏm'-ē-trĭe, s. [Fr. géométrie, from Lat. geometria, from Gr. γεωμετρία (geōmetria) = the measurement of land: γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and μετρία (metria) = measurement; μετρέω (metrĕō) = to measure; μέτρον (metron) = a measure.] Properly the measurement of the earth or of land, but now used exclusively of the abstract science to which practical land measurement gave or may have given birth. It is the science of space, whether linear, superficial, or solid.

1. Hist. of Geometry: Who first invented or cultivated geometry is uncertain. The Hindoos have a geometry apparently of indigenous growth. Some knowledge of geometry was apparently possessed by the builders of the Egyptian pyramids. Diodorus and others attribute the invention or discovery of geometry to Egypt, which is doubtful. The Greeks surpassed all ancient nations in their attainments in the science. Euclid founded a school of mathematics at Alexandria some time in the reign of Ptolemy Lagus, B.C. 323 to 284. His Elements are still in use in many schools and colleges. [MATHEMATICS.]

2. Nature of the Science: Geometry, like mathematics, is built up on rigorous demonstration. To prevent the possibility of error in reasoning it is needful to commence with definitions of the terms employed. Then follow in Euclid's Elements postulates or concessions demanded as to what is possible to be done; then axioms, simple mathematical statements worthy of being believed. A popular belief is that the whole science of geometry rests upon the axioms: it is really, however, based on the definitions; thus the whole third book of Euclid follows naturally from the definition of a circle.

¶ (1) Analytical Geometry: The analytical investigation of the relations and properties of geometrical magnitudes. It is divided into Determinate and Indeterminate Geometry, according as the number of possible solutions in any given case is limited or unlimited.

(2) Descriptive Geometry: Geometry of which the feature is to represent solid bodies with accurate form, perspective, &c., on paper or other plane surface.

(3) Determinate Geometry: [¶ (1)].

(4) Elementary Geometry: Geometry treating of points, lines, surfaces, or the ordinary solids, as distinguished from Conic Sections, &c., called the Higher Geometry.

(5) Higher Geometry: [¶ (4)].

(6) Indeterminate Geometry: [¶ (1)].

(7) Plane Geometry: Geometry relating to surfaces, or to lines drawn or points placed upon them.

(8) Solid Geometry: Geometry relating to solids.

(9) To hang by geometry: To hang or be out of shape or in confusion.

ġĕ-ō-mўr'-ĭ-çīte, s. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the land, and μυρίκη (murikē) = a shrub, the tamarisk.] [MYRICA.]

Min.: A waxy, pulverulent mineral, consisting of carbon 80·59, hydrogen 13·42, and oxygen 5·99 = 100. It occurs in the brown coal deposit at Gesterwitz. The wax may have been derived from fossil trees. (Dana.) ġĕ-ō-năv-ĭ-gā'-tion, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the land, and Eng. navigation (q.v.).] A term proposed for that branch of the science of navigation in which the position of a ship at sea is determined by reference to some other spot on the surface of the earth. Opposed to Cœlo-navigation (q.v.).

ġĕ-ŏn'-ō-mў, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and νόμος (nomos) = a law.] The science of the physical laws relating to the earth, as geology and physical geography.

ġĕ-ŏph'-ą-ġĭşm, s. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth, and φαγεῖν (phagein) = to eat.] The act or habit of eating earth, as dirt, clay, &c. [DIRT-EATING.]

ġĕ-ŏph'-ą-ġĭst, s. [GEOPHAGISM.] One who practises geophagism; one who eats dirt.

ġĕ-ŏph'-ą-ġў, s. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth, and φαγεῖν (phagein) = to eat.] The same as GEOPHAGISM (q.v.).

"Geophagy—dirt or earth-eating—fatal generally, by dysentery or dropsy."—Lindsay: Mind in the Lower Animals, i. 40.

ġĕ-ŏph'-ĭ-la, s. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γήιος (geios) = belonging to the land, and φιλέω (phileō) = to love.] So named from the creeping habit of the plants.]

Bot.: A genus of Cinchonaceæ, tribe Coffeæ, family Psychotridæ. The species are found in tropical America and the East Indies. The root of Geophila reniformis is purgative or emetic.

ġĕ-ō-phĭl'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. geophil(us), and Lat. fem. adj. pl. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Centipedes, order Chilognatha. The body is very slender and thread-like, with many segments, and a corresponding number of pairs of feet.

ġĕ-ŏph'-ĭ-lŭs, s. [GEOPHILA.]

1. Zool.: The typical genus of the family Oeophilidæ (q.v.). Geophilus electricus is found near London and elsewhere. It is sometimes seen upon the doorsteps of country houses. When excited it emits an electric light.

2. Palæont.: Count Munster has described a centipede, called by him Geophilus proavus, from the lithographic slates of Solenhofen, which belong to the Upper Jurassic rocks.

* ġĕ-ō-pŏn'-ĭc, a. & s. [Fr. géoponique, from Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth, and πονικός (ponikos) = toilsome; πόνος (ponos) = labour.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining to agriculture or the tillage of the earth.

B. As substantive:

1. An agriculturist, a farmer.

"[It] freely receives the wholesome blasts of the North wind (much accounted of among builders and geoponics for inumission of pure air)."—Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 10. (Note.)

2. (Pl.): The art or science of tilling the earth; agriculture.

"Herbs and wholesome salleta, and other plain and useful parts of geoponics."—Evelyn: Sylva.

* ġĕ-ō-pŏn'-ĭc-ąl, a. [Eng. geoponic; -al.] Of or pertaining to agriculture or the tillage of the earth; geoponic.

"Those geoponical rules and precepts of agriculture which are delivered by divers authors."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. vi., ch. iii.

ġĕ-ŏ-ra'-ma, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (geios) = belonging to the earth, and ὅραμα (horama) = a view; Fr. géorama.] A concave globe on the inside of which the countries, oceans, &c. of the earth are represented to the spectators, who stand on a framework inside.

Ġeor'-dĭe, s. [A Scotch dimin. of George (q.v.).] A guinea. [GEORGE, 3.]

"As lang's my tail, whare, through the steeks,
The yellow-lettered Geordie keeks."
Burns: The Twa Dogs.

Geordio safety-lamp, s.

Mining: A safety-lamp invented for use in coal mines by George Stephenson.

ġĕ-ō-rĕ-tĭn'-ĭc, a. [Pref. geo-, and retinic (q.v.).]

Min.: Akin to retene, and derived from the earth.

georetinic-acid, s.

Min.: A name formerly given to Brücknerellite (q.v.).

Ġeorġe, s. [Lat. Georgius, from Gr. γεωργός (geōrgos) = a cultivator of the earth; γῆ (gē), and ἔργον (ergon) = work.]

1. The insignia of the order of the Garter; a figure of St. George on horseback, engaging the dragon, worn pendent from the collar by the knights of that order. [GARTER, s.]

"The George and Garter dangling from that bed, Where tawdry yellow strove with dirty red."
Pope: Moral Essays, bk. iii. 303.

* 2. A guinea, from the figure of St. George on the reverse.

* 3. A kind of loaf, said to have been stamped with a figure of St. George.

"Cubbed in a cabin, on a mattrass laid,
On a brown George, with lousy swabbers fed."
Dryden: Persius, sat. v.

¶ The name Brown George is used at Oxford for the large coarse earthenware water jugs used instead of cans.

George-noble, s. A gold coin, current at six shillings and eight pence in the reign of Henry VIII; so called from the figure of St. George on the reverse.

Ġeor'-ġĭ-ąn, s. [See def.] A native or inhabitant of Georgia, a region on the south of the Caucasus, or of Georgia, one of the southern states of the American Union.

Ġeor'-ġĭ-ąn, a. [Lat. Georgius = George.] Belonging or relating to the reigns of the four Georges in Great Britain, 1714–1830; as, the Georgian era.

"One Georgian star adorns the skies,
She myriads found below."
Cowper: Queen's Visit, March 17, 1789.

ġeor'-ġĭc, * ġeor'-ġick, a. & s. [Lat. georgica (carmina) = georgic (poems), from georgicus = relating to husbandry; Gr. γεωργικός (geōrgikos), from γεωργία (geōrgia) = husbandry: γῆ (gē) = the earth, and ἔργον (ergon) = work.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining or relating to agriculture or husbandry; treating of rural affairs.

"Here I peruse the Mantuan's georgic strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains."
Gay: Rural Sports, l.

B. As subst.: A poem on husbandry or rural affairs. It is the title of four books on husbandry written by Virgil.

"A georgic, therefore, is some parts of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry."—Addison: On Virgil's Georgics.

* ġeor'-ġĭc-ąl, a. [Eng. georgic; -al.] The same as GEORGIC (q.v.).

Ġeor'-ġĭ-ŭm Sĭ'-dŭs, s. [Lat., = the Georgian star, i.e., the star discovered under the auspices of King George III. of England.]

Astron.: The name given by Sir William Herschel to a planet discovered by him on March 13, 1781. Laplace, disliking the innovation of elevating one's sovereign to the sky, substituted for the name of King George that of the planet's discoverer, Herschel. The latter appellation is still widely accepted, but as the other planets were all called by the names of classic gods, Bode suggested the appellation of Uranus (q.v.). See also Herschel.

* ġĕ-or'-gŏs, s. [Gr.; see GEORGIC.] A bushandman. (Spenser.) ġĕ-ō-rhў'-chĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. georhych(us) (q.v.); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: Mole-rats; a family of Rodentia, with a large head, small eyes and ears, a short or deficient tail, and five toes on each foot. They occur in Asia, Africa, and South-Eastern Europe, burrowing like moles.

ġĕ-ō-rhў'-chŭs, s. [Gr. γεωρύχος (geōrhuchos) = digging or throwing up the earth: γῆ (gē) = the earth, and ὀρύσσω (orussō) = to dig.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Georchychidæ (q.v.). Georhychus capensis does damage to gardens at the Cape of Good Hope.

ġĕ-ō-rўs'-sĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. georyssus, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of beetles, tribe Clavicornes. The body is short, inflated, and nearly globular. The tarsi appear to have only four articulations. The antennæ have nine joints, the last three forming a knob.

ġĕ-ō-rўs'-sŭs, ġĕ-ō-rĭs'-sŭs, s. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the land, and ὀρύσσω (orussō) = to dig.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Georyssidæ (q.v.). The only British species of the family is Georyssus pygmæus.

ġĕ-ō-sâur'-ŭs, s. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the land, and σαῦρα (saura), σαῦρος (sauros) = a lizard.]

Palæont.: The remains of a reptile which, if entire, would probably have been nine or ten feet long. They were found by Sœmmering in white lias, at Monheim in Franconia, and are now in the British Museum. Sœmmering called the animal Lacerta gigantea. Cuvier believed it intermediate between the Crocodiles and Monitors, but most nearly allied to the latter. It does not figure in Professor Huxley's enumeration of Crocodilian genera.

* ġĕ-ŏs'-cō-pў, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and σκοπέω (skopeō) = to see.] Knowledge of the earth; ground or soil gained by inspection.

ġĕ-ō-sĕ-lēn'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and σελήνη (selēnē) = the moon.] Pertaining or relating to the earth and the moon, with reference to their joint action or mutal relations.

ġĕ-ō-stăt'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and Eng. static (q.v.).] Sustaining the earth. (Used only in the compound.)

geostatic-arch, s.

Arch.: A linear arch of a figure suited to sustain a pressure similar to that of the earth, which consists, in a given vertical plane, of a pair of conjugate pressures, one vertical and proportional to the depth below a given plane, horizontal or sloping; and the other parallel to the horizontal or sloping plane, and bearing to the vertical pressure a certain constant ratio depending on the nature of the material.

* ġĕ-ō-tĕc-tŏn'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and τεκτονικός (tektonikos) = pertaining to building.] Pertaining to the construction of the earth.

"The fourth book deals with the architecture of the earth's crust, or what may be called geotectonic geology."—Athenæum, Oct. 23, 1852.

* geotcr, s. [A.S. geotere.] One who pours out; a caster.

"A queynte mon, a metal geoter."
Alisaunder, 6,735.

ġĕ-ō-teū'-thĭs, s. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and τευθίς (teuthis) = a kind of cuttle-fish or squid.]

Palæont.: A genus of Teuthidæ from the Upper Lias.

ġĕ-ō-thĕr'-mĭc, a. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and Eng. thermic (q.v.).] Of or relating to the internal temperature of the earth.

ġĕ-ō-thĕr-mŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Gr. γεω (geō), for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the earth, and Eng. thermometer (q.v.).] An instrument for measuring the earth's heat at different depths, as in mines and wells. The temperature rises about 1° F. for every seventy or eighty feet of descent.

* ġĕ-ŏt'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γῆ (gē) = the earth.] Belonging to earth; terrestrial. (Bailey.)

ġĕ-ō-trŏp'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the land, and τρόπος (tropos) = a turn, a direction, or τρόπη (tropē) = a turn, turning about; τρέπω (trepō) = to turn.]

Bot. (Of a plant): Turning towards the earth; manifesting geotropism.

ġĕ-ŏt'-rŏ-pĭşm, s. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γήιος (gēios) = belonging to the land, and τρόπος (tropos), or τρόπη (tropē), and Eng. &c. suff. -ism.] [GEOTROPIC.]

Bot.: The tendency exhibited by a young plant to turn towards the earth, i.e., to direct its roots in that direction, whilst heliotropism, or a tendency to turn towards the sun, is manifested by the stem and leaves.

"Positive geotropism, or bending towards the centre of the earth, will be called by us geotropism."—Darwin: Movements of Plants, p. 5.

ġĕ-ō-trū'-pēṣ, s. [Gr. γεω (geō) for γῆιος (gēios) =belonging to the earth, and τρυπάω (trupaō) =to bore.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Geotrupidæ (q.v.). Geatrupes stercorarius is the Drone-beetle of England, which flies abroad on summer evenings.

ġĕ-ō-trū'-pĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. geotrup(es) (q.v.); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: Drone scarabs; a family of Lamellicorn beetles, differing from the typical Scarabeidæ in their corneous mandibles. They mostly frequent dung, or the fungi called Boleti. [GEOTRUPES.]

ġĕ-ō-trū-pī'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. geotrup(es) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Entom.: The name given by Macleay, Swainson, &c., to a sub-family of Scarabeidæ, identical with the family Geotrupidæ (q.v.).

ġĕ-phȳ'-rĕ-a, s. [Gr. γέφυρα (gephura) = a dam, mound, or mole; a bridge; a tunnel, and Lat. neut. pl. adj. suff. -ea.]

Zool.: Spoon-worms; a class of annulose animals, division Anarthropoda. It consists of long worm-like marine animals indistinctly annulated, but not divided into segments. There are occasionally bristles, but no other locomotive appendages. The sexes are generally separate, and there is a metamorphosis.

* ġĕp'-ŏn, s. [JUPON.]

* ger, v.t. [GAR.]

gĕr'-aḥ, s. [Heb. גֵּרָה (gerah) = (1) summation, (2) a grain, a bean, (3) the weight and money described in the definition.]

1. Heb. money: The smallest piece of money, being the twentieth part of a shekel. This would be about three half-pence. Gesenius thinks that the gerah was not a coin, but was reckoned by means of the beans [etym.] of the Carob tree, Ceratonia siliqua. [CAROB.]

"A shekel is twenty gerahs."—Exod. xxx. 13.

Cf. also Lev. xvii. 25; Num. iii. 47, xviii. 16.

2. Heb. weights: A weight corresponding to No. 1.

gĕr-ā-nĭ-ā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [Lat. gerani(um), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -acea.]

Bot.: The typical order of the alliance Geraniales. It consists of herbaceous plants or shrubs with tumid stems, separable at the joints. Leaves either opposite or alternate; if the latter, then they are opposite the peduncles. Stipules membranous; flowers white, red, yellow, or purple; sepals five, persistent, ribbed, unequal, one of them sometimes saccate, spurred at the base; petals five, or by abortion four; unguiculate stamens, generally monadelphous, twice or thrice as many as the petals; ovary with five carpels, ultimately forming five one-seeded cells; styles five, cohering round the torus, from which they are separable. Sixteen genera and about 750 species are known. They are found in temperate or hot climates, rarely in the arctic regions. They are often astringent and aromatic, abounding in vegetable oil. Lindley in his Vegetable Kingdom, made Oxalidaceæ and Balsaminaceæ distinct orders from Geraniaceæ. Sir Joseph Hooker merges them in it, dividing it into three tribes, Geranieæ, Oxalideæ, and Balsamineæ.

ġĕ-rā'-nĭ-al, a. [Mod. Lat. geraniales (q.v.).]

Bot.: Akin to Geranium, having for their type Geranium.

geranial-alliance, s.

Bot.: The same as GERANIALES (q.v.).

ġĕ-rā-nĭ-ā'-lēṣ, s. pl. [Lat. gerani(um), and masc. or fem. pl. adj. suff. -ales.]

Bot.: An alliance of hypogynous exogens, with monodichlamydeous, symmetrical flowers, axile placentæ, an imbricated calyx, a twisted corolla, definite stamens, and an embryo with little or no albumen. Lindley includes under it Linaceæ, Chilenaceæ, Oxalidaceæ, Balsaminaceæ, and Geraniaceæ (q.v.).

ġĕ-rā'-nĭ-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Lat. gerani(um), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Geraniaceæ, when the fuller term is used to comprehend not merely the geraniums, but the balsams, and the woodsorrels. Its characters are the same as those given above to Geraniaceæ (q.v.).

ġĕ-rā'-nĭ-ēne, s. [Eng., &c. gerani(um); -ene (Chem.).]

Chem.: A terpene, $C_{10}H_{16}$, obtained by the action of phosphorus pentoxide P_2O_5 on geraniol. It is a liquid, boiling at 164°, and smells like fresh mulberries. It oxidizes rapidly in the air. It unites with HCl, forming a liquid compound.

ġĕ-rā'-nĭ-ōl, s. [Eng., &c. gerani(um), and Lat. ol(eum) = oil.]

Chem.: $C_{10}H_{18}O$. Obtained by fractional distillation of geranium oil. A colourless, strongly refracting liquid, boiling at 233°. It is insoluble in water, soluble in alcohol and ether; when fused with potash it yields isovalerianic acid; by the action of nitric acid, it is converted into nitrobenzene, oxalic acid, and other substances.

gĕr-ā'-nĭ-ŭm, s. [Lat. geranium and geranion = Gr. γεράνιον (geranion) = the plant Cranesbill, from γέρανος (geranos) = a crane. Pliny makes Geranion a group of plants, including three types, probably Myrrhis, Erodium, and Geranium (q.v.).]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A term most frequently applied to any of the cultivated Pelargoniums. These belong to the Geraniaceæ, but are not the typical genus.

2. A book name, and partly a popular one, for the genus Geranium. [II.]

II. Bot.: The typical genus of the order Geraniaceæ and the alliance Geraniales. The flowers are regular, on one or two-flowered axillary peduncles; the stamens are ten, free or connate at the base, and hypogynous. The popular name (Crane's bill) is derived from the beak-like processes attached to the fruit, which resemble the bill of the crane. They assist in the distribution of the seed. There are various species in this country. G. Robertianum (Herb Robert) emits a disagreeable odor which is said to banish bugs. It is indigenous to the United States. G. maculatum, the alum

GERANIUM.

A. Flower. B. Seed-vessel.

root of the United States, is a powerful astringent, and is used both by the Indians and whites in domestic medicine. The flowers of the Geranium are favorites in garden culture, from their bright colors, their profusion, and their long-continued bearing. They are known popularly by the various titles of scarlet geranium, rose geranium, ivy-leaved geranium, fish geranium (from its peculiar fishy odor), and various others. The root of geranium contains more tannin than quino does, and is a very powerful astringent. Bigelow considers it specially valuable in the treatment of diseases continued through debility, after their existing cause has been removed. The tubers of G. parviflorum are eaten in Van Diemen's Land, where it is called the Native Carrot.

¶ Indian Geranium is the name given by perfumers to Andropogon Nardus; and the Nettle geranium is Coleus fruticosus.

* gerant (as zhā-rân'), s. [Fr.] The acting partner or manager of a joint-stock association, newspaper establishment, &c.

* ġĕr'-ar-chȳ, s. [Low Lat. gerarchia, for hierarchia.] A hierarchy (q.v.).

"Gerarchy; gerarchia, i.e., sacer principatus."—Cathol. Anglicum.

* ger-ard, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A devil; a fiend.

"Quen he was ded, that gerard grim."
Cursor Mundi, 11,905.

ġĕr'-ard-ĭ-a, s. [Named after John Gerard, who in 1597 published a celebrated Herbal.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gerardieæ (q.v.). It consists of handsome plants, with pink, rose-coloured, or yellow flowers, growing in North America and the East Indies.

ġĕr-ard-ĭ-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gerardi(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Scrophulariaceæ, sub-order Rhinanthideæ.

ġĕrb, s. [Fr. gerbe.]

Her.: A sheaf; a garbe (q.v.).

ġĕr'-bil, s. [Fr. gerbille, from gerbo, the Arabic name.]

Zool.: Any species of the genus Gerbillus (q.v.).

ġĕr-bĭl'-lŭs, s [GERBIL.]

Zool.: A genus of mammalia, family Muridæ, which it connects with the Dipodidæ or Jerboas. The species are found in India, Egypt, Canada, Labrador, &c.

ġĕr'-bu-a, s. [JERBOA.]

Ġĕr'-da, s. [A female name (?)]

Astron.: An asteroid, the 122nd found; discovered by Petera, July 31, 1872.

* gĕre, s. [GEAR.]

* ġĕ-rĕn'-da, s. pl. [Lat. neut. pl. of gerendus, fut. pass. par. of gero = to do, to carry out.] Things to be done or carried out.

* ġĕr'-ent, a. [Lat. gerens, pr. par. of gero = to carry, to do.] Carrying, bearing, performing. (Now only in composition as belligerent, vicegerent.) ġĕr-fâl-cŏn (l silent), * ger-fau-con, * ger-faul-con, * gire-fauc-oun, * gyr-fal-con, * gyr-fa-coun, s. [A modification of O. Fr. gerfault, from Low Lat. gerofalco, gyrofalco = a gerfalcon, from its circling flight; Lat. gyrus = a circle, and falco = a falcon; ital. gerfalco, girfalco, girifalco; Sp. gerifalco, gerifalte; Port. gerifalte.] A species of falcon; the gyrfalcon.

"But his chief pastime was to watch the flight Of a gerfalcon, soaring into sight."
Longfellow: Student's Tale.

* ger-faunt, s. [A corrupt. of griffin (q.v.).] A griffin.

"In Arabye thei ben clept gerfaunts."—Maundeville, p. 289.

* ger-ful, * geer-ful, * gere-ful, a. [Sp., Port., & Ital. giro; Lat. gyrus = a circle.] Changeable, fickle.

"To prove on that thi gerful violence Chaucer: Troilus, iv. 256.

* ger-l-nesse, s. [Mid. Eng. gery; -ness.] Changeableness, fickleness.

"I was adrad so of hire gerinesse."
Occleve: MS. in Halliwell, p. 397.

* ger-ysch, * ger-ysshe, s. [Mid. Eng gery; -ish.] Wild, unconstrained.

"Now geryushe glad, and anoon aftir wrothe."
Lydgate: Minor Poems, p. 245.

gĕr'-kĭn (1), s. [GHERKIN.]

* ġĕr'-kĭn (2), s. [JERKIN.]

* ger-lond, s. [GARLAND.]

ġĕrm, * ġĕrme, s. [Fr. germe = a young shoot, a sprout, from Lat. germen.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. In the same sense as II.

"Whether it be not made out of the germe or treadle of the egg, doth seem of lesser doubt."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iii., ch. xxviii.

2. That from which anything springs; the origin, source, or first principle of anything.

"The veriest novice could discover the germs of future promise."—Field, Oct. 27, 1883.

II. Physiol. & Bot.: The earliest stage in the existence of an organized being, the embryo or bud from which such a being develops. (Used either of plants or of animals.) [GEMINAL VESICLE.]

germ-cell, s.

Bot. Physiol.: An oosphere, a female cell, a cell which cannot give rise to a new plant unless the power to do so be imparted to it by another cell standing to it in a relation of contrast.

germ-epithelium, s.

Anat.: Epithelium existing in the ovary, and having a certain relation to the origin of the ova.

germ theory, s.

1. Biol.: [Biogenesis].

2. Pathol.: The germ theory is that the exciting cause of each contagious or infectious disease is some specific living microörganism, and that these diseases are communicated only by the transference to and development of the specific parasite or germ within or upon the animal infected. Varro propounded the essence of the theory in regard to certain diseases 2,000 years ago, in the time of Cicero and Cæsar, and after the discovery of the bacteria by Anthony van Leeuwenhoek, Plenciz in 1762 again formulated it virtually as it is held to-day. But though Henle again labored for it as early as 1821, it has only been since the remarkable development of the science of bacteriology within the last twenty years and the convincing work of such scientists as Koch and Pasteur, that it has been accepted generally by the medical profession throughout the world. The bacteria are unicellular, vegetal microorganisms, and of these there are quite a large number of classes and species. Some of these species have been found, when introduced into suitable culture media, such as the living tissues of the animal body, to be capable of producing, either directly or by their action as ferments upon the tissues, certain virulent poisons called toxines, which poisons are capable of producing the characteristic symptoms of the respective infectious maladies, it being remembered that each pathogenic organism or disease germ elaborates its own peculiar toxine and that the symptoms produced by the toxine are practically constant and characteristic of a single specific disease. Even before the scientific establishment of the above knowledge, there was abundant á priori reason for belief in the germ theory, viz.: the fact that contagious matter increases enormously in the body of the patient and, therefore, must have life and the power of reproduction; that it is destroyed or retarded in its action by substances that have the same effect upon other low forms of life; that it withstands dilution, oxidation, &c., that would destroy the power of inert dead matter; and that in disease there is more or less direct analogy to the phenomena of fermentation, which latter we already know to be due to organic life. However, Koch has laid down the following postulates as being necessary to prove scientifically that any germ is the cause of a given disease: (1) The microörganism must be found in the blood, lymph, or diseased tissues of a person or animal sick or dead of the disease. (2) The microörganism must be isolated from the blood, lymph, or tissues and cultivated in suitable media outside of the body until an absolutely pure culture is obtained. This is done by carrying the cultivation through several generations until all possibility of any extraneous or contaminating matter is eliminated. (3) The pure culture thus obtained must, when introduced into a healthy susceptible animal, produce the disease in question. (4) The same organism must be found in the inoculated animal. While it is undoubtedly necessary that each one of these postulates should be fulfilled to establish the theory, on the other hand it must be admitted that if they are fulfilled with regard to any organism and disease, that organism must be a cause of that disease. Such fulfillment has been made as to many maladies of this nature, especially as to those to which both men and animals, or animals alone, are susceptible; and though it is not practicable to carry out the third postulate in the case of those diseases to which human beings alone are susceptible, enough has been determined experimentally to make it almost absolutely certain that the germ theory is true for every contagious or infectious disease or malady. From what has been said, however, it should not be inferred that all such diseases are due to bacteria or vegetal microörganisms. In some cases it seems to be more probable that the exciting cause is of an animal nature, and in others experimental research has failed to devise suitable methods for positively isolating the specific germs, though belief in their existence is still unshaken. In fact, as advances are made in bacteriology and its kindred sciences, we may reasonably expect and hope that not only will the exact cause of each communicable malady be determined, but that means for destroying or limiting the virulence and power of these foes to health and life will also be discovered and made available. (Seneca Eybert, M.D., April, 1896.)

* ġĕrm, v.i. [Germ, s.] To sprout, to germinate, to come into existence.

"This is the time when errors and vices germ."—J. Morley: Rousseau, ii. 204.

* ġĕr-māin', a. [Germane.]

ġĕr'-măn (1), a. & s. [Germane.]

Ġĕr'-măn (2), a. & s. [Lat. Germanus.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining or relating to Germany.

B. As substantive:

1. A native or inhabitant of Germany.

2. The language of the higher and more southern parts of Germany; the literary language of the whole country. Old High German was spoken from the eighth to the twelfth century; Middle High German from the twelfth to the fifteenth century; Modern High German is the existing form.

ġĕr'-măn (3), s. A fancy cotillion; also, an entertainment embracing such a dance.

German-paste, s. A kind of paste used for feeding larks, thrushes, nightingales, and German-silver, s. A white alloy for table ware, consisting of nickel, copper, and zinc in various proportions.

German-text, s. A character closely resembling modern German type, and much used by lawyers for headings of legal documents:

ġĕr-măn'-dĕr, *ger-maun-der, *ger-mawn-der, s. [Fr. germandree; Prov. germandrea, a corruption of Lat. chamædrys, from Gr. χαμαίδρυς (chamaidrus), from χαμαί (chamai) = on the ground, and δρῦς (drus) = an oak, a tree; Ital. calamandrea; Ger. germander.]

Bot.: The genus Teucrium, of which numerous species exist in Europe and elsewhere. All the European species have long been in repute as medicinal plants, for their aromatic, bitter, and stomachic properties.

ġĕr-māne, ġĕr'-măn, *ġĕr-māin', *ger-maine, *ger-mayne, a. & s. [O. Fr. germain, from Lat. germanus = skin, having the same parents; from the same root as germ.]

A. As adjective:

* I. Lit.: Sprung from the same parents, or from members of the same family; akin.

"As he walked nere the water . . . he espied two brothers german."—Udal: Matthew iv.

II. Figuratively:

* 1. Nearly related; closely akin.

"Wert thou a leopard thou wert german to the lion."—Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

2. Closely connected; approximate; relevant; pertinent.

"The phrase would be more germaine to the matter if we could carry cannon by our sides."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, v. 2.

* 3. Genuine, true.

"Arius was a german or genuine disciple of Plato's."—Cudworth: Intell. System, p. 575.

* B. As subst.: One sprung from the same stock. (Applied to brothers or sisters and cousins.)

"Thyself thy message do to german deare."
Spenser: F. Q., I. v. 13.

¶ Cousin-german: [Cousin-german].

Ġĕr-măn'-ĭc, a. [Lat. Germanicus; Fr. Germanique.] Of or pertaining to Germany; Teutonic.

Germanic-Confederation, s. [Confederation.]

* Ġĕr'-măn-ĭşm, s. [Eng. German (2); -ism.] An idiom or phrase peculiar to the German language.

"It is full of Latinisms, Gallicisms, Germanisms, and all isms but Anglicisms."—Lord Chesterfield.

* Ġĕr'-măn-īze, v.t. [Eng. German; -ize.] To translate into German.

"The Dutch hath him who Germanized the story Of Sleidan." Sylvester: Du Bartas; Babylon, 624.

* ġĕr'-mĕn, * ger-maine, * ger-min, s. [Lat. germen = a sprout, a shoot.] A germ, a sprout, a shoot, a seed.

Bot.: The name given by Linnæus to the ovary of a plant.

ġĕr'-mĭn-al, a. & s. [Fr., from Lat. germen (genit. germinis) = a germ, a shoot.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to a germ or seed-bud.

B. As subst.: The name given in October, 1793, by the French Convention to the seventh month of the republican year. It commenced on March 21, and was the first spring month.

germinal-macula, s.

Anat. & Physiol.: The same as Germinal-spot (q.v.).

germinal-matter, s.

Anat. & Physiol.: The name given by Beale both to the protoplasm and the nucleus of an animal cell, the two, however, being considered different by most histologists.

germinal-membrane, s.

Anat. & Physiol.: The same as Vitelline-membrane (q.v.).

germinal-pole, s.

Anat. & Physiol.: The name given by Quain to the central point from which development spreads in the ovum of a bird or mammal.

germinal-spot, s.

Anat. & Physiol.: A spot corresponding to the nucleolus of an animal cell. Called also the Germinal-macula.

germinal-vesicle, s.

1. Anat. & Physiol.: A delicate, spheroidal, inclosing membrane, with protoplasmic fluid and fine granules, constituting an essential part of the human or animal ovum. After a time it disappears. (Quain.)

2. Bot.: The germ of a future plant, analogous to the germinal vesicle of animals. It is formed apparently before impregnation. Amici, Mohl, Müller, Henfrey, Hoffmeister, and Tulasne affirm its existence, while it is denied by Schleiden and Schacht.

ġĕr'-mĭn-ant, a. [Lat. germinans, pr. par. of germino = to bud, to sprout; germen (genit. germinis) = a bud, a sprout.] Sprouting; beginning to bud or sprout; growing; developing.

"Divine prophecies . . . are not fulfilled punctually at once, but have springing and germinant accomplishment throughout many ages."—Bacon: Advancement of Learning, bk. ii.

ġĕr'-mĭn-āte, v.i. & t. [Lat. germinatum, sup. of germino = to bud, to sprout; germen (genit. germinis) = a bud, a sprout; Fr. germer; Ital. germinare; Sp. germinar.]

A. Intrans.: To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to begin to vegetate as a plant.

"Paradise was made on the third day, when God caused the trees to germinate out of the earth."—H. More: Defence of the Philosophic Cabbala. (App.)

B. Transitive:

1. Lit.: To cause to sprout or bud.

2. Fig.: To shoot out; to put forth.

"Several French departments germinate a set of rebellious paper-leaves."—Carlyle: French Revolution.

ġĕr-mĭn-ā'-tion, s. [Fr., from Lat. germinatio, from germinatum, sup. of germino = to bud, to sprout; Sp. germinacion; Ital. germinazione.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II. (q.v.).

"There's but little similitude betwixt a terreous humidity and plantal germinations."—Glanvill: The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. xxi.

† 2. Fig.: The moral, mental, social, or political growth of an individual.

"The Duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination."—Wotton. (Johnson.)

II. Bot.: The first act of growth which takes place in an embryo plant. It cannot occur without the presence of water, heat, and atmospheric air, or, at least, of oxygen. Popularly water obtains the credit of the whole process, and it is undoubtedly true that seeds rapidly absorb it with the effect of softening the tissue, enabling the parts to distend, as well as dissolving those of them which are soluble, so that they may be taken into the circulation as growth proceeds. But heat also is necessary, and atmospheric air, to furnish oxygen, which is most effective if one part of it be diluted with three of nitrogen. Prior to germination the seed had in its composition some carbon, apparently to preserve it; with this the oxygen unites, forming carbon dioxide, which is thrown off. Meanwhile the parts of the seed have softened and distended; the embryo has swelled and burst its envelopes, after which the radicle is sent down into the ground, deriving its nourishment at first, however, from the cotyledons; the plumule rises upwards, and the process of growth and development is completely in progress.

ġĕr'-mĭn-āt-ĭve, a. [Eng. germinat(e); -ive.] Of or pertaining to germination; which germinates.

ġĕr-mĭ-păr'-ĭ-ty, s.

Biol.: Reproduction through germs.

ġĕr'-mūle, s.

Biol.: A small or an incipient germ.

gĕrn (1), gerne, v.i. [Grin, v.] To grin, to snarl, to yawn.

"Gaped like a gulf when he did gerne." Spenser: F. Q., V. xii. 16.

gern (2), v.i. [Yearn.]

gerne, adv. [Yearn.] Eagerly, earnestly, promptly.

"Than thou gyved the gerne."—MS. in Halliwell, p. 267.

gernier, s. [O. Fr.] A garner, a granary.

ġĕr-ō-cō'-mĭ-ą, s. [Gerocomy.]

ġĕr-ō-cŏm'-ĭc-ąl, a. [Eng. gerocomy; -cal.] Of or pertaining to gerocomy (q.v.).

ġĕr-ŏc'-ō-mȳ, s. [Gr. γέρων (gerōn) = an old man, and κομέω (komeō) = to take care; Fr. gérocomie.] That branch of medicine which treats of the proper regimen for old people.

ġĕ-rŏn'-tēs, s. pl. [Gr., nom. pl. of γέρων (gerōn) = an old man.]

Greek Antiq.: A number of magistrates in Sparta who, with the ephors and kings, had the supreme power in the state. They were not eligible for election before they had attained the age of sixty years. Their number is variously stated at twenty and thirty-two.

ġĕr-ŏn-tŏc'-rą-çy, s. [Gr. γέρων (gerōn), genit. γέροντος (gerontos) = an old man, and κρατέω (krateō) = to govern.] Government by old men.

†ġĕr-ŏn-tō-ġē'-ŏŭs, a. [Gr. γέρων (gerōn), as subst. = an old man; as adj = old: γῆ (gē) = the earth; Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot. Geog.: Indigenous in the "Old World," i.e., in the eastern hemisphere.

ġĕr-ō-pĭġ'-ĭ-ą, jĕr-ụ-pĭġ'-ĭ-ą, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A mixture used to give colour and spurious strength to port wines. It is made of unfermented grape-juice with brandy and sugar, and a colouring matter obtained from rhatany root or logwood.

ġĕr'-rēs, s. [Lat. = a fish, probably the shad.]

Ichthy.: A genus of Sparidæ, sub-family Mænidinæ. Gerres rhombeus is found in the West Indian Seas.

ġĕr'-rĭs, s. [Probably altered from Lat. gerres (q.v.).]

Entom.: A genus of Homoptera, sub-order Heteroptera, tribe Hydrocores (Water-bugs). They have an elliptical and elongate body, and triangular head with prominent eyes and no ocelli. The two front feet are short, the thighs of the others very long, the legs and tarsi not easily distinguishable. They are black insects, which glide about on the surface of stagnant waters with great agility, using their hind feet for the purpose without diving.

ġĕr-rў-măn'-dĕr, v.t. [A word of political coinage, said to refer to Elbridge Gerry, a former Governor of Massachusetts, and the accredited originator of the method.] To divide a state or district into unnatural political divisions in the interest of a certain party or faction. Hence, figuratively, to misconstrue, or transpose, as in argument, &c.

¶ This word is frequently but incorrectly spelled and pronounced as jerrymander.

ġer'-rў-măn-dĕr, s. [Gerrymander, v.t.] The act of gerrymandering.

gers, *gerss, s. [Grass.]

ġĕrs'-dorff-īte, s. [Named from Hofrath von Gersdorff, who discovered the mineral in Styria.]

Min.: An isometric, pyritohedral, silver-white, steel-grey, or greyish-black mineral of metallic lustre, its hardness 5·5, sp. gr. 5·6 to 6·9. Compos.: Arsenic, 45·5; sulphur, 19·4; nickel, 35·1 = 100. Varieties: (1) Normal Gersdorffite, (2) Lowe's Gersdorffite, (3) Amoibite, (4) Plessite, and (5) Dobschauite. Found in Sweden, the Hartz Mountains, Styria, &c. (Dana.) The British Museum Catalogue considers it the same as Nickel Glance.

ġĕr'-ŭnd, s. [Lat. gerundium, from gerundus = to be done or carried out, fut. pass. part of gero = to carry out.]

Gram.: Originally a part of the Latin verb used to express the meaning of the present infinitive active in cases where the infinitive should properly be in some case other than the nominative. The word is also applied by grammarians to a dative form of the infinitive in Anglo-Saxon, governed by the preposition to, and expressed by the suffix -e: as, etanne = to eat, faranne = to go. In the twelfth century this ending -enne, -anne, was confounded with the participial ending -ende (-inde), and still later with the participial ending -inge: as, "This nyghte that is to comyng." In Anglo-Saxon the gerund was used to express a purpose or end, like the Latin gerund or supine. In phrases such as "Fit for teaching, fond of learning," teaching and learning are not gerunds, but verbal nouns governed by the preposition, and representing Anglo-Saxon substantives in -ung.

gerund-grinder, s. A pedantic schoolmaster.

"A pedant, a mere plodder, a petty tyrant, a gerund-grinder."—Knox: Winter Evenings, Even. 59.

ġĕ-rŭn'-dĭ-ąl, a. [Eng. gerund; -ial.]

Gram.: Pertaining to or of the nature of a gerund: as, a gerundial infinitive.

ġĕ-rŭnd-ine, a. [See def.] Of or pertaining to a gerund.

"If ever they get ends of gold and silver enough to serve that gerundine maw of yours, that without do will end in di and dum instantly."—Beaum. & Flet.: Wit at Several Weapons, i. 1.

¶ As this is the only known instance of the word, it is probable that it is only a misprint for gerundive = gerundive.

ġĕ-rŭnd'-ĭve, s. [Lat. gerundivus; Fr. gérondif.]

Gram.: Originally a name given by Latin grammarians to the future passive participle; now used in other languages to denote certain modifications of the verb, as in English the verbal noun in -ing when governed by a preposition, and in German the present participle with zu (= to) prefixed.

ġĕ-rŭnd'-ĭve-lў, adv. [Eng. gerundive; -ly.] After the manner of a gerund or gerundive; in place of a gerund or gerundive.

ġĕ-rû'-şĭ-ą, s. [Gr. γερουσία (gerousia) = an assembly of old men.]

Greek Antiq.: The senate of ancient Sparta. [Gerontes.]

ġĕr-vā'-ō, s. [Jerboa.]

ġĕr-vĭl'-lĭ-ą, s. [Named after M. Gerville, a French naturalist.]

Paleont.: A genus of conchiferous molluscs, family Aviculidæ (Wing-shells). Known species thirty-seven, from the Carboniferous period to that of the Chalk.

ġĕr-ў-ŏn'-ĭ-ą, s. [Named after Geryon, a three-headed monster figuring in classical mythology. It was his cattle which Hercules brought away.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Geryonidæ (q.v.).

ġĕr-ў-ŏn'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. geryoni(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Discophora or Medusas, order Gymnophthalmata. The vessels, four in number, are simple; the ovaries, also four, are placed in the vessels of the sub-umbrella; the tentacles vary in number. Some species at times make the seas in which they live luminous.

ġes-arne, *ġes-erne, *gis-erne, *ġys-erne, s. [Gizzard.] A gizzard.

"Take the gesarne of a hare and stampe hit."—MS. in Halliwell, p. 257.

ġes-en, *ġes-on, a. [Geason.]

ġĕs'-lĭng, s. [Gosling.]

ġĕs'-nĕr-a, s. [Named by Linnæus after the celebrated botanist Conrad Gesner, of Zurich.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the order Gesneraceæ (q.v.). The tubers are depressed, the inflorescence corymbose or panicled, the corolla much longer than the calyx, two-lipped, two to five conspicuous glands on the flower. Paxton enumerates sixty-four species as cultivated in British greenhouses or gardens. They are from South America and the West Indies, and are plants of great beauty, chiefly with scarlet, purple, orange, or yellow flowers.

ġĕs-nĕr-ā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gesner(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: Gesnerworts, an order of perigynous exogens, alliance Bignoniales. It consists of soft-wooded herbs or shrubs, sometimes climbing or creeping, and often springing from scaly tubers. Leaves opposite or whorled, without stipules. Flowers showy, in racemes or panicles, rarely solitary; scarlet, violet, or white. Calyx half adherent, five-parted. Corolla monopetalous, tubular, irregular, five-lobed; stamens two or four, in the latter case didynamous; ovary half superior, one-celled, with two parietal placentæ placed right and left of the axis; seeds many. Fruit capsular or succulent. It is divided into two sub-orders or tribes; Gesneræ confined to the warmer parts of America, and Crytandreæ more widely distributed. Lindley gave fifty-four genera, and estimated the known species at 260.

ġĕs-nĕr'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gesner(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A sub-order or tribe of Gesneraceæ (q.v.). The seeds have a small quantity of albumen, the fruit is partially adherent.

ġĕs'-nĕr-wôrts, s. pl. [Gesner, a proper name [Gesnera], and Eng. worts.]

Bot.: The name given by Lindley to the order Gesneraceæ (q.v.).

ġes-on, a. [Geason.]

ġes-sare, s. [Guesser.]

ġĕsse, v.t. & i. [Guess, v.]

ġĕsse (1), s. [Guess, s.]

ġĕsse (2), s. [Jess.]

ġĕsse (3), s. [Gest (2), s.]

ġĕst (1), geeste, *geist, *geste (1), jeste, s. [O. Fr. geste, from Lat. gesta = things done, actions; neut. pl. of gestus, pa. par. of gero = to carry out, to do; Ital. gesta, geste; Sp. gestas.]

1. A deed, an action, an exploit, an achievement.

"To write the gests of Britons stout And deeds of English men."
Warner: Albions England, bk. i., ch. i.

2. A history or tale of the exploits of any hero or heroes; a romance.

"Mynstrells that singen songes and tellen gestes or other desportes."—Maundeville, p. 220.

3. A show or representation.

4. Gesture; carriage of person; deportment.

"Who by the noise and gests they make, give notice to their keeper, who presently puts them by, and digs the treffce for himself."—Sir A. Balfour: Letters, p. 71.

5. A race; a family.

"Thai and alle ther geste that dome salle doute and rew." Robert de Brunne, p. 815.

ġĕst (2), gesse, s. [O. Fr. jiste = a bed, a couch.] [Gist.]

1. A stage; a rest, or stop in travelling.

"God hath designed the cross, the constant post and stage in our gesses to heaven."—Hammond: Works, iv. 485.

2. A journal or roll of the several days and stages prefixed in the progress of English sovereigns; the appointed time itself.

"To let him there a month, behind the gest Prefix'd for's parting."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, i. 2.

ġĕst (3), geste (2), s. [Guest.]

gest-halle, s. [Guest-hall.]

 gest-hus, s. [GUEST-HOUSE.]

gest (1), geist, s. [JOIST.]

1. A joist or beam for supporting a floor.

"Thare betchis, and thare ouerloftis syne thay bete, Flankis and geistis grete square and mete."
Douglas: Virgil, 158, 3.

2. A beam. (Used in a general sense.)

"Off gret gestis a sow thai maid,
That stalwart heildyne aboyn it had.
Barbour, xvii. 687.

ǧĕst, *geste, *gest-en, *gest-yn, v.i. [GEST (1), s.] To compose or recite gests or legendary tales.

"I can not geste." Chaucer: C. T., 17,337.

ǧĕst'-ant, a. [Lat. gestans, pr. par. of gesto, frequent. of gero = to carry.] Carrying: hence, laden, burdened.

"Clouds gestant with heat."
E. B. Browning. (Webster.)

ǧĕs-tā'-tion, s. [Fr., from Lat. gestatio = a carrying, from gestatus, pa. par. of gesto = to carry; Ital. gestazione.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) Originally, in a general sense, the act of carrying; the state of being carried.

"Gestation, an exercise of the body, by being carried in coach, litter, upon horseback."—P. Holland: Plinie; Explanation of the Words of Art.

(2) The act of wearing, as clothes or ornaments.

(3) Gesture, gesticulation; deportment, carriage.

2. Fig.: The progress of any plan from inception to fulfilment.

II. Physiol.: The act of carrying young in the uterus from the time of conception to that of parturition. The average time of a woman's pregnancy is nine solar months, or about 280 days, though it may be as few as seven or as many as ten.

"The arrangement of the muscular fibres is best studied in the uterus at the full period of gestation."
—Quain: Anatomy, ii. 464.

ǧĕst'-ą-tŏr-ў, a. [Lat. gestatorius, from gestatus, pa. par. of gesto; Fr. gestatorie.]

1. That may or can be carried or worn.

"The crowns and garlands of the ancients were either gestatory, such as they wore about their heads and necks, &c."—Sir T. Browne: Miscellanies, p. 90.

2. Pertaining to gestation or pregnancy.

ges-ten-ing, s. [GUESTNING.]

ǧĕst'-ĭc, *ǧĕst'-ĭc-ąl, a. [Eng. gest (1); -ic, -ical.]

1. Of or pertaining to gests; legendary, romantic.

"And the gay grandsire skilled in gestic lore Has lrisked beneath the burden of threescore."
Goldsmith: Traveller.

2. Pertaining to bodily motions; relating to or consisting of gestures.

ǧĕs-tĭc'-ų-lar, a. [Lat. gesticulus = gesture.] Full of action.

"Electricity is passing, glancing, gesticular."—Emerson: Eng. Traits, ch. xiii.

ǧĕs-tĭc'-ų-lāte, v.i. & t. [Lat. gesticulatus, pa. par. of gesticulor = to make mimic gestures; gesticulus, dimin. of gestus = a gesture; gero = to carry, to behave; Fr. gesticuler; Sp. gesticular.]

A. Intrans.: To make gestures or motions, as in speaking; to make or use postures.

B. Trans.: To represent by gestures or gesticulations.

"To act the crimes, these whippers reprehend,
Or what their servile apes gesticulate."
Ben Jonson. Poetaster. (To the Reader.)

ǧĕs-tĭc-ų-lā'-tion, s. [Lat. gesticulatio, from gesticulatus, pa. par. of gesticulor = to gesticulate; Fr. gesticulation.]

1. The act or habit of gesticulating or using gestures to express any emotion or to enforce an argument.

2. A gesture; a motion or posture of the body, or any part of the body, in speaking or in representing action or passion.

"Story-telling is not perfect without proper gesticulations of the body."—Guardian, No. 42.

3. Antic tricks or motions.

"Suddenly they leape forth below, a mistress leading them, and with antick gesticulation ami action."—Ben Jonson: Love's Triumph through Callipolis.

4. Any movement or motion of the body.

"Indeed, that standing is not so simple a business as we imagine it to be, is evident from the gesticulations of a drunken man."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. xi.

ǧĕs-tĭc'-ų-lā-tŏr, s. [Lat., Fr. gesticulateur; Sp gesticulador; Ital. gesticulatore.] One who gesticulates or uses gestures or postures.

ǧĕs-tĭc-ų-lā'-tŏr-ў, a. [Eng. gesticulat(e); -ory.] Of or pertaining to gesticulation; represented by gesticulations.

ǧĕs'-tĭ-ŏn, s. [Lat. gestio, from gestus, pa. par. of gero = to carry.]

1. The doing of a thing. (Blount.)

2. Order, good bearing.

"To worke the chaos of the world into gestion."—Chapman: Humerous Dayes Mirth, p. 79

 ges-ton-ye, s. [Mid. Eng. gest = guest (q.v.).] Hospitality; feasting.

"They come to that gestonye."
Torrent of Portugal, 2,724.

ǧĕst'-ŏr, * ges-tour, * ges-towre, s. [Eng. gest (1); -or, -our.] One who composed or recited gests or legendary tales.

"Poets and gestoures uppon a pulpet rebersede poysees, gestes, and songes."—Trevisa, iv. 101.

ǧĕst'-ų-ral, a. [Eng. gestur(e); -al.] Of or pertaining to gesture.

ǧĕst'-ūre, s. [Low Lat. gestura = a mode of action, from gesturus, fut. par. of gero = to carry, to behave oneself.]

1. A motion or movement of the face, limbs, or other part of the body, used to express any emotion or sentiment, or to enforce any argument or opinion.

"This said, his brother pirate's hand he wrung, Then to his boat with haughty gesture sprung."
Byron: Corsair, i. 17.

2. A manner of carrying the body; a posture.

"Accubation, or lying down at meals, was a gesture used by many nations."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. v., ch. vi.

3. A movement of the body or limbs.

"In every gesture dignity and love."
Milton: P. L., viii. 489.

gesture-language, s.

Anthrop.: Gesture language is the name given to those movements of the hands and other parts of the body by means of which people of low culture eke out the deficiencies of their vocabulary, and persons ignorant of each other's language communicate their thoughts. Gesture-language exists wherever man is found. The expression of pain or surprise, the threatening shake of the head, the pointing of the finger possess the same messages for the cultured European and the debased negro. The traveller in a strange and unknown region is thrown back on gesture-language, and the expertness which American Indians have acquired in its use is marvellous, so that it is not uncommon to see two individuals of different nations sitting on the ground and conversing freely by means of the language of signs. The universality of the use of common gestures, and the fact that children first communicate their thoughts and emotions by this means, and then by onomatopoetic utterances, are relied upon by evolutionists as proofs that vocal languages did not always differentiate man from the lower animals. [LANGUAGE, ONOMATOPOEIA.]

"Gesture-language is instinct—the heritage of the days, it may be, of the days before man acquired articulate language, or differed thus far from the brute beast."—Sayce: Nature & Science of Language, i. 93.

ǧĕst'-ūre, v.i. & t. [GESTURE, s.]

A. Intrans.: To make use of gestures; to gesticulate.

"For the plaiers, who were sent for out of Hetruria, as they daunced the measures to the minstrel and sound of flute, gestured not undecently withall, after the Tuscane fashion."—P. Holland: Livius, p. 250.

B. Trans.: To accompany or represent with gestures or action.

"Not only does it [the dog] understand man's gestured threat—it distinguishes that which can be carried out from that which is impotent."—Lindsay: Mind in the Lower Animals, i. 358.

ǧĕst'-ūre-lĕss, a. [Eng. gesture; -less.] Without or free from gestures.

ǧĕst'-ūre-mĕnt, s. [Eng. gesture; -ment.] The act of making gestures; gesticulation, gesture.

"Watching every word and gesturement."
Ball: Satires, I. iii. 46.

ǧĕs'-tūr-ĕr, s. [Eng. gestur(e); -er.] An actor.

"The poet may exercise the part of gesturer."—Webbe: Eng. Poetrie, p. 95.

ǧĕs'-tūr-oŭs, a. [Eng. gestur(e); -ous.] Full of gestures.

"Some be as tryinge, gesturous."—Touchstone of Complexions, p. 37.

ǧĕt (1), ǧettc, *jette, v.t. [O. Fr. jetter.] To swagger, to strut about.

"Along the streetes as he doth jetting passe His outside showes him for an inward asse."
Rowland: Knave of Hearts (1613).

ǧĕt (2), get-en, geto (pa. t. gat, gate*, gatt*, gatte*, gret*, gete*, get, got*; pa. par. get*, * geten, * getyn, * geton, * getun, got, * goten, * gotten, * gotun, * gotyn), v.t. & i. [A.S. gitan, gytan, gietan, geotan (generally in composition as forgitan, begitan, &c.); cogn. with Icel. geta; Goth. gitan; Lat. -hendo (in pre-hendo); Gr. χανδάνω (chandanō); O. Fris. ieta, ietta; O. Sax. getan; O. H. Ger. gezun; M. H. Ger. gezzen.]

A. Transitive:

1. To procure; to obtain; to gain possession of by any means; to acquire.

"We get our bread with the peril of our lives, because of the sword of the wilderness."—Lamentations, v. 9.

2. To deserve; to meet with.

3. To come into possession of: hence, to possess, to have.

"Then forcing thee, by fire be made thee bright:
Nay, thou has got the face of man."
Herbert: Avarice.

4. To beget; to procreate; to generate.

"If a man gete a rebel sone and a fraward."—Wyclife: Deuteronomy xxi. 18.

5. To earn; to gain by labour.

"There, London's voice: 'Get money, money still!'
And then let virtue follow, if she will."
Pope: Horace, bk. i., ep. i., 79.

6. To gain as profit; to obtain as a price or reward.

"Alas! he gets nothing by that."
Shakesp.: Much Ado About Nothing, i. 1.

7. To win over; to induce; to prevail on; to persuade.

"Only get the learned writer to set down our ex communication."—Shakesp.: Much Ado About Nothing, iii. 5.

8. To draw away or aside.

"I could never get him from it."
Shakesp.: Timon, iii. 1.

9. To put or cause to be in any state or condition.

"But get your hearts deeply affected with religion as well as your heads, and then there is no fear but you will all be sons of peace."—Sharpe, vol. i., ser. 1.

10. To lay hold of; to seize; to catch.

"The plebelans have got your fellow tribune."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, v. 4.

11. To receive; to obtain: as, I could get no answer from him.

12. To procure; to supply; to furnish.

"Get me a taper in my study."
Shakesp.: Julius Cæsar, ii. 1.

B. Reflex.: To betake; to remove; to carry; to take off (betokening haste or danger).

"Arise, get thee out from this land."—Genesis xxxi. 13.

C. Intransitive:

1. To gain, to win; to be a gainer; to profit.

"So that now they got by their collectorships, whereas before they spent about £100, besides their gains on clothes or needless entertainments."—Life of A. à Wood, p. 286.

2. To arrive at any state, condition, or posture, by some kind of labour, effort, or exertion.

"Those that are very cold, and especially in their feet, cannot get to sleep."—Bacon: Natural History.

3. To betake oneself; to go, to remove, to depart.

"Get home with thy fewel made ready to set."
Tusser: Husbandry.

4. To fall or come by accident or chance.

"Two or three men of the town are got among them."—Tatler.

5. To find the way; to insinuate itself.

"If there should be any leak at the bottom of the vessel, yet very little water would get in, because no air could get out."—Wilkins.

6. To fall into the way of.

"Lying is so cheap a cover for any miscarriage, and so much in fashion, that a child can scarce be kept from getting into it."—Locke: On Education, § 123.

7. To become by any act what one was not before.

"The laughing sot, like all unthinking men, Bathes and gets drunk; then bathes and drinks again."
Dryden: Persius, sat. iii.

8. To arrive at: as, I got to the house early.

¶ 1. To get about:

(1) To be able to move or walk about. (Said of one recovering from sickness.)

(2) To spread about; to be commonly reported: as, The story got about.

2. To get ahead: To advance, to prosper, to succeed.

3. To get along: To proceed, to advance; hence, to prosper, to succeed.

4. To get at:

(1) Ordinary Language:

(a) Lit.: To be able to reach; to come or make way to: as, To get at the truth of a matter.

(b) Fig.: To banter, to tease, to aggravate. (Colloq.)

(2) Racing: To corrupt, in the case of the jockey; to hocuss, in the case of the horse.

"A painful impression is abroad that ——, who was a 'hot favourite' for the Derby, was pulled, the jockey who rode him having been got at."—Globe, Dec. 21, 1883.

5. To get back:

(1) Intrans.: To arrive back at the place from which one originally started; to return; to draw back or towards the rear.

(2) Trans.: To receive back or in return: as, To get one's money back.

* 6. To get before: To arrive in front or move forward.

7. To get behind:

(1) Lit.: To fall in the rear; to lag.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) To fall into arrears; to be backward: as, He got behind with his rent.

(b) To penetrate, to unravel.

8. To get behind the scenes: To become acquainted with the intimate working of any scheme or design.

9. To get by heart: To learn off by heart.

"This defect he frequently lamented, it being harder with him to get one sermon by heart than to pen twenty."—Fell: Life of Hammond.

10. To get clear: To disengage oneself; to be released or freed from confinement, obligation, burden, or embarrassment.

"From your love I have a warranty
To unburden all my plots and purposes
How to get clear of all the debts I owe."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

11. To get forward:

(1) Lit.: To go on or in front; to advance.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) To prosper, to advance.

(b) To push on, as with work.

12. To get free: To disengage oneself; to get clear or loose.

13. To get ground: To gain or win as an advantage.

"If they get ground and vantage of the king,
Then join you with them, like a rib of steel."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., iii. 2.

14. To get home:

(1) Ord. Lang.: To arrive at one's home or house.

(2) Racing: To arrive at the winning-post.

15. To get in:

(1) Transitive:

(a) Ord. Lang.: To collect, to gather in; to bring in and place under cover: as, To get in corn.

(b) Print.: To reduce the spacing so as to save lines.

(2) Intransitive:

(a) To arrive or make way within any place or body.

(b) To be elected or returned: as, He got in for the county.

16. To get off:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To put or take off: as, To get off one's boots.

(b) To remove; to shift: as, To get a ship off a shoal.

(c) To sell, to dispose of; to get rid of.

"Wood, to get his halfpence off, offered a hundred pounds in his coin for seventy in silver."—Swift: Drapier's Letters.

(2) Intransitive:

(a) To alight, to get down: as, To get off a horse.

(b) To escape; to get clear.

"The galeies, by the benefit of the shores and shalows, got off."—Bacon: War with Spain.

17. To get on:

(1) Trans.: To put on; to draw or pull on; as, To get on a coat.

"Be what thou wilt; I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots: we'll ride all night."—Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., v. 3.

(2) Intransitive:

(a) Lit.: To move on; to advance; to proceed.

(b) Fig.: To succeed; to prosper; to fare.

18. To get out:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To draw out; to extract.

"Smiling upon thee, get out thy secrets."—Eccles. xiii. 1.

(b) To draw out; to disengage; to get rid of: as, To get out a tooth.

"They would be glad to get out those weeds which now have taken too deep root to be easily extirpated."—Locke.

(2) Intrans.: To depart or escape from any place or state of confinement or restraint.

"Philantus was entrapped, and saw round about him, but could not get out."—Sidney: Arcadia.

19. To get over:

(1) Lit.: To pass over; to cross over.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) To surmount; to surpass; to overcome: "His temper being naturally jovial, he at last got over it."—Addison: Spectator, No. 2.

(b) To recover from: as, To get over illness.

(c) To coax; to wheedle; to circumvent.

20. To get quit of: To disengage one's self from.

"We can neither find source nor issue for such an excessive mass of waters, neither where to have them; nor, if we had them, how to get quit of them."—Burnet: Theory of the Earth.

21. To get rid of: To disengage one's self from; to remove.

"As the obtaining the love of valuable men is the happiest end of this life, so the next felicity is to get rid of fools and scoundrels."—Pope to Swift.

22. To get round: To gain an advantage over; to circumvent; to win over.

23. To get the day: To win the day; to gain the victory; to conquer.

"To get the day of them of his own nation, would be a most unhappy day for him."—2 Maccabees v. 6.

24. To get the hang of a thing: To become familiar with the arrangement or construction of anything; to acquire the art or knack of. (American.)

25. To get through:

(1) Lit.: To pass through and reach a point beyond.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) To accomplish; to complete: as, To get through one's work.

(b) To pass in any examination.

"So you see, Giglamps, I'm safe to get through."—Cuthbert Bede: Verdant Green, pt. ii., ch. xii.

26. To get to: To reach; to arrive at.

27. To get together:

(1) Trans.: To collect or bring together; to convene; to amass.

"Get your apparel together."—Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, iv. 2.

(2) Intrans.: To come or collect together; to meet; to assemble.

28. To get up:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To prepare; to get ready; to make all necessary arrangements for: as, To get up a case, to get up a concert.

(b) To learn thoroughly: as, To get up a lesson.

(c) To dress; to fit out: as, An actor, or a piece, or an effect is well got up.

(2) Intrans.: To arise, especially from a bed or couch.

"Sheep will get up betimes in the morning to feed against rain."—Bacon: Natural History.

29. To get wind:

(1) To become public; to be divulged: as, The story soon got wind.

(2) To recover breath.

30. To get wind of: To get intimation of.

31. To get with child: To make pregnant.

"He hath got his friend with child."
Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, i. 5.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between to get, to gain, to obtain, and to procure: "Get is not only the most general in its sense, but in its application; it may be substituted in almost every case for the other terms; get is promiscuously used for whatever comes to the hand, whether good or bad, desirable or not desirable, sought for or not; but gain, obtain, and procure, always include either the wishes, or the instrumentality of the agent, or both together. The word gain is peculiarly applicable to whatever comes to us fortuitously; for what we gain constitutes our good fortune. . . . To obtain and procure exclude the idea of chance, and suppose exertions directed to a specific end: but the former may include the exertions of others; the latter is particularly employed for one's own personal exertions." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

* get-nothing, s. An idle person; a ne'er-do-well.

"Every get-nothing is a thief."—Adams: Devil's Banquet, p. 76.

* get-penny, s. Anything which gets or gains money; a successful affair.

"But the gunpowder plot, there was a get-penny."—Ben Jonson: Bartholomew Fair, v. 1.

get-up, s. Dress and other accessories; the manner in which anything is presented, as on the stage.

"There is an air of pastoral simplicity about their whole get-up."—H. Kingsley: Ravenshoe, ch. xliii.

* gĕt (1), * gett, * gette, s. [O. Fr. get; Fr. gette.] [GET (1), v.]

1. A contrivance.

"Get or gyn. Machina."—Prompt. Parv.

2. A fashion, a mode, a manner.

"Him thought he rode all of the newe get."
Chaucer: C. T., 684.

gĕt (2), s. [GET (2), v.]

1. That which is begotten: a child.

"An' Will's a true guid fallow's get,
A name not envy spairges."
Burns: A Dream.

2. Offspring, progeny generally.

"The moder this behaldyng is al ouerset Wyth sorow, for slauchtir of hyr tendir get."
Douglas: Virgil, 465, 42.

* gĕt'-ą-ble, * gĕt'-ą-ble, a. [Eng. get, v.; -able.] Attainable, obtainable.

"Fishes, fowls, and all other commodities scarce gettable in Aberdeen."—Spalding, ii. 82.

* gĕt'-tĕr (1), s. [GET (1), v.] A swaggerer, a bully.

gĕt'-tĕr (2), s. [Eng. get, v.; -er.]

* 1. One who gets, gains, or obtains.

"Revolve the getter's joy, and loser's pain."
Rowe: Golden Verses of Pythagoras.

* 2. One who begets; a begetter, a progenitor.

"Peace is a getter of more bastard children, than war's a destroyer of men."—Shakesp.: Coriolanus, iv. 6.

3. One employed in digging in the construction of earthworks.

gĕtt'-ĭng, * gett-ynge, * get-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [GET, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act of gaining, obtaining, or acquiring; acquisition.

"What about the gettynge of the garlande, kepyng it, lesyng and wynnynge againe, it hath coste more English blud than hath the twise wynnynge of Fraunce."—Hall: Edward V.

2. The act of begetting or procreating.

3. That which is got or gained; gains; profit.

"Behold Sir Balaam, now a man of spirit, Ascribes his gettings to his parts and merit."
Pope: Moral Essays, iii. 376.

ġē'-ŭm, s. [Lat. geum = the avens, said to be from Gr. γεύω (geuō) = to taste, to enjoy the sweets of, referring to the aromatic roots.]

Bot.: A genus of Rosaceæ, family Potentillidæ. The calyx, which is five-lobed, has five bracteoles above its base, making it sometimes to be described as ten-cleft; petals, five; stamens many, crowded; carpels many, with one ascending ovule in each; anthers many, on a dry receptacle. About thirty species are known. They are from the temperate and colder regions. Two are British. [AVENS.]

gew'-gâw (ew as ū), * gew-gaud, * gu-gaw, * gy-gawe, s. & a. [A corruption of Mid. Eng. giuegoue, givegove, a reduplicated form of give (q.v.). (Skeat.)]

A. As subst.: A showy trifle; a toy, a bauble, a knick-knack.

"In every corner of the mansion appeared a profusion of gewgaws, not yet familiar to English eyes."—Macaulay: Eng. Hist., ch. xi.

B. As adj.: Showy, without value, gaudy.

"He prefers thee to the gilded domes
Or gewgaw grottos of the vainly great."
Byron: Elegy on Newstead Abbey.

gew-gâwed (ew as ū), a. [Eng. gewgaw; -ed.] Tricked out with baubles or showy trifles.

"Before some new Madonna, gaily decked, Tinselled and gewgawed."
D. G. Rossetti: A Last Confession.

gey, adv. [Gay.] Pretty, tolerably, moderately.

¶ A gey bit: A considerable distance.

"Kippletringan was distant at first a gey bit, then the gey bit was accurately described as 'aiblins three mile,' and then the 'three mile' diminishes into 'like a mile and a bittock;' then extended into 'four mile or thereawa.'"—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. i.

* geyl-er, s. [Gaoler.]

geȳş'-ẽr, geȳş'-ĭr, s. [Icel. geysa = to gush.]

Geology, &c.:

1. Certain intermittent hot springs in the south-western division of Iceland, about thirty miles from Mount Hecla. Nearly one hundred are said to break out within a circle of two miles. Few of them play longer than five or six minutes at a time, although sometimes they go on for half-an-hour. The largest is called the Great Geyser. It has a pipe 78 feet in vertical depth, and from eight to ten feet in diameter, but gradually widening as it rises into the basin. The latter is 56 feet long by 46 feet broad, and is lined with an incrustation of silica deposited from the hot water, the process being aided by the alkali soda, which, with minute quantities of various salts, exists in the water. When the geyser is about to act, subterranean noises are heard like the distant firing of cannon, and the earth is slightly shaken; then a column of the liquid element is thrown up to the height of 100 or 200 feet. Steam after a time makes it way out of the rent, and the fountain ceases to play. The second in size is the Strokkur. If stones or turf be thrown down its pipe, an eruption will follow in a few minutes, and eject them with great force. Sir George Mackenzie, Sir J. Herschel, Prof. Bunsen, Descloizeanx, and Professor Tyndall have all offered explanations of geyser action. It is produced by the heating of the lower part of the geyser tube.

2. Any similar intermittent hot springs. The most remarkable geysers in the world are those of Yellowstone Park, where they occur in a profusion unknown elsewhere. On the Firehole River alone there are fully 50 geysers, throwing columns of water from 50 to 200 feet high. Old Faithful Geyser throws a column of water six feet in diameter to a height from 100 to 150 feet, at intervals of about an hour. There are fine geysers also in New Zealand.

ȝeȳ'-ṣẽr-īte, * geȳ'-ṣĭr-īte, s. [Eng. &c., geyser, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A variety of Fiorite or Siliceous Sinter, which again is a variety of opal. It is applied to the concretionary deposits around the Icelandic geysers. [Geyser.] (Dana). The British Museum Catalogue makes geyserite simply a synonym for Siliceous Sinter.

ghaĭ'-or-nĭk, s. [Tartar.]

Zool.: A variety of the Yak (Poëphagus grunniens), one of the Bovidæ.

ghaist, s. [Ghost.] Ghost. (Scotch.) ghar'-rў, s. [Hindust, gâri.] A wheel carriage. (Anglo-Indian.)

* ghast, v.t. [A.S. gæstan = to terrify.] To frighten, to terrify, to aghast.

"So ghasted with feare . . . that they looked rather like to ghosts than men."—Stow: Queen Elizabeth (1586).

* ghast, a. [Ghast, v.] Ghastly; awful.

"How ghast a train." Keats: Otho the Great, v. 5.

* ghast'-fûl, * gast-full, a. [Eng. ghast; full.] Such as to make persons aghast; frightful, horrible, dead.

"Here will I dwell apart,
In gastfull grove therefore, till my last sleep."
Spenser: Shepheards Calender; August.

* ghast'-fûl-lў, adv. [Eng. ghastful; -ly.] In a ghastful or ghastly manner; horribly, dreadfully.

ghast'-lĭ-nĕss, * gast-li-ness, s. [Eng. ghastly; -ness.] The quality or state of being ghastly; a deathlike look; horror of countenance; paleness.

ghast'-lў, * gast-lie, * gast-ly, a. & adv. [A.S. gæstlic = terrible, from a root seen in gæstan = to frighten, to ghast; Goth. usgaisjan = to terrify; usgeisnan = to be astonished.]

A. As adjective:

1. Pale, deathlike, dismal, haggard.

"An energy which amazed everybody who saw his ghastly countenance and tottering gait."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xv.

2. Horrible, dreadful, shocking, hideous.

"Familiarity with ghastly spectacles produced a hardheartedness and a desperate impiety." — Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xv.

* B. As adv.: In a ghastly manner; hideously, haggardly.

"Staring full ghastly like a strangled man."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., iii. 2.

¶ For the difference between ghastly and hideous, see Hideous.

ghast'-nĕss, gast-ness, s. [Eng. ghast; -ness.] The quality or state of being ghastly; ghastliness, haggard look, horror.

"Do you perceive the ghastness of the eye?"
Shakesp.: Othello, v. 1.

* ghaunt, a. [Gaunt.]

ghât, ghâut, s. [Mahratta, &c. ghat.]

1. Properly a mountain pass.

2. A range of mountains, as the Western Ghauts, more commonly called by the natives the Sahyadri Hills.

3. A quay; a flight of steps for the convenience of bathers descending to the Ganges or other rivers. (All Anglo-Indian.)

"Remembering such a ghaut or river-stair at Calcutta."—Thackeray: Roundabout Papers, xviii.

ghĕ'-bĕr, s. [Guebre.]

ghee, s. [Hindust.] Stale butter clarified by boiling and straining. It has no attraction for Europeans, but is largely in use among the natives of India.

ghĕr'-kĭn, * guĕr'-kĭn, * gĕr'-kĭn, s. [A shortened form of agherkin, from Dut. agurkje; Dan. agurke; Ger. gurke, from Arab. al = the, and khirgâr = a cucumber; Hind khiyâr.] A small variety of the cucumber used for pickling.

* ghess, * ghesse, v.t. & i. [Guess, v.]

* ghess, s. [Guess, s.]

ghĕt'-ṭhôo, s. [Some Indian languages.]

Bot.: The tubers of a plant, Aponogeton monostachyon. Roxburgh says that they are eaten by the natives of India, and are almost as good as potatoes.

ghĕt'-tō, s. [Ital.] That quarter of certain Italian towns in which Jews live.

Ghĭb'-ĕl-līne, s. [Ital. Ghibellino, a corrupt. of Ger. Weiblingen, an estate in the part of Franconia included under Wurtemberg. It was the seat of Conrad III. of Hohenstaufen, duke of Suabia, and Henry, the nephew of Welf or Guelf, Duke of Bavaria, who in A.D. 1138 engaged in a contest against each other for the imperial crown of Germany. The names of the Guelf and the Ghibelin are said to have been first used as rallying cries at the battle of Weinsberg in A.D. 1140.)

Hist.: The name given to those who sided with the German emperors in their contests with the popes on the question of their respective jurisdictions. The Guelfs and Ghibellines disturbed Italy from the twelfth to the fifteenth century. In the time of Dante the contest was severe at Florence, and in 1289 the great poet, who was an earnest Ghibelline, fought in the battle of Campoldina against the opposite faction. [Guelf.]

* ghif, conj. [If.]

* ghĭt'-tẽrn, s. [Gittern.]

ghô-hō'-nạ, s. [An Indian word.]

ghohona-grass, s.

Bot.: A poisonous grass, Paspalum scrobiculatum (?), growing in India. It is said to render the milk of the cattle which feed upon it narcotic and drastic.

* ghôle, s. [Ghoul.]

ghôst, * gaist, * gast, * ghaist, * goost, * gost, s. [A.S. gast = a spirit; cogn. with Dut. geest; Dan. & Ger. geist, from the same root as ghastly (q.v.); O. Sax. gêst; O. Fris. gâst; Sw. gast.]

* 1. The soul of man.

"Bitesche mi gast ant mi bodi badhen to ro and to reste."—St. Marherite, p. 20.

* 2. Breath.

"Alle that glydez and gotz and gost of lyf habbez."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems; Cleanness, 325.

3. The spirit or soul of a deceased person; an apparition; a spirit appearing after death; a spectre.

"The ghosts rejected are the unhappy crew Deprived of sepulchres and funeral due."
Dryden: Virgil: Æneid vi. 445.

* 4. Spirit.

"As wel in body as goost chaste was she."
Chaucer: C. T., 13,458.

* 5. A dead body; a corpse.

"I'll make a ghost of him that lets me."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, i. 4.

6. A shadow; the remotest trace or likelihood: as, He has not the ghost of a chance. (Colloquial.)

¶ (1) The Holy Ghost: The Third Person in the Christian Trinity. [Holy Ghost.]

(2) To give up the ghost, * To yield up the ghost: To die, to expire.

"Their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost."
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., ii. 3.

¶ For the difference between ghost and vision, see Vision.

* ghost-demon, s. The spirit of a man adored as a deity.

ghost-god, s. The same as Ghost demon (q.v.).

ghost-moth, s.

Entom.: A moth, Hepialus humuli. The expansion of wings in the male is about two, and in the female two and a half inches. The former has the wings snowy white, with the costæ and fringes brownish; the female has the fore wings deep dull yellow, with a streak and some spots brick red; the hind wings are of a dull lead colour at the base, shaded with orange. The larva feeds underground on the roots of hop, burdock, nettle, &c., from autumn to spring. The perfect insect, which is common, appears in June. The males, the sex with the ghostly appearance, have a peculiar flight, oscillating backwards and forwards like a pendulum, but remaining for some time at one spot. (Stainton.)

* ghost-seer, s. One who sees or calls up spectres or apparitions.

"He had listened with vivid interest, at least, if not with implicit belief, to the wonders told of each more renowned ghost-seer."—Lytton: Zanoni, bk. ii., ch. ii.

ghost-story, s. A tale in which ghosts are introduced.

* ghôst, v.i. & t. [Ghost, s.]

A. Intrans.: To give up the ghost; to die, to expire.

"Euryalus taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit, that within a few hours she ghosted."—Sidney: Arcadia.

B. Trans.: To appear as a ghost; to haunt as a ghost.

"Julius Cæsar
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted." Shakesp.: Antony & Cleopatra, ii. 6.

* ghôst'-ĕss, s. [Eng. ghost; -ess.] A female ghost.

"The said ghostess or ghost, as the matter may be."
Barham: Ingoldsby Legends; Old Woman in Grey.

* ghôst'-lĕss, a. [Eng. ghost; -less.] Without spirit or life.

ghôst'-līke, a. [Eng. ghost, and like.] Like a ghost; pale, haggard, ghastly.

"Thy thinne cheeke, hollow eye,
And ghostlike colour speake the mystery Thou wouldst, but canst not live by."
Nabbes: Hannibal & Scipio; their Ghost to the Authour.

* ghôst-lĭ-nĕss, * goost-ly-nes, s. [Eng. ghostly; -ness.] The quality or state of being ghostly.

"Tham . . . namly that fell to goostlynes."
Cursor Mundi, 6,448.

ghôst'-lў, * gost-lich, * gost-liche, * goste-ly, * gos-tly, a. & adv. [A.S. gâstlic = spiritual; O. S. gêstlik; O. Fris. gâstlik; Ger. geistlich; Dut. geestelijk.] [Ghost, Ghastly.]

† A. As adjective:

1. Of or pertaining to the spirit or soul: spiritual; not carnal or secular.

"I wish thee, Vin, before all wealth Both bodily and ghostly health."
Corbet: To his son Vincent.

2. Connected with religion or spiritual matters; engaged in religious duties.

"Ghostly in office, earthly in his plan,
A slave at court, elsewhere a lady's man."
Cowper: Tirocinium, 422.

3. Pertaining to ghosts or apparitions.

4. Suitable for ghosts; dismal, gloomy.

"To muse at last amid the ghostly gloom
Of graves, and hoary vaults, and cloistered cells."
Akenside: Pleasures of Memory.

* B. As adv.: In a ghostly or spiritual manner; spiritually.

* ghōte, s. [Goat.]

ghoul, *ghole, *ghoole, s. [Pers. ghôl = a wood-demon, supposed to devour men and other animals.] An imaginary being, supposed among Eastern nations to devour human corpses.

"It seemed a place where ghouls might come With their foul banquets from the tomb."
Moore: Fire-Worshippers.

ghȳll, s. [Icel. gil = a ravine.] A ravine; a gully or cleft in a hill.

"Then as I wandered where the huddling rill Brightens with water-breaks the hollow ghyll." Wordsworth: Evening Walk.

ǧī-ăl-lō-lī'-nō, s. [Ital. giallorino = yellowish; giallo = yellow.] An oxide of lead or massicot from Naples, constituting a fine pigment called Naples yellow.

* giambeaux, *giam-beux (as zham'-bo, zham'-bę), s. pl. [Fr. jambe = the leg.] [Jambeaux.]

Old Armour: Leg or shin pieces of cuir

GIAMBEAUX.

bouilli, or metal, much worn during the reign of Richard II.

"The mortal steel despiteously entailed,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their giambeux falls."
Spenser: F. Q. II. vi. 29.

ǧī'-ant, *geand, *gean., *geannt, *geawnt, *giaund, *giaunt, *gyant, *ǧeant, *ǧeaunt, *cyant, s. & a. [O. Fr. gyant, geant, ciant; Fr. géant, from Lat. gigantem, accus. of gigas; Gr. γίγας (gigas), genit. γίγαντος (gigantos) = a giant; from the same root as genus, generate, &c.; Sp., Port., & Ital. gigante; Ger. gigant.]

A. As substantive:

1. A man of size much above the ordinary stature of men; a man of extraordinary size or bulk.

"Gates of monarchs
Are arched so high, that giants may jet through."
Shakesp.: Cymbeline, iii. 3.

2. A person of extraordinary powers or genius, bodily or intellectual.

B. As adjective:

1. Lit.: Gigantic; giant-like; like a giant in size or strength.

"Cur dire neighbours of Cyclopean birth Match in fierce wrong the giant sons of earth."
Pope: Homer; Odyssey vii. 280.

* 2. Enormous, monstrous.

"A giant traitor." Shakesp.: Henry VIII., i. 2.

giant-cells, s. pl.

Anat.: Large multi-nucleated cells, called by Kölliker Ostoclasts. They arise where absorption of bone is going on.

giant-clams, s. pl.

Zool.: The English name given to Tridacnidæ (q.v.), a family of conchiferous molluscs.

giant-fennel, s.

Bot.: The genus Ferula, the species of which are found in the south of Europe, the north of Africa, Persia, Siberia, &c. Ferula persica is the assafœtida (q.v.).

giant-ivy, s.

Bot.: Hedera vegeta; called also Irish ivy.

giant powder, s. A form of dynamite, consisting of infusorial earth saturated with nitro-glycerine. The siliceous earth consists of diatoms and frustules, and the result is a brown powder, something like fine sawdust.

giant puff-ball, s.

Bot.: A fungus, Lycoperdon giganteum, often many feet in circumference, filled with a pulpy mass, which has been used for a styptic and for tinder.

* giant-queller, s. The slayer or destroyer of giants.

"Thor was the Hercules of the Scandinavian mythology, a dreadful giant-queller."—Scott: Rokeby, iv. 1 (Note).

ǧī'-ant-ĕss, *ge-aunt-esse, *gy-ant-esse, s. [Eng. giant; -ess.]

1. A female giant, a woman of extraordinary size or bulk.

"Thar the childrene were Whyche that ogħte the geauntesse that Charlis alow in distresse." Sir Ferumbras, 4,868.

* 2. Any being or personification of exceeding strength or power.

"Youth is publicly swallowed up by the giantess of old age admitted into its inner mansion."—Sir W. Jones: An Indian Grant of Land."

* ǧī'-ant-ĭsh, a. [Eng. giant; -ish.] Approaching that of a giant; unusually tall.

"Their stature neither dwarf nor giantish." Randolph: Muse's Looking Glass, v. 1.

* ǧī'-ant-ĭzm, s. [Eng. giant; -ism.] The state of being giants.

"Oh happy state of giantism, where husbands Like mushrooms grow."
Fielding: Life & Death of Tom Thumb, i.

* ǧī'-ant-īze, v.i. [Eng. giant; -ize.] To act as a giant; to play the giant.

* ǧī'-ant-līke, *ǧī'-ant-lў, a. [Eng. giant; -like, -ly.] Resembling or like a giant; characteristic of a giant; gigantic.

"What means this devilish shepherd to aspire With such a giantly presumption?"
Marlowe: 1 Tamburlaine, ii. 6.

* ǧī'-ant-rў, s. [Eng. giant; -ry.]

1. The race of giants; giants collectively.

2. Hugeness.

"The flimsy giantry of Ossian."—Walpole: Letters iv. 280.

ǧī'-ant-shĭp, s. [Eng. giant; -ship.] The state, quality, or character of a giant.

"His giantship has gone somewhat crestfallen."
Milton: Samson Agonistes, 1,244.

giaour (as jówr), s. [Turk. gi̇dour; Pers. gâur = an infidel.] A name given by the Turks to those who disbelieve in Mohammed, and specially to Christians.

"And though to-morrow's tempest lower,
'Tis calmer than thy heart, young Giaour."
Byron: The Giaour.

ǧĭb (I), s. [O. Fr. gibbe; Fr. gibe = a billhook, a hoe.] [Gibbet.]

1. The projecting arm of a crane; a gibbet or jib.

2. A piece of metal or wood whose duty it is to hold another in place, as in the case of a sled-tongue in its roller, or a strap-head on a connecting-rod. It is usually tightened by a key or cotter.

¶ Gib and key: The fixed wedge and the driving wedge for tightening the strap which holds the brasses at the end of a connecting-rod in steam machinery.

* ǧĭb (2), * gibbe, *gyb, s. [An abbrev. for Gilbert=O. Fr. Tibert, the name given to the cat in the old fable of "Reynard the Fox." Cf. Tom-cat and Jack-ass.] A tom-cat, especially an old one.

"Nothing it availed
To call Philip agayne
Whom gib our cat hath slayne."
Skelton: The Boke of Philip Sparow.

* gib-cat, *gyb-cat, s. A tom-cat.

"I am as melancholy as a gib-cat, or a lugged bear."
—Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., i. 2.

ǧĭb (3), s. [Jib.]

ǧĭb (1), v.t. [Gib (1), s.] To secure or fasten with a gib or gibs.

* ǧĭb (2), v.i. [Gib (2), s.] To act like a cat; to play the cat.

"Out, kittings!
What catterwauling's here? what gibbing!" Beaum. & Fl.: Wild-Goose Chase, i. 2.

ǧĭb'-bĕr, v.i. [A variant of jabber (q.v.).] To jabber, to talk inarticulately, to gabble.

"Whether on ancient tombs thou takest thy stand,
By gibbering spectres hailed, thy kindred band."
Byron: English Bards & Scotch Reviewers.

ǧĭb'-bĕr, s. [Lat. = hunchbacked, protuberant.]

Bot.: A pouch-like enlargement of the base of a calyx, corolla, &c. (Treas. of Bot.)

ǧĭb'-bĕr-ĭsh, *geb-rish, *gib-ridge, s. & a. [Eng. gibber, v.; -ish.]

A. As subst.: Inarticulate talk; unmeaning or unintelligible language; nonsense.

"Not merely bad writing, but senseless gibberish."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiv.

B. As adj.: Unmeaning, nonsensical, unintelligible fustian.

"Physicians but torment him; his disease Laughs at their gibberish language."
Massinger: Virgin Martyr, iv. 1.

* ǧĭb'-bĕr ĭsh, v.t. [Gibberish, s.] To talk unintelligibly; to gibber, to jabber.

"And yet forsooth we must gag our mwes in gibberishing Irish?"—Holinshed: Description of Ireland, ch. i.

† ǧĭb'-bĕr-ŏse, a. [Lat. gibberosus = hunchbacked.]

Bot.: The same as Gibbous (q.v.). (Treas. of Bot.)

ǧĭb'-bĕt, *geb-et, *geb-ette, *gib-et, *gyb-et, s. [O. Fr. gibbet; Fr. gibet (a word of unknown origin); Ital. giubbetto (s.); giubbette (pl.); cf. O. Fr. gibet = a large stick.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A gallows: the apparatus, consisting of a post of wood with a projecting arm, from which notorious malefactors were hanged in chains, and allowed to remain as a warning.

"His windows were broken; the trees of his garden cut down: and a gibbet set up before his door."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. ii.

II. Mach.: The post and arm of a crane, reaching over for the suspension of the load therefrom.

gibbet-tree, s. A gibbet, a gallows.

"And on the gibbet-tree, reversed,
His foeman's scutcheon tied."
Scott: Marmion, i. 12.

ǧĭb'-bĕt, v.t. [Gibbet, s.]

Lit.: To hang on a gibbet.

"It walks abroad; it continues its ravages; whilst you are gibbeting the carcase, or demolishing the tomb."—Burke: French Revolution.

Figuratively:

* 1. To hang or suspend in any way.

"He shall come off and on swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket."—Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., iii. 2.

2. To hold up or expose to ridicule, scorn, infamy, or the like.

"I had gibbetted up Julian, and he comes by night to cut him down."—Warburton: Life of the Author; Letter to Dr. Balguy.

* gibbier (as zhĭb'-bĭ-ā), s. [O. Fr., Fr. gibier.] Game, wild fowl.

"These imposts are laid on all butcher's meat, while, at the same time, the fowl and gibbier are tax free."—Addison: On Italy.

ǧĭb-ble-găb'-ble, s. [A reduplicate of gabble (q.v.).] Nonsensical or inarticulate talk; jabber, gibberish.

gĭb'-bŏn, s. [According to Delachamp, from Gr. κειπων (keipōn), a word which he says Strabo uses for a species of ape. But Liddell and Scott have κεῖπος (keipos), κῆπος (kēpos) and κῆβος (kebos) [Cebus], the first of these being the word really used by Strabo. It = a long-tailed species of monkey, which the modern gibbon is not. Lat. cephus (Pliny); cf. also Heb. קוֹף (qōph) = an ape (1 Kings x. 22, 2 Chron. ix. 21), from Sansc. & Malabar kapi = a monkey.]

Zool.: Hylobates, a genus of anthropoid apes. The arms or anterior limbs are so long that when the animal stands erect they nearly reach the ground. There is no tail, but there are natal callosities. The sternum is wider than in the other apes, and the chin better developed. The animal is protected by a thick fur. The Common Gibbon, Hylobates lar, is the Simia lar of Linnæus. It is about five feet high. It has been found on the coasts of Coromandel, in the peninsula of Malacca, and in the Molucca Islands. Another Gibbon is the Siamang, Hylobates syndactylus. It is found in Sumatra. It is larger than the Common Gibbon. Some think that the gibbons approach the human structure more closely than the gorilla does.

ǧĭb'-boom, s. [Jibboom.]

gĭb'-bōse, a. [Lat. gibbus = hunched, humped, gibboue.] Gibbous, protuberant at one or more places.

"Even Mars, too, in its quadratures becomes gibbose."—Ray: Astro-Theology, bk. v., ch. i.

gĭb-bŏs'-ĭ-tў, s. [As if from a Lat. gibbositas, from gibbosus; Fr. gibbosité.]

1. Ord. Lang.: The quality or state of being gibbous; protuberance; convexity.

"When ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water?"—Ray: On the Creation, pt. ii.

2. Geol.: For def. see extract.

"It [the lava-flow from Atrio] formed what was called the 'gibbosity' of 1857. . . . Such gibbosities are caused by the abrupt termination of viscous streams, which stop at different heights on the flanks of the cone, for want of a sufficient supply of melted matter to enable them to proceed further."—Lyell: Princip. Geol. (11th ed.), i. 641.

gĭb'-boŭs, a. [Lat. gibbosus, from gibbus = a hunch; Fr. gibbeux; Sp. & Port. giboso; Ital. gibboso.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: Hunchbacked, hunched, humped, crookbacked.

"I demand . . . how oxen in some countries began and continue gibbous or hunchbacked?"—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. vi., ch. x.

2. Fig.: Protuberant, convex, swelling into inequalities.

"Varro and Pliny take notice of their spotted plumage, and the gibbous substance on their head."—Pennant: British Zoology; Turkey.

II. Technically:

1. Astron.: A term used when the illuminated portion of the moon or of a planet exceeds a semicircle, but falls short of a circle.

2. Bot.: Very convex or tumid, as the leaves of many succulent plants.

¶ Lindley thinks that the term should be restricted to solid convexities.

gĭb'-boŭs-lў, adv. [Eng. gibbous; -ly.] In a gibbous or protuberant manner or form.

gĭb'-boŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. gibbous; -ness.] The quality or state of being gibbous; gibbosity.

"Because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away; he would only see below him a great circular flat, as level to his thinking as the face of the moon."—Bentley: Sermons, viii.

gĭbbs'-īte, s. [Named after Colonel George Gibbs, the original owner of the mineralogical cabinet in Yale College.]

Min.: A hexagonal or monoclinic white, greyish, greenish, reddish-white or reddish-yellow, translucent mineral, emitting, when breathed upon, an argillaceous smell. Hardness, 2·5 to 3·5; sp. gr. 2·3 to 2·4. Compos.: Alumina, 65·6; water, 34·4 = 100. Found in the Ural Mountains, at various places in the United States, &c. Varieties: (1) In crystals (Hydrargillite), (2) Stalactitic (Gibbsite proper).

gĭbe (1), gybe, jibe, v.i. & t. [Of Scandinavian origin: cf. Icel. geipa = to talk nonsense; geip = nonsense; Sw. dial. gipa = to gape, to talk foolishly. (Skeat.)]

A. Intrans.: To throw out or utter sneers or reproaches; to make use of sneering or taunting expressions; to rail, to flout, to fleer, to scoff. (Usually followed by at.)

"Common courtiers love to gybe and fleare
At everie thing which they heare spoken ill,
And the best speaches with ill meaning spill."
Spenser: Mother Hubberds Tale.

B. Trans.: To use sneering or taunting expressions towards; to mock; to taunt; to sneer at; to address or treat sneeringly or sarcastically.

"Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them." Swift.

gĭbe (2), v.t. & i. [JIBE.]

gĭbe, s. [GIBE (1), v.] A sneering or taunting expression; a sneer, a scoff, a taunt; an expression of sarcastic scorn or contempt.

"First, he the yeoman did molest With bitter gibe and taunting jest."
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, vi. 8.

gĭb'-ĕl, s. [Ger. gibel, giebel.]

Ichthy.: A fish, the Prussian Carp, Cyprinus gibelio. It may be distinguished from the Common Carp by the absence of barbules on its lips. Its weight is generally half a pound, though it has been found four times as much. It occurs in ponds near London, &c., but in England is rather local in its distribution. It is a good fish for the table. It derives its name from a tradition that it was introduced from Germany.

gibel-carp, s.

Ichth.: The same as GIBEL (q.v.). (Yarrell.)

Gĭb'-ĕl-īne, Gĭb'-ĕl-līne, s. [GHIBELLINE.]

Gĭb'-ĕ-ŏn-īte, s. [Eng. Gibeon; -ite.]

1. Lit.: One of the inhabitants of Gibeon, who were condemned by Joshua for their duplicity to be "hewers of wood and drawers of water" (Joshua ix. 10).

2. Fig.: A drudge; a slave's slave; the lowest of servants.

gĭb'-ĕr, gyb-er, s. [Eng. gibe (1), v.; -er.] One who makes use of gibes, taunts, or sarcastic language; a scoffer, a taunter; a sarcastic and censorious person; a mocker.

"Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table, than a necessary bencher in the capitol."—Shakesp.: Coriolanus, ii. 1.

gĭb'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GIBE (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or habit of sneering, taunting, or mocking; a gibe, a sneer, a taunt.

"Anything that's writ, Against this gibing, gingling knack, called wit."
Rochester: Satire against Mankind.

gĭb'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. gibing; -ly.] In a gibing, sneering, or sarcastic manner; with gibes, sneers, or taunts; sneeringly, sarcastically.

"Which gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion After the inveterate hate he bears you."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, ii. 3.

gĭb'-lĕt, *gibelet, *gybelet, *gyb-lets, s. & a. [O. Fr. gibelet; Fr. gibelotte = stewed rabbit.]

A. As substantive:

1. The internal eatable parts of a fowl, such as the heart, liver, gizzard, &c., which are removed before cooking, and are often served separately in a sauce or pie.

"Thou shalt me forgive,
And quite each other, all old debts and driblets,
And set the hare's head against the goose giblets."
Harrington: Orlando Furioso, bk. xliii., § 136.

* 2. Entrails generally.

"I hope, Mr. Bayes, that we shall not see when you have a mind to junket with your comfortable importance, that the entremets shall be of a fanatick's giblets."—Marvel: Works, ii. 93.

* 3. Rags, tatters.

B. As adj.: Made of giblets: as, a giblet pie.

giblet-cheek, jiblet-cheek, s. A term used by stonemasons to signify a rebate round the rybates, &c., of a doorway or gateway, for the reception of a door or gate intended to open outwards; also written jiblet-check.

Gĭb-răl'-tar, s. & a. [Arab. Gibel or Jabal-al Tarik = Mount Tarik, named after Tarik, Tarek, or Tarif, the Saracen leader, who captured it from the Christians in A.D. 711.]

A. As subst.: A rock, seaport, and fortified town at the southern extremity of Spain, but since A.D. 1704 a British possession.

B. As adj.: In any way pertaining to or connected with the place described under A.

Gibraltar-monkey, s.

Zool.: Inuus ecaudatus, an originally African monkey, a colony of which is wild on the rocks of Gibraltar. [INUUS.]

Gibraltar-stone, s.

Min.: Stalagmite from a cavern in the rock of Gibraltar.

gĭb'-shĭp, s. [Eng. gib, and ship.] A ludicrous form of address to a gib or tom-cat.

gĭb'-staff, s. [Eng. gib, s., and staff.]

1. A long pole to gauge water or to shove a boat into deep water.

* 2. A weapon used to fight beasts upon the stage.

gĭd, s. [A contract. for giddy or giddiness (q.v.).] A disease in sheep, more generally known as sturdy (q.v.).

gĭd'-dĕd, pa. par. or a. [GIDDY, v.]

gĭd'-dĭ-lў, adv. [Eng. giddy; -ly.]

1. In a giddy manner; with a feeling of giddiness in the head.

2. In an inconstant, unsteady, or irregular manner.

"Our boasted liberty sometimes trodden down, sometimes giddily set up."—Burke: Vindication of Natural Society.

3. Carelessly, heedlessly, negligently.

"The parts that fortune hath bestowed upon her, Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, ii. 4.

gĭd'-dĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. giddy; -ness.]

1. The state or quality of being giddy; a vertigo or swimming in the head; dizzyness.

"His head was not strong enough to bear without giddiness the speed of his ascent and the height of his position."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xx.

2. Unsteadiness, silliness, folly.

"He takes good heede, not to commit through giddiness of drayne
The facte, which he for very shame must needs vnde againe." Drant: Horace; Arte of Poetry.

3. Inconstancy, fickleness, mutability; lack of steadiness.

"There be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief."—Bacon.

4. A frolic, a wantonness; levity.

"Thou like a contrite penitent,
Charitably warned of thy sins, dost repent
These vanities and giddinesses." Donne.

5. A disease in sheep, called also sturdy (q.v.).

gĭd'-dĭsh, *gid-dishe, a. [Eng. gidd(y); -ish.] Giddy, changeable, inconstant, fickle, mutable.

"The people cawle thee giddishe mad, Why all the world is so."
Drant: Horace, sat. iii.

gĭd'-dў, *gid-die, *gyd-ye, a. [From A.S. gyddian, giddian, gyddigan = to sing, to be merry, from gid, gidd, gied, gyd = a song.]

1. Vertiginous; having a whirling, swimming, or dizziness in the head; dizzy.

"Them revling thus the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads and stagg'ring legs betray'
Tate: Juvenal, sat. xv.

2. Causing giddiness or vertigo; rendering dizzy.

"Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
In cradle of the rude, imperious surge?"
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., iii. 1.

3. Swimming, dizzy, accompanied with giddiness.

"Until the giddy whirl to cure,
He rose, and sought the moonshine pure."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, i. 34.

* 4. Whirling or circling round rapidly; rotating; whirled rapidly about.

"The giddy ship betwixt the winds and tides, Forced back and forwards, in a circle rides."
Dryden: Cymon & Iphigenia, 339.

5. Inconstant, changeable, fickle, unsteady, wild, heedless.

"Young heads are giddy, and young hearts are warm."
Cowper: Tirocinium, 444.

* 6. Characterized by or spent in levity and folly.

* 7. Foolish, silly.

"Yet would this giddy innovation fain!
Down with it lower, to abuse it quite."
Daniel: Musophilus.

8. Having the head turned by excitement; elated, excited, rash, hot-brained.

"Art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too?"—Shakesp.: Much Ado About Nothing, iii. 3.

giddy-brained, a. Thoughtless, heedless, foolish.

"Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddy-brained ass!"—Otway: Venice Preserved.

giddy-head, s. A person without thought or judgment.

"A company of giddy-heads will take upon them to divine how many shall be saved."—Burton: Anat. of Melancholy, p. 677.

giddy-headed, a. Without thought or judgment; giddy-brained, thoughtless, heedless.

"That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddy-headed, hear the testimony of Solomon."—Burton: Anat. of Melancholy.

giddy-paced, a. Moving with a giddy or unsteady motion; moving irregularly; flighty, fickle.

"More than light airs, and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, ii. 4.

giddy-pate, s. The same as GIDDY-HEAD (q.v.).

giddy-pated, a. The same as GIDDY-HEADED (q.v.)

gĭd'-dў, v.i. & t. [GIDDY, a.]

A. Intrans.: To turn quickly round; to whirl round.

"Had not by chance a sodaine North wind fetcht,
With an extreme sea, quite about againe,
Our whole endeauours; and our course constraine
To giddie round."
Chapman: Homer; Odyssey ix.

B. Trans.: To make giddy, dizzy, or unsteady.

"Not shaken with fear, not giddied with suspicion."—Farindon: Sermons (1657), p. 423.

gĭd'-dĭ-hĕad, *gyd-i-hede, s. [Eng. giddy; -head.] Giddiness, folly, unsteadiness.

"Bidde mylce of vre wrong, of vre gydihede."—Old Eng. Miscell., p. 143.

gīde, s. & v. [Guide.]

gīd'-ĕr, s. [Guider.]

gīd'-ĭng, *gid-ynge, s. [Guiding.]

gie, *gye, s. [Prov. Fr. guiá; Sp. & Port. guia.] A guide.

"The werwolf that ay was here gye."
William of Palerne, 2,849.

gīe (1), gye, *guye, *gule, v.t. [O. Fr. guier; Prov. guiar; Sp. & Port. guiar.] To guide.

"That host he ledeth and gyeth hit well."
Sir Ferumbras, 4,921.

gie, v.t. [Give.]

gien, pa. par. or a. [Given.]

gĭĕr' s. & a. [Dut. gier = a vulture; Ger. geier = a vulture, a hawk.] See the etym. and the compound.

gier-eagle, s.

Script.: The rendering of ם֫רָחָ (rachham) in Lev xii. 18 and Deut. xiv. 17. It is believed to be the small vulture, Neophron percnopterus. [Neophron.]

"These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the gier-eagle."—Leviticus xi. 18.

gier-falcon, s. [Gyr-falcon.]

gĭēs'-ĕck-īte, s. [Named after Sir Charles Giesecke, who brought it from Greenland.]

Min.: A variety of Pinite. It is a green or brownish mineral, occurring in Greenland in compact felspar, and in New York in a pyroxene rock. It is a pseudomorph of Nephelite. (Dana.) gĭf, *giff, conj. [A.S. gif; O. Fries. ief, gef, ef.] [If.] If.

"Gif it soth were that thou seist."—O. E. Homilies, ii. 81.

gĭff'-găff, s. [A redupl. of giff = give.] Give and take; tit for tat; mutual service to one another.

"Na, na! when I was in that way, I played at giff-gaff with the officers."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. ix.

Gĭf'-fard, s. & a. [The inventor's name.] For def. see etym. and compound.

giffard-injector, s. A steam-jet which acts upon a body of water by which it is condensed, and to which it communicates its velocity, driving it through the feed-water pipe into the boiler. [Injector.]

gĭft, *yeft, *yift, *yyft, s. [A.S. gift, gyft, from gifan = to give; Icel. gift, gipt; Dut. gift; Goth. -gibts, -gifts (in composition); Ger. gift; O. H. Ger., Sw., & Dan. gift; M. H. Ger. gifte.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act, right, or power of giving, bestowing, or conferring.

"Had the gift been theirs, it had not here Thus grown."
Milton: P. L., ix. 806.

2. That which is given, bestowed, or conferred voluntarily and without compensation or return; a present, a donation, a boon.

"And she shall have them, if again she sues, Since you the giver and the gift refuse."
Dryden: Virgil; Ecl. ii. 58.

* 3. An offering; an oblation.

"Therefore if thou offrest thi gifte at the auter, and there thou bethinkest that thi brother hath somewhat agens the, leave there thi gifte bifore the auter, and go first to be recounsciled to thy brothir, and then thou schalt come and schalt offre thi gifte." — Wycliffe: Matthew v.

* 4. A prize; a reward.

"And first the gifts in public view they place, Green laurel leaves, and palm (the victor's grace)."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid v 144.

* 5. Anything given with a corrupt motive; a bribe.

"Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise."—Deuteronomy xvi. 19.

6. A natural quality, talent, or endowment; a faculty, a power; a talent; considered as conferred by God.

"And Conversation in its better part May be esteemed a gift, and not an art."
Cowper: Conversation, 4.

II. Theol. (Pl.): Endowments, some of them high; others—and these the majority—superhuman, conferred on individuals in the early church by the Holy Spirit, whence they are called spiritual gifts. St. Paul enumerates the word of wisdom, that of knowledge; faith, the gift of having ability to work miracles, to prophesy, to succeed in the discerning of spirits, to speak with divers tongues or interpret those tongues when spoken by others. (1 Cor. xii. 1, 8–10, &c.)

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between gift, present, and donation; "The gift is an act of generosity or condescension; it contributes to the benefit of the receiver; the present is an act of kindness, courtesy, or respect; it contributes to the pleasure of the receiver. The gift is private, and benefits the individual; the donation is public, and serves some general purpose. The value of a gift is often heightened by being given opportunely; the value of a present often depends upon the value we have for the giver."

(2) He thus discriminates between gift, endowment, and talent: "Gift and endowment both refer to the act of giving and endowing, and of course include the idea of something given, and something received: the word talent contains no such collateral idea. When we speak of a gift, we refer in our minds to a givvr; when we speak of an endowment, we refer in our minds to the receiver; when we speak of a talent, we only think of its intrinsic quality. The gift is either supernatural or natural; the endowment is only natural. Talents are either natural or acquired, or in some measure of a mixed nature; they denote powers without specifying the source from which they proceed. . . An endowment is a gift, but a gift is not always an endowment; a talent may also be either a gift or an endowment, but it is frequently distinct from both." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) gift-rope, s.

Naut.: A rope attached to a boat to be used in towing it astern of a ship.

gĭft, v.t. [Gift, s.]

1. To bestow or confer as a gift.

"The Regent Murray gifted all the church property to Lord Semphill."—J. C. Lees: Abbey of Paisley (1858), p. 203.

2. To endow with a gift or any possession, faculty, or power.

"And lands and livings, many a rood,
Had gifted the shrine for their souls' repose."
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, iii. 2.

gĭft'-ĕd, a. [Eng. gift; -ed.]

1. Given, bestowed, conferred.

"To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heaven gifted strength."
Milton: Samson Agonistes, 36.

2. Endowed by nature with any power, faculty, or talent; largely endowed with intellect; talented.

"Their loves, their woes, the gifted bard
In fairy tissue wove."
Scott: Thomas the Rhymer, iii.

gĭft'-ĕd-nĕss, s. [Eng. gifted; -ness.] The quality or state of being gifted.

"Endowed with the sublimest giftedness of our separatists."—Echard.

gĭft'-lĕ, s. [Eng. gift; -ie; -y.] A dimin. of gift; a little or trifling gift.

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see ourels as others see us."
Burns: To a Louse.

gĭft'-lĕss, a. [Eng. gift; -less.] Without a gift or reward.

"But not unhonoured shall he halt away,
Or giftless mourn this unauspicious day."
Cambridge: Scribleriad, iv.

gĭft'-lĭng, s. [Eng. gift; -ling.] A gift of trifling value.

"You have plucked pretty giftlings from it."—Thackeray: Roundabout Papers, x.

gĭft'-ūrc, s. [Eng. gift; -ure.] A gift, an endowment.

"By all which it appeareth that the wealth of the ungodly is the peculiar gifture of wisedom."—Cleaver: Proverbs, p. 48.

gĭg (1), s. [Etym. doubtful.] A harpoon; a fish-gig (q.v.).

"One of these stories is, that this stone is originally a fish, which they strike with a gig in the water, tie a rope to it, and drag it to the shore, to which they fasten it, and it afterward becomes stone."—Cook: Voyages, vol. v., bk. i., ch. vii.

gĭg (2), s. [A contracted form of Giglet (q.v.).] A wanton, silly girl.

gĭg (3), gigge (1), gygge, s. [Etym. doubtful; cf. Icel. geiga = to vibrate, to tremble; gigja = a fiddle; Ger. geige.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. A fiddle.

* 2. A sound as of a fiddle.

"This house was also ful of gygges."
Chaucer: House of Fame, iii. 881

* 3. A top, a whirligig.

"To see great Hercules whipping a gig."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 2.

4. In the same sense as II. 3.

* 5. A flighty person.

"The little gig told all the quarrels."—Mad. D'Arblay: Diary, i. 390.

II. Technically:

1. Fabric: A rotary cylinder covered with wire teeth for teaseling cloth; a gigging-machine.

2. Naut.: A clinker-built boat, from 20 to 28 feet long, and rowed with four, six, or eight alternate oars. It is reserved for the commanding officer. Usually nearly the size of the cutter, but of longer and slenderer build.

3. Vehicle: A light, two-wheeled vehicle, drawn by one horse.

"Let the former riders in gigs and whiskeys, and one-horsed carriages, continue to ride in them."—Windham: Speech, May 25, 1809.

gig-horse, s. A horse used to draw a gig.

gig-machine, s.

Fabric: A gigging-machine (q.v.).

gig-mill, s. A machine in which woollen cloth is napped or teaseled; a gigging-machine.

gig-saddle, s.

Saddlery: A small saddle used with carriage harness, and carrying the terrets for the driving-reins and the check-hook for the bearing-rein.

gig-saw, s. A thin saw to which a rapid vertical reciprocation is imparted, and which is adapted for sawing scrolls, frets, &c.

gig-tree, s. The frame of a gig or harness-saddle.

gĭg (4), gigge (2), s. [Fr. gigue; Ital. giga.] A jig (q.v.).

gĭg (1), v.t. [Gig (1), s.] To fish with a gig or fishgig.

gĭg (2), v.i. [Gig (3), s.]

* 1. To move up and down; to wriggle.

2. To make a creaking noise. (Scotch.)

giga, s. [Gigg.]

ġī-găn'-tal, a. [Lat. gigas (gen. gigantis) = a giant; Eng. adj. suff. -al.] Gigantic.

"Gigantal frames hold wonders rarely strange."
Drummond.

ġī-găn'-tē-an, a. [Lat. giganteus, from gigas (genit. gigantis) = a giant; Ital. giganteo.] Like a giant, mighty, gigantic, irresistible.

"The strong Fates with gigantean force Bear thee in arms."
More: Philosophical Poems (1647), p. 818.

ġī'-găn-tĕsque (que as k), a. [Fr.] Befitting a giant; suited to gigantic topics; bombastic.

"What style could suit?
The men required that I should give throughout
The sort of mock-heroic gigantesque,
With which we bantered little Lilia first."
Tennyson: Princess; Conclusion, ii. 11.

ġī-găn'-tĭc, *gī-găn'-tĭck, *ġī-găn'-tĭc-al, a. [Lat. gigas (genit. gigantis) = giant; Eng. adj. suff. -ic, -ical.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of extraordinary size or power, such as befits a giant; huge, enormous; like or befitting a giant.

"I saw gigantic shadows in The umbrage of the walls of Eden, chequered."
Byron: Cain, i. 1.

2. Enormous, atrocious: as, gigantic wickedness, a gigantic error.

II. Bot.: Tall, but stout and well-proportioned. (Lindley.) gigantic-pine, s.

Bot.: Pinus Lambertiana.

ġī-găn'-tĭc-al-lў, adv. [Eng. gigantical; -ly.] In a gigantic manner; like a giant.

"Though this monster . . . strut and stalk so gigantically."—Cudworth: Intell. System, p. 62.

ġī-găn'-tĭ-çīde, s. [Lat. gigas (genit. gigantis) = a giant, and cædo = to kill.]

1. The act of slaying or killing a giant.

2. A giant-killer.

"Like John the gigantĭcide in his coat of darkness."—Southey: The Doctor, interchapter xii.

ġī-găn'-tĭc-nĕss, s. [Eng. gigantic; -ness.] The quality or state of being gigantic; gigantic nature, size, or proportion.

ġī-găn'-tĭnc, a. [Lat. gigas (genit. gigantis) = a giant; Eng. adj. suff. -ine.] Gigantic. (Bullokar.)

ġī-găn'-tō-līte, s. [Lat. gigas (genit. gigantis); Gr. γίγας (gigas), genit. γίγαντος (gigantos) = a giant, and suff. -lite (q.v.): the mineral derives its name from the large size of the crystals.]

Min.: A variety of Pinite crystallized in six or twelve-sided prisms from the gneissose granite of Finland. It is altered iolite. (Dana.)

ġī-găn-tŏl-ō-ġў, s. [Gr. γίγας (gigas), genit. γίγαντος (gigantos) = a discourse; Fr. gigantologie.] A treatise on or account of giants.

ġī-găn-tŏm'-ą-chў, s. [Lat. gigantomachia, from Gr. γιγαντομαχία (gigantomachia), from γίγας (gigas), genit. γίγαντος (gigantos) = a giant, and μάχη (machē) = a battle; Fr. gigantomachie.]

Class. Myth.: A war of giants: specif., the fabulous war of the giants against heaven.

"They looked more like that gigantomachy, the giants assaulting heaven and the gods, than that good fight of faith."—Gauden: Tears of the Church, p. 844.

ġĭgg (1), gigue, s. [Jig.]

1. A jig.

2. An irregular, soughing sound, like that of the Eolian harp, produced by the wind.

ġigg (2), s. [Icel. geiga = to tremble.] A sort of vane. [Gig (1), s.]

"A great help to the cymbal-nets for bringing in of larks about your net, is a gigg of feathers standing a distance off, which twirleth swiftly round on the let of breath of wind."—W. Blundell: Crosby Records, 27.

ġĭgg'-ēr, s. One who uses a gig in fishing. [See Gig, 1.] (Southern U. S.)

ġĭg'-gĕt, s. [Gigot.]

1. A leg of mutton.

2. A piece, a fragment.

ġĭg'-gĭng, pr. par. or a. [Gig (2), v.]

gigging-machine, s.

Cloth-manuf.: A machine for dressing woollen cloth by subjecting it to the action of teasels, whose fine hooks draw the loose fibres to the surface; a napping machine. The teasel is a kind of thistle cultivated for the purpose. [Fuller's-teasel.] Artificial teasels, such as wire cards, have hitherto failed to answer the purpose as fully, on account of their unyielding nature when they become engaged with a knot.

ġĭg'-gĭsh, a. [Gig (1), s.; -ish.] Giddy, inconstant, fickle, flighty.

"Our giggish heads have not the gift to observe a promise."—Rogers: Naaman the Syrian, p. 844.

ġĭg'-gle, s. [Giggle, v.] A kind of laugh with short catches of the voice or breath.

"So much alarmed, that she is quite alarming,
All giggle, blush; half pertness, and half pout."
Byron: Beppo, 39.

ġĭg'-gle, v.i. [An attenuated form of Mid. Eng. gagelen = to gaggle or make a noise like a goose (Skeat). Cf. O. Dut. ghichelen = to giggle; Ger. kichern.] To laugh lightly and idly; to titter; to laugh in a silly or affected manner.

"And Gaiety on restless tiptoe hovers, Giggling with all the gallants who beset her."
Byron: Beppo, 2.

ġĭg'-glĕr, s. [Eng. giggl(e); -er.] One who giggles or titters; one who laughs in a silly or affected manner.

"The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the tired beacon, frighteth from his ditties."
Herbert: Church Porch.

ġĭg'-glĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Giggle, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & participp. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive: The act or habit of tittering or laughing in an idle or affected manner.

ġĭg'-glў, a. [Eng. giggl(e); -y.] Giggling; loose or light in manner.

"Comport themselves in a manner giggly, missish, and disconcerting."—Colvin: Landor (1881), ch. v., p. 118.

ġī-gle, s. [Icel. gikkr = a pert person; cf. Gig (1), s.] The same as Giglet (q.v.).

"Gadrouillette. A minx, gigle, flirt, callet, gixie."—Cotgrave.

ġĭg'-lĕt, ġĭg'-lŏt, gig-lotte, s. & a. [A dimin. from Eng. gigle (q.v.).]

A. As subst.: A light, giddy girl; a wanton.

"What is the matter, foolish giglotte? what meanest thou? wherefore laughest thou?"—Udal: Flowers of Latine Speaking, fo. 104.

B. As adjective:

1. Loose or light in manners; wanton.

"To be the pillage of a giglet wench."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry VI., iv. 7.

2. Fickle, inconstant.

ġĭg'-lŏt-rў, s. [Eng. giglot; -ry.] The manners or character of a giglet; wantonness.

ġĭg'-nĭ-tĭve, a. [Lat. gigno = to beget, to bear; Eng. adj. suff. -ive.] Productive of something else.

"The first gignitive but not generated; the second and third both generated and gignitive; the fourth generated but not gignitive."—Southey: The Doctor, interchapter xv.

ġĭg'-ŏt, ġĭg'-gĕt, ġĭg'-gŏt, s. & a. [Fr. gigot, from O. Fr. gigue = a fiddle, the thigh, from the shape.]

A. As substantive:

1. A leg of mutton.

2. A piece, a fragment.

"The inwards slit,
They broild on coales, and eate. The rest, in giggots cut, they spit." Chapman: Homer; Iliad i.

B. As adj.: Shaped like a leg of mutton; as gigot sleeves.

gig-our, s. [O. Fr. gigueour; Icel. gígjari; M. H. Ger. gigœre; Ger. geiger.] A fiddler.

Gĭl'-ą mŏn'-stĕr, s. [Sp. pron. gi as hē.] A venomous, lizard-like reptile, from 18 to 20 inches in length, first found in Arizona in the vicinity of the Gila River. Its bite is speedily fatal in nearly every case.

Gĭl'-bĕr-tĭne, a. & s. [Named after their patron, Gilbert, lord of Sempringham in Lincolnshire, about A.D. 1148.]

A. As substantive:

Ch. Hist.: One of a monastic order which arose in England in the twelfth century. The monks observed the rule of St. Augustine; the nuns, that of St. Benedict.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the order described under A.

gĭl'-bĕrt-īte, s.

Min.: A whitish, silky mineral: its hardness 2·75; sp. gr. 2·65. Compos.: silica 45·15; alumina 40·11; protoxide of iron 2·43; magnesia 1·90; lime 4·17; and water 4·25. Apparently an impure kaolinite. Occurs near St. Austle in Cornwall. (Dana.) gĭld, gĭlde, gĭld-en, gyld, gyld-yn, v.t. [A.S. gyldan = to pay; Icel. gylla = to gild.]

I. Lit.: To wash over with gold; to overlay with gold either in leaf or powder; to coat with gold.

"The gilded coach, indeed, which is now annually admired by the crowd, was not yet a part of his state."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

II. Figuratively:

1. To give a golden colour or appearance to; to cause to shine or become bright like gold.

"And yet, what worth?—what good is given to men,
More solid than the gilded clouds of heaven?"
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. iii.

2. To make resplendent with bright colours.

"He cannot skim the ground like summer birds Pursuing gilded flies." Cowper: Task, vi. 922.

* 3. To brighten, to cheer; to give a bright, happy appearance or character to.

"Let oft good humour, mild and gay, Gild the calm evening of your day."
Trumbull: Advice to Ladies of a Certain Age.

* 4. To supply with gold; to make rich; to enrich.

"I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, ii. 6.

* 5. To give a fair outward appearance to; to make fair outwardly; to recommend or set off by superficial decoration.

"I'll gild it [the lie] with the happiest terms I have."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., v. 4.

* 6. To flush or make red with drinking; to make drunk.

"Find this grand liquor that hath gilded them."
Shakesp.: Tempest, v.

* 7. To redden, to besmear with blood.

"If he do bleed
I'll gild the faces of the grooms withall."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, ii. 2.

gĭld (1), s. [Guild.]

 gild-ale, s. A drinking bout in which each person pays an equal share.

 gild (2), s. [Etym. doubtful; prob. connected with Icel. gella=to yell.] Clamour; noise; uproar.

"The gild and riot Tyrrianis doubilt for joy; Syne the reird followit of the younkeris of Troy."
Douglas: Virgil, 37, 11.

 gild, a. [Sw.] Strong; well-grown.

"Ane gild oxe is apprised [in Orkney] to 15 meales, and ane wedder is four meales."—Skene: De Verb. Sign., s.v. Serplaith.

gĭld'-ĕr (1),  gyld-er, s. [Eng. gild; -er.] One who gilds or overlays anything with gold.

"No conning artificer, caruer, painter, nor gylder, with such other lyke of what occupacyon soeuer thei be or haue bene to thy comoditie, shal neuermore be found againe."—Bale: Image, pt iii.

 gĭld'-ĕr (2), s. [Guilder.] A coin, value 1s. 6d. (Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, iv. 1.)

gĭld'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Gild, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) The act, process, or art of overlaying with gold; or of applying gold in leaf, powder, or liquid, to surfaces of wood, metal, leather, paper, &c. Gilding is performed:—By laying on gold-leaf; by applying gold in amalgam, the mercury being subsequently evaporated; by electro-plating; by a sheet of metal soldered to the cheaper foundation metal; and by enamelling.

(2) Gold in leaf, powder, or liquid, applied to any surface.

2. Fig.: Any outward decoration or covering, designed to give a fair appearance to anything.

"Could laureate Dryden pimp and friar engage . . .
And I not strip the gilding off a knave?"
Pope: Satires, i. 115.

II. Photog.: The treatment of the finished daguerreotype-plate with a salt of gold—generally the hyposulphite of gold and soda—which determines the deposition of finely divided gold upon the vaporous mercurial deposit of which the picture consists. By this means permanence is imparted to the picture.

gilding-size, s. A viscid composition laid upon an object to hold a surface of gold-leaf. The bookbinder uses glaire, white of egg; the oil-gilder uses a mixture of linseed-oil and ochre.

¶ (1) Burnished gilding: Distemper gilding polished by burnisher; used especially in picture-frames.

(2) Chemical-gilding: Gilding produced by galvanic action in the bath, or by affinity.

(3) Cold-gilding: Effected by rubbing the annealed metal with gilding powder by means of a piece of cork dipped in salt water, and polishing with steel-burnisher.

(4) Distemper-gilding: Applied to wood, plaster, or marble, which is coated with size, successive coats of finely-powdered whiting, and faced by rubbing with sand-paper between each. Gold size is then applied, then the leaf, which is polished with an agate or dog's tooth.

(5) Electro-gilding: [Electro-plating].

(6) Friction-gilding: [Cold-gilding].

(7) German-gilding: The same as Electro-plating (q.v.).

(8) Immersion-gilding: Effected by dipping the metallic article into a solution of pyro-phosphate of soda in which terchloride of gold has been dissolved.

(9) Leaf-gilding: The process of coating the paper or vellum with gum-water or glaire, laying on the leaf-gold and polishing with an agate.

(10) Mechanical-gilding: The name given to any process in which the gold is made to adhere by glue.

 gīle, s. [Guile.]

 gīl'-ĕr-ў, s. [Gulery.]

gĭl'-hoōt-ĕr, s. [Eng. gill (4), and hooter.] A name sometimes given to the screech-owl. Chiefly in Cheshire.

gĭll (1),  gil, * gyll, gylle, s. [Dan. giælle; Sw. gal = a gill; Icel. gjolnar (pl.) = gills; Gael. gial = a jaw.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. In the same sense as II. 1.

"The leviathan . . . at his gills Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out, a sea."
Milton: P. L., vii. 415.

2. The flap that hangs below the beak of a fowl, as the wattles in a turkey.

"The turkey-cock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less."—Bacon: Natural History.

3. The flesh under or about the chin.

"In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills."—Bacon: Natural History.

II. Technically (Pl.):

1. Ichthy.: The branchiæ of fishes; a double row of long, compressed, slender-pointed processes, extending, like the teeth of a comb, from the convex side of a branchial arch, and supported by a delicate membrane. Gills may be free or fixed. In Myxinoids there are only gill-sacs. In some osseous fishes, certain of the branchial arches support only one series of processes, called uniserial or half-gills: in most cases they have biserial or whole gills. Gills, as a rule, are pectinated; there are also, however, plicated and tufted gills. The main purpose of the gills is to expose the venous blood, in a state of minute sub-division, to the influence of streams of water. (Owen: Comp. Anat. Vertebrate Animals, pt. i.; Fishes.)

2. Entom.: Hair or leaf-like processes projecting from the body of some aquatic insects, and containing one or more tracheæ, and their ramifications communicating with those of the body generally. Insects thus equipped do not need to rise to the surface of the water to breathe. (Griffith & Henfrey.)

3. Bot.: The lamellæ or parallel plates on the underpart of the pileus of an Agaricus. They constitute the hymenium in which the spores lie.

gill-arches, s. pl.

Ichthy.: The arches supporting the gills. They are generally five in number.

† gill-bar, s. One of the five branchial arches.

gill-cover, s.

Ichthy.: The same as Gill-lid (q.v.).

gill-flap, s.

Ichthy.: A membrane attached to the posterior edge of the gill-lid, immediately closing the gill-opening.

gill-lid, s.

Ichthy.: The lid or covering of the gills.

gill-net, s. A net suspended in a stream, having meshes which allow the heads of the fish to pass, and which catch in the gills to prevent the fish from detaching itself.

gill-opening, s.

Ichthy.: The opening by which the water from the gills passes off.

gill-sac, s.

Ichthy.: One of the rudimentary gills constituted by sacs, occurring in the Myxinoids and Lampreys. A gill of the ordinary fishes is the holobolous, not of a single gill-sac, but of the continuous halves of two of them. (Owen: Compar. Anat., pt. i.; Fishes.) gill (2), ghyll, * gille, gylle, s. [Icel. gil = a deep, narrow glen; geil = a ravine.] A fissure in a hill; a ravine with a river running through it; a brook, a ghyll, a gully.

"On one hand the ground gently rises into a hill, on the other are the rocky banks of the rivulet almost perpendicular. You may continue along the gill."—Gray: Letters to Dr. Warton, Sept. 14, 1765.

gill (3), s. [Fr. aiguille = a needle.]

Flax-dressing: A hackle; a series of points which divide the ribbons of flax fibre into finer parallel filaments ready for drawing and spinning; a porcupine.

gill-frame, gill-head, s.

Flax-dressing: A machine in which stricks of wax are drawn out into slivers; doubled and combined with other slivers, and redrawn until they assume the character of rovings, and are ready for spinning. A spreader. The name gill-frame is derived from a number of vertical needles forming a comb, through which the line passes to the drawing-roller; the gill is attached to a fuller-bar, which rises and falls at intervals, and alternately detains and releases the line, which, by a series of operations, is converted from a strick to a sliver, and then to a roving.

gĭll (4), s. [A shortened form of Gillian = Lat. Juliana.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A girl, a sweetheart, a lass. [Gillian.]

"Can nothing priuate haue Vncensurd of our seruants, though
The simplest gill or knaue."
Warner: Albions England, bk. vii. ch. xxxvii.

2. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.

II. Bot.: Ground-ivy, Nepeta Glechoma. It is also called Gill-creep-by-the-hedge.

gill-ale, s.

Bot.: Alehoof.

gill-flirt, s. A wanton girl, a flirt.

 gill-house, s. A house where gill is sold.

"Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gill-house mourn,
And answering gin-shops sourer sighs return."
Pope: Dunciad, iii. 147.

 gill-run-by-the-sheet, s.

Bot.: Saponaria officinalis.

gĭll (5),  gille, * gylle, s. [O. Fr. gelle = a measure for wine; cf. Low Lat. gillo, gella = a wine vessel, a measure; Ir. jale = a large bowl; Eng. gallon (q.v.).]

I. A measure of capacity, containing the fourth part of a pint. The standard gill now in use contains 8·665 cubic inches.

"In full gills his anxious thoughts he drowns,
And quafs away the care that waits on Crowns."
Addison: The Playhouse.

*2. A kind of measure among tin-miners, equal to a pint.

"They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint."—Carew: Survey of Cornwall.

gĭl'-lạr-ôe, s. [Irish (?).]

Ichthy.: A variety of the Common Trout, in which the coats of the stomach are said to be thickened like the gizzard of birds by feeding on shell-fish. It is found in Galway and some other parts of Ireland.

gĭl-lĕn'-ĭ-ạ, s. [Named by Mœnch after Dr. Arnold Gillen, a German botanist.]

Bot.: A genus of Rosaceæ, family Spiræidæ. The root of Gillenia trifoliata and that of G. stipulacea are emetic, and perhaps tonic. They are used in the United States as ipecacuanha.

gĭl'-lĕt, s. [A dimin. of gill (4), s.; cf. giglet.] A sportive or wanton girl or woman; a giglet.

Gĭl'-lĭ-ạn, s. [A softened form of Juliana, the female name corresponding to Lat. Julius.] A girl, a sweetheart; a wanton or loose girl.

gĭl'-lĭe, s. [Gael. gille = a boy, a gillie.] In the Highlands a man-servant, an out-door attendant; especially one who accompanies his master while hunting.

"And with the help of his gillies he gat him into the hills."—Scott: Waverley, ch. xviii.

gĭl-lĭēş'-ĭ-ạ, s. [Named after Dr. Gillies of Mendoza in Chili.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the small order Gilliesiaceæ (q.v.).

gĭl-lĭēş-ĭ-ā'-çē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gillies(i)a (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: Gilliesiads, an order of Exogens, alliance Liliales. It consists of small, herbaceous plants with tunicated bulbs. The leaves are grassy; the flowers, which are inconspicuous, are umbellate, surrounded by bracts, the outer petaloid and herbaceous, the inner coloured; perianth minute; stamens six, three sometimes sterile; ovary superior, three-celled; style one, stigma simple; capsule three-celled, three-valved, many-seeded. They occur in Chili. In 1844 Lindley enumerated two genera, and estimated the known species at five.

gĭl-lĭēş'-ĭ-ads, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gillesi(a) (q.v.), and Eng. pl. suff. -ads.]

Bot.: The English name given by Lindley to the order Gilliesia (q.v.).

gĭl'-lĭng-ite, s. [From Gillinge-Grube in Sodermanland, Sweden, where it occurs.]

Min.: A black, amorphous, often compact mineral; its hardness 3, sp. gr. 3·04. Compos.: silica, 27·50 to 32·18; alumina, 0 to 5·50; sesquioxide of iron, 0 to 37·49; water, 11·75 to 20. &c. A variety of it is called Thraulite (q.v.). (Dana.) gĭl'-lў-flŏw-ĕr, gĭl'-lĭ-flŏw-ĕr, * jer-e-flour, * gil-lo-fre, * gil-lo-fer, * gil-o-ver, * gi-ro-fer, s. [Fr. giroflée, from Fr. & Prov. girofle = clove; Sp. girofle, girofre; Port. goivo; Ital. gerofano; Lat. caryophyllum, from Gr. καρυόφυλλον (karuophullon) = the clove tree: κάρυον (karuon) = a nut, and φύλλον (phullon) = a leaf.]

Pomol.: A popular variety of apple, in some localities termed "sheepnose."

Botany:

I. Spec.: Matthiola incana, Stock, or more fully, Stock Gillyflower. [Stock.]

"Bring hither the pinke and purple cullambine With gilliflowers."
Spenser: Shepheards Calender; Aprill.

2. The genus Matthiola.

¶ Clove Gillyflower is Dianthus Caryophyllus; Marsh Gillyflower, Lychnis Flosculi; Queen's Rogue'a or Winter Gillyflower, Hesperis matronalis; Sea Gillyflower, Armeria vulgaris; Wall Gillyflower and Yellow Gillyflower, Cheiranthus Cheiri; Single Gillyflower, Dianthus plumarius; Turkey Gillyflower, Tagetes erecta; Water Gillyflower, Hottonia palustris; Winter Gillyflower, Cheiranthus Cheiri or Hesperis matronalis; and Gillyflower-grass, the same as Carnation-grass (q.v.).

 gĭl'-oŭr, * gil-er, * gil-oure, * gil-owre, * gyl-or, * gyl-our, * gyl-ur, s. [O. Fr. guiliere, guileor.] [Guile.] A deceiver; a traitor; a false, treacherous person.

"A gylour schal himself beggiled be."
Chaucer: C. T., 4,812.

gĭl'-oŭs, * gil-ouse, * gy-leus, a. [Mid. Eng. gile = guile, suff. -ous.] Treacherous, false, deceitful.

"Veyn fellace or gilous falshede."—Wycliffe: Colossians ii. 8.

gĭl'-pў, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A frolicsome young person, male or female. (Scotch.) gĭl-răv'-age (age as ĭj), gil-raiv-itch, * gal-rav-itch, v.i. [Etym. of first element doubtful; prob. either Scotch gillie (q.v.) or Fr. gueule = the throat; and Eng. ravage.]

1. To hold a merry meeting with noise and riot.

2. To plunder, to pillage, to spoil; to commit depredations.

"Ye had better stick to your auld trade o' theft-boot, black-mail, spreaghs, and gillravaging—better stealing nowte than ruining nations."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxiii.

gĭl-răv'-age (age as ĭj), gil-rai-vitch, s. [Gilravage, v.]

I. A noisy frolic in merrymaking, among young people.

"Muckle din an' loud gilraivitch was amang them, gaffawan an' lauchan."—Edin. Mag., Sept., 1818, p. 155.

2. Disorder, confusion.

gĭl-răv'-ag-ĕr, (ag as ĭj) gil-rav-ach-er, s. [Eng. gilravag(e); -er.]

1. A noisy, riotous fellow; a rake.

2. A robber, a depredator, a plunderer.

"'And wha's this?' he continued, 'Some gillravager that ye hae listed, I dare say. He looks as if he had a bauld heart to the highway, and a lang craig for the gibbet.'"—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxiii.

 gĭl'-rў, * gil-rye, s. [O. Fr. gillerie.] Treachery, deceit, fraud.

"For thi gaudes and thi gilry I gif this dome."
Seven Sages, 3,96.

 gĭlse, s. [Grilse.]

gĭlt, pret., pa. par., a. & s. [Gild.]

A. & C. As pret., pa. par., & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

D. As substantive:

I. Gold laid over the surface of anything; gilding.

"Redeem from broking pawn the blemished crown, Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt,
And make high majesty look like itself."
Shakesp.: Richard II., ii. 1.

* 2. Money; gold.

"These corrupted men . . .
Have for the gilt of France (O guilt indeed), Confirmed conspiracy with fearful France."
Shakesp.: Henry V., ii. (Chorus.)

3. Fair or grand show.

"When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee."—Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

* gilt (1), s. [Guilt, s.] gilt-ed ed, a. Having the edges gilded, like the once-fashionable note-paper; hence (U. S.) very good, excellent; as gilt-edged securities.

gilt'-hēad, * guilt'-hēad, s. [Eng. gilt, guilt, and head.]

* 1. Ornith.: An unidentified bird.

2. Ichthyology:

(1) A fish, Chrysophrys aurata (having golden coloured eyebrows), whence its English name. The back is silvery grey shaded with blue, the belly polished steel-blue, with golden bands along the sides. Length, a foot or less. Abundant in the Mediterranean, whence it extends in one direction to the shores of Britain, in the other to the Cape of Good Hope. It is of the family Chætodontidæ. [Chrysophrya.]

"Of these wee saw comming out of Guinea a hundred in company, which being chased by the gilt-heads, otherwise called the bonites, doe to auoid them the better, take their flight out of the water."—Hackluyt: Voyages, iii. 520.

(2) A fish, Crenilabrus melops or tinca; called also the Connor, or Golden Maid. Its upper parts are striped with red and green; the lower parts green with red spots. Length, six inches. Found along the British coasts. It is of the family Labridæ. [Crenilabrus.]

* gilt-if, * gilt-ife, * gult-if, a. [Mid. Eng. gilt = guilt; auff. -if = -ive.] Guilty.

"Who that giltif is, all quyte goth he."
Chaucer: Troilus & Cressida, iii. 970.

ģim, a. [An abbreviation of gimp (q.v.).] Neat; spruce; well-dressed.

"The payntit powne paysand with plumys gym, Kest vp his tele ane proud plesand quhile rym."
Douglas: Virgil, 402, 1.

gim-pig, s. A rest for the arm of a lapidary, consisting of a rod of iron bent into a cranked form.

gĭm'-bal, gĭm'-bŏl, gĭm'-ble, s. [Lat. gemellus = twin, double.] A form of universal joint for securing free motion in suspension, or for suspending anything, as a lamp, a compass, a chronometer, &c., so that it may always retain a certain position, or be in equilibrium. It generally consists of a pair of interlocked rings or hoops, moving the one within the other, and each perpendicularly to its plane, about two axes, at right angles to each other.

GIMBAL, WITH COMPASS.

gimbal-joint, s. A two-part joint, having articulations or axes at right angles to each other. It is used as a shaft-coupling in the tumbling-rods of horse-gear, in drilling and sheep-shearing machines, and elsewhere.

gimbal-ring, s. A single gimbal by which the cock-eye of the upper millstone is supported on the spindle to permit vibration; a rynd.

gĭmb'-lĕt, s. [Gimlet.]

ģim'-crăck, * gin-crack, s. & a. [Prob. from Prov. Eng. gim = spruce, and crack = a lively boy.]

A. As substantive:

* 1. A spruce, pert boy; a dandy; a coxcomb.

"These are fine gimcracks: hey, here comes another. A flagon full of wine in his hand I take it."
Beaum. & Fletch.: Loyal Subject, iv. 3.

2. A trivial, worthless, though showy piece of mechanism; a pretty but useless toy.

"Rifled all his pokes and fobs Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs."
Butler: Hudibras, pt. iii., c. 1.

B. As adj.: Showy but worthless.

gĭmlet-eye, s. A squint-eye.

gĭm'-lĕt, gĭmb'-lĕt, v.t. [Gimlet, s.]

1. Ord. Lang.: To use or apply a gimlet to; to form in by using a gimlet.

2. Naut.: To turn round, as an anchor, by the stock, that is with a motion, like the turning of a gimlet.

gĭm'-mal, s. & a. [Lat. gemellus = twin.] [Gimbal.]

A. As substantive:

1. A pair or series of interlocked rings, as of a bit; a gimbal.

* 2. A quaint piece of mechanism; a gim-crack.

"I thlnk by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry VI., i. 2.

B. As adj.: Consisting of a series of interlocked rings or links.

gimmal-bit, s. The double-bit of a bridle.

"In their pale dull mouths the gimmal-bit Lies foul with chewed grass."
Shakesp.: Henry V., iv. 2.

gĭm'-mĕr (1), s. [A lightened form of cummer (q.v.).] An old woman. (Usually employed in a contemptuous sense.) (Scotch.)

* gĭm'-mĕr (2), s. [Gimmal.] A piece of mechanism; a mechanical device.

"I saw my precious watch taken asunder, and laying scattered upon the workman's shop board; so as here lay a wheel, there the balance, here one gimmer, there another."—Bp. Hall: Works, iii. 702.

gĭm'-mĕr, * gymb-ure, * gym-byre, s. [O. Icel. gimbr, gymbr; Dan. gimmar.] A ewe from one to two years old. (Scotch.)

"The lad, for twa guid gimmer pets,
Was laird himsel'."
Burns: Death & Doctor Hornbook.

gĭmp, s. [Fr. guimpe = a nun's wimple: prob. confused with Fr. guipure = a thread of silk lace (Skeat); cf. Ger. gimf, gimpf = a loop, lace, or edging of silk.]

Fabric: Silk twist interlaced with wire or a coarse cord. It is now principally used in upholstery, though it has at times been fashionable for trimming wearing apparel. The term is also used in pillow-lace making, signifying a thread thicker than ordinary, round which others are twined or woven.

"Unmoved by tongue and sights, he walked the place, Through tape, toys, tinsel, gimp, perfume, and lace."
Parnell: Elegy to an Old Beauty.

gimp-machine, s. A narrow-ware loom constructed so as to catch the woof and form loops or patterns, the gimp cords of various sizes being carried by independent shuttles or needles.

gimp-nail, s. A small forged nail with a rounded head, used by upholsterers.

gĭmp, * gymp, a. & s. [Wel. gwymp = neat, pretty.]

A. As adjective:

1. Neat, spruce, comely.

"Now with gymp fingers doing stringis smyte,
And now with subtell euore poyntalis lyte."
Douglas: Virgil, 187, 37.

2. Slim, delicate, slender, scant; short in measure or weight.

* B. As substantive:

1. A witty jest.

"Tharfor, gude freyndis, for aue gympe or ane bourd,
I pray you note me not at euery worde."
Douglas: Virgil, 5, 19.

2. A quirk, a subtlety.

"O man of law! lat be thy sutelte,
With wys jympis, and frawdis interkast."
Henrysone: Bannatyne Poems, p. 120, 18.

gĭmp, v.t. [Gimp (1), s.] To jag, to indent, to denticulate.

* gĭmp'-ĭng, s. [Eng. gimp, s.; -ing.] Trimming with gimp.

"Ornament it well with ginping, Flounces, furbelows, and crimping."
Fawkes: Odes of Anacreon, xxviii.

* gĭm'-ple, s. [Wimple.]

ģĭn (1), s. [O. Fr. genevre = juniper: Lat. juniperus, from the spirit being flavoured with berries of the juniper.]

Comm.: A compounded spirit, prepared either by re-distilling plain spirit with juniper berries, coriander seeds, angelica root, &c., or by adding various essential oils to rectified spirit. The gin produced by distilling possesses a much more delicate flavor than that produced by mixing or compounding. The strength of gin varies from proof to 50 under proof. Gin is largely manufactured from rye-meal and malt in Holland, where the spirit is flavored by juniper berries. The chief place of manufacture is at Scheidam; whence it is often called Scheidam, and also Hollands. It is largely exported to the United States. Gin is reduced with water, and sweetened with sugar or syrup, but none of the injurious substances, said to have been used in former times are now found even in low-class gins. Cordial gin is sweetened gin flavored with certain spices. Orange gin possesses the flavour of orange peel. Sloe gin is prepared by steeping sloes in strong gin for some weeks, then filtering and reducing with water.

"Ingenuity is exhausted in devising attractive titles for the different descriptions of gin."—Dickens: Sketches by Boz; Gin-shops.

gin-house (1), s. A place where gin is sold; a gin-palace.

gin-mill, s. A low drinking place. (U.S. Slang.) gin-palace, s. A gaily decorated public-house, usually in a low neighbourhood; one in which spirits are the staple articles of consumption.

"If temperance societies could suggest an antidote against hunger or distress, or establish dispensaries for the gratuitous distribution of Lethe-water, gin-palaces would be numbered among the things that were."—Dickens: Sketches by Boz; Gin-shops.

gin-shop, s. The same as Gin-palace (q.v.).

"Death, at unawares, might duck him Deeper than the grave, and quench
The gin-shop's light in hell's grim drench."
R. Browning: Christmas Eve, iii.

gin-sling, s. A cold drink, composed of gin, soda-water, lemon, and sugar.

ģin (2), * ginne (1), * gyn (1), * gynne (1), s. [A contraction of Fr. engin, from Lat. ingenium = a contrivance.] [Engine.]

* I. Ordinary Language:

1. A mechanical contrivance or engine; a machine.

"[They] granteu to lend to the seid John Wastell eum parte of old scaffoldyng, tymbre, and the use of certayne stuff, and necessaryes there, as gynnes, wels, cables, &c."—Walpole: Anecdotes, i.; App. Indenture, 4 Henry VIII.

2. An engine of torture.

"Typhæus ioynts were streached on a gin.
Theseus condemned to endless slouth by law;
And fifty sisters water in leke vessels draw."
Spenser: F. Q., I. v. 38.

3. Mechanism; mechanical arrangement.

"Bid him descend, and trill another pin
(For therin lieth the effect of all the gin),
And he wol doun descend, and don your will."
Chaucer: C. T., 10,636.

II. Machinery:

1. A portable hoisting-machine whose frame is a tripod, one leg being movable so as to vary its angle of elevation, and thus determine the height of the apex; the other two legs preserve their relative distance, and form standards for the drum, round which the rope is wound by power applied to the handspikes. For heavy weights a fall and tackle is used; and for hoisting a bucket from a well or mine, simply a couple of pulleys to change the direction of motion of the rope. One pulley is suspended from the apex, and the other attached between the two permanent legs, so as to change the rope to a horizontal position, for the attachment of a draught horse.

2. A pump operated by windmill.

"No gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry."—Ray: The Creation, ii.

3. A coal-hoisting machine; a whim.

4. A machine for separating cotton-fibre from the seeds.

gin-block, s. A tackle-block with a hook to swing from the gib of a crane or from the sheer of a gin.

gin-horse, s. A mill-horse; a horse employed in working a gin.

gin-house (2), s. A house or building where cotton is ginned.

gin-race, s.

Mining: A miner's term for the horse-track of a whim or hoisting apparatus.

gin ring, s. The ring or circle in which a horse moves in working a gin.

gin-saw, s. A saw used in a cotton-gin for drawing the fibres through the grid, leaving the seed in the hopper.

gin-wheel, s.

1. A wheel in a cotton-gin. It may mean a wheel with curved pointed teeth or claws, which act as the teeth of the usual saws in drawing the fibre through the grid; or the brush-wheel, which cleans the lint from the said wheel or saw.

2. The wheel or drum of a whim.

ġĭn (3), * ginne (2), * gyn (2), * gynne (2), s. [Icel. ginna = to dupe, to deceive. (Skeat).] A trap, a snare, to catch animals and birds.

"Forbear, forbear, thy vain amusements cease, Thy woodcocks from their gins awhile release."
Garth: Dispensary, ii. 165.

* gin (4), * gyn, s. [A.S. gin.] A chasm, a gap.

"And thus his spreith he had vnto his in,
And with ane quhine stane closit has the gyn."
Douglas: Virgil, 248, 25.

ġin (1), v.t. [Gin (2), s.] To clean cotton of the seeds by means of a gin.

"It pays him better to sell his cotton in Fiji unginned at threepence halfpenny per lb. than to send it home ginned."—Times, April 15, 1874.

ġin (2), v.t. [Gin (3), s.] To catch in a snare or trap; to snare.

"So, so, the woodcock's ginned." Beaum. & Flet.: Passionate Madman, iii. 1.

* gin (3), * ginne, * ginn-en, * gyn, * gynne (pa. t. † gan, * gon, * gun), v.t. & i. [A.S. ginnan, found in the compounds onginnan, be-ginnan = to begin; cogn. with Dut. beginnen; O. H. Ger. beginnan; Ger. beginnen; Goth. duginnan = to begin.] [Gan.]

A. Trans.: To begin.

"This lessoun thus I ginne."
William of Palerne, 1,929.

B. Intrans.: To begin.

"Into hyr bedde the boy gan crepe."
Octovian, 176.

¶ Obsolete now except in poetry.

gin, conj. & prep. [A contr. of gif and = if and; or a corruption of given (?).] [Gif.]

A. As conj.: If.

"We'll lose the place gin there's ony mair complaints o' the kind."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xv.

B. As prep.: By, before, or against a certain time.

"Gin night we came unto a gentle place,
And as he promised sae I fand the case."
Ross: Helenore, p. 88.

* gi-nete, s. [Genet.]

* ġĭn'-fŭl, * gyn-ful, a. [Eng. gin (3), s.; -full.] Deceitful, treacherous, false.

"So gynful of speche." P. Plowman, 6,029.

* gĭng, s. [Gang, s.] A gang, a body, a crowd.

"Sure he has got
Some bawdy pictures, to call all this ging." Ben Jonson: Alchymist, v. 1.

ġĭn'-gal, s. [A native word.] An East Indian breech-loading fire-arm, carrying a ball from four to eight ounces. It is fired from a rest. [Jingal.]

ġĭn'-ġĕl-ly, ġĭn'-ġŭl-ie, s. [An East Indian word.] For def. see compound.

gingelly, or gingillie oil, s. The oil of Sesamum orientale.

ġĭn-ġĕr, * gin-giuere, * gyn-gyre, * gin-giv-er, * gin-gib-er, * zim-bip-er-i, zin-gi-ber-i, s. & a. [Fr. gingembre; Prov. gingebre, gingibre, gingiebre; Sp. gengibre; Port. gengivre; Ital. zenzero, zenzevero, zenzovero; Lat. zinziberis, from Gr. ζιγγίβερις (zinggiberis) = an Arabian spice plant, the root of which was used in medicine: probably ginger, Sans. sringa-vera = antler-shaped, referring to the resemblance of the root to the horn of some ruminant animals.]

A. As substantive:

1. Botany:

(1) Zingiber officinale, Common or Narrow-leaved Ginger. It has subsessile linear lanceolate smooth leaves, oblong spikes, acute bracts, and a three-lobed lip. It is a native of India, but is cultivated in most tropical countries.

(2) The genus Zingiber. There is a Broad-leaved Ginger, Zingiber Zerumbet, also a native of India. It is used externally for cataplasms and fermentations but is not eaten.

(3) Sedum acre, from its extreme pungency.

2. Comm.: The dry wrinkled rhizomes of the ginger-plant. The pieces, or as they are called races, are usually from two to four inches long, branched, flat, and of a pale buff colour. Ginger is known in commerce under two forms, coated and uncoated or scraped, the latter having been deprived of its epidermis when in the green state, and sold as white ginger. The chief varieties imported into this country are Jamaica, Cochin, Bengal, Japan, and African. The first three are scraped gingers, and of these Jamaica is the most esteemed owing to its colour and flavour. Some kinds of ginger are bleached with chloride of lime, whilst others are simply coated with chalk to give them a whiter appearance. Ginger is an agreeable aromatic, and a valuable stomachic; but is more largely used as a condiment than as a medicine. Preserved ginger, so largely exported from the Chinese Empire in jars, consists of the young rhizomes boiled in syrup. Ground ginger is frequently adulterated, the chief adulterants being sago flour, wheat flour, ground rice, and arrowroot. These are added, not only to increase the weight, but to whiten a dark-coloured variety, which is then sold as a first-class ginger. All these substances can be readily detected by the microscope.

Ginger-plant.

3. Pharm.: Ginger is the rhizome scraped and dried of Zingiber officinale, a native of East India; also grown in the West Indies. Ginger contains a volatile oil, starch, resinous matter, gum, woody fibre, &c. It is an aromatic stimulant and carminative, and is given in dyspepsia and with purgative medicines to prevent griping. It is used to prepare Syrupus Zingiberis, Syrup of Ginger, and Tinctura Zingiberis, Tincture of Ginger.

¶ Amada, or Mango Ginger, is Curcuma Amada; Egyptian Ginger, Colocasia esculenta; Indian, or Wild Ginger, Asarum canadense; and Wood-ginge an old book-name for Anemone ranunculoides. (Treas. of Bot.)

B. As adj.: Made from, or in any other way pertaining or relating to it. (See the compounds.)

ginger-ale, s. A temperance beverage, prepared by dissolving sugar in water, flavouring with ginger or essence of ginger, and colouring with a solution of caramel. Each bottle is then aerated with carbonic-acid gas, and securely corked. Ginger-ale is a true non-intoxicating drink, the only spirit which can possibly be present being a mere trace from the essence of ginger used.

ginger-beer, s. A popular effervescing beverage prepared from a mixture of ginger, white sugar, and water, the whole being subjected to fermentation by the addition of a little yeast. The amount of proof-spirit present in ginger-beer varies from one to five per cent., whilst the gravity varies from 1012° to 1026°.

ginger-brandy, s. A cordial prepared by steeping bruised ginger in brandy for two or three weeks, and sweetening with sugar. It contains from thirty to forty per cent. of proof spirit.

ginger-cordial, s. An unfermented beverage, prepared by simply adding essence of ginger to plain spirit, and sweetening with sugar or syrup. It contains from ten to eighteen per cent. of proof-spirit.

ginger-grass, s.

Bot.: A grass, Anatherium Nardus, indigenous to India, in parts of which the native name is Koshel.

ginger-plant, s.

Bot.: Tanacetum vulgare.

ginger-pop, s. The same as Ginger-beer (q.v.). (Colloq.) ginger-wine, s. A popular British wine, made by the fermentation of sugar, water, and bruised ginger. It contains from twenty to twenty-four per cent. of proof-spirit.

ġĭn'-ġĕr-ād̆e, s. [Eng. ginger, with suff. -ade, formed on the analogy of lemonade.] A strong sugar syrup flavoured with essence of ginger. It is used in the manufacturing districts for mixing with gin.

ġĭn'-ġĕr-brĕad, s. [Eng. ginger, and bread.] A well-known dark-coloured bread made from wheat flour, treacle, moist sugar, ground ginger, and other spices. It is sold in the form of square thick cakes.

"An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread."—Shakesp.; Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1.

gingerbread-nuts, s. pl. Small button-like cakes of gingerbread.

gingerbread-tree, gingerbread-plum, s.

Botany:

1. Parinarium macrophyllum, one of the Chrysobalanaceæ.

2. The name given in Egypt to a palm, Hyphæne thebaica, its mealy rind resembling gingerbread.

gingerbread-work, s.

Arch.: Ornamental work cut or carved in fanciful shapes, as an ornament to buildings.

ġĭn'-ġĕr-wŏrţ, s. pl. [Eng. ginger, and pl worts.]

Bot.: The name given by Lindley to the order Zingiberaceæ (q.v.).

ġĭn'-ġĕr-ly, adv. & a. [Etym. doubtful. According to Skeat, from Sw. dial. gingla, gångla = to go gently: hence = with tottering steps. According to others, from an O. Eng. gingralic = like a young person, from A.S. gingra = a young person.]

A. As adv.: In a delicate, fastidious, or nice manner; daintily, fastidiously.

"Has it a corn? or do's it walk on conscience,
It treads so gingerly!"
Beaum. & Flet.: Love's Cure, ii. 2.

* B. As adj.: Delicate, dainty, fastidious.

"We stayghe and prolonge our goyng, with a nyce or tendre and softe, delicate, or gyngerly pace."—Udal: Flowres for Latine Speaking, fo. 96.

* ġĭn'-ġĕr-nĕss, s. [Eng. ginger; -ness.] Delicacy, niceness, daintiness, fastidiousness.

"Their gingerness in tripping on toes like young goats."—Stubbes: Anatomy of Abuses, p. 42.

* ġĭn'-ġĕr-oŭs, a. [Eng. ginger (q.v.); -ous.] Of the colour of ginger; pale yellow.

"Mr. Lammle takes his gingerous whiskers in his left hand, and bringing them together frowns furtively at his beloved out of a thick gingerous hush."—Dickens: Our Mutual Friend, ch. x.

ġĭng'-ham, s. & a. [Fr. guingan, from Guingamp, a town in Brittany, where the stuff is made.]

A. As substantive:

Fabric:

1. A kind of linen or cotton fabric, coloured in the thread.

2. A common umbrella, as made of such stuff. (Slang.)

B. As adj.: Made of the stuff described in A.

* ġĭn'-ġĭ-bĕr, s. [Zinziber.]

ġĭng'-ĭng, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Mining: The lining of a shaft with bricks or masonry; called also steining or staining.

* ġĭn-gī'-val, a. & s. [Lat. gingiva = the gum.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to the gums.

"Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between d and t, so as to sweeten it, they make the occluse appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do."—Holder: Elements of Speech.

B. As subst.: A letter so named from the manner in which it is uttered.

"Gingivals, in uttering which the tongue is pressed against the gums."—Wright: Grammar of the Arabic Language, i. 4.

* gĭn'-gle, v.i. & t. [JINGLE, v.]

* gingle-boy, s. A coin.

"The sign of the gingle-boys hangs at the door of our pockets."—Massinger: Virgin Martyr, ii. 2.

* gĭn'-gle, s. [JINGLE, s.]

* gĭn'-gleş, s. [See def.] A corruption of Shingles (q.v.). So called because it sometimes encircles the person affected like a girdle. (Lat. cingula.)

"The gingles or St. Anthony his fire."—Fuller: Ch. Hist., IX. i. 60.

gĭn'-glĭ-mōid, a. [Lat. ginglymus (q.v.); Gr. εἶδος (eidos) = form.]

Anat.: Of, belonging to, or resembling a ginglymus (q.v.).

gĭn'-glĭ-mŭs, s. [Lat., from Gr. γίγγλυμος, and γιγγλμος (gingglumos) = a ball and socket joint.]

Anat.: A hinge joint, one which admits only of flexion and extension, as the elbow, the knee, and the ankle joints.

gĭn'-gō, gĭnk'-gō, s. [Japanese.]

Bot.: A tree, Salisburia adiantifolia.

gĭnn, gĭn'-neĕ, s. [JINN, JINNEE.]

* ginne, v.t. & i. [GIN, v.]

* gĭn'-nĕr, s. [GINNLE, s.]

* gĭn'-nĕt, s. [GENET.]

gĭn'-nĭng (1), pr. par., a., & s. [GIN (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or process of cleaning cotton by means of a gin.

* gĭn'-nĭng (2), * gin-ninge, * gyn-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [GIN (2), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of beginning; a beginning.

gin-nle, gin-ner, s. [A dimin. from Icel. gin = the mouth; A.S. gin = a chasm, an opening.] The gill of a fish.

"A ginner of ye fyschе; branchia."—Cathol. Anglicum.

gin-nle, gin-le, v.t. [GINNLE, s.] To fish with the hands, by groping under banks and stones, as in tickling trout.

"Ye took me aiblins for a black-fisher it was gaun to ginle the chouks o' ye."—Saint Patrick, iii. 42.

gĭn'-nў, s. [Prob. a dimin. corrupt. of gin = engine.] (For def. see etym. and compound.)

ginny-carriage, s. A railway car for conveying materials.

* gin-our, * gyn-our, s. [O. Fr. engigneor, engineur.] An engineer; one who worked a military engine.

"The gynours sond and stones caste."
Richard Cœur de Lion, 2,913.

gĭn'-sĕng, gĭn'-sçhĕn, s. [Chinese ginsen, said by Grosser to be = that which resembles a man or a man's thigh; or from gen-seng = first of plants.]

I. Phar.: The root of Panax Ginseng. It has a sharp, aromatic, peculiar taste, and is prescribed by the Chinese in diseases attended by bodily weakness. Some think its virtues imaginary.

2. The plant of which No. 1 is the root. It belongs to the Araliaceæ (Ivyworts).

gĭ-ō-bĕr'-tīte, s. [Named after Giobert, who analyzed it.]

Min.: A variety of Magnesite (Dana). A variety of Dolomite (Brit. Mus. Cat.).

giō-cō'-şō, adv. [Ital.]

Mus.: In a playful, sportive manner.

* giour, * gyour, s. [Hind. gie, gy = guide; suff. -our.] A guide. (Trevisa, i. 349.)

* gĭp, v.t. [Etym. doubtful.] To take out the insides of herrings. (Bailey.)

* gĭp'-çĭ-cre, s. [GIPSER.]

* gipe, * gype, s. [O. Fr. gipe, jupe; Ger. joppe; Fr. jupe.] An upper frock or cassock.

"Both revelyng as a gype" Romaunt of the Rose, 7,262.

* gĭp'-ŏn, * ge-poun, * gy-pun, s. [O.Fr. gippon, juppon; Ital. giubbone; Sp. jubon; Fr. jupon.] [JUPON.] A tight-fitting coat or vest; a short cassock.

"With nought to fence his dauntless breast
But the close gipon's under-vest."
Scott: Bridal of Triermain, iii. 18.

* gĭp'-sĕr, * gip-sire, * gyp-cer, * gip-cĭ-ere, s. [Fr. gibecière = a game-bag; gibier = game.] A purse, a pouch; formerly worn attached to the girdle.

"An anelace and a gipciere all of silk, Heng at his girdel, white as morwe milk."
Chaucer: C. T., 359.

* gĭp'-soŭs, a. [GYPSUM.] Clayey.

"Out of gipsous or plaisterly ground" — Fuller: Camb. University, vii. 36.

gĭp'-sў, gўp'-sў, * gip-sen, s. & a. [A corruption of Mid. Eng. Egypcien = Egyptian; Fr. Egyptian; from Low Lat. Ægyptianus, from Ægyptius = an Egyptian; Gr. Αἰγύπτιος (Aigyptios), from Αἴγυπτος (Aigyptos) = Egypt. So called from its being popularly supposed that they came from Egypt, but their real home was India. By the Germans they were called Zigeuner; Dut. Heidenen (= Heathens); Dan. & Sw. Tatars; Ital. Zingari; Sp. Gitanos and Zincali; Fr. Bohémiens; Pers. Sisech; Hind. Karachee; and by themselves Rom (= man).]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II. 1.

(2) The language spoken by the gipsies.

2. Figuratively:

(1) A person of a dark complexion; used in contempt or reproach.

"Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy."—Shakesp.: Romeo & Juliet, ii. 4.

(2) A cunning or crafty person; a person of bad character; a sly person.

"A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her power and flies."
Prior: Dutch Proverb.

II. Technically:

1. Ethnol.: A nomad Eastern race, the members of which came to Europe by way of the Isthmus of Suez and Egypt. They were, therefore, assumed to be Egyptians, and are so called in the Elizabethan legislation against them, and in other places. As Egypt became better known to the English, it was found that the "Egyptians" were as much foreigners there as here. It is now proved that they are from India, and apparently from that part of it adjacent to the river Indus, with the languages of some tribes inhabiting the banks of which their tongue best agrees. A tribe near the mouth of the Indus are called Tchinganes, which is almost exactly the same as Tchingenes, by which name these wanderers are known in Turkey and the Levant. They call themselves Sind, the name of the country through which the Indus flows in the lower part of its course. They are believed to have quitted their native country in dread of Timur Beg, better known as Timoor the Tartar, or Tamerlane, and first appeared in Paris, in the end of August, 1427.

2. Entom.: A moth, Hypogymna dispar, of the tribe Bombycina and the family Liparidæ. The male is dark-brown, and the female greyish-white.

B. As adj.: Of or pertaining to a gipsy or gipsies; resembling a gipsy.

"The frock and gipsy bonnet."
Tennyson: Maud, I. xx. 19.

gipsy-hat, * gypsy-hat, s. A hat with large side flaps worn by women.

gipsy-moth, gypsy-moth, s.

Entom.: The same as GIPSY, A. II. 2 (q.v.).

gipsy-winch, s.

Mach.: A small winch, having a drum, ratchet, and pawl; it may be fastened to a post. The handle of the winch is attached by stirrups to a cap revolving on the axis. Two motions can be applied to the winch, the ordinary rotary method of working the handle, and a reciprocating motion, in which the handle is worked up and down like a pump-handle.

gip-sў, gўp'-sў, v.i. [GIPSY, s.] To picnic or camp out in the woods.

gĭp'-sў-işm, gўp'-sў-işm, s. [Eng. gipsy, ism.]

1. The habits, practices, acts, or arts of gipsies; cheating, deception.

2. The state or condition of a gipsy.

gĭp'-sў-lĭke, gўp'-sў-lĭke, a. [Eng. gipsy, gypsy; like.] Like a gipsy or gipsies; resembling gipsies.

"The heath was fringed by a wild gipsylike camp of vast extent."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxi.

gĭp'-sў-wŏrt, gўp'-sў-wŏrt, s. [Eng. gypsy, gipsy, and wort.]

Botany:

1. Lycopus europæus. It is a labiate plant, dense whorls of flowers, white, with purple dots; hairy within, and having two stamens and leaves deeply and irregularly pinnatifid or serrate. It is about two feet high, and grows in England, &c., in ditches and by river banks.

2. The genus Lycopus.

gĭ-raffc', * gĭ-răf'-fa, s. [Fr. girafe; Sp. & Port. girafa; Ital. giraffa, from Arab. zurafa.]

1. Zool.: The Camelopard, Camelopardalis giraffa. It constitutes the type of the family Camelopardalidæ (q.v.). It has an affinity to the camel; but its resemblance to the leopard, which is only in its colour and spots, is an analogy and no more. It has two small frontal horns and one central horn. The neck is very long, but has only the normal number of cervical vertebræ. The tongue is long and prehensile, and is used for stripping leaves off trees. The forelegs are very long, making the animal stand 15 to 18 feet high. It lives in small herds, and gallops in a ludicrously clumsy manner. The animal is inoffensive when unmolested, but will try to kick its assailant if it be attacked. Its flesh is good; when old it becomes coarse; the hide makes excellent leather. It is found in Nubia, Abyssinia, and the Cape of Good Hope; probably also in every part of the intermediate region.

2. Palæont.: Species of giraffe have been found in Miocene strata in India, Greece, and France.

gĭ-răff-ĭ'-na, s. pl. [Eng., &c. giraff(e), and Lat. pl. adj. suff. -ina.]

Zool.: A tribe of ruminant mammals, sometimes constituted for the reception of the family Camelopardalidæ, with which it agrees in extent.

gĭr'-an-dōle, s. [Fr.; Ital. girandola, from girare = to turn about; Lat. gyrus = a turn.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A branching candle-holder or chandelier; a gaselier.

"Girandoles of silver and mother-of-pearl."—Lytton. (Latham.)

2. Pyrot.: A kind of revolving firework; a revolving sun.

* gĭr'-ant, a. [Lat. gyrans, pr. par. of gyro = to turn round in a circle.] Whirling, revolving.

"I wound in girant orbits, smooth and white."
E. B. Browning.

gĭr-ar-dĭn'-ĭ-a, s. [Named by Gandichand, in 1826, after S. Girardin.]

Bot.: A genus of Urticaceæ. Sir Joseph Hooker says that a kind of cloth, and also a sort of cordage, are made from fibre furnished by Girardinia heterophylla, common in Sikkim and other parts of the Himalayas. Thread is made in Southern India from the closely allied species G. Leschenaultiana.

gĭr'-a-sōl, gĭr'-a-sōle, s. [Fr. girasol, from Lat. gyro = to turn, and sol = the sun.]

I. Min.: A variety of opal. It is bluish white, and is translucent, with reddish reflections in a bright light.

† 2. Bot.: A plant—Heliotropium europæum, more commonly called the Turnsole.

giraumont (as zhĕr-ō-mon'), s. [Fr. giraumont, giraumon; remote etym. unknown.]

Botany:

1. A cucurbitaceous plant, Cucurbita Pepo.

2. Another cucurbitaceous plant of unknown species, the seeds of which are said by Endlicher to destroy the tapeworm.

gird (1), * gyrd, s. [GIRD (1), v.]

* 1. Lit.: A stroke with a rod or switch.

II. Figuratively:

1. A twitch, a pang.

"Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels."—Tillotson.

* 2. A spurt.

"He bouts well for a yird."—Adams: Works, i. 475.

3. A sarcasm, a gibe, a sneer.

"I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio."
Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, v. 2.

gird (2), s. [GIRD (2), v.] A hoop for holding together a tub, barrel, or the like.

* gird sting, s. Apparently a sting or pole for making a gird or hoop.

"Gird-stings the hundreth contening sex score—xls."—Rates (1611), 2, 1 a.

gird (1), * gird-en (1), * gyrd-en, v.t. & i. [From Mid. Eng gerde, yerde = a rod (Eng. yard); cf. Ger gerte = a rod.] [GIRDE.]

* A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To strike, to hit.

"He yurde Suard on that hæfd."
Layamon, i. 58.

2. To pierce; to cut through.

"Though girt with many a grevous plody wound."
Chaucer: C. T., 1,912.

II. Fig.: To sneer at; to jibe; to mock; to reproach with sarcasm.

"Being moved he will not spare to gird the gods."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, i. 1.

B. Intransitive:

* 1. Lit.: To strike; to hit; to cut; to aim a blow or cut.

"He girdus to Syr Gauane Throghe ventayle and pusane."
Anturs of Arthur, st. xlv.

2. Fig.: To sneer; to jibe; to give vent to sarcasms or gibes. (Followed by at.)

"At which our cities gird whose judgments are so strict."
Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 6.

gird (2), * gerd-en, * girde, * gird-en (2), * gurd-en, * gyrd-yn, v.t. [A.S. gyrdan; cogn. with Icel. gyrdha = to gird; gerdhe = to fence in; Dut. gorden; Dan. giorde; Ger. gürten = to gird; Goth. bi-gairdan. From the same root come garden, garth, and yard.]

1. To bind round with some flexible band, as a rope, a cord, a bandage, a girdle, &c.

"They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth."—2 Maccabees x. 3.

2. To fasten or make fast by binding.

"He girt his warlike harness about him."—1 Maccabees iii. 25.

* 3. To enclose; to shut in; to invest; to surround.

"Girding with grievous siege Castles and towns."
Shakesp.: Henry V., i. 2.

* 4. To surround; to invest; to encircle.

"How many lasses have I knowne to make him Garlands to gird his necke."
Browne: Shepherd's Pipe, ecl. 6.

5. To invest.

"I gird thee with the valiant sword of York."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry VI., iii. 1.

* 6. To dress, to habit, to clothe.

"I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with fine silk."—Ezekiel xvi. 10.

* 7. To equip; to provide; to furnish.

"So to the coast of Jordan he directs His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles."
Milton: P. R., i. 120.

* gĭr'-del-stĕde, s. [GIRDLE-STEAD.]

gĭrd'-ĕr (1), s. [Eng. gird (1), v.; -er.] One who girds, jibes, or sneers.

"'What's a quip?' 'We great girders call it a short saying of a sharp wit, with a bitter sense in a sweet word.'"—Lyly: Alexander & Campaspe, iii. 2.

gird'-ĕr (2), s. [Eng. gird (2), v.; -er.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. One who or that which girds, surrounds, or supports.

"What girder binds, what prop the frame sustains."
Blackmore: Creation, bk. iv.

2. A cooper.

II. Civ. Eng.: A principal beam, of wood or metal, spanning the distance from wall to wall, or pier to pier, and used to support a superstructure or superincumbent weight, as a floor, the pathway of a bridge, &c. Girders are often compound, the timbers being scarfed together and stayed by truss-work, or fished at the joint. The ends of the girder rest on the wall or pier to an extent varying according to the span: thus for a girder of ten feet span, the bearing at each end should be seven inches; for a twenty feet span, fourteen inches. The ends rest on templates. [TEMPLATE.] Girders are of various sorts, according to the purpose for which they are required. [BOWSTRING-GIRDER, BOX-GIRDER, LATTICE-GIRDER, TRUSS-GIRDER.] A sandwich-girder is one which is composed of two wooden beams with an iron flitch-plate between, all bolted together.

"The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder."—Moxon: Mechanical Exercises.

girder-bridge, s. A bridge supported by beams resting upon abutments; the beam is usually compound; a truss-bridge.

girder-tester, s. A form of hydrostatic press for testing the strength of girders.

gĭrd'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GIRD (2), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act of binding, as with a girdle or band.

"Patience is (as it were) the girding up of the soul, which, like the girding up of the body, gives it both strength and decency too."—South, vol. x., ser. 4.

* 2. A covering; an article of dress.

"Instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth."—Isaiah iii. 24.

gĭr'-dle (1), s. [GAIDDLE, s.] [Scotch.]

Spacing by the Girdle: A mode of divination, still occasionally practised in Scotland, especially for discovering who has stolen anything that is missing. (Jamieson.)

gĭr'-dle (2), * ger-dle, * ger-del, * ger-dul, * gir-del, * gir-dil, * gur-del, * gur-dil, * gur-dle, s. [A.S. gyrdel; cogn. with Icel. gyrdhill; Dut. gordel; Sw. gördel; Ger. gürtel.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. That which girds or binds; a band or belt; anything drawn round the waist and buckled or otherwise fastened.

"These have each some piece of riband, a broken fan, or an old girdle, which they play with while they talk of the fair person remembered by each respective token."—Steele: Spectator, No. 10.

* 2. The equator.

"From the world's girdle to the frozen pole."
Cowper: Expostulation, 20.

* 3. An enclosure; a circumference.

"Suppose within the girdle of these walls,
Are now confined two mighty monarchies."
Shakesp.: Henry V. (Prologue.)

† 4. Anything which serves to hold or keep together other things; a bond.

"Prade is the golden girdle of the globe."
Cowper: Charity, 86.

II. Technically:

1. Anat.: An arch or anything similar, transversely uniting the right and left sides of the body. There is a shoulder and a pelvic girdle.

2. Arch.: A small circular band or fillet round the shaft of a column.

3. Diamond-cutting: The point of greatest marginal circumference of a brilliant-cut diamond, at which it is grasped by the setting. The projecting portion, rising about the setting, is the bizet, and has one third of the depth of the stone. It has thirty-two facets, and terminates in a flat face called the table. The imbedded portion of the stone has two-thirds of the depth of the gem, and is called the culasse; it has twenty-four facets, and terminates in a flat face, the collet or culet. [BRILLIANT.]

¶ (1) Girdle of the sky:

Astron.: The ecliptic.

(2) To have or hold under one's girdle: To have in subjection.

* girdle-belt, s. A belt which encircles the waist; a waist-belt.

"The girdle-belt, with nails of burnished gold."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid ix. 488.

* girdle-stead, * girdil-stede, * girdle-sted, * gur-del-stede, * gur-dyl-stode, s.

1. The part of the body where the girdle is worn; the waist.

"He cleffth him down to the girdelstede."
Ferumbras, l. 701.

2. The lap.

"There fell a flower into her girdlestead."
A. C. Swinburne: Tristram of Lyonesse, vi.

girdle-wheel, s. A small spinning-wheel.

gĭr'-dle, v.t. & i. [GIRDLE, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To bind as with a belt or girdle; to gird.

* 2. To inclose; to surround; to environ.

"He was glad when he passed the tombstones gray, Which girdle round the fair Abbaye."
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, ii. 24.

* 3. To embrace.

"The gentle babes, girdling one another Within their innocent alabaster arms."
Shakesp.: Richard III., iv. 3.

4. To make a cut round the trunk of a tree, through the bark and alburnum, so as to kill it. (American.)

"The great trees are stript of their branches and then girdled."—Proceedings Royal Soc., 1662.

B. Intrans.: To surround; to form a girdle or circle round.

"Where yon bar
Of girdling mountains intercepts the sight."
Byron: Childe Harold, iv. 174.

gĭrd'-lĕr, * gird-il-ler, * gurd-el-er, s. [Eng. girdl(e); -er.] A maker of girdles.

"Talk with the girdler, or the milliner,
He can inform you."
Beaum. & Fl.: Honest Man's Fortune, i. 1.

* gĭre, s. [Lat. gyrus.] A circle or circular motion. [GYRE.]

"First I beheld him hovering in air,
And then down-stooping with an hundred gires." Brewer: Lingua, i. 1.

gĭrl, * gerl, * gerle, * gurl, * gyrle, s. [Formed from O. Low Ger. gör = a child, with dimin. suff. -l (= la); cf. Sw. gurre, gurrli, a depreciatory term for a girl.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. A young person of either sex: as

(1) A boy.

"There gat in glotonye gerles that were cherles."
P. Plowman, i. 23.

(2) Young people generally.

"In danger hadde he at his owen gise
The yonge girls of the diocise."
Chaucer C. T., 666.

2. A female child; a young woman; a young female not yet arrived at puberty:

"The politicks and morals of girls at a boarding school rather than of men and statesmen."—Burke's Speech on the Duration of Parliaments.

II. Hunt.: A roebuck of two years old.

"The roebuck is in the first year a kid, the second year a girl."—Return from Parnassus, ii. 5

* girl-boy, s. An effeminate boy.

"And girl-boys luxuring Ganimede."
Warner: Albions England, bk. v., ch. xxvi.

* gĭrl, v.t. [GIRL, s.] To make pregnant with a girl.

"Nor hast thou in his nuptial armes enjoyed Barren embraces, but wert girl'd and boy'd."
Corbet: Upon the Death of Lady Huddington.

gĭrl'-hood, s. [Eng. girl; -hood.] The state or time of being a girl; the earlier years of female life.

gĭrl'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. girl; -ish.]

1. Of or pertaining to a girl or young female.

"In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor."—Carew: Survey of Cornwall.

2. Suiting or befitting a girl; characteristic of girlhood.

"And straight forgetting what she had to tell,
To other speech and girlish laughter fell."
Drayton: Lejend of Matilda the Fair.

gĭrl'-ĭsh-lў, adv. [Eng. girlish; -ly.] In a girlish manner; like a girl.

gĭrl'-ĭsh-nĕss, s. [Eng. girlish; -ness.] The quality or state of being girlish; the character or manners of a girl; levity.

* gĭr'-lônd, s. [GARLAND.]

1. A garland.

2. Sovereignty, pre-eminence.

gĭrn, * gĕrn, * gyrn, v.i. [GRIN, v.] To grin like an ill-natured dog.

"If the dead corpse binna straughted, it will girn and thraw."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxiii.

gĭrn, s. [GIRN, v.] A grin.

gĭrn'-al, gĭrn'-el, s. [Ir. gearneal = a granary.] A meal chest; granary.

"Above these dungeon-looking stables were granaries, called girnels."—Scott: Waverley, ch. viii.

Gĭr-onde', s. [See def.]

1. Geography:

(1) A maritime department in the south-west of France, adjacent to the Bay of Biscay.

(2) An estuary in this department. It is formed by the junction of the rivers Garonne and Dordogne, thirteen miles north of Bourdeaux. (Keith Johnston.)

2. Hist.: The Girondist party.

Gĭr-on'-dĭst, Gĭr-on'-dĭn, s. & a. [Fr. Girondin; Eng., &c. suff. -ist. See def.]

A. As substantive:

Hist.: The name of a great political party in France; one of the most powerful factors in at least the earlier part of the first French Revolution. When the Legislative Assembly met in A.D. 1791, it was found to contain representatives of all the three parties which naturally exist in every country—those of the upper, the middle, and the lower classes. The Girondists were the second of these—the party of the middle classes, and were republican in sentiment. They obtained their designation from the fact that their most celebrated leaders, Vergniaud, Guadet, Gensonné, &c., were members for the department of the Gironde, originally lawyers in the law court of Bordeaux. Their followers were the burgess class, the professionals, and the smaller agriculturists. In 1791 they were the most powerful party in the Assembly, and for a time shaped the policy of their country. When conservative Europe, in the interests of monarchy, threatened France with invasion, it was the Girondists who, in April, 1792, declared war, the Jacobins deprecating hostilities, as fearing the result. To overcome their monarchic rivals, the Girondists coquetted with the last-named party, and found that they had gained, not a servant, but a cruel and exacting master. The quarrel between the two arose after the massacres perpetrated in August and September, 1792, and the extreme revolutionists ultimately prevailing, an armed mob on May 31, 1793, assailed the Convention, and demanded the imprisonment of twenty-nine Girondist deputies. These were arrested on June 2, and twenty-one of them were guillotined on October 31. Others were subsequently put to death; a few escaping, reappeared in the Convention after the fall of Robespierre.

B. As adjective:

1. Hist.: Pertaining or relating to the party described under A.

2. Geog.: Of or belonging to the department of the Gironde (q.v.).

gī-rŏn'-nē, gī-rŏn'-nȳ, a. [Gyronny.]

gĭr-ou-ĕt'te, s. [Fr. = a weather-cock.] A name given in France to time-serving politicians, who veer about with every shift of popular opinion; a political weather-cock; a trimmer; an opportunist.

gĭrr, s. [Gird (2), s.] A hoop for a cask or tub.

gĭr'-rŏcks, s. [A dimin. of gar (?).]

Ichthy.: A species of garfish.

* gĭrse, s. [A corruption of girth (q.v.).] A girth.

"They brake pectorall girses and all." — Daniel: Hist. Eng., p. 46.

gĭrt, pa. par. or a. [Gird (2), v.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Girded, bound.

2. Naut.: Applied to a vessel when she is moored and her cables so taut as to prevent her swinging to the wind or tide.

* gĭrt, v.t. [Gret, pa. par.]

1. To gird, to encircle, to surround.

"And Neptune in the pleas hymn they sound,
Who girts the earth, and shakes the solid ground."
Cooke: Hesiod; Theogony, 20.

2. To girth; to measure the girth of.

"By girting it about with a string, and so reducing it to the square, &c., you may glue a neer guess."—Evelyn: A Discourse of Forest Trees, ch. xxix.

gĭrth, * gĭrt, * gĕrth, s. [Icel. gjördh = a girdle; gerdh = the girth round the waist; Dan. giord; Goth. gairda = a girdle.]

1. Ordinary Language:

1. The band by which a saddle or burden is made fast and kept secure upon a horse's back by passing round his belly; a belly-band.

"The nearer steed plunged o'er the plain,
And burst his girth, and tore his rein."
Byron: Siege of Corinth, xxxiii.

2. A circular bandage.

"The most common way of bandage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle."—Wiseman: Surgery.

3. The measure round a person's body, a tree, a pillar, &c.; the compass measured by a girdle or band placed round a body.

"Its length was twenty-four feet; but the girth did not exceed twelve."—Pennant: British Zoology; Bottle-head Hyperoodon.

4. A small girder; used in roofs or bridge-frames.

II. Print.: One of two bands of leather or stout webbing attached to the rounce of the press, and used to run the carriage in and out.

girth-line, s.

Naut.: A whip-purchase, depending from a lower-mast head, and used in hoisting the rigging and gear of a mast.

* gĭrth, v.t. [Girth, s.] To bind, as with a girth.

* gis-arm, * gis-arme, * ges-erne, * gys-arme, * gys-erne, s. [O. Fr. gisarme, gisarne, jusarne; Prov. jusarma, gosarma; Low Lat. gisarma.] A battle-axe, having two cutting faces; a hand-axe.

"Handax, sythe, gisarm, or spere."
Havelok, 2,553.

* gīse (1), * gyse, v.t. [Gise, s. Sp. & Port. guisar.] To dress up.

"They gysed them fulle gay." Tryamour, 660.

* gīse (2), v.t. [Agist.] To feed or graze; to take in cattle to pastmre on: as, To gise grounds.

* gīse, * gyse, s. [Fr. guise.] Guise, fashion. [Guise.]

"That eggith folk in many gise."
Romaunt of the Rose, 181.

* gis-erne, * gis-arne, s. The gizzard.

"The gisard or gisarne of a bird. Gesier, jesier."—Cotgrave.

* gĭş'-le (le as ęl), s. [A.S. gisel.] A pledge; a hostage.

ġĭs-mŏnd'-ĭne, s. [Gismondite.]

ġĭs-mŏnd'-īte, ġĭs-mŏnd'-ĭne, s. [Named after Gismondi, a Roman mineralogist.]

Min.: An orthorhombic transparent or translucent mineral of splendent lustre, its hardness 4·5, sp. gr. 2·27; sometimes colourless, sometimes white, bluish-white, greyish or reddish. It is optically biaxial. Compos.: silica 35·38, alumina 27·23, lime 13·12, potassa 2·85, and water 21·10. Occurs in lencitic lava near Rome, also in Sicily, &c. (Dana.)

* gis-pen, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A pot or cup made of leather.

"Calls for six gispens, drinks them off at once."
Legend of Capt. Jones (1659).

* gist (1), * giste (1), s. [Joist.]

* gist (2), s. [Guest.]

ġĭst (3), ġīste (2), s. [O. Fr. giste = a lodging-place, a resting-place; gésir = to lie; third pers., sing. pr. indic. gist (Fr. gît); Lat. jaceo = to lie.]

* 1. A lodging-place; a resting-place.

"The gode pilegrim . . . hieth toward his giste."—Ancren Riwle, p. 348.

2. The essence or main point of a question, the substance or pith of a matter.

* gīte, s. [Fr.; O. Fr. giste.] [Gist.]

1. A sleeping-place; a lodging-place.

2. A gown; a dress; a covering.

"The garments gay, the glittering golden gite.
The tysling talk which flowes from Pallas pooles."
Gascoigne: In Prayse of the Browne Beautie.

gĭth, s. [Wel.]

Bot.: A provincial English name for the Corncockle, Agrostemma Githago or Githago segetum.

gĭ-thā'-gō, s. [From Wel. gith = the corncockle.]

Bot.: A genus of Caryophyllaceæ, tribe Sileneæ. Calyx coriaceous, with foliaceous teeth, petals without scales at the base of the blade, entire. Styles and carpels opposite the sepals. Known species one, viz., Githago segetum, generally called Agrostemma Githago, the Corncockle, common in cornfields, but according to Watson, a colonist. The flowers are large, purple, and resemble those of the Red Campion (Lychnis diurna).

* gĭt-on, * get-on, * gyt-one, s. [O. Fr. giudon.] A standard.

* gĭt'-tĕrn, * get-erne, * ghit-tern, * gyt-erne, * git-erne, s. [Lat. cithara; Ger. zither.]

Music: An instrument like a guitar; a cittern.

"Violins, strike up aloud, Ply the gittern, scour the crowd."
Drayton: Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 8.

* gĭt'-tĕrn, * git-terne, * gyt-erne, v.t [Gittern, s.] To play or perform upon a gittern.

"Gitterning along the streets, or solacing on the banks of Jordan or down the stream."—Milton: Subjects for Tragedies, in Life by Birch.

gĭt'-tĭth, s. [Heb.] This word, which is found in the titles of Pa. viii., lxxxi., lxxxiv., is by some supposed to signify a musical instrument (perhaps as used at Gath); by others, a vintage-song, or well-known tune, to which the Psalm could be sung. Various other explanations have been offered. The form Gitteth is an error.

* ġiŭst, s. [Joust.]

ġiŭs'-tō, adv. [Ital.]

Music: In just, true, or correct time.

gĭve, * geve, * gife, * gif-en, * gif, * giff, * yeve, * yev-en, * yef-en, * yif-en (pa. t. * gaf, gave, * gef, * gove, * yaf, * yef, * yove, pa. par. given, * givene, * give, * goven, * gyvyn, * yeven, * yifen, * yove, * yoven, * yiven), v.t. & i. [A.S. gifan, giefan, geofan, yfan (pa. t. ic geaf, pl. we geafon, pa. par. gifen); cogn. with Dut. geven; Icel. gefa; Dan. give; Sw. gifva; Goth. giban; Ger. geben; O. H. Ger. geban; O. Fris. ieva.]

A. Transitive:

1. To bestow; to confer or grant, usually without any price or reward.

"To thy seed will I give this land."—Genesis xii. 7.

2. To hand over; to deliver.

"The woman that thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat."—Genesis iii. 12.

3. To pay as a price or reward, or in exchange.

"If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring, . . .
You would abate the strength of your displeasure."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, v.

4. To grant; to allow; to put in one's power or possession.

"Give me, says Archimedes, where to stand firm, and I will remove the earth."—Temple.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

"Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine."—1 Timothy iv. 13.

6. To yield; to resign; to quit.

"Lest . . . he that bade thee and him coome and say to thee, Give this man place."—Luke xiv. 9.

7. To expose; to resign.

"All clad in skins of beasts the javelin bear, Give to the wanton winds their flowing hair."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid vii. 553.

8. To supply; to furnish with; to afford.

"Give me good fortune, I will strike him dead,
For this discomfort he hath done this house."
Tennyson: Launcelot & Elaine, 1,065.

9. To pay; to render; to return.

"Give God the praise."—John ix. 24.

10. To grant permission to; to allow; to empower.

"Prepare
The due libation and the solemn prayer;
Then give thy friend to shed the sacred wine."
Pope: Homer; Odyssey iii. 59.

* 11. To enable; to give power or ability to.

"Give me to know How this foul rout began, who set it on."
Shakesp.: Othello, ii. 3.

* 12. To exhibit; to show; to demonstrate; to prove.

"This instance gives the impossibility of an internal existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible."—Hale.

13. To exhibit or present as the result or product of a calculation.

"The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men apiece."—Arbuthnot.

11. To cause; to excite.

"Give none offence. —Corinthians x. 32.

15. To emit.

"Bitter notes my harp would give."
Tennyson: In Memoriam, cxxiv

16. To communicate: as, To give an opinion.

17. To utter; to declare: as, To give a word of command.

"Thus having mourned, he gave the word around,
To raise the breathless body from the ground."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid xi. 89.

18. To set forth; to show.

"And thus I have given the history of Satire, and derived it from Ennius, to your lordship; that is, from its first rudiments of barbarity to its last polishing and perfection."—Dryden: Juvenal. (Dedic.)

19. To grant; to admit; to allow by way of supposition.

* 20. To consider; to reckon.

"The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, III. 2.

21. To pledge: as, To give one's word or honour.

22. To pledge; to propose as a toast.

* 23. To represent.

"More cruel to your good report than grateful To us that give you truly."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, I. 9.

* 24. To ascribe; to impute.

"That might have mercy on the fault thou gavest him."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., III. 2.

25. To addict; to apply; to dispose. (Commonly in the past participle.)

"He that giveth his mind to the law of the most High, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients."—Ecclus. xxxix. 1.

B. Reflexively:

1. To yield up: to resign.

"We never valued this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give ourself
To barbarous licence."
Shakesp.: Henry V., I. 2.

2. To addict; to apply.

"They who gave themselves to warlike actions and enterprises, went immediately to the palace of Odin."—Temple.

C. Intransitive:

1. To be generous; to give gifts.

"Give and it shall be given unto you."—Luke vi. 38.

2. To yield as to pressure.

* 3. To rush; to make an attack.

"Hannibal gave upon the Romans."—Hook: Roman History.

4. To begin to melt; to thaw; to grow soft.

"Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft; as the crust of bread, bisket, sweetmeats, and salt."—Bacon: Natural History.

5. To begin to break: as, The weather gives.

* 6. To weep.

"Whose eyes do never give
But through lust and laughter."
Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, IV. 3.

* 7. To have a misgiving.

"My mind gives ye 've reserved To rob poor market women."
J. Webster. (Webster.)

8. To lead; to open; to afford or form a passage or entrance.

"One green wicket in a privet hedge,
This yielding gave into a grassy walk."
Tennyson: Gardener's Daughter, 110.

¶ 1. To give away: To make over to another; to transfer; to alienate from one's self. Specif., to give in marriage.

"If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine."
Shakesp.: All's Well That Ends Well, V. 3.

2. To give back:

(1) Trans.: To return, to restore.

"Their vices perhaps give back all those advantages which their victories procured."—Atterbury.

(2) Intrans.: To retire, to retreat; to go back.

"He cried out with a most vehement voice, I will walk in the strength of the Lord God. So they gave back and came no farther."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. i.

3. To give forth: To publish, to tell.

"Soon after it was given forth, and believed by many, that the king was dead."—Bayward.

4. To give in:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To allow by way of abatement or deduction; to allow in addition.

(b) To declare; to make known; to proffer: as, To give in one's adhesion to a cause.

(c) To present, to tender: as, To give in one's name.

(2) Intransitive:

(a) To yield, to retire; to acknowledge oneself beaten by or inferior to another.

"The charge was given with so well-governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in."—Bayward.

(b) To give oneself to; to adopt; to embrace; to yield assent.

"This is a geography peculiar to the medallists; the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it."—Addison: On Medals.

5. To give off:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To emit; to send out: as, To give off vapour.

* (b) To resign; to give up.

"Is this Ascension day! did not the prophet Say, that before Ascension day at noon,
My crown I should give off?"
Shakesp.: King John, V. 1.

(2) Intrans.: To cease, to forbear; to give over.

"The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the mind."—Locke: On Education.

* 6. To give on: To rush or fall on.

7. To give out:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To emit; to send out: as, A plant gives out a scent.

(b) To publish; to proclaim; to announce publicly.

"He gave out general summons for the assembly of his counsel for the war."—Knolles: Historie of the Turkes.

(c) To issue; to send forth or out.

"The night was distinguished by the orders which he gave out to his army, that they should forbear all insulting of their enemies."—Addison.

(d) To distribute.

* (e) To surrender; to give up.

"I thought ye would never have given out these arms."—Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., IV. 8.

* (f) To show, to exhibit, to present.

"A better soldier none that Christendom gives out."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, IV. 3.

(g) To represent, to pretend; to show or declare falsely.

"One that gives out himself Prince Florizel."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, V. 1.

(2) Intransitive:

(a) To declare, to represent.

"Give out you are of Epidamnum."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, I. 2.

(b) To give in; to cease from exertion; to yield, to give way.

"Madam, I always believed you so stout That for twenty denials you would not give out."
Swift. The Grand Question Debated.

(c) To proclaim, to declare; to announce publicly.

8. To give over:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To hand over; to transfer, to surrender.

(b) To cease; to give up; to leave off; to abandon.

"If Desdemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation."—Shakesp.: Othello, IV. 2.

(c) To despair of; to give up all hopes of; to conclude lost.

"Since it is lawful to practice upon them that are forsaken and given over, I will venture to prescribe for you."—Suckling.

(d) To addict or apply oneself.

"When the Babylonians had given themselves over to all manner of vice, it was time for the Lord, who had set up that empire, to pull it down."—Grew.

(2) Intrans.: To cease, to yield; to give in; to discontinue.

"Give not o'er so; to him again; intreat him."
Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, II. 2.

9. To give up:

(1) Transitive:

(a) To surrender, to relinquish, to cede, to yield.

"He has betrayed your business, and given up
For certain drops of salt your city Rome."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, V. 6.

(b) To resign, to commit.

"Let us give ourselves wholly up to Christ in heart and desire."—Taylor: Holy Living.

(c) To abandon as lost or hopeless; to despair of.

"Have the physicians given up all their hopes?
Cannot they add a few days to a monarch?"
Rowe: Ambitious Stepmother, I. 1.

(d) To deliver up; to declare publicly.

"And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people to the king."—2 Samuel xxiv. 9.

(2) Intrans.: To give in; to yield; to despair of anything; to retire from a contest.

10. To give the bag, the sack to:

* (1) To cheat.

(2) To discharge from employment. (Slang.)

11. To give birth to:

(1) Lit.: To bear; to bring forth, as a child.

(2) Fig.: To be the origin, source, or cause of.

12. To give chase to: To pursue.

13. To give ear: To listen; to give heed; to pay attention.

"The devil threatened to tear me in pieces if I once gave ear to divinity: and now 'tis too late."—Marlowe: Dr. Faustus, V. iii.

14. Give you good day, even, or morrow: An ellipsis for God give you good day, &c.

15. To give ground: To yield or give way under pressure of an advancing force.

16. To give it to one: To scold, or beat severely. (Colloquial.)

17. To give one the lie: To charge one with falsehood; to call one a liar.

18. To give head: To give full liberty to: as, One gives a horse his head.

19. To give heed: To pay attention; to listen; to give ear.

20. To give line: To give full liberty to: as one would give a fish plenty of line.

21. To give tongue:

Hunt.: To bark.

22. To give one's self up:

(1) To surrender one's self.

(2) To resign or abandon one's self; to addict one's self.

(3) To despair of one's self; to conclude one's self to be lost.

23. To give way:

(1) Ordinary Language:

(a) To yield; to retire or retreat before precaure; to give ground.

(b) To fail, to break, to sink: as, The hedge gave way under the weight.

(c) To become depreciated in value.

"Spanish and Egyptian gave way a little."—Daily Telegraph, Oct. 5, 1883.

(2) Naut.: In the imperative. An order to a boat's crew to start rowing or to increase their exertions.

24. To give way together:

Naut.: To row in time, to keep stroke.

25. Give and take:

(1) As subst.: A fair exchange.

(2) As adj.: Fairly exchanged; equally or fairly divided.

"Had a hit the best of some smart give and take work."—Field, January 23, 1882.

26. To give the hand:

(1) To espouse, to bestow in marriage.

* (2) To yield the supremacy or pre-eminence; to acknowledge oneself beaten by or inferior to another.

"Lessons being free from some inconveniences whereunto sermons are more subject, they may in this respect no less take than in others they must give the hand, which betokeneth pre-eminence."—Hooker: Ecclesiastical Polity.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between to give, to grant, and to bestow: "The idea of communicating to another what is our own, or in our power, is common to these terms; this is the whole signification of give; but grant and bestow include accessory ideas in their meaning. To grant is to give at one's pleasure; to bestow is to give with a certain degree of necessity. Giving is confined to no object; whatever property we transfer into the hands of another, that we give; we give money, clothes, food, or whatever is transferable: granting is confined to such objects as afford pleasure or convenience. To give has no respect to the circumstances of the action or the agent; it is applicable to persons of all conditions: to grant bespeaks not only the will, but the power and influence of the granter: to bestow bespeaks the necessitous condition of the receiver."

(2) He thus discriminates between to give, to present, to offer, and to exhibit: "What is given is actually transferred: what is presented, that is, made a present to him; or offered, that is, brought in his way, is put in the way of being transferred: we present in giving, and offer in order to give; but it may be that we may give without presenting or offering; and on the other hand, we may present or offer without giving. To give is the familiar term which designates the ordinary transfer of property: to present is a term of respect; it includes in it the formality and ceremony of setting before another that which we wish to give: to offer is an act of humility or solemnity; it bespeaks the movement of the heart, which impels to the making a transfer or gift. To exhibit expresses, likewise, the idea of attracting notice also: that which is exhibited is more striking than what is presented or offered; thus a poem is said to exhibit marks of genius."

(3) He thus discriminates between to give up, to yield, to deliver, to surrender, to cede, and to concede: "We give up that which we wish to retain; we deliver that which we wish not to retain. Deliver does not include the idea of a transfer; but give up implies both the giving from, and the giving to: we give up our house to the accommodation of our friends; we deliver the property into the hands of the owner. Where the action is compulsory, we may either say an officer gives up or surrenders his sword; when the action is discretionary, we may either say he gives up or yields a point of discussion; give up has, however, an extensiveness of applicatiou, which gives it an office distinct from either surrender or yield. Cede is properly to surrender by virtue of a treaty: we may surrender a town as an act of necessity; but the cession of a country is purely a political transaction. To concede, which is but a variation of cede, is a mode of yielding which may be either an act of discretion or courtesy."

(4) He thus discriminates between to give up, to abandon, to resign, and to forego: "To give up and abandon both denote a positive decision of the mind; but the former may be the act of the understanding or the will, the latter is more commonly the act of the will and the passions: to give up is applied to familiar cases; abandon to matters of importance. To give up and resign are applied either to the outward actions, or merely to the inward movements: but the former is active, it determinately fixes the conduct; the latter seems to be rather passive: thus we give up expectations and resign hopes. Forego is comparable with resign, inasmuch as it expresses a passive action: we resign that which we have, and we forego that which we might have: we resign the claims which we have already made, we forego the claims which we might make." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) given (as gĭvn), * gev-en, * gif-en, * gif-fene, * gov-en, * gyf-en, * gyv-en, gyv-yn, * yeve, * yov-en, pa. par. or a. [GIVE.]

A. As pa. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Bestowed, granted, conferred, imparted.

2. Admitted, supposed, granted, conceded.

3. Addicted, devoted. (Followed by to.)

"Though he was given to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory."—Bacon: Henry VII.

*4. Affected, disposed, inclined.

"He is a noble Roman, and well given."
Shakesp.: Julius Cæsar, I. 2.

II. Math.: A term applied to something which is supposed to be known: as with a given point as a centre and a given radius a circle can be described; or when the ratio between two quantities is known they are said to be in a given ratio.

gĭv-ĕr, * gev-er, * gyv-er, s. [Eng. giv(e)-er; Sw. gifvare; Dan. giver; Dut. gever; O. H. Ger. geber.] One who gives, bestows, or grants; a granter; an imparter or distributer.

"God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Corinthians ix. 7.

* gĭves, s. pl. [GYVES.]

gĭv-ĭng, * gev-ing, * gyv-yng, pr. par., a., & s. [GIVE.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of bestowing, granting, or imparting; a bestowal; a grant.

giving-out, s. An assertion; a declaration.

"The pronouncing of some doubtful phrase . . .
Or such ambiguous giving-out, to note
That you know aught of me."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, I. 5.

gĭz-zard, * gis-er, * giz-i-er, s. [O. Fr. gezier; Fr. gésier, from Lat. gigeria = the entrails of fowls.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II.

2. Fig.: The temper or disposition.

"Satisfaction and restitution lie so cursedly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans."—L'Estrange.

II. Technically:

1. Ornith.: A muscular division of the stomach in birds; it is an elongated sac in the body of birds just below the liver, and having two openings above, the one into the duodenum and the other into the proventriculus. The gizzard of the raptorial bird is thin and feeble, while that of the graminivorous bird is strong, with thick and muscular walls, the whole lined with a thick horny epithelium.

"The gizzard is not only made very strong, especially in the granivorous, but hath also a faculty of grinding what is therein."—Derham: Physico-Theology, bk. viii., ch. ii. (Note.)

2. Entom.: The proventriculus or second muscular stomach designed for crushing food. It often has the walls armed with plates or teeth of chitine.

3. Zool.: A stomach paved with calcareous plates in the family of molluscs called Bullidæ. It is large and strong enough to crush the small shell-fish which are swallowed entire. A gizzard exists also in Aplysia, which is a vegetable feeder. (S. P. Woodward.)

gla-bĕl'-la, s. [Lat. glabellus, fem. glabella = without hair, smooth.]

Anatomy:

1. Human: The surface between the superciliary ridges.

2. (Compar.) The frontal portion of a trilobite.

* glā'-bĕr, a. [Lat.] Smooth, slippery.

glā'-brāte, a. [Lat. glabratus, pa. par. of glabro = to make bald, to deprive of hair, from glaber, (fem. glabra) = without hair, smooth.]

Bot.: Becoming glabrous or smooth from age. (Gray.)

* glā'-brĭ-āte, * glā'-brĕ-āte, v.t. [Lat. glabratus, pa. par. of glabro, from glaber = without hair, smooth.] To make smooth, bare, or bald.

* glā'-brĭ-tў, s. [Lat. glabritas, from glaber = without hair, smooth.] The state of being glabrous, smooth, or bald.

glā'-broŭs, a. [Lat. glaber.]

Bot.: Smooth; having a surface devoid of hair or pubescence.

"French elm, whose leaves are thicker and more florid, glabrous, or smooth."—Evelyn: Sylva.

* glā'-çĭ-ą-ble (or çĭ as shĭ), a. [Lat. glaci(es) = ice, and Eng. suff. -able.] Capable of being converted into ice.

"Sensible philosophers conceive of the generation of diamonds, iris, beryls; not making them of frozen icicle, or from meer aqueous and glaciable substances." —Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. ii., ch. i.

* glā'-çĭ-ąl (or çĭ as shĭ), a. [Fr. & Sp. glacial; Port. glacal; Ital. glaciale, from Lat. glacialis = icy, frozen, full of ice; glacies = ice.] Of or belonging to ice.

"And for his glacial air, where is the shepherd so simple, but could have told him, that snowy or what ever else he means by glacial air, or clouds may serve to darken the day, but not at all prolong it?"—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. iv., ch. iv.

glacial acetic-acid, s.

Chem.: A name given to concentrated acetic acid, containing 84 per cent. of $CH_3{\cdot}CO{\cdot}OH$. It is so called because it forms a colourless crystalline mass like ice when it is cooled to 34° F., and it remains crystalline till the temperature rises to 48° F. Its sp. gr. is 1·065. It is used externally as a caustic irritant, vesicant, and escharotic.

glacial-drift, s.

Geol.: Drift, that is transported material, in the carrying or deposition of which ice, in the form either of land ice or of icebergs, took the leading part. The smoother surfaces of the boulders and pebbles generally exhibit a series of scratches, parallel to each other if made contemporaneously, though, if arising at different periods, a newer set of scratches may cross an older one. The fossil remains are those of more or less arctic molluscs and other animals. It is the same as Boulder-drift (q.v.). [GLACIAL-FORMATIONS, GLACIAL-PERIOD.]

glacial-epoch, s. [GLACIAL-PERIOD.]

glacial-formations, s. pl.

Geol.: A more comprehensive term than glacial-drift (q.v.). Strata of this character, occur widely in the northern parts of the United States, being found abundantly in New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and other states as far west as the Rocky Mountain region. They are also found in the countries of Northern Europe, and in the British Islands. Northern Asia appears to be free from them.

glacial-period, glacial-epoch, s.

Geol.: A period or epoch during which ice largely prevailed, the climate, in what are now temperate latitudes, being polar. It lasted long, commencing during the Newer Pliocene, and terminating before the close of the Post-Pliocene. Arctic conditions did not prevail uninterruptingly during all this time. Two distinct divisions of the glacial-period or distinct glacial-periods are traceable in the Alps, the earlier one the more severe of the two. During the warmer interval, called by Professor Heer the inter-glacial period, dense beds of lignite were deposited at Dürrnten and other places near Zurich. In the United States the glacial period seems to have presented similar conditions, evidences of an advance and retreat, and a second advance, of the ice sheet being observable in some localities. The country was buried under a great ice mass as far south as central Pennsylvania. In Britain, where the glacial phenomena have been much studied, similar evidences of two glacial periods are found. The island appears to have been submerged till hardly any portion of it remained above water. There is some doubt, however, upon this point. It was during the glacial-period, that the Alpine plants, now found on the summit of European mountains, passed southward from the Arctic regions. During the later of the two glacial periods man existed, whether he did so during the earlier one, is matter of dispute. What caused the abnormal cold has not been settled. It may, as Sir Charles Lyell thinks, have been great expanses of high land near the North Pole. Sir John Herschel in 1832, M. Adhémar in 1840, and notably Mr. Croll in 1864, suggested astronomical causes which may have had an effect in bringing on the glacial epochs. The chief is the varying eccentricity of the earth's orbit. In A.D. 1800 this was ·0168, but 200,000 years previously it was ·0567, making a difference of 10¼ millions of miles, and creating an excess of winter days amounting to 27·7. So also 210,000 years before A.D. 1800, the eccentricity was 0·575, the difference in millions of miles, 10½, and the winter days in excess 27·8. If the glacial-period was thus produced, this may have been its date. The difference was 10_2 millions of miles against 750,000 years, and 13½ millions 850,000 years before A.D. 1800. That no glacial strata had been found earlier than those in the Newer Pliocene militates against the view that the cold of that time was produced by periodically recurrent astronomical causes. (Lyell.) glacial phosphoric-acid, s.

Chem.: $H_2O{\cdot}P_2O_5 = HPO_3$. It is exceedingly deliquescent, and requires to be kept in a closely-stopped bottle. It is called also metaphosphoric-acid.

glacial-theory, glacial-hypothesis, s.

Geology:

1. An hypothesis or a theory now universally accepted, which attributes the drift mainly to the action of ice.

2. An hypothesis or theory as to the descent of glaciers. [GLACIER.]

glā'-çĭ-ąl-ĭst (or çĭ as shĭ), s. [Eng. glacial; -ist.]

A. As subst.: One who attributes the phenomena of the drift to the action of ice. Nearly all geologists are now glacialists.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the school of geologists described under A, or their tenets: as, glacialist views.

glā'-çĭ-ąl-lў (or çĭ as shĭ), adv. [Eng. glacial; -ly.] By means of ice.

"Far-transported rocks, glacially polished and scratched on more than one side."—Lyell: Student's Elements of Geology, ch. xii.

* glā-çĭ-ār'-ĭ-ŭm (or çĭ as shĭ), s. [Lat. glaci(es) = ice; neut. suff. -arium.] A room or enclosed space with a level flooring of artificial ice for skating on.

glā'-çĭ-āte (or çĭ as shĭ), v.t. & i. [Lat. glaciatus, pa. par. of glacio = to make or turn into ice, to congeal; glacies = ice.]

A. Transitive:

1. To convert into ice.

2. To act upon by means of ice.

"The probable date of the introduction of the contents into ossiferous caves in glaciated areas may be ascertained by an examination of the new deposits."—Dawkins: Cave Hunting, ch. xi.

B. Intrans.: To become ice. (Johnson.)

"First a glaciating degree of cold, and then the highest we could produce by art."—Boyle: Works, ii. 522.

glā-çĭ-ā'-tion (or çĭ as shĭ), s. [Fr. glaciation.]

1. Ord. Lang.: The act of congealing; the state of being congealed.

2. Geol.: The state of being acted upon by ice; ice-action. Used of a country or district, a stratum or a boulder. It consists chiefly of polished and furrowed rock-surfaces, of moraines, and erratic blocks.

"Beneath the drifts were unequivocal marks of prolonged glaciation."—Lyell: Student's Elements of Geology, ch. xii.

glăç'-ĭ-ẽr, s. [Fr., from Lat. glacies = ice.]

A. As substantive:

Physic. Geol., &c.: A river of ice slowly descending a mountain side. A glacier commences primarily as a frozen mass of snow, formed above the line of perpetual congelation, and consolidated partly by pressure and partly by the freezing of water infiltered into it from its surface. In the Swiss Alps the glaciers are between twenty and thirty miles long, their greatest breadth two or three miles, and their depth more than 600 feet. Why the glacier descends has been a very disputed question. Saussure attributed it to its weight, aided by the water beneath it. Charpentier and Agassiz to dilatation produced by the freezing of water in the interstices, a view which Hopkins opposed on mathematical and mechanical grounds. Agassiz and Prof. James Forbes discovered that the glacier, like an ordinary river, moved faster on the surface than below, and in the middle than at the sides. Forbes therefore believed that viscosity was the cause of the glacier's action. Tyndall attributed it chiefly to regelation, that is, to parts of it melting and freezing again. When, in descending a mountain-side, the glacier has to force its way through a narrow channel, the brittle ice is crushed and broken, but by virtue of "regelation" it freezes anew when it has cleared the obstruction, and constitutes a "Mer de Glace." Prof. Tyndall has imitated the whole process artificially on a small scale, and his is now the accepted explanation of glacier-movement. As a glacier descends, it carries with it stones, which, on its melting, are deposited in a moraine (q.v.) By these moving beneath it, and projecting from it, the subjacent rocks are polished and scored with parallel furrows. It makes also a dome-shaped mass of smoother rock, called in Switzerland roches moutonnées (q.v.). It scoops out lakes. [GLACIER-LAKE.] If it reach the sea, and descend into it, huge masses of it float off as icebergs. Such is the case with the enormous glaciers of Greenland, and with those of the coast of Alaska. During the glacial period the nothern parts of this country were buried under mountains of moving ice. The same was the case in Northern Europe.

"The glacier's cold and restless mass Moves onward day by day."
Byron: Manfred, I. 1.

B. As adj.: Of, belonging to, produced by, or derived from a glacier.

glacier-dam, s.

Phys. Geog. & Geol.: A dam across a river produced by a glacier obstructing the passage of the waters.

"This old level is determined, not by the height of the glacier-dam."—Lyell: Princip. Geol. (11th ed.), ch. xvi.

glacier-erosion, s.

Phys. Geog. & Geol.: Erosion by means of glaciers. There is a glacier-erosion theory of lake basins. [LAKE.] (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xviii. 185; xxx. 479.)

glacier-fork, s.

Phys. Geog. & Geol.: A fork-like appearance produced by the junction of two glaciers which, after uniting, flow on together. At the point of junction they make cross grooves upon any flat surface over which they pass. This may be seen in Norway and elsewhere. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxix., 208.)

glacier-lake, s.

Phys. Geog. & Geol.: A lake produced temporarily or permanently by a glacier. It is noteworthy that glacier-lands like Switzerland are also lands abounding in lakes.

glacier-moraine, s.

Phys. Geog. & Geol.: A morsine deposited by a retreating or departed glacier. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xx. 455.

glacier-mud, s.

Geol.: Boulder earth. An unstratified mass of coarse gritty mud, with pebbles, boulders, and stony particles on the surface of ice-worn rocks in Scotland and elsewhere. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxi. 166.)

glacier-valley, s.

Phys. Geog. & Geol.: A valley, the essential factor in the formation of which has been a glacier. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xx. 404.)

glā-çĭ-ĉre', s. [Fr.]

Geol.: A cavern full of ice existing in a mountain land.

"We walked quickly away from the glaciere, agreeing that it was not improbable that in that part of the Jura there might be many hidden caves, containing more or less ice."—G. F. Browne: Ice Caves, ch. iv.

glā-çĭ-ō- (or çĭ as shĭ), a. in comp. [Lat. glacies = ice.] Pertaining to ice, as glacio-aqueous = pertaining to the combined action of ice and water.

glā'-çĭ-ŏŭs (or çĭ as shĭ), a. [Lat. glaci(es) = ice, and Eng., &c. suff. -ous.] Like ice; icy.

"Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glacious bodies."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. ii., ch. i.

glā'-çĭs, s. [Fr., from glace; Lat. glacies = ice.]

1. Fort.: The superior slope of the rampart of the covered way, or, where the rampart does not exist, the declivity immediately in front of the ditch of a work, forming a gentle slope towards the country, and protecting the revetment of the escarp from the fire of an enemy.

GLACIS.

2. Geol.: A gentle slope, not so steep as a talus.

glăd, * gladde, * glade, * glcad, * gleade, * gled, a. & s. [A.S. glæd = shining, bright, glad; cogn. with Dut. glad = bright, smooth, sleek; Icel. gladhr = bright, glad; Dan. & Sw. glad = joyful, joyous; Ger. glatt = smooth, even; O. Fris. gled = smooth. From the same root as glide and glow.] [GLADE.]

A. As adjective:

1. Pleased; cheerful; gratified; feeling pleasure, joy, or satisfaction.

"I am right glad that he's so out of hope."
Shakesp.: Tempest, iii. 3.

¶ It is followed by at, or of, and formerly also by with before that which causes the pleasure or satisfaction.

"He glad
Of her attention, gained with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began."
Milton: P. L., ix. 531.

2. Expressive of or indicating pleasure or satisfaction; cheerful, joyful; as, a glad countenance.

"Ev'n adverse navies blessed the binding gale, Kept down the glad acclaim, and silent joyed."
Thomson: Liberty, iv. 1,127.

3. Causing or affording pleasure, joy, or satisfaction; gladdening; joyful.

"I am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings."—Luke i. 19.

4. Wearing a gay or bright appearance; cheerful; bright; showy; gay.

"The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose."—Isaiah xxxv. 1.

5. It is used colloquially in a somewhat sarcastic sense.

"I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it."—Locke.

B. As subst.: Gladness, joy, pleasure.

"Till fortune, tired with doing bad, Threw him ashore, to give him glad."
Shakesp.: Pericles, iii. (Prol.)

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between glad, pleased, joyful, and cheerful: "Glad and pleased are both applied to the ordinary occurrences of the day; but the former denotes rather a lively and momentary sentiment, the latter a gentle but rather a more lasting feeling; we are glad to see a friend who has been long absent; we are pleased with the company of an intelligent and communicative person. Glad, joyful, and cheerful, all express more or less lively sentiments; but glad is less vivid than joyful, and more so than cheerful. Glad is seldom employed as an epithet to qualify things, except in the scriptural or solemn style; glad tidings of great joy; joyful is seldomer used to qualify persons than things; we either speak of a cheerful disposition, a cheerful person, a cheerful society, or a cheerful face, a cheerful sound, a cheerful aspect, and the like." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

† glad-eye, s.

Ornith.: One of the names given to the Yellow Amnor, or Yellowhammer (Emberiza citrinella).

glad-warbling, a. Singing or warbling joyfully. (Thomson: Castle of Indolence, li. 64.)

* glăd, * glade, * glad-en, * glad-den, gladien, * gladye, * gleadlen, * gled-en, v.t. & i. [A.S. gladian; Icel. gledhja; Sw. gladja, gläda; Dan. glade.] [GLAD, a.]

A. Trans.: To make glad or joyful; to gladden, to rejoice.

"There is none that so much comforteth and gladdeth the hearer, as a thing spoken contrary to the expectation of other."—Wilson: Arte of Rhetorique, p. 155.

B. Intrans.: To become or be glad; to rejoice.

"Advance, immortal bard, come up and view
The gladding face of that great king."
Ben Jonson: Irish Masque.

glăd'-dẽn, v.t. & i. [Eng. glad, a.; -en.]

A. Trans.: To make glad, pleased, or joyful; to rejoice, to cheer.

"Thou earliest minister of the Almighty
Which gladdened, on the mountain tops, the hearts
Of the Chaldean shepherds."
Byron: Manfred, iii. 2.

* B. Intrans.: To become or be glad; to rejoice.

"So shall your company ever gladden at the sound of your voice."—Adams.

* glăd'-dẽr, * glad-er, s. [Eng. glad; -er.] One who or that which gladdens or makes glad.

"Daughter of Jove, and spouse of Vnicanus, Thou glader of the mount of Citheron."
Chaucer: C. T., 2,225.

* glăd'-dŏn, s. [GLADEN.]

glāde (1), s. [Of uncertain origin, but probably closely connected with Eng. glad, and Icel. gladhr, the original meaning being an opening for light; cf. Nor. glette = a clear spot among clouds; gletta = to peep; glott = an opening.]

1. An opening or passage through a wood; an open space in a wood or forest.

"True, I must leave sweet Rokeby's glades,
Nor wander more in Gretna's shades;
But sure, no rigid jailer, thou Wilt a short prison-walk allow."
Scott: Rokeby, v. 12.

2. A part left unfrozen in rivers; an opening in the ice of rivers. (American.)

3. An everglade. (American.)

* ¶ To go to glade: To set.

"Phœbus now goes to glade."
Davies: Eglogues, 255.

glade-net, s. A kind of net used for catching birds in the openings of forests.

glāde (2), s. [GLEDE.] A local name for the Common Buzzard (Buteo vulgaris).

* glade, v.t. [GLAD, v.]

glā'-dẽn, glā'-dẽr, * gla-dene, * gla-dine, glad-don, * gla-don, * gla-done, s. [A.S. glædene; Lat. gladius = a sword.]

Bot.: A name given to several species of the Iris family, especially Iris fœtidissima, from the sword-like shape of the leaves.

* glăd'-ẽr, s. [GLADDER.]

* glăd'-fûl, * glăd'-fûll, * gled-ful, a. [Eng. glad; -ful(l).] Full of gladness or joy; joyful.

"The publique coumforte and gladfull reioycing whiche at her byrth she brought to all Englande."—Udal: Dedic. Epist. to Q. Katherine.

* glăd'-fûl-nĕss, s. [Eng. gladful; -ness.] The quality or state of being glad; gladness, joy.

"And there him rests in riotous suffisance
Of all his gladfulness and kindly joyance."
Spenser: Muiopotmos, 208.

glăd'-ĭ-āte, a. [Lat. gladius = a sword.] Sword-shaped; resembling a sword in shape; ensiform.

glăd'-ĭ-ā-tŏr, s. [Lat. = a swordsman, a fighter in the public games, a gladiator, from gladius = a sword.]

1. Literally:

Rom. Antiq.: One of a class of men whose profession was to fight in public for the entertainment of the people. They were armed with deadly weapons, and usually fought in pairs. The numbers of these men were principally recruited from prisoners of war, or refractory slaves sold by their masters to the lanista (or trainer). Malefactors also were occasionally condemned to fight as gladiators, and occasionally Roman citizens offered themselves voluntarily for hire, and to such the specific term auctorati was applied, their pay being called auctoramentum. Under the more worthless and dissolute emperors, equites, priests, and senators did not scruple to contend in the arena, in the hope of attracting the attention and gaining the favour of the prince; and even high-born women were found who consented to pander to the appetite for novelty, by fighting with each other or with dwarfs. Gladiators were divided into Retiarius. Secutor.

GLADIATORS.

classes according to the manner in which they were equipped, and were in many cases named from the nation whose characteristic arms they bore. The representatives of different nations were frequently matched against each other, and the comparative efficiency of their weapons, offensive and defensive, was thus put to the test. The classes most frequently mentioned are—the Thracians, armed with a light circular buckler and short crooked cutlass; the Mirmillones, equipped as Gaulish warriors, with an oblong shield, curved to match the shape of the body. The Retiarii were armed with a net (rete) and a kind of three-pointed spear or trident with a long handle, but were destitute of defensive armour; they were usually paired with a heavy-armed opponent, a mirmillo for example, who was in this case designated secutor (from Lat. sequor = to follow); the retiarius, being no match for his antagonist in a hand-to-hand fight, endeavoured, as the latter approached, to throw his net so as to entangle him in its meshes, and, if successful, stabbed him with the trident before he could extricate himself. If the cast failed he was compelled to take to flight, was chased by the secutor (and hence the name), and if overtaken easily despatched. If, however, the retiarius contrived to evade his pursuer until he was prepared for a second throw, then the contest was renewed as at first, and continued until one or the other was baffled or exhausted. If one of the combatants was wounded so as to be unable to continue the fight, the life or death of the wounded man, who held up his finger in token of submission, depended upon the pleasure of the president, who usually, as a matter of courtesy, referred it to the spectators, who signified their decision by raising or depressing their thumbs, accordingly as they wished him to be killed or saved. There were regular academies devoted to the instruction of these prize-fighters, in which novices were taught the principles of their art by fighting with heavy wooden swords. Originally, gladiatorial contests were fought at the funerals of distinguished persons, but in time they came to form a part of every important public solemnity or festival, and were even introduced occasionally at private banquets.

"Of raging aspect, rushed impetuous forth
The gladiator." Thomson: Liberty, iv. 153.

* 2. Fig.: A combatant in general; a disputant.

glăd-ĭ-ā-tŏr'-ĭ-al, * glăd-ĭ-ā-tŏr'-ĭ-an, a. [Lat. gladiatorius, from gladiator.]

1. Lit.: Of or pertaining to the contests of gladiators.

"He [Constantine] made a law against gladiatorial shows."—Jortin: Remarks on Eccles. History.

* 2. Fig.: Of or pertaining to combatants or contests in general.

* glăd'-ĭ-ā-tŏr-ĭşm, s. [Eng. gladiator; -ism.] The act or practice of fighting as gladiators; prize-fighting.

glăd'-ĭ-ā-tŏr-shĭp, s. [Eng. gladiator; -ship.] The state, occupation, or profession of a gladiator.

* glăd'-ĭ-ā-tŏr-ў, a. [Lat. gladiatorius, from gladiator.] Of or pertaining to gladiators; gladiatorial.

"The Romans did use themselves unto their gladiatory fights."—Bp. Reynolds: On the Passions, ch. xxvii.

* glăd'-ĭ-ā-türe, s. [Lat. gladiatura, from gladior = to fight with swords; gladius = a sword.] Sword-play; fencing; a gladiatorial contest.

"In their amphitheatrical gladiatures, the lives of captives lay at the mercy of the vulgar."—Gayton: On Don Quixote, p. 271.

* glăd'-ĭ-fў, v.i. [Eng. glad; suff. -fy (q.v.).] To rejoice, to become glad.

"He would gladify upon our pleasure in his sight."—Mad. D'Arblay: Diary, vi. 193.

glăd'-ĭ-ŏle, glăd-ĭ-ō'-lŭs, s. [Lat. = (1) a small sword, (2) the sword lily (gladiolus), from gladius = a sword, referring to the form of the leaves.]

1. Ord. Lang. (Of both forms): The genus gladiolus (q.v.).

2. Bot. (Of the form gladiolus): A genus of Iridaceæ. It has a tubular two-lipped corolla, a trifid stigma, and ensiform sheathing leaves. The species are found in South Africa, Europe, and Western Asia. One is British—viz., Gladiolus communis, variety illyricus, a plant with crimson flowers, growing in the New Forest and the Isle of Wight, but rare. G. segetum, has been used as an aphrodisiac. Most of the garden species were brought at first from the Cape of Good Hope. They are beautiful, and have been improved by intercrossing.

¶ Water gladiole:

Bot.: Butomus umbellatus.

glăd'-ĭ-ŭs, s. [Lat. = a sword.]

Zool.: The horny shell of a calamary, of a squid, &c. It is called also a pen, or sepiostaire (q.v.). (S. P. Woodward.)

glăd'-lў, * glad-liche, * glad-luche, a. & adv. [A.S. glædlic (a.), glædlice (adv.); Icel. gladligr.]

* A. As adj.: Glad, pleased, gay.

"Nes ner gome so gladly on gere."
Lyric Poems, p. 38.

B. As adv.: With gladness, pleasure, or joy; joyfully, cheerfully.

"For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower." Shakesp.: Lear, ii. 4.

glăd'-nĕss, * glad-nesse, s. [A.S. glædnesse.] The quality or state of being glad, pleased, or joyful; joy, cheerfulness, readiness, willingness.

"Phœbus, whose kindly beams impart Health and gladness to the heart."
Francis: Horace: The Secular Poem.

¶ For the difference between gladness and joy, see JOY.

* glăd'-shĭp, * glad-schepe, * glad-schipe, * glad-scipe, s. [A.S. glædscipe.] A state of gladness; pleasure.

"Such is the gladshippe of enuie
In worldes thing." Gower, ii.

† glăd'-sŏme, * glad-sum, a. [Eng. glad, and suff. -some.]

1. Glad; pleased; cheerful; gay; merry.

"Mid the green mountains many and many a song
We two had sung, like gladsome birds in May."
Wordsworth: Female Vagrant.

2. Bright; cheering; gay.

"To live and die in a shady bower, Single on the gladsome earth."
Wordsworth: White Doe of Rylstone, vii.

* glăd'-sŏme-lў, * glad-sum-li, adv. [Eng. gladsome; -ly.] In a gladsome manner; with joy, gladness, or gaiety.

"It shal shewe itself to them, and gladsumli in alle prouydence it shal aghen come to them."—Wyclife: Wisdom, vi. 17.

* glăd'-sŏme-nĕss, * glad-sum-nesse, s. [Eng. gladsome; -ness.] A state of gladness; joy; pleasure; cheerfulness.

Glăd'-stŏne, s. [After the English Statesman, W. E. Gladstone.]

1. A roomy four-wheeled, two-seated pleasure carriage.

2. Short for Gladstone bag; a long, light, leather traveling-bag, so constructed as to contain a dress suit without crushing it.

glăg'-ĕr-ite, s. [Gr. γλαγερός (glageros) = full of milk, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A white or yellowish-white variety of Halloysite from Bavaria.

gla'-gŏl, s. [Slavon., = a word.] The earliest Slavonic alphabet, principally used in Istria and Dalmatia, in the psalms, liturgies, and offices of the Roman Catholic Church. It appears to have been originally cut on sticks in the Runic fashion, and to have existed before Christianity.

gla-gŏl-ĭt'-ĭc, a. [Eng. glagol; -itic.] Of or pertaining to glagol: as, the Glagolitic alphabet.

glāik, s. [GLEEK, s.]

1. Deception; delusion; trickery. (Scotch.)

¶ Fling or give the glaiks in folks' een: To throw dust in people's eyes. (Lit. & Fig.)

"Fit only to fling the glaiks in folks' een."—Scott: Heart of Midlothian, ch. xii.

2. A transient glance, or gleam.

glāik'-ĕt, glāik'-ĭt, glāik, a. [GLAIK, s.] Light-headed; idle; foolish. (Scotch.)

"Bolted off this gate, after a glaiket ne'er-do-weel."—Scott: Redgauntlet, ch. ii.

glāik'-ĭt-nĕss, s. [Eng. glaikit; -ness.] Levity of manner or conduct; light-headedness.

glāir, * glāire, * glayre, * glay-er, * glar-ye, * gleyre, s. [Fr. glaire (for claire), from Lat. clarus = bright, clear; Sp. & Port. clara; Ital. chiarea; Low Lat. glarea = gravel.]

1. The white of an egg, used as a size in gilding, or as a varnish to preserve paintings.

"Medylle hyt wyth gleyre of ane egge and temper hit in a schelle with thy fyngere."—Forkington MS. (Warton Club, 1855), p. 78.

2. Any viscous, transparent substance resembling the white of an egg.

"I found the tongue black and dry, with a black glaire on the teeth."—Fordyce: On Muriatic Acid, p. 11.

* 3. Any bright, shining substance.

"The wal of jasper that glent as glayre."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems: Pearl, 1,025.

glāir, v.t. [GLAIR, s.] To smear or overlay with the white of an egg; to varnish.

• glāire, s [GLAIR, s.]

* glāir'-ĕ-ŏŭs, * glāir'-ŏŭs, a. [Fr. glaireux, from glaire = glair.] Resembling or of the nature of glair or the white of an egg; viscous and transparent.

glāir'-ĭne, s. [Eng. glair; -ine.] A glairy substance which forms upon the surface of some thermal waters.

* glāir-ў, a. [Eng. glair; -y.] Resembling or of the nature of glair; covered with glair.

glāive, * glayfe, * glafe, * glayve, * gleive, * gleyve, * gleve, s. [Fr. glaive, from Lat. gladius = a sword.]

* 1. A kind of weapon carried by foot-soldiers, and consisting of a cutting edge fixed to the end of a pole.

"Ilkan in hande a ful god gleive." Havelok, 1,770.

† 2. A broadsword; a falchion; a curved sword; a scimitar.

"The Delhi with his cap of terror on,
And crooked glaive; the lively, supple Greek."
Byron: Childe Harold, ii. 66.

¶ In the following instance the word appears to be used for some kind of dart or javelin:—

"Glayues scherpe thai gunne cast."
Sir Ferumbras, 2,722.

glāl'-zĕ, a. [GLOSSY.]

glā'-ma, glāme, s. [Gr. γλαμάω (glamaō) for λημάω (lēmaō) = to be bleareyed, purblind; λήμη (lēmē) = a humour that gathers in the corner of the eye, gum, rheum.]

Pathol.: (For def. see etym.).

glăm'-ōr, *glăm'-ēr, s. [Icel. glamr = a legendary ghost or spirit.]

1. The influence of some charm on the eye, causing it to see things differently from what they really are; a magical deception of sight. Also, the influence of any kind of enchantment which distorts one's perception and affects one's opinion, perhaps contrary to facts.

* 2. Witchcraft; magic.

"Like that maiden in the tale Whom Owydion made by glamour out of flowers."
Tennyson: Enid, 743.

3. A kind of haze covering objects, and causing them to appear differently from what they really are.

glançe, * glaunce, s. [Sw. glans = lustre, brightness, *gläns*a = to shine; Da. glands = lustre, brightness, glandse = to gloss, glaze; Dut. glans = lustre, glanzen = to put a gloss upon; Ger. glanz = splendor, glänzen = to glitter, all being nasalized forms from the same root as glitter. (Skeat.)] [Glint.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A sudden shoot or dart of light or splendour; a flash.

"Each sword's bright glance, seemed summons from their fate." Stirling: Jonathan.

2. A sudden look or casting of the eyes; a momentary and rapid view or look.

"The courtiers who filled the outer room communicated their suspicions to each other by whispers and significant glances."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

3. A slight touch; a graze.

"For they saile away, being not once touched with the glaunce of a shot."—Hackluyt: Voyages, ii. 134.

4. A transient or passing turning of the attention; a slight notice or attention to any subject in passing.

"How fleet is a glance of the mind!"
Cowper: Verses attributed to A. Selkirk.

5. A hint, a reflection.

II. Min.: A term used either as the first or as the second word of various compounds. It implies that the minerals thus characterized have a splendent metallic lustre.

¶ For the difference between glance and glimpse, see Glimpse; for that between glance and look, see Look.

glance-coal, s.

Min.: The same as Anthracite (q.v.).

glance-copper, s.

Min.: The same as Chalcocite.

glançe, * glaunce, v.i. & t. [Glance, s.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To shoot or dart a sudden flash of brightness or splendor; to flash.

"Now flashing wide, now glancing as in play, Swift beyond thought the lightnings dart away."
Cowper: Truth, 242.

2. To move rapidly about, so as to cause flashes of colors; to dart about; to appear and disappear quickly.

"The mute fish that glances in the stream."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. iii.

3. To move or fly off in an oblique direction; to be turned aside during motion.

"The damnèd arrow glanced aside."
Tennyson: Oriana, 41.

* 4. To be turned aside, so as to miss that which is aimed at.

"The jest did glance away from me."
Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, v. 2.

5. To look with a sudden and rapid cast of the eye; to snatch a hasty or passing view of any object.

"Doth glance from heaven to earth."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, v.

6. To make an incidental or passing remark on; to notice briefly in passing; to refer to briefly.

7. To hint at; to censure by hints or allusion. (Followed by at.)

"Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at:
And, after this, let Cæsar seat him sure."
Shakesp.: Julius Cæsar, ii. 2.

B. Transitive:

1. To shoot or dart suddenly or momentarily; to cast for a moment.

"He glanced a look of holy pride."
Wordsworth: White Doe of Rylstone, ii.

2. To refer to briefly or incidentally; to hint at.

"In company I often glanced it."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, v.

glançʼ-ēr, s. [Eng. glanc(e); -er.] One who glances; one who casts a glance.

glançʼ-ĭng, * glaun-synge, pr. par., a., & s. [Glance, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act of casting a hasty or momentary look upon; a referring or alluding to anything briefly.

2. The state of being turned aside out of the direct course.

glançʼ-ĭng-lȳ, * glaunc-ing-ly, adv. [Eng. glancing; -ly.] In an oblique manner; incidentally, indirectly; not directly.

"Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokenly and glancingly."—Hakewill.

glănd, s. [Fr. glande, from Lat. glans (genit. glandis) = a nut-like fruit, as an acorn, a beech-nut, a chestnut, &c.]

I. Anat.: A term at first vaguely applied to any smooth round viscus, but which is now limited to such of the seas secrete—i.e., separate by a process of cell-growth, certain constituents of the blood which are afterwards poured out from the gland by means of a duct. While yet the term glands was vaguely used, Sylvius divided them into conglobate and conglomerate glands. To these Malpighi added the follicular or simple glands found in the fauces and behind the ears. They are now divided into secreting and lymphatic glands (q.v.). (Parr, Huxley, &c.)

"The glands, which o'er the body spread, . .
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct."
Blackmore: Creation.

2. Bot. (Pl.): Cells or aggregations of cells distinguished from those in their neighbourhood by containing resinous, oily, sugary, or fragrant substances. The walls of the cells generally become degenerated, and are ultimately dissolved, a cavity being thus formed as seen in the rind of the orange and lemon. In other cases the secretion is discharged externally. Ordinary glands occur in almost all the tissues of plants. Nectaries or honey-secreting glands of flowers are superficial, and are met with on all parts of the flower and receptacle. Mirbel divides glands into vascular glands, in which there are cells and vessels united, and cellular glands, which consist of cellular tissue alone. Glands may be simple, compound, internal, lenticular, sessile, or stalked, &c. (McNab, &c.)

3. Found.: A hooked bar by which the parts of a moulder's flask are clamped together.

4. Machinery:

(1) A contrivance consisting of a cross-piece or clutch for engaging or disengaging machinery moved by belts or bands.

(2) A plate through which the ends of a band or tightening clevis pass; a clip-plate.

5. Steam Engin.: The cover of a stuffing-box.

¶ (1) Ductless or Vascular Glands:

Anat.: Certain bodies resembling glands in form, but not possessing ducts for secretion, so that their products must be conveyed to them by lymphatic or sanguiferous vessels. Examples, the spleen, the thyroid body, the thymus gland, the suprarenal capsules, the pituitary body, the follicular glands at the root of the tongue and the lymphatic glands. (Quain.)

(2) Follicular or Simple Glands:

Anat.: [Gland, 1].

(3) Lymphatic Glands:

Anat.: [Lymphatic].

(4) Secreting Glands:

Anat.: The typical kind of glands to which the name is now very frequently restricted. They collect and discharge at particular parts various matters derived from the organism, that these may be further employed for special purposes in the economy, or simply eliminated as redundant material or waste products. In the latter case the term used is excretion. In this process the nucleated cell takes a prominent part. When there is a simple recess formed of secreting membrane, the gland is said to be simple. Examples of this structure occur in the mucous membrane of the stomach, the intestines, &c. When the cavity is subdivided as well as extended with the view of increasing the secreting surface, the gland is said to be compound. The latter are again sub-divided into first tubular and second saccular or racemose glands. The glands of the testicle and those of the kidney are tubular; the salivary, lachrymal, and mammary glands, and most of the glands opening into the mouth, the fauces, and the windpipe are racemose glands. They and some others constituted the conglomerate glands of Sylvius. [Gland.] (Quain.)

(5) Simple Glands: [¶ (2); see also Gland, No. 1 and 2].

(6) Vascular Glands: [¶ (1)].

 glănd'-age (ag as ĭj), s. [O. Fr., from Lat. glans = an acorn.] The act of feeding on acorns; the season when swine are turned into the woods to eat the mast; mastage.

glănd-ĕr, v.t. [Glanders.] To affect or infect with glanders (q.v.).

glănd'-ĕred, a. [Eng. glander; -ed.] Affected with or suffering from glanders.

"It hath recovered even a glandered horse."—Berkeley: On Tar-water.

¶ By the laws of some nations, a penalty is imposed on persons bringing glandered horses to the market or turning them out on unenclosed land. (Wharton.)

 glănd'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Eng. glander; -ous.] Glandered.

glănd'-ĕrs, s. [Gland.]

1. Farr.: A very dangerous and contagious disease in horses, attended with a running of corrupt matter from the nostrils, and enlargement and induration of the glands of the lower jaw.

"His horse is possessed with the glanders."
Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

2. Pathol.: A corresponding disease communicated to man by contact with glandered animals. It is often fatal.

glănd-ĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Lat. glans (genit. glandis) [Glands]; fero = to bear, and Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Bearing acorns or other nut-like fruits.

"The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

glănd'-ĭ-form, a. [Lat. glans (genit. glandis) [Glans], and forma = form, shape.]

Bot.: Having the form of an acorn or other nut.

glăn-dī'-na, s. [Lat. glans (genit. glandis), and fem. sing. suff. -ina.]

Zool.: A sub-genus of Achatina, with an oblong fusiform shell, having the aperture narrow and elliptical. Found in West Indies, Central America, &c. Known species 186. Fossil from the Eocene onward. (Woodward.)

glăn'-dŭ-la, s. [Glandule.]

glăn'-dŭ-lar, a. [Mod. Lat. glandul (a); and Eng., &c. suff. -ar.]

Anat., Bot., &c.: Characterized by the presence of a gland or glands. (Used in botany specially of a plant covered with hairs bearing glands upon their tips.)

"Germ awled; pointed, furrowed, with prominent seedlets, sitting on a glandular pedicel."—Sir W. Jones: On Select Indian Plants.

glandular-hairs, s. pl.

Bot.: Hairs possessing glands of any kind, and wherever situated. De Candolle divided them into glandiferous hairs, in which the gland was formed at the summit of the hair, and excretory glandular hairs, in which it was at the base.

glandular-tissue, glandular woody-fibre, s.

1. Bot.: Tissue or woody fibre marked by rows of glands, ducts, or regular punctuations, having a central pore surrounded by a discoidal area, these rows of dots being placed in series, and parallel with the medullary rays. They exist chiefly in the Coniferæ, but also in the Winteraceæ.

2. Palæobot.: When the glands described under No. 1 were found, as they often were, beautifully conspicuous in fossil wood, it was often assumed to be coniferous; but, as Mohl pointed out, these dots are not confined to Coniferæ. Still the probability of evidence is in the favour of the ordinary identifications, and most of the fossil wood in the palæozoic and secondary formations has the glands arranged alternately, as in the modern Araucaria.

glănd'-ŭ-lar-lȳ, adv. [Eng. glandular; -ly.]

Bot., &c.: In a glandular manner; having glands; as, glandularly-crenated, glandularly- serrated, glandularly-muricated, and glandularly-toothed. (Paxton.) glănd-ụ-lā'-tion, s. [Eng. glandul(e); -ation.]

Bot.: The arrangement and structure of the glandules in certain plants.

glănd'-ule, glăn'-dụ-la (pl. glăn'-dụ-læ), s.

Anat. & Bot.: A little gland. In Anatomy there are glandulæ ceruminosæ, a glandula lacrymalis, &c.; in Botany, glandulæ hypogynæ, hypogynous glandules, &c.

"'Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood."—Ray: On the Creation, pt. ii.

glănd-ụ-lĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Lat. glandul(a) (q.v.); fero = to bear, and Eng., &c. suff. -ous.] Bearing many glandules, or simply bearing glandules.

glănd'-ụ-lōse, a. [Lat. glandulosus = full of kernels, glandulous.] The same as GLANDULOUS (q.v.).

* glănd-ụ-lŏs'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. glandulos(e); -ity.]

1. The state of being glandulose.

2. A glandule.

"In the upper part of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosities."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iii., ch. vii.

glăn-dụ-lō-şo-, pref. [Lat. glandulosus.]

Bot., &c.: Glandulose, glandulous.

glanduloso-serrate,

Bot.: Having serratures lipped by glands.

glănd'-ụ-loŭs, a. [Lat. glandulosus = full of kernels.]

1. Full or abounding in glands; or simply provided with glands, containing glands.

"All glands and glandulous parts do likewise consist of fibres, but of the softer kind."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. i., ch. v., § 18.

2. Pertaining to glands.

3. Resembling glands.

glănş, s. [Lat. = the nut-like fruit of some forest trees; an acorn, a beechnut, a chestnut, &c.]

1. Bot.: A fruit sometimes, though rarely, called in English a gland, placed by Lindley in his class called Syncarpi, and the section of it with inferior fruit. It is hard, indehiscent, dry, one-celled, with one or few seeds. It is developed from an ovary having several cells and several seeds, all of which are abortive except one or two. It is situated within the kind of persistent involucre called a cupule. The pericarp is crowned with the remains of the calyx teeth, but being minute they easily escape observation. Sometimes the glans is solitary, as in the oak; at others there are more than one of them in the cupule, as in the sweet chestnut and the beech. (Lindley.)

2. Anat.: Any structure of somewhat similar form.

The integument adheres . . . to the spongy tissue of the glans."—Quain: Anatomy, i. 431.

glă-phyr'-ĭ-a (yr as ir), s. [Gr. γλαφυρία (glaphuria) = smoothness, polish; γλαφυρός (glaphuros) = hollow, hollowed; γλάφω (glapho) = to hew, to carve.]

Bot.: A genus of Myrtlehlooms, tribe Myrteæ. Glaphyria nitida is called by the Malays the tree of long life, from ascending on the hillside higher than any other tree. The natives of Bencoolen call it the tea-plant, and use it as a substitute for tea. (Lindley.)

* glăre (1), s. [GLAIR.]

glāre (2), s. [GLARE, v.]

I. An overpowering lustre or light; any dazzling splendour or brightness.

"[One] visual nerve shrinks from a painful glare Of overpowering light."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vi.

2. A fierce piercing look or stare.

"About them round
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare."
Milton: P. L., iv. 402.

glāre, * glar-yn, * glore, v.i. & t. [Etym. doubtful, but probably an English word; cf. A.S. glær = a transparent substance, amber; cogn. with Dut. gloren = to glimmer; Icel. glora = to gleam, to glare; M. H. Ger. glosen = to shine, to glow. Closely related to glass. (Skeat.)]

A. Intransitive:

I. To shine with a dazzling or overpowering light, lustre, or brightness.

"Strong perfumes and glaring light Oft destroy both smell and sight."
Carew: To my Cousin.

2. To look with fierce, piercing eyes; to stare wildly or fiercely.

"The lion and fierce tiger glared aloof."
Milton: P. R., i. 313.

3. To have a dazzling effect; to shine with excessive brightness; to displease or offend by gaudiness or over-colouring. [GLARING.]

"He maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glares not."—Dryden.

* B. Trans.: To shoot or dart out in fierce flashes.

"One spirit in them ruled, and every eye Glared lightning."
Milton: P. R., vi. 849.

¶ For the difference between to glare and to shine, see SHINE.

glăr'-ĕ-ō-la, s. [Dimin. of Gr. γλάρος (glaros), λάρος (laros) = a ravenous sea-bird, perhaps the cormorant (?); Fr. glaréole.]

Ornith.: The typical genus of the sub-family Glareolinæ (q.v.). Glareola pratincola is the Pratincole (q.v.).

glăr-ĕ-ō-lī'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. glareol(a); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: A sub-family of Charadriidæ. The bill is short, much compressed, arched, and deeply cleft. The wings are long and narrow, the tail usually forked. The toes four, the middle toe and claw very long, the hinder one elevated, but touching the ground.

glăr'-ĕ-ōse, a. [Lat. glareosus = full of gravel, gravely; glarea = gravel.]

Bot.: Growing in gravelly soil or places.

glăr'-ĕ-oŭs, a. [GLAIROUS.]

* glăr'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. glary; -ness.] The quality or state of being glary; glaringness.

"Bright crystal glass is glary; and to avoid that glariness, our artificers run into the other extreme."—Boyle: Works, vol. vi., p. 135.

glăr'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GLARE, v.]

A. As. pr. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

I. Literally:

1. Shining with a dazzling or overpowering brightness or lustre; staring or looking fiercely.

2. Displeasing or offending the taste by gaudiness or ostentatious colours; to be too conspicuous or overcoloured.

"The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest."—Felton: On the Classicks.

II. Fig.: Notorious, barefaced, infamous, notorious: as, a glaring falsehood.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between glaring and barefaced: "Glaring designates the thing; barefaced characterizes the person; a glaring falsehood is that which strikes the observer in an instant to be falsehood; a barefaced lie or falsehood betrays the effrontery of him who utters it. A glaring absurdity will be seen instantly without the aid of reflection; a barefaced piece of impudence characterizes the agent as more than ordinarily lost to all sense of decorum." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) glăr'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. glaring; -ly.]

I. In a manner so as to offend the taste by overcolouring or by being too conspicuous.

"Yet there we ne'er condemn such hostile hues
As cut the parts or glaringly confuse."
Mason: Du Fresnoy: Art of Painting.

2. In a barefaced, notorious, or shameless manner; barefacedly, openly.

"Mr. Hobbes has been reputed the first or principal man . . . that openly and glaringly espoused them."—Waterland: Works, viii. 41.

glăr'-ĭng-nĕss, s. [Eng. glaring; -ness.] The quality or state of being glaring.

"The glaringness of his prose."—Jarvis: Don Quixote, pt. i., bk. i. ch. i.

* glăr'-ў, * glar-le, a. [Eng. glare; -y.] Of a dazzling or overpowering brightness or lustre; glaring.

"In the winter time, so glarie is the ground,
That neither grass, nor other graine, in pastures may be found."
Turberville, i. 386.

* glas, s. [GLASS.]

* glase (1), v.i. [GLOZE.]

* glase (2), v.t. [GLAZE.]

* glas-en, * glas-un, a. [GLAZEN.]

glaş'-ĕr-ite, s. [Named after a chemist, Christopher Glaser, who flourished about A.D. 1664, the salt having long ago been called sal polychrestum Glaseri.]

Min.: The same as Aphthitalite (q.v.). The Br. Mus. Catalogue prefers the name Glaserite, and makes Aphthitalite the synonym.

* glas-fat, * glæs-fat, s. [A.S. glæsfæt. O. H. Ger. glasfaz; M. H. Ger. glasevaz; Ger glasgefass.] A glass vessel or pot.

"Anne while after than that glasfat an honden nom." Layamon, ii. 319.

glas'-ītes, s. pl. [GLASSITES.]

* glas-inge, s. [GLAZING.]

glass, * glas, * glaso, * glasse, * gleas, * glēs, * glese, s. & a. [A.S. glæs; cogn. with Dut. glas; Dan. glas, glar; Sw. glas; Icel. gler, glas; Ger. glas; O. Sw. glas, glær, O. H. Ger. clas.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

I. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II. 2.

(2) A glass vessel or instrument of any kind, as

(a) A mirror; a looking-glass.

"Whoever in those glasses looks, may find
The spots returned, or graces, of his mind.'
Waller: Upon Ben Jonson.

(b) A drinking-vessel or cup made of glass.

"To this last costly treaty,
That swallowed so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' the rinsing."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., i. 1.

(c) An optical instrument composed partly of glass; a telescope.

"The moon whose orb Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views."
Milton: P. L., i. 288.

(d) A glass vessel partially filled with fine sand for measuring time; an hour-glass.

"Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, i. 2.

(e) An instrument, composed partly of glass, for indicating atmospheric changes; a barometer; a thermometer.

(f) (Pl.) A pair of spectacles or eye-glasses.

(3) The quantity which a glass drinking-vessel will hold.

"Your son should never chat over a glass of wine till midnight."—Locke: On Education, § 21.

* 2. Fig.: The time in which the sand of man's life runs out; the allotted life of man.

II. Technically:

1. Chem.: A substance or mixture, earthy, saline, or metallic, brought by fusion to the state of a hard, brittle, transparent mass, with a conchoidal fracture.

2. Comm.: A hard, brittle, transparent substance, formed by fusing together mixtures of the silicates of potash, soda, lime, magnesia, alumina, and lead in various proportions, according to the quality or kind of glass required.

Flint-glass is used in making table ware and many articles of domestic furniture and fittings. The molten glass is taken from the pot by a ponty, and is blown or pressed into shape, or, by a combination of operations, is held in a mould while being blown. Its density is 3. Crown and flint-glass are combined in the manufacture of achromatic lenses.

Crown-glass is taken by the ponty from the pot, and is then blown and whirled until it becomes globular. A ponty tipped with molten glass is applied to the bulb, the blowing-tube detached, leaving a hole. The globe being again whirled, the glass flashes into a circular disk, adhering by a boss in its centre to the ponty. Its density is 2·5.

Sheet-glass is glass withdrawn by the ponty from the pot and blown and whirled till it assumes a cylindrical form. The ends being cut off, and the cylinder slit longitudinally, the sheet is heated, pressed, and rubbed until it is flattened out. This is also called cylinder-glass or broad-glass.

Plate-glass is made by pouring it upon a table which has a marginal edge of a height equal to that designed for the thickness of the glass. A roller travels over the table, resting on the ledges and flattening out the glass, which is thus made of equal thickness throughout.

Bottle-glass has nothing peculiar in the mode of its manufacture, but is made of coarse ingredients

¶ Pliny reports that some mariners with a cargo of "nitrum" (soda or some other salt), having landed near the mouth of a small stream, at the base of Mount Carmel, in Palestine, lit a fire, using some blocks of the salt for a grate. The heat fused the sand and the salt together, and produced glass, which then for the first time become known. The occurrence may have happened, but glass was known in Egypt, and represented on the monuments, as early as the time of Osirtasen, B.C. 1740. Remains have been found also in the ruins, not merely of Egyptian, but of Assyrian, Greek, Roman, and Etruscan cities. The ancients used it for bottles; for instance many lachrymatories of it have been found. Gregory of Tours says that in the fourth century churches had coloured glass windows. In 1458 Æneas Sylvius mentioned, as a proof of the wealth of Vienna, that the houses of the inhabitants had glass windows. In 1557 it began to be manufactured in England. Glass manufacture is one of the important industries of modern times, alike in the United States and in Europe, glass being used not only for windows and bottles, as of old, but for many other purposes.

3. Naut.: The half-minute or quarter-minute sand-glass used with the ship's log; also the half-hour or sand-glass which regulates the watches; the time in which one of such glasses is emptied of its sand.

"Past the mid-season: at least two glasses."
Shakesp.: Tempest, I. 2.

glass annealing-furnace, s. A furnace in which articles or sheets of glass are kept for a while in a heated condition, and allowed gradually to cool; a leer.

glass-blower, s. One whose business or trade is to blow or fashion glass.

Glass-blower's lamp: A gas or alcohol lamp.

glass-blowing, s. A mode of manufacturing glass-ware and window-glass by taking a mass of viscid glass from the melting-pot on the end of the blowing-tube, and then inflating the mass by blowing through the tube, rolling on the marver, and exposing it at the furnace opening where its contained air is expanded and itself enlarged.

glass-case, s. A case or shallow box having a glass lid or cover, and sides, so as to enable the contents to be seen without opening the case.

glass-cavity, s.

Min.: A cavity in a mineral containing a glassy substance. These cavities are sometimes found in crystals of leucite. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxxi., § 394.)

glass-cloth, s.

Fabric: A fabric produced by interweaving fabrics of glass, which are, in a very attenuated state, extremely flexible.

 glass-coach, s.

1. Orig.: A carriage of the superior order. The term is now obsolete, but it originally expressed that the vehicle had glass windows instead of opaque panels or curtains.

2. Later: (For def. see extract).

"Glass-coaches are [admitt'd into the English parks]: meaning by this term, which is never used in America, hired carriages that do not go on stands." —J. F. Cooper: Miles Wallingford, ch. x.

glass-colouring, s. The act or art of tinting glass by incorporating metallic oxides in its substance; thus oxide of cobalt imparts a deep blue colour; protoxide of copper, green; oxide of gold, a ruby red, &c. Coloured glass is known as flashed, or as pot-metal; in the former case a film of coloured glass is laid over the white; in the latter, the colour is stirred up with the metal in the pot, imbuing its whole substance.

glass-crab, s.

Zool.: A crustacean which received its name from its transparency, while, on account of its very much flattened and membranous body, it was called by Leach, Phyllosoma. It is now known to be an immature state of the Podophthalmata (q.v.).

glass-cutter, s. One whose business or occupation is to cut glass, or to grind it down into various ornamental shapes; an instrument for cutting glass.

glass-cutting, s. The art or process of cutting, shaping or modifying the surface of glass by mechanical means, as by revolving wheels of iron, stone, or wood supplied with sand and water, or by means of a blast of air or steam carrying a stream of sand, which is directed upon the part to be cut or bored.

glass-enamel, s. A term applied to a semi-lucid or an opaque glass, which owes its milkiness to the addition of binoxide of tin. The transparencies which are hung in windows or form shades for lamps are of this semi-lucid character, and are miscalled porcelain transparencies. Watch-dials have an opaque, glass-enamelled face on a metallic backing.

glass-eye, s.

1. Ord. Lang.: A ball or shell of glass, coloured to represent a human eye, and worn by persons who have lost an eye.

2. Ornith.: The name given in Jamaica to a thrush, Turdus jamaicensis, which has a pellucid glass-like eye.

Glass-eye berry: A berry on which the Glass-eye feeds.

 glass-faced, a. Reflecting, like a mirror, the looks of another: as, a glass-faced flatterer. (Shakesp.: Timon, i. 1.)

glass-furnace, s. A furnace in which the materials of glass are fused.

glass-gall, s. [SANDIVER.]

 glass-gazing, a. Often contemplating oneself in a mirror.

"A whoreson, glass-gazing, super-serviceable, finical rogue."—Shakesp.: Lear, ii. 2.

glass-grinder, s. The same as GLASS-CUTTER (q.v.).

glass-grinding, s. The same as GLASS-CUTTING (q.v.).

glass-hive, s. A hive composed wholly or in part of glass.

glass-maker, s. One whose business or trade is to make glass.

Glass-maker's soap: A name given to manganese, from its cleansing action in its association with glass-making materials. It is used to rid the materials of colour arising from carbonaceous matters and protoxide of iron. An excess of it gives a purple tinge to the glass.

glass-mosaic, s. An imitation of antique mosaic work, formed of small cubes of glass mixed with various colouring matters, chiefly metallic oxides, so as to form opaque coloured enamels, which are cast into slabs or flat cakes, the slab being afterwards cut into very small cubes or rectangular pieces. With these little coloured cubes a picture is built up, by inserting each one separately in a bed of cement.

glass-mould, s. A metallic shaping-box in which glass is pressed or blown to form.

glass-oven, s. A heated chamber in which just-made glass in sheets or ware is placed to cool gradually. A glass-annealing furnace; a leer.

glass-painter, s. One who produces designs in colours on glass.

glass-painting, s. Glass-painting is thus distinguished from glass-staining; the former has a design painted upon it with colours which are burnt in; the latter receives its colour in the process of manufacture, or the separate pieces are coloured after having been cut to the required shapes out of white glass. In one case it is a painting of enamelled colours on sheets of glass; in the other it is a painting made up of pieces having the required colours, fitting together and held by leaden cames. [GLASS-STAINING.] There are four methods: 1. The mosaic, the earliest. 2. The mosaic stain. In this mode the window is made up of detached pieces, as in the mosaic; but the shades are given by a stain of brown, which seems to have been the first colour which the artists succeeded in firing on to the pieces of glass. 3. The enamel. By this all the required colours are painted upon the same piece of glass and fired in the kiln, producing the effect of an oil-painting. 4. The mosaic enamel. In this mode coloured glass is used as a groundwork to paint on, instead of white.

glass-paper, s. A polishing-paper made of paper thickly strewn with finely-powdered glass. The fragments of broken wine-bottles, &c., are carefully washed to remove dirt, the glass is crushed under a revolving stone and sifted into six sizes, as in manufacturing emery. It is sifted through sieves of wire-cloth, which are generally cylindrical, like the bolts of flour-mills. The cloths have from sixteen to ninety wires to the inch. A surface of thin glue is spread on the paper, and the pulverised glass dusted over it with a sieve.

glass-press, s. A device to apply pressure to glass in a mould while in a plastic state.

glass-rope, s.

Zool.: Hyalonema, a genus of siliceous sponges, consisting of a cup-shaped body affixed to a muddy part of the sea-bottom by means of a rope of long twisted siliceous fibres.

glass-shade, s. A cover of glass placed over artificial flowers, or articles of value, to protect them from the dust; or over gas-jets, lamps, &c., to modulate and equalize the light.

glass-shell, s.

Zool.: Hyalæa or Hyalæa, a genus of Pteropoda, with a translucent shell.

glass-shrimp, s.

Zool.: Erichthys, a genus of crustaceans, order Stomapoda.

glass-silvering, s. The process of coating glass with silver, mercury, &c., in order to form mirrors. [MIRROR.]

glass-snail, s.

Zool.: Vitrina, a genus of molluscs, family Helicidæ. Vitrina pellucida and two other species occurs in Britain.

glass-snake, s.

Zool.: Ophisaurus ventralis. A lizard, of the family Zonuridæ, or Chalcidæ. From the absence of feet, they look like serpents. They are found in America. The name glass-snake is supposed to allude to the brittleness of their tail.

glass-soap, s. [GLASSMAKER'S-SOAP.]

glass-stainer, s. One who follows the trade or occupation of glass-staining.

glass-staining, s. The art or process of colouring glass during the process of manufacture.

glass-stopper, s. A stopper or stopple for bottles, made of glass.

glass-tears, s. pl. [RUPERT'S-DROPS.]

glass-tongs, s. pl. Grippers for hot bottles, &c., in course of manufacture, or for handling bottles containing heated or freezing mixtures.

 glass, v.t. [GLASS, s.]

1. To see or look at in a glass or mirror.

"The formal youth, that knew no other grace
Or value, but his title, and his lace, Glasses himself."
L'Estrange: On Beaum. & Flet. Plays.

2. To reflect or show as in a glass or mirror

"Wherein is glassed serenity of soul."
Byron: Manfred, ii. 2.

3. To case or enclose in glass.

"Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy:
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glass't,
Did point out to buy them, along as you past."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, ii.

4. To cover as with glass; to glaze.

"I have observed little grains of silver to be hid in the small cavities, perhaps glassed over by a vitrifying heat."—Boyle.

 glass'-chord, s. [Eng. glass, and chord.]

Music: A musical instrument with keys like a pianoforte, but with bars of glass instead of strings of wire.

 glass-en, * glas-en, * glas-un, * glaz-ene, * gles-ene, a. [A.S. glæsen.] Made of or resembling glass; glazed, glassy.

"[He] pursues
The dice with glassen eyes."
Ben Jonson: Epistle to a Friend.

glass'-ĕs, s. pl. [GLASS.] Spectacles.

glass'-fŭl, s. [Eng. glass; -ful(l).] As much of anything as a glass will hold.

glass'-hôuse, s. [Eng. glass, and house.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A house or building where glass is made; glassworks.

"I remember to have met with an old Roman mosaic composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses."—Addison: On Italy.

2. A house built entirely or chiefly of glass; a conservatory.

II. Fig.: A position open to attack or to unfavourable criticism: hence the proverb, Those who live in glasshouses should not throw stones.

glass'-ĭ-lў, adv. [Eng. glassy; -ly.]

1. So as to resemble glass.

2. With glassy eyes.

"Vance stared glassily around him."—Mortimer Collins: From Midnight to Midnight, vol. iii., ch. x.

glass'-ĭ-nĕss, *glass'-ў-nĕss, s. [Eng. glassy; -ness.] The quality or state of being glassy, a vitreous appearance.

"The glassyness of the surface."—Smollett: France & Italy, lett. xxxi.

glass'-ĭng, s. [Eng. glass; -ing.]

Leather-manuf.: The operation of dressing leather on the grain side by a tool consisting of a glass slip set in a wooden handle.

Glass'-ītęs, Glas-ītes, s. pl. [For etym. see def.]

Ch. Hist.: A Christian sect founded by the Rev. John Glas, minister of the (Presbyterian) Established Church of Scotland at Tealing, near Dundee. In 1728, he published a book called "The Testimony of the King of Martyrs concerning His Kingdom" (John xviii. 36), in which he opposed the establishment of national churches. Having been deposed, in 1729, by the Synod of Angus, he thereupon founded the sect called after his name. With regard to faith he believed it to be an intellectual act of assent to the Divine testimony. In 1753 Mr. Sandeman, his son-in-law, embraced his opinions, carrying them to a more extreme length. In 1760 the son-in-law removed to London, and in 1764 to America. Being better known in these places than Mr. Glas, the churches were called Sandemanian. In the census of 1851 there were six in England. In the Registrar-General's list of registered places of worship, in 1883, the Glassites and the Sandemanians figure as distinct sects. [SANDEMANIANS.]

glass'-lĭke, a. [Eng. glass, and like.] Like or resembling glass; glassy; of a vitreous appearance.

"For by example most we sinned before,
And glasslike clearness mixed with frailty bore."
Dryden: Astræa Redux, 208.

glass'-măn, s. [Eog. glass, and man.] One who deals in glass.

"The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman."—Swift.

glass'-mĕt-ąl, s. [Eng. glass, and metal.] Glass in fusion in the pot.

"Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal."—Bacon: Physical Remains.

glass'-pŏt, s. [Eng. glass, and pot.] The pot in which the frit is fused into glass. They are made of pure refractory clay, mixed with about one-fifth its weight of old pots pulverised by grinding, are built up instead of being formed on a mould, and baked by being subjected to a white heat.

glass'-wāre, s. [Eng. glass, and ware.] Articles or utensils manufactured of glass.

glass'-wŏrk, s. [Eng. glass, and work.]

*1. The manufacture of glass.

2. Articles or utensils manufactured of glass; glassware.

3. (Pl.) A place or building where glass is manufactured.

"They crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks."—Bacon: Natural History.

glass'-wŏrm, s. [Eng. glass, and worm.] A glowworm.

glass'-wŏrt, s. [Eng. glass, and wort.]

Bot.: Salicornia, a genus of flowerless plants growing in salt marshes. Two species are British, the Jointed Glasswort (Salicornia herbacea), and the Creeping Glasswort (S. radicans).

"For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort."—Browne: Vulgar Errours.

glass'-ў, glass-ie, glas-y, a. [Eng. glass; -y; -ie.]

1. Made of glass.

"Honour is like that glassy bubble
That finds philosophers much trouble."
Butler: Hudibras, pt. ii. c. ii.

2. Resembling glass in lustre or some other quality.

"His conscience, like a glassy lake before, Lashed into foaming waves, begins to roar."
Cowper: Truth, 259

3. Dull; lacking fire or life; applied to the eyes.

glassy-felspar, s.

Min.: The same as SANIDINE (q.v.).

Glas'-tŏn-bŭr-ў (t silent), s. & a. [See def.]

A. As substantive:

Geog.: A town in Somersetshire, the seat of a celebrated abbey, now in ruins.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the town or abbey mentioned under A.

Glastonbury-thorn, s.

Hort.: A variety of the hawthorn flowering about Christmas. Said to have been introduced by the monks of the abbey.

glâub-ăp'-ą-tīte, s. [Eng. glaub(er), and apatite.]

Min.: A variety of Apatite, in colour yellowish-brown to chocolate-brown, from Monk's Island.

glâu'-bĕr, s. [Named after Glauber, a German chemist, who first artificially made glauber-salt. He died in 1668.] (For def., see etym. and compound.)

glauber-salt, glauber's-salt, s.

1. Chem. & Pharm.: A name popularly given to sodium sulphate, $Na_2SO_4{\cdot}10H_2O$.

2. Min.: The same as MIRABILITE (q.v.).

glâu'-bĕr-īte, s. [Eng., &c. glauber, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A monoclinic yellow, grey, or brick-red mineral, of vitreous lustre and white streak; its hardness 2·5 to 3; its sp. gr. 2·64 to 2·85. Compos.: sulphate of soda 51·1; sulphate of lime 48·9 = 100. Occurs in New Castile in Spain, in Upper Austria, in Bavaria, in California, and in Peru. (Dana.) glâu-çĕsç'-ençe, s. [Lat. glau(cus); suff. -escence.] The state of being glaucescent or slightly sea-green in lustre.

glâu-çĕsç'-ent, a. [Lat. glaucus, and suff. -escent.] [GLAUCOUS.]

Bot.: Becoming sea-green. Not very different from glaucous (q.v.).

glâu'-çĭc, a. [From Lat. glauc(ium), and Eng., &c., suff. -ic.]

Chem.: Of, belonging to, existing in, or derived from glaucium (q.v.).

 glaucic acid, s.

Chem.: The acid contained in Glaucium flavum, identical with fumaric acid.

glâu'-çĭn, glâu'-çĭne, s. [Lat. glauc(ium), and Eng. &c., suff. -ine (Chem.).]

Chem.: The alkaloid contained in the leaves of Glaucium flavum. The leaves are macerated with acetic acid, then the juice is pressed out, boiled, filtered, and the filtrate treated with lead nitrate, which precipitates lead fumarate. The filtrate is treated with H_2S, then the glaucine is precipitated with tannin, and the precipitate decomposed by chalk. Glaucine crystallizes out of water in small crystalline scales; it is easily soluble in alcohol and ether. It forms crystalline salts.

† glâu'-çĭne, a. [Lat. glauc(us); -ine.]

Bot.: The same as GLAUCOUS (q.v.).

glâu'-çĭ-ŭm, s. [Lat. glaucion; Gr. γλαύκιον (glaukion) = the juice of a plant, probably the Horned-poppy, Glaucium corniculatum.]

Bot.: A genus of Papaveraceæ. It consists of glaucous poppies with yellow juice. The flowers are large, yellow or purple, the ovary two-celled; placentas two, seeds many, testa pitted. Known species, five or six. One is British—viz., Glaucium luteum, the Yellow Horned-poppy. It has large, handsome flowers, and their pods from six to ten inches long. It is found on sandy shores, blooming from June till October. The Scarlet Horned-poppy, G. phœniceum, has been found in Norfolk, but is not truly wild.

glâu-cō, pref. [Lat. glaucus; Gr. γλαυκός (glaukos).]

Min., &c.: Of a glaucous colour.

glâu'-cō-dōte, glâu'-cō-dŏt, s. [Ger. glaucodot: pref. glauco- (q.v.), and Gr. δοτός (dotos) = a gift.]

Min.: An orthorhombic, greenish, tin-white mineral of metallic lustre and white streak; its hardness, 5; sp. gr., 6. Compos.: Sulphur, 19·4; arsenic, 45·5; cobalt, 23·8; iron, 11·3 = 100. Occurs in chlorite slate in the province of Huasco in Chili, also in Sweden. (Dana, &c.)

glâu'-cō-līte, s. [Ger. glaucolith: pref. glauco- (q.v.); Gr. λίθος (lithos) = a stone.]

Min.: A blue or greenish-grey variety of Scapelite from the region east of Lake Baikal, where it occurs in veins in granite.

glâu'-cō-mą, s. [Lat., from Gr. γλαύκωμα (glaukōma), from γλαυκός (glaukos) = pale blue or grey, and ὄμμα (omma) = the eye; from the dull grey gleam of the eye affected by the disease.]

Med.: A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. (Quincy.)

glâu-cŏm'-ą-toŭs, a. [Lat. glaucoma; Gr. γλαύκωμα (glaukōma) [GLAUCOMA], genit. γλαύκωματος (glaukōmatos), Eng. adj. suff. -ous.]

Med.: Of, belonging to, or having the nature of glaucoma (q.v.).

glâu'-cō-nīte, s. [Pref. glauco- (q.v.); n euphonious (?), and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.). Named from its green colour.]

Min.: An amorphous green opaque mineral, like earthy chlorite, with a dull or glistening lustre; its hardness, 2; sp. gr. 2·2 to 2·4. It is a hydrous silicate of iron and potash. Compos.: Silica, 49·3; alumina, 3·6; sesquioxide of iron, 22·7; protoxide of iron, 6·3; potash, 8·3, and water, 9·6. There are two varieties of it: the one the green earth of cavities in eruptive rocks, the other the green grains in the greensand formation, or anything similar. Found in many places.

glâu-cō-nĭt'-ĭc, a. [Eng. glauconit(e); -ic.]

Min. & Geol.: Of or belonging to glauconite.

"Glauconitic grains of greensand."—Nicholson: Palæont., ii. 516.

glâu'-cō-phāne, s. [Pref. glauco-, and φαίνω (phainō) = to make to appear.]

Min.: An orthorhombic or monoclinic mineral, translucent or opaque, occurring in six-sided prisms. Hardness, 3·5; sp. gr., 3·1; colours, lavender, blue, bluish-black, or greyish: streak, powder, greyish-blue. Compos.: Silica, 56·49; alumina, 12·23; protoxide of iron, 10·91; protoxide of manganese, 0·50; magnesia, 7·97: lime, 2·25; soda and potassa, 9·28. Occurs in the island of Syra, one of the Cyclades. (Dana.) glâu-cō-pĭ'-crĭne, s. [Pref. glauco-, and picrine (q.v.).]

Chem.: An alkaloid occurring in the root of Glaucium flavum. The root is exhausted with acetic acid, then precipitated with ammonia, redissolved in acetic acid, then precipitated with a solution of oak bark, and decomposing the precipitate with chalk, is crystallized out of ether. Glaucopicrine forms granular needles, which are soluble in alcohol and in water. When heated with concentrated sulphuric acid it gives a dark grass-green colour. The salts of glaucopicrine are crystalline, and have a very bitter taste.

glâu-cō-pī'-næ, s. [Mod. Lat. glaucop(is) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: The name given by Swainson to the Wattle-crows, a sub-family of Corvidæ. The bill is short; the culmen elevated and curved from the base; the upper mandible entire; the wings short, rounded; the tail lengthened, graduated, or cuneated.

glâu-cō'-pĭs, s. [Gr. γλαυκῶπις (glaukōpis)= having fierce gleaming eyes; γλαυκός (glaukos) [GLAUCUS], and ὤψ (ops) = the eye.]

Ornith.: The typical genus of the sub-family

Glaucopinæ. Glaucopis cinerea occurs in New Zealand

glâu-cō-sĭd'-ēr-īte, s. [Pref. glauco-, and Eng., &c. siderite (q.v.); Ger. glaukosiderit.]

Min.: The same as VIVIANITE (q.v.).

glâu-cō'-sĭs, s. [Gr. γλαυκωσις (glaukōsis)= blindness, produced by glaucoma (q.v.).]

Path.: (For def. see etym.).

glâu'-coŭs, a. [Lat. glaucus; Gr. γλαυκός (glaukos) = (1) glancing silver, (2) pale blue, grey.]

Bot.: Sea-green, dull green, passing into greyish-blue.

glâu'-cŭs, s. [Lat. Glaucus; Gr. γλαυκός (glaukos).] [GLAUCOUS.]

1. Class. Myth.: A fisherman of Anthedon, in Eubœa, who, seeing that a fish brought ashore so recovered its strength by eating a certain herb that it was able again to leap into the water, had the curiosity himself to taste the plant, which he had no sooner done than he plunged into the deep and became a sea god. (Ovid: Metam. vii. 233, &c.)

2. Zool. (Of the form glaucus): A genus of Nudibranchiate Gasteropods, family Æolidæ. The animal is elongated and slender, with the foot linear and channeled, the tentacles four, the gills slender, and supported on three pairs of lateral lobes. Known species, seven; floating on seaweed in the Atlantic and Pacific, their food being small sea-jellies. Mr. C. Bennett, who captured Glaucus hexapterygius in a towing net, in lat. 4° 26' N., long. 19° 30' W. describes its beauty as remarkable. The upper parts were of a brilliant red colour, the lower ones pearly white.

glând'-kĭn, s. A kind of gown worn in the time of Henry VIII.

glâum, v.i. To snatch greedily.

"To hear the thuds, and see the cluds,
O' clans frae woods, in tartan duds,
Wha glaumed at kingdoms three, man."
Burns: Battle of Sheriff Muir.

glâux, s. [Lat. glaux; Gr. γλαύξ (glaux) = (1) the owl, from its glaring eyes; (2) a plant, the Milk vetch (Astragalus glaux of Linnæus); γλαξ (glax) = the plant only, from γλαυκος (glaukos).] [GLAUCOUS.]

Bot.: Sea-milkwort, a genus of Primulaceæ, family Primulidæ. Flowers small, axillary sessile, white, or pink; calyx five-parted, coloured; corolla wanting; stamens five, hypogynous, alternate with the lobes of the calyx; ovary subglobose; style filiform; stigma obtuse; capsule five-valved, few seeded. Glaux maritima occurs in Britain on muddy seashores and estuaries, also in the salt districts of Worcester and Stafford.

glâve, s. [GLAIVE.]

glâved, a. [Eng. glav(e); -ed.] Armed with a glaive.

glâv'-ēr, v.i. & t. [Etym. doubtful.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To babble, to jabber.

"Here many, clepid filosophirs, glaveren dyversely."
—Wycliffe: Select Works, i. 181.

2. To flatter.

"A glavering councll is as dangerous as a wheedling priest or a flattering physician."—L'Estrange.

B. Trans.: To flatter, to wheedle, to cheat.

"Ne glauerez her neghbor wyth gyle."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems: Pearl, 647.

glâv'-ēr-ēr, s. [Eng. glaver; -er.] A flatterer, a wheedler, a parasite.

"These glauerers gone, myself to rest I laid."
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 407.

glāy'-mōre, s. [CLAYMORE.]

glay-men, gley-myn, v.t. [A variant of CLAM (q.v.).] [CLAMMY.] To make sticky or clammy.

"Gleymyn or yngleymyn. Visco, inviscо."—Prompt. Parv.

glay-mous, gley-mows, a. [GLAYMEN.] Sticky, clammy.

"Gleymows or lymows. Limosus, viscosus."—Prompt. Parv.

glay-mous-ness, gley-mowse-nesse, s. [Eng. gleymous; -ness.] Stickiness, clamminess.

"Gleymousenesse, or limowsnesse. Limositas, viscositas."—Prompt. Parv.

glāze, glase, glas-en, glas-yn, v.t. & i. [GLASS, s.; cf. Icel. glæsa = to polish; M. H. Ger. glasen = to glaze.]

A. Transitive:

1. To furnish with glass, as a window; to cover with a sheet of glass: as, To glaze a window or a picture.

"Francis Williamson of Southwark, glazier, and Simon Symonds of St. Margaret's, Westminster, glazier, agreeing curiously and sufficiently to glaze four windows of the upper story of the church of King's College, Cambridge."—Walpole: Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i., ch. iv.

2. To furnish with windows of glass.

"She came to Westminster Hall, which was richely hanged with clothe of Arras and new glazed."—Hall: Hen. VIII. (an. 25).

3. To overlay with glass, or a substance resembling glass; to cover with a vitreous substance.

"For its aptness to vitrify, and serve the potters to glaze their earthen vessels, the miners call pottern ore."—Boyle: Works, vol. i., p. 323.

4. To overlay or overspread with anything shining and transparent like glass; to make glassy.

"Sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears, Divides one thing intire, to many objects."
Shakesp.: Richard II., ii. 2

5. To make smooth or glossy; to polish: as, To glaze cloth, &c.

"As they have a method of glazing it, it is more durable."—Cook: Voyages, vol. iii., bk. ii., ch. iii.

B. Intrans.: To become glassy; to assume a dull, glassy appearance; to become overspread with a semi-transparent film.

"A light on Marmion's visage spread,
And fired his glazing eye."
Scott: Marmion, vi. 32.

glāze, s. [GLAZE, v.] A vitrifiable composition for covering earthenware or porcelain. Glaze on earthenware has several objects: (1) to render the ware impermeable to liquids, (2) To impart lustre, (3) To preserve colours and patterns. In cookery the word is applied to the white of eggs, or strong gravy or jelly boiled down to the consistency of a thin cream, and used to cover pastry, &c. with a glossy, shining coating. In painting it is used for any kind of varnish intended to preserve the picture from the effects of the atmosphere, and to add brilliancy to the colours.

"It is late in the day to discuss the chromatic range of Sir Joshua's palette, or to argue about his mixtures, and his glazes."—Pall Mall Gazette, Jan. 3, 1883.

glaze-dew, s.

Bot.: Stilbum; a genus of hyponycetous fungi.

glaze-kiln, s.

Pottery: A kiln in which glazed biscuit-ware is placed for firing. It is analogous to the glost-oven (q.v.).

glāzed, pa. par. or a. [GLAZE, v.] glazed-beard, s. A kind of mill-board having a hard, smooth surface, to give a smooth face to the paper or fabric pressed between such boards.

glaz-en, a. [A.S. glæsen.] Resembling glass; glassy, glass-like, vitreous.

glāz'-ēr, s. [Eng. glaz(e), v.; -er.] One who or that which glazes: as—

(1) A cutler's or lapidary's wheel of a grade between the grinding and the polishing. It is made of discs of wood so arranged as to present the grain outwardly, that is, radially. The wooden surface is fed with emery-cake. Mahogany, oak, apple, beech, or birch are employed. Other glazers have a covering of leather or a cap of lead or tin alloy to carry the emery for grinding or glazing cutlery.

(2) A calendering or calico-smoothing wheel.

glāz'-ĭe, a. [Eng. glaz(e): -ie = -y.] Glittering; as smooth as glass.

"Tho' now thou's dowie, stiff, and crazy
An' thy auld hide as white's a daisy,
I've seen thee dappl't sleek, an' glazie."
Burns: Farmer to His Auld Mare Maggie.

glā'-zier (zier as zhŭr), s. [Eng. glaz(e); -ier.]

1. Lit.: One whose trade or business it is to glaze windows, picture frames, &c.; one who sets glass in windows, &c.

"The panes of glasswork are set and fastened by the glazier."—Moxon: Mechanical Exercises.

*2. Fig.: An eye.

"You're out with your glaziers."—Broome: A Jovial Crew, act. ii.

glazier's diamond, s. An implement for cutting glass, consisting, as now universally made, of a handle, by which it is held between the fingers and guided, and having awivelled at its lower end a holder or block, in which a small diamond with one of its natural angles exposed is inserted.

glazier's knife, s. A knife used by glaziers in clearing out the remains of old panes from the fillisters of sash, and puttying in new ones. Such knives are known as hacking, stopping, and putty knives.

glazier's point, s. A small, triangular piece of tin plate, employed to secure a pane of glass in the sash previous to puttying.

glazier's vice, s.

Plumbing: An apparatus for forming leaden bars for the reception of window-glass. The bar is called a came, and the mode of glazing is called fret-work.

glāz'-ĭng, glas-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [GLAZE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act or process of setting glass in window sashes, picture frames, &c; the art or trade of a glazier.

"Nay, in spite of constant glazing and tiling, the rain perpetually drenched the apartments."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

2. The act of giving a glazed or shining appearance to, resembling that of glass; the act of covering with a glaze, as potters' ware, pastry, &c.

3. The act of polishing metal on a wheel dusted with polishing-powder.

4. The act of spreading a semi-pellucid cover over a painting to soften asperities.

5. The act or process of giving a glazed or glossy surface to gunpowder. All good powder is glazed in order to enable it to more perfectly resist moisture and bear transportation. For this purpose the grains from the breaking-rollers, after having been assorted by sifting, and while still containing three or four per cent. of water, are placed to the amount of several hundred pounds in a glazing-barrel; this is journaled at the ends, and is caused to rotate for some ten or twelve hours, breaking off the angular projections of the grains and causing them to assume a smooth and glossy surface. Pulverized plumbago is sometimes added to produce a deceptive appearance of high glazing.

6. Glasswork; glazed windows.

"Holy al the story of Troye
Was in the glasynge ywrought."
Chaucer: Book of the Duchess, 328.

glazing-machine, s. A press with two polished rollers to calender paper.

glazing-wheel, s. A wooden wheel covered with leather charged with emery, and used by cutlers, especially for grinding and sharpening knives, tools, &c. It is also used instead of filing for levelling and surfacing many metallic articles; for removing the scale from casting, and for trimming small castings, such as builders' hardware. A wooden wheel without any covering is used by lapidaries in smoothing soft and rounded stones. These wheels are used with flour-emery and water.

glē, s. [GLEE.]

glēad (1), s. [GLEDE.]

glēad (2), s. [GLEED.]

glēam, s. [A.S. glæm, glœm; cogn. with O.S. glimo = brightness; O. H. Ger. glimo = a glow-worm; allied to glow and glimmer.]

1. A flash or shoot of light; a gleam, a ray; a little stream of light; brightness, splendour, lustre.

"For this in Autumn searched the blooming waste, Nor lost one sunny gleam? for this sad fate?"
Thomson: Autumn, 1,187.

2. A short or sudden glimpse or sight; a ray.

"If we consider the frequent reliefs that we receive from it [laughter], and how often it breaks the gloom which is apt to depress the mind and damp our spirits with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure in life."—Addison: Spectator, No. 249.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between gleam, glimmer, ray, and beam: "Certain portions of light are designated by these terms, but the gleam and glimmer are indefinite: the ray and beam are definite. The gleam is properly the commencement of light, or that portion of opening light which interrupts the darkness; the glimmer is an unsteady gleam: ray and beam are portions of light which emanate from some luminous body: the former from all luminous bodies in general, the latter more particularly from the sun. . . . Gleam and ray may be applied figuratively; beam only in the natural sense: a gleam of light may break in on the benighted understanding, but a glimmer of light rather confuses." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

glēam (1), v.i. & t. [GLEAM, s.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To dart or throw gleams or rays of light; to shine, to glimmer.

"'Now Thyrza gazes on that moon'— Alas, it gleamed upon her grave!"
Byron: One Struggle More.

2. To shine, to glitter.

"The field all iron cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn,
Cuirassiers all in steel for standing fight."
Milton: P. R., iii. 326.

B. Trans.: To shoot or dart out as flashes of light.

"Dying eyes gleamed forth their ashy lights."
Shakesp.: Rape of Lucrece, 1,378.

* glēam (2), * gleame, * gleme, v.t. & i. [A.S. gilm = a handful, as of reaped corn.] [GLEAN, v.] To glean; to gather up ears of corn which have been passed over.

"To gleame corne, spicilegere."—Levins: Manipulus Vocabulorum.

glēam (3), v.i. [Etym. doubtful.]

Falconry: To disgorge filth, as a hawk.

* glēam'-ēr, s. [Eng. gleam (2), -er.] A gleaner.

"Gleamer of corne. Spicilegus."—Huloet.

* glēam'-ȳ, a. [Eng. gleam; -y.] Emitting gleams or flashes of light; darting out beams of light; gleaming; radiant.

"The gleamy streaks of purple morn."
Mickle: The Lusiad, v.

glēan, * glene, v.t. & i. [O. Fr. glener; Fr. glaner, from Low Lat. gleno, from glena, glenna, gelina, or gelima = a handful; from A.S. gilm = a handful of gathered corn.] [GLEAM (2), v.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To gather, as ears of corn which have been passed over on the cornfield.

2. To gather ears of corn from.

"With smiling patience in her looks, she went To glean Palæmon's fields."
Thomson: Autumn, 217.

II. Figuratively:

1. To gather together; to collect.

"Gleaning all the land's wealth into one."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., iii. 2.

2. To acquire, to gain, to obtain.

"Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may Be therein gleaned."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iii. 3.

3. To collect or bring together from scattered sources; to pick up here and there.

"Our humbler Muse,
[Who] only reads the public news
And idly utters what she gleans." Whitehead: Variety.

4. To conclude; to infer.

"Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 2.

* 5. To strip; to make bare.

"Galling the gleaned land with hot assays."
Shakesp.: Henry V., i. 2.

B. Intransitive:

1. Lit.: To gather stalks or ears of corn which have been left on the cornfield.

"She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers."
—Ruth ii. 3.

2. Fig.: To gather or pick up from various sources or with difficulty.

"Piecemeal they win this acre first, then that;
Glean on, and gather up the whole estate."
Pope: Satires of Dr. Donne, ii. 90.

* glēan (1), s. [GLEAN, v.] A collection or bundle, as of corn, made by gleaning.

"The gleans of yellow thime distend his thighs."
Dryden: Virgil; Georgic iv. 267.

* glēan (2), s. [Prob. for clean (q.v.).] The afterbirth, as of a cow or other domestic animal; the cleaning.

glēan'-ēr, s. [Eng. glean, v.; -er.]

1. Lit.: One who gleans or gathers corn after the reapers.

"On the weake fields to trace the gleaner's way."
Scott: Lord of the Isles, i. (Introd.)

2. Fig.: One who collects assiduously from various sources.

"An ordinary coffee-house gleaner in the city is an arrant statesman."—Locke.

glē'-bą, s. [Lat. = a lump of earth, glebe.]

Bot.: The same as GLEBULA, 1.

glēbe, s. [Fr. glèbe, from Lat. gleba = a clod of earth, soil; Sp. & Ital. gleba.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. Land, soil, ground, turf.

"Great Eusham's fertile glebe what tongue hath not extolled?"
Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

2. In the same sense as II. 1.

* 3. A lump, mass, or concretion.

"Congelable again by cold into brittle glebes or crystals."—Arbuthnot.

II. Technically:

1. Law: The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

† 2. Mining: A tract of land containing some mineral ore.

glēbe-land, s. The same as GLEBE, II. 1.

glēbe'-lĕss, a. [Eng. glebe; -less.] Destitute of a glebe; having no glebe.

* glē-bŏs'-ĭ-tȳ, s. [As if from a Lat. glebositas, from glebosus.] The quality or state of being glebous.

* glēb'-ŏŭs, a. [Lat. glebosus, from gleba = a clod, soil; Sp. gleboso.] Pertaining to or consisting of turf or soil; turfy.

glē'-bų-la (pl. glē'-bų-læ), s. [Lat. = a small clod or lump of earth, a clod; dimin. of gleba = a lump of earth, a clod.]

Botany:

1. Sing.: The peridium or fleshy part of certain fungals. the same as GLEBA (q.v.).

2. Plural:

(1) Gen.: Masses in appearance like crumbs. (R. Krown, 1874.)

(2) Specially:

(a) Little roundish elevations of the thallus of lichens.

(b) The spores of certain fungals. (Treas. of Bot.) glēb'-ȳ, a. [Eng. gleb(e); -y.] Containing or consisting of soil or turf; fertile, fruitful.

"You dwelling safe in gleby Troy, the Greeks retire their force." Chapman: Homer; Iliad iii.

glē-chō'-mą, s. [From Lat. glechon; Gr. γλήχων (glēchōn) = a plant, the Penny-royal (Mentha Pulegium).]

Bot.: A Linnæan genus of Labiates, tribe Nepeteæ. It is now reduced to a sub-genus of Nepeta. Ground Ivy, Glechoma hederacea of the older Floras, is now generally called Nepeta Glechoma.

glē'-chŏn, s. [Lat. glechon; Gr. γλήχων (glēchōn).] [GLECHOMA.]

Bot.: A genus of Labiates, tribe Melisseæ. Glechon spathulatus is a diuretic and diaphoretic.

glēde (1), gled, s. [A.S. gleda = a kite; lit. = the glider, from the motion of the bird; glidan = to glide.] The kite.

"I am as hungry as a gled, my bonny dow."—Scott: Waverley, ch. xlii.

* glēde (2), gleed, gleid, s. [A.S. glēd, from glówan = to glow; Dut. glöde, from gloe to glow; Icel. glóðr; Sw. glöd; O. H. Ger. gluot, glôt; Dan. glöd.]

1. A burning coal.

"All glowed as a gledc, the goste there ho glides."
Sir Gawan & Sir Gal., i. 9, 10.

2. A fire.

"Allace, scho said, in warld that I was wrocht!
Gif all this payne on my self uycht be brocht!
I haiff seruit to be brynt in a gleid." Wallace, iv. 751.

glĕdge, s. [A softened form of gley or gleg.] A sly look.

"But he gae a gledge wi' his ee that I ken'd he took up what I said."—Scott: Old Mortality, ch xxxviii.

glĕdge, v.i. [GLEDGE, s.] To look slily at any one; to look askance or cunningly.

"The next time that ye send or bring ony body here, let them be gentles allenarly, without ony freind servants, like that chield Lockhard, to be gledging and gleeing about, and looking to the wrang side of ane's housekeeping, to the discredit of the family."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxvi.

glĕ-dĭtsch'-ĭ-a, s. [Named after John Gottlieb Gleditsch, a German botanist, who in 1753 published a classification of fungi.]

1. Bot.: A genus of Cæsalpiniæ, tribe Dimorphandreæ. Gleditschia triacanthus or triacanthos is the Acacia or Honey-locust of America. It is a large tree, and has been introduced into Britain; but it seldom flowers, and yet more rarely ripens its seeds in this country.

2. Palæobot.: The genus is believed to occur in the Pliocene of Europe.

gleē, * gle, * glee, * gleowe, * gleu, * glewe, * glu, * glye, s. [A.S. gleow, gléo, gliw = joy, mirth, music; cogn. with Icel. glý = glee.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Joy, mirth, merriment, delight, gaiety.

"The ancient bard his glee repressed."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, ii. 12.

2. Music; minstrelsy.

* 3. Game, sport.

"Y wot no gameth the no gle."
Legend of St. Gregory, W2.

* 4. Metaphorically applied to a struggle of any kind; a battle; a contest.

"Thocht in to the Forest to ly,—
And with trawaill, and stalwart fycht,
Chace Dowglas out off the countré Bot othyr wayis then yield the gle."
Barbour, ix. 701.

II. Music: A composition for voices in harmony, consisting of two or more contrasted movements, with the parts so contrived that they may be termed a series of interwoven melodies. It may be written for three or more voices, either equal or mixed; but it is necessary that there should be only one voice to a part. It may be designed with or without instrumental accompaniment, and set to words in any style—amatory, bacchanalian, pastoral, didactic, comic, or serious. As a composition the glee appears to have historically followed the catch, and to have had its origin at the time when part-singing began to be revived. (Stainer & Barrett.) glee-club, s. A society formed for the practice and performance of glees and part-songs.

* glee-maiden, s. A female dancer and singer.

GLEE-MAIDEN.

"The jougleurs, or jugglers, as we learn from the elaborate work of the late Mr. Strutt on the sports and pastimes of the people of England, used to call in the aid of various assistants, to render these performances as captivating as possible. The glee-maiden was a necessary attendant. Her duty was tumbling and dancing; and, therefore, the Anglo-Saxon version of Saint Mark's Gospel states Herodias to have vaulted or tumbled before King Herod. In Scotland these poor women seem, even at a late period, to have been bonds-women to their masters."—Scott: Note to the Lady of the Lake, vi. 6.

* glee, v.i. [GLEY.]

* gleē'-craft, * gleo-cræft, s. [A.S. gléo-cræft.] The science or knowledge of music.

"Seiden that he wes god of alle gleocræften."
Layamon, i. 299.

gleēd, gleid, gleyed, a. [Eng. gle(e), v.; -ed.] One-eyed; squinting; awry; oblique. (Scott: Rob Roy, ch. vi.)

gleed, s. [GLEDE (2), s.] A flame; a burning coal; a fire; a spark.

"Not a gleed of fire, then, except the bit kindling peat."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxvi.

* gleē'-drēam, * gleo-dreme, s. [A.S. gléodrēam.] Merriment caused by music; minstrelsy.

"Mid drinchen and mid murie gleodreme."
Layamon, i. 77.

gleē'-fŭl, a. [Eng. glee; -ful(l).] Full of glee or merriment; merry; gay.

"My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When everything doth make a gleeful boast?"
Shakesp.: Titus Andronicus, ii. 3.

gleē'-fŭl-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gleeful; -ly.] In a gleeful manner; merrily, gaily.

"Farmer and fox-hunter alike have gone gleefully through the month."—Field, Jan 28, 1882.

 gleēk, s. [A.S. gliġ, gligg.]

1. A scoff; a mocking; a jest.

"'What will you give us?' 'No money, but the gleek; I will give you the minstrel.'" — Shakesp.: Romeo & Juliet, iv. 5.

2. A game of cards played by three persons with forty-four cards, each hand having twelve, and eight being left for the stock. To gleek was a term used in the game for gaining a decisive advantage; to be gleeked was the contrary. A gleek was three of the same cards in one hand together.

"Honest gleek, ruff and honours diverted the ladies at Christmas."—Evelyn: Mundus Muliebris. (Pref.)

3. Three of anything.

4. A sly or enticing glance of the eye.

"A pretty gleek coming from Pallas' eye." Beaum. & Flet.: Maid in the Mill, i. 2.

, gleēk, v.i. & t. [GLEEK, s.]

A. Intrans.: To mock; to scoff; to sneer; to idle about.

"Nay, I can gleek upon occasion."—Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 1.

B. Trans.: To gain a decisive advantage over one in the game of gleek. [GLEEK, s., 2.]

 gleē-man, * gle-man, * gleo-man, * glew-man, * glu-man, s. [A.S. gleó-man.] A minstrel.

"Loud these Saxon gleemen Sang to slaves the sours of freemen." Longfellow: Norman Baron.

 gleēn, v.i. [Prob. a variation of gleam (1), v., as glean is of gleam (2).] [GLEAM (2), GLEAN, v.] To gleam; to shine; to glitter.

"Those who . . . Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid." Prior: Hymn to Jupiter.

 gleē'-sŏme, a. [Eng. glee; -some.] Gleeful, merry, joyous.

"Gleesome hunters, pleased with their sport." Browne: Britannia's Pastorals, bk. ii., a 4.

gleēt, s. [GLEET, v.]

Pathol.: A transparent mucous discharge from the urethra, occurring in gonorrhœa; a thin ichor running from a sore.

"A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet." —Wiseman: Surgery.

 gleēt, v.i. [Prob. from glide (q.v.).] [GLET.]

1. To drip or ooze, as a discharge from a sore.

2. To run slowly.

"Vapours . . . are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains."—Cheyne: Phil. Principles.

gleēt'-ў, a. [Eng. gleet; -y.] Resembling gleet; thin, limpid, ichorous.

glĕg, a. [Icel. gloggr = sharp, attentive.]

1. Sharp, quick, smart; on the alert.

"He's gleg enough at the broadsword and target."—Scott: Waverley, ch. xliii.

2. Sharp, keen; applied to edged tools: as, a gleg razor.

3. Attentive.

4. Eager, keen.

gleī-chĕn'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gleichen(ia), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Polypodiaceæ (Ferns), sometimes made a distinct order, Gleichenaceæ. The spore cases are dorsal, with a transverse, occasionally oblique, ring, nearly sessile, and bursting lengthwise internally; spores oblong or kidney-shaped. (Lindley.) gleī'-chĕn'-ĭ-ą, s. [Named after Baron P. F. Von Gleichen, a German botanist.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gleicheneæ (q.v.). They are found in or near the tropics of both hemispheres. They are pretty ferns. About fourteen have been introduced into British greenhouses. The rhizomes of Gleichenia Hermanii are sometimes eaten.

gleī-chĕn-ĭ-ā'-ċē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gleichenī(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: An old order of Ferns, adopted by Lindley in his Natural System of Botany, but in his Vegetable Kingdom reduced to the tribe Gleicheneæ (q.v.).

glēid, s. [GLEED.]

 gleire, s. [GLAIR.]

glĕn, s. [Gael. & Ir. gleann = a valley, a glen; Welsh & Corn. glyn; cf. Welsh glan = a brink, a side, a bank.] A narrow valley or depression between two hills; a dale.

"That violent commotion, which o'erthrew In town, and city, and sequestered glen, Altar and cross." Wordsworth Excursion, bk. viii.

glē'-nē, s. [Gr. γλήνη (glēnē) = the eyeball; the pupil of the eye.]

Anatomy:

1. The pupil of the eye.

2. Any slight depression or cavity in a bone which receives another bone in articulation. A deeper one is called cotyle. (Parr.) glĕn-lī'-vat, glĕn-lī'-vĕt, s. [See def.] A kind of whiskey, so named from Glenlivat, in Banffshire, where it was first made.

glē-nō-, pref. [GLENE.]

Anat.: Shallow.

gleno-humeral, s.

Anat.: Connected with the shoulders, and shallow. There is a gleno-humeral ligament.

glē'-nōĭd, s. [Gr. γλήνη (glēnē = the pupil of the eye, the eyeball, the socket of a joint, and εἶδος (eidos) = form.]

Anat.: Having the joint shallow, as opposed to cotyloid, or deep. There are a glenoid cavity of the scapula, a glenoid fossa of the temporal bone, and a glenaid ligament between the clavicle and scapula.

"The glenoid cavity of the scapula is shallow."—Trans. Amer. Philos. Society, vol. xiii., p. 199 (1873).

glē-nō-trē-mī'-tēş, s. pl. [Gr. γλήνη (glēnē) [GLENE], and τρῆμα (trēma), τρήμη (trēmē) = that which is pierced through, a hole.]

Paleont.: A genus of fossil Comatulids from the Chalk.

 glĕnt, pret. of v. [GLINT.]

 glĕnt, s. [GLENT, v.] A glance, a glint, a flash.

"Thenne he . . . wyth a glent laghed." Gawaine, 1,290.

 glo-o, s. [GLEE.]

 glet, * glette, s. [Icel. glæta = hnmour.] Filth.

"When he had na other fode But whatsom glet." Hampole: Pricke of Conscience, 457.

 gleve, s. [GLAIVE.]

 glew (1), s. [GLEE.]

 glew (ew as ū) (2), s. [GLUE, s.]

gley, v.i. [Icel. glugga = to stare; Sw. glia = to glance; Dan. gloe = to stare.]

1. To look askance; to squint.

"Sco gleied, als sais the bok." Cursor Mundi, 3,861.

2. To overlook things.

gley, s. [GLEY, v.] A squint or oblique look or glance.

gley, a-gley, adv. [GLEY, v.] A squint; askance; on one side, obliquely.

gleyed, gley-it, gleed, gleid, a. [GLEY, v.]

1. Squint-eyed, squinting. (Wallace, vi. 466.)

2. Oblique, not direct.

¶ To gang gleyed: To go out of the right way.

gleyed-ness, gleid-ness, s. [Eng. gleyed; -ness.] The quality or state of being squint-eyed; obliqueness.

glī'-ą-dīne, glī'-ą-dĭn, s. [Gr. γλία, γλοιά (glia, gloia) = glue.] [GLUTIN.]

glĭb, * glĭbb, a. & adv. [A shortened form of glibbery (q.v.); Dut. glibberig = slippery; glibberen = to slide.]

A. As adjective:

* 1. Smooth, slippery; of such a nature that a body can slide easily upon it.

* 2. Slippery; easily moved or slid along.

"The parts of a body compounded by it are close, catching, flowing slowly, glibb." — Digby: Of Bodies, ch. xiv.

3. Voluble or fluent of speech.

"I want that glib and oily art To speak and purpose not." Shakesp.: Lear, i. 1.

4. Easily and fluently spoken or uttered.

"How smooth, persuasive, plausible and glib, From lulv lips is dropped the specious nb." Criticisms on the Koliad, pt. ii. The Lyars.

B. As adv.: Glibly, smoothly, easily.

"Habakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope compactly twisted together, with a noose that slips as glib as a birdcatcher's gin."—Arbuthnot.

glĭb-gabbet, a. Smooth and ready in speech.

"Ao' that glib-gabbet Highland baron, The Laird o' Graham." Burns: Earnest Cry & Prayer.

 glĭb, s. [Ir. & Gael.]

1. (For def. see extract.)

"The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them."—Spenser: Present State of Ireland.

2. A man wearing such a bush of air.

 glĭb, v.t. [Formed from lib (q.v.), with the A.S. pref. ge-.] To castrate, to lib, to geld, to emasculate.

"I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see, To bring false generations; they are cohairs, And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue." Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

 glĭb'-bĕr-ў, a. [GLIB, a.]

1. Slippery, fickle, uncertain.

"My love is glibbery, there is no hold on't."—Marston.

2. Glib, smooth-tongued, voluble, fluent.

"What, shall thy lubrical and glibbery Muse Live, as she were defunct." Ben Jonson: Poetaster, v. 3.

 glĭb'-bĭn, s. [GLIB, s.] A woman who wore a glib.

"They go bareheaded and are called glibs, the women glibbins."—Gainsford: Glory of England.

glĭb'-lў, adv. [Eng. glib; -ly.] In a glib manner; smoothly, volubly, readily.

"He who . . . pleaded so glibly the cause of another." Longfellow: Miles Standish, vi.

glĭb'-nĕss, s. [Eng. glib; -ness.]

* 1. The quality or state of being glib; slipperiness, smoothness.

"A polisht ice-like glibnesse doth unfold The rocke so round." Chapman: Homer; Odyssey xii.

2. Volubility, fluency.

"With a glibness that left no doubt in my mind but that it was his projected platform performance."—Daily Telegraph, Sept. 23, 1882.

 glicke, s. [GLEEK, s.] glĭd'-dĕr, a. [GLIDE.] Slippery. (Provincial.) glĭd'-dĕr-ў, a. [Eng. glidder; -y.] Slippery, smooth.

"All a barren, hard, grey stretch of shingle, slates, and gliddery stones."—Blackmore: Clara Vaughan, ch. vi., p. 35.

glīde, * glyde (pa. t. * glod, * glode, glided), v.i. & t. [A.S. glidan; cogn. with Dut. glijden; Dan. glide; Sw. glida; Ger. gleiten; O. Fris. glida; M. H. Ger. glîten.]

A. Intrans.: To move smoothly and gently; without noise or violence; to pass or move along without apparent effort or change of step; to slip or slide along, as on a smooth surface.

"Thy shadow still would glide from room to room." Tennyson: Guinevere, 500.

* B. Trans.: To send gliding; to cause to move smoothly and gently.

"Swift as the merciful decrees above Are glided down the Batt'ments of Bliss." Banks: Albion Queens (1735), p. 19.

¶ For the difference between to glide and to slip, see SLIP.

glīde, s. [GLIDE, v.]

1. Ord. Lang.: The act of gliding or moving along smoothly and gently, without noise, apparent effort, or violence; a smooth and easy motion over a level surface produced without change of step.

"The prey at last ensnared, he dreadful darts, With rapid glide, along the leaning line." Thomson: Summer, 278.

2. Music & Phonol.: The joining of two successive sounds without articulation; a slur.

glīd'-ĕr, * glyd-are, s. [Eng. glid(e); -er.] One who or that which glides.

"The glaunce into my heart did glide; Hey ho the glider." Spenser: Shepherds Calender; August.

glīde'-wŏrt, s [Eng. glide, and wort.]

Bot.: A labiate plant, Galeopsis Tetrahit.

glīd'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GLIDE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Ord. Lang.: The act of moving gently and smoothly.

II. Anat.: A term applied to the kind of movement in which the surfaces of adjacent bones are displaced without any accompanying angular or rotatory motion. Example, the advance and retreat of the lower jaw. (Quain.) glĭd'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. gliding; -ly.] In a gliding manner; smoothly, easily, gently.

"The light seemed glidingly to mount the wall."—C. Brontë: Jane Eyre, ch. xxvii.

 glieb, s. [GLEBE.]

 glĭff, v.t. & i. [GLIFF, s.]

A. Trans.: To affright, to alarm.

B. Intrans.: To feel a sudden fear; to be seized with a panic.

"The god man, glyfte with that glasse."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems; Cleanness, 849.

glĭff, s. [Etym. doubtful; cf. Dan. glippe = to blink.]

1. A glimpse; a short time.

"I will sit wi' you a gliff in the evening mysell, man."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. xliv.

2. A fright; a sudden fear; a panic.

 glīke, s. [GLEEK.] A sneer, a scoff; a flout, a jibe.

"Where's the bastard's braves, and Charles his glikes?"
Shakesp.: 1 Henry VI., iii. 2.

glĭm, glime, v.i. [Etym. doubtful.] To look askance or slily, as from the corner of the eye.

glĭm, glymme, s. [A shortened form from glimmer (q.v.); cf. Dan. glimme = to shine; Sw. glimma = to glitter; Dut. glimmen; Prov. Ger. glimm = a spark.] [GLEAM.]

 1. Brightness, splendour.

"So watz I rauyate wyth glymme pure."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems; Pearl, 1,067.

2. A light, a candle. (Slang.)

¶ Douse the glim: Put out the light. (Slang.)

glĭm'-mĕr, * glem-er, * glĭm-er, * glym-er-yn, v.t. [Dan. glimre = to glimmer; glimmer = glitter, mica; Sw. dial. glimmer = (v.) to glitter, (s.) a glimmer, a glitter, mica; Ger. glimmer = a glimmer, mica.]

1. To emit a faint or feeble light; to shine faintly; to flicker.

"I see the earliest gray
Of morning glimmer in the east."
Longfellow: Golden Legend, ii.

2. To wink, to blink. (Scotch.)

3. To have a faint idea or notion of things.

"His glimmering sense
First found his want of words, and feared offence."
Dryden: Cymon & Iphigenia, 113.

¶ For the difference between to glimmer and to gleam see GLEAM.

glĭm'-mĕr, s. [GLIMMER, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A faint, feeble, and unsteady light.

"Yet hath my light of night some memory
My wasting lampes some fading glimmer left."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, v. 1.

2. Glitter.

"Gloss of satin, and glimmer of pearls."
Tennyson: Maud, I. xxii. 84.

II. Min.: Mica.

"Talc, catalver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black."—Woodward: On Fossils.

glĭm'-mĕr-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GLIMMER, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Lit.: A faint, feeble, or unsteady light; a glimmer, a twinkle.

"Greenish glimmerings through the lancets."
Tennyson: Aylmer's Field, 622.

II. Figuratively:

1. A faint ray or flash, as of knowledge, sense, &c.

"[They] had not had their conjectures alarmed by some glimmerings of light into that dark project before."—South, vol. iii., ser. 12.

2. A faint idea or notion; a slight knowledge; an inkling, a glimpse.

"I have not a glimmering of it, yet generally I remember the scope of it."—Latimer: Fifth Sermon preached before King Edward.

 glĭm'-mĕr-ў, * glĭm'-rўe, a. [Eng. glimmer; -y.] Glimmering.

"When fiers glimrye be listed."
Stanyhurst: Virgil; Æneid, iv. 216.

glĭmpse, * glĭmse, s. [A variant of GLIMMER (q.v.); formed by adding s to the bare glim, the p being excrescent. [GLIMPSE, v. GLIM.]

1. A weak, faint light.

"Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute Each orb a glimpse of light."
Milton: P. L., viii, 166.

2. A flash or dart of light.

"We climbed
The slope to Vivian-place, and turning saw
The shimmering glimpses of a stream"
Tennyson: Princess; Conclusion, 46.

 3. A glance.

'Sunk in his skull, his staring eyes did glow,
That made him deadly look, their glimpse did show
Like cockatrice's eyes, that sparks of poison throw."
P. Fletcher: Christ's Triumph on Earth.

4. A short, momentary, or transitory view; a glance.

"Call, methinks yon waving trees afford A doubtful glimpse of our approaching friends."
Johnson: Irene, ii., 2, 93.

5. A faint or alight trace or sign.

"In his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine."
Milton: P. R., i. 98.

6. Short, fleeting or transitory enjoyment.

"The braggart shout
For some blind glimpse of freedom."
Tennyson: Love & Duty.

7. A brief, transitory, or momentary existence.

"I know how loue doth rage upon a yieldinge minde:
How suual a net may take and meash a hart of gentle kinde:
Or els with seldome swete to season heapes of gall:
Reuined with a glimpse of grace old sorrowes to let fall."
Surrey: Description of the Fickle Affections, &c.

8. A faint idea or notion; an inkling; a glimmering.

"Ten thousand broken lights and shapes Yet glimpses of the true."
Tennyson: Will Waterproof, 60.

 9. A faint resemblance; a slight tinge; a tincture.

"No man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of."—Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, i. 2.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between glimpse and glance: "The glimpse is the action of the object appearing to the eye: the glance is the action of the eye seeking the object: one catches a glimpse of an object; we get a glimpse by means of a glance: the former may depend upon a variety of circumstances; the latter depends upon the will of the agent." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

 glĭmpse, v.t. & i. [GLIMPSE, s.]

A. Trans.: To see by a glimpse or glimpses; to catch a transitory or momentary sight or glimpse of.

B. Intransitive:

1. To dawn; to appear with a faint light.

"Then glimpsed the hopeful morrow."
P. Fletcher: Purple Island, xii. 46.

2. To appear by glimpses.

"Deformed shadows glimpsing in his sight."
Drayton: Barons' Wars, v. 45.

 glĭm'-sĭng, * glym-syng, s. [GLIMPSE, s.] A brief or transitory view or sight; a glimpse.

"Ye han som glymsyng and no parfit sight."
Chaucer: C. T., 10,257.

glĭn'-kīte, s. [Russian glinkit. Named after Lieut.-Gen. Glinka.]

Min.: A pale green variety of olivine, which Dana places under Chrysolite. It is found in talcose schist.

glĭnt, v.i. & t. [A nasalized form from the verb glit. [GLITTER.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To gleam, to glitter, to flash.

"God a glorious gleme glent tham emaunge."
King Alexander, p. 164.

2. To peep out.

"Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth."
Burns: To a Mountain Daisy.

 3. To glance.

"Hi glente vpon Syr Gawen, and gaynly he sayde."
Gawaine, 476.

 4. To glance; to slip down.

"Thi strok aduun him glente anon."
Sir Ferumbras, 616.

 5. To hurry; to hasten.

"Fro Cawod scho glent."
Robert de Brunne, p. 822.

 B. Transitive:

1. To glance, to turn, as the eye.

"Fyrumbras on hym glente ys yghe."
Sir Ferumbras, 356.

2. To snatch; to throw hastily.

"Out off his sadel he hym glente."
Richard Cœur de Lion, 5,295.

glĭnt, s. & a. [GLINT, v.]

A. As subst.: A brief or momentary gleam or flash; a glimpse of light; a glance.

"In the slanting glints of sunshine."—Hughes: Tom Brown at Oxford, ch. xlvii.

B. As adj.: Slippery.

"Stones be full glint." Skelton.

glĭr'-ēş, s. pl. [Pl. of Lat. glis = a fat dormouse, or simply a dormouse.]

Zool.: The name given by Linnæus to the Mammalian order, now more generally called Rodentia (q.v.).

glĭr'-ĭne, a. [Lat., &c. glir(es); -ine.]

Zool.: Pertaining to the Mammalian order Glires (q.v.).

 glĭs'-ĕn, v.i. [A.S. glisian; O. Fris. glisa.] To shine, to glitter, to gleam, to glisten.

"Loueliche tresses glisiande als goldwire."
Alisaunder Fragment, 179.

glĭsk, s. [GLISIEN.] A glimpse.

"They just got a glisk o' his Honor as he gaed into the wood."—Scott: Waverley, ch. lxiv.

 glĭs-nen, * glĭs-sen, * glĭs-son, v.i. [A.S. glisnian.] To gleam; to glisten.

"His armours glysenede full brighte."
Rowlande & Otuel, l. 365.

 glĭs-sā'de, v.i. [Fr., from glisser = to glide.] To glide; to slide.

"K. and C. . . . glissaded gallantly over the slopes of snow."—Farrar.

 glĭs-sen, * glys-sen, v.i. [A.S. glissian.] To cast a glance; to glance.

"He glysset up with his ene."
Anturs of Arthur, st. xxviii.

Glĭs'-sŏn, s. [Dr. Francis Glisson, who was born in Dorsetshire in 1597, and was for about forty years Professor of Physic at Cambridge.]

Glisson's-capsule, s.

Anat.: A sheath of areolar tissue surrounding the branches of the portal vein, the hepatic artery and the hepatic duct; first pointed out by Glisson.

glĭst, s. [GLISTEN.] Glimmer; mica.

 glĭs'-tęn (t silent), s. [GLISTEN, v.] A gleam.

"A green glisten singular to witness."—Miss Brontë. Villette, ch. xiv.

glĭs'-tęn (t silent),  glĭst-nen, v.i. [A.S. glisian, the t being excrescent; Ger. gleissen; O. H. Ger. glizan.] To gleam; to shine; to sparkle with light.

"And the streamlets laughed and glistened." Longfellow: Song of Hiawatha, xx.

† glĭs'-tĕr, * glĭs-tren, * glys-ter, v.i. [O. Dut. glisteren.] To shine; to glitter; to sparkle; to be bright.

"With glistering spires and pinnacles adorned," Milton: P. L., iii. 550.

 glĭs'-tĕr (1), s. [GLISTER, v.] Glitter; lustre; brightness.

"The glister of the profit that was judged hereof to have ensued to Scottishmen, at the first sight blinded many men's eyes."—Knox: Reformation in Scotland, bk. i.

 glĭs'-ter (2), * glys-ter, s. [CLYSTER.]

† glĭs'-tĕr-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GLISTER, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or state of glittering, shining, or sparkling; a glitter.

"For the glistering of their [Thracians and Macedonians] harness, gave such a show as they went and removed too and fro, that made a light as clear as if all had been on a very fire."—North: Plutarch, p. 395.

 glĭs'-tĕr-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. glistering; -ly.] In a glittering, shining, or sparkling manner.

 glĭt, s. [GLEET.]

 glĭt-er, * glĭt-er-en, v.i. [GLITTER, v.]

 glĭt'-tĕr, * glĭt-er, * glĭt-er-en, * glyt-er, v.i. [Icel. glitra, a freq. from glita = to shine, glitter; Sw. glittra = to glitter; glitter = glitter, spangle; cf. A.S. glitinian.]

1. To shine; to sparkle; to shine with a broken and scattered light; to gleam; to glisten; to emit flashes or gleams of light.

"Earth glitters with the drops the night distils."
Cowper: Hope, 42.

2. To be showy or specious; to be attractive or striking.

"This excess; and let Italians be Vain authors of false glittering poetry.
Dryden: Art of Poetry.

¶ For the difference between to glitter and to shine, see SHINE.

glĭt'-tẽr, s. [GLITTER, v.]

1. A bright sparkling light or lustre; brightness; brilliancy; splendor.

"With what permissive glory since his fall Was left him, or false glitter."
Milton: P. L., x. 452.

2. Speciousness, attractiveness, showiness.

"Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it."—Collier: On Pride.

* glĭt'-tẽr-and, pr. par. [GLITTER, v.]

* glĭt'-tẽr-ançe, s. [Eng. glitter; -ance.] Glitter; lustre; show; brightness.

"Till from the glitterance of the sunny main He turned his aching eyes."
Southey: Thalaba, bk. xii.

glĭt'-tẽr-ĭng, pa. par., a., & s. [GLITTER, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.:

1. Ord. Lang.: (See the verb).

†2. Bot.: The same as polished, but with the lustre a little broken from slight irregularity of surface. (Lindley.)

C. As substantive:

1. The act or state of sparkling or shining brightly; glitter, lustre.

2. Outward show or attractiveness.

"Every man carries about with him a touchstone, if he will make use of it, to distinguish substantial gold from glitterings, truth from appearances."—Locke: Conduct of the Understanding, Introd.

glĭt'-tẽr-ĭng-lȳ, adv. [Eng. glittering; -ly.] In a glittering, sparkling manner; with glitter or lustre.

glōam, v.i. [A.S. glóm = twilight.] [GLOOM, GLOAMING.]

1. To begin to grow dark: as, It begins to gloam.

"By this time it was turn't gay an' gloam't, an' the hie scaurs looket sae elrichlike, that I grew a wee thing eerie."—Saint Patrick, i. 166.

2. To be sullen or morose.

* glōam, s. [A.S. glóm = twilight.] Gloaming.

"I saw their starved lips in the gloam."
Keats: La Belle Dame sans merci.

glōam'-ĭng, s. & a. [A.S. glómung, from glóm = gloom, twilight.]

A. As substantive:

1. Twilight; the fall of the evening.

"John Heatherblutter fired a shot at him in the gloaming."—Scott: Waverley, ch. lxiv.

*2. Gloominess of spirit.

"Woman, pluck up your heart, and leave all this gloaming"—J. Still.

3. The decline or closing period of life.

B. As adj.: Of or pertaining to the twilight or fall of the evening.

"The lines, that ye sent owre the lawn, Gin gloamin hours reek'd Eben's haun."
Picken: Poems, p. 176. (1788.)

gloaming-fa', s. The fall of the evening.

"I dinna ken but I might brithe ye wi' a cannie hour at gloaming-fa', under the hazel bower birks."—Blackwood's Magazine, Jan., 1821, p. 401.

gloaming-star, s. The evening star.

glōar, v.i. [Dut. glören = to leer.]

1. To squint; to look askew.

2. To stare. (Scotch.) glōat, * glōte, * glout, v.i. [Icel. glotta = to grin; cogn. with Sw. dial. glotta, glutta = to peep; gloa = to glow, to stare; Dan. gloe = to glow, to stare.]

* 1. To cast side glances; to glance.

"Where, gloting round her rocke, to fish she falles."
Chapman: Homer; Odyssey xii.

* 2. To stare.

"So he glotes and grins and bites."
Beaum. & Flet.: Mad Lover, ii. 2.

3. To stare with admiration, eagerness, or desire; to look or dwell on with strong feelings or passions, as of malignity, lust, or avarice; to take a malignant pleasure in beholding anything.

"Here—happy that no tyrant's eye Gloats on our torments—we may die!"
Moore: Fire-Worshippers.

* glō'-bard, * glo-berde, * glo-bird, s. [Eng. glow; second element probably = bird.] The glowworm.

"The glo-birds or glo-worms, cicindelæ, shining in the evening over the corn-fields."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xviii., ch. xxvi.

glō'-bāte, glō'-bāt-ĕd, a. [Lat. globatus, pa. par. of globo = to make into a ball, to make round; globus = a globe.] Having the form of a globe; spherical, spheroidal.

glŏb'-bā, s. [The Molucca name.]

Bot.: A genus of Zingiberaceæ (Gingerworts). They are beautiful plants, with yellow or pinkish flowers. Eight have been introduced into Great Britain from South-Eastern Asia. The fruit of Globba uviformis is said to be eatable.

globe, s. [Fr., from Lat. globus = a ball; Sp. & Ital. globo.]

1. A ball; a sphere; a round or spherical body; a body every part of the surface of which is equidistant from the centre.

2. Anything of a globular or nearly globular shape.

3. The terraqueous ball or sphere; the earth; the world.

"Look downward on that globe whose hither side
With light from hence, though but reflected, shines;
That place is Earth."
Milton: P. L., iii. 722.

4. A sphere of wood, metal or other substance, on which are represented the heavenly bodies; a celestial globe. A round model of the world, representing the land and sea, and usually the political divisions; a terrestrial globe.

¶ Embossed globes show, in exaggerated relief, the elevations and depressions of the earth's surface. As school-room apparatus, globes are used for illustrating the form and motions of the earth, the position and apparent motion of the fixed stars, and for the solution of a number of problems in geography and practical astronomy. For this purpose they are hung so that they will revolve around their polar axes. The earliest English globe was made by Molyneux in 1592. One has been constructed which is 60 feet 4 inches in diameter. Globes have been made of India-rubber and gutta-percha, and others of thin paper, to be inflated and hung in a school-room. These can be folded up when not in use.

* 5. A body of men drawn up in a circle; a number of men or animals gathered into a close body. This was a favorite formation with the Roman generals. [ORB.]

"Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclosed."
Milton: P. L., ii. 512.

globe-amaranth, s.

Bot.: The genus Gomphrena, of which the best-known species is Gomphrena globosa, the Annual Globe-amaranth.

globe-animal, s.

Bot.: Volvox globator, a locomotive fresh-water plant, formerly regarded as an animal. Volvox is of much interest as being perhaps one of the connecting links between unicellular and multicellular forms. It is composed, in a measure, of independent cells, which are connected by their processes and arranged as a hollow globe, but each of which performs its own nutritive and other duties. The young arise and develop in the interior of the globe, which thus acts as a compound organism. The actual biological position occupied by Volvox is still a questionable matter, it seeming to occupy, to some extent, an intermediate position between plants and animals.

globe-clock, s. A globe so mounted as to revolve once in twenty-four or twelve hours, as the case may be, so as to indicate the time on any meridian by an hour circle, or the noon at the time of observation by means of the meridian circle.

globe-cock, s. [GLOBE-VALVE.]

globe-daisy, s.

Bot.: One of the names of the genus Globularia.

globe-filter, s. A filter having a chamber of spherical form, whose hollow interior has a perforated diaphragm or a body of filtering material.

globe-fishes, s. pl.

Ichthy.: The family Gymnodontidæ, of which the chief genera are Diodon and Tetraodon (q.v.). They are so called because by taking air into a larger sac, extending over the whole of the abdomen beneath the skin, they become nearly globular as a result of this inflation. They are represented by numerous species in tropical seas. The smallest are only a few inches long, while the Sea-hedgehog (Diodon hystrix) measures two feet in length. The skin has no scales, but bears imbedded spines. Many of the globe fishes are highly poisonous, the poison varying in intensity in different localities and seasons, and in different individuals. The food of these fishes consists of corals, mollusks, and crustaceans, which their hard beaks are well adapted to break. The distension takes place chiefly in the œsophagus, so that the fish, when inflated, turns over and floats on its back on the surface. In this position it can move and turn by aid of its pectoral fins. [GYMNODONTIDÆ.] globe-flower, s.

Botany:

1. The ranunculaceous genus Trollius (q.v.), so called from the globose flowers. Nine species of the genus are known, all being palæarctic in distribution. The flowers possess a globe of large, showy sepals enclosing the small, inconspicuous linear petals. The common Mountain Globe-flower (Trollius europæus), with its large pale-yellow flowers, is one of the finest ornaments of moist grounds in elevated districts of northern Europe and in the Alps. It grows on mountain pastures throughout the British Islands, and as far east as the Caucasus, and is cultivated in flower gardens. The Scotch name for it is the Locky Gowan. The Orange Globe-flower (T. Asiaticus) is also cultivated in gardens. [TROLLIUS.]

2. Gomphrena globosa, an amaranthaceous plant.

globe-glass, s. A glass vessel of a globular or spherical shape.

globe-like, a. Like a globe in shape; globular; globose.

globe-ranunculus, s.

Bot.: The Globe-flower (q.v.). It is akin to, though not identical with, the ranunculus genus.

globe-slater, s.

Zool.: Sphæroma, a genus of sessile-eyed Crustaceans.

globe-thistle, s.

Bot.: The name given to various species of Echinops, of which about thirty are known. The globular appearance is in the compound heads. [ECHINOPS.]

globe-trotter, s. (Humorous.) One who travels round, or (if frequently) simply about, the world.

globe-valve, s.

1. A ball-valve; one of a spherical shape, usually operated by a screw stem. The valve is now but seldom spherical, but is a disc or frustum of a cone fitting against a seat of corresponding shape.

2. A valve inclosed in a globular chamber.

glō-bĭ-çĕph'-a-lŭs, s. [Lat. globus = a globe; Gr. κεφαλή (kephalē) = head.]

Zool.: A genus of Cetaceans, family Delphinidæ. Globicephalus globiceps, more generally called Phocæna globiceps, is the Bottle-nosed Whale or Porpoise.

glo-bĭf'-ẽr-oŭs, a. [Lat. globus = a globe, a ball; fero = to bear.]

Entom.: Bearing a globe or sphere; used of one of the joints of some antennæ.

glō-bĭg-ẽr-ĭ'-na, s. [Lat. globus = a globe; gero = to carry, to have, to bear, and neut. pl. adj. suff. -ina.]

1. Zool.: The typical genus of the family Globigerinidæ, or Globigerinida. Shell many-chambered, consisting of globose segments arranged in a turbinate spiral or irregularly disposed. The chambers open into a deep, central, umbilical depression.

2. Palæont.: The genus came into existence at least as early as the Chalk, and perhaps even in the Trias. [GLOBIGERINA-MUD.]

globigerina-mud, s.

Geol.: A light-colored calcareous mud in places in the Atlantic 3,000 fathoms deep, and abounding in Globigerinæ, rich in siliceous sponges, and often supporting a varied fauna of Mollusca, Crustacea, and Echinoderms. Prof. Thomson believed it to be not merely a chalk formation, but a continuation of what is technically called the Cretacean formation, the Atlantic having apparently occupied the same geographical situation during the long period since the chalk was laid down. (Proc.

Royal Soc., xvii. 168-200, xviii. 397-492, and xix. 146-222.) Prof. Huxley, writing as early as 1858 in the Saturday Review, had given a sagacious forecast of this interesting discovery.

globigerina-ooze, s. The same as GLOBIGERINA-MUD (q.v.).

"The now well-known calcareous deposit, the Globigerina-ooze, consisting to a great extent of the shells, more or less broken and decomposed, of pelagic foraminifera."—Sir Wyville Thomson: Voyage of the Challenger (1877), ii. 291.

glō-bĭg-ĕr-ī'-nĭ-dæ, glō-bĭg-ĕr-ī'-nĭ-da, s. pl. [Eng., &c, globigerin(a); Lat. fem. or neut. pl. adj. suff. -idæ, -ida.]

1. Zool.: A family of Foraminifera, sub-order Perforata. The shell is hyaline or vitreous. The chambers generally communicate with one another by a larger or smaller crescentic aperture, not by circular pores. Genera, Globigerina, Orbulina, Ovulites, &c.

2. Palæont.: The family came into existence apparently at least as early as the Trias.

glō'-bird, s. [GLOBARD.] A glowworm.

glōb'-ĭst, s. [Eng. glob(e); -ist.] One who understands the use of the globes.

"Being a good globist he will quickly find the zenith."—Howell: Instruct. for Forraine Travel (Appendix).

glō-bō'sc, a. [Lat. globosus, from globus = a globe, a sphere; Ital. & Sp. globoso; Fr. globeux.]

* 1. Ord. Lang.: Like a globe in shape; round, spherical, globular.

"Mark well the finished plan without a fault,
The seas globose and huge."
Cowper: Retirement, 552.

2. Zool.: Globe-shaped. (Owen.)

3. Bot.: Forming nearly a true sphere, as do many seeds. (Lindley.)

glō-bō'sc-lў, adv. [Eng. globose; -ly.] In a globular manner; globularly.

globosely-elliptical, a.

Bot.: Between spherical and elliptical. (Paxton.)

glō-bōs'-ĭte, s. [Lat. globos(us), and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A variety of Dufrenite. It is waxy-yellow to yellowish-grey, with a white streak, and is brittle. It is found in small globular concretions at the Arme Hilfe mine, near Hirschberg.

glō-bŏs'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. globositas, from globosus.] The quality or state of being globose; sphericalness.

glōb'-oŭs, a. [Lat. globosus; Fr. globeux.] Globose, globular, spherical, round.

"Large globous irons fly, or dreadful blss, Stinging the air." Philips: Blenheim.

glŏb'-ū-lar, a. [Lat. globulus, dimin. of globus = a globe, a sphere; Fr. globulaire.] Having the form or shape of a globe or sphere; globe-shaped, round, spherical.

"The form of the body is usually oblong, but when alarmed it has the power of inflating the belly to a globular shape of great size."—Pennant: British Zoology. The Globe Tetrodon.

globular-chart, s. A chart of the whole or some part of the surface of the earth on a globular projection (q.v.).

† globular-minerals, s. pl.

Min.: Minerals occurring in almost complete spheres.

globular-projection, s.

Map-making: A kind of projection proposed by Lahire, in which the eye is supposed to look from a point distant from the globe half the chord of an arc of 90°. The objection to it which has prevented its coming into use is that the great circles appear as ellipses; but withal the distortion is less than in the stereographic projections so continually employed.

globular-sailing, s.

Naut.: A term employed to denote the sailing from one point to another over an arc of a great circle, which is the shortest distance between such points.

glŏb-ū-lăr'-ĭ-a, s. [Lat. globulus = a little ball, a globule; dimin. of globus = a globe. So named from the flowers being in globose heads.]

Bot.: A genus of Selaginaceæ (Selagids). Globularia Alypum, which grows in Southern Europe, is a bitter drastic purgative and emetic; it was once supposed to be the ἄλυπον (alupon) of Dioscorides. Globularia vulgaris, also European, has similar qualities.

† glŏb-ū-lăr-ĭ-ā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. globularia(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: An old order of plants adopted by Lindley in his Natural System of Botany, but in his Vegetable Kingdom merged in Selaginaceæ (q.v.).

glŏb-ū-lăr'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. globular; -ity.] The quality or state of being globular; sphericity.

glŏb'-ū-lar-lў, adv. [Eng. globular; -ly.] In a globular or spherical manner; in manner of a sphere; spherically.

glŏb'-ū-lar-nĕss, s. [Eng. globular; -ness.] The quality or state of being globular; sphericity.

glŏb'-ūle, s. [Fr., from Lat. globulus, dimin. of globus = a ball, a sphere.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A little ball, globe, or sphere; a particle of matter in a globular or spherical form.

"And sometimes a company of little icy globules, that is, misty drops, which have been suddenly frozen by the snow, will be piled one upon another, as to compose a little pyramid, terminating in one single globule at the top; not much unlike to a lavender spike."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. i., ch. iii.

2. Any small body of globular or nearly globular form.

"These minute globules [the eyes of a mole] are sunk so deeply in the skull, and lie so sheltered within the velvet of its covering, as that any contraction of what may be called the eye-brows, not only closes up the apertures which lead to the eyes, but presents a cushion, as it were, to any sharp or protruding substance which might push against them."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. xv.

II. Physiol.: The same as CORPUSCLE (q.v.).

"Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastick, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease."—Arbuthnot: On Aliments.

glŏb'-ū-lĕt, s. [Eng. globul(e), and dimin. suff. -et.] A little globule; a very minute globular particle.

glŏb'-ū-lĭn, s. [Lat. globulus = a little globe; a globe; suff. -in. (Chem.)]

Chem.: Crystallin, Vitellin. An albuminous substance first obtained from the crystalline lens of the eye. Globulin thus obtained is a yellowish transparent mass, which swells up and dissolves in water; the solution becomes opaline at 73°, and coagulates at 93°. Globulin is an albuminate which is soluble in a ten per cent. aqueous solution of sodium chloride, and is reprecipitated by the addition of water, by long contact with which it loses its solubility with alkaline salts, and becomes similar to coagulated albumin. Vitellin can be obtained by treating the yolks of eggs with ether, and treating the residue with chloride of sodium solution, and precipitating with water. Globulin is closely allied to albumin, but differs from it in not being soluble in water unless it contains a small proportion of a neutral salt, and in being precipitated by carbonic acid and (except vitellin) by a saturated solution of common salt. In addition to Crystallin and Vitellin, the Globulins include Fibrinoplastin or Paraglobulin and Fibrinogen, in blood, &c., and Myosin, in muscle. Similar substances occur in plants.

glŏb'-ū-lĭne, s. [GLOBULIN.]

Bot.: The name given by Turpin to the amylaceous granules so continually present in the cells of plants

 glŏb'-ū-lĭsm, s. [Eng. globul(e); -ism.]

Med.: A term sometimes applied to homœopathy.

glŏb'-ū-lōse, glŏb'-ū-loŭs, a. [Fr. globuleux; Sp. & Ital. globuloso, from Lat. globulus = a globule (q.v.).] Having the form of a globe or sphere; globular; spherical.

"The globulous part of a glass-egg of about three inches (for it wanted 1-10th) in diameter on the outside was filled with water to the bottom of the stem."—Boyle: Works, ii. 722.

glŏb'-ū-loŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. globulous; -ness.] The quality or state of being globulous; globularity.

"The same drops will readily adhere to gold, and loose their globulousness upon it."—Boyle: Works, ii. 664.

 glŏb'-ū-lŭs (pl. glŏb'-ū-lī), s. [Lat.]

Botany:

1. A round, deciduous shield, formed of the thallus of a lichen, and leaving a hollow when it falls off. Example, Isidium. (De Candolle.)

2. A kind of perithecium in some fungals.

3. The antheridium of Chara.

glō'-bŭs, s. [Lat. = a globe or ball.]

Anat. & Pathol.: Thus in anatomy there are a globus major and a globus minor of the epididymis, forming part of the excretory duct of the testicle. (See also the compound.)

globus hystericus, s.

Pathol.: A sensation in the early stage of hysteria, as if a ball or globe first rose to the stomach, then to the chest, and finally fixed itself in the throat with the ultimate sense of suffocation. It is produced by a spasmodic action of the glottis, preventing the escape upwards of air which, being confined, distends the trachea or windpipe.

 glōb'-ў, a. [Eng. glob(e); -y.] Pertaining to or resembling a globe; spherical, round, orbicular.

"Every way do you yourselves disperse,
Till you have filled this globy universe
With your increase." Drayton: Noah's Flood.

glŏch'-ĭ-dāte, glŏ-chĭd'-ĭ-āte, a. [Gr. γλωχίς (glōchis) = any projecting point; εἶδος (eidos) = form, and Eng. &c. suff. -ate.]

Bot.: Barbed; forked at the apex, both divisions of the fork being hooked, as in the nuts of Myosotis Lappula.

glŏ-chĭd'-ĭ-ŏn, s. [Dimin. of Gr. γλωχίς (glōchis) = any projecting point.]

Bot.: A genus of Euphorbiaceæ, tribe Phyllantheæ. About 50 species are known. They are shrubs or small trees from India and the countries adjacent. The bark of Glochidion nitida is astringent.

glō'-chĭs, s. [Gr. γλωχίς (glōchis), γλώχω (glōchin) = any projecting point.]

Bot.: A barb, a modification of a hair. [GLOCHIDATE.]

glŏck'-ĕr-ĭte, s. [Ger. glockerit. Named after the mineralogist, E. F. Glocker.]

Min.: A brown, ochre-yellow, brownish-black, pitch-black, or dull-green mineral; massive, sparry, or earthy and stalactitic. compos.: sulphuric acid, 15·9 to 15·19; sesquioxide of iron, 62·40 to 64·34; water, 20·7 to 21·7. Found near Goslar, in Hanover; also at Modum, in Norway. Called also Pittícite or Pittizite (q.v.).

 glōdo, pret. of v. [GLIDE, v.]

 glod-en, s. [A.S. gladen, glodeн.] The sunflower.

 glof-fare, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A glutton.

"Glofare or devowrare. Devorator." — Prompt. Parv.

 glogh, v.i. [Icel. gluggа.] To stare, to gaze.

"To glogh oppon gomes at gedering of folke.
Destruction of Troy, 2,920.

 gloier, * gloyere, s. [GLEY, v.] One who squints; a squint-eyed person.

"Gloyere or gogyleye. Strabo."—Prompt. Parv.

glōĭ'-ō-carp, s. [Gr. γλοιός (gloio(s) = sticky, clammy, and καρπός (karp(os) = fruit.]

Bot.: The quadruple spore or tetrachocarp of some Algals. (Treas. of Bot.)

glōĭ'-ō-clăd'-ĭ-a, s. [Gr. γλοιός (gloios) = sticky, clammy, from γλοία or γλοιά (gloiă) = glue, and κλάδος (klados) = a young shoot of a tree.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the Gloiocladiæ (q.v.).

glōĭ'-ō-clăd'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gloiocladi(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Algals, order Ceramiaceæ, sub-order Cryptonemeæ. Harvey describes eight species, belonging to six genera, as British. (Harvey: Brit. Marine Algæ.) glombe, * glome, v.i. [GLOOM, s, GLUM, a.] To look gloomy, sullen, or morose.

"Palace-like, whereat disdain may glome."
Surrey: Mean Estate.

 glome (1), s. [GLOOM, s.]

glŏmo (2), s. [Lat. glomus = a ball.]

Bot.: A roundish head of flowers.

* glŏm'-ĕr-āte, v.t. & i. [Lat. glomeratus, pa. par. of glomero = to collect into a ball; glomus (genit. glomeris) = a ball; Fr. glomérer.]

A. Trans.: To gather into a ball or sphere.

"S. with a round spiral shell glomerated, and having three raised ridges on the upper side."—Pennant: Brit. Zoology; Worm Shell.

B. Intrans.: To gather or come together into a mass; to wind.

"A river which, from Caucasus, after many glomerating dances, increases Indus."—Sir T. Herbert: Travels, p. 68.

glŏm'-ĕr-āte, glŏm'-ĕr-āt-ĕd, a. [Glomerate, v.]

1. Anat. (Of glands): Consisting of many little glandular bodies united in one common membrane. [Conglomerate-glands.]

2. Bot.: Consisting of glomeruli (q.v.); congregated into a head.

glŏm-ĕr-ā'-tion, s. [Lat. glomeratio = a bringing of the legs together as into a ball; an amble.]

1. The act of gathering into a ball; the state of being gathered into a ball.

2. A ball, a body formed into a ball.

"For the rain-bow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot possibly fall, but from the aire, that is very low."—Bacon: Nat. Hist., § 832.

* glŏm'-ĕr-ĕlls, s. pl. [Etym. doubtful.]

Old Law: Commissioners appointed to determine differences between scholars in a school or university and the townsmen of the place. (Wharton.) glŏ-mĕr'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. glomeris, genit. glomer(idis); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Myriapoda. It consists of arthropodous animals, with a short oval body, convex above, and concave below, which resemble the woodlouse, and like it roll themselves up into a ball when danger appears.

glŏm'-ĕr-ĭs, s. [Lat. glomus (genit. glomeris) = a ball or clue of yarn, thread, &c.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Glomeridæ (q.v.).

glŏm'-ĕr-ŏŭs, a. [Lat. glomerosus = like a ball, round.] Formed into a ball.

glŏm'-ĕr-ŭle, glŏm-ĕr'-ŭ-lŭs (pl. glŏm'-ĕr-ŭles, glŏm-ĕr'-ŭ-lī), s. [Mod. Lat. glomerulus; dimin. of glomus, genit. glomeris = a ball.] [Glomus.]

1. Anat. (Of the form glomerulus): A vascular tuft in the kidney, formed by a small afferent artery breaking up into minute branches.

2. Botany, &c. (Of the form glomerule):

(1) Sing.: A fruit consisting of a cluster of capitula, enclosed in a common involucre. It stands in the same relation to a capitulum, as a compound does to a simple umbel. Example Echinops. It is called also a glomus (q.v.).

(2) Pl.: Heaps of powdery bodies lying upon the thallus of a lichen. They are called also globuli and soredia. [Soredium.]

* glŏ'-mŭs, s. [Lat., = a ball or clue of yarn.]

Bot.: The same as Glomerule (q.v.).

gloŏm, s. [A.S. glóm = gloom, twilight; cogn. with Sw. glämig = wan, languid; cf. Prov. Ger. glumm = gloomy, glum. The original sense was a glow—i.e., a faint light.] [Gloaming, Glum.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) Obscurity; partial darkness; thick shade.

"All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient colours waving." Milton: P. L., i. 544.

(2) A dark or thickly-shaded place.

"In unfrequented glooms, or shaggy banks."
Thomson: Spring, 642.

2. Fig.: Heaviness or depression of mind; dejection, dulness, melancholy; sullenness; loss of spirit; gloominess.

"A sullen gloom and furious disorder prevailed by fits."—Burke: On the Present Discontents.

II. Gunpowder-manuf.: The drying-oven.

gloom-stove, s. The same as Gloom, s., II.

* gloŏm, * glome, * glombe, * gloome, * glowmbe, v.i. & t. [Gloom, s. It should be noted that the verb occurs very much earlier than the substantive.]

A. Intransitive

I. Literally:

1. To shine with an obscure or imperfect light; to appear obscurely or dimly.

"His glistering armour made A little glooming light much like a shade."
Spenser: F. Q., I. i. 14.

2. To be cloudy or dark.

"For that day is a day of wrathe, a day of trouble and heauinesse, a daye of vtter destruccion and misery, a darcke & a glomminge day."—Bible (1551), Sophony i.

3. To become dark or dim; to fade into twilight.

"Ah when will this long weary day have end!
Long though it be, at last I see it gloome
And the bright evening-star with golden creast Appeare." Spenser: Epithalamion.

II. Fig.: To look gloomily, sullenly, or dejectedly; to appear sad, dejected, or melancholy; to frown.

"Now smyling smoothly like to sommer's day,
Now glooming sadly so to cloke her matter."
Spenser: F. Q., VI. vi. 42.

B. Transitive:

1. Lit.: To make gloomy, dark, or obscure; to darken; to fill with gloom.

"Black yew gloomed the stagnant air."
Tennyson: The Letters.

2. Fig.: To make gloomy, dismal, or sad; to sadden; to fill with gloom or sadness.

"Good heaven! what sorrows gloomed that parting day." Goldsmith: Deserted Village.

* gloŏm'-fŭl, a. [Eng. gloom; ful(l).] Full of gloom; gloomy.

gloŏm'-ĭ-lў, adv. [Eng. gloomy; -ly.]

* 1. Lit.: In gloom or shade.

"Gloomily retired,
The villain spider lives, cunning and fierce."
Thomson: Summer, 268.

2. Fig.: In a sullen, dejected, and melancholy manner.

"True it was that, when he had found opposition vain, he had gloomily submitted."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vi.

gloŏm'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gloomy; -ness.]

1. Lit.: The quality or state of being gloomy, dark, or thickly-shaded; obscurity, darkness, gloom.

"But Charis looking in, a morning light Upon that gloominess rose from her eyes."
Beaumont: Psyche, vi. 81.

2. Fig.: Heaviness or dejection of mind; gloom, sullenness, moroseness, melancholy, depression.

"That gloominess and melancholy of temper, which is so frequent in our nation."—Addison: Spectator, No. 419.

* gloŏm'-ĭng, a. & s. [Eng. gloom; -ing.]

A. As adj.: Dismal, gloomy, depressing, sad.

"A glooming peace this morning with it brings."
Shakesp.: Romeo & Juliet, v. 3.

B. As subst. [A.S. glómung]: The gloaming or twilight.

"The balmy glooming, crescent-lit."
Tennyson: Gardener's Daughter, 258.

* gloŏm'-ĭsh, * gloŏm'-mĭsh, a. [Eng. gloom; -ish.] Rather gloomy.

"In his lowering front gloommish."
Stanyhurst: Virgil's Æneid iii. 649.

* gloŏmth, s. [Eng. gloom; suff. -th, as in depth, &c.] Gloom, gloominess.

"The gloomth of abbeys and cathedrals."—Walpole: To Mann, iii. 40 (1753).

gloŏm'-ў, * gloom-ie, a. [Eng. gloom; -y.]

I. Literally:

1. Filled with gloom or darkness; dark; obscure; thickly-shaded.

"I shall be your faithful guide Through this gloomy covert wide."
Milton: Comus, 945.

* 2. Of a dark or dusky complexion.

3. Dark; lowering.

"A gloomie cloud, the which doth beare
As hideous storme, as by the northern blast Quite overblowne." Spenser: F. Q., IV. i. 45.

II. Figuratively:

1. Causing gloom, sadness, or depression of spirits; sad; melancholy; dispiriting.

"But man all feeling and awake,
The gloomy scene surveys."
Cowper: To Rev. Mr. Newton.

2. Dark; obscure.

"The gloomy shades of deep philosophy."
Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 4.

3. Feeling sadness, depression, or dejection; melancholy; sullen; morose; downcast.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between gloomy, sullen, morose, and splenetic: "All these terms denote a temper of mind the reverse of easy or happy; gloomy lies either in the general constitution or particular frame of the mind; sullen lies in the temper: a man of a gloomy disposition is an involuntary agent; it is his misfortune, and renders him in some measure pitiable; the sullen man yields to his evil humours; sullenness is his fault, and renders him offensive. Sullenness and moroseness are both the inherent properties of the temper; but the former discovers itself in those who have to submit, and the latter in those who have to command; sullenness, therefore, betrays itself mostly in early life; moroseness is the peculiar characteristic of age. Sullenness shows itself mostly by an unseemly reserve; moroseness shows itself by the harshness of the speech, and the roughness of the voice." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

† gloomy-minded, a. Sad, dejected. (Thomson: On Sir Isaac Newton, 157.)

* glōpe, s. [Glopen.] A fright; a panic.

"O, my hart is ryssand now in a glope."
Towneley Mysteries, p. 146.

* glop-en, * glop-pen, v.t. [Dut. gloepen, gluipen; O. Frs. glūpa; Icel. glūpa.]

1. To be astonished or dismayed; to stare in amazement.

"The god man . . . gloped for noyse."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems; Cleanness, 849.

2. To be downcast or disheartened.

"I gloppen and y grete."
Anturs of Arthur, st. vii.

* glop-ned-ly, adv. [Eng. glopen; -edly.] In dismay or fear.

* glop-ping, * glop-pynge, s. [Glopen.] Gluttony, greediness.

"Glotonie is her god with gloppynge of drink."
P. Plowman's Crede, 183.

* glopp-ning, * glop-pyn-ing, s. [Glopen.] Fear, dismay.

"For gloppning in his mod al madd."
Cursor Mundi, 19,683.

glōre, v.i. [Glare.]

glōr'-ĭ-ą, s. [Lat., = glory.]

1. More fully, Gloria Patri. The first word of the doxologies sung at the end of each psalm in the Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches, hence used to = doxology.

2. More fully, Gloria in excelsis Deo. A portion of the Mass so commencing; also a musical setting of the same.

* glōr'-ĭ-ą-ble, a. [Lat. glory; -able.] That may or can be gloried in; glorious.

"Job, of all we read, was the most confident of his own integrity, which indeed was rare and gloriable."—Feltham: Resolves, xvii.

* glōr-ĭ-ā'-tion, s. [Lat. gloriatio, from gloriatus, pa. par. of glorior = to boast, to glory.] [Glory.] Vainglory; a feeling of triumph; conceit.

"Glory or internal gloriation or triumph of the mind."—Hobbes: Human Nature, ch. ix., § 1.

* glōr'-ĭĕd, * glor-yed, a. [Eng. glory; -ed.] Illustrious, noble, honorable.

"Old respect,
As I suppose, toward your once gloried friend."
Milton: Samson Agonistes, 334.

* glōr-ĭ-fī'-ą-ble, a. [Eng. glorify; -able.] That may or should be glorified.

glōr-ĭ-fĭ-cā'-tion, s. [Lat. glorificatio, from glorifico = to glorify: gloria = glory, facio = to make; Fr. glorification; Sp. glorificacion; Ital. glorificazione.]

1. The act of glorifying, or giving or ascribing glory and honor to.

"All that we have must be directed to the great end of man, the glorification of God and the salvation of our souls."—Taylor: Rule of Conscience, bk. iii., ch. iii.

2. The state of being glorified or raised to glory; exaltation in honor and dignity.

"The [angels] are ready enough to congratulate their glorification."—Scott: Christian Life, pt. ii., ch. vii., § 10.

glōr'-ĭ-fĭed, pa. par. or a. [Glorify.]

glōr'-ĭ-fў, * glor-i-fie, v.t. & i. [Fr glorifier, from Lat. glorifico = to make glorious: gloria = glory; facio = to make; Sp. & Port. glorificar; Ital. glorificare.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To procure glory or honor to; to raise in honor or dignity.

"Meek saint—through patience glorified on earth."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vi.

2. To ascribe or pay honor or glory to in worship.

"Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., ii. 1.

3. To praise; to extol.

"No chymist yet the elixir got
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some odorous thing." Donne.

4. To raise or exalt to glory in heaven; to exalt to celestial beatitude.

*5. To make divine.

"Can they who say the Host should be descried
By sense, define a body glorified?"
Dryden: Hind & Panther, i. 94.

B. Intrans.: To boast, to brag, to be proud.

"Cupide, I mene, of this maist thou glorifye."
Chaucer: Troilus & Cressida, iii. 187.

glŏr'-ĭ-ōle, s. [Formed from Lat. gloria, in imitation of aureole (q.v.).] A glory or circle of rays represented in old paintings as surrounding the heads of saints. [GLORY, s.] glŏr-ĭ-ō'-sa, s. [Fem. sing. of Lat. gloriosus = full of glory, glorious.]

Bot.: A genus of Liliaceæ, and apparently of the tribe Tulipeæ. Gloriosa superba is, as its name implies, a splendid flower. It climbs by a tendril, in which the lanceolate leaves terminate. The flowers are large, red, and yellow. The plant glows in India. Its root is generally deemed poisonous. G. simplex is found in the Himalayas, and G. virescens in Senegambia. The name Gloriosa, given by Linnæus, is now generally altered to Methonica (q.v.).

Fabrics: A fabric composed of wool and silk, closely resembling the latter.

 glŏr-ĭ-ō'-sēr, s. [Lat. gloriosus = boastful.] A boaster.

"Prattling gloriosers [have] the smallest performance of courage."—Green: Menaphron, p. 82.

 glŏr-ĭ-ō'-sō, s. [Ital.] A boaster.

"Giving credit to such a glorioso."—Fuller: Worthies; Devon, i. 284.

glŏr'-ĭ-oŭs, * glor-i-ouse, * glor-y-ous, a. [O. Fr. glorios, from Lat. gloriosus = (1) glorious, (2) boastful, from gloria = glory (q.v.); Sp., Port., & Ital. glorioso.]

*1. More general in its meaning than now, and including vainglory as well as reputation of a legitimate character; boastful, vainglorious, haughty.

"Some took this for a glorious brag; others thought he [Alcibiades] was like enough to have done it."—North: Plutarch, p. 183.

2. Noble, illustrious; worthy of receiving glory, honor, or praise.

"Who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?"—Exodus xv. 11.

3. Worthy of admiration or praise; noble, excellent, magnificent.

"This universe shall pass away—a frame
Glorious because the shadow of thy might!
A step, or link, for intercourse with Thee."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. iv.

4. Expressing or denoting rank, dignity, or honor; honorable.

"Such through glorious titles are much renowned."
—Udal: Luke vi.

*5. Eager or striving after glory, excellence, or renown; ambition.

"The purchase is to make men glorious."
Shakesp.: Pericles, Prol. 9.

6. Elevated by drink; hilarious, uproarious.

"Kings may be blessed but Tam was glorious, O'er all the ills of life victorious."
Burns: Tom O'Shanter.

glŏr'-ĭ-oŭs-lỹ, * glor-i-ous-liche, adv. [Eng. glorious; -ly.]

*1. Boastfully; braggingly.

"Sir Glorious Tipto . . . talks gloriously of anything, but very seldom is in the right."—Ben Jonson: New Inn. (List of Dramatis Personæ.)

2. Nobly, splendidly, admirably.

"The glose glouriousliche was wryte with gylte penne."
Piers Ploughman, p. 332.

3. Hilariously, uproariously.

"Drink, and he mad then: 'tis your country bids!'
Gloriously drunk, obey the important call!"
Cowper: Tusk, iv. 510.

glŏr'-ĭ-oŭs-nĕss, * glor-i-ows-nesse, s. [Eng. glorious; -ness.] The quality or state of being glorious; glory.

"Among them also that are good, euerie one, as he hath in this vsed himselfe, so shal he excell other in the gloriousnes of his new bodye."—Udal: 1 Corinth. ch. xv.

glŏr'-ỹ, * gloir-e, * glor-ie, * glor-ye, s. [O. Fr. glorie (Fr. gloire), from Lat. gloria, for cloria, from the same root as in cluo; Gr. κλέω (kluō) = to hear; Lat. inclytus = renowned; Gr. κλέος (kleos) = glory, renown; Sp., Port., & Ital. gloria.]

I. Ordinary Language:

*1. Originally in a more extended sense than now, including vain glory, as well as glory of a more reputable kind; arrogance, pride, haughtiness.

"In military commanders and soldiers vain-glory is an essential point; for as iron sharpens iron, so by glory one courage sharpeneth another."—Bacon: Essays: Of Vain-glory.

2. Praise, honor, or admiration or distinction paid or ascribed to any person by general consent; renown, celebrity.

"For what is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmixed?"
Milton: P. L., iii., 47.

3. Adoration or praise ascribed in worship.

"Glory to God in the highest."—Luke ii. 14.

4. A state of splendor; greatness, grandeur, or magnificence.

"Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Matthew vi. 29.

5. The felicity of heaven prepared for those who love God.

"Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory."—Psalm lxxiii. 24.

*6. Lustre, splendor, brilliancy.

"From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine."
Pope: Eloise to Abelard, 342.

*7. A noble or praiseworthy pride.

"The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto."—Sidney.

8. That which makes glorious, distinguished, or renowned; the distinguishing ornament or honor; that of which a person, place, or nation is or may be proud.

"Increasing London, Babylon of old Not more the glory of the earth than she."
Cowper: Task, i. 723.

*9. A glorious, honorable, or worthy act; a source of honor.

"Think it no glory to swell in tyranny."—Sidney: Arcadia.

II. Technically:

1. Art: Properly, a combination of the nimbus and aureola, but commonly taken as the same as nimbus (q.v.).

2. Pyrotech.: A cluster of large fixed suns. [FIXED-SUN.]

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between glory and honor: "Glory impels to extraordinary efforts and to great undertakings. Honour induces to a discharge of one's duty. Excellence in the attainment, and success in the exploit, bring glory; a faithful exercise of one's talents reflects honour. Glory is connected with everything which has a peculiar public interest; honour is more properly obtained within a private circle. Glory is not confined to the nation or life of the individual by whom it is sought; it spreads over all the earth, and descends to the latest posterity; honour is limited to those who are connected with the subject of it, and eye-witnesses to his actions. Glory is attainable but by few, and may be an object of indifference to any one; honour is more or less within the reach of all, and must be disregarded by no one. A thirst for glory is seldom indulged but at the expense of others; a love of honour can never be indulged but to the advantage of others." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) glory-hole, s.

Glass-manuf.: An opening in the wall of a glass-furnace, exposing the brilliant white of the interior.

glory-crowned, a. Having the head encircled with a glory.

"His own vast shadow glory-crowned."
Tennyson: In Memoriam, xcvi.

glory-pea, s.

Bot.: The genus Clianthus.

 glory-smitten, a. Smitten or seized with a thirst for glory.

glory-tree, s.

Bot.: The genus Clerodendron.

glŏr'-ỹ, v.i. & t. [O. Fr. glorier, from Lat. glorior = to boast; Sp. & Port. gloriar; Ital. gloriare.] [GLORY, s.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To boast; to feel pride.

"This title of Freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live."—Addison: Freeholder.

*2. To exult with joy; to rejoice.

"Both glorying to have scapt the Stygian flood."
Milton: P. L., i. 239.

B. Trans.: To make glorious; to glorify; to give glory to.

"The troop
That gloried Venus."
Greene: Looking-glass, p. 118.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between to glory and to boast: "To glory is to hold as one's glory. To boast is to set forth to one's advantage. To glory is more particularly the act of the mind, the indulgence of the internal sentiment: to boast denotes rather the expression of the sentiment. To glory is applied only to matters of moment; boast is rather suitable to trifling points. Glory is but seldom used in a bad sense, and boast still seldomer in a good sense." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

 glŏr'-ỹ-lĕss, a. [Eng. glory; -less.] Without glory; bereft of glory.

"Soulless, gloryless, and desperate."
Peele: Battle of Alcazar, ii. 2.

 glor-y-yn, v.t. [Etym. doubtful.] To defile; to make dirty; to stain.

"Otoryyn or wythe onclene thynge befoylyn. Maculo, deturpo."—Prompt. Parv.

 glōse (I), s. [GLOZE, s.]

 glōse, v.i. [GLOZE, v.]

 glōs'-ĕr, s. [GLOSSER.]

glŏss (I),  glōse (2), s. [O. Fr. glose, from Lat. glossa = a word requiring explanation, from Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue, a difficult word; Icel. glosa; Sw. glosa; Dan. glose; Dut. glos; Sp. & Ital. glosa; Port. glossa.] [GLOZE.]

I. An explanatory note or remark on the margin or between the lines of a book, as an equivalent for foreign or strange words. (Originally inserted by the copyist of a manuscript, to make the meaning more plain.)

2. A comment, note, or explanation on a point of difficulty in a work, especially in one written in a foreign tongue; a scholium.

"No commentator's tedious gloss."
Cowper: A Manual.

*3. A false or specious interpretation or explanation.

"Thou hast made many glose with thy false talkynge."
Towneley Mysteries, p. 209.

¶ A gloss is an explanation of difficultiee in a text which are merely verbal, and have no relation to the subject matter itself. The word was originally applied to obsolete, provincial, dialectical, or technical words, or uses of words, collections of such words being called glossai. They became common in the Alexandrian period of Greek literature, their subject being the works of Homer and other early poets. Glosses of the Hebrew texts were made by the Rabbinical writers. In Roman and canon law glosses were early introduced, and here were not merely verbal, but dealt also with the interpretation of the law. The gloss, in this case—being written between the lines and on the margin of the text—was called glossa interlinearis.

glŏss (2), s. [Icel. glossi = a blaze; Sw. dial. glasa = a glowing, glossa = to glow, to shine; M. H. Ger. glosen = to glow, glose = a glow, a gleam. The word has been confused, and its meaning has been partially affected by the confusion with GLOSE (1), s.]

I. Lit.: The brightness or lustre proceeding from a smooth, polished surface; polish, sheen, glossiness.

"Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss
Like that of oil."
Chapman: Homer; Iliad.

2. Fig.: A specious or fair outward appearance; external show pleasing to the eye.

"There is a sort of gloss upon ingenious falsehoods that dazzles the imagination, but which neither belongs to nor becomes the sober aspect of truth."—Burke: Vindication of National Society (Pref.).

* ¶ To set a gloss on anything: To give it a specious appearance. (Shakesp.: 1 Henry VI., iv. 1.)

glŏss (1),  glose, * glos-en, * glosse, * glos-yn, v.t. & i. [O. Fr. gloser; from Low Lat. glosso, from glossa = a gloss; Icel. glosa = to explain; Dut. glozen; Sp. glosar; Port. glossar; Ital. glossare.] [GLOSS (1), s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To explain by note, gloss, or comment; to comment on so as to render clear or plain; to annotate.

"This tale nedeth nought be glosed,
For it is openliche shewed." Gower iii., 218.

* 2. To flatter, to wheedle.

"So wel he couthe me glose Whan that he wold have my hele chose."
Chaucer: C. T., 6,092.

B. Intransitive:

1. To comment; to write or make comments or explanatory remarks.

"But no man can glosse upon this text after that manner, for the prophet says, No shepherd shall pitch his fold there, nor shall any man pass through it for ever."—H. More: Defence of the Philosophic Cabbala, ch. iii.

* 2. To flatter, to wheedle.

"Who that couthe glose softe
And flater, such he set aloffe
In great estate." Gower, iii., 170.

* 3. To make sly remarks.

"Her equals first observed her growing zeal,
And laughing glossed that Abra served so well."
Prior: Solomon, ii. 365.

glŏss (2), v.t. [Gloss (2), s.]

I. Lit.: To give a gloss or superficial lustre to; to make glossy or lustrous: as, To gloss cloth or paper.

II. Figuratively:

1. To give a fair or specious appearance to; to render specious or plausible.

"Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause."
Philips.

2. To palliate by specious representation.

"Though every tongue should join in glossing over and even justifying all or any of those crimes."—Porteus, vol. ii., ser. 16.

¶ (1) In the figurative senses there is evidently a confusion with Gloss (1), v.

(2) Crabb thus discriminates between to gloss, to varnish, and to palliate: "Gloss and varnish are figurative terms, which borrow their signification from the act of rendering the outer surface of any physical object shining. To gloss is to give a gloss or brightness to any thing by means of friction, as in the case of japan or mahogany: to varnish is to give an artificial gloss, by means of applying a foreign substance. Hence in the figurative use of the terms, to gloss is to put the best face upon a thing by various little distortions and artifices; but to varnish is to do the same thing by means of direct falsehood; to palliate requires still less artifice than either." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) glŏs-sā-grą, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue, and ἄγρα (agra) = a catching.]

Pathol.: A rheumatic pain in the tongue.

glŏsso-ăn'-thrăx, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue, and ἄνθραξ (anthrax) = coal, charcoal; Fr. glossanthrax.]

Vet.: A disease affecting herbivorous animals, especially cattle and horses. It is characterized by dark-coloured carbuncles on the tongue.

glŏss-ăr'-ĭ-ąl, a. [Eng. glossary; -al.] Of or pertaining to a glossary; containing, or of the nature of a glossary.

"In the glossarial index of former editions, the reader has merely been presented with a long list of words, and references to the passages where they occur."—Boswell: Advertisement to Shakespeare.

glŏss'-ą-rĭst, s. [Eng. glossar(y); -ist.]

1. One who glosses or comments upon an author.

2. A writer or compiler of a glossary.

"I am quite aware that the glossarists are never tired of printing."—Notes & Queries, July 28, 1883, p. 74.

glŏss'-ą-rў, s. [Lat. glossarium, from glossa = a difficult word requiring explanation; Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue; a difficult word; Fr. glossaire; Sp. glosario; Ital. glossario.] A vocabulary or dictionary of glosses or explanations of words obsolete or rare, or occurring only in works of a special class, as technical terms, or of provincial dialectal forms or words. Such vocabularies are frequently given at the end of modern editions of the works of old writers—such as Chaucer and other authors of the mediæval period—many of the words used by whom are obsolete, are antiquated in spelling, or are used in meanings no longer understood. Glossaries are necessary to the satisfactory reading of such works.

"He spells them true by intuition's light,
And needs no glossary to set him right."
Cowper: Needless Alarm.

¶ For the difference between glossary and dictionary, see Dictionary.

* glŏs-sā'-tŏr, s. [Fr. glossateur.] A writer or compiler of glosses; a commentator.

"This is the full state of this affair, in the age when Seneca, who was the glossator, lived."—Bp. Taylor: Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii., bk. i., § iii.

glŏs-sō-cŏl'-lĭte, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue; κόλλα (kolla) = glue; suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A variety of Halloysite. It is milk-white in color, and earthy. On the edges it is translucent. It is found in a siliceous Silurian rock in Rising Fawn, Dade County, Georgia. (Dana.) glŏss'-ĕr (1), s. [Eng. gloss (1), v.; -er.] A writer of glosses or comments; a commentator.

"It was not easy for the king's glossers to interpret them to their own mind, whilst the bishops were at hand to refute and rectify their comments."—Hurd: Constitution of the English Government.

glŏss'-ĕr (2), s. [Eng. gloss (2), v.; -er.] One who polishes or gives a lustre to anything.

glŏss'-ĭc, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = a tongue.] The name given by its inventor, Mr. A. J. Ellis, F.R.S., to a system of phonetic spelling of the English language, intended to be used concurrently with the existing system.

glŏss'-ĭ-lў, adv. [Eng. glossy; -ly.] In a glossy manner.

glŏss'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. glossy; -ness.] The quality or state of being glossy; superficial lustre.

"Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt."—Boyle: Works, vi. 408.

glŏss'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Gloss (2), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: An operation upon silk thread by which it is moistened with steam and stretched to develope a gloss.

* glŏss'-ĭst, s. [Eng. gloss (1), s.; -ist.] A writer of glosses or comments; a commentator.

"It was raised by inconsiderate glossists from the mistake of this text."—Milton: Tetrachordon.

glŏs-sī'-tĭs, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue; suff. -itis = denoting inflammation.]

Pathol.: Inflammation of the tongue. Since mercury began to be less used for salivation, idiopathic glossitis has become rare. When it occurs, it is generally as a symptom of some other disease. The tongue when inflamed often becomes too large for the mouth.

* glŏss'-lў, adv. [Eng. gloss (2), s.; -ly.] Having a glossy or lustrous appearance; glossy.

glŏs-sō-, pref. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue.] Belonging to or resembling the tongue.

glosso-epiglottic, a.

Anat.: Of or belonging to both the epiglottis and the tongue. Thus there are glosso-pharyngeal folds or frænula.

glosso-pharyngeal, a.

Anat.: Of or belonging to both the pharynx and the tongue. Thus there are glosso-pharyngeal nerves. They are the ninth pair, and act on the muscles of the pharynx and on the tongue.

glŏs'-sō-çēle, s. [Pref. glosso- (q.v.), and Gr. κήλη (kēlē) = a tumor.]

Surg.: A protrusion of the tongue, arising from tumefaction of the organ.

glŏs-sō-cō'-mĭ-ŭm, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = a tongue, and κομεω (komeō) = to guard.]

Surg.: Originally a small case for holding the tongues of wind instruments, afterwards extended to a case or apparatus in which fractured limbs are kept.

glŏs-sŏc'-ō-mŏn, s. [Gr. γλωσσοκομεῖον (glōssokomeion) = a case to keep mouthpieces; γλῶσσα (glōssa) = tongue, and κομέω (komeō) = to take care of.] A form of winch with gear-wheels and pinions, and used for raising heavy weights.

glŏs-sŏg'-rą-phĕr, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue, a difficult word, and γράφω (graphō) = to write.] A writer of glosses or comments; a commentator.

"Some words I believe may pose the ablest glossographer now living."—Blount: Ancient Tenures (Pref.).

glŏs-sō-grăph'-ĭc-ąl, a. [Eng. glossography; -ical.] Of or pertaining to glossography.

glŏs-sŏg'-rą-phў, s. [Glossographer.]

1. Ord. Lang.: The act of writing glosses or comments.

2. Anat.: A description of or treatise on the tongue.

glŏs-sō-hў'-ąl, a. [Pref. glosso-, and hyal (q.v.).]

Comp. Anat.: Lingual.

glossohyal-bone, s.

Comp. Anat.: A slight bone supporting the tongue in some fishes, the same as Lingual bone.

glŏs-sō-lăl'-ĭ-ą, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = a tongue, a language, and λαλιά (lalia) = talk, chatter; λαλέω (laleō) = to talk, to prattle.] The gift of tongues—especially vouchsafed to the Church in early times. Since then it has been claimed for several Roman missionary saints, notably for St. Francis Xavier.

"The glossolalia, or 'speaking with a tongue,' is connected with 'prophesying'—that is, exalted preaching and magnifying God."—Farrar: St. Paul, i. 96.

glŏs-sŏl'-ą-lў, s. [Glossolalia.] The same as Glossolalia (q.v.).

"That the glossolaly at Corinth was not a speaking in foreign languages is too clear to need proof."—Farrar: St. Paul, i. 100.

glŏs-sō-lŏg'-ĭc-ąl, a. [Eng. glossolog(y); -ical.] Of or pertaining to glossology.

glŏs-sŏl'-ō-ğĭst, s. [Eng. glossolog(y); -ist.]

1. A glossographer; an explainer of terms.

2. One versed in glossology.

glŏs-sŏl'-ō-ğў, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = a tongue, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse.]

1. Technology: The definition and explanation of terms, as of a science. Thus in Lindley's Introduction to Botany, bk. iii., defining the terms used in Botany, is headed Glossology.

2. Comp. Philol.: The science of language [Philology.]

glŏs-sŏp'-tĕr-ĭs, s. [Pref. glosso- (q.v.), and Lat. pteris; Gr. πτερίς (pteris) = a kind of fern.]

Palæobot.: A genus of fossil ferns. Glossopteris Browniana is found in India, in Australia, and in Southern Africa, in beds, the exact age of which has not been finally settled.

glŏs-sō-thĕr'-ĭ-ŭm, s. [Pref. glosso- (q.v.), and Gr. θηρίον (thērion) = a wild animal.]

Palæont.: A genus of Myrmecophagidæ, found in Brazilian cave deposits.

glŏs-sŏt'-ō-mў, s. [Gr. γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue, and τομή (tomē) = a cutting; τέμνω (temnō) = to cut.]

Surg.: Exsection of the tongue.

glŏs'-sў, a. [Eng. gloss (2), s.; -y.]

1. Lit.: Having a smooth, lustrous surface; highly polished, shining, lustrous.

"The glossy holly loved the park."
Scott: Lord of the Isles, v. 19.

* 2. Fig.: Having a fair or specious appearance; plausible.

Glo's'-tĕr, s. [Gloucester.]

* glot-er-y, * glot-er-ye, * glot-ry, * glut-rie, s. [Eng. glut; -ry.] Gluttony.

"Of thy fowle gloterye absteine."—Myrc: Instruct. for Parish Priests, p. 52.

* glot-e-rous, a. [Eng. glut; -erous.] Gluttonous.

"A beeste . . . most gloterous."—Wycliffe Levit. xi. 30.

* glot-on, s. [Glutton.]

glŏt'-tal, a. [Eng. glotti(s); -al.] Relating to or pertaining to the glottis.

glŏt'-tą-līte, s. [From Lat. Clota, Clota = the Roman name of the Clyde, and Gr. λίθος (lithos) = stone.]

Min.: A variety of Arialcime (Brit. Mus. Catal.), or of Edingtonite (Dana). Thomson described it as occurring in white crystals, regular octahedrons, or four-sided pyramids or cubes. Found near Port Glasgow, on the Clyde.

glŏt'-tĭs, s. [Gr. γλῶττις (glōttis) (see the def.), from γλωττα (glōtta), the Attic form of γλῶσσα (glōssa) = the tongue.]

Anat.: The mouth of the wind-pipe. It constitutes a narrow aperture covered by the epiglottis when one holds his breath or swallows. It contributes by dilatation and contraction to the modulation of the voice. It is sometimes called the rima glottis, that is, the fissure or chink of the glottis. The length of the aperture of the glottis, which is directed horizontally from before backward, varies, like the vocal chords, until the period of puberty, when its length, in the case of the male, undergoes a sudden development, the voice deepening in consequence. In the adult male the aperture is about eleven lines in length. This lengthening does not take place in the female, the glottis remaining unchanged, its length being about two-thirds that of the male. The chink of the glottis is formed by the cartilages of the larynx, the vibration of whose edges by passing breath causes the vocal sounds.

glŏt-tŏ-lŏg'-ĭc, glŏt-tŏ-lŏj'-ĭc-ăl, a. [Eng. glottolog(y); -ic; -ical.] Pertaining or relating to glottology.

"This very teaching . . . must certainly afford a wide scope for glottologic observation and research."—Prof. Rajna, in Eighth Annual Address to Philol. Society, 1879, p. 28.

glŏt-tŏl-ŏ-jĭst, s. [Eng. glottolog(y); -ist.] One devoted to the study of the science of language.

"It is in the Aryan family that the glottologist will have to receive his training for some time to come."—A. H. Sayce: Principles of Comp. Philol. (1873), p. 69.

glŏt-tŏl'-ŏ-jy, s. [Gr. γλῶττα (glōtta) = the tongue, language, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse.] Generally used in the same sense as glossology (q.v.). Professor Sayce, however, gives a wider signification, as will be seen from the extract.

"Glottology will be the science of language, by which we are enabled to trace the gradual growth of the mind of man, whether displayed in the creation of language generally as an instrument of intercommunication, and the embodiment of the conceptions of the relations between thought and the world, or in the triumph of the will over the mechanism of the bodily organs, and the limitations imposed in turn by them upon it, or lastly in the evolution of the religious idea—in other words, in Comparative Mythology and the Science of Religions."—A. H. Sayce: Principles of Comp. Philol. (1874), p. 59.

 glŏût, v.i. & t. [A variant of GLOAT (q.v.).]

A. Intrans.: To look sullen or gloomy; to pout.

"Glouting with sullen spite, the fury shook Her clotted locks." Garth: Dispensary, ii. 35.

B. Trans.: To stare or gaze at.

"The same setteth himselfe upon a stage to be glouted upon by every evil eye."—Bible (1613), The Translators to the Reader.

 glŏût, s. [GLOUT, v.] A sulk, bad temper.

"My mamma was in the glout."—Richardson Clarissa, ii. 140.

glŏve, s. [A.S. glōf; Icel. glōfi. Probably from Goth. lofa; Icel. lofi (Scotch loof) = the palm of the hand, with A.S. pref. ge-.]

1. A covering for the hand, differing from the mitten in having a separate compartment for each finger.

"Cicely, brisk maid, steps forth before the rout,
And kissed with smacking lip the snoaring lout:
For custom says, 'Whoe'er this venture proves,
For such a kiss demands a pair of gloves.'"
Gay: Pastorals; Saturday.

¶ The use of the glove goes back to a remote antiquity, the Odyssey telling us that King Laertes, who was devoted to farming, wore gloves to protect his hands from thorns. The Persians seem to have worn gloves, but their use was looked upon as effeminate by the Greeks and Romans, neither of whom used them until late Roman history. The glove became a well-known article of dress in England about the 14th century, and in the 15th there were corporations of glovers. Modern gloves are of two classes, the woven or knitted, and those made of leather. The making of these form entirely separate branches of manufacture. The former are largely produced in the United States. Kid gloves are principally of French manufactnre. The so-called English dogskin gloves are made from tanned skins of Cape sheep. Gloversville, New York, is an important centre of glove manufacture.

2. Hatmaking: A smooth piece of wood for rubbing a sheet of felt, and causing the nap to adhere to the body when working at the battery. The glove is held in the palm of the hand, and tied on by a string.

3. Boxing: A padded casing or covering for the hands.

"Fifty years ago sparring with the gloves was regarded as a means to an end."—Saturday Review, Jan. 26, 1884, p. 108.

* ¶ (1) To bite the glove: To exhibit mutual enmity or hostility.

(2) To throw down (or take up) the glove: To give (or accept) a challenge to single combat.

(3) To be hand and glove with one: To be on terms of the closest intimacy or friendship.

"And prate and preach about what others prove,
As if the world and they were hand and glove."
Cowper: Table Talk, 173.

glove-band, s. A glove-clasp (q.v.).

glove-clasp, s.

1. A band passing over the glove at the wrist to secure it.

2. An instrument with a hook at the end, used for buttoning gloves.

glove-fight, s.

Boxing: A pugilistic contest in which the men wear boxing-gloves. It is less dangerous than prize-fighting (q.v.), since the padded glove breaks the force of the blow.

"Men were being punished for engaging in glove-fights."—Saturday Review, Jan. 26, 1884, p. 108.

glove-fighter, s.

Boxing: One of the principals concerned in a glove-fight (q.v.); a promoter of glove-fighting.

"Fate has not proved so unkind to the Eltham prize-fighters, or glove-fighters, or whatever they were, as she at first threatened to be."—Referee, Feb. 10, 1884.

glove-fighting, s.

Boxing: The practice of fighting with boxing-gloves, as distinguished from prize-fighting proper.

"We have thus four different species of encounter, of which the first two—fighting and glove-fighting—are clearly prohibited."—Saturday Review, Jan. 26, 1884, p. 108.

 glove-money, s. (English.)

1. Ord. Lang.: A gratuity given to servants ostensibly to buy them gloves.

2. Law: An extraordinary reward given to officers of courts, &c., and money given by a sheriff of a county in which no offenders were left for execution, to the clerk of assize, and the judges' officers.

 glove-silver, s. The same as GLOVE-MONEY (q.v.).

glove-stretcher, s. An instrument for opening and stretching the fingers of gloves, in order that they may the more easily be drawn on the hand.

glŏve, v.t. [GLOVE, s.] To cover with or as with a glove.

"A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel, Must glove this hand." Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., i. 1.

glŏv'-ĕr, s. [Eng. glov(e); -er.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

"Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife?"—Shakesp.: Merry Wives, i. 4.

glover's-stitch, s.

Surg.: A peculiar stitch employed in sewing up a wound.

glōw, * glowe, * glow-en, * glow-yn, v.i. & t. [A.S. glōwan; cogn. with Icel. glóa; Dan. gloe; Dut. gloeijen; Ger. glühen = to glow; Sw. glo = to stare; Sw. dial. glo, gloa = to stare; O. H. Ger. gluojan. From the same root as glad, glass, gloat, gloom, glide, glitter, glance, &c.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To be so heated as to give out an intense or white heat, without flame; to be incandescent.

"Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire."
Milton: P. L., iii. 594.

2. To sparkle, to gleam.

"The circles of his eyen in his hed
They gloweden betwixen yelwe and red."
Chaucer: C. T., 2,134.

3. To burn with great heat.

"From their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows."
Addison: Ovid; Metamorphoses ii.

4. To feel heat of body; to be heated or hot; to burn.

"[I] felt my blood
Glow with the glow that slowly crimsoned all Thy presence." Tennyson: Tithonus, 18.

5. To assume or exhibit a strong, bright color; to be red, brilliant, or flushed, as with animation, life, blushes, &c.

"Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow."
Pope: Epistle ■ 61.

6. To feel the heat of passion; to be ardent eager in any passion of the mind.

"I feel my bosom glow with wontless fires."
Drummond: Hymn on the Fairest Fair.

7. To rage or burn as a passion; to be vehement or hot.

"Love slowly burns and long remains;
It glows." Shadwell.

8. To be animated or spirited; to be full of spirit or life.

"And feelings, roused in life's first day, Glow in the line, and prompt the lay."
Scott: Marmion, iii. [Introd.]

 B. Trans.: To cause to glow; to make red or glowing.

"On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids,
With divers coloured fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool."
Shakesp.: Antony & Cleopatra, ii. 2.

glōw, * glowe, s. [GLOW, v.]

1. A shining or white heat without flame: incandescence.

2. Brightness of color, redness; a rosy color, a flush.

"If you will see a pageant truly played Between the pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain,
Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you."
Shakesp.: As You Like It, iii. 4.

3. Vehemence of passion; heat of mind; excitement, earnestness, ardor.

"Such as suppose that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaelle could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken."—Reynolds.

4. Heat of the blood produced by exercise: as, He was all in a glow after the walk.

¶ Electric glow:

Elect.: A pale blue luminosity appearing at the parts of an electric conductor from which electricity of high tension is noiselessly issuing, even though no other conductor is near.

¶ For the difference between glow and fire, see FIRE.

glow-worm, s.

Entomology:

1. Lampyris noctiluca. A beetle of which the male flies and does not shine, while the female shines and does not fly. It is from the latter sex, therefore, that the name glow-worm has been derived. Probably the phosphoric light, which is intermittent, and can be displayed or withheld at the will of the insect, is used by the female to attract the male. It is displayed at the tail of the insect. The glow-worm is common in many localities; it generally, though not exclusively, frequents moist places, as, for instance, weed-choked ditches or the sides of tiny streams. What is above said of the female does not apply to all species. Though in L. noctiluca the female gives the more brilliant light, in other cases the reverse is true, while in one American glow-worm, Photinus dimissus, only the male is luminous. The United States is rich in "lightoing bugs," as they are ordinarily called, such as Photuris pensylvaniacus, and species of other genera. But to find the most brilliant examples of glow-worms one must seek the tropics. The West Indies possess several remarkable forms, including Photuris versicolor, and the still more brilliant Pygolampis xanthopholis, of which the first with green and the second with orange light often illuminate the foliage with striking brilliancy. They are used in tropical regions to a considerable extent as jewelry, being attached to the dresses of ladies, and quite outvieing the most costly precious stones in their brilliant gleams.

The luminous organs, like those of the fireflies, consist of fatty-looking cells, surrounded by tracheæ, which supply the oxygen necessary for the vital combustion to which the phosphorescent gleam is due. Their utility to the insect is believed to be as love signals between the sexes, while it is not improbable that the flashes may serve to frighten approaching foes.

2. The genus Lampyria (q.v.).

"Oft has she taught them on her lap to play Delighted with the glow-worm's harmless ray."
Wordsworth: Evening Walk.

glŏw'-bard, s. [GLOBARD.]

glŏw'-ẽr, v.i. [Dut. gluren = to peep.] To stare; to gaze intently.

"Monkbarns was glowering ower a' the siller yonder."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xxiv.

glŏw'-ẽr, s. [GLOWER, v.] A broad stare; an intense gazing.

glŏw'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GLOW, v.]

A. As pr. par. (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Shining with a white heat without flame; incandescent; white with heat.

2. Bright or vivid in color; brilliant.

"Till Autumn's fiercer heats and plenteous dews Dye them at last in all their glowing hues."
Cowper: Tirocinium, 48.

3. Red, rosy, or flushed: as, glowing cheeks.

4. Ardent; animated; full of life, spirit, or animation.

"The lucid amber of his glowing lines."—Walpole: Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv., ch. i.

5. Hot, heated, fervid.

6. Full of praise or admiration: as, a glowing description.

C. As substantive:

1. A glow; a white heat; incandescence.

2. Ardour, zeal, animation.

"The inward glowings of a heart in love."
Addison: Cato, iv. 1

glŏw'-ĭng lў, adv. [Eng. glowing; -ly.] In a glowing manner; with great heat or brightness; with heat or passion.

glŏwr, glōūr, v.i. [GLOWER.]

glŏwr, glōūr, s. [GLOWER, s.]

glŏx'-ĭn'-ĭ-a, s. [Named after P. B. Gloxin, a botanist of Colmar in the eighteenth century.]

Bot.: A genus of Gesneraceæ, having a bell-shaped corolla, the upper lip the shorter one, and two-lobed, the lower one three-lobed, with the middle lobe the largest. The species are from tropical America, and are very ornamental plants, having richly-colored leaves, as well as fine white, violet, red, or greenish yellow flowers, occasionally variegated with spots. Paxton enumerates twenty-four species as having been introduced into British greenhouses. Several hybrids have also arisen.

glōze (1), v.t. & i. [Icel. glósa = to explain; A.S. glésan = to explain, to flatter; Sp. glosar; Port. glossar; Fr. gloser.] [GLOSE, GLOSS.]

A. Transitive:

1. To explain by note or comment; to gloss.

"Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France."
Shakesp.: Henry V., i. 2.

2. To flatter; to wheedle.

B. Intransitive:

1. To comment; to expound.

"A while he glozed upon the cause Of Commons, Covenant, and Laws."
Scott: Rokeby, i. 11.

2. To flatter.

"For he could well his glozing speeches frame To such vaine uses."—Spenser: F. Q., III. viii. 14.

glōze (2), v.t. [GLOSS.]

glōze (3), v.i. [Icel. glossi = a blaze.] To blaze.

"Gudewife, carry up a glozin' peat, an' kennel a spunk o' fire in them baith."—St. Kathleen, iii. 167.

glōze, s. [GLOZE, v.]

1. Flattery, wheedling, adulation.

2. Specious external show.

"Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.

glōz'-ẽr, glōs'-ẽr, s. [Eng. gloz(e) (1), v.; -er.]

1. A glosser; a commentator or annotator.

"The other Master de Prato a solempne prothonotary, his [John Bouchet] prating gloser, wrote of this treaty and composicion."—Hall: Henry V. (an. 8).

2. A flatterer; a wheedler.

"For some said, he was a Samaritan, that he had a devil within him, a gloser, a drinker, a pot companion."—Latimer: Sermons Preached before King Edward.

glŭb, v.t. [A variant of GULP (q.v.).] To gulp down or swallow voraciously.

glŭb'-bẽr, s. [Eng. glub; -er.] A glutton; a gormandizer.

"That ben glotons glubberes."
P. Plowman, 5,274.

glū'-çĭc, a. [Eng., &c. gluc(ose); suff. -ic.]

Chem.: Contained in, derived from, or in any manner connected with Glucose (q.v.).

glucic-acid, s.

Chem.: $C_{12}H_{22}O_{12}$. An acid obtained along with saccharumic acid, by boiling cane sugar with dilute sulphuric acid; by boiling glucose with baryta water, the precipitate of the barium salt of saccharumic acid is filtered off, and the glucic acid precipitated by means of basic lead acetate, and the lead salt decomposed by H_2S. Glucic acid is a honey-like mass easily soluble in alcohol and water; it is decomposed by boiling with water, or with dilute acids into formic, acetic, and apoglucinic acids. When boiled with strong acids it is converted into humic acid: some chemists consider this acid to be identical with levulinic acid (q.v.).

glū-çī'-na, s. [Gr. γλῦκυς (glukus) = sweet.]

Chem.: Oxide of beryllium (q.v.).

glū-çĭn'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. gluc(ose); -inic.] [GLUCIC.]

glū'-çĭn-ŭm, s. [Gr. γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet.]

Chem.: A metallic element. [BERYLLIUM.] The salts of glucinum have a sweet taste, hence the name.

Glucinum (symbol Gl. eq. 9·4) is a metal with a specific gravity of 2·1. It is white, malleable, and fusible below the melting point of silver, and does not burn in air or oxygen, though becoming covered with a thin coat of oxide. It combines readily with chlorine, iodine, and silicon. It does not have the power to decompose water, even when heated to redness. It dissolves readily in hydrochloric and sulphuric acids, and in a solution of potash, but is only slightly acted on by nitric acid. This element was first obtained from Glucina, its oxide, by Wöhler in 1827, who isolated it by decomposing the chloride of glucinum, resulting from the evaporation of a solution of Glucina in hydrochloric acid. Debray obtained it more abundantly in 1854 by a method similar to that employed by Sainte-Claire Deville for the reduction of aluminium. Glucinum forms salts with the various acids, which are colorless and much resemble those of aluminium.

glū-cŏn'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. gluco(se), n connective, and suff. -ic.]

Chem.: (For def. see etym. and compound).

gluconic-acid, s.

Chem.: $C_6H_{12}O_7$. An organic acid obtained by the oxidation of glucose with chlorine, or with bromine. Gluconic acid is a syrup; its alkaline salts are amorphous, and its barium and calcium salts are crystalline. It is insoluble in strong alcohol, and does not reduce Fehling's solution.

glū-cō-san', s. [Eng., &c. glucos(e), and an(hydride) (q.v.).]

Chem.: $C_6A_{10}O_5$. The anhydride of glucose. Obtained by heating glucose to 170°. Glucosan is colourless, with a faint, sweet taste; it is soluble in water and in alcohol; it does not ferment with yeast. By the action of dilute acids, glucosan is converted into glucose.

glū'-cōse, s. [Gk. γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet.]

Chem.: Glucose, glycose, $C_6H_{12}O_6$. A fermentable sugar, which occurs in two modifications, called Dextro-glucose, or Dextrose (q.v.), and Lævo-glucose, or Levulose (q.v.), according as it turns the plane of polarization to the right or left. A solution of cane-sugar warmed with dilute acids, or left in contact with yeast or pectase, is converted into dextrose and levulose, $C_{12}H_{22}O_{11} + H_2O = C_6H_{12}O_6 + C_6H_{12}O_6$. These modifications can be separated, thus—ten parts of the mixture of sugar are dissolved in 100 parts of water, and cooled with ice; then six parts of powdered calcium hydrate are added, the calcium compound of levulose is precipitated and separated from the soluble calcium compound of dextrose by strong pressure, washed, and decomposed by carbonic-acid gas. Levulose is more soluble in alcohol than dextrose. Both dextrose and levulose in contact with yeast undergo vinous fermentation, and when added to a solution of cupric sulphate, rendered alkaline by caustic potash, gives a dark-blue solution, which, when boiled, is reduced, cuprous oxide being precipitated as a red powder. Glucose is largely manufactured in the United States, great quantities of Indian corn being consumed in its preparation, the consumption ten years ago being given at 30,000 bushels daily. Glucose is chiefly used in the making of table syrups and confectionery, in the brewing of ale and beer, and to some extent as food for bees and in the making of artificial honey, &c. When fed to bees the honey yielded is almost pure glucose. In artificial honey-making the comb is formed of paraffin and filled with glucose by machinery. In the form of grape sugar it is used to adulterate table sugar.

glū-cō-sīde, s. [Eng., &c. glucos(e) (q.v.); -ide.]

Chem.: A name given to compounds which occur naturally in plants from which they are extracted by water, or by alcohol; they cannot be melted without decomposition, and are resolved by boiling with dilute acids into a saccharine substance, as glucose, and another substance which has generally neutral properties. The glucoside can be obtained from the aqueous or alcoholic extract of the plant, by precipitating the other substances by lead acetate, treating the filtrate with H_2S gas, and evaporating the filtrate. Glucosides are mostly solid and crystalline substances. They give a red color when heated to 70°, with a diluto solution of gall, and a little concentrated sulphuric acid. [PHLOROGLUCIDE, GUMMIDES, MANNIDES.]

glū-cōs-ūr'-ĭ-a, s. [Gk. γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet, and οὖρον (ouron) = urine.]

Pathol.: A form of diabetes (q.v.). The name has reference to the fact that the urine of persons affected with this disease contains sugar.

glūe,  glū,  glew,  glewe, s. [O. Fr. glu, from Low Lat. glutem, accus. of glus = glue. Allied to Lat. gluten, glutinum = glue, from a verb gluo* = to draw together.]

I. Literally:

1. A viscous substance made of the chippings of hides, horns, and hoofs, which are washed in lime-water, boiled, skimmed, strained, evaporated, cooled in moulds, cut into slices, and dried upon nets. It is manufactured in all countries engaged in the preparation of hides, &c., and therefore largely in the United States. A great quantity is now produced in France and Germany from bones. It is claimed, however, that Scottish glue is the best in the world. Glue is used in a great variety of manufactures, such as joinery, cabinet-making, book-binding, match-making, paper-making, &c. Large quantities are employed by paper-hangers in sizing walls. It is also used for stiffening straw, cotton, &c., used in the manufacture of hats and bonnets.

"Great cunning there is in making strong glew, and in the feat of joyning with it."—P. Holland: Pliny, bk. xvi., ch. xliii.

2. Any sticky or viscous substance.

"For what glue or cement holds the parts of hard matter in stones and metals together."—H. More: Immortality of the Soul, bk. i., ch. vii.

 II. Fig.: Any means or cause which unites or tends to unite bodies; a source of union; a link.

"The body of priests is copious, being joined together by the glue of mutual concord, and the bond of unity."—Barrow: Of the Pope's Supremacy.

¶ (1) White fish-glue, or diamond cement, is made of isinglass dissolved in alcohol.

(2) Marine glue of shellac and caoutchouc, equal parts, dissolved in separate portions of naphtha, and then mixed.

(3) Isinglass glue, of isinglass soaked in cold water; when swelled, put in spirits of wine; heated in a bottle plunged in a bath, with powdered chalk added.

(4) Waterproof-glue, of two ounces of isinglass boiled in a pint of skim-milk, until the requisite consistence is obtained.

glue-boiler, s.

1. A convenient apparatus for boiling skins into glue.

2. One whose business or trade is to make glue.

glue-can, s. [GLUE-POT.]

glue-cement, s. A cement to resist moisture. It is made of glue, 4 parts; black resin, 4 parts; red ochre, 1 part. Or, glue, 4 parts; boiled oil, 1 part; oxide of iron, 1 part.

glue-dryer, s. A machine or closet for drying sheets of glue.

glue-plant, s.

Bot.: Plocaria tenax, a fucoid sea-weed.

glue-pot, s. A can or pot with a can to hold the glue, which is melted by the heat of the water in the outer vessel.

"Heart, what dost thou with such a greasy dish? I think thou dost varnish thy face with the fat on't, it looks so like a glue-pot."—Ben Jonson: Every Man out of his Humour, v. 5.

glûe, * glew, * glwyn, v.t. & i. [GLUE, s.]

A. Transitive:

I. Lit.: To join or unite with glue, or other viscous substance.

"Their bowes are of wood of a yard long, sinewed at the back with strong sinewes, not glued too, but fast girded and tied on."—Hackluyt: Voyages, iii. 87.

II. Figuratively:

1. To unite; to join closely.

"Their armies ioynt in slaughters vile together glewed." Phaer: Virgil: Æneidos vii.

2. To join, to fix, to rivet, to attach.

* B. Intrans.: To become firmly or closely united, fixed, or attached. (Thomson: Winter, 934.)

glûed, * glewed, pa. par. or a. [GLUE, v.] glû'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GLUING.]

glû'-ẽr, s. [Eng. glu(e); -er.] One who or that which glues or cements; one who cements with glue.

glû'-ẽy, * glew-ey, * glew-ie, * gluw-y, glu-y, a. [Eng. glue; -y.] Of the nature of glue; resembling glue; viscous, tenacious, glutinous.

"And to the end the golde may couer them, they anoynt their bodies with stamped herbs of a glewey substance."—Hackluyt: Voyages, iii. 665.

glû'-cy-nĕss, s. [Eng. gluey; -ness.] The quality or state of being gluey.

* glŭg, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A clod; a lump.

"Place of safyr in stones, and the gluggis of bym gold."—Wycliffe: Job xxviii. 6.

glû'-ĭng, glû'e-ĭng, * glu-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [GLUE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or process of cementing or uniting with glue; the act of uniting or attaching closely and firmly.

glucing-machine, s. A machine for smearing upon an applied surface a thin and even coating of liquid glue.

glueing-press, s. A contrivance to hold firmly together a number of parts which have been attached by glue or cement.

glû'-ĭsh, * glew-ishe, a. [Eng. glu(e); -ish.] Having the nature of glue; gluey, glutinous.

"And consequently be fit for the soule of the deceased to have recourse to, and replenish their vehicle with such a cambium or glu'ish moisture, as will make it far easier to be commanded into a visible consistence."—H. More: Immortality of the Soul, bk. ii., ch. xvi.

* glŭm, v.i. [Sw. dial. glomma = to stare; connected with Sw. glömug = gloomy, and Eng. gloom (q.v.). (Skeat).] [GLOMBE.] To look sullen or gloomy; to gloom.

glŭm, * glumme, a. & s. [GLUM, v.]

A. As adj.: Sullen, frowning, gloomy.

"Thon shouldste not take me vp with visage and and glum."
Drant: Horace; Ep. to Julius Florus.

B. As substantive:

1. Sullenness, gloominess.

2. A frown; a sullen, gloomy, or frowning look.

"She looked hautely, and gane me a glum."
Skelton: Crowne of Laurell.

glû'-mą, s. [GLUME.]

* gluma-exterior, gluma-calycinalis, s.

Bot.: The same as GLUME (q.v.).

* gluma-interior, gluma-corollina, s.

Bot.: The same as GLUMELLA (q.v.).

glû-mā'-çē-ŏŭs (or ceous as shŭs), a. [Eng., &c. glum(e) (q.v.) -aceous.]

Bot.: Possessed of glumes resembling the flowers of grasses.

glû'-mąl, a. [Mod. Lat. glumalis.]

Bot.: Of, belonging to, or characterized by the possession of a glume; pertaining or relating to the Glumales (q.v.).

glumal-alliance, s.

Bot.: The English name given by Lindley to the alliance Glumales (q.v.).

glû-mā'-lēş, s. pl. [Masc. or fem. pl. of Mod. Lat. glumalis, from Class. Lat. gluma (q.v.).]

Bot.: The Glumal Alliance. It consists of Endogens possessed of glumes. [GLUME.] Lindley placed under it the orders Graminaceæ, Cyperaceæ, Desvauxiaceæ, Restiaceæ, and Eriocaulaceæ.

glûme, glû'-mą, s. [Lat. gluma = a hull or husk, especially of corn; glubo = to deprive of bark, to peel.]

Bot.: The exterior series of scales constituting the flower of a grass. It consists of

LOCUSTA OF OAT. (Avena sativa.)
gl. Glumes.

empty bracts. The name was given by Linnæus, and adopted by Lindley.

glû-mĕl'-ą, s. [Fem. dimin. from Lat. gluma (q.v.).]

Bot.: One of the names given by De Candolle and Desvaux to two bracts within the glumes of a grass; the other name being pale. In one of the bracts the midrib quits the blade a little below the apex, and is elongated into an awn, arista, or beard, whilst the other bract which faces the fruit has its back to the rachis, is bifid at the apex, has no dorsal veins, and has a rib on each side of its inflexed edges. These two bracts are called by Linnæus the corolla of the grass, by Jussieu the calyx, by Robert Brown the perianth, and by Lindley and others its paleæ.

glû-mĕl'-lu-ląą, s. [Fem. dimin. of glumella, which again is a dimin. of gluma (q.v.).]

Bot.: The name given by Desvaux and De Candolle to either of two minute colourless, sometimes connate, hypogynous scales within the glumes of grass. They are the nectarium of Linnæus, the corolla of Micheli and Dumortier, the squamulæ (scales) of Jussieu, Brown, and Lindley.

glû-mĭf'-ẽr-æ, s. pl. [Lat. gluma = a glume; fero = to bear, to produce, to bring forth, and Lat. fem. pl. suff. -æ.]

Bot.: The same as GLUMALES (q.v.).

glû-mĭf'-ẽr-ŏŭs, a. [Lat. gluma = a glume; fero = to bear, to produce, to bring forth, and Eng. adj. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Of or pertaining to the Glumiferæ; bearing glumes.

* glŭm'-mĭsh, a. [Eng. glum; -ish.] Dark, gloomy, dismal.

"An ilex-tree
With glummish darkish shade bespreddes the same."
Phaer: Virgil; Æneid xi.

* glŭm'-mỹ, a. [Eng. glum; -y.] Dark, gloomy, dismal.

"Such casual blasts may happen, as are most to be feared, when the weather waxeth dark and glummy."—Knight: Trial of Truth (1580), fo. 27.

* glŭm'-nĕss, s. [Eng. glum; -ness.] The quality or state of being glum; gloominess, sullenness.

† glû'-moŭs, a. [Eng. glum(e); -ous.]

Bot.: Having a filiform receptacle, with a common glume at the base.

glŭmp, v.i. [GLUM, a.] To look sulky or sullen; to show sullenness in one's manner.

* glŭmp'-ỹ, a. [Eng. glump; -y.] Glum, sullen, sulky.

glŭnch, a. & s. [Etym. doubtful.]

A. As adj.: Frowning, gloomy, sulky, sullen.

"But what's the use of looking sae glum and glunch about a pickle bannes?"—Scott: Antiquary, ch. ix.

B. As subst.: A sullen, angry look; a frown; a look of disdain, anger, or dislike.

glŭt, v.t. & i. [Lat. glutio, glutto = to swallow, to gulp down, from the same root as gula = the throat.]

A. Transitive:

* 1. To swallow, to gulp down.

* 2. To swallow up, to engulf.

"He'll be hanged yet,
Though every drop of water swear against it,
And gape at wid'st to glut him."
Shakesp.: Tempest, I. 1.

3. To cloy; to fill up beyond sufficiency; to sate, to disgust.

"Is this your fate, to glut the dogs with gore?"
Pope: Homer; Iliad xi. 950.

4. To feast or delight to satiety; to satiate.

"Go glut thy eyes with thy adored Iamena."
Smith: Phædra & Hippolitus, iii.

* 5. To saturate.

"The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it."—Boyle.

6. To overfill, to load; to fill with an oversupply of anything.

B. Intrans.: To feast, to eat to satiety.

"Like three horses that have broken fence.
And glutted all night long breast-deep in corn,
We issued gorged with knowledge"
Tennyson: Princess, ii. 365.

glŭt, s. [GLUT, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. That which is swallowed.

"Deep-throated engines . . . disgorging foul Their devilish glut." Milton: P. L., vi. 589.

2. Plenty, even to loathing or disgust.

3. More than enough, overmuch, a superabundance.

"An abundance, indeed a glut, of those talents which raise men to eminence in societies torn by internal factions."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xi.

* 4. Anything which fills up or obstructs a passage.

"The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were, by some glut, stopped, or, by other means, arrested in their passage."—Woodward.

5. A wooden wedge used as a quoin, a chock in splitting timber, or as a fulcrum to a lever.

II. Technically:

1. Arch.: An arched opening to the ash-pit of a kiln.

"The fireplaces . . . consist of mere rectangular brick chambers, with an orifice at the top for supplying the fuel, and an arched opening to the ash-pit, the arch itself being called the glut."—G. N. Redgrave, in Cassell's Technical Educator, pt. x. p. 206.

2. Bricklaying: A small brick or block introduced into a course to complete it.

3. Comm.: An oversupply of any commodity in the market; a supply beyond the demand.

4. Nautical:

(1) A patch at the centre of the head of a sail, having an eylet for the becket-rope.

(2) A choking, as by throwing the fall of a rope across the sheaves.

glut-brick, s. The same as GLUT, II. 2 (q.v.).

"The fire is prevented from falling out of the fire-hole by means of a rough open wall of brickbats, called the glut-bricks."—G. N. Redgrave, in Cassell's Technical Educator, pt. x., p. 206.

glû'-tæ-ŭs, s. [GLUTEUS.]

glû'-tăm-ąte, s. [Eng. glutam(ic); -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of glutamic-acid (q.v.).

glû-tăm'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. glut(en), and amic, an acid containing the radical (NH_2).] For def., see compound.

glutamic-acid, s.

Chem.: Glutamic-acid, amido-glutaric acid $C_5H_7(NH_2)O_4$, or $CH_2 < \begin{matrix} CH(NH_2)CO\cdot OH \\ CH_2\cdot CO\cdot OH \end{matrix}$.

Obtained by boiling vegetable gluten with dilute sulphuric acid, or casein with hydrochloric acid and atannous chloride. It is best prepared by boiling the gluten with 82 per cent. alcohol, which extracts the mucin, and boiling for twenty-four hours, with an inverted condenser, one part of the mucin with three parts of sulphuric acid and six parts of water; it is then filtered, saturated with chalk, filtered and evaporated to one-third of its bulk; the calcium salt is decomposed by oxalic acid, the excess of oxalic acid is removed by carbonate of lead, and the excess of $PbCO_3$ by H_2S gas, and, the filtrate evaporated, tyrosin crystallizes out, and afterwards the glutamic acid, which crystallizes out of hot water in tetrahedral crystals, which are nearly insoluble in alcohol and in ether, melt with partial decomposition at 140° Glutamic acid forms crystalline compounds with acids, and also forms salts. The barium salt gives characteristic needle groups like Wawellite.

glū-tăn'-āte, s. [Eng. glutan(ic); -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of glutanic acid (q.v.).

glū-tăn'-ĭc, a. [Eng. gluta(nic); n connective; -ic.] For def. see compound.

glutanic-acid, s.

Chem.: Oxyglutaric acid, Unsymmetrical hydroxypyrotartaric acid.

$$C_5H_8O_5 \text{ or } CH(OH)\cdot CO\cdot OH$$
$$|$$
$$CH_2$$
$$|$$
$$CH_2\cdot CO\cdot OH.$$

Obtained by passing nitrous gas into a solution of glutamic acid in nitric acid, or by acting on a dilute solution of glutamic acid in hydrochloric acid by potassium nitrite, evaporating on a water bath and slaking out with ether. It forms small crystals, which melt at 72°. When heated to 190°, the anhydride is formed. Heated with hydriodic acid to 120°, glutanic acid is reduced to normal pyrotartaric acid. Glutanic acid forms crystalline salts, called glutanates, which are only slightly soluble in cold water.

glū-tar-āte, s. [Eng. glutar(ic), and suff. -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of glutaric acid (q.v.).

glū-tăr'-ĭc, a. [Eng. gluta(mic); r connective; -ic.] For def. see compound.

glutaric-acid, s.

Chem.: Normal pyrotartaric acid. $C_5H_8O_4$, or $HO\cdot OC\cdot CH_2\cdot CH_2\cdot CH_2\cdot CO\cdot OH$. Obtained by heating glutanic acid with hydriodic acid to 120°; or by boiling for four hours one volume of normal propylene cyanide $CH_3\cdot(CH_2\cdot Cu)_2$ with a volume and a half of fuming hydrochloric acid, evaporating on a water bath and extracting with absolute alcohol; or by treating ethyl sodaceto-acetate with ethylic β iodopropionate, and decomposing the resulting ethylic aceto-glutanate with concentrated alcoholic potash. Glutaric acid crystallizes out of water in large transparent monoclinic prisms, which melt at 97·5, and distil at 304°; it is easily soluble in water, alcohol, and in ether. It forms crystalline salts called glutarates.

Glutaric anhydride, $C_5H_6O_3$, is obtained by the action of acetyl chloride on the silver salt, or by slowly heating the acid at 230° to 280°. It forms fine needles, which melt at 56°, and are only slightly soluble in cold ether.

glū-tē-al, a. [Lat. gluteus (pl. glutei); Eng., &c. suff. -al.]

Anat.: Pertaining to the muscles called glutei, or to the buttock. Thus there is a gluteal artery as well as an inferior and a superior gluteal nerve.

glū-tēn, s. [Lat.]

Chem.: An albuminous substance, obtained by mixing ten parts of wheat-meal with eight parts of water, and allowing it to stand for half-an-hour; it is then washed with water, and kneaded, till all the starch is washed away, and the gluten thus obtained is a tenacious, yellowish-grey, elastic mass, which dries into a horny, semi-transparent mass, resembling glue. Gluten is soluble in dilute acids, but is nearly insoluble in water. Moist gluten putrefies when exposed to the air, unless it is quickly dried. Gluten is partly soluble in 80 per cent. alcohol; the portion insoluble in alcohol is called vegetable fibrin. The alcoholic solution contains mucin and glutin, or vegetable gelatine (q.v.).

gluten-bread, s. Bread containing a large quantity of gluten. It has been largely used in diabetes, but few people are able to eat it for any length of time.

 glut-en-ry, * glut-en-er-ie, s. [Glutonry.]

 glut-er-nes, * glut-err-nesse, s. [Icel. glutr = voracious.] Gluttony

"Gluterrnesse waeneththh all Galluessess."
Ormulum, 11,653

glū-tē-ūs, * glū-tæ-ūs (pl. glū-tē-ī), s. [Gr. γλουτος (gloutos) = the buttock.]

Anat. (Pl.): Three muscles of the hip, the Gluteus maximus, the gluteus medius, and the gluteus minimus. The first is a very large and coarsely fasciculated muscle, which makes the buttock prominent in man: its use is to extend the thigh. The second is smaller; it is partly covered by the muscle already mentioned, and acts when one stands. The third is the smallest; it is covered by the second one, and acts as an abductor of the thigh.

glū-tĭn, glū-tĭne, s. [Eng., &c. glut(en); -in, -ine.]

Chem.: Vegetable gelatine. Obtained along with mucin by heating gluten in small fragments, with alcohol of 80 per cent., and then with alcohol of 70 per cent.; the alcoholic solutions are united, and the half of the alcohol distilled off. On cooling it deposits a mixture of glutin and mucin. The deposit is dissolved in 50 per cent. alcohol, and filtered through calico whilst hot, and then agitated till it is cold; most of the mucin is precipitated, the filtered liquid is evaporated in a water bath, and the glutin dissolved in alcohol. Glutin containing water is a fluid resembling a yellow varnish. Absolute alcohol precipitates it as a solid yellow-white substance, which can be dried over sulphuric acid; when rubbed dry, glutin becomes electric. Glutin is soluble in alkalis, and in dilute hydrochloric acid, and acetic acid. The chemical formula of glutin is not known. The analysis gave: carbon 52·7, hydrogen 7·1, nitrogen 18·0, and sulphur 0·9 per cent.

glū-tĭn-āte, v.t. [Lat. glutinatus, pa. par. of glutino = to cement; gluten (genit. glutinis) =glue.] To cement or unite with glue; to glue.

glū-tĭn-ā-tion, s. [Lat. glutinatio, from glutinatus, pa. par. of glutino = to glue, to cement.] The act or process of cementing or uniting with glue.

glū'-tĭn-ā-tĭve, a. [Eng. glutinat(e); -ive; Fr. glutinatif; Ital. glutinativo.] Having the quality of cementing; glutinous; viscous.

glū'-tine, s. [Glutin.]

glū-tĭn-ĭng, a. [Lat. glutin(o) = to glue, to cement; suff. -ing.] Glutinous, viscid, cementing.

"Leaving an aquatic and viscous glutining kind of sweat upon the glass."—Digby Of the Sympathetic Powder.

glū-tĭn ĭ-ŭm, s. [Lat. = gluten.]

Bot.: The flesh of certain fungals. (Treas. of Bot.)

 glū'-tĭ nōse, a. [Glutinous.]

 glū-tĭn-ŏs'-ĭ-tỹ, * glu-tĭn-os-ĭ-tie, s. [Fr. glutinosité; Sp. glutinosidad; Ital. glutinosita, from Lat. glutinosus = glutinous.] The quality or state of being glutinous; glutinousness.

glū-tĭn-ŏŭs, a. [Lat. glutinosus, from glutinum = glue; Fr. glutineux; Sp., Port., & Ital. glutinoso.]

I. Ord. Lang.: Viscous; viscid; gluey; tenacious; having the quality of or resembling glue.

"All these threads, being newly spun, are glutinous, and, therefore, stick to each other whenever they happen to touch."—Goldsmith To Bee, lv.

2. Bot.: Viscid, glutinose, adhesive, gluey, covered with a sticky exudation.

glū'-tĭn-ŏŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. glutinous; -ness.] The quality or state of being glutinous; glutinosity; viscousness.

"In good spirit of wine, whose tenacity and glutinousness is far less than that of water, bubbles rarely continue on the liquor."—Boyle: Works, vol. v., p 205.

glŭt'-măn, s. [Eng. glut, and man.] A term used in the Custom-house for an extra officer employed when there is a glut of work.

glŭts, s. [Glut, s.] A local name in Oxfordshire for the broad-nosed eel (Anguilla latirostris).

glŭt'-tĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Glut, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of swallowing greedily, or gulping down food.

"Glutting of meals which weakeneth the body."—Sir J. Checke The Hurt of Sedition.

glŭt tŏn, * glot on, * glot-one, * glot-oun, * glut-on, * glut-ten, s. & a. [O. Fr. gloton (Fr. glouton), from Lat. glutonem, accus. of gluto = a glutton, from glutio = to devour, to gulp down; Sp. gloton; Port. glotão; Ital. ghiottone.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. One who indulges in eating or drinking to excess; a gormandizer; one who gorges himself with food.

"They beeth in etynge and in drynkynge glotouns."—Trevisa, ii. 171.

2. One who indulges in or is eager for anything in excess.

"Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal hearts so impiously employ." Granville.

*3. A wretch; an epithet of contempt and disgust.

"A glotoun, saide the emperer, entempre thou beter thy tonge!" Sir Ferumbras, 164.

II. Technically:

1. Zool.: The popular name for the Wolverene or Wolverine (Gulo luscus), a carnivorous mammal of the family Melidæ (Badgers). It is a voracious animal, but not quite meriting the stigma of being called a glutton. The calumnies seem to have been first circulated by Olaus Magnus, Buffon following in his train. The English residents at Hudson's Bay call it Quickehatch, or what Catesby and Ellis spell Quickhatch, and Graham Quiquihatch. Its length is from two to three feet. It occurs in high latitudes in Europe, Asia, and North America. Its motions are slow, but it manages to feed on mice, marmots, and other rodents, and, when it can obtain them, on larger quadrupeds alive or dead. Hence Buffon formally described it as a quadruped-vulture. In North America it looks out for marten-traps, set in connection with the fur trade, carefully avoids personally entering them, but, standing outside, pulls them asunder, scattering the logs about, and rends to pieces any martens that may have been caught, but, instead of eating them, buries them in the snow. Its fur is of little value. When caught it emits an insupportable stench. Its footprints in the snow resemble those of a young bear. [Gulo, Wolverene.]

2. Palæont.: In 1871 Prof. Boyd Dawkins intimated the discovery of the glutton in Galtfaenan Cave, near Cefn, St. Asaph, in deposits "of the pleistocene or quaternary age." (Quar. Jour. Geo. Soc., xxviii. 406, &c.) It has since been found in the Norfolk Forest bed (Ibid., xxxvi. p. 99).

B. As adj.: Pertaining to or resembling a glutton; gluttonous. (Dryden: Rel. Laici, 33.)

 glŭt'-tŏn, v.i. & t. [Glutton, s.]

A. Intrans.: To act like a glutton; to gluttonize; to gormandize.

"Whereon in Egypt gluttoning they fed" Drayton.

B. Trans.: To overfill; to glut.

"Gluttoned at last, return at home to pine."
Lovelace: Lucasta Posthuma, p. 81.

 glŭt'-tŏn-ĭsh, a. [Eng. glutton; -ish.] Like a glutton; gluttonous.

"Having now framed their gluttonish stomache to have for food the wild benefits of nature."—Sidney: Arcadia, bk. iv.

 glŭt'-tŏn-ĭze, v.i. [Eng. glutton; -ize.] To eat as a glutton; to eat to excess.

"What reason can you allege why you should glutonize and devour as much as would honestly suffice so many of your brethren?"—Marvell: Works, i. 335.

 glŭt'-tŏn-lỹ, * glut-oun-liche, adv. [Eng. glutton; -ly.] Like a glutton; gluttonously, voraciously.

"That thou sselt ete zuythe and glotounliche."—Ayenbite, p. 110.

glŭt-tŏn-ŏŭs, * glot-on-ous, a. [Eng. glutton; -ous.]

1. Given to gluttony or excess in eating and drinking; indulging the appetite to excess; insatiable.

"It is rather to pamper your gluttonous maws."—Bale: English Votaries, pt. ii.

2. Characterized by gluttony or excess.

"And wantonness, and gluttonous excess."
Cowper: Task, i. 683.

glŭt'-tŏn-ŏŭs-lў, * glou-ton-ous-ly, adv. [Eng. gluttonous; -ly.] In a gluttonous manner; like a glutton; voraciously; insatiably.

"Eche man riotously and gloutonously, not lokyng for other."—Udal: 1 Cor. xi.

* glŭt'-tŏn-ŏŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. gluttonous; -ness.] The quality or state of being gluttonous; gluttony; insatiable rapacity. (Lit. & fig.)

"Penny-a-lining gluttonousness is doing a great deal of harm."—Echo, Nov. 5, 1881, p. 3.

* glŭt'-tŏn-rў, * glu-ten-er-ie, s. [Eng. glutton; -ry.] Gluttony.

glŭt'-tŏn-ў, * glot-on-ie, * glot-on-y, * glot-on-ye, * glot-en-y, * glot-un-yc, s. [O. Fr. glotonie, gloutonnie; Fr. glutonnie.] Excess in eating or drinking; excessive or extravagant indulgence of the appetite for food; voracity; gourmandizing.

"Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts."
Milton: P. R., iv. 114.

glû'-ў, a. [GLUEY.]

glўç'-ĕr-alş, s. pl. [Eng., &c. glycer(in), and al(dehyde)s.]

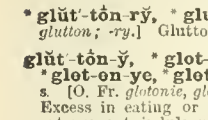
Chem.: Compounds analogous to acetals, obtained by heating glycerin with aldehydes for thirty hours at a temperature of 170° to 180°; as aceto-glyceral $C5H10O3$, or



It boils at 184° to 188°.

glўç-ĕr-ăm'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. glycer(in), and amic.] (For def. see etym. and compound.)

glyceramic-acid, s.

Chem.: Serin. $C3H7NO3$ or $C2H3(OH)·NH2·CO·OH$. A monobasic, triatomic, amido-acid, obtained by boiling silk with water and evaporating the filtered solution, adding a quarter of its volume of sulphuric acid, and boiling for twenty-four hours; then it is neutralized with excess of calcium hydrate, the filtrate is evaporated and a little $H2SO4$ added to neutralize it. Tyrosin and calcium sulphate first separate out on evaporation, then serin, and lastly a little leucin. The serin is dissolved in 40 parts of cold water, filtered, the filtrate neutralized by ammonia, and the calcium salt is then decomposed by carbon dioxide. It forms monoclinic crystals dissolving in 24 parts of water at 20°. It is insoluble in alcohol and in ether. It forms crystalline compounds with acids and with bases.

glў-çĕr'-a-mĭne, s. [Eng., &c. glycer(ine), and amine.]

Chem.: $C3H9NO2$ or $CH2(OH)·CH(OH)·CH2·NH2$. A base obtained by passing ammonia gas into a solution of dibromhydrin $C3H5'''(OH)Br2$ in absolute alcohol. Glyceramine is a liquid soluble in water and in ether.

glўç'-ĕr-āte, s. [Eng., &c. glycer(in); -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of glyceric-acid (q.v.).

glў-çĕr'-ĭ-a, s. [Gr. γλυκερός (glukeros) = sweet, in allusion to the sweetness of the grain.]

Bot.: Manna grass, a genus of grasses, tribe Festuceæ, family Bromidæ. The glumes are convex, five to seven nerved, the tip acute or obtuse. Seven species occur in Britain—(1) Glyceria aquatica, (2) G. fluitans, (3) G. maritima, (4) G. distans, (5) G. procumbens, (6) G. rigida, and (7) G. loliacea. No. 2 is abundant in ditches and stagnant waters; No. 1 on the sides of rivers, ponds, and ditches; No. 6 in dry rocks and walls; the rest occur either on muddy or on sandy sea shores. Ducks and other aquatic birds eat their seeds. Those of No. 2 are used under the name of manna-croup as a light nutritious food for invalids.

glўç'-ĕr-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. glycer(in); -ic.] Contained in or prepared from glycerine (q.v.).

"The flower is dipped in glyceric liquid so as to receive films in the petals and the central part."—Times, Nov. 4, 1881, p. 4.

glyceric-acid, s.

Chem.: $C3H6O4$ or $CH2(OH)·CH(OH)·CO·OH$. A thick syrup, obtained by the slow action of fuming nitric acid on glycerin, the two liquids being separated by a layer of water; it is soluble in alcohol and in water. When boiled with concentrated caustic potash, it yields oxalic acid and lactic acid. When fused with caustic potash it is decomposed, acetate and formate of potassium being formed; by the action of concentrated hydriodic acid it yields β iodopropionic acid. By the action of $PCl5$ it is converted into dichloropropionyl chloride, $CH2Cl·CHCl·CO·Cl$. Glyceric-acid yields crystalline salts called glycerates. Glyceric-acid heated to 105° for ten hours yields an anhydride which crystallizes out of water in thin needles, which are insoluble in cold alcohol. They decompose at 250° without melting.

glўç'-ĕr-ide, s. [Eng., &c. glycer(in); -ide.]

Chem.: A name given to ethers of the triatomic alcohol glycerol, $C3H5'''(OH)3$. They have generally the termination -in. One, two, or three hydroxyls (OH) can be replaced by acid radicals. Thus acetic acid forms with glycerin ethers called acetins. One molecule of acetic acid + one molecule of glycerol yields mono-acetin + $H2O$. Two molecules of acetic acid and one molecule of glycerol yield di-acetin + $2H2O$, and three molecules of acetic acid and one molecule of glycerol yield tri-acetin + $3H2O$. Glycerides occur in the fat of animals as tri-stearin, $C3H5(O·C18H35O)3$, and in vegetable fixed oils, as tri-olein, $C3H5'''(OC18H33O)3$, &c. Glycerides are insoluble in water, slightly soluble in alcohol, and more soluble in ether. Glycerides are saponified by heating them with alkalies, with calcium oxide, or lead oxide, yielding glycerin and salts of the respective acids. [FATS, OILS.] Glycerides are also decomposed into their acids and glycerin by distillation in a current of steam, the temperature being kept between 550° and 600° F. Mixed ethers of glycerin and alcoholic radicals are obtained by heating mono- and di-chlorhydrine with sodium alcoholates, as mono-ethylin, $C3H5'''$ { OH, OH, $O·C2H5$, boiling at 230°; di-ethylin, $C3H5'''$ { OH, $OC2H5$, $OC2H5$, boiling at 191°. By heating di-ethylin with sodium, and ethyl-iodide, it is converted into tri-ethylin, $C3H5'''$ { $OC2H5$, $OC2H5$, $OC2H5$, boiling at 185°.

glўç'-ĕr-ĭn, glўç'-ĕr-ĭne, s. [Gr. γλυκερός (glukeros), γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet; -in, -ine.]

1. Chem. & Comm.: A triatomic alcohol of the fatty series, more properly called glycerol (q.v.), $C3H8O3$, or $CH2(OH)·CH(OH)·CH2(OH)$. Glycerin was discovered in 1778 by Scheele, who obtained it in the preparation of lead-plaster by saponifying lard with oxide of lead. Glycerin occurs in most natural animal and vegetable fats in combination with fatty acids, from which it can be obtained by saponifying with alkalis. (PREPARATION OF SOAP.) It is also formed during the alcoholic fermentation of sugar. Pure glycerin is obtained by heating neutral fats in a still, with a condensing apparatus, and passing steam in small jets through the melted fat, the temperature being kept below 600° F., and above 550° F.; the fat acids separate out in the receivers from the glycerin and water; the glycerin is then concentrated by evaporation. Glycerin is a thick, colourless, inodorous, neutral syrup, which has a very sweet taste; it mixes with water in all proportions, is soluble in alcohol and in chloroform, but insoluble in ether. It can be obtained by freezing, in deliquescent rhombic crystals, which melt at 17°. Glycerin boils at 290°; it is very hygroscopic; heated to 150° it burns with a bluish flame. Glycerin dissolves iodine and many metallic oxides and salts, also salts of the alkaloids. The sp. gr. of glycerin is 1·26 at 15°, compared with water at 4°. Glycerin distilled with phosphorus pentachloride, $P2Cl5$, yields acrolein. By the action of a mixture of equal parts of concentrated nitric acid and sulphuric acid, it is converted into nitroglycerin, $CH2·O·(NO2)·CH·O(NO2)·CH2·O(NO2)$ (q.v.). Glycerin is used for preserving fruits, &c.; also as a solvent for various salts, and in preparing copying-ink; also as a lubricator for machinery and clockwork, and is placed over water in gasmeters to prevent freezing, and is used for filling floating compasses. It is employed in the form of nitroglycerin in the preparation of dynamite, and for mixing with soap to form glycerin soap, which tends to soften the skin. Glycerin is often used to adulterate wine, beer, milk, &c. Its presence can be detected by evaporating the liquid to dryness on a water-bath, and extracting the residue with alcohol; the alcoholic solution is then evaporated and caustic soda added till it is slightly alkaline; a little of this solution placed on a watch glass and powdered borax added, glycerin, if present, will set free the boracic acid, which gives a characteristic green colour when introduced into a flame on a platinum wire.

2. Phar.: Glycerin is used in the preparation of Glycerinum acidi carbolici, glycerin of carbolic acid; Glycerinum acidi gallici, glycerin of gallic acid; Glycerinum acidi tannici, glycerin of tannic acid, in which four fluid ounces of glycerin are mixed with one ounce of the acid; Glycerinum amyli, glycerin of starch; Glycerinum boracis, glycerin of borax. These compounds are called glycerina or glycerines. Glycerin is used on account of its physical properties as an adjunct to lotions in skin diseases to prevent the surface becoming dry. It can be used as a substitute for sugar in the diet of diabetic patients. It is often adulterated with glucose and cane sugar, which can be detected by expelling the water by heat, and treating with chloroform, which dissolves the glycerin and leaves the sugar as an insoluble residue.

glўç'-ĕr-ĭ-zīne, s. [GLYCYRRHIZIN.]

glўç'-ĕr-ōl, s. [Eng., &c. glycer(in), and (alcoh)ol (q.v.).]

Chem.: The chemical name for glycerine (q.v.).

¶ Synthesis of Glycerol: Acetone, $CH3·CO·CH3$, is converted into isopropyl alcohol, $CH3·CH(OH)·CH3$, by the action of sodium amalgam. This is converted into propylene, $CH2=CH·CH3$. By heating it with zinc chloride, the propylene is passed into a concentrated solution of iodine chlorine; the propylene chloriodide thus produced is suspended in water, and chlorine gas passed into the liquid till the iodine first precipitated is redissolved; the pure propylene dichloride was then heated with dry iodine chlorine in sealed tubes to 140° for eight hours, the tubes being opened after a while to allow the escape of the hydrochloric acid gas, then again sealed up, and heated to 140° for eight hours. To remove the excess of iodine, the contents of the tubes are mixed with water, and chlorine passed into the liquid till the whole of the iodine is dissolved in the water as iodine chloride; the product is separated from the water and dried, and fractionally distilled. An impure trichlorhydrin, $CH2Cl·CHCl·CH2Cl$, is obtained, which, heated with water to 180°, yields glycerin. (Watts: Dict. Chem.) glўç'-ĕr-ўl, s. [Eng., &c. glycer(in); -yl = Gr. ὕλη (hulē) = matter.]

Chem.: $C3H5'''$. The triatomic radical of glycerin and the glycerides.

glycery-chloride, s. [CHLORHYDRINS.]

glyceryl-oxide, s.

Chem.: Glyceryl ether $(C3H5)2O3$. Obtained by distilling glycerin with calcium chloride. It is a colourless oily liquid, boiling at 172°. It mixes with water, alcohol, and ether. Heated with water in a sealed tube at 100° it is converted into glycerin; it unites with bromine, forming dibromhydrin. It is not attacked by sodium amalgam; it is oxidized by chromic acid mixture, yielding formic acid and acetic acid.

glў-çĭd'-a-mĭne, s. [Eng., &c. glycid(e), and amine.]

Chem.: $C3H7NO$, or $O<CH2 / CH·CH2·NH2$. A base produced by the action of alcohol, containing one per cent. of ammonia or dichlorhydrin. The hydrochlorate forms hygroscopic crystals, $C3H7NO·HCl$.

glўç'-ĭde, s. [Eng., &c. glyc(erin), and (anhydr)ide.]

Chem.: $C3H6O2$, or $O<CH2 / CH / CH2(OH)$, an alcohol obtained by dissolving glycidic acetate in ether, adding caustic soda, the solution being cooled with ice. Glycide is a liquid boiling at 163°. It is soluble in water, alcohol, and ether; heated with water it is converted into glycerin; by the action of dilute nitric acid it is converted into mono-nitroglycerin; it reduces an ammoniacal solution of silver salts at ordinary temperatures.

gly-çid'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c., glycid(e); -ic.] Contained in or derived from glycide (q.v.).

glycidic-ethers, s. pl.

Chem.: Obtained by heating epichlorhydrin (q.v.), with alcohol to 180° as ethyl glycidic ether, $O\begin{cases}CH_2\\|\\CH\\|\\CH_2\cdot O\cdot C_2H_5\end{cases}$ boiling at 128°, and glycidic acetate, $O\begin{cases}CH_2\\|\\CH\\|\\CH_2\cdot O\cdot CO\cdot CH_3\end{cases}$ obtained by heating epichlorhydrin with dry potassium acetate to 115°, and then to 150°. It boils at 168°.

glȳ'-çĭn, s. [Glycocine.]

glȳç'-ĭ-nē, s. [Gr. γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet, because the leaves and roots of some species are sweet.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the sub-tribe Glycineæ (q.v.), the species, all but one of which are decumbent if not even twining, have alternate leaves with axillary racemes or fascicles of yellow flowers. Locality, the warmer parts of the Old World. Glycine Soja, the erect species alluded to, is cultivated in the East Indies for its beans. From these the Japanese make a sauce called sooja or soy. The garden plant called Glycine is now removed to Mulletia.

glȳ-çĭn'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Lat. glycine, and fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A sub-tribe of papilionaceous plants, tribe Phaseoleæ.

glȳ-cō-, pref. [Gr. γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet.] Sweet.

glȳ-cō-chŏ'-lāte, s. [Eng. glycochol(ic); -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of glycocholic-acid (q.v.).

glȳ'-cō-chō-lĭc, a. [Eng., &c. glyco(gen), and cholic (q.v.).] (For def., see compound.)

glycocholic-acid, s.

Chem.: $C_{26}H_{43}NO_6$. An acid occurring as a sodium salt in the bile of most animals. It is obtained by covering fresh bile in a tall glass cylinder with a layer of ether, and adding 1 c.c. of strong HCl to every 50 c.c. of bile; in a few days a crystalline mass is formed, which is filtered, washed with cold water, and crystallized out of boiling water; it forms fine needles, which melt at 100°, and are soluble in alcohol; when boiled with baryta water, it is decomposed into cholic acid and glycocine, $C_{26}H_{43}NO_6 + H_2O = C_{24}H_{40}O_5 + C_2H_5NO_2$. On adding to a solution of an alkaline glycocholate a few drops of a solution of sugar, then a drop of strong sulphuric acid, a red to a violet colour is produced. Glycocholic acid forms salts which are called Glycocholates; the glycocholates of the alkalis and earth metals are soluble in water and in alcohol. Glycocholate of sodium is precipitated from its alcoholic solution by ether; acetate of lead gives a precipitate which is soluble in alcohol.

glȳ'-cō-çĭne, s. [Gr. γλυκός (glukos) = sweet; -ine.]

Chem.: Glycocine, glycine, glycocol, amidoacetic acid, glycollamic acid, amido-glycollic acid. $C_2H_5NO_2$, or $CH_2(NH_2)\cdot CO\cdot OH$. Glycocine can be obtained by boiling gelatin with baryta, neutralizing with sulphuric acid, evaporating and extracting with alcohol; by boiling one part of hippuric acid with four parts of fuming HCl, filtered when cold from the benzoic acid, evaporating to expel the excess of HCl, washing the residue with ammonia, then with absolute alcohol; by passing cyanogen gas into a boiling concentrated solution of hydriodic acid, $\begin{vmatrix}CN\\|\\CN\end{vmatrix} + 2H_2O + 5HI = NH_4I + 2I_2 + \begin{vmatrix}CH_2\cdot NH_2\\|\\CO\cdot OH\end{vmatrix}$; also by the reduction by zinc and HCl of cyan-carbonic ether in an alcoholic solution, $CN\cdot CO\cdot OC_2H_5 + 4H = H_2O + CH_2\cdot NH_2\cdot COOH + C_2H_5\cdot OH$; by heating bromacetic acid with ammonia; by heating to 60° dry ammonium carbonate with monochloracetic acid. It has a sweet taste, and melts at 170°; at higher temperatures it is decomposed. It gives a deep red colour with ferric chlorides, which is destroyed by acids, but restored by ammonia; with phenol and hypochlorite of sodium it gives a beautiful blue colour. Glycocine forms crystalline compounds with acids, also salts with bases. Glycocine heated with caustic baryta gives off methylamine; heated with sulphuric acid and manganese dioxide glycocine is decomposed into hydrocyanic acid, water at CO_2. Glycocine heated with nitrous acid is converted into glycollic acid, with liberation of nitrogen.

glȳ'-cō-cŏl, s. [Gr. γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet, and κόλλα (kolla) = glue.] [Glycocine.]

glȳ-cō-çȳ'-ăm'-ĭ dīne, s. [Eng., &c. glycocyam(ine); -idene.]

Chem.: $C_3H_5N_3O$, or $HNC\begin{cases}NH—CO\\NH—CH_2\end{cases}$.

A base obtained by heating the hydrochlorate of glycocyamine to 160°, and treating the hydrochlorate with $Pb(OH)_2$. It crystallizes in deliquescent plates, which are very soluble in water, having an alkaline reaction.

glȳ-cō-çȳ'-a-mĭne, s. [Eng., &c. glyco(cine); cyamine.]

Chem.: Guanidacetylic acid. $C_3H_7N_3O_2$, or $HN = C(NH_2)NH\cdot CH_2CO\cdot O_4$). Boiled with water and dilute sulphuric acid, it is resolved into oxalic acid, guanidine, and carbonic acid.

glȳ-cō-drū'-pōse, s. [Eng., &c. glyco(se), and drupose.]

Chem.: $C_{24}H_{36}O_{16}$. The strong concretions in pears, produced by thickening and hardening of the cell walls, consists of this substance, together with a small quantity of mineral matter, which is removed by digesting them with dilute acetic acid. Glycodrupose is insoluble in water, alcohol, and ether; boiled with dilute nitric acid it yields cellulose and oxalic acid, boiled with dilute hydrochloric acid it yields drupose and glucose.

glȳ'-cō-ġĕn, s. [Eng., &c. glyco(se); -gen.]

Chem.: $C_{12}H_{20}O_{10} + H_{20}$. Glycogen occurs in the liver of mammals, and in molluscs. It is a white powder, which dissolves in water, forming an opalescent fluid, which is four times more dextrorotary than a solution of dextrose of the same strength. It is insoluble in alcohol; it gives a red colour with iodine solution, and does not reduce an alkaline solution of cupric oxide. When boiled with dilute sulphuric or dilute hydrochloric acid, it is converted into glucose. In the liver of an animal that has been long dead the glycogen has been converted into glucose.

glȳ'-cō-ġĕn-āte, s. [Eng. glycogen(ic); -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of glycogenic-acid (q.v.).

glȳ-cō-ġĕn'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. glycogen; -ic.] Pertaining to or derived from glycogen (q.v.).

glycogenic-acid, s.

Chem.: $C_6H_{12}O_7$. An acid produced by the action of bromine and silver oxide, or glycogen; it is a syrup. Its salts are crystalline, soluble in water and insoluble in alcohol.

glȳ'-cŏl, s. [Eng., &c. glyc(erin), and (alcoh)ol.]

Chemistry:

I. Sing.: Ethene glycol, $C_2H_6O_2$ or $\begin{vmatrix}CH_2\cdot OH\\|\\CH_2\cdot OH.\end{vmatrix}$

A diatomic alcohol of the glycol series; obtained by distilling ethene diacetate with caustic potash. Glycol is a liquid having a sweet taste, boiling at 197°; soluble in alcohol and in water, only slightly soluble in ether. It is oxidized by nitric acid, forming glycollic acid, glyoxalic acid, and oxalic acid. Heated to 250° with solid caustic potash, it yields potassium oxalate, and gives off hydrogen, $2KOH + C_2H_6O_2 = K_2C_2O_4 + 8H$. Heated with zinc chloride, $ZnCl_2$, it yields aldehyde, an atom of water being eliminated; with PCl_5 it forms ethene dichloride, $C_2H_4Cl_2$; by the action of hydriodic acid, HI, it is reduced to ethyl iodide, C_2H_5I. Metallic sodium can replace either one or two atoms of hydrogen in the hydroxyl radicals, forming sodium ethenate, $\begin{vmatrix}CH_2OH\\|\\CH_2ONa\end{vmatrix}$, and disodium diethenate, $\begin{vmatrix}CH_2ONa.\\|\\CH_2ONa\end{vmatrix}$ Glycol dissolves KHO and $Ca(OH)_2$.

2. Pl.: Diatomic alcohols of the fatty series, of which glycol is the first member. They may be regarded as derived from hydrocarbons of the paraffin series, C_nH_{2n+2}, by the substitution of two hydroxyl radicals, (OH)$_2$, for two atoms of hydrogen, attached to different carbon atoms; or from olefines, C_nH_{2n}, by the union with two hydroxyls. Glycols are obtained by combining an olefine with two atoms of bromine, $C_2H_4 + Br_2 = \begin{vmatrix}CH_2Br\\|\\CH_2Br\end{vmatrix}$, and converting the dibromide into diacetate, by means of an alcoholic solution of potassium acetate, and decomposing the diacetate by caustic potash; also obtained by combining an olefine with hypochlorous acid, ClOH, and acting on the chlorhydrin thus obtained by moist silver oxide, $\begin{vmatrix}C_2HCl\\|\\CH_2\cdot OH\end{vmatrix} + AgOH = AgCl + \begin{vmatrix}CH_2\cdot OH\\|\\CH_2\cdot OH\end{vmatrix}$. The glycols are colourless, inodorous, neutral liquids, having a sweet taste, and are intermediate compounds between monatomic alcohols and glycerols. They are soluble in water and alcohol, but only slightly soluble in ether. By the action of hydrochloric acid they are converted into monatomic alcohols.

glȳ-cŏl'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. glycol; -ic.] Derived from or pertaining to glycol.

glycolic-ethers, s. pl.

Chem.: The ethers of diatomic alcohols or glycols, the hydrogen in the hydroxyl radical being replaced by an acid radical, as $C_2H_4\begin{cases}OH\\OH\end{cases}$, glycol, $C_2H_4\begin{cases}O\cdot C_2H_3O\\OH\end{cases}$, glycol acetate, or monoacetate of ethylene, $C_2H_4\begin{cases}O\cdot C_2H_3O\\O\cdot C_2H_3O\end{cases}$, glycol diacetate, or diacetate of ethylene, or by an alcohol radical, as, $C_2H_4\begin{cases}O\cdot C_2H_5\\OH\end{cases}$, glycol monoethylate, and $C_2H_4\begin{cases}O\cdot C_2H_5\\O\cdot C_2H_5\end{cases}$, glycol diethylate.

glȳ-cō-lĭg'-nōse, s. [Pref. glyco-, and Eng., &c. lignose (q.v.).]

Chem.: $C_{30}H_{46}O_{11}$. A yellowish white substance, obtained by exhausting the wood of the spruce fir, Abies excelsa, with dilute acetic acid, alcohol, and ether. It is decomposed by boiling with hydrochloric acid, yielding glucose and lignose, $C_{18}H_{26}H_{11}$. Glycolignose fused with caustic potash yields potassium salts of oxalic and succinic acids, and pyro catechin, $C_6H_4(OH)_2$-(1—2).

glȳ-cŏl'-la-mīde, s. [Eng. glycoll(ic), and amide.]

Chem.: $C_2H_5NO_2$, or $\begin{vmatrix}CH_2OH.\\|\\CO\cdot NH_2.\end{vmatrix}$ The amide of glycollic acid. Obtained by heating ammonium tartronate till no more CO_2 is given off, and recrystallizing from water; also by the action of ammonia on ethyl glycollate. Glycollamide is soluble in water, and slightly soluble in alcohol. It melts at 120°. By the action of alkalis or dilute acids it is converted into ammonia and glycollic acid.

glȳ'-cŏl-lāte, s. [Eng. glycoll(ic); -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of glycollic acid (q.v.).

glȳ-cŏl'-lĭc, a. [Eng., &c. glycol, l connective, -ic.] Derived from or pertaining to glycol (q.v.).

glycollic-acid, s.

Chem.: Oxyacetic acid, oxacetic acid, $C_2H_4O_3$, or $\begin{vmatrix}CH_2OH.\\|\\COOH.\end{vmatrix}$ A diatomic monobasic fatty acid, containing an alcohol and an acid radical. It occurs in sour grapes and in the leaves of Ampelopsis hederacea. Glycollic acid can be obtained by the oxidation of glycol, by the action of nitric acid on alcohol, by heating a solution of oxalic acid to 100° for a week with granulated zinc, the oxalic acid being reduced by the nascent hydrogen, but it is best obtained by boiling in a flask connected with a condenser a mixture of one part of chloracetic acid, $CH_2Cl\cdot COOH$, with twenty-four parts of water, some hours; the product is then evaporated on a water-bath. Glycollic acid crystallizes out of water in needles, which melt at 80°. It is soluble in alcohol and in ether; by the action of concentrated nitric acid it is oxidized into oxalic acid, $\begin{vmatrix}COOH.\\|\\COOH.\end{vmatrix}$ Glycollic acid forms crystalline salts called glycollates.

glycollic-anhydride, s.

Chem.: $C_4H_6O_5$, or $O\begin{<}{CH_2\cdot COOH}{CO\cdot CH_2\cdot OH}$. A white powder, insoluble in alcohol, ether, and cold water; when boiled with water it is converted into glycollic acid. It melts at 130°, and is obtained by heating glycollic acid for a long time on a water-bath.

glycollic-ethers, s. pl.

Chem.: Ethers formed by replacing the H in the (CO·OH) group of glycollic acid by alcohol radicals, as methyl glycollate, $CH_2OH\cdot CO\cdot O\cdot CH_3$.

glȳ-cŏl-līde, s. [Eng. glycol(ic); -ide.]

Chem.: An anhydride of glycollic acid, $C_2H_2O_3$, or $\begin{matrix}CH_2\\CO\end{matrix}\!>\!O$, obtained by heating glycollic acid between 250° to 280°, also by heating dry potassium chloracetate to 110°—120°, or heating tartronic acid to 180°. It is a powder insoluble in cold water; it melts at 220°. When warmed with ammonia it is converted into glycollamide (q.v.).

glȳ-cŏl-lȳl, s. [Eng., &c., glycol (q.v.); -yl = Gr. ὕλη (hulē) = matter.]

Chem.: (For def., see etym. and compound).

glycolyl-guanidin, s. [Glycocyamidine.]

glycolyl-urea, s. [Hydantoin.]

glȳ-cō-nĭ-an, glȳ-cŏn'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γλυκώνειος (glukōneios), from its inventor Glykon.]

Pros.: A name given to a certain kind of verse in Greek and Latin poetry. It consists of three feet, a spondee, a choriamb, and a pyrrhic: – – | – ∪ ∪ – | ∪ ∪; or it may be scanned as a spondee and two dactyls: – – | – ∪ ∪ | – ∪ ∪.

glȳ-cŏn'-ĭc, a. [Glyconian.]

glȳ-cŏs'-ą-mīne, s. [Eng., &c., glucos(e), and amine.]

Chem.: $C_6H_{13}NO_5$. The hydrochlorate of this base is obtained by boiling chitin for half an hour with concentrated hydrochloric acid. Glycosamine crystallizes from alcohol in needles; it reduces cupric solution.

glȳ'-cōse, s. [Glucose.]

glȳ'-cō-sīde, s. [Glucoside.]

glȳ'-cō-sĭne, s. [Eng., &c., glyco(l), s connective, and -ine.]

Chem.: $C_6H_6N_4$. An organic base obtained by the action of ammonia on glyoxal. It is a colourless crystalline powder, almost insoluble in water; it sublimes in needles without melting, dissolves in acids, and forms crystalline salts.

glȳ-cŏs'-mĭs, s. [Pref. glyco-, and Gr. ὀσμή (osmē) = smell.]

Bot.: A genus of Aurantiaceæ. Glycosmis citrifolia bears fruits of a delicious flavour.

glȳ-cyr-rhē'-tĭn, s. [Eng. glycyrrh(iza); -etin.]

Chem.: A brown brittle resin, obtained by boiling glycyrrhizin with dilute acids; insoluble in water, soluble in alcohol and alkalis. It dissolves in concentrated sulphuric acid, forming a red solution, which changes to purple.

glȳ-cyr-rhīz-ą, s. [Gr. γλυκύς (glukus) = sweet, and ῥίζα (rhiza) = a root.]

1. Bot.: A genus of papilionaceous plants, subtribe Galegeæ. It has a tubular, five-cleft and two-lipped calyx, and an ovate compressed one to four-seeded pod. Glycyrrhiza glabra is said to furnish the Spanish liquorice. [Liquorice.] The roots of G. echinata and G. glandulifera are alleged to have the same qualities.

2. Pharm.: Liquorice-root. The recent and dried root or underground stem of Glycyrrhiza glabra, a native of Southern Europe and of many parts of Asia, as far as China. It occurs in cylindrical-branched pieces, brown on the surface and yellow within, tough and pliable, sweet and mucilaginous to the taste. It contains a substance called Glycyrrhizin (q.v.), also asparagine, gum mucilage, &c. It is used as a powder in pills, and also to form Extractum Glycyrrhizæ, extract of liquorice, which is obtained by maceration and percolation of the root, and evaporation to a proper consistence. It is a sweet demulcent, useful to relieve coughing and to sheathe the mucous membrane. It is often given with powdered senna.

glȳ-cyr-rhīz'-ĭn, s. [Eng. glycyrrhiz(a) -in.]

Chem.: $C_{44}H_{63}NO_{18}$. A crystalline substance obtained by boiling the root of Glycyrrhiza glabra in alcohol, and evaporating the alcoholic solution to dryness. It is decomposed by boiling with dilute acids into glucose and glycyrrhetin. When fused with caustic potash it is converted into para-oxybenzoic acid, $C_6H_4\cdot OH\cdot COOH$. (1—4).

glȳn, glȳnne, s. [Irish.] A glen. (It occurs frequently in compound names of places in Ireland, as Glen does in Scotland.

"Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and glynn under the mountain's foot."—Spenser: State of Ireland.

glȳ-ŏx'-al, s. [Eng., &c. gly(col); ox(alic), and al(dehyde).]

Chem.: The diatomic aldehyde of glycol and of oxalic acid, $C_2H_2O_2$ or $\begin{matrix}CO\cdot H.\\|\\CO\cdot H.\end{matrix}$ Obtained by the gradual oxidation of ethyl-alcohol by nitric acid, the liquids being separated by a layer of water. Glyoxal is a transparent, deliquescent, amorphous substance; it is oxidized by dilute nitric acid into glyoxalic acid, and by concentrated nitric acid into oxalic acid. It reduces an ammoniacal solution of a silver salt, forming a metallic mirror; by the action of alkalis it is converted into glycollic acid. A very dilute solution of glyoxal, when warmed with a little potassium cyanide, KCN, turns a dark red colour.

glȳ-ŏx'-ą-lāte, s. [Eng. gloxal(ic); -ate.]

Chem.: A salt of gloxalic-acid (q.v.).

glȳ-ŏx-ăl'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. gly(col), and oxalic.] (For def. see compound.)

glyoxalic-acid, s.

Chem.: Also called glyoxylic-acid, $C_2H_2O_3$ or $\begin{matrix}CO\cdot H\\|\\CO\cdot OH\end{matrix}$, a dyad compound, containing an aldehyde and an acid radical. Obtained along with glyoxal by oxidation of ethyl-alcohol with nitric acid; also by heating at 140° one part of dichloracetic acid, $CHCl_2\cdot COOH$, with ten parts of water for twenty-four hours. Glyoxalic acid is a thick syrup, which can be crystallized over H_2SO_4. It is very soluble in water, and can be distilled in a current of steam. It is a monobasic acid, forming crystalline salts called glyoxalates. By oxidizing agents it is converted into oxalic acid; by nascent hydrogen it is reduced to glycollic acid. It has also the properties of an aldehyde, reducing ammoniacal solutions of silver salts, forming a metallic mirror; also unites with alkaline bisulphites. Glyoxalic acid, when boiled with excess of limewater, yields calcium glycollate and calcium oxalate.

glȳ-ŏx'-ą-līne, s. [Eng., &c. glyoxal; -ine.]

Chem.: $C_3H_4N_2$, or $N\begin{<}{CH}{CH\cdot C.H.}{\quad\;\;\|}{\quad NH.}$ Obtained by treating glyoxal, kept cool by ice, with a slight excess of ammonia, glycosine separates as a powder, the filtered liquid is boiled with milk of lime, evaporated to a syrup, and extracted with alcohol, and distilling the alcoholic solution. Glyoxaline crystallizes in white prisms, which melt at 89°, and boil at 255°. It is soluble in water, alcohol, and in ether. It unites with acids to form crystalline compounds.

glȳ-ŏx-ȳl'-ĭc, a. [Glyoxalic.]

glȳph, s. [Gr. γλυφή (gluphē), from γλύφω (gluphō) = to carve.]

Arch. & Sculpt.: A perpendicular fluting or channelling, used as an ornament.

glȳ'-phæ-ą, s. [Gr. γλυφή (gluphē) = carving, carved work.]

1. Bot.: A genus of Tiliaceæ.

2. Palæont.: A genus of Macrurous Crustaceans. Prof. Morris enumerates one species from the Lias and two from the Oolite.

glȳph'-ĭc, a. [Gr. γλυφικός (gluphikos), from γλύφω (gluphō) = to carve.] Pertaining to carving or sculpture; of or pertaining to a glyph or glyphs.

glȳ'-phĭ dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. glyph(is), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Lichens, tribe Idiothalameæ.

glȳph-ĭp-tĕr-ȳ'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. glyphipteryx (genit. glyphipterygis), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of Moths, group Tineina. The imago has the head generally smooth; the labial palpi variable; the maxillary palpi very short, the anterior wings oblong or elongate; the posterior ones ovate or lanceolate; the flight diurnal. The larva has sixteen legs or is apodal. It generally mines in leaves. Twenty-eight British species are known, some of them very small. (Stainton.)

glȳph-ĭp'-tĕr-ȳx, s. [Gr. γλυφίς (gluphis) = an arrow-head, and πτερύξ (pterux) = wing.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Glyphipterygidæ (q.v.). The species fly in the bright sunshine.

glȳ'-phĭs, s. [Gr. γλυφίς (gluphis) = a notch of an arrow, an arrow.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the family Glyphidæ (q.v.).

glȳph'-ō-graph, v.t. [Glyphograph, s.] To engrave by the system of glyphography.

glȳph'-ō-graph, s. [Gr. γλυφή (glyphē) = a carving; γραφω (graphō) = to write, to draw.]

Engin.: A plate prepared by glyphography; an impression taken from such a plate.

glȳph-ŏg'-rą-phĕr, s. [Eng. glyphograph; -er.] One who is skilled in or practises glyphography.

glȳph-ō-grăph'-ĭc, a. [Eng. glyphograph; -ic.] Of or pertaining to glyphography.

glȳph-ŏg'-ra-phȳ, s. [Gr. γλυφή (gluphē) = a carving, and γράφω (graphō) = to write, to draw.] A name given by Mr. Palmer to his relief line engraving. A thin ground of wax is spread upon the plate; this is etched or cut away so as to give the design in intaglio. The ground is now covered with a film of graphite, after which metal is precipitated upon the metal in an electro-bath, giving a metallic plate with the design in relief. The copper shell is backed with lead and used as an ordinary printing surface.

glȳp'-tĭc, a. [Gr. γλυπτικός (gluptikos) = carving; γλύφω (gluphō) = to engrave; Fr. glyptique.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Pertaining or relating to engraving on precious stones.

2. Min.: Figured.

glȳp'-tĭcs, s. [Glyptic, a.] The art of engraving on precious stones.

glȳp-tō-, pref. [Gr. γλυπτός (gluptos) = fit for carving, carved.] Carved or looking as if it were so.

glȳp-tō-crī-nĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. glyptocrin(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Palæont.: A family of Crinoidea. It has no parabasals, but five basals with six interradials in each inter-radial space. The plates are usually ornamented with radiating ridges, as if they had been carved for ornament, whence the name.

glȳp-tō-crī'-nŭs, s. [Pref. glypto-, and Gr. κρίνον (krinon) = a lily.] [Glyptocrinidæ.]

Palæont.: The typical genus of the family Glyptocrinidæ (q.v.). Glyptocrinus basalis is figured by Murchison from the Lower Silurian rocks.

glȳp-tō-dĭp-tĕr-ī'-nī, s. pl. [Pref. glypto-; Gr. δίπτερος (dipteros) = with two wings, here = with two fins, and Lat. masc. pl. adj. suff. -ini.]

Palæont.: In the classification of Professor Huxley, a family of fossil ganoid fishes, suborder Crossopterygidæ. There are two dorsal fins, the scales are sculptured, the pectoral fins acutely lobate, dentition dendrodont. There are two sub-families, the one with rhomboidal, and the other with cycloidal scales. Under the latter family fall the genus Holoptychius, &c.

glȳp'-tō-dŏn, s. [Pref. glypto-, and Gr. ὀδούς (odous), genit. ὀδόντος (odontos) = a tooth.]

Palæont.: A huge fossil mammal, family

Dasypodidæ (Armadillos). It was encased in armour, there being bony plates on the head, and nearly hexagonal bony scutes on the body.

GLYPTODON.

It belonga to the Post-pliocene of South America. Including the tail, Glyptodon clavipes was more than nine feet long.

glÿp'-tō-graph, s. [Pref. glypto-, and Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write, to draw.] An engraving on precious stones or gems.

glÿp tŏg'-ra-phĕr, s. [Eng. glyptograph; -er.] One who is skilled in or practises glyptography; an engraver on precious stones.

glÿp-tō-grăph'-ĭc, a. [Eng. glyptograph; -ic.] Of or pertaining to glyptography, or the art of engraving on gems or precious stones.

glÿp-tŏg'-ra-phy, s. [Pref glypto-, and Gr. γράφη (graphē) = a writing, a drawing.]

1. The art of engraving on gems or precious stones.

2. A description of the art of engraving on gems or precious stones.

glÿp-tō-læ'-mŭs, s. [Pref. glypto-, and Gr. λαιμός (laimos) = the throat.]

Palæont.: A genus of Fossil Ganoids, family Glyptodipterini, and the section or sub-family of it with rhomboidal scales. It has been found only in the Devonian rocks.

glÿp-tō-sâur-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. glyptosaur(us) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Palæont.: A family of Lacertilia (Lizards). The skin had ornamented osseous scales. It is found in the Tertiary deposits.

glÿp-tō-sâur-ŭs, s. [Pref. glypto-, and Gr. σαῦρος (sauros), σαύρα (saura) = a lizard.]

Palæont.: The typical genus of the family Glyptosauridæ (q.v.).

glÿp-tō-thē'-cą, s. [Pref. glypto-, and Lat. theca; Gr. θήκη (thēkē) = a box, a chest.] [THECA.]

Arch., &c.: A box, room, or building for the preservation of sculpture.

* glÿs'-tĕr, s. [CLYSTER.]

gmĕ-lī'-ną (g silent), s. [Named after John George Gmelin, a celebrated German naturalist, who travelled to Siberia, and published a flora of that region.]

Bot.: A genus of Verbenaceæ, tribe Viticeæ. The leaves of Gmelina parviflora render water mucilaginous. It may then be employed as a ptisan for the cure of ardor urinæ. (Lindley.) gmĕl'-ĭn-ite (g silent), s. [Named after Prof. Charles Gmelin, of Tübingen.]

Min.: A colourless, yellowish-white, greenish-white, or reddish-white, fresh, transparent to translucent brittle mineral, crystallizing in rhombohedrons. Hardness, 4·5; sp. gr., 2·04 to 2·17. Compos.: silica, 46·37 to 53·71; alumina, 17·63 to 21·48; lime, 3·67 to 11·48; soda, 3·10 to 7·29; potassa, 0·39 to 1·87; water, 8·58 to 29·41. Sarcolite, Lederevite, and Hydrolite are varieties. It is found at Andreasberg, in the Harz; at Montecchio, Maggiore, and Castel, in the Vincentine; in Cyprus; near Cape Blomidon, in Nova Scotia; in Britain near Glenarm and Portrush, in Antrim; in the isle of Magee; at Talisker, in Skye, &c. (Dana.)

* gnac-chen, * gnach-yn, v.i. [GNASH.]

* gnăp (g silent), v.t. [Etym. doubtful.] To gnaw, to eat.

"Sum gnapped here fete and haudes."—MS., in Halliwell, p. 405.

gnă phăl'-ĭ-ĕæ (g silent), s. pl. [Lat. gnaphali(um), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of composite plants, sub-order or series Tubulifloræ. The flowers are all tubular, the outer ones very slender. Genera represented in Britain—Gnaphalium, Antennaria, and Filago.

gna-phā'-lĭ-ŭm (g silent), s. [Lat. gnaphalium, gnaphalion; Gr. γναφάλιον (gnaphalion) = either the cudweed or the lavender cotton-weed.]

Bot.: Cudweed. The typical genus of the tribe Gnaphaliæ (q.v.). The heads are bisexual, the receptacle flat and naked. About 100 species are known. They are small incon-

GNAPHALIUM ULIGINOSUM.
1. Details of Flowers. 2. Single Flower.

spicuous, composite weeds, whose stems and leaves are covered with a whitish cottony down. They have representatives in the United States, where G. polycephalum has some repute in household medicine. The flowers may be kept a long time with little apparent change, and may be classed among Everlasting Flowers.

* gnar (g silent), * gnarre, * knarre, * knur, * knurr, s. [Cf. O. Dut. knor; Dut. knorf = a knot; Dan. knort = a knot, a gnarl; knortet = knotty, gnarled; Sw. knorla = a curl, a ringlet; Icel. gnerr = a knot, a knob; Ger. knorren = an excrescence, a lump; knorrig = gnarled. (Skeat.)]

1. Lit.: A knot in a tree.

2. Fig.: A tough, thickset, rough fellow.

"He was short-shouldered, hode, thikke gnarre."
Chaucer: C. T., 551.

* gnar, * gnarr (g silent), v.i. [An onomatopoetic word.] To snarl, to growl, to murmur.

"When he 'gan to rear his bristles strong,
And telly gnar." Spenser: F. Q., I. v. 34.

* gnare, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A snare, a trap.

"There wenten before me the gnaris of deeth."—Wycliffe; 2 Kings xxii. 6.

gnarl (g silent), v.i. [A freq. from gnar, v. (q.v.).] To snarl, to growl.

"Wolves are gnarling which shall gnaw them first."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., iii. 1.

gnarl (g silent), s. [A dimin. from gnar, s. (q.v.).] A gnar, a knot in wood; a snag.

gnarled (g silent), a. [Eng. gnarl, s.; -ed.]

1. Lit.: Full of knots or snags; knotty, gnarly.

"Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt, Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak."
Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

2. Fig.: Cross-grained, peevish, perverse.

gnarl'-ў (g silent), a. [Eng. gnarl, a.; -y.] Having knots; gnarled, knotty.

"Till by degrees the tough and gnarly oak Be rived." Marston: Antonio's Revenge, Iv. 2.

* gnarre (g silent), v.i. [GNAR, v.]

* gnarre (g silent), s. [GNAR, s.]

gnar'-rў (g silent), a. [Eng. gnar, a.; -y.] Knotty, gnarly.

"Like spring's green bloom on boughs all gaunt and gnarry."
A. C. Swinburne: Athens.

gnăsh (g silent), v.t. & i. [A modification of Mid. Eng. gnasten = to gnash the teeth.] [GNAST.]

A. Trans.: To strike together, as the teeth; to clash.

"He gnashed his teeth, his eyeballs flashed with fire."
Hoole: Orlando Furioso, bk. xxx.

B. Intrans.: To grind or clash the teeth together, as in rage, despair, &c.; to rage.

"The monster fell, and gnashing with huge tusks Ploughed up the crimson earth."
Smith: Phædra & Hippolitus, I.

gnăsh'-ĭng (g silent), * gnash-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [GNASH, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of grinding or clashing the teeth together, as in rage, despair, &c.

"And the children of the kyngedome shal be caste oute into utter darknes; there shal be wepynge and ynashynge of teeth."—Bible (1551), Matt. viii.

gnăsh'-ĭng-lў (g silent), adv. [Eng. gnashing; -ly.] In a gnashing manner; with gnashing of teeth.

* gnast, * gnaste, s. [A S. gnást = a spark; Sw. gnista; Dan. gnist; Icel. gneisti.] An ash; the wick of a candle.

"As a gnast passendi."—Wycliffe: Isaiah xxix. 5.

* gnast, * gnaist, * gnast-en, * gnast-yn, v.i. [Sw. knastra = to crush between the teeth; Icel. gnastan = a gnashing; gnista = to gnash the teeth; gnesta = to crack; Ger. knastern = to gnash; Dut. knarsén. Prob. a mere variant of crash (q.v.). (Skeat.)] To grind or gnash the teeth together, as in rage, despair, &c.

"That gnaisted ouer me with thaire tethe."
E. Eng. Psalter, Ps. xxxiv. 16.

* gnast-cre, s. [Eng. gnast, v.; -ere = -er.] One who gnashes his teeth; one who rages or fumes.

"Gnastere. Fremitor."—Prompt. Parv.

* gnast-ing, gnaist-ing, * gnast-yng, * gnast-ynge, s. [Eng. gnast, v.; -ing.] Gnashing of the teeth.

"Ther endeles gnaisting is of teth."
Cursor Mundi, 26,760

gnăt (g silent), * gnattc, * gnaytt, s. [A.S. gnæt; cf. Sw. gnat = a nit.]

I. Ord. Lang.: In the same sense as II. 1, 2.

"We made wreathes of greene grasse, which we wound about our bodies, to keepe vs from the sunne and gnats of that country."—Hackluyt: Voyages, iii. 491.

II. Technically:

I. Entomology:

(1) Sing.: Culex pipiens and some other species of the genus Culex (q.v.).

(2) Pl.: The family Culicidæ (q.v.).

2. Script.: The rendering of the Greek word κώνωψ (kōnōps), which seems to be correct.

¶ To strain at [an old misprint for out] a gnat and swallow a camel (Matt. xxiii. 24, Authorised Version). To strain out the gnat and swallow the camel (Revised Version): Alluding to the care with which the Jews strained small insects out of the liquor they were about to drink. To be punctilious about trifles, and with the grossest inconsistency to allow one's self violations of moral principle in matters of great moment.

gnat-catcher, s. One of the numerous class of American insectivorous birds, related to the kinglets.

gnat-net, s. A fine gauze net to keep off gnats, mosquitoes, &c.; a mosquito-net.

"To omit the ancient conopeion, or gnat-net of the Ægyptians, the inventors of that artifice."—Browne: Cyrus' Garden, ch. ii.

* gnat-strainer, s. One who attaches too great importance to little matters, while neglecting others of greater moment (Matt. xxiii. 24.).

† gnat-worm, s.

Ord. Lang. & Entom.: The larva of a gnat.

"He that would behold a very anomalous motion, may observe it in the fertile and tiring stroaks of gnat-worms."—Browne: Garden of Cyrus, ch. iv.

gna-thī'-tēs (g silent), s. pl. [Gr. γνάθος (gnathos), and suff. -ites, pl. of suff. -ite.]

Zool.: The masticatory organs of Crustacea.

gna-thī'-tĭs (g silent), s. [Gr. γνάθος (gnathos) = the jaw, and suff. -itis (Med.) (q.v.).]

Pathol.: Inflammation of the jaw.

gnăth'-ō-dŏn (g silent), s. [Gr. γνάθος (gnathos) = a jaw, and ὀδούς (odous), genit. ὀδόντος (odontos) = a tooth.]

I. Ornith.: A genus of birds, called also Didunculus (q.v.).

2. Zool. & Palæont.: A genus of conchiferous molluscs, family Mactridæ. It is so called because one of the lateral teeth connected with the hinge has a certain resemblance to a jaw-bone. Recent species, one certain and three doubtful; fossil three, from the Chalk onwards. The best-known recent species is Gnathodon cuneatus, which was formerly eaten by the Indians. It is found with Cyrena carolinensis at Mobile, on the Gulf of Mexico, which is built on a shell-bank consisting chiefly of the two species.

gnă-thŏn'-ĭc, gnă-thŏn'-ĭc-al, a. [Gr. γνάθων (gnathōn), genit. γνάθωνος (gnathōnes) = a full mouth, a fat cheek; Eng., &c. suff. -ical (q.v.).] Flattering, deceitful.

gnă-thŏn'-ĭe-al-lў (g silent), adv. [Eng. gnathonical; -ly.] In a servile, parasitical, or flattering manner.

†gnă-thŏp'-ō-dīte (g silent), s. [Gr. γνάθος (gnathos) = a jaw; πούς (pous), genit. ποδός (podos) = a foot, and Eng. &c. suff. -ite (q.v.).]

Zool.: A jaw-foot—i.e., a foot modified into a jaw, more generally called maxillipedes (q.v.). Such limbs exist in the Crustacea.

gnă-thŏs'-tō-ma (g silent), s. [Gr. γνάθος (gnathos) = the jaw, and στόμα (stoma) = mouth.]

Zool.: A genus of nematoid Entozoa, found by Prof. Owen in the stomach of the tiger, the leopard, and other Felidæ.

gnăt'-lĭng (initial g silent), s. [Eng. gnat; dimin. suff. -ling.] A little gnat.

"But if some man, more hardy than the rest,
Should dare attack these gnatlings in their nest;
At once they rise with impotence of rage."
Churchill: Rosciad.

gnăt'-snăp-pĕr (g silent), s. [Eng. gnat, and snapper.] A bird which lives by catching gnats.

"They deny that any bird is to be eaten whole, but only the gnatsnapper."—Hakewill: On Providence.

gnâw (g silent), gnawe, *gnaw-en, *gnaw-yn, v.t. & i. [A.S. gnagan; cogn. with Dut. knagen; O. Icel. gnaga; Icel. naga; Dan. gnave; Sw. gnaga. The g is a mere prefix = A.S. ge-. The simple verb appears in Icel. naga; Dan. nage; Ger. nagen = to gnaw; Sw. nagga = to nibble; Eng. nag = to tease, to worry. (Skeat.)]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To bite or eat away by degrees, or by nibbling.

"Of her herbs and flowers,
It seemed the better part were gnawed away."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. i.

2. To bite in agony, despair, or rage.

"They gnawed their tongues for pain."—Revelation xvi. 10.

* 3. To eat away by corrosion; to corrode away.

4. To wear away by continued biting.

"Gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, v.

II. Fig.: To consume or wear away by degrees; to waste away; to fret.

"Vile disdaine and rancour, which did gnaw
His heart in twaine with sad melancholy."
Spenser: F. Q., II. viii. 50.

B. Intransitive:

I. Lit.: To use the teeth in biting; to bite into anything, so as to wear it away by degrees.

"I might well, like the spaniel, gnaw upon the chain that ties me."—Sidney: Arcadia.

II. Figuratively:

1. To cause a fretting, consuming, or wasting away: as, a gnawing pain.

* 2. To be affected with a continuous, severe, and wasting pain: as, A tooth gnaws.

gnâw (g silent), s. [Gnaw, v.] A gnawing; a fretting or wearing away.

"The gnaw of anguish, and the waste of life."
Boyse: Written in the Palace of Falkland.

gnâwed (g silent), pa. par. & a. [Gnaw, v.]

1. Ord. Lang.: (See the verb).

2. Bot.: Erose, having the margin irregularly toothed, as if bitten by some animal.

gnâw'-ĕr (g silent), s. [Eng. gnaw; -er.]

1. Ord. Lang.: One who or that which gnaws or corrodes.

2. Zool.: A rodent.

gnâw'-ĭng (g silent), gnaw-yng, *gnaw-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [Gnaw, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. Lit.: The act of eating away by degrees.

"By dremes, by chirking of dores, or cracking of houses, by gnawing of rattes, and swiche maner of wretchednesse."—Chaucer: Persones Tale.

2. Fig.: A continuous or severe pain, or feeling; as of remorse.

"This composition is good for those that have weak and feble stomachs, or be troubled with gnawing and pain there."—P. Holland: Pliny, bk. xx., ch. ix.

 gnâwn (g silent), pa. par. or a. [Gnaw.]

 gnede, a. [A.S. gnéath.]

1. Stingy; mean; sparing; miserly.

"Off gyfft he was he never gnede."
Degrevant, 1,159.

2. Sparing; small in quantity; scarce.

"Thaire money wex haun gnede."
Cursor Mundi, 5,392.

 gnede, v. t. [Gnede, a.] To fail; to run short for.

"Non that day schal the gnede."
Poem on Freemasonry, 670.

 gnede-ly, * gnede-liche, adv. [A.S. gnéthelice.] Sparingly; meanly; stingily.

"Heo mel gnedeliche leden hise lif."—Ancren Riwle, p. 202.

 gned-y, a. [Eng. gnede, a.; -y.] Mean; stingy; sparing.

"A gnedy gloton with to grete chekes."
P. Plowman, xvi. 85.

gnēīss (g silent), s. [Ger. gneiss, gneus, a German mining term given by geologists, who have given it world-wide currency.]

Geology & Petrology:

1. Spec.: A metamorphic rock, consisting of orthoclase, quartz, and mica. It is akin to mica schist, which, however, is distinguished by having less orthoclase and more mica. It has exactly the same materials as granite, but is stratified or foliated. Sometimes hand specimens are found, in which lamination is so little traceable, that they might pass for granite. There are cases also in which gneiss, in position, does not consist of thin laminæ, but is divided into thick beds, in which the mica has only a slight degree of parallelism to the planes of stratification. Sometimes it is penetrated from below by granitic veins. (Lyell, &c.) [Metamorphic.]

2. Gen.: A formation in which gneiss [No. 1] prevails, but not exclusively, there being present also hornblende-schist and other metamorphic rocks. These latter are considered as subordinate to the gneiss.

¶ The varieties of gneiss include hornblendic gneiss, in which hornblende replaces mica; protogine gneiss, with talc instead of mica; graphite gneiss, with graphite replacing mica. Gneiss in some cases has arisen from the metamorphosis of granite, in others from greywacke and similar rocks. The gneisses are widely distributed, the coarser grained kinds belonging principally to the Archæan rocks, the finer ones to later strata. Geologists are divided in opinion concerning the origin of gneiss.

gnēīs'-sĭc (g silent), a. [Ger. &c. gneiss; Eng., &c. suff. -ic.]

Geol.: Consisting of gneiss.

"The old gneissic rocks of Nova Scotia."—Hind, in Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxvi. 471.

gnēīs'-sōīd (g silent), a. [Ger., &c., gneiss, and Gr. εἶδος (eidos), form, appearance.]

Geol.: Resembling gneiss.

"The unconformable contact of the Lower Silurian gold-bearing strata with the underlying gneissoid and schistose series."—Hind, in Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxvi. 474.

gnēīs-sōse' (g silent), a. [Ger., &c., gneiss; Eng., &c. suff. -ose (q.v.).]

Geol.: Properly, abounding in gneiss; but used also simply for gneissic (q.v.).

"The Eastern gneissose rocks of Sutherland and Ross."—Murchison in Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xvi., p. 237.

gnĕ-tā'-çē-æ (g silent), s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gnet(um) (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: Joint-firs; an order of Gymnogens, with repeatedly-branched jointed stems and simple net-veined leaves, opposite and entire, sometimes very minute and scale-shaped; flowers in catkins, or heads; the males with a one-leaved calyx, transversely slit at the end; a monadelphous filament, with one-celled anthers opening by pores; females, altogether naked or sheltered by a false calyx, consisting of two scales, each surrounding two flowers; ovary, none; ovule with a style-like process. Known genera, two—viz., Gnetum and Ephedra (q.v.); species, fifteen, scattered over the world.

gnĕ'-tŭm (g silent), s. [Corrupted from Gnemon, the name given to the plant in the island of Ternate.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the order Gnetaceæ (q.v.). The species are found in the hottest parts of India and Guiana. In Amboyna the seeds of Gnetum Gnemon are eaten boiled, roasted, or fried, and the green leaves, though tasteless, are used as spinach.

gnīde, *gnīd-en, *gnyde, v.t. & i. [A.S. gnídan; O. H. Ger. gnîtan; M. H. Ger. gnîten; Sw. gnida; Dan. gnide.]

A. Trans.: To break or grind to pieces; to bruise.

"Heo broken the eares hi the weic and gnîden the cornes ut."—Ancren Riwle, p. 260.

B. Intrans.: To be brought to nothing; to be destroyed utterly.

"Gold and seolver, but schal gnyde to nouht."—O. Eng. Miscell., p. 114.

gnī'-dĭ-a, s. [Lat. Gnidius = pertaining to Gnidus or Cnidus, a town of Caria.]

Bot.: A genus of Thymelaceæ (Daphnads). The known species, about fifty in number, are pretty heath-like plants, several of which have been introduced into British greenhouses from the warmer parts of Eastern Africa. Gnidium Daphnoides is manufactured into ropes in Madagascar; most species of the genus can, moreover, be used in cutaneous diseases.

 gnit, * gnytte, s. [Gnat.]

 gnof, * gnoff, s. [Etym. doubtful; perhaps connected with gnaw (q.v.).] A miser; a stingy, mean fellow.

"Whilom ther was dwelling in Oxenforde
A riche gnof, that gestes helde to borde,
And of his craft he was a carpenter."
Chaucer: C. T., 3,188.

gnōme (1) (g silent), s. [Fr.; prob. from Gr. γνώμη (gnōmē) = intelligence, from the belief that the gnomes could furnish information as to secret treasures in the earth.]

1. An imaginary being, a kind of sprite. Gnomes were supposed by the Rosicrucians to inhabit the inner parts of the earth, and to be the guardians of mines, quarries, &c.

"The gnomes or dæmons of earth, delight in mischief."—Pope: Ep. Dedic. to Mrs. A. Fermor.

2. A dwarf; a goblin; a person of small or misshapen figure or features.

gnōme (2), gnō'-mē (g silent), s. [Gr. γνώμη (gnōmē) = intelligence, a maxim, from γνώναι (gnōnai) = to know.] A maxim, an aphorism, a saw, a reflection.

"Gnome [is] a saying pertaining to the manners and common practices of men, which declareth by an arte brevity, what in this our lyfe ought to be done or not done."—Peacham: Garden of Eloquence. (1577.)

 gnōmed, a. [Eng. gnome (1); -ed.] Haunted by gnomes.

"Empty the haunted air and the gnomed mine."
Keats: Lamia, ii.

 gnō'-mĭc (1),  gnō'-mĭc-al (1) (g silent), a. [Gr. γνωμικός (gnōmikos) = dealing in maxims, sententious; Gr. γνώμη (gnōme).] [Gnome (2).] Dealing in maxims; sententious; didactic; a term applied to Greek didactic poets, such as Solon, Phocylides, Theognis, &c., and to their writings.

"A city long famous as the seat of elegiac and gnomic poetry."—G. H. Lewes: History of Philosophy, i. 39.

 gnō'-mĭc (2), gnō'-mĭc-al (2) (g silent), a. [Catachrestic for gnomonical (q.v.).] Pertaining to a dial or the art of dialling.

"A dial furnished with a magnetic needle, rather than an ordinary gnomical dial."—Boyle: Works, v. 427.

 gnō'-mĭc-al-lў (g silent), adv. [Eng. gnomical; -ly.] In a gnomic, didactic, or sententious manner.

 gnō-mŏ'-lŏg'-ĭc, * gnō-mŏ-lŏg'-ĭc-al (initial g silent), a. [Gr. γνωμολογικός (gnōmologikos), from γνωμολογέω (gnōmologeō) = to speak in maxims.] [Gnomology.] Of or pertaining to gnomology.

gnō-mŏl'-ō-ğў (initial g silent), s. [Gr. γνώμη (gnōmē) = a maxim, and λόγος (logos) = a word, a discourse; Gr. λέγω (legō) = to collect, to speak; Fr. gnomologie.] A treatise on, or collection of, maxims or sententious reflections or sayings; the knowledge of or literature relating to such maxims or sayings.

"Which art of powerfull reclaiming, wisest men have also taught in their ethical precepts and gnomologies."—Milton: Tetrachordon.

 gnō-mŏm'-ĕ-trў (g silent), s. [Gr. γνώμη (gnōmē) = a maxim, and μέτρον (metron) = a measure.] A dividing or arraying according to subject.

"We can touch but lightly on the intricate question of stichometry as opposed to gnomometry."—Athenæum, July 8, 1882, p. 43.

gnō'-mŏn (g silent), s. [Lat., from Gr. γνώμων (gnōmōn) = one who knows, an interpreter; from Gr. γνῶναι (gnōnai) = to know.]

1. Astron.: A rod, style, or pillar erected perpendicularly to the horizon, from whose shadow the altitudes, declinations, &c., of the sun and stars may be determined. Such styles were in use in ancient Egypt, in China, and similar contrivances were found at Quito by the invading Spaniards.

"Comparing the height of a gnomon or pillar with the length of the solstitial shadow."—Elton: Origins of English History, p. 14.

2. Dial: The style or pin, which, by its shadow on the dial-plate, shows the hour of the day.

DIAL-PLATE, WITH GNOMON.

"The shadow of the style in the dyall which they call the gnomon, in Egypt, at noonetide, in the equinoctiall day, is little more in length than halfe the gnomon."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. ii., ch. lxxii.

3. Geom.: The figure made up of the two complements of a parallelogram, together with either of the parallelograms about the diameter. Thus in the parallelogram A B C D, GNOMON.

the two complements B F and F D, together with the parallelogram F K C H, form the gnomon D K O or E H B. In the second figure one of the parallelograms about the diameter has been removed, so as to form a gnomon.

4. The index of the hour-circle of a globe.

gnō-mŏn'-ĭc, gnō-mŏn'-ĭc-al (g silent), a. [Lat. gnomonicus, from Gr. γνωμονικός (gnōmonikos) = pertaining to a gnomon; ἡ γνωμονική (τέχνη) hē gnōmonikē (technē) = the (art) of dialling; Fr. gnomonique.]

1. Dial.: Of or pertaining to the art of dialling.

"One of those curious gnomonic instruments, that show at once the place of the sun in the zodiac, his declination from the equator, the day of the month, the length of the day, &c."—Boyle: Works, v. 398.

2. Bot.: The term applied by Link to the embryo when bent at right angles.

gnomonic-projection, s. The projection of the lines of a sphere upon a plane tangent to the surface of the sphere, the point of sight or the eye being taken at the centre of the sphere. In this projection all great circles of the sphere are projected into straight lines; all small circles, whose planes are parallel to the plane of projection, into concentric circles, having their common centre at the point of contact; and all other small circles into ellipses. Gnomonic projection is also called horologiographic projection, on account of its use in dialling.

gnō-mŏn'-ĭc-al-lў (g silent), adv. [Eng. gnomonical; -ly.] In a gnomonical manner; according to the principles of gnomonic projection.

gnō-mŏn'-ĭcs, gnō-mŏn'-ĭcks (g silent), s. pl. [Gnomic.] The art or science of dialling, or of constructing dials to show the hour of the day.

"The elevations of the pole, and the azimuths, sundials of all sorts, enough to make up an art called gnomonicks."—Boyle: Works, vi. 776.

gnō'-mŏn-ĭst (g silent), s. [Eng. gnomon; -ist.] One versed in gnomonics.

"The sun enables the gnomonist to make accurate dials, to know exactly how the time passes."—Boyle: Works, vi. 418.

gnō-mŏn-ŏl'-ō-ġў (initial g silent), s. [Gr. γνώμων (gnōmōn) = a gnomon, and λόγος (logos) = a treatise; a discourse.] A treatise on gnomonics or dialling.

gnŏph'-rĭ-a (g silent), s. [Gr. γνοφερός (gnopheros), δνοφερός (dnopheros) = dark, dusky; γνοφος (gnophos), δνόφος (dnophos) = darkness.]

Entom.: A genus of moths, family Lithosidæ. Gnophria rubricollis is the Black Footman. The front part of the thorax is red, the rest black, as is the abdomen, except the four or five last segments, which are yellow; all the wings of a dull smoky black. The larva feeds on various lichens; the perfect insect appears in June. (Stainton.) gnō'-sĭs (g silent), s. [Gr. γνῶσις (gnōsis) = (1) an inquiry, a judgment, especially of a judicial kind, (2) knowledge, spec. of the deeper kind; γιγνώσκω (gignōskō), fut. γνώσομαι (gnōsomai) = to know: from the root gno = to know.] What is considered as science—i.e., knowledge, through it may be chiefly a series of hypotheses; gnosticism, which professes to restore to mankind the lost knowledge of God.

"But the supposition that the Alexandrian gnosis first formed that of Palestine is, in our opinion, quite erroneous."—Tholuck: Epistle to the Hebrews (1842), i. 130.

gnŏs'-tĭc (g silent), a. & s. [Gr. γνωστικός (gnōstikos), as adj. = good at knowing; as subst. = the power or faculty of knowing.]

A. As adjective:

* 1. Ord. Lang.: Knowing, shrewd, worldly-wise.

"I said you were a gnostic fellow, and I laid you have not always been professional."—Scott: St. Ronan's Well, ch. v.

2. Hist. & Phil.: Of or belonging to the belief called gnosticism (q.v.), or to its professions.

"According to some the apostasy referred to was the Gnostic heresy."—Lewin: St. Paul, i. 288.

B. As subst.: An adherent of gnosticism (q.v.).

"The system of the Gnostics was compounded of many heterogeneous materials."—Lewin: St. Paul, ii. 249.

* gnŏs'-tĭc-al-lў (g silent), adv. [Eng., &c. gnostic (q.v.); -al, -ly.]

1. After the manner of the gnostics.

2. Properly, suitably, becomingly.

"He was tog'd gnostically enough, and cast twelve yards of line with one hand."—Scott: St. Ronan's Well, ch. iv.

gnŏs'-tĭ-çĭsm (g silent), s. [Eng., &c. gnostic; -ism.]

Hist. & Phil., &c.: A system of philosophy professedly Christian, devised to solve the great questions, such as the origin of evil, which have perplexed the ablest minds in every age. Gnosticism accepted beliefs in an eternal God of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness. The granting of this postulate at once brought the gnostic face to face with the question, why then did this Great Being allow evil to arise in the universe, when it was in his power to have prevented it? If he did not prevent it, was he not to a certain extent responsible for its existence? The same difficulty had centuries before created the dualist system of Zoroastrianism, which, denying the omnipotence of the one Supreme Being, assumed the existence of two, a good and a bad one, about equal in power, and in continual conflict. This view, derived from Persia, was partially adopted by some gnostics, whilst others of the sect, or aggregation of sects, drew on the later Platonism of Alexandria for their inspiration. There were then two classes of them: the Syrian, and the Alexandrian or Egyptian gnostics. In certain tenets, both agreed. Matter was eternal, and from the first essentially evil; there was then no bygone time when "the origin of evil" took place. Nor was the world created by the Supreme Being; it was framed by an exalted spirit, called, in consequence, the Demiurge (q.v.), whom many identified with the God of the Jews. He had shining qualities, but was selfish and arrogant. He wished men to worship, not the Supreme Being, but himself. The former was the purest Light, and pervaded that boundless space which the Greeks called πλήρωμα (plērōma). He did not remain for ever alone, but brought into existence two holy and happy spirits of different sexes, called Æons, from whose marriage came others of the same order, till there was a whole family of them in the pleroma. The chief of these Æons was Jesus Christ, who was sent to the world to win it back from the Demiurge to its proper allegiance. Many gnostics held what were called Docetic views. [Docetæ.] The germs of gnosticism existed in the first century; it did not, however, reach maturity till the reign of Adrian in the second. Of the Syrian gnostics there were Saturninus of Antioch, Cerdo, Marcian, Lucian, Severus, Blastea, Bardesanes, Tatian, &c.; of the Egyptian Basilides of Alexandria, Valentinus, &c. The system had a good deal declined by the third century, but was not extinct till about the sixth. It has been disputed whether there are allusions to either nascent or fully developed gnosticism in the New Testament. Some writers profess to find them in such passages as Col. ii. 8; 1 Tim. i. 4, vi. 20; 2 Tim. ii. 16, 17; Titus iii. 9; and there appears to be one to Docetic ism in 1 John i. 1-3.

"To this strange mixture was added no inconsiderable portion of Christianity, into which gnosticism had been imported by that father of heresy Simon Magus."—Lewin: St. Paul, ii. 250.

* gnowe, pret. of v. [Gnaw.]

gnû (g silent), s. [Hottentot gnû, gnoo = the name of the animal; Fr. gnou.]

Zool.: Catoblepas Gnu, a species of antelope. The adult male is about 5ft. 6in. long, and 3ft. 10in. high at the shoulder; horns dark, broad, upon the summit of the head, tapering out sideways over the eyes, and turning up into a pointed hook. Legs long. The face is covered with black bristly hair, with white ones around the eye and on the legs; on the neck is a vertical mane, black in the centre and white at the sides; a bushy beard on the under-jaw; general color of the fur deep brown, with long white hair on the tail. Female smaller; calves pure white. But for the horns and the cloven hoofs, the gnu would resemble a horse in its external form; its gallop also is that of a horse. The gnu lives in small herds in the karroos of Southern Africa. When alarmed it flings up its heels and capers like a restive horse; then the herd go off in single file, following a leader, with amazing speed. A gnu brought to bay or wounded turns on its assailant. It is believed that the kokoon is not distinct from the gnu.

GNU.

"Where the gnu, the gazelle, and the hartebeest graze." Thomas Pringle: Afar in the Desert.

gō, *ga, *gan, *ganne, *gon, *gonne, v.i. & t. [A.S. gán, a contracted form of gangan = to go; cogn. with Dut. gaan; Icel. ganga, gá; Dan. gaae; Sw. gå; Goth. gaggan (for gangan); Ger. gehen; O. H. Ger. kankan, gangan, gán, gen; O. Fris. gán. Went, which is now used as the pa. t. of go, is from the verb to wend (q.v.).]

A. Intransitive:

1. To move, to proceed, to pass; to be in motion from any cause or in any manner; to walk, to travel.

* 2. To pass, to flow, to run.

"That other ryvere . . . that gothe be Ethiope."—Maundeville, p. 304

3. To move; not to stand still.

"Rise, let us be going."—Matthew xxvi. 46.

4. To be moved by mechanism.

"Clocks will go as they are set; but man, Irregular man 's never constant, never certain."
Otway: Venice Preserved, ii. 1.

5. To walk or move step by step; to proceed slowly or leisurely.

"'And must I go to him?'—'Thou must run to him; for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.'"—Shakesp.: Two Gentlemen, iii. 1.

6. To depart; to leave a place; opposed to come.

"I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice, only ye shall not go very far away."—Exodus viii. 28.

7. To escape.

"Timotheus himself fell into the hands of Dositheus and Sosipater, whom he besought with much craft to let him go with his life."—2 Maccabees xii. 24.

* 8. To lead, to extend, to reach.

"He . . . dude perforce stoppe the pas,
That goth fro Taracounte to Capias."
Alisaunder, 6,250.

9. To pass or be passed from one to another; to be circulated.

"Stretched at their length, they press the grassy ground,
They laugh, they sing; the jolly bowls go round."
Dryden. Virgil; Æneid ix. 208.

* 10. To be spread, distributed, or disseminated.

"Profaneness is gone forth into all the land."—Jer. xxiii. 15.

11. To be carried.

"So long goys the pott to the water."
Towneley Mysteries, p. 106.

12. To depart; to pass away.

"Away, and with thee go the worst of woes,
That seek'st my friendship, and the gods thy foes."
Chapman. (Johnson.)

13. Of time, to pass.

"Gone is the day." Towneley Mysteries, p. 275.

14. To pass; to be placed or set.

"Whatever remains in story of Atlas, or his kingdom of old, is so obscured with age or fables, that it may go along with those of the Atlantic islands."—Temple.

15. To be distributed or regulated.

"Laws must make common smalle offices to go by lot."—Hooker: Eccles. Polity.

16. To find the way in; to pass in.

"Love is to myn herte gon." Lyric Poems, p. 92.

17. To frequent, to haunt; to pass one's life.

"He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men."—Job xxxiv. 8.

* 18. To proceed in any course of life.

"And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols, they shall even bear their iniquity."—Ezekiel xliv. 10.

19. To follow in teaching or example.

"They have gone in the way of Cain."—Jude 11.

20. To be guided or regulated in the course of conduct or action; to act.

"We are to go by another measure."—Sprat.

21. To change state or condition for better or worse.

"All those goodly things, which went so to wreck, to be lightly accounted of in comparison of their lives and liberty."—Knolles: Historie of the Turkes.

22. To have recourse to; to apply oneself to.

"Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?"—1 Corinthians vi. 1.

23. To apply; to be applicable or pertinent.

24. To tend to any act or result.

"There be some women, Silvius, had they marked him,
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him."
Shakesp.: As You Like It, iv. 5.

25. To have a tendency.

"Athenians, know, Against right reason all your counsels go."
Dryden: Persius, sat. iv.

26. To move in any direction; to act.

"Doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives, ii. 3.

27. To be in party, accord, or agreement; to work together.

"They with the vanquished prince and party go,
And leave their temples empty to the foe."
Dryden. (Johnson.)

28. To decline; to tend towards death or ruin.

"He is far gone, and, truly, in my youth,
I suffered much extremity for love,
Very near this." Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 2.

29. To pass away, to depart; not to remain.

"His strength went from him."—Judges xvi. 19.

30. To be talked of; to be known.

"It has the greatest town in the island that goes under the name of Ano-Caprea, and is in several places covered with a very fruitful soil."—Addison: On Italy.

* 31. To be expressed in words.

"Thus it goes." Shakesp.: As You Like It, ii. 5.

* 32. To pass; to be received.

"Clipping should be finally stopped, and the money which remains should go according to its true value."—Locke.

* 33. To be in circulation; to be current; to pass from hand to hand.

"Clipt and washed money goes about, when the entire and weighty lies hoarded up."—Waller.

34. To be used, spent, or expended.

"Our money must go to pay for them."—Locke.

35. To extend to consequences.

"It is not one master that either directs or takes notice of these: it goes a great way barely to permit them."—L'Estrange: Fables.

36. To have effect; to produce effects; to have power or value.

"Considering the cheapness, so much money might go farther than a sum ten times greater could now."—Wilkins.

37. To be reckoned, valued, or rated; to be of weight.

"Whatever appears against their prevailing vice goes for nothing, being either not applied, or passing for libel and slander."—Swift.

38. To extend in meaning.

"His amorous expressions go no further than virtue may allow."—Dryden: Ovid. (Pref.)

39. To last, to reach, to extend.

"Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the ravenous foe
In morsels cut, to make it farther go."
Tate: Juvenal, sat. xv.

40. To contribute, to conduce, to concur, to form an ingredient.

41. To proceed, to fare; to be in any state.

"When violence was ceased, and war on earth,
All would have gone well." Milton: P. L., xi. 780.

42. To fall out; to terminate; to succeed; to result.

"However the business goes, you have made fault
In the boldness of your speech."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iii. 2.

43. To be about to do; to be on the point of. (Used as an auxiliary verb.)

"'We shall do it now,' said Lochiel; 'that is not the cry of men who are going to win.'"—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

44. To be in order of place or time.

* 45. To be pregnant.

"The fruit she goes with,
I pray that it good time and life may find."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., v. 1.

46. To have animation, spirit, life, or interest; as, A play goes well.

47. To become; to come into a state.

"The prince will go mad."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, iv. 2.

48. To be regulated so as to suit.

"It . . . goes to the tune of 'Two Maids.'"—Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iv. 4.

49. To fail in business; to become bankrupt: as, He went for £10,000. (Commercial Slang.)

B. Transitive. [Although go appears to be, and may be, treated as transitive in such phrases as to go one's way, to go an errand, &c., it is really intransitive, the following preposition being omitted: as, To go a journey = to go on a journey.]

¶ Special phrases:

1. To go a begging: To be in no demand; to be neglected or despised.

2. To go about:

(1) Ordinary Language:

(a) To take a circuitous course in accomplishing anything; to go in different directions.

(b) To set one's self to do anything; to attempt; to exert oneself.

"They went about to slay him."—Acts ix. 29.

(2) Naut.: To turn the head of a ship; to tack; to wear.

3. To go abroad:

(1) To leave one's own country for a foreign one.

(2) To go out of doors.

(3) To be published or made public; to be disclosed.

"There went this saying abroad amongst the brethren."—John xxi. 23.

4. To go against:

(1) To go to attack; to invade; to march against.

(2) To be in opposition to; to be disagreeable.

5. To go ahead:

(1) To go or proceed in advance; to push forward or in advance.

(2) To make rapid progress.

6. To go aside:

(1) Lit.: To withdraw apart from others.

"And he took them and went aside privately into a desert place."—Luke ix. 10.

(2) Fig.: To go wrong; to deviate from the right; to err.

"If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him."—Numbers v. 12.

7. To go astern:

Naut.: To move astern or backwards.

8. To go astray:

(1) Lit.: To wander from the right path; to stray.

(2) Fig.: To wander from the paths of virtue.

9. To go away:

(1) To depart.

* (2) To die.

10. To go back:

(1) To return, to retire; to move backwards

(2) To recede in value, price, or condition.

11. To go back on: To break; not to keep; as, To go back on one's word.

12. To go between: To interpose; to mediate between; to attempt to reconcile two parties (Usually in a bad sense.)

"I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her."—Shakesp.: All's Well That Ends Well, v. 3.

* 13. To go beyond: To cheat, to outdo, to overreach.

"That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter."—1 Thessalonians iv. 6.

14. To go by:

(1) To pass by or near to.

(2) To pass beyond.

* (3) To pass away unnoticed or disregarded.

"So much the more our carver's excellent,
Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her
As she lived now." Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, v. 3.

* (4) To come by; to meet with.

"He's sure to go by the worst that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him."—L'Estrange: Fables.

15. To go by the board:

(1) Lit. & Naut.: To go or fall overboard: as, The mast went by the board.

(2) Fig.: To be utterly lost or ruined.

16. To go down:

(1) Literally:

(a) To descend in any manner from a higher to a lower place.

(b) To set: as, The sun goes down.

(c) To founder, to sink.

"Like ships that have gone down at sea,
When heaven was all tranquillity."
Moore: Light of the Harem.

(2) Figuratively:

* (a) To fall; to come to nothing.

(b) To be swallowed, accepted, or received to be admitted, to be acceptable.

"Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest."—L'Estrange: Fables.

17. To go far:

(1) To go to a distance.

(2) To have much weight, effect, or influence.

18. To go for:

(1) To go to fetch.

(2) To represent; to pass for.

(3) To support or be in favour of.

(4) To proceed to attack violently. (Amer.)

(5) To fetch; to be sold for; as, The horse went for so much.

19. To go for nothing: To be of no value, weight, or influence.

20. To go forth:

(1) To issue or depart out of a place.

(2) To be published, divulged, or spread abroad.

21. To go halves, shares, or snacks: To divide either evenly or otherwise.

22. To go hard with: To cause great trouble, danger, or difficulty to escape.

23. To go in: To proceed to action; to take an active part.

24. To go in for:

(1) To be in favour of; to attach oneself to the pursuit or acquisition of; to practise.

(2) To enter into competition for. (See example under Great-go.)

25. To go in and out: To have perfect liberty.

"He shall go in and out, and find pasture."—John x. 9.

26. To go in to:

(1) Ord. Lang.: To enter the presence of.

(2) Scrip.: To have sexual intercourse with.

27. To go into:

(1) To enter upon: as, To go into a business.

(2) To enter upon, to speak of, to discuss: as, To go into a matter,

28. To go large:

Naut.: To sail with the wind crossing the direction of the vessel's course in such a way that the sail feels its full force.

29. To go off:

(1) To depart; to go away.

"The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., iv. 2.

(2) To depart; to cease: as, The pain went off.

(3) To die; to deceaae.

"I would the friends we miss were safe arrived:
Some must go off." Shakesp.: Macbeth, v. 7.

(4) To explode; to be discharged or exploded.

(5) To be sold or disposed of; to be bought up.

(6) To take place; to be carried out; to pass over.

"The wedding went off much as such affairs do."—Mrs. Gaskell: Wives & Daughters, ch. xiv.

30. To go on:

(1) To proceed; to advance further.

(2) To continue; to proceed; not to leave off: as, To go on reading.

*(3) To make attack.

(4) To be put on as a garment, &c.; to fit.

31. To go on all fours with anything: To agree exactly.

32. To go on a wind:

Naut.: To sail to windward.

33. To go out:

(1) To issue forth from a place.

(2) To go upon any expedition.

"You need not to have pricked me: there are other men fitter to go out than I."—Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., iii. 2.

(3) To become public; to be divulged or published.

(4) To be extinguished; to become extinct: as, A candle or a fire goes out.

"Life itself goes out at thy displeasure."
Addison: Cato.

(5) Univ.: To proceed regularly to an academical degree.

(6) To leave or vacate office: as, A ministry goes out.

31. To go over:

(1) To pass from one side of to the other; to cross; to pass over.

(a) Transitive:

"I must not go over Jordan."—Deut. iv. 22.

(b) Intransitive:

"Let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan."—Deut. iii. 25.

(2) To revolt; to desert from one side to another; to change sides.

(3) To read, to peruse, to study, to view or review; to examine.

"If we go over the laws of Christianity, we shall find that excepting a few particulars, they enjoin the same thing."—Tillotson.

(4) To think or meditate over.

(5) To transcend, to bear, to surpass.

35. To go over to (or join) the majority: To die, to decease. [MAJORITY.]

36. To go the whole figure: To go to the fullest extent in gaining a point or obtaining an object. (Amer.)

37. To go the whole hog: To go to the fullest extent; to be out-and-out; to stick at nothing. (Slang.)

38. To go through:

(1) To pass through any substance.

(2) To perform thoroughly; to accomplish; to finish; to bring to a completion.

(3) To suffer, to endure, to undergo, to put up with: as, The troubles he has gone through.

(4) To waste; to spend completely; to run through.

(5) To bungle a business. (Scotch.)

(6) To strip of valuable property. (Amer. Slang.)

39. To go through with:

(1) To perform thoroughly; to bring to a completion.

"He much feared the Earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking."—Clarendon: Civil War.

(2) To persevere in to the end.

"Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it."—Sidney: Arcadia.

40. To go to ground:

(1) Lit. & Hunt.: Said of a fox when he succeeds in escaping the hounds by taking refuge in an earth or a hole.

"Saved his brush by going to ground in a drain."—Field, Jan. 28, 1882.

*(2) Fig.: To fall or die in battle; to be slain.

"In a battle where so many before our eyes go to the ground, paying the debt to nature daily."—Ch. Sutton: Learn to Die (1614), p. 17.

41. To go to naught: To come to nothing; to fail.

42. To go to work: To set to work; to atart at any work or pursuit.

"Because this atheist goes mechanically to work, he will not offer to affirm that all the parts of the embryon could, according to his explication, be formed at a time."—Bentley: Boyle Lectures.

43. To go under:

*(1) To set.

"Nou is the sonne gon undur." Allexander, 6,830.

(2) To be submerged or ruined; to perish; to sink. (American.)

*(3) To die.

*(4) To undergo.

44. To go upon:

*(1) To attack, to go against.

(2) To take or act upon as a principle, basis, or foundation.

45. To go with:

(1) To accompany.

(2) To side or agree with in views or design.

(3) To agree with, to suit, to harmonize.

46. To go ill (or well) with: To meet with ill (or good) fortune; to fare ill (or well).

47. To go without: To be or remain destitute or unprovided.

48. To go wrong:

(1) Lit.: To take a wrong way or road; to wander from the road.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) To go astray from the paths of virtue.

(b) To fail in business.

(c) To fall out unluckily or unfortunately: as, Things went wrong with him.

(d) To become unsound or tainted, as meat fruit, &c.

49. Let go: To loose one's hold of; to release.

"Let go, slave, or thou diest."—Shakesp.: Lear, iv. 6.

*50. Go to: Come, move. (A phrase of exhortation; often used ironically.)

"Go to! go to! thou art a foolish fellow;
Let me be clear of thee."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, iv. 1.

gō, s. [Go, v.]

1. A going on; act, operation, doing, incident.

"This is a pretty go, is this here! an uncommon pretty go."—Dickens: Nicholas Nickleby, ch. lxii.

2. A fashion or mode.

3. A noisy jollification; a spree.

4. A drink of liquor, especially of gin; a quartern.

"Sipping whiskey-and-water until the goes were both gone."—Dickens: Sketches by Boz; Making a Night of it.

5. Stamina; power of endurance or staying; bottom; spirit.

"This mishap knocked all the go out of him."—Field, Jan. 23, 1882.

6. Spirit, life, animation, fire; unflagging interest.

"An individual without animation, without that essential which for want of a better term we call go is in comic opera, an interloper, a blot, a hindrance."—Era, Nov. 17, 1883.

¶ (1) Great-go, Little-go: University slang terms for the final and preliminary or previous examinations for degrees.

"The little gentleman was going in for his degree, alias Great-go, alias Greats; and our hero for his first examination in literis humanioribus, alias Responsions, alias Little-go, alias Smalls."—Cuthbert Bede: Verdant Green, pt. ii., ch. ii.

(2) No go: Of no use; not to be done; a complete failure.

"I tell you, sare, it is no go. I will never let her marry."—Thackeray: Miscellanies, i. 483.

go-ahead, a. Characterized by progress, energy, and enterprise; enterprising, energetic, pushing.

go-between, s. One who acts as an intermediary between two parties, as agent or mediator. (Usually in a bad sense.)

"Even as you came into me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

go-by, s.

1. The act of passing without notice; hence an intentional omission or failure to notice.

2. An evasion, a deception.

"Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect."—Collier: On Pride.

go-cart, s. A small framework without a bottom, and running on castors, for teaching infants to walk.

"The ladies now walk as if they were in a go-cart."—Steele: Spectator, No. 109.

go-harvest, go-har'st, s. The fall, when the summer season declines, or is about to go away; including the time from the ingathering of the crop till the commencemen of winter. (Scotch.)

"Other parts of it bear a thin grass, and in the go harvest and winter season is of a yellowish colour."—Maxwell: Select Transactions, p. 10.

go-out, s.

Hydr. Engin.: A sluice in an embankment for allowing water to escape from tidal lands when the tide is out; a gowt.

go-summer, s. The latter end of summer, towards the beginning of autumn. (Scotch.)

"The go-summer was matchless fair in Murray, without winds, wet, or any storm."—Spalding: Troubles, i. 34.

gō, pa. par. [Go, v.]

gōad, gōdo, gōade, s. [A.S. gád; Icel. gaddr.] [GAD.]

I. Lit.: A pointed instrument used to stimulate oxen to move faster.

"A pointed goad he brought, with which he drew From every limb the streams of sanguine hue."
Hoole: Orlando Furioso, xxvii.

2. Fig.: Anything which urges or stimulates. In the sixteenth century the word was used to designate a horse-chanter.

"They that stand by and conycatche the chapman either with out-bidding, false praises, &c., are called goades."—Dekker: Lanthorne & Candle-light, ch. x.

goad-groom, s. A carter; a driver; a ploughman.

gōad, v.t. & i. [GOAD, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To prick, drive, or urge on with a goad.

"Thy nurse will bear no load;
And woe to them that shear her,
And woe to them that goad."
Macaulay: Prophecy of Capys, xvii.

2. To stimulate, to incite, to instigate, to drive forward.

"He carefully avoided every act which could goad them into open hostility."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

3. To excite, to arouse, to drive by words or actions of an irritating or inflammatory nature.

B. Intrans.: To act as a goad, stimulus, or incentive.

"It was a goading thought—his stride Hied hastier down the mountain side."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, iii. 30.

gōad'-lōnp, s. [Sw. gatlopp.] The gantelope, or gantlet, a military punishment, in which the criminal, running between the ranks, receives a lash from each man. [GANTLET.]

"Because I refused, they threatened in their anger, that whosoever gave me a drink of water should get the goadloup."—Wodrow: Hist. I. (Append., p. 102).

goāds'-man, s. [Eng. goad, and man.] One who drives oxen with a goad; a gadsman.

goād'-stĕr, s. [Eng. goad; suff. -ster.] A goadsman or gadsman.

"Goadsters in classical costume with fillets and wheatears enough."—Carlyle: French Revol. pt. iii., bk. iii., c. vii.

gōaf (1), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Min.: The waste place in a colliery; the refuse that is left behind when the work is completed; the space from which the coal has been removed, and in which the roof has been permitted to fall in; also called gob.

"Should the ventilation be defective, some of the gas will be filtered into the open goafs, and remain there until forced or drawn out by some of the influences above mentioned."—Colliery Guardian, Nov. 6, 1880.

gōaf (2), s. [GOFF (2).] A rick of hay.

goaf-flap, s. A wooden beater to knock the ends of the sheaves, and make the goaf more compact.

goaf-ladder, gofe-ladder, s. A ladder for carrying hay on to the rick.

goaf-stead, s. A division of a barn in which a goaf is placed.

gōaf (3), s. [GOFF (1), s.]

gōaf-ĭsh, gof-ĭsh, gof-fish, goof-ĭsh, a. [Cf. Sp. gafo; Ital. goffo; Fr. goffe = a fool, a simpleton.] [GOFF.]

"For to be war of goofish peples speche."
Chaucer: Troilus, iii. 535.

gōal (1), gōle, s. [Fr. gaule = a pole or big rod; O.Fr. waule; cogn. with Icel. vǭr = a stick, a staff; Goth. walus; O. Fris. walu.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The winning-post in a race; the point or mark set to bound a race.

"Else, though unequalled to the goal he flies,
A meaner than himself shall gain the prize."
Cowper: Truth, 15.

2. The final purpose or aim; the end at which a person aims, or to which a design is directed; the end.

"Day and night my toils redouble!
Never nearer to the goal."
Wordsworth: Song for the Wandering Jew.

* 3. The starting-post of a race.

"So self starts nothing, but what leads apace Home to the goal." Cowper: Charity, 566.

II. Football:

1. The space marked by goal-posts and a cross-bar, to define the required path of the ball in order that a goal [2] may be scored. According to Rugby rules, the ball must be kicked over the cross-bar; according to Association rules, it must go under.

"He reached within thirty yards of goal."—Field, Oct. 27, 1883.

2. The act of kicking the ball through or over the goal-posts.

"The victory of the home team by two goals to one."—Field, Oct. 27, 1883.

goal-keeper, s. In football, the player in charge of the defence of the goal.

"Both goal-keepers played in very cool and clever fashion."—Field, Oct. 27, 1883.

goal-post, s. In football, one of the posts forming the goal.

goal (2), s. [Gaol.]

göar, s. [Gore (1), s.]

göare, s. [Gore (1), v.] A hurt, a wound. (Forbes: Eubulus, p. 152.)

göar'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. goar; -ish.] Patched up; mean.

"The goarish Latine they write in their bonds."—Beaum. & Flet.: Philaster, v. 1.

gōat (1), *gaet, *gait, *gat, *gate, *gatt, *gayt, *geat, *geet, *get, *gett, *geyt, *geyte, *goot, *got, *gote, s. [A.S. gát; cogn. with Dut. geit; Sw. get; Dan. ged; Icel. geit; Ger. geiss, geisse; Goth. gaitsa; O. H. Ger. geiz; Lat. hædus.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II.

"A shaggy goat's soft hide beneath him spread."
Pope: Homer; Odyssey xiv. 59.

* 2. Fig.: A lecherous person; a lecher.

"At dinner he never fails to sit next to her . . . and at the tea-table I have seen the impudent goat most lasciously sip off her leavings."—Cibber: Nonjuror, i. 1.

¶ In Christian art the goat is an emblem of impurity. It sometimes occurs in the carving under seat or choir-stalls, and is put there as a mark of dishonour.

Zoology:

1. Singular:

(1) Capra hircus, the domestic goat, which exists, in a wild or semi-wild state, in all the European mountain ranges. It is generally supposed that it may be a descendant of the Paseng of Persia (Capra ægagrus). Professor Boyd Dawkins considers that it, with various other domestic animals, came in with the neolithic farmer and herdsman, there being no trace of it while the palæolithic hunter constituted the highest type of manhood in Europe. Semi-wild goats are found on hills in Britain. These show wonderful sureness of foot and absence of fear when traversing places where a false step would be fatal. The males fight furiously with each other in the rutting time. They have an offensive smell.

(2) The genus Capra (q.v.).

2. The family Capridæ (q.v.).

goat-heard, s. [Goat's-beard.]

goat-buck, *goot-buck, s. A he-goat.

"Neither bi bloud of goot-buckis or of calnys."—Bible (1551), Hebrews ix. 12.

goat-chaffer, s.

Entom.: "A kind of beetle." (Bailey.) The name chaffer is appropriated to the genus Melolontha and the family Melolonthidæ. Melolontha (Rhizotragus) solstitialis may be the species intended by Bailey. It is smaller, narrower, and paler than the Common Cockchafer (q.v.). In the new edition of Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary it is called Cerambyx ardilis, which has no close affinity to Melolontha.

† goat-fig, s.

Bot.: The fig-tree in its wild atate.

goat-fold, s. A fold or enclosure for goats.

goat-house, s.

1. Lit.: A goat-fold.

* 2. Fig.: A brothel.

† goat-marjoram, s.

Bot.: The same as Goat's-beard (q.v.). (Johnson.)

† goat-milker, s.

Ornith.: The bird called the goat-sucker (q.v.).

goat-moth, s.

Entom.: Cossus ligniperda, a large moth belonging to the family Zenzeridæ. The fore wings are pale brown, clouded with whitish, and marked with numerous short, irregular transverse wavy black lines; hind wings pale-smoky, with similar transverse dark lines, Goat-moth.

but less distinct; expansion of wings three to above three and a half inches; larva reddish black on the back, sides of a dull yellowish or flesh colour; head black; smell offensive. It is very common in the south, but less so in the north. It feeds on the wood of willows, poplars, and oaks, sometimes perforating the wood in all directions. It is said to be three years in reaching maturity. The perfect insect comes forth in July. (Stainton.) goat-pepper, s.

Bot.: Capsicum fruticosum, a native of the East Indies.

goat-root, s.

Bot.: Ononis Natrix.

goat-stone, s. For def. see extract. [Bezoar.]

"The disease of the stone was supposed to be cured by the stone called capra, which was said to be found in the bodies of some Indian goats. Targioni Tozzetti (Lezioni di Materia Medica, Florence, 1821) seriously describes the goat-stones as follows: 'These stones are usually clear on their surface and dark-coloured; they have an odour of musk when rubbed and heated by the hands. In them, analeptic and alexipharmic virtues were supposed to exist, which were able to resist the evil effects of poison and contagious diseases, the plague not excepted.'"—De Gubernatis: Zoological Mythology, i. 422.

goat-sucker, s. [Goatsucker.]

goat-tree, s.

Bot.: Lonicera Periclymenum.

goat-weed, s.

Botany:

1. Gen.: The genus Capraria, belonging to the Scrophulariaceæ. (Loudon.)

2. Spec.: Capraria biflora. (Paxton.)

3. Ægopodium (q.v.), and specially Ægopodium Podagraria. The resemblance to a goat's foot is in the form of the leaf. Called also Gout-weed, Bishop's-weed, Ash-weed, Herb-gerard, and Wild Masterwort.

4. Stemodia durantifolia. (Treas. of Bot.)

goat-willow, s.

Bot.: Salix Caprœa. It is the badge of the Cummings.

goat's-bane, s.

Bot.: Aconitum Tragoctonum.

goat's-beard, goat-beard, s.

Botany:

1. The composite genus Tragopogon, and especially Tragopogon pratense. It is a stout erect plant, one or two feet high, with flexuous leaves and heads of yellow flowers; occurring in England, and more sparingly in Scotland and Ireland. It is found also on the continent of Europe and in Western Siberia. The root is eatable. (Loudon, &c.)

2. Spiræa Aruncus. (Paxton.)

goat's-bush, s.

Bot.: Castela Nicolsoni.

goat's-foot, s.

Bot.: Oxalis caprina.

* Goat's-foot lever:

Old Arm.: A contrivance for setting a cross-bow. It was so called because it bore some resemblance to the foot of a goat.

"[A latch] of the time of Elizabeth, bent by means of the goat's foot lever."—Meyrick: Ancient Armour, vol. ii., pl. xcv.

goat's-horn, goat's-horned milk-vetch, s.

Bot.: Astragalus Ægiceras.

goat's-leaves, s. [Goat-tree.]

goat's-origanum, s.

Bot.: Thymus tragoriganum. (Paxton.)

goat's-rue, s.

Bot.: (1) Astragalus galegiformis. (Loudon.) (2) The genus Galega. (Paxton.) goat's-thorn, s.

Bot.: Two plants—viz., the Great Goat's-thorn, Astragalus Tragacantha, and the Small Goat's-thorn, A. Poterium. (Loudon.) goat's-wheat, s.

Bot.: The genus Tragopyrum.

gōat (2), s. [Icel. gata = a road.]

1. A narrow cavern or inlet, into which the sea enters.

2. A small trench.

gōat, v.t. [Goat (2), s.] To drive into a trench: a term at golf.

gōat'-bŭsh, s. [Eng. goat, and bush.]

Bot.: Castela Nicolsoni, an Ochnad. It is as bitter as quassia.

gōa-tēē', s. [Eng. goat; dim. suff. -ee.] A beard so trimmed that a part of it hangs down from the lower lip or chin, as the beard of a goat.

gōat'-fĭsh, s. [Eng. goat, and fish.]

Ichthy.: Balistes capriscus, a fish of a brownish-grey colour, spotted with blue, or greenish. Its flesh is little esteemed. Its appropriate habitat is the Mediterranean, but it has been found in the British seas. It is called by Yarrell the European File-fish. [Balistes, File-fish.]

gōat'-foot, s. [Eng. goat, and foot.] A satyr, so called from the fact that the classic poets described satyrs as having the hindquarters of a goat.

"Catch her, goat-foot; nay, Hide, hide them, million-myrtled wilderness."
Tennyson: Lucretius, 200.

gōat'-hĕrd, * gate-herd, * gate-heyrd, * gote-herd, * goot-herde, s. [A.S. gát = a goat: heord = a herd, heorde = a keeper, a herd.]

* I. A herd or flock of goats.

"Go after gateherden."—Ancren Riwle, p. 100.

2. One who is employed to tend goats.

"Thilk same goutherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank."
Spenser: Shepheards Calender; July.

gōat'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. goat; -ish.]

I. Resembling a goat in form; like a goat.

"On's shield the goatish satires dance around."
P. Fletcher: Purple Island, vii. 78.

2. Resembling a goat in any quality, especially in rankness of smell or lustfulness.

"Give your chaste body up to the embraces Of goatish lust."
Massinger: Virgin Martyr, iii. 1.

* gōat'-ĭsh-lў, adv. [Eng. goatish; -ly.] In a goatish manner; lustfully, lecherously.

* gōat'-ĭsh-nĕss, s. [Eng. goatish; -ness.] The quality or state of being goatish, lustful, or lecherous; lustfulness.

gōat'-lĭke, a. [Eng. goat, and like.] Like a goat; goatish.

gōat'-skĭn, s. & a. [Eng. goat, and skin.]

A. As subst.: The skin of a goat, dressed, especially one sewn into the shape of a bottle.

"Then filled two goatskins with her hands divine:
With water one, and one with sable wine."
Pope: Homer; Odyssey v. 388.

B. As adj.: Made of the skin of a goat.

gōat'-sŭck-ŏr, s. [Eng goat, and sucker.]

Ornithology & Ordinary Language:

1. Sing.: One of the English names of a remarkable migratory bird, Caprimulgus Europæus, which breeds in Britain in the summer, and winters chiefly in Africa. The erroneous belief that it sucks goats seems to have arisen among the goatherds in ancient Greece, who called it αἰγοθήλης (aigothēlēs), from αἴξ (aix), genit. αἰγός (aigos) = a goat, and θηλή (thēlē) = the nipple; and the Romans, falling into the same error, denominated it Caprimulgus (q.v.).

2. Pl.: The sub-family Caprimulgiœ, or the family Caprimulgidæ (q.v.).

gōave, v.i. [Goif.] To look round with a strange, inquiring gaze; to stare stupidly.

"Goavan, as if led wi' branks,
And stumpting on his ploughman shanks."
Burns: Interview with Lord Daer.

gōave, s. [Goave, v.] A broad, vacant stare.

gŏb, s. [Lat. gob = the beak of a bird, a mouth; Irish gob = the mouth; O. Fr. gob = a gulp, gober = to devour greedily.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A mouth.

2. A mouthful, a small quantity, a little mass.

3. A mouthful, a single swallow.

"That little land he gave Throate the lawyer swallowed at one gob." Barry: Ram Alley, I. 1.

4. Saliva, spittle.

II. Min.: The same as Goaf (q.v.).

gob-lines, s. pl.

Naut.: A term for the martingale back-ropes.

 gŏb'-bĕt, * gob-et, * gob-ette, s. [Fr. gobet, dimin. of O. Fr. gob = a gulp.] [Gob.]

1. A mouthful, a morsel; a little quantity or piece.

"He smot him on the helm an hegh, and a gobet away a bar." Sir Ferumbras, 614.

2. A fragment.

"Thei token the relifs of broken gobetis, twelve cofres full."—Wycliffe: Matthew xiv. 20.

3. A block of stone.

 gŏb'-bĕt, v.t. [Gobbet, s.] To swallow in large mouthfuls; to gulp down.

"Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both together."—L'Estrange.

 gobbet-meale, * gobet-mele, adv. Bit by bit; in little fragments.

"He slewe Hamou neare to a hauen of the sea, and threw him gobbet-meale therein; it is now called South-hampton."—Stow: The Romans (an. 21).

 gŏb'-bĕt-lĭ̆, * gob-et-liche, adv. [Eng. gobbet; -ly.] In little fragments; in pieces.

"His fader was islawe . . . and ithrowe out gobetliche."—Trevisa, iv. 103.

gŏb'-bĭng, s. [Gob, s. II.]

Min.: The refuse thrown back into the excavations remaining after the removal of the coal; packing with waste rock.

gŏb'-ble, v.t. & i. [A freq. from Fr. gober = to gulp down.]

A. Transitive:

1. To swallow down hastily or greedily; to gulp down.

"The time too precious now to waste,
And supper gobbled up in haste,
Again afresh to cards they run."
Swift: Ladies' Journal.

2. To utter like a turkey-cock.

"He returns to his female train, displays his plumage around, struts about the yard, and gobbles out a note of self-approbation."—Goldsmith: Animated Nature: The Turkey.

B. Intransitive:

1. To swallow food greedily or hastily.

2. To make a noise in the throat, as a turkey-cock.

"He never roosts for two successive nights upon the same tree, and rarely gobbles without running away from the sound himself has made."—Daily Telegraph, Sept. 29, 1883.

 gobble-gut, s. A greedy fellow.

gŏb'-ble, s. [Gobble, v.]

1. A noise made in the throat, as that of the turkey-cock.

"The turkey-cock is another unfortunate bird, whose strut and gobble have led it to be considered an emblem of . . . Bumbledom."—Lindsay: Mind in the Lower Animals, i. 295.

2. A turkey-cock.

gobble-cock, s. A turkey-cock.

gŏb'-blĕr, s. [Eng. gobbl(e); -er.]

1. One who gobbles or swallows food greedily; a gourmand, a greedy eater.

2. A turkey-cock.

"In the hope that many such gobblers as we have described may fall before their unerring bullets."—Daily Telegraph, Sept. 29, 1883.

gŏb'-bō, gŏm'-bō, gŭm'-bō, s. [A West Indian word.]

Bot.: The fruit of Abelmoschus esculentus, which, used as an ingredient in soup, imparts to it a mucilaginous quality.

gō'be-lĭn, a. [See def.]

Fabric: A term applied to a superior kind of French tapestry, deriving its name from the brothers Gobelin, the first manufacturers. It was ornamented with designs in colours. Under Colbert, the celebrated French minister, the different tapestry-producing ateliers in France were centralised and united with the Gobelins', which factory he induced the king to buy. The factory still continues to maintain its pride of place, producing the finest tapestry in the world.

gō'be-moûçhe, s. [Fr., lit. = a fly-swallower.] A silly, simple, credulous person, who will swallow or believe anything. The name is applied to such persons because they usually listen open-mouthed to any extraordinary story.

gō'-bĭ-ĭ-dæ, gō-bĭ-ōĭ'-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. gobi(us), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ichthy.: Gobies. A family of Acanthopteri Veri. The edges of the operculum are unarmed, and its aperture small; the ventral fins, whether united or separated, constitute a funnel, and are situated on the breast; the pectoral ones are large, all the rays of the dorsal and anal fins soft and flexible; the skin is either naked or armed with large finely ctenoid scales. Most of them are small fishes, found among rocks or in tidal rivers. They sometimes attach themselves by their suckers to the underside of stones. The males of some species build nests, and watch the eggs till hatched.

gō'-bĭ-ŏ, s. [Lat. = a fish of small value, probably the gudgeon.] [Gobius.]

Ichthy.: A genus of soft-bodied abdominal fishes, family Cyprinidæ. Though anciently gobio and gobius were the names for the same fish, yet now they are made quite distinct genera, not akin to each other. Gobio resembles Cyprinus, but the dorsal and anal fins are short and destitute of bony rays. One of its species, Gobio fluviatilis, is the well-known Gudgeon (q.v.).

gō'-bĭ-ŭs, s. [Lat. gobius, cobius, and gobio; Gr. κωβιός (kōbios) = the gudgeon. (See def. of gobio.)]

Ichthy.: Goby. The typical genus of the family Gobiidæ (q.v.). They have two dorsal fins, a scaly body, and a disc made by the ventral fins, which enables them to adhere to rocks. The genus includes about 300 species, which are widely distributed. The White Goby (Latruncalus albus) is a very small, transparent fish, found on some European coasts, which seems to live but one year, and is remarkable as "the first instance of an annual vertebrate." Nests of seaweeds and sea-wrack are built by some gobies.

gŏb'-lĕt, s. [Fr. gobelet = a goblet, dimin. of O. Fr. gobet, gobeau = a mazer or great goblet (Cotgrave), from Low Lat. cupillus = a cup, dimin. of cupa = a vat; Sp. cubilete.] A large cup or drinking-vessel without a handle. [Cup.]

"Drink was served to guests in goblets of pure gold."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

goblet-cells, s. pl.

Anat.: Cells produced in certain circumstances in the mucus of the nostrils. (Quain.) goblet-shaped, a.

Bot.: Concave and hemispherical, a little contracted at the base, as some Pezizas. The same as Crateriform (q.v.). (Lindley.) gŏb'-lĭn, * gob-bel-line, s. [Fr. gobelin, from Low Lat. gobelinus, cobalus = a goblin, from Gr. κόβαλος (kobalos) = a rogue, a sprite, a goblin; Ger. kobold = a demon or spirit of the mines.] An evil or mischievous spirit or sprite; an elf, a phantom; a malicious fairy.

"'Harper! methinks thy magic lays,' Matilda said, 'can goblins raise!'"
Scott: Rokeby, v. 28.

 gŏb'-lĭn-rў, s. [Eng. goblin; -ry.] The mischievous acts or practices of goblins.

gō'-bō-nāt-ĕd, a. [Gobone.]

Her.: An epithet applied to a border, pale, bend, or other charge divided into equal parts forming squares, gobbets, or chequers. Called also Gobone, or Gobony.

GOBONATED.

gō'-bō-nĕd, gō'-bō-nў, a. [Gobbet.]

Her.: The same as Gobonated (q.v.)

gō'-bў, s. [Gobius.]

Ichthy.: The English name of the genus Gobius (q.v.).

 gock-min, * cock-man, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A sentinel, a look-out.

"They had a coustant centinel on the top of their houses, called gockmin, or in the E. tongue, cockman, who is obliged to watch day and night, and at the approach of any body, to ask, Who comes there?"—Martin: Western Islands, p. 103.

gŏck'-rôo, s. [An East Indian word.]

Bot.: Ruellia longifolia, used in India as a drug.

Gŏd, god, s. [A.S.; cogn. with Dut. god; Icel. gudh; Dan. & Sw. gud; Goth. guth; Ger. goth. All from a Teutonic base, Gutha = God, and quite distinct and separate from good, which in A.S. is gód, in Dan. god, in Dut. goed, in O. H. Ger. cuot, in Goth. god. Prof. Max Müller says that "though it is impossible to give a satisfactory etymology of either God or good, it is clear that two words which thus run parallel in all the dialects without ever meeting cannot be traced back to one central point. God was most likely an old heathen name of the deity, and for such a name the supposed etymological meaning of good would be far too modern, too abstract, too Christian." (Max Müller: Science of Language, ii. (8th ed.) p. 316.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) (Of the form God): The Supreme Being. [II. 1, 2.]

"For to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him."—1 Cor. viii. 6.

(2) (Of the form god): Any superior or imaginary being, constituting an object of worship. (In this sense it has a plural.)

"For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth (as there be gods many, and lords many)."—1 Cor. viii. 5.

2. Figuratively:

(1) An emperor, king, or any other person, wielding great and despotic power.

"Art thou the god, the thunder of whose hand Rolled over all our desolated land?"
Cowper: Charity, 75.

(2) Any person or thing greatly idolized.

"How shall I speak thee, or thy power address, Thou god of our idolatry, the Press."
Cowper: Progress of Error, 460.

II. Religions:

1. Ethnic: Whether any savage tribes exist with no belief in any being higher than man, is doubtful. Burton and Sir John Lubbock are of opinion, as was Mr. Darwin, that there have been, and still are such tribes; Dr. Tylor, after explaining away some alleged cases, expresses doubt of those remaining. Lubbock thus arranges the first great stages in religious thought: Atheism, understanding by this term, not a denial of the existence of a Deity, but an absence of any definite ideas on the subject. Fetichism, the stage in which man supposes he can force the Deity to comply with his desires. Nature-worship or Totemism, in which natural objects, trees, lakes, stones, animals, &c., are worshipped. Shamanism, in which the superior deities are far more powerful than man, and of a different nature. Their place of abode also is far away, and accessible only to Shamans. Idolatry or Anthroponomorphism, in which the gods take still more completely the nature of men, being, however, more powerful. They are still amenable to persuasion; they are a part of nature, and not creatures. They are represented by images or idols. In the next stage, the Deity is regarded as the author, not merely a part of nature. He becomes for the first time a really supernatural being. The last stage is that in which morality is associated with religion. (Lubbock: Origin of Civilization (1870), p. 119.)

2. Jewish: Two leading names for the Supreme Being continually occur in the Hebrew Bible; the one generic, the other specific. The generic term is אֵל (El), or אֱלוֹהַּ (Eloah), both singular, and אֱלֹהִים (Elohim) plural. The specific one is יְהוָה (Yehovah), in general written Jehovah (q.v.). It is of the first that God is the appropriate rendering. El, Eloah, and Elohim signify Deity in general. Elohim is much more common than the singular forms. An anomalous grammatical idiom is generally introduced where it occurs. While it has the plural form, im being the plural of Hebrew masculine nouns, the verb, of which it is nominative is uniformly singular. Older writers found in this a reference to the Trinity in Unity; grammarians term it the plural of excellence, and some have supposed that the plural noun carries us back to the infancy of the Hebrew language when polytheism prevailed, and that the singular verb established itself when monotheism displaced the worship of many gods. Among the epithets or titles used of God in the Old Testament, are Most High (Gen. xiv. 18, &c.), Mighty (Neh. ix. 32), Holy (Josh. xxiv. 19), Merciful (Deut. iv. 31), God of Heaven (Ezra v. 12), God of Israel, &c. (Exod. xxiv. 10). Anthropomorphic language occurs chiefly, though not exclusively, in the poetic parts of the Old Testament (2 Chron. xvi. 9, Psalm xxxiv. 15, Deut. viii. 3, Psalm xxix. 4, Isa. xl. 12, liii. 1, lx. 13, Exod. xxxii. 23), but monotheism is enjoined in the first commandment, and idolatry forbidden in the second, while in Isaiah and elsewhere there are most scathing denunciations of the manufacture and worship of images (Isa. xl. 12–26, xlii. 17, xliv. 9–20, &c.). In the New Testament, St. John gives the ever-memorable definition of the Divine nature, "God is love" (1 John iv. 16). The Latin Church, the Greek Church, and the several Protestant denominations all essentially agree in their tenets regarding God. See the Apostles', Nicene, and Athanasian Creeds, the first of the Thirty-nine Articles, the Catechism of the Council of Trent, the Confession of Faith (ch. ii.), and the Shorter Catechism, question 4. [THEOLOGY, TRINITY.]

¶ Of God:

Scrip.: A term sometimes used as a superlative to designate whatever is specially great or admirable. Thus the trees of God are cedars (Ps. civ. 16), and the "river of God" is a river full of water to the brink of its bed or channel, if not even in flood (Ps. lxv. 9).

B. As adj.: Of, belonging to, or by God. See the compounds.

God-'a-mercy, interj. God have mercy!

God-bairn, God-bairne, s. A godchild.

"Quhat sall he my god-bairne gift?"
Lyndsay, ii. 111.

* god-bote, s. [GODBOTE.]

god-cake, s. A cake sent on New Year's Day to a godchild.

God-commissioned, a. Commissioned by God.

"Awful as Death and as Judgment, Stood he, the God-commissioned."
Longfellow: Children of the Lord's Supper.

* God-gild, s. That which is offered to God or his service.

God-given, a. Given by God.

"The world defrauded of the high design, Profaned the God-given strength, and marred the lofty line." Scott: Marmion, i. (Introd.)

God-intoxicated, a. Overwhelmingly filled with the idea of God's presence; an epithet applied by Novalis to Spinoza. [SPINOZISM.]

"Spinoza was a 'God-intoxicated man,' not only in the ardours of speculative activity, but in the conflict of daily life, believing in God as an ever-present reality."—G. H. Lewes: History of Philosophy, ii. 177.

* god-king, s.

Comp. Mythology:

1. A demigod, the offspring of a god and a woman, or of a hero and a goddess or nymph.

2. A monarch regarded as a divinity either in virtue of his own claims or by the sycophancy of his courtiers.

"Consult the Charmides of Plato (v.) for a remarkable account of the theory of such a treatment attributed by Socrates to Zamolxis, the god-king of the Thracians."—Matthew Arnold: Literature & Dogma (1873), p. 144. (Note.)

* god-lore, s. The knowledge of divinities either real or fabulous; mythology.

"Thus we see a sort of mystic poesy connecting itself with the mystic god-lore."—Ritter: Hist. of Ancient Philosophy (ed. Morrison), i. 139.

God-man, s. One both God and man; applied to our Lord.

God-speed, s. Success, prosperity, or good fortune: specif., a prosperous journey

"Receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed."—2 John 10.

* God-tide, s. Christmas.

god-tree, s.

Bot.: Eriodendron anfractuosum.

God's-acre, s. [ACRE.] A burial-ground.

"I like that ancient Saxon phrase, which calls
The burial-ground God's-acre"
Longfellow: God's-Acre.

God's-field, s. A churchyard, a burial-ground.

God's-flower, s.

Bot.: Helichrysum Stœchas.

god's-food, s. Barm; yeast.

* god's-house, s. An almshouse.

"[He] founded for poore people a godshouse."—P. Holland: Camden, p. 284.

god's-penny, * god's-pennie, s. An earnest-penny.

"Then John he did him to record draw,
And John he cast him a god's-pennie."
Percy Reliques; Heir of Linne.

¶ In a note in loc. Percy says that "at this day, when application is made to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle to accept an exchange of the tenant under one of their leases, a piece of silver is presented by the new tenant, which is still called a god's-penny."

* God's Sunday, s. Easter-day.

* god, v.t. [GOD, s.] To deify; to exalt; to divine honours; to act towards as a god.

"This last old man
Loved me above the measure of a father,
Nay, godded me, indeed."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, v. 3.

* gŏd'-ard, s. [GOTER, GUTTER.] A channel, a drain.

"Gosshet throngh godardys and other grete vantes."
Destruction of Troy, 1,606.

* gŏd'-bĕrt, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A hauberk.

* Gŏd'-bote, s. [Eng. God, and bote (q.v.).]

Old Law: An ecclesiastical fine or penalty paid for crimes committed against God.

* gŏd'-çĕpt, s. [Etym. of second element doubtful.] A godfather. (Holinshed.) gŏd'-çhīld, s. [Eng. god, and child, indicating the spiritual relation between the two.] One for whom a person stands sponsor at baptism; a godson or goddaughter.

"Uorte techen godchilde pater noster and credo."—Ancren Riwle, p. 208.

* god-cunde, a. [A.S. godcund.]

1. Of the nation of God.

"Jesu Crist in his goddcunnde kindi."
Ormulum, 5,872.

2. Holy, religious.

"Senden him anon summe godcunde mon."
Layamon, i. 432.

gŏd'-dâugh-tĕr (gh silent), s. [Eng. god, and daughter (q.v.).] A female for whom one stands sponsor at baptism.

"To do favour to the queen that was his god-daughter."—Baker: Henry I. (an. 1104).

* gŏd'-dēde, s. [AS. gōddæd; O. H. Ger. guottât.] Good deeds, kindness, mercy.

"To thonki Godd of his grace and of his goddede."—Hali Meidenhad, p. 19.

gŏd'-dĕss, * god-des, * god-desse, s. [Eng. god; -ess.]

1. A female god; a heathen deity of the female sex.

"After the dethe sche was made a goddesse."—Trevisa, ii. 299.

2. A woman of pre-eminent qualities or charms.

"A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.

gŏd'-dĕss-like, a. [Eng. goddess; -like.] Resembling a goddess.

"She's punished for her truth; and undergoes,
More goddesslike than wifelike, such assaults."
Shakesp.: Cymbeline, iii. 2.

* gŏd'-dĕss-shĭp, s. [Eng. goddess; -ship.] The rank, state, or condition of a goddess.

"Appear'dst thou not to Paris in this guise?
Or to more deeply blest Anchises? or,
In all thy perfect goddessship, when lies Before thee thy own vanquished Lord of War?"
Byron: Childe Harold, iv. 51.

* gŏd'-dŏt, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A goblet.

"A wooden goddet or tankard."—Florio.

* gŏd'-dĭ-kĭn, s. [Eng. god; dimin. suff. -kin.] A little god.

"One's a little goddikin."—Cotton: Burlesque upon Burlesque, p. 281.

* gŏd'-dīze, v.t. [Eng. god; -ize.] To deify.

"And faire, loued, feared Elizabeth Have goddized ever since."
Warner: Albions England, bk. ix., ch. xlv.

* gŏd-dôt, interj. [A contract. of God wot = [God knows.] An oath; by God.

"Goddot! y wile with the gonge." Havelok, 796.

* gode, a. & s. [GOOD.]

* gode-les, a. [Mid. Eng. gode = good, or goods, and les = less.] Without money or goods.

* gode-ley-hede, s. [Mid. Eng. godely = goodly; -hede = hood.] Goodness, goodliness.

* gō-dĕn'-da, s. [Fr. godendac, godendart; Low Lat. godandardus, from Flem. gooden = good, and dac = day. So called because the Flemish soldiers virtually said the words of parting, "Good day," to the enemy, when by using this weapon against them they compelled them to depart. (Littré.)] A pole-axe having a spike at its end, used in the thirteenth century.

* gode-ness, s. [GOODNESS.]

gŏd'-fa-thĕr, * god-fa-der, s. [A.S. godfæder; Icel. gudhfadir; Sw. & Dan. gudfader; Ger. gevatter.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II.

* 2. Figuratively:

(1) One who gives a name to any person or thing.

"These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights That give a name to every fixed star."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1.

(2) An old jocular name for a juryman.

II. Ecclesiol. & Ch. Hist.: The appellation, derived from Anglo-Saxon, for one of the sponsors who take vows upon themselves when they bring an infant to be baptized. Their first appointment is attributed to Hyginus, a Roman bishop, about A.D. 154, his object being to provide some security for the Christian upbearing of the child if the parents were cut off in a persecution then in progress. Some, however, think that the Jews had sponsors in connexion with the circumcision of children; others that their introduction into the Church arose from the legislation of the Roman civil code. In 813 the Council of Metz prohibited parents from acting as sponsors for their children. The Council of Trent, in 1545, limited the number of sponsors to one or two. The Church of England requires two godfathers for a male and one for a female child. In the Roman Church sponsors contract a spiritual relationship with the infant for whom they pledge themselves, and with its parents, so that a diriment impediment exists, by which no one of the parties concerned can contract matrimony with any other one. The same impediment occurs when sponsors officiate at confirmation, but in very many places the person to be confirmed has no sponsors.

* gŏd'-fa-thĕr, v.t. [GODFATHER, s.] To act as godfather to; to take under one's fostering care.

"The colonies which have had the fortune of not being godfathered by the Board of Trade, have never cost the nation a shilling."—Burke: On the Œconomical Reform.

* gŏd'-fa-thĕr-lĕss, a. [Eng. godfather; -less.] Having no godfather.

* gŏd'-fa-thĕr-shĭp, s. [Eng. godfather; -ship.] The position, condition, or state of a godfather.

Gŏd'-fēar-ĭng, a. [Eng. God, and fearing.] Having a reverential and loving feeling towards God; religious.

"That sober, resolute, and Godfearing class, out of which Cromwell had formed his unconquerable army."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

Gŏd'-for-sāk-ĕn, a. Forlorn, desolate, as if "forsaken by God."

god-fright, *god-friht, *god-fruht, *god-furht, a. [A.S. godefriht, godferht, godfyrht; Ger. gottesfurchtig.] Godfearing.

"Bute hit beo aut godfriht man."—O. E. Homilies, ii. 121.

god-fright-hede, *godc-frigt-i-hed, s. [Mid. Eng. godfright; -hede = hood.] The quality or state of being godfearing; the fear of God.

"Of hedes and of godefrigtheit."
Genesis & Exodus, 493.

god-ful (1), god fulle, a. [GODFUL.]

gŏd'-fŭl (2), gŏd fŭll, a. [Eng. god, and full.] Inspired.

"Those godfull prophets."—Herrick: Appendix, p. 440.

Gŏd'-hĕad (1), God-hed, *God-hede (1), s. [Eng. God; -head; O. H. Ger. Gotheit; M. H. Ger. Goteheit; Dut. Godheid.]

1. The quality or state of being God; Godship, divinity; divine nature or essence.

"They now are deemed the faithful, and are praised,
Who, constant only in rejecting thee, Deny thy Godhead with a martyr's zeal."
Cowper: Task, vi. 883.

2. The Supreme Deity; God.

"The imperial throne
Of Godhead, fixed for ever firm and sure."
Milton: P. L., vii 588.

3. A god or goddess; a deity in person; a divinity.

"Belus . . . there might rest: and, from that height,
Pure and serene, the godhead overlook Winding Euphrates."
Wordsworth Excursion, bk. iv.

gŏd'-hĕad (2), god-hede (2), s. [Mid. Eng. god = good; -head; M. H. Ger. guotheit; Dut. goedheid; Dan. & Sw. godhed.] Goodness.

"Ibore bifore God thi godhede." Leben Jesu, 142.

Gŏd'-hood, s. [Eng. God; -hood.] The state or quality of God; divine nature or essence; godhead, godship.

"Accept my simple legacie of Godhood most deuine."
Warner: Albions England, bk. iii., ch. xvi.

Gŏd-ild, *God-ield, phr. [A contr. of God yield (= requite) (you).] A phrase used in giving thanks.

"Godild you for your company."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, iii. 3.

gŏd'-lĕss, *god-lesc, a. & s. [A.S. godleás; Icel. gudhlauss; Sw. gudlös.]

A. As adj.: Acknowledging no God, without sense of duty to God; impious, atheistical, irreligious.

"Equal in number to that godless crew Rebellious." Milton: P. L., vi. 49.

B. As subst.: A godless person; one without sense of duty or reverence to God.

"Mourn! where their God hath dwelt the godless dwell." Byron: Oh! Weep for Those.

godless-month, s.

Comp. Myth.: The tenth month of the Japanese year, so-called because then the lesser divinities were considered to be absent from their temples, for the purpose of paying the annual homage due to the celestial Dairi. (Tylor.) gŏd'-lĕss-lў, adv. [Eng. godless; -ly.] In a godless, impious, or irreverent manner; without fear of or reverence towards God.

gŏd'-lĕss-nĕss, s. [Eng. godless; -ness.] The quality or state of being godless, impious or irreverent.

gŏd'-līke, a. [Eng. God, and like.]

1. Like a god; having the qualities of a god; divine.

2. Possessing some of the attributes of God; godly.

"Thus the godlike angel answered mild."
Milton: P. L., vii. 110.

3. Befitting or becoming a god; divine.

"How best the mighty work he might begin
Of Saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature."
Milton: P. R., i. 188.

4. Of the highest excellence; pre-eminently good.

"The woman's cause is man's: they sink or rise Together, dwarfed or godlike, bond or free."
Tennyson: Princess, vii. 244.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between godlike, divine, and heavenly: "Godlike is a more expressive, but less common term than divine: the former is used only as an epithet of peculiar praise for an individual; divine is generally employed for that which appertains to a superior being, in distinction from that which is human. As divine is opposed to human, so is heavenly to earthly; the Divine Being distinguishes the Creator from all other beings; but a heavenly being denotes the angels or inhabitants of heaven, in distinction from earthly beings or the inhabitants of earth." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) gŏd'-līke-nĕss, s. [Eng. godlike; -ness.] The quality or state of being godlike; godliness.

gŏd'-like-wīse, adv. [Eng. godlike; -wise.] In a godlike manner.

gŏd'-lĭ-lў, god ly-lye, adv. [Eng. godly; -ly.] In a godly manner; righteously, religiously.

"A certaine young man, who liued godlylye here with vs in this cytie."—Calvine: Foure Godlye Sermons, ser. ii.

gŏd'-lĭ-nĕss, *godd-li-ness, s. [Eng. godly; -ness.] The quality or state of being godly; piety; a religious observance of the commands of God, and a careful performance of all the duties prescribed by religion.

"Bigotry, with well-dissembled fears . . .
Pretends a zeal for godliness and grace."
Cowper: Hope, 661.

gŏd'-lĭng, s. [Eng. god; dim. suff. -ling.] A little god or deity; a petty or puny deity.

"He is the patient'st godling! Do not fear him,
He would not hurt the thief that stole away
Two of his golden locks."
Massinger: Virgin Martyr, III. 2.

gŏd'-lў, a. & adv. [Eng. god; -ly.]

A. As adjective:

I. Of persons: Godfearing, pious; reverential towards God, and observant of His laws; religious, righteous, upright.

"Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men."—Ps. xii. 1.

¶ The name applied to themselves by the Parliamentary party in the civil war of the seventeenth century.

2. Of things: Influenced by a reverential love of God; conformed to God's commands; upright, righteous, religious.

"That we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life."—Book of Common Prayer; General Confession.

B. As adv.: In a godly, pious, and godfearing manner; godlily, piously, religiously.

"In this text, kinges be taught to moderate their victories, and that it is their office to see the youghth diligently & godly brought up and learned."—Joy: Exposition of Daniel, c. i.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between godly and righteous: "Godliness, in the strict sense, is that outward deportment which characterizes a heavenly temper . . . righteousness comprehends Christian morality, in distinction from that of the heathen or unbeliever; a righteous man does right, not only because it is right, but because it is agreeable to the will of his Maker, and the example of his Redeemer; righteousness is therefore to godliness as the effect to the cause." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

gŏd'-lў-hĕad, *goode-ly-hede, *goodly-hed, s. [Eng. godly; -head.]

I. Goodness.

"Mote thy goodlyhead forgive it once."
Spenser: F. Q., II. iii. 33.

2. Goodly appearance.

"Pleased with that seeming goodlyhed."
Spenser: F. Q., III. ii. 38.

gŏd'-mŏth-ĕr, *god-mo-der, *god-mo-dyr, s. [A.S. godmódor; Icel. godhmódir; Sw. gudmoder, gumor; Dan. gudmoder.] [GODFATHER.] A woman who becomes sponsor for a child in baptism. [GODFATHER.]

gō'-dŏwn (1), s. [Malay godong.] A warehouse or storeroom. (East Indies.)

gō'-dŏwn (2), s. [Eng. go, v., and down.] A draught.

gŏd'-phĕre, s. [Prob. a corrupt. of Eng. god, and Fr. père = a father.] A godfather.

"My godphere was a Rabian or a Jew."
Ben Jonson: Tale of a Tub, iv. 1.

gŏ-droŏn', s. [Fr. godron = a ruffle or a puff.]

Arch.: An inverted fluting, beading, or cabling used in various ornaments or members.

gŏd'-sĕnd, s. [Eng. god, and send.] Something sent by God; a fortunate and unlooked-for acquisition or gain.

"In fact this insignificant incident has, in the end, turned out a godsend for him."—Athenæum, April 1, 1882.

gŏd'-shĭp, s. [Eng. god; -ship.] The rank or character of a god; a deity; a divinity.

"And the hoarse deep-throated seas Laugh your godships unto scorn."
E. B. Browning: Pan is Dead.

gŏd'-sĭb, s. [A.S. God = God; sib = relative, kin; Icel. gudhsif (masc.), gudhsifja (fem.).] [GOSSIP, s.] One akin in God; one who is sponsor along with another.

"Parentile is in two maners, eyther goostly or fleshly; goostly is for to deleu with his godsibbes."—Chaucer. (ed. Tyrwhitt), p. 167.

gŏd'-sĭb-rēde, *gŏs'-sĭp-rēde, *gossyb-rede, s. [A.S. God = God; sibrædden = relation.] Relationship in God.

"More godsibrede nys ther naught."—Shoreham, p. 68.

gŏd'-smĭth, s. [Eng. god, and smith (q.v.).]

1. A smith who is a god; a divine smith.

"He had the same godsmith to forge his arms as had Achilles."—Dryden: Virgil; Æneid. (Dedic.)

2. A maker of idols.

"Gods they had of every shape and size
That godsmiths could produce or priests devise."
Dryden: Absalom & Achitophel, i. 80.

gŏd'-sŏn, *godc-son, *god-sone, *gossson, s. [A.S. godsunn; Sw. gudson, guson; Dan. gudsøn.] A male for whom one has stood sponsor in baptism.

"The King bestowed his own name on his godson."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiv.

god speed, s. A wish that "God may speed" one on a journey, in an enterprise, &c.

god-spel-book, *godd-spell-boc, *godd-spell-bock, s. [GOSPEL-BOOK]

god-spell-er, *god-spel-lere, s. [GOSPELLER.]

god-spel-wright, *godd-spell-wrihhte, s. [GOSPELWRIGHT.]

gŏd'-ward, *god-warde, *godwards, adv. [Eng. God; -ward.] Toward God.

"But their harten remayned styll faythlesse to godward, and towards his mercy and truth."—Tyndall: Workes, p. 35.

gŏd-wĭn'-ĭ-a, s. [Named, in 1869, after Mr. George Godwin, an architect.]

Bot.: A genus of Arads, with twelve stamens. Godwinia gigas is ten feet high, two of which are occupied by the oblong, purple hood-like spathe. It is from Nicaragua, and is the largest Arad known. (Treas. of Bot.)

gŏd'-wĭt, s. [A.S. gód = good; wiht = creature.]

Ornith.: A wading bird, Limosa melanura, and the genus Limosa generally. [LIMOSA.] They undergo a double moult, having red plumage when young, and then, after moulting, black with a base of white; on the wings also is a white spot. The female is larger than the male. The Godwit occurs in Britain and the rest of Europe, also in Africa and India. It rarely breeds in England. Its nest is of dry grass; the eggs four, light olive brown blotches, and spotted with darker brown.

"The Ionian godwit, nor the ginny hen
Could not goe downe my belly then More sweet than olives, that new gathered be."
B. Jonson: Horace; Praises of a Countrie Life.

gŏd'-yĕld, *gŏd'-yīeld, phrase. [Eng. god, and yield.] A phrase used in returning thanks. [GODILD.]

"Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godyeld us for your pains,
And thank us." Shakesp.: Macbeth, I. 6.

gōe, *goen, pa. par. [Go, v.]

gōel, *gool, a. [A.S. geolo.] Yellow.

"Hop roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love."
Tusser: Husbandry.

gō'-ĕr, *go-are, *go-ere, s. [Eng. go, v.; -er.]

1. One who or that which goes, runs, walks, or moves in any way; one that has a gait of any kind; especially applied, in conjunction with an adjective, to a horse: as, a fast goer; or to a watch, as a good goer.

 2. One who acts as an intermediary between two parties; a go-between.

"Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us."—Pope: To Swift.

 3. The foot.

"A double mantle, cast
Athwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac't With fitted shoes. Chapman.

 goer-backward, s. One who gives way; one who deteriorates.

"Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, followed well, would demonstrate them now
But goers-backward." Shakesp.: All's Well, I. 2.

gō-ĕr'-ĭ-ŭs, s. [Etym. doubtful. Agassiz suggests that it may be from Eng. goer Latinized, which would be a barbarous combination, and McNicoll from Gr. γοερός (goeros) = mournful, distressful.]

Entom.: A genus of beetles, family Staphylinidæ. Goerius olens, which is sometimes called the Devil's coach-horse, is now Ocypus olens.

 gō-ĕt'-ĭc, ‡ gō-ĕt'-ĭc-al,  gō-ĕt'-ĭc-all, a. [Eng. goety; c connective, -al.] Pertaining to goety; magical.

"A turning of ghospell predication unto gorticall prediction."—Gaule: Mag-Astro-Mantix; To the Reader

 gō'-ĕ-tȳ,  gō'-ĕ-tie, s. [Gr. γοητεία (goēteia) = witchcraft; γόης (gōes) = a magician, a sorcerer; Fr. goétie.] Invocation of evil spirits; magic.

"To reconcile . . . Theologie, Oeomancy, or Goetie and the Gospell."—Gaule: Mag-Astro-Mantix, p. 32.

 gofe,  golf,  goyff,  gowff,  gowcht,  gow, s. [Etym. doubtful.] The pillory; the stocks.

"Wordis falss and said in fwme, and his crag & handis to stand in the gofe."—Aberd. Reg (1538), xv., p. 141.

gō'-fẽr, v.t. [Gauffer.]

 gŏff (1), s. [Fr. goffe = ill-made, clumsy, awkward; Sp. gofo; Ital. goffo.] A stupid lout; an oaf; a dolt; a blockhead.

 gŏff (2), s. [Icel. gölf; Dut. gulv.] A stack, mow, or cock of hay.

"He was in his labour stacking up a goff of corn."—Fox, in Wood: Athen. Oxon., I. 592.

 gŏf'-fẽr, v.t. [Gauffer.] To crimp, plait, or flute, as lace, frills, &c.

"I'll have to get it all goffered over again."—Miss Ferrier: The Inheritance, ch. xxi.

gŏf'-fẽr-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Goffer.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: Goffered or ornamented plaiting, used for frills, lace, &c.

gŏf -fĭsh, a. [Goafish.]

gŏg (I), s. [Etym. doubtful.] The object set up as a mark in playing at quoits or pitch-and-toss.

"The parties stand at a little distance, and pitch the halfpenny to a mark, or gog; and he who is nearest the mark, has the envied privilege of tossing up for heads or tails."—Blackwood's Magazine, August, 1821, p. 35.

 gŏg, s. [Welsh, = activity, rapidity.] [Agog.] Anxiety, desire, eagerness.

"You have put me into such a gog of going, I would not stay for all the world."—Beaum. & Flet.: Wit Without Money, iii. 1.

 gogge, v.t. [Prob. connected with gag, v. (q.v.).] To blind, to blindfold.

"Glad was he to gogge the worlds eyes with the distinctions."—Z. Boyd: Last Battell, p. 1,208.

 gŏg'-gle (1),  go-gle, v.i. & t. [A frequent. from Ir. & Gael. gog = a nod, a slight motion; Ir. gogain = to nod or gesticulate, gogshuileach = goggle-eyed, from suil = the eye.]

A. Intrans.: To strain or roll the eyes; to stare.

"They goggle with their eyes hither and thither."—Holinshed: Description of Ireland, ch. i.

B. Trans.: To roll about, to strain.

"He goggled his eyes."—Walpole: Letters, iii. 174.

 gŏg'-gle (2), v.t. [A variant of gobble (q.v.).] To swallow; to gulp down.

"Goularde, gulped or goggled down."—Cotgrave.

gŏg'-gle, a. & s. [Goggle (1), v.]

A. As adj.: Prominent, staring, full; said of the eyes.

"Palmated feet might have been joined with goggle eyes."—Paley: Natural Theology ch. xv.

B. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A strained or staring rolling of the eyes.

"Those muscles, in English, wherewith a man ogles, When on a fair lady he fixes his goggles." Byrom: Dissection of a Beau's Head.

2. (Pl.): Tubes or glazed cases in front of the eyes for protection from dust or intense light.

3. (Pl.): Blinds or blinkers for horses that are apt to take fright, to prevent their seeing objects from behind.

4. (Pl.): Spectacles. (Slang.)

 5. A goggle-eyed person.

"Do ye stare, goggles?" Beaum. & Flet. Knight of Malta, v. 2.

II. Surg.: Instruments used to cure squinting or distortion of the eyes.

goggle-eye, s. A prominent, rolling, or staring eye; strabismus.

"It [the sea-lion] has a great goggle-eye, the teeth three inches long, about the bigness of a man's thumb."—Dampier: Voyages (an. 1683).

goggle-eyed,  gogil-ighed,  goggle-eied,  gogyl-eyed, a. Having goggle-eyes.

"Let the gogle-ied Gardiner of Winchester gyrde at it till hys rybbes ake and an hondred digging deuyls vpon his side."—Bale: English Votaries pt. i.

 gŏg'-gled (gled as gĕld), a. [Eng. goggle, v.; -ed.] Goggle, goggling, staring, prominent.

"Ugly-faced, with long black hair, goggled eyes, wide-mouthed."—Sir T. Herbert: Travels, p. 50.

 gŏg'-glĭng, pr. par. or a. [Gooole, v.] Goggle, staring, prominent.

"Such sights have they that see with goggling eyes."
Sidney: Arcadia, bk. ii.

 gŏg'-lĕt, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A sort of pottery jar or earthen vessel used for keeping water cool.

 goif, s. [Golf.]

gō'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Go, v.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

I. Walking or moving in any way.

2. In a state of active management; in operation.

"The business will be transferred to the company upon allotment as a going concern."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 26, 1881.

C. As substantive:

I. The act of walking or moving in any way.

2. A departure.

"And yet this is a wonder most of al,
Why thou thus sorrowest, seth thou wost nat yet Touching her going, how that it shal fal."
Chaucer: Troilus, bk. iv.

3. A wandering or departure from the right way.

"Compare the Pope's doctrine to the word of God, and thou shalt finde that there hath ben, and yet is a great going out of the way."—Tyndall: Workes, p. 132.

4. Procedure; course or manner of life; conduct; behaviour. (Usually in the plural.)

"His eyes are on the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings."—Job xxxiv 20.

5. A state or time of pregnancy; gestation.

"The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth: most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra.

6. The state or condition of the ground or course on which a race is run.

"Thanks to a complete system of drainage, the going was wonderfully clean for the time of year."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 23, 1883.

going-barrel, s.

Horology:

1. A barrel containing a mainspring, and having a cog-wheel on its periphery which drives the train. It supersedes the arrangement of chain and fusee.

2. A ratchet-wheel with pawl and spring on the shaft of the great wheel, by which the works are kept going while the clock is being wound up. Invented by the celebrated English watchmaker, Harrison.

 going-forth, s.

1. A departure, a setting out.

 2. A limit, a bound, a border.

"And your border shall turn . . . and the going-forth thereof shall be from the south to Kadesh-barnea."—Numbers xxxiv. 4.

3. An outlet; a means or passage of exit.

"Mark well the entering-in of the house, with every going-forth of the sanctuary."—Ezekiel xliv. 5.

going-out, s.

1. A departure or journeying.

"And Moses wrote their goings-out according to their journeys."—Numbers xxxiii. 2.

 2. An extreme point or limit; a border.

"And the border shall fetch a compass . . . and the goings-out of it shall be at the sea."—Numbers xxxiv. 6.

going-wheel, s. An arrangement invented by Huyghens to keep a clock in motion while winding.

goings-on, s. pl. Behaviour, actions, conduct. (Generally in a bad sense.)

"Pretty place it must be where they don't admit women. Nice goings-on, I daresay, Mr. Caudle."—D. Jerrold: Mrs. Caudle, lect. viii.

gŏĭ'-tẽred, gŏĭ'-tred (tred as tẽrd), a. [Eng. goitre; -ed.] Affected with, or suffering from goitre.

gŏĭ'-tre (tre as tẽr), s. [Fr. goître, from Lat. guttur = the throat.]

Pathol.: The same as Bronchocele (q.v.). It arises from a morbid enlargement of the thyroid gland, causing an unsightly, but painless, deformity. It is more common among women than among men, in the proportion of about twelve to one. It prevails chiefly, if not exclusively, in villages situated upon or close to limestone rocks. From its commonness in Derbyshire it is sometimes called Derbyshire-neck.

gŏĭ'-troŭs, a. [Fr. goîtreux.] [Goitre.]

I. Pertaining to goitre; of the nature of goitre.

2. Affected with or suffering from goitre; goitered.

 go-jon,  go-jone,  go-june, s. [Gudgeon.]

 gōke, s. [Gawk.] A stupid fellow; a clown.

 gōke, v.t. [Goke, s.] To stupefy. (Ben Jonson.) go'-kŭm-ite (o as ę), s. [From Gökum in Finland, where it occurs.]

Min.: A variety of Idocrase named by Dana Vesuvianite. Gökumite is the same as Loboite and Gahnite (q.v.).

 gōk'-ȳ, s. [Gawky.] A fool; a stupid fellow.

 gō'-la, s. [Ital., from Lat. gula = the throat.]

Arch.: A moulding, more commonly called cyma.

"In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show."—Addison: Spectator, No. 415.

gō'-lan-dâuse, s. [Hind. golandáz.] A native artilleryman. [Anglo-Indian.]

gōld, * golde, * goolde, * gowd, s. & a. [A.S. gold; cogn. with Icel. gull; Dut. goud; Sw. & Dan. guld; Ger. gold; Goth. gulth; Lat. aurum; Gr. χρυσός (chrusos); Sanse. hirana; Russ. zlato; Zend zarana, zaranya, all = gold.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II. 3.

"The proportion between the quantities of gold and silver annually imported into Europe, according to Mr. Megen's account, is as one to twenty-two nearly; that is, for one ounce of gold there are imported a little more than twenty-two ounces of silver."—Smith: Wealth of Nations, bk. i., ch. xi.

(2) Gold coin.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Money, riches, wealth.

"For me, the gold of France did not seduce."
Shakesp.: Henry V., iii. 2.

(2) Used as a symbol of anything very valuable or greatly prized; as, A beart of gold.

(3) A bright yellow colour, like that of gold.

II. Technically:

I. Chem.: A triatomic metallic element, symbol Au; atomic weight, 196; sp. gr., 19·26; melting point about 1240°, forming a green fluid which volatilizes at a higher temperature. Gold is a metal of a bright yellow colour, and was compared to the sun by the alchemists. It is very ductile; a grain of it can be drawn into a wire 500 feet long, and will gild two miles of fine silver wire. It is also very malleable; one grain can be beaten out to cover an area of 56·75 square inches. Thin gold leaf appears green by transmitted light. The red colour of ruby glass is due to metallic gold in an extreme state of division. Gold does not oxidize or tarnish in the air, and is not acted upon by oxygen or water at any temperature; it is not dissolved by sulphuric, nitric, or hydrochloric acid, but is dissolved by aqua regia, a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids. Gold crystal-llzes in cubes, octahedra, and other forms belonging to a regular system. Gold forms two series of salts, Aurous and Auric (q.v.): it has been detected in sea water. Gold is extracted from the quartz ore by pulverising it, and adding mercury containing a small quantity of sodium; the amalgam is then heated to drive off the mercury; auriferous pyrites are roasted to drive off sulphur and arsenic before they are treated with the amalgam. Gold can be purified by melting it along with borax in a clay crucible, glazed inside with borax, and passing chlorine gas through the melted metal by means of a tobacco-pipe stem; the other metals are converted into chlorides, which rise to the surface. When the operation is finished, the gold is allowed to cool, and the fused chlorides poured off. Pure gold is prepared by dissolving the metal in a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids: the solution is evaporated to get rid of the nitric acid, then diluted with water and filtered; the gold is then precipitated by ferrous sulphate. $2AuCl_3 + 6FeSO_4 = Au_2 + Fe_2Cl_6 + 2Fe_2(SO_4)_3$. Gold can be separated from silver by heating it with two and a half times its weight of concentrated sulphuric acid, sp. gr. 1·84, till no more SO_2 is given off. The alloy must not contain more than 25 per cent. of gold; if it does it must be melted with silver before the operation; the sulphuric acid attacks the silver and copper, converting them into sulphates; the gold is allowed to settle, and then the silver is precipitated by metallic copper from the decanted liquid. The presence of small quantities of tin and antimony in gold renders it brittle; they can be removed by heating the gold with ten per cent. of oxide of copper and a small quantity of borax. Pure gold is a very soft metal, therefore it is alloyed with silver, which gives it a greenish-yellow tint, or with copper, which gives it a yellowish-red color.

2. Pharm.: Gold has been used in medicine for scrofulous diseases; it appears to act like mercury. Gold terchloride is very poisonous, acting like corrosive sublimate. Gold leaf is used by dentists for filling teeth.

3. Min.: A metal crystallizing isometrically in octahedrons or dodecahedrons, as well as acicular, filiform, reticulated, arborescent, and spongiform shapes. There are four varieties, (1) Ordinary, and (2) Argentiferous Gold or Electrum, (3) Palladium Gold or Porpesite, (4) Rhodium Gold. Dana has a Gold Group of Minerals, containing (1) Gold, (2) Silver. (Dana.) It is widely diffused. Alluvial or drift workings tend to exhaust themselves, and those of the ancient world are now little worth. In the early part of the nineteenth century parts of the Ural Mountains were the most productive gold fields of the world. In September, 1847, a magnificent gold field was discovered in California. The quantity of gold found was unprecedented, while the gold was in placer deposits and easily obtained. The consequence was a rush of emigration to that region, which resulted in a rapid settlement of that state and of the Pacific coast region in general. After the practical exhaustion of the placer deposits gold was found in quartz veins in the rocks, and mining still goes actively on, though under very different conditions. A vast wealth in gold has been extracted from the rocks, and discoveries have been made in other Western States, notably in Colorado, while the new territory of Alaska has also yielded its quota. The Atlantic States have also, to some extent, been gold producing, though in a small degree as compared with those of the west. This remarkable discovery of gold in California was followed by one no less remarkable in Australia, and quite recently another important gold field has been discovered in the Transvaal region of South Africa. The annual gold product of the world is now nearly $200,000,000 and increasing.

4. Geol.: It has been found in slate, quartzite, sandstone, limestone, granite, and serpentine. In many cases it occurs in veins of quartz, but much more accessibly in drifts, which the breaking up of those quartz veins has helped to produce. In the Ural Mountains the drift is Newer Pliocene, having in it bones of the mammoth, &c.; in California it is of two different ages, but both, geologically viewed, comparatively recent; when in veins, it is more frequently found in the palæozoic than in the secondary or tertiary strata. In most cases the veins are near plutonic rocks.

5. Hist.: Gold is mentioned in the Bible as early as Gen. ii. 12. The Hebrew word is זָהָב (zahab), from זָהַב (zahab) = to shine, to be brilliant. As the names of gold in the Aryan languages (Lat. aurum, Gr. χρυσος (chrusos) differ from this, gold may perhaps not have been discovered till after the separation of the Aryan and Semitic races.

6. Coinage, Art, &c.: Gold was first coined in England in A.D. 1257. The amount of gold that passed through the English mint from 1558 (accession of Queen Elizabeth) to January 1, 1840, is 3,553,561 pounds weight, troy. The standard of gold coinage in the United States, France, and Germany is nine parts of gold to one part of alloy. The standard in England is eleven parts of gold to one part of alloy.

7. Bot.: (Of the form gold):

(1) The Turnsole (Heliotropium).

(2) The Corn Marigold (Chrysanthemum segetum).

(3) The Wild Myrtle.

(4) Calendula officinalis.

8. Archery: The exact centre of a target, so called because marked with gold, or of a gold color.

B. As adjective:

1. Made of or consisting of gold.

2. Pertaining to or connected with gold or gold coin.

"The gold withdrawal, too, helped to depress home securities."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 23, 1883.

gold-alloy, s. An alloy in which other metals are added to gold to confer hardness, as in coin, or to cheapen the product, as in some jewellers' alloys and solders.

gold-amalgam, s.

Min.: A mineral composed of mercury, 57·40; gold, 38·39; and silver, 5. It occurs in Columbia in white grains about the size of a pea, and in California in yellowish-white four-sided prisms. (Dana.) gold-beating, s. The act or trade of beating out gold for gilding.

gold-blocking, s. Pressure of an engraved or composed block upon a book-cover. Without the leaf it is called blind-blocking.

gold-bug, s. One who advocates a single (gold) monetary standard; a hoarder of gold; applied in contempt by the opposition. (U. S.) gold-carp, golden-carp, s.

Ichthy.: The same as GOLDFISH (q.v.).

* gold-clocked, a. Having the clocks of stockings worked in gold.

gold-cloth, s. Cloth of gold; cloth woven of threads of gold or interwoven with them.

Gold Coast, s.

Geog.: A part of the coast of Guinea, on the west coast of Africa.

gold-cradle, s.

Min.: An apparatus used for washing the refuse matter away from gold.

gold-cup, s.

I. Ord. Lang.: A cup, or piece of plate, made of gold, or silver gilt, given as a prize in horse-racing, rifle-shooting, and other competitions.

2. Bot. (Pl.): Various species of Ranunculus; as, R. bulbosus, R. acris, &c.

gold-currency, s.

Finance: Gold coins; Treasury notes payable in gold; a currency based upon a single (gold) standard of value, so-called. [VALUE.]

gold-cutter, s. One who prepares gold for the use of others.

gold-digger, s. A gold miner.

"Others sink a perpendicular shaft, and then put in a 'side-drive,' as the Australian gold-diggers term it."—Journ. Anthrop. Instit., x 114.

gold-digging, s.

1. The act or occupation of digging for gold; gold-mining.

2. (Pl.): The gold diggings of California were originally from placer deposits, being the silted-up beds of former rivers. Of late years they have been mainly confined to quartz rock deposits. In Australia the gold was found in the soil to the depth of several inches, or imbedded in stiff clay at a depth of 25 or 30 feet. In South Africa it is found in conglomerate deposits. In the older mines these surface deposits have long been exhausted, and mining has become much more difficult. [DIGGING.]

gold-dust, s.

I. Ord. Lang.: Gold in very fine particles.

2. Bot.: A popular name for Alyssum saxatile.

gold-embroidered, a. Embroidered with gold.

"And gold-embroidered garments, fair to see."
Byron. Childe Harold, ii. 57.

* gold-end, s. A broken piece of gold or jewellery.

Gold-end man: One who buys old gold or silver; an itinerant jeweller.

"I know him not: he looks like a gold-end man."
Ben Jonson: Alchemist, ii. 1.

gold-fever, s. A mania for digging or seeking gold.

gold-field, s. A district or region where gold is found.

"The extent of the gold-field, as at present ascertained."—Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxv. 317.

* gold-finder, s.

1. One who finds or seeks for gold.

2. One who cleans out privies or cesspools.

"Untouched it passed between his grinders, Or it had been happy for gold-finders." Swift.

gold-flower, s.

Bot.: Helichrysum Stœchas.

gold-flux, s.

Min.: Avanturine (q.v.).

gold-foil, s. A thin sheet of gold used by dentists and others.

gold-fringe, s.

Entom.: A moth, Pyralis costalis, family Pyralidæ.

gold-furnace, s. A furnace for melting or reducing gold. It resembles a brass-furnace, but is usually built above the floor, occupying one side or more of the shop, and appearing like a dwarf wall. The aperture for the fuel and crucible in each furnace is nine to sixteen inches square, and eleven to twenty inches deep. The front edge of the wall is horizontal and stands about thirty inches from the floor, but the top inclines backward at an angle of about 30°, and a ledge holds the tiles which close the tops of the furnaces. The crucibles are usually of black-lead.

gold-hammer, s.

1. A kind of hammer used by gold-beaters; a goldbeater's hammer.

2. A popular name for the Yellow-hammer (q.v.).

* gold-hewen, a. Of a gold or golden hue or color.

gold-hunter, s. One who seeks for gold.

gold-inlaid, a. Inlaid with gold.

"King Olaf smote them with the blade
Of his huge war-axe, gold inlaid."
Longfellow: Musician's Tale.

gold-knobs, gold-knoppes, s. pl.

Bot.: Various species of Ranunculus; spec., R. acris, R. bulbosus, &c.

gold-latten, s. A plate of gold or of other metal covered with gold.

gold-lily, s. The yellow lily.

"While the gold-lily blows."
Tennyson: Edward Morris, 146.

gold-lode, s.

Mining: A gold vein. (Dr. T. Sterry Hunt).

gold-mine, s.

I. Ordinary Language:

Mining: A place where gold is obtained by mining operations, as distinguished from gold-diggings, where the precious metal is extracted by sluicing or cradling.

II. Fig.: Any place containing a store of wealth either actual or mental.

gold-note, s. A note payable only in gold; spec. and colloq., a certificate of deposit issued by the United States Treasury in exchange for gold there deposited, more properly termed a gold certificate.

gold-nugget, s.
Mining, &c.: A lump of gold. One from Ballarat weighed 130 lb., taken in its natural atate from the diggings. Called also a pepito. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., x. 306.)

gold-of-pleasure, s.
Bot.: Camelina sativa, a cruciferous plant, two or three feet high, panicled above with small yellow flowers. It is occasionally found in England among flax, having been imported with the seeds. [CAMELINA.]

gold-paint, s. [GOLD-SHELL.]

gold-pen, s. A pen with a gold nib pointed with rhodium or iridium.

gold-pheasant, golden-pheasant, s.
Ornith.: Phasianus pictus. It is a gorgeous species, wild in India.

gold-plate, s. Vessels, dishes, spoons, cups, &c., made of gold.

gold-printing, s. Work printed with gold-size and the letters then covered with gold-leaf or Dutch-metal.

gold-proof, a. Proof against bribery or temptation by money.

gold-rain, s.
Pyrotechnics: Small cubes ⅛ inch square, used instead of stars for rockets, &c. Their composition is nitre, 16 parts; sulphur, 10 parts; mealed powder, 4 parts; lamp-black, 3 parts; flowers of zinc and gum arabic each 1 part; treated in the same manner as for stars.

† gold-seed, s. pl.
Bot.: Dog's-tail grass (Cynosurus cristatus).

gold-shell, s. Powdered gold, or gold-leaf, ground up with gum-water and spread on shells. It is used by artists, and is also called gold-paint.

gold-shrub, s.
Bot.: Palicourea speciosa.

gold-size, s. A size used as a surface on which to apply goldleaf. Oil gold-size is a mixture of linseed-oil or fat oil and ochre-ground by the muller, and used in oil-gilding.

gold-solder, s. A kind of solder composed of gold, 12 parts, silver 2 parts, and copper 4 parts.

gold-tail, a. (See the compound.)
Gold-tail-moth:
Entom.: A moth (Portesia auriflua), family Liparidæ. So called because the anal tuft on the abdomen is yellow. Wings white, the fore ones with a brownish-black spot.

gold-thread, s.
Bot.: Coptis trifolia, a plant belonging to the Ranunculaceæ.

gold-tissue, s. Cloth interwoven with gold thread.

gold-tooling, s.
Book-bind.: Ornaments impressed by the hot tool upon goldleaf laid on book-covers, causing the metal to adhere. In contradistinction to blind-tooling, which is the tool-mark without the leaf. The gold is fixed to the surface of the leather by gold-size, and the surplus is wiped off after the tool has been applied.

gold-varnish, s.
Metal.: A yellow, transparent varnish spread over silver-leaf to give it the appearance of gold.

gold-washer, s.
1. One who washes away the refuse dirt from gold ore, as in a cradle.
2. An apparatus or instrument employed in washing gold.

gold-washings, s.pl. Places where gold found in gravel is washed, the heavier material "puddling down." (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxviii. 298.)

gold-workings, s.pl. The same as GOLD-WORKS (q.v.). (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxxii. 36.)

gold-works, s.pl. Works for gold-mining. (Murchison: Siluria, ch. xviii.)

 gold-worm, * golde-worme, s. A glowworm.
"A golde-worme: noctiluca."—Cathol. Anglicum.

 gōld'-bēat-ĕn, a. [Eng. gold, and beaten.] Coated with gold; gilded.

gōld'-bēat-ĕr, s. [Eng. gold, and beater.] One whose trade or occupation it is to beat or hammer out gold into goldleaf for gilding. [GOLDLEAF.]

"This process achieved, it is doomed to sustain The thump after thump of a gold-beater's mallet."
Cowper: The Flatting Mill.

goldbeater's-hammer, s. A hammer with two somewhat rounded faces, used in beating the pack of alternate gold ribbon and vellum or goldleaf and skin. As the work progresses smaller hammers are used. The forging-hammer is used in reducing the ingot of gold to one-sixth of an inch thickness. The anvil is a steel block 4 × 3 inches on the face. The hammer for the first course of beating is short-handled, and weighs fifteen or sixteen pounds. The hammer for the next beating weighs ten pounds.

goldbeater's-skin, s. The prepared peritoneal membrane of the cæcum of the ox. It is used to separate the leaves of gold while under the hammer; thus it is reduced to extreme thinness, and in this state is used as an application to cuts and wounds.

"Bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's-skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

 gōld'-bŏund, a. [Eng. gold, and bound.] Bound or encircled with gold.

"Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, iv. 1.

gōld'-ĕn, * gild-ene, * gold-ene, * guld-ene, a. [A.S. gylden, from gold = gold; O. H. Ger. guldin; O. Fris. gelden; Dut. gouldeu; Icel. gullinn; Sw. gyllen, gylden; Dan. gylden; Ger. golden. Golden is now passing out of use, its place being supplied by the substantive gold used adjectively: as, a gold key, not often now a golden key.]

1. Made of gold, consisting of gold.

"He ranished apples fro the wakinge dragon: and his hande was the more heanie for the golden metall."
—Chaucer: Boecius, bk. v.

2. Of the colour or lustre of gold; yellow; gleaming or shining like gold.

"Last night the moon had a golden ring,
And to-night no moon we see!"
Longfellow: Wreck of the Hesperus.

3. Ornamented, embroidered, or inlaid with gold.

"Thy golden coat." Shakesp.: Rape of Lucrece, 208.

* 4. Abounding or rich in gold.

"The learned pate ducks to the golden fool."
Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

5. Excellent; most valuable or precious.

"Nestor's golden words."
Shakesp.: Rape of Lucrece, 1,420.

6. Most favourable.

"I have bought Golden opinions from all sorts of people."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, i. 7.

7. Most favourable or auspicious: as, a golden opportunity.

* 8. Fortunate, happy, prosperous.

"In Eliza's golden days, a knicht Came on a war-horse sumptuously attired."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vii.

¶ Obvious compounds: Golden-cinctured, golden-haired, golden-hilted, golden-netted, golden-rinded, golden-shafted, &c.

golden-age, s. The earliest period in the mythological history of almost all nations, in which those then existing were supposed to live in perfect innocence and the enjoyment of every pleasure, and when the earth produced all things necessary for their support, comfort, or enjoyment in the fullest abundance, and all animals were at peace with each other. The Egyptians believed in successive conflagrations and deluges occurring at uncertain intervals. These were designed by the gods to purify the earth from guilt. After each of these judgments man was again so regenerated as to live for a time in a state of virtue and happiness, after which degeneracy again established itself, continually gaining strength till the next catastrophe. Sir Chas. Lyell believed that the Greek and Roman notions of the golden and other ages were of Egyptian origin.

"The golden age was first, when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted Reason knew:
And, with a native bent, did good pursue."
Dryden: The Golden Age.

golden-apple, s.
Bot.: Citrus Aurantium.

golden-balls, s.pl. The three gilt balls suspended as a sign in the front of a pawnbroker's place of business. They were derived from the arms of Lombardy, Lombarda having been the first bankers and money-lenders in London.

golden-beetle, s.
Entom.: Various species of Chrysomela, or of the family Chrysomelidæ. They are so called from their metallic lustre. The colour thus reflected is generally golden-green, scarlet, azure, or blue.

† golden-bug, s.
Entom.: A beetle (Coccinella septempunctata), the Seven-spotted Ladybird.

golden-bull, s.
Hist.: A bull having a golden seal, issued by the German emperor, Charles IV. at the Diet of Nuremberg in 1356, and which became the fundamental law of the empire over which he ruled. Other bulls have also been called golden for a similar reason.

golden-carp, s. [GOLD-CARP.]

golden-chain, s.
Bot.: The Laburnum, Cytisus Laburnum.

golden-club, s.
Bot.: Orontium aquaticum, or the genus Orontium itself.

golden-crested, a. Having a crest or top-knot of gold or of a golden colour.
Golden-crested wren:
Ornith.: Regulus cristatus. A beautiful little British bird, the upper parts olive-green; the head ornamented with an orange-yellow crest, bordered with black, whence it has sometimes been called R. auricapillus; the lower parts yellowish-grey. Length about 3½ inches. It exists in flocks, often along with titmice and creepers, in firwoods, remaining all the year round.

golden-crown, s.
Bot.: Chrysostemma.

golden-cup, s.
Bot.: The same as GOLD-CUP (q.v.).

golden-eaglo, s.
Ornith.: Aquila chrysaëtos. [EAGLE.]

golden-ear, s.
Entom.: A moth, Hydræcia nictitans, family Apamidæ.

golden-eye, s.
Ornith.: Clangula, a genus of Anatidæ (Ducks).

golden-fingered, a. Having golden fingers in a figurative sense.
"Golden-fingered Ind." Marlowe. (Trench.)

golden-fleece, s.
Class. Myth.: The fleece of gold taken from the ram on which Phryxus was transported through the air to Colchis, and in quest of which the Argonauts sailed under the leadership of Jason.

JEWEL OF THE GOLDEN-FLEECE.

¶ Order of the Golden Fleece:
Her.: An order of knighthood instituted in 1429 by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy. In process of time the operation of hereditary descent brought the families of Spain and Austria into the order, which now is common to both these countries.

golden-flower, s.
Bot.: The genus Chrysanthemum.

golden-fly, s.
Entom.: Chrysis, a genus of Hymenoptera, possessed of metallic brilliance, reflected from green, ruby tint, &c.

golden-grease, s. A fee, a bribe.

golden-hair, s.
Bot.: Chrysocoma Comaurea.

golden-horde, s.
Hist.: The tribe of Mongolian Tartars, which about 1724 established itself in Southern Russia.

golden-knop, s.
Entom.: The same as GOLDEN-BUG (q.v.).

golden-legend, s. The Aurea legenda of the middle ages, a work written by James de Voragine, Archbishop of Genoa, in the end of the thirteenth century. It is a hagiology or collection of lives of saints, and descriptions and histories of festivals. A translation of it was made and printed by Caxton in A.D. 1483. Longfellow made a portion of it popular by his poem of the same name.

golden-lungwort, s.
Bot.: Hieracium aurantiacum, a composite plant, naturalized in copses in the north of England and Scotland, having escaped from the cottage gardens in which it often occurs.

golden-maid, s.
Ichthy.: Crenilabrus melops; called also the Gilthead and Connor.

golden-maiden-hair, s.
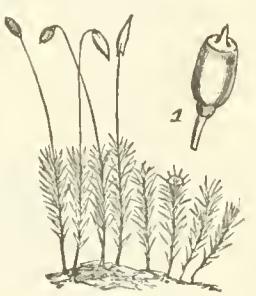
Bot.: Polytrichum commune, one of the finest British mosses, with almost woody stems and large firm leaves. It occurs on heaths and mountain tracts. It is sometimes made into brooms.



GOLDEN MAIDENHAIR.
1, Sporangium.

golden-marcasite, s. An old name for tin.

golden-mean, s.
I. Ord. Lang.: A state of competence, in which one is neither burdened with the cares of riches nor depressed by the necessities of poverty.

"Where'er he shines, oh Fortune, gild the scene,
And angels guard him in the golden-mean!"
Pope: Moral Essays, iii. 147.

II. Ethics: This term appears to have been adopted into the English language from Horace (Odes ii. 10, 5), though there the poet is speaking of worldly circumstances [I.] rather than of moral duties. We find the virtue of moderation taught in Hesiod (Works & Days (ed. Paley), 694), and Cooke renders the passage:

"Let every action prove a mean confessed
A moderation is in all the best."

Similar teaching may be found in the writings of Plato and Aristotle, and the latter lays it down in his Ethics (ii. 7) that every virtue is a mean between two vices. This teaching crystallized into the pithy Μηδὲν ἄγαν (= not too much of anything) of the Greeks, which Cicero appears to have had in view in De Officiis (i. 25) where he speaks of "that mean which sins neither by defect nor excess." Terence gave the Greek version a Latin form, Ne quid nimis (Andria, i. 1. 34), and it found expression in the Point de zèle of Talleyrand.

golden-mole, s.
Zool.: Chrysochloris aureus, one of the Talpidæ (Moles). The hairs of the fur so disperse the light as to produce metallic reflections. It occurs in Africa.

golden-mouse-ear, s.
Bot.: A composite plant, Hieracium Pilosella, called in books the Common Mouse-ear Hawkweed. [HAWKWEED, HIERACIUM.]

golden-mouthed, a.
1. Eloquent: a translation of the Gr. χρυσόστομος (chrusostomos), whence the name Chrysostom, from χρυσός (chrusos) = gold, and στόμα (stoma) = a mouth.

2. Musical, melodious.

"A cry of love that rang
As from a trumpet golden-mouthed."
A. C. Swinburne: Tristram of Lyonesse, viii.

golden-number, s.
Chron.: A number, so called from being marked in ancient calendars in letters of gold. It indicated the number of any year in the cycle of the moon. After every nineteen years the various aspects of the moon are within an hour the same as they were when the cycle commenced. This was known at an early period, and the nineteen years' lunar cycle was adopted in July 16, B.C. 433. To find the golden number of any particular year, make the accepted time of our Lord's birth B.C. 4, the first year of a cycle; add one to the year for which the golden number is required, and divide by twenty; the quotient will be the number of lunar cycles from the birth of Christ, and the remainder, if any, will be the golden number.

golden-pert, s.
Bot.: Gratiola aurea.

golden-pheasant, s.
Ornith.: [GOLD-PHEASANT].

golden-pippin, s. A species of apple, so named from its colour.

golden-robin, s.
Ornith.: The Baltimore Oriole.

golden-rod, s.
Bot.: (1) Solidago virgaurea, or the genus Solidago; (2) Leontice Chrysogonum; (3) The genus Bosea.

¶ Rayless Golden-rod is an American name for Bigelovia; Golden-rod tree, or Tree golden-rod, is Bosea Yervomora.

golden-rose, s. A rose of gold, or gilded, supposed to represent by its gold, its odour, and its balm, the Godhead, the body, and the soul of the Redeemer. It was sent at intervals by the Pope to sovereigns supposed to be more loyal than others to the Holy See. Among those sent were one to Henry VIII., in 1510; one to Frederick the Wise of Saxony, in 1519, to wean him from friendship with Luther; to Charles IX. of France, in 1572, just after the "massacre of St. Bartholomew"; one to the Queen of Spain in 1868; and more recently to Eugenie, while Empress of the French.

golden-rule, s.
*1. Arith.: A rule, so called on account of its excellent use in arithmetic, and especially in ordinary calculations, by which numbers are found in certain proportions—viz., having three numbers given to find a fourth number in proportion. (Hutton: Math. Dict.) [PROPORTION, RULE OF THREE.]

2. Morals: The rule laid down by Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount, and stated by him to be the law and the prophets,—i.e., a summary of their teaching: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them" (Matt. vii. 12). This rule, almost axiomatic to a mind of keen moral sensitiveness, had already been "examined and adopted as a standard of ethics by westerns like Socrates and easterns like Theng-tsen, the disciple and friend of Confucius, some centuries before the birth of Christ. The latter tells us Toen-kousy asked, Is there a word in the language which is of itself enough for a guide for our life? The wise man answered, There is; the word Chon, of which the meaning is that what we would should not be done to us let us not do to others." (Contemp. Review, April, 1882, p. 682.)

golden-samphire, s.
Bot.: Inula crithmoides.

golden-saxifrage, s.
Bot.: The genus Chrysosplenium.

golden-slopt, a. Wearing gold buskins.
"Some shy golden-slopt Castalio." Marston.

golden-sulphide, s. [GOLDEN-SULPHURET.]

golden-sulphuret, s. [Golden Sulphuret of Antimony.]
Golden Sulphuret of Antimony:
Chem.: Sulphur Antimonii auratum. Pentasulphide of antimony, Sb_2S_5.

golden-swift, s.
Entom.: A moth, Hepialus humuli, family Hepialidæ.

golden-teeth, s. pl. The teeth of herbivorous animals coated, as they sometimes are, with a yellow precipitate. (Rossiter.) golden-thistle, s.

Bot.: (1) Scolymus, (2) Protea Scolymus.

golden-tressed, a. Having fair or golden-coloured tresses; golden-haired; (fig.) shining with bright rays.

"And caused the golden-tressèd sun
All the day long his course to run."
Milton. Trans. of Psalm CXXXVI.

golden trumpeter, s.
Ornith.: A South American bird, the Agami (Psophia crepitans), which emits a deep rough sound, suggesting that of a trumpet. [AGAMI.]

golden-wasps, s. pl.
Entom.: One of the popular names for the hymenopterous genus Chrysis, or the family of which it is the type. They are not genuine wasps, one difference between the two being that the wasps proper have a sting, and the "golden wasps" only an ovipositor. [CHRYSIDIDÆ, CHRYSIS.]

golden-wedding, s. The fiftieth anniversary of a wedding, which is usually observed with more than ordinary festivity. The presents given to the couple should all be of gold.

golden-winged, a. Having wings of gold, or of a gold colour.

golden-Y, s.
Entom.: Plusia iota.

golden-yellow, s.
Bot., &c.: Pure yellow, duller than lemon-coloured, and bright. It corresponds to the Latin, aureus or auratus, and to the Greek χρυσός (chrusos); in Lat. and Eng. composition, chryso-. (Lindley, &c.)

* gōld'-ĕn-lȳ, adv. [Eng. golden; -ly.] Splendidly, excellently, delightfully.

"Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, i. 1.

* gōld'-ĕn-nĕss, s. [Eng. golden; -ness.] The quality or state of being golden or golden-coloured.

"It threw up its outline against the wonderful greenness, blueness, goldenness of the sky."—Mrs. Oliphant: Primrose Path, ii. 145.

gōld'-ĕr, s. [GOLADER.]

* gold-fah, * gold-faghe, a. [A.S. gold-fáh.] Golden; gold-coloured.

"Nim goldfah iwede." Layamon, iii. 262.

gōld'-finch, * gōld-fȳnch, * gold-fynche, s.
I. Literally:
Ornith.: Carduelis elegans, a well-known bird belonging to the family Fringillidæ, and the sub-family Fringillinæ. Bill pale horn coloured, the tip black, the circumference at its base crimson, nape of the neck white; the top of the head, carpal portions of the wing, the smaller wing coverts, and part of the surface of the primaries black; back and rump dusky brown, greater wing coverts, and part of the expanse of the others, gamboge yellow; under surface of the body dull white. It feeds on the seeds of thistles and other plants. It sings very sweetly. Its nest is neatly built of moss, twigs, roots, &c., and is lined with wool. It is situated in bushes, hedges, or apple or pear trees in orchards. The eggs are four or five, spotted with purple and brown. The bird is found in various parts of Britain, and is diffused over most parts of Europe.

"A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride Of painted plumes, that hopped from side to side."
Dryden: Flower & Leaf, 106.

II. Fig.: A sovereign, so called from its yellow colour. (Slang Dict.) gōld'-fĭn-nȳ, gōld-sĭn-nȳ, s. [Eng. gold, and finny. Etym. of sinny doubtful. Can it have come from the f of gold-finny, printed in old characters and misread s?] Ichthy.: Crenilabrus norwegicus or coraubicus. It is yellowish-green, darker on the back, with longitudinal lines of a deeper colour on the sides, and a black spot on each side near the base of the tail. Length, three or four inches. It is called also the Cork-wing. [GOLDSINNY.]

gōld'-fĭsh, gōld'-ẹn-fĭsh, s. [Eng. gold, golden, and fish.]

Ichthy.: Cyprinus auratus, a well-known fish, which, when mature, is of a golden-red colour, though it is nearly black when young. It is a native of China. According to Pennant, it was introduced into England from China in 1691, but did not become common till about 1723. It is now common in the United States. It is also called golden carp.

gōld'-hŏard, *gōld'-hŏrd, s. [A.S. gold-hord.] A treasure.

"Deorewurthe ouer alle goldhordes."—Ancren Riwle, p. 342.

gōld'-hŏuse, *golde-hows, s. [Eng. gold and house.] A treasury.

"The kyng to hys goldehows toke hys way."—MS., in Halliwell, p. 408.

gōld'-ĭe, s. [Eng. gold; -ie = -y.] A local name given to the goldfinch (q.v.).

gōld'-ĭ-lŏcks, gōld'-ie-lŏcks, gōld'-ỹ-lŏcks, s. [Eng. gold or goldie, and locks.]

Bot.: Various plants, or plant genera. Specially, (1) Linosyris or Chrysocoma, (2) Helichrysum Stœchas, (3) Ranunculus auricomus, (4) Hymenophyllum tunbridgense.

gōld'-ĭn̆g, s. [Eng. gold; auff. -ing.] A sort of apple.

gōld'-ĭn̆s, s. [A corrupt. of goldings (?).]

Bot.: Chrysanthemum segetum.

gŏld'-ĭsh, *gold-isshc, a. [Eng. gold; -ish.] Resembling or like gold.

"Al is not golde that shynethe goldishe hewe."
Lydgate. Minor Poems, p. 190.

gōld'-lāçe, s. [Eng. gold, and lace.] A kind of lace made of gold wire, flattened between two polished steel rollers, into a ribbon which is twisted round a core of silk.

gōld'-lāçed, a. [Eng. gold, and laced.] Ornamented or embroidered with goldlace.

gōld'-lēaf, s. [Eng gold, and leaf.] Fine gold beaten into thin leaves. A small percentage of silver and copper is added to the gold for beating, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of alloy. The ingot is rolled into a ribbon by repeated passage between rollers, and this ribbon has a thickness of $\frac{1}{360}$ of an inch, a surface of five hundred square inches to an ounce of gold. It is then cut into pieces of about an inch square, placed between pieces of goldbeater's skin four inches square, and beaten with a ponderous hammer on a smooth marble slab until the gold has thinned and expanded to the size of the vellum. Each piece of gold is then again divided into four, placed between pieces of goldbeater's skin as before, and again beaten till it expands to the size of the skin. A third and a fourth beating follow, until the gold has been reduced to the necessary degree of thinness. The hammers vary in degrees of heaviness. [GOLDBEATER'S-HAMMER.] An ounce of gold in the form of a cube, $5\frac{1}{2}$ lines in length, breadth, and thickness can be so extended by the goldbeaters as to cover a surface of more than $1466\frac{1}{2}$ square feet.

goldleaf-electroscope, s.

Elect. Mach.: An instrument for ascertaining, by means of goldleaf, the presence of electricity in a body. There is a tubular glass shade standing on a metallic foot in contact with the ground. In the tubulure of the shade, the neck of which is coated with insulating varnish, there fits a metal rod, terminating at the upper extremity in a knob, and holding at the lower end two narrow strips of goldleaf. The air in the interior is dried by quicklime or chloride of calcium. When the knob is touched with a body charged with positive or negative electricity the leaves diverge. To ascertain the kind of electricity requires a more intricate process. This instrument is also called from its inventor Bennett's Electroscope.

gōld'-lĕss, a. [Eng. gold; -less.] Destitute of gold.

gōld'-nĕy, gōld'-nỹ, s. [Eng. golden, and suff. -y (?).]

Ichthy.: The Golden Wrasse (Crenilabrus tinca). It is one of the fishes called the Gilthead (q.v.).

"The goldny of Cilicia, Chios scallops."—Davies: An Extasie, p. 94.

gōld'-sĭn-nỹ, s. [GOLDFINNY.]

¶ Jagos goldsinny: Crenilabrus rupestris. Its prevailing colour is orange, sometimes with green above. It has several times been taken in Britain.

gōld'-smĭth, *gold - smeth, *gold - smithe, *gold-smyth, s. [A.S. goldsmith; O. H. Ger. goldsmid; Dut. goudsmid; Icel. gullsmidhr; Dan. & Sw. guldsmed.]

1. An artisan who manufactures articles in gold; a worker in gold.

"I promised your presence and the chain,
But neither chain nor goldsmith came to me."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, iv. 1.

*2. A banker; one who managed the money matters of others.

goldsmith-beetle, s. An early summer beetle, very abundant in this country and so called from the beautiful golden lustre of its wings.

goldsmith's-note. s. The name given to an order to pay money on demand, similar to the modern banknote, issued by the goldsmiths or bankers of Lombard-street.

 gōld'-smĭth-rỹ, s. [Eng. goldsmith; -ry.] Goldsmith's work.

"Of goldsmithry, of browdyng, and of steel."
Chaucer: C. T., 2,498.

gōld'-stĭck, s. [Eng. gold, and stick.] A court official, so called from the gilt rod or wand borne by him when in attendance on the sovereign on state occasions.

gōld'-thrĕad, s. [Eng. gold, and thread.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A flatted, silver-gilt wire, wrapped or laid on a thread of yellow silk by twisting with a wheel or bobbins; also called gold-wire or spun-gold.

2. Bot.: Coptis trifolia, a ranunculaceous evergreen, so called from its yellow fibrous roots.

gōld'-wire, s. [Eng. gold, and wire.] Gold reduced to the form of wire. Goldwire, so called, has usually a core of silver, and is made by preparing a round bar of silver, plating it thickly with gold, and then drawing it through a series of holes of gradually decreasing diameter. The gold may be $\frac{1}{100}$ of the thickness of the silver at first, and shares all its mutations in the drawing, retaining the same relative thickness.

gōld'-ỹ-lŏcks, s. [GOLDILOCKS.]

gōld'-ỹ-lŏckcd, a. [Eng. goldy, lock (s); -ed.] Golden-haired; having a profusion of beautiful auburn hair.

"Thence it fled forth, and made quick transmigration To goldy-locked Euphorbus."
Ben Jonson: The Fox, i. 1.

 gol-ct, s. [Fr. goulet; Prov. golet, a dimin. of O. Fr. gole, goule = the throat; Lat. gula.] [GULLET.] The throat or gullet.

golf, * golf, * goiff, * gouff, s. [Dut. kolf = a club to strike balls with; cogn. with Icel. kólfr = a clapper of a bell, a bolt; kylfa = a club; Ger. kolbe = a club, a mace.]

1. A game extensively played in Scotland, and of late years introduced into America. It is played with club-headed sticks and very hard small balls, on a large common or down, technically called links, in which small holes have been made at distances of from 100 to 500 yards apart, according to the extent of the ground. The game, which may be played by two persons, or by four (two against two), consists in driving the ball into each of the holes in succession in as few strokes as possible: the side making the round, that is, placing his or their ball in each hole successively in the fewest strokes, winning the game.

"That the futball and golf be vtterly cryit downe, and not to be vsit."—Act Jas. II. (1457), c. 71.

*2. A blow, a stroke.

"She lends me a gouf, and tells me I'm douf, I'll never be like her last goodman."
A. Nicol: Poems (1739), p. 53.

golf-club, s.

1. The club used in playing golf. There are various sorts, according to the purpose for which they are intended: as, the driver, the putter, the spoon, &c.

2. A club or association formed for the practice and promotion of golfing.

 golfe, * goulfe, s. [Icel. gólf; Dut. gulv.] A mow, stack, or heap of hay, corn, &c.

golf'-ẽr, * gow-fer, s. [Eng. golf; -er.] A player at golf.

"Driving their haws frae whin or tee, There's no ane gowfer to be seen."
Ramsay: Poems, ii. 204.

golf'-ĭn̆g, s. [Eng. golf; -ing.] The act or science of playing at golf.

 Gŏl'-gŏ-thą, s. [Gr. Γολγοθᾶ (Golgotha), from Aramæan גלגלתא (Gulgulta); Heb. גֻּלְגֹּלֶת (Gulgoleth) = a skull (Luke xxiii. 33), or the place of a skull (Matt. xxvii. 33, Mark xv. 22 John xix. 17).] A charnel-house.

Gŏ'-lĭ-ard, * gol-i-ar-deis, * gol-y-ar-doys, s. [GOLIAS.]

Ch. Hist.: One of the authors of the poems bearing the name of Golias (q.v.), hence generally a writer of satirical poetry; a satirist.

"The Goliards became a kind of monkish rhapsodists, the companions and rivals of the jongleurs (the reciters of the merry and licentious fabliaux."—Milman: Latin Christianity, ix. 189.

Gŏ'-lĭ-ard-ẽr-ỹ, s. [GOLIAS.]

Ch. Hist.: The name given to the series of satirical Latin poems directed against the abuses of the Roman Church in the thirteenth century. Wright considers them to have been the immediate predecessors, and in some sense the cause, of the Crede of Piers the Ploughman and of the writings of Wycliffe, and thus to have contributed to the Reformation. From a classical standpoint, the majority of them are generally below criticism; from a moral point of view they are vigorous and healthy, though in studying them nineteenth-century readers must bear in mind the great jealousy of monastic orders which has in all ages existed amongst the secular clergy, and the tendency in minds ecclesiastical to exaggerate into grave sins what ordinary men would be inclined to consider as mere peccadilloes. With this preface, a few lines from the Invective of Golias against the Cistercians may be quoted:—

"Nil nisi præsentia sitiunt aut quærunt:
Farciunt marsupia, metunt quæ non serunt;
Pauperum penuria esse ditaverunt
Satanæ manicipia sunt et semper erunt."

Occasionally Golias seems to have relinquished his moral mission, and to have degenerated into a convivial rhymester; of this style examples may be found in Longfellow's Golden Legend (iv.), where Lucifer, disguised as a friar, finds admission to the refectory. These verses are genuine products of the late Middle Ages. A less-known example from the Confessio Goliæ runs thus:—

"Mihi nunquam spiritus poetriæ datur
Nisi tunc cum fuerit venter bene satur
Cum in arce cerebri Bacchus dominatur
In me Phœbus irruit et miranda fatur."

These poems are rhymed, but now and again there crops up evidence that the writer was capable of better things. For example, in the Prædicatio Goliæ one meets with lines like these:—

"Et ne forte cogita 'Vivam decem annis Tunc me villoribus castigabo pannis, Cum indaar vestibus Fauli vel Joannis;'" and then, by a marvellous compensation, a dainty classic gem:—

"Sic expectat rusticus, sed defluat amnis."

which, by its brilliance, almost compensates for the tawdriness of the setting.

Gŏ'-lĭ-ăs, s. [For etym. see def.]

Ch. Hist.: The name under which certain satirical poems on ecclesiastical subjects were given to the world in the thirteenth century. Many of them have been attributed to Walter de Mapes, though there is little ground for this opinion. Wright considers Golias to be a pseudonym, "apparently from gula, and having nothing in common with the French gaillard." (Latin Poems attributed to Walter de Mapes, xii.) Du Cange, in support of the opinion that Golias was a real personage, quotes Silvester Giraldus:—

"Parasitus quidam Golias nomine . . . qui Gulæ melius, quia gulæ et crapulæ per omnia deditus, dici potuit. —Speculum Ecclesiæ, lib. iv., cap. xvi.

The balance of testimony, however, inclines to the view advanced by Wright:—

"Golias, the burlesque representative of the clerical order, the instrument through which their vices were satirized."—Wright: Latin Poems attributed to Walter de Mapes, xii.

Gō-lī'-ąth, s. [Heb. גָּלְיָת (Goleath) = the celebrated giant of Gath whom David slew (1 Sam. xv. 1–54).] (For def. see compound.)

goliath-beetle, s.

Entom.: A huge lamellicorn beetle, Goliathus giganteus. It comes from the west coast of Africa. In 1805 a salesman refused £30 for a single specimen, demanding £50. He had afterwards to sell the insect for £10.

gō-lī-ăth'-ī-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. goliath(us), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of lamellicorn beetles. The chin is large, broad, and covers the jaws. [GOLIATHUS.]

gō-lī'-a-thŭs, gō-lī'-ath, s. [Goliathus is the Latinised form of Heb. goliath (q.v.).]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family. [GOLIATH-BEETLE.] The hood is deeply two-lobed, the segments resembling two horns.

go-li-one, *go-ly-on, *gu-li-on, s. [Etym. doubtful. Prob. from O. Fr. goule = the throat.] A collar.

"He . . . cast on her his gulion." Gower, ii. 358.

gŏl'-lach (ch guttural), s. [Gael. gobhlach = forked.] A name applied to the earwig, and to several species of beetle.

gŏlls, *gŏls, s. pl. [Etym. doubtful.] The hands, the paws. (Used in contempt.)

"Make them hold up their spread golls."—Ben Jonson: Poetaster, v. 1.

gŏll-shēaf, s. [Etymol. of first element doubtful; Eng. sheaf.] Apparently a sheaf of dry withered corn; hence, anything of little use or weight.

"All the rest of the articles [i.e., of accusation] were gollsheaves that went out in a sudden blaze."—Hacket: Life of Williams, pt. ii., p. 92.

go-loe-shoe, s. [GALOCHE.] A galoche; an overshoe.

gō-lŏshe', s. [GALOCHE.] An overshoe, now generally made of vulcanized india-rubber.

gōlt, s. [GAULT.]

gŏm (I), gome, *gume, s. [A.S. guma; Icel. gumi; O. S. gumo; O. H. Ger. gomo; Dut. bruidegom; Sw. brudgum; Dan. brudgom.] A man, a person. [BRIDEGROOM.]

"Havelok was a ful god gome." Havelok, 7.

Gō'-mar-ītes, s. pl. [For etym. see def.]

Ch. Hist.: The followers of Francis Gomar, who was born at Bruges on January 30, 1563, and in 1594 was appointed Professor of Divinity at Leyden, obtaining as his colleague in 1603 the celebrated Arminius. Gomar was strongly Calvinistic, and opposed the views of his associate with much zeal. When Arminius, about a year before his death, presented a remonstrance to the States-General, Gomar and his followers came out so strongly on the other side that they were called Anti-Remonstrants. Gomar was present at the Synod of Dort in 1618, and there and elsewhere was so distinctly the leader of the Calvinistic opponents of Arminius, that the Anti-Remonstrants were often called Gomarites.

gō-măsh'-ta, gō-măsh'-tah, s. [Hind. gumashta.] An agent, a factor, a commissioner. (Anglo-Indian.)

gŏm'-bō, gom-bant, s. [GOMBO.]

gome (1), s. [GOMME (1), s.]

"A gome: vbi a godmoder."—Cathol. Anglicum.

gome (2), s. [GOM (1).]

gome (3), gom (2), s. [Icel. gaumr; O. H Ger. gouma; O. Dut. goom.] Care, attention, notice.

"Thereof nemath gome."
Sir Ferumbras, 1,745.

gome (4), gomme, s. [GUM, s.]

gome (5), s. [COOM (2), s.] The black grease which accumulates on the axle of a cart-wheel.

Gŏ-mcī'-sa, s. [Corrupted Arabic (?). Cf. Arab. ghammaz = a talebearer; ghamz = making a sign with the eye; ghamzat = an amorous glance, &c.; also jamus = a buffalo; jumax ul owwal = the fifth month of the Arabian year.]

Astron.: A star, called also β Canis Minoris.

gō'-mĕr (I), s. [Sept. Gr. γομάρ (gomor); Heb. עֹמֶר (omer, homer, gomer, or ghomer). There is no consonant in English exactly corresponding to the Heb. letter ע with which the word commences. It may be pronounced gh or g or h or be left unpronounced. Gomer is therefore another spelling for homer occurring in Lev. xxvii. 16, Isa. v. 10, Ezek. xlv. 11, 14, and Hosea iii. 2, and omer found in Exod. xvi. 16–36.] [HOMER.]

gō'-mĕr (2), s. [Named after its inventor.]

Ordn.: A form of chamber in ordnance, consisting of a conical narrowing of the bore towards the inner end.

gŏm'-ĕr-īl, gŏm'-rĕll, gam-phrel, s. & a. [Etym. doubtful.]

A. As subst.: A fool, a blockhead.

"Amaist as silly as our auld daft laird here and his gomerils o' sons."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xiv.

B. As adj.: Foolish, stupid.

gom-man, s. [A contraction of godsman or goodman.] A godfather.

gomme (1), s. [An abbreviated form of gommer (q.v.).]

"Commere. A she-gossip or godmother; a gomme."—Cotgrave.

gomme (2), s. [GUM, s.]

gŏm'-mĕ-lin, s. [Fr. gommeline.]

Chem., &c.: The same as DEXTRINE (q.v.). Called also British-gum, Starch-gum, and Fruit-gum. (Spon.)

gŏm'-mĕr, s. [GAMMER.]

gŏm'-phī-a, s. [Gr. γόμφος (gomphos) = a bolt: named from the shape of the fruit.]

Bot.: A genus of Ochnaceæ. The bitter root and leaves of Gomphia angustifolia are given in Malabar in a decoction of milk or water as a tonic, stomachic, and anti-emetic. G. hexasperma and G. Jabotapita are taken as medicinal bitters in Brazil. The oil of G. parviflora is used in that country in salads. (Lindley.)

gŏm-phī-ā'-sĭs, s. [Gr. γομφίασις (gomphiasis) = toothache.]

Path.: Looseness of the molar or other teeth in their sockets.

gŏm-phō-car'-pŭs, s. [Gr. γόμφος (gomphos) = a bolt, and καρπός (karpos) = fruit.]

Bot.: A genus of Asclepiadaceæ, tribe Asclepiadeæ veræ. The leaves of Gomphocarpus fruticosus, called in Syria Argel or Arghel, are used to adulterate senna.

gŏmph-ŏç'-ĕr-ăs, s. [Gr. γόμφος (gomphos) = a bolt, and κέρας (keras) = a horn.]

Palæont.: A genus of Cephalopods, family Orthoceratidæ. There are many species from the Lower Silurian to the Carboniferous formations.

† gŏm'-phō-līte, s. [Gr. γόμφος (gomphos) = a bolt, and λίθος (lithos) = a stone.]

Petrol. & Geol.: The name given by Brongniart to conglomerate rocks of Tertiary age, called in Switzerland Nagelflue.

gŏm-phō-lō'-bĭ-ŭm, s. [G.. γόμφος (gomphos) = a bolt, and λοβάς (lobos) = (1) the lobe of the ear; (2) a legume.]

Bot.: A genus of papilionaceous plants, tribe Podalyrieæ. Stamens ten, free—i.e., not united into two bundles. About thirty species are known, all from Australia. Gompholobium uncinatum is said to be poisonous to sheep.

gŏmph-ō-nē'-ma, s. [Gr. γόμφος (gomphos) = a bolt, and νῆμα (nema) = that which is spun, yarn.]

Bot.: A genus of Diatomaceæ. Kützing enumerated thirty species, twelve of which are stated by Smith to be British. Gomphonema Berkeleii is common in spring in brooks, occurring as cushion-like gelatinous masses adhering to stones.

gŏm-phō'-sĭs, s. [Gr. γόμφωσις (gomphōsis) = (1) a bolting together; (2) see definition.]

Anat.: A kind of articulation or impaction by which the roots of teeth are implanted in their sockets. Quain considers that this should not be reckoned among the articulations.

gŏm-phrē'-na, s. [Altered from Lat. gromphæna = a kind of amaranth, probably Amaranthus tricolor.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the Gomphreneæ (q.v.) The species are called, from the rotundity of their flowers, Globe Amarantha. About four have been introduced into Britain. The best-known is Gomphrena globosa. If its heads of flowers are gathered before they are too far advanced, they will retain their beauty for years. G. officinalis and G. macrocephala are used in Brazil in intermittent fever, colic, diarrhœa, &c. Their root is considered a stimulating tonic.

gŏm-phrē'-nĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gomphren(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -æ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Amaranthaceæ.

gŏ-mû'-tĭ, gŏ-mû'-tō, s. [Malayan.]

1. Bot.: The Areng Palm, Saguerus saccharifer, common in the southern Asiatic islands.

2. Comm.: The same as GOMUTI-FIBRE (q.v.)

gomuti fibre, s.

Comm.: The fibre of the Gomuti, or Areng. It is derived from the -leaf-stalks which it surrounds, is black, and like horsehair. It is used for cordage, for thatching, &c. It is called also Ejoo.

gŏn'-a-gra, s. [Gr. γονάγρα (gonagra), see def., from γόνυ (gonu) = the knee, and ἄγρα (agra) = a catching.]

Pathol.: The name given by the old Greek physicians to gout in the knee. (Parr, Tanner, &c.)

gŏn-a'-kĭe, s. [An African word.]

Bot.: Acacia Adansonii. It yields good timber.

gon, v.t. [GO, v.]

gon, pret. & pa. par. [GO, v.]

gō-năn'-gĭ-ŭm, s. [Gr. γόνος (gonos) = offspring, seed, and ἀγγεῖον (anggeion) = a vessel.]

Zool.: The chitinous receptacle in which the reproductive buds of certain hydrozoa are produced.

gŏn'-dō-la, *gon-dole, *gun-da-loe, s. [Ital. dimin. of gonda = a boat; from Gr. κάνδυ (kondu) = a drinking-vessel, from the shape.]

I. A Venetian pleasure boat. A gondola of middle size is thirty feet long, four feet beam, and is rowed by one man standing at the stern and using one oar. It has a well-furnished cabin amidships, and is painted black. The stem and stern rise in pointed elevations, the former being surmounted by the ferro, a bright iron cleaver.

GONDOLA.

"Didst ever see a Gondola? For fear
You should not, I'll describe it you exactly:
'Tis a long covered boat that's common here,
Carved at the prow, built lightly, but compactly;
Rowed by two rowers, each called Gondolier,
It glides along the water looking blackly,
Just like a coffin clapt in a canoe,
Where none can make out what you say or do."
Byron: Beppo, 19.

2. A flat-bottomed boat for carrying produce and goods. (American.)

3. A railway-platform car, with low or no sides. (American.)

 gŏn'-dō-lĕt, s. [A dimin. from gondola (q.v.).] A little gondola. (Moore.) gŏn'-dō-lĭer, *gun-de-lier, s. [Ital. gondoliere.] A man that rows a gondola.

"Startled at the sound, I sprang upon my feet, while the gondolier, letting slip his single oar, lost it in the pitchy darkness beyond a chance of recovery."—E. A. Poe: The Assignation.

gone, * gon, pa. par. & a. [GO, v.]

A. As pa. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

I. Ordinary Language.

1. Departed, moved, or started away.

2. Dead, departed, deceased.

"A dog, that has his nose held in the vapour, loses all signs of life; but carried into the air, or thrown into a lake, recovers, if not quite gone."—Addison: On Italy.

3. Departed; lost.

"Speech is confined to the living, and imparted to only those that are in presence, and is transient and gone."—Holder: On the Classics.

4. Ruined, undone.

"He must know 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else."—Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iv 3.

5. Advanced; forward in progress.

"I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

II. Archery: Applied to an arrow shot beyond the mark.

• gon-el, s. [O. Fr. gonelle, gonele; Prov. gonel, gonella; Ital. gonnella, from O. Fr. gone, Prov. gona, Ital. gonna, Low Lat. guna, gunna, Gael. gùn, Wel. gwn = a gown (q.v.).] A mantle, a cloak.

gŏne′-nĕss, s. A sense of faintness; a feeling of being overcome. (U. S. Colloq.)

gŏn-ĕp′-tĕr-ўx, s. [Gr. γωνία (gōnia) = a corner, an angle, or γόνυ (gonu) = a knee, and πτέρυξ (pterux) = a wing.]

Entom.: A genus of butterflies, family Papilionidæ, sub-family Pieridi. Gonepteryx rhamni is the Brimstone Butterfly. Its wings have an angular projection [etym.), and are brimstone-coloured. Expansion of wings about 2½ inches. It is common in the south of England, but does not extend to Scotland, for its caterpillar feeds on the Common Buckthorn (Rhamnus catharticus) which does not grow there. It is velvety-looking, dark green, with a pale line on each side. (Stainton, &c.)

gon′-fa-lŏn, gon′-fa-nŏn, * gof-fa-noun, * gon-fa-noun, * gon-fa-nun, * gon-fay-noun, * gon-fe-noun, * goun-fa-noun, * gun-fa-noun, * gun-fan-un, s. [O. Fr. gunfanan, gonfanon; Fr. gonfalon; Sp. confulon; Ital. gonfalone, from M.H.Ger. gunfano = a battle standard, from gunt, gund = battle, and fano, vano (Ger. fahne)=a banner.]

GONFALON.

A small flag attached to the pole of a lance. It differed from a banner in this respect, that, instead of being square, and fastened to a transaure bar, the gonfalon, though of the same figure, was fixed in a frame made to turn like a modern ship's vane, with two or three streamers or tails. The object of the gonfanon was principally to render great people more conspicuous to their followers, and to terrify the horses of their adversaries.

"Standards and gonfalons 'twixt van and rear Stream in the air." Milton: P. L., v. 589.

gon-fa-lŏn-ïer′, s. [Ital. gonfaloniere.] A standard-bearer; the person entrusted with the public gonfalon in medieval Italian cities.

"Was not the rotation, too, provided for by the annual election of her gonfalonier."—Bp. Wren: Monarchy Asserted, ch. x. (1659).

• gong (1), • gonge, • goonge, s. [A.S. gang = a going, a passage, a privy.] [Gang.]

1. Going, motion.

"Honden hutes felinge, fet bute gonge"
Legend of St. Katharine, 492.

2. A privy, a jakes, a house of office.

"As he com bi a gong Amidde the pit he hit elong."
Seven Sages, 1,315.

3. A pit.

"In helle gonge to ly on grounde."
Coventry Mysteries, p. 345.

• gong-farmer, s. A night man; a cleaner of privies or cesspools.

• gong-house, • gong-huse, s. A privy, a house of office.

• gong-man, • gang-man, s. A gong-farmer.

gong (2), s. [Malay agáng, góng = a gong.]

• I. (See extract.)

"There is one that strikes on a small gong, or a wooden instrument, before every stroke of the oar, then the rowers answer all at once with a sort of a hollow noise, through the throat, and a stamp on the deck with one foot, and immediately plunge their oars into the water. Thus the gong and the rowers alternately answer each other, making a sound that seems very pleasant and warlike to those who are at a small distance on the water or shoar."—Dampier: Voyage, Tonquin (an. 1688).

2. A musical instrument used principally in the East. It is tambourine-shaped, a disc of thin bronze with an upturned flange forming a rim. The metal consists of seventy-eight parts copper, twenty-two parts tin. The bronze is of such proportions as to be naturally brittle when cast. Gongs are beaten with a padded drum-stick, and are used in the East for making signals, and adding intensity to the clangor of martial music. In many modern residences gongs have replaced dinner-bells. The gong has no distinct or appreciable note, but gives out a sound consisting of a combination of harmonics.

"And loud, amid the universal clamour, O'er distant deserts sounds the Tartar gong."
Longfellow: Arsenal at Springfield.

3. A stationary bell whose tongue is moved by a wire or string. Commonly used as an alarm or call-bell on steamers.

gong-gong, s. A gong.

gong-metal, s. The metal of which gongs are made.

gŏn′-gŏn-ha, s. [A Brazilian word.]

Bot.: A kind of holly, Ilex Gongonha, used in Brazil for making tea. It is a diuretic and diaphoretic.

gŏn-gör′-a, s. [Named after Antony Caballero y Góngora, formerly Viceroy of New Granada.]

Bot.: A fine genus of orchids, tribe Vandeæ. They have lance-shaped leaves more than a foot long, and drooping flower racemes two feet. About twelve species are known. They grow on stems in tropical America. Eight have been introduced into British greenhouses.

gŏn′-ġўl-īte, s. [Gr. γογγύλος (gonggulos) = round, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A yellowish or yellowish-brown variety of Agalmatolite, from Finland.

gŏn-gўl-ō-spĕr′-mē-æ, s. pl. [Gr. γογγύλος (gongulos) = round, σπέρμα (sperma) = seed, and Lat. pl. fem. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A collection of rose-spored Algæ. The spores are collected without order in a mucous or membranaceous mother-cell. The nucleus is sometimes compound.

gŏn′-ġўl-lŭs (pl. gŏn′-ġў-lī), s. [Gr. γογγύλος (gongulos) = round.]

Botany:

1. A spore of certain fungals.

2. A round, hard, deciduous body connected with the reproduction of certain sea-weeds.

3. One of the granules contained in the shields of certain lichens.

gō-nĭ-ăs′-tĕr, s. [Gr. γωνία (gōnia) = an angle, and ἀστήρ (astēr) = a star.]

1. Zool.: A genus of Echinoderms, order Asteroidea.

2. Palæont.: It came into existence at least as early as the Jurassic period.

gō′-nĭ-a-tīte, gō-nī-a-tī′-tēs, s. [As if from a Mod. Lat. term goniatus. Gr. γωνία (gōnia) = an angle, and suff. -ίτης (ītēs), or t may be euphonic.]

Palæontology, Geology, &c.:

1. (Of the form goniatites): A genus of Ammonitidæ. It has a discoidal shell, lobed sutures, and the siphuncle dorsal. Known species 197, from the Upper Silurian to the Trias.

2. (Of the form goniatite): The English name for any species of the genus Goniatites (q.v.).

gō-nĭ-a-tĭt′-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. goniatit(es), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Palæont.: A family of Cephalopods. Mr. S. Woodward does not recognise it, but leaves goniatites in the Ammonitidæ.

gō-nĭd′-ĭ-a, s. pl. [Gr. γωνίδια (gōnidia), pl. of γωνίδιον (gōnidion) = a small corner or angle, dimin. of γωνία (gōnia) = a corner, an angle.]

Bot.: The green spherical cells which exist in the thallus of lichens, and distinguish them from fungals. They are of various forms; they produce zoospores.

gō-nĭd′-ĭ-al, a. [Gr. γωνίδια (gōnidia) [Gonidia], and Eng. adj. suff. -al.]

Bot.: Of or belonging to Gonidia.

gonidial-layer, s.

Bot.: A layer or zone of variable thickness, constituted by gonidia at the place where the cortex and medulla meet in the thallus of a lichen. (Thomé.)

gō-nĭ-ŏm′-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Gr. γωνία (gōnia) = a corner, an angle, and μέτρον (metron) = a measure.]

Min. & Mach.: An instrument for measuring angles, and specially those of crystals. There are two forms of it, the common and the reflecting goniometer. The former was invented by Carangeau. Its principle is the movements of a movable arm constituting the radius of a graduated semicircle. It is best adapted to take the angles of a crystal free from the gangue, and even then is not very precise in its indications. It is now rarely if ever used.

The reflecting goniometer is founded on the reflecting power of the polish on the natural planes or fracture surfaces of minerals. In the figure a b is the principal circle graduated on one edge to half degrees, and divided for convenience into two parts of 180° each; c is a brass plate screwed upon and supported by the pillar d, and graduated as a vernier; f is the axle of the circle a b, and passes through the upper parts of the two pillars d e, the other ends of which are inserted into a wooden base m; g h is an axle enclosed within f, and turned by means of the smallest circle i, which communicates a motion to all the apparatus on the left of h, without moving the principal circle a b; k is a circle to which is attached the axle of the principal circle. Whenever a crystal is to be measured, it is attached by means of wax to one end of a plate of brass, n, the other end of the plate being placed in a slit in the upper part of the circular brass stem o, which passes through the tube p, to which it is so adjusted as to allow of being moved either up or down, or circularly by means of the circle q. The tube p is fixed to the curved brass plate r, which is attached, but so as to allow of motion, to another curved plate s, by means of a pin t; the other end of the latter plate being connected with the concealed axle g h, to which a motion is given by turning the half circle i. The stem o, which may be raised or depressed at pleasure, should be used to place the crystal as nearly as possible on a line with the inner axle. Let it now be supposed that the instrument is placed from eight to twenty feet distant from a window. Let a black line v be drawn on the wainscot between the window and the floor, and perfectly parallel with the horizontal base of the window. If then the eye be placed almost close to the crystal l, a reflection of one of the bars will be seen on one of its planes. Adjust it till it is parallel with the black line v, the crystal is then turned by turning the little circle i, until the reflection of the same bar is seen on the next plane perfectly on a line with and upon the black line v. Both reflections being kept accurate, it is next needful, by means of the circle k, to turn the principal circle until it is arrested by the stop x or the pillar d; it will then be found that 180°, or the principal circle, coincides with o on the vernier. If the circle k be then turned with the eye close to the cryatals till the reflection of the same bar is seen on the adjoining plane precisely upon the black line v, the distance moved by the principal circle will indicate in degrees the angle of the crystal. The small crystals of bodies are generally more regular than the larger ones, and a surface of $\frac{1}{1000}$ part of an inch in length if perfect and brilliant will be sufficiently large to be accurately measured by the reflecting goniometer. (W. Phillips.)

GONIOMETER.

gō-nĭ-ō-mĕt'-rĭc, gō-nĭ-ō-mĕt'-rĭ-cal, a. [Eng. goniometr(y); -ic, -ical.] Pertaining to goniometry or goniometers; measured by a goniometer.

gō-nĭ-ŏm'-ĕ-trў, s. [Gr. γωνία (gōnia) = an angle, and μέτρον (metron) = a measure; Fr. goniométrie.] The art or science of measuring solid angles.

gō-nĭ-ŏph'-ō-lĭs, s. [Gr. γωνία (gōnia) = a corner, an angle; and φολίς (pholis) = a horny scale of a reptile, in reference to the rectangular form, size, number, and firm junction of the osseous scales. (Owen.)]

Paleont.: A genus of fossil crocodiles, placed by Sir Richard Owen under his suborder Amphicœlia, and by Professor Huxley doubtfully under that which he terms Mesosuchia. The remains on which the genus was founded were found in 1835 in a quarry near Swanage, and Mr. Robert Trotter purchased them for Dr. Mantell. They are now in the British Museum. The species is Goniopholis crassidens, sometimes called the Swanage Crocodile. (Mantell, Owen, &c.).

* gonne, s. [Gun.]

* gonne, v.i. [Go, v.]

* gonn-en, * gonna, pret. of v. [Go.]

gō-nō-blas-tĭd'-ĭ-ŏn (pl. gō-nō-blas-tĭd'-ĭ-ą), s. [Gr. γόνος (gonos) = that which is begotten, a child, also seed, &c.; and diminu. of βλαστός (blastos) = a sprout.]

Zool. (Pl.): Special processes from the body-wall, or cœnosarc, of Hydractinia, Dicoryne and other Corynida. They are atrophied, or undeveloped, polypites, differing from perfect ones in being usually destitute of a mouth and in having shorter tentacles. They carry the reproductive receptacles or gonophores in certain hydrozoa. Allman calls them Blastostyles.

gō-nō-căl'-ў-çĭne, a. [Mod. Lat. gonocalyx (genit. gonocalycis) [Gonocalyx]; suff. -ine.] Zool.: Of or belonging to a gonocalyx.

"Disguised medusoids, in which there is a central manubrial process and a rudimentary system of gonocalycine canals."—Nicholson: Zool. (5th ed.), p. 110.

gō-nō-cā'-lўx, s. [Gr. γόνος (gonos) = a child, and Lat. calyx; Gr. κάλυξ (kalux) = a covering.]

Zool.: A bell-shaped disc, attached by the base to the parent organism in the Corynida, the swimming-bell in a medusiform gonophore, or the same structure in a gonophore which is not detached. (Nicholson.)

* gon-of, * gon-oph, s. [A corrupt. of gone-off.] A thief, a pickpocket.

gō-nō-lō'-bĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gonolob(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -æ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Asclepiadaceæ.

gō-nŏl'-ō-bŭs, s. [Gr. γωνία (gōnia) = angle, and λοβός (lobos) = a pod. Named from the angular pods.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gonolobeæ. It consists of twining or shrubby plants of the United States and other parts of North America. Some species have been cultivated. It has racemes, or corymbs, of greenish or dingy purple flowers. About sixty species are known. The juice of Gonolobus macrophyllus is said to be used by the North American Indians to poison their arrows.

gŏn'-ō-phŏre, gō-nŏph'-ō-rŭm, s. [Gr. γονος (gonos) = seed, and φορός (phoros) = bearing.]

1. Bot.: A short stalk which bears the stamena and carpels in such plants as Anonada.

2. Zool.: The name given by Prof. Allman to the bud or sac containing the reproductive elements in the Corynida and other hydrozoa. It is used whether the buds become detached or not.

gō-nō-plā'-çĭ-ąnş, s. pl. [Gonoplax.]

Zool.: The English name for the Gonoplacidæ (q.v.).

gō-nō-plā'-çĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gonoplax, genit. gonoplac(is); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of brachyurous Crustaceans having the carapace either square or rhomboidal, and much broader than it is long. Milne Edwards places it between the Ocypodiana and the Grapsoidians.

gō'-nō-plăx, s. [Gr. γόνυ (gonu) = the knee, and φλαξ (plax) = anything flat.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Gonoplacidæ (q.v.). Gonoplax angulata, or angulatus, is found in Britain.

gō-nŏp'-tĕr-ą, s. [Gr. γόνυ (gonu) = the knee, or γωνία (gōnia) = an angle, and πτερά (ptera), pl. of πτερόν (pteron) = a feather, a wing.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Gonopteridæ (q.v.). Only British species, Gonoptera libatrix.

gō-nŏp-tĕr'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gonopter(a) (q.v.)., and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of moths, group Noctuina. British species only one. [Gonoptera.]

gŏn-ōr-rhœ'-ą, s. [Lat., from Gr. γονόῤῥοια (gonorrhoia) (Galen): γόνος (gonos) = seed, and ῥέω (rheō) = to flow. The etymology does not name the disease accurately. (See def.).]

Pathol.: A specific disease, chiefly affecting the urethra, but sometimes also other mucous surfaces, accompanied by inflammation and muco-purulent discharge; in the chronic form it is termed gleet, the discharge then being thinner, sometimes lasting for months, or even years.

gō-nō-sō'-me, s. [Gr. γόνος (gonos) = offspring, seed, and σῶμα (sōma) = the body.]

Zool.: The name applied by Prof. Allman to the reproductive zoöids of a hydrozoon taken collectively.

gō-nō-thē'-cą, s. [Gr. γόνος (gonos) = offspring, seed, and Lat. theca; Gr. θήκη (thēkē) = a box or chest.]

Zool.: The chitinous receptacle within which the gonophores of certain hydrozoa are produced. The same as Gonangeŭm (q.v.).

gŏ'-nўş, s. (Gr. gonu = the knee.]

Ornith.: The keel or ridge of the lower mandible in the bill of a bird.

good, * god, * gode, * goud, * guod, * gud, * guid, * gude, a., adv., interj., & s. [A.S. gōd; cogn. with Dut. goed; Icel. góðhr; Dan. god; Goth. gods; Sw. god; Ger. gut; O. H. Ger. guot; O. Fris. and O. S. god.]

A. As adjective:

1. Having such physical qualities as are useful, proper, expected, or desired; not bad; not ill; worthy of praise.

"God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good."—Genesis i. 31.

2. Fit, proper, convenient, useful.

"A universe of death! which God by curse Created evil; for evil only good."
Milton: P. L., ii. 622.

3. Fit, adapted, useful; capable of being used or employed. (Followed by for.)

"All quality, that is good for anything, is originally founded upon merit."—Collier: On Envy.

4. Wholesome, proper, useful.

"The water of Nilus is sweeter than other waters in taste, and it is excellent good for the stone and hypochondriack melancholy."—Bacon: Nat. Hist., § 767.

5. Proper, right.

"In government it is good to use men of one rank equally."—Bacon: Essays; Of Followers & Friends.

6. Conducive to happiness.

"It is not good that man should be alone."—Genesis ii. 18.

7. Kind, benevolent, merciful, gracious, bountiful.

"Upon the man of Thy right hand Let thy good hand be laid."
Milton: Trans. of Psalm lxxx.

8. Friendly, kind, gracious. (Followed by to or unto.)

"The men were very good unto us."—1 Samuel xxv. 15.

9. Uncorrupted, undamaged, uninjured, without deterioration.

"He also bartered away plums, that would have rotted in a week, for nuts, that would last good for his eating a whole year."—Locke.

10. Pleasant to the taste, agreeable.

"Eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet."—Proverbs xxiv. 13.

11. Pleasant, agreeable, advantageous.

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."—Psalm cxxxiii. 1.

12. Possessed of moral excellence or virtue; worthy, upright, virtuous, righteous, religious, pious.

"For a good man some would even dare to die."—Romans v. 7.

13. Trustworthy, genuine.

"He is neither a good Irishman nor a good Frenchman."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

14. Honourable, noble, distinguished; as, He comes of a good family.

15. Not blemished or impeached; as, a good name.

"Moreover, he must have a good report of those which are without."—1 Timothy iii. 7.

* 16. Of credit, rich, able to fulfil engagements; solvent.

"Antonio is a good man: my meaning in saying that he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient."—Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 3.

¶ Only used now with for, as, He is good for any amount.

17. Companionable, sociable, jovial, merry.

"Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well."—Clarendon.

18. Worthy; used as an address of respect; as, good sir, good people.

19. It is used as an epithet of slight contempt or pity.

20. Hearty; earnest.

"The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it."—Temple.

21. Real; serious; genuine; not feigned.

"Love not in good earnest, nor no farther in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, i. 2.

22. Sound; not false; not fallacious; well-founded.

"He is resolved now to show how slight the propositions were which Luther let go for good."—Atterbury.

23. Adequate; weighty.

"My reasons are both good and weighty."—Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, i. 1.

24. Confirmed; attested; proved.

25. Legal; valid.

"If they had held their royalties by that title, either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family had been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty, as these."—Locke.

26. Skilful; dexterous; clever; ready; quick: as, a good workman.

"Art thou good at these kickshaws?"—Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, i. 3.

27. Cheerful; gay; of good heart or spirit

"Be of good comfort."—Matthew ix. 22.

28. Fruitful; fertile.

"And other [seed] fell on good ground, and sprang up and bare fruit an hundredfold."—Luke viii. 8.

29. Abundant, rich.

"Good pasture makes fat sheep."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, iii. 2.

30. Elegant; delicate; courteous; polite: as, He is a man of good breeding.

31. Correct, grammatical, according to rules: as, That is not good English.

32. Considerable; not small or little, though not very great.

"We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthly particles, so as many of them might float in the air a good while, like exhalations, before they fell down."—Burnet: Theory of the Earth.

33. Full; complete; not deficient.

"Good measure, pressed down, and running over, shall men give into your bosom."—Luke vi. 38.

34. That may or can be recovered; safe; secure: as, good debts.

35. It is used simply to raise or strengthen the force or meaning of a word: as, in good faith, in good sooth.

¶ Good is largely used in greeting and leave-taking: as, good day, good morning, &c.

B. As adv.: Well; not ill.

C. As interj.: Well! right! used in answer to a remark or suggestion.

"Ay, Hamlet, good?" Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 3.

D. As substantive:

1. Anything which contributes to happiness, benefit, advantage, pleasure, or convenience; that which is right, convenient, useful, serviceable, advantageous, benevolent, &c.; an advantage, a benefit.

"Out of our evil seek to bring forth good."
Milton: P. L., i. 164.

2. An upright, honourable, or religious man.

"All the virtues that attend the good."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., v. 2.

3. Welfare; prosperity; advantage; advancement; interest.

"No less importing than our general good."
Shakesp.: Richard III., iii. 7.

4. A valuable possession or piece of property; worldly possessions, as wares, merchandise, commodities, chattels, effects, &c. (Almost always in the plural.)

"All thy goods are confiscate."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.

* 5. Goodness, good qualities, virtuous and charitable deeds.

"If all these petty ills shall change thy good."
Shakesp.: Rape of Lucrece, 656.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between good and goodness: "Good and goodness are abstract terms, drawn from the same word: the former to denote the thing that is good, the latter the inherent good property of a thing. The good we do is determined by the tendency of the action; but our goodness in doing it is determined by the motive of our actions."

(2) He thus discriminates between good, benefit, and advantage: "Good is an abstract universal term, which in its unlimited sense comprehends everything that can be conceived of, as suited in all its parts to the end proposed. In this sense benefit and advantage, as well as utility, service, profit, &c., are all modifications of good. Good is mostly employed for some positive and direct good; advantage for an adventitious and indirect good: the good is that which would be good to all; the advantage is that which is partially good, or good only in particular cases."

(3) He thus discriminates between goods, chattels, furniture, movables, and effects: "In the strict sense goods comprehends more than furniture, including not only that which is adapted for the domestic purposes of a family, but also every thing which is of value to a person: the chairs and tables are a part of furniture; papers, books, and money, are included among the goods. The term chattels comprehends that species of goods which is in a special manner separated from one's person and house; a man's cattle, his implements of husbandry, the alienable rights which he has in land or buildings, are all comprehended under chattels: hence the propriety of the expression to seize a man's goods and chattels, as denoting the disposable property which he has about his person or at a distance. Movables comprehends all the other terms in the limited application to property, as far as it admits of being removed from one place to another. Effects is a term of nearly as extensive a signification as goods, but not so extensive an application: whatever a man has that is of any supposed value, or convertible into money, is entitled his goods; whatever a man has that can effect, produce, or bring forth money by sale, is entitled his effects." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

(4) For the difference between goods and commodity, see COMMODITY.

¶ 1. As good: Equally well.

"Was I to have never parted from thy side,
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib."
Milton: P. L., ix. 1,154.

2. As good as: Equally; no better than; the same as.

"Being many times as good as in possession of the victory."—Knolles: Hist. of the Turkes.

3. For good, for good and all: Completely; entirely; finally.

"The good woman never died after this, 'till she came to die for good and all."—L'Estrange: Fables.

4. Good sooth, in good sooth: In very truth; really; most assuredly.

"They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, ii. 6.

5. In good time:

(1) Ord. Lang.: In proper time; opportunely; not too soon or too late.

(2) Music: Correctly, in proper time.

6. Good for nothing:

(1) As adj.: Useless, worthless.

"A good-for-nothing fellow."—Bailey: Erasmus, p. 187.

(2) As subst.: An idle fellow, a vagabond.

"My father always said I was born to be a good-for-nothing."—Lytton: Godolphin, bk. iii., ch. iii.

7. Good heed: Great care, heed or caution.

8. To be in or get into one's good graces: To be in favour with.

"Having contrived to get into the good graces of the buxom widow."—Dickens: Pickwick, ch. xiv.

9. To do one a good turn: To do a kindness to one.

10. To hold good:

(1) To be valid, firm, or sure: as, This word holds good.

(2) To remain in force or effect: as, The rule holds good.

11. To make good:

(1) To repair; to replace: as, To make good damage.

(2) To indemnify; to give an equivalent for: as, To make good any loss.

(3) To confirm; to establish; to prove; to verify: as, To make good a charge.

"Each word made good and true."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, i. 2.

(4) To carry out, to perform; to fulfil; to carry into effect.

"Of no power to make his wishes good."
Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, i. 2.

(5) To carry out safely: as, To make good one's escape.

(6) To supply a deficiency; to make up a defect.

"Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another."—L'Estrange: Fables.

(7) To maintain; to secure.

"Convenient numbers to make good the city."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, i. 5.

* (8) To prove to be blameless; to clear.

"I say good queen,
And would by combat make her good."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, ii. 3.

12. To stand good: To be firm or valid; to hold good.

13. To think good: To consider good, advisable, or expedient.

"If ye think good, give me my price."—Zechariah xi. 12.

* good-bodied, a. Having a good figure.

"A pretty good-bodied woman."—Pepys: Diary, May 31, 1666.

good-breeding, s. Polite manners formed by a good education; the manners of a gentleman.

"So eminently distinguished by good humour and good breeding."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

good-bye, good-by, phr. (A contraction of God be with ye.) A form of salutation at parting; farewell.

* good-conceited, a. Well-devised, fanciful.

"First, a very excellent good-conceited thing."—Shakesp.: Cymbeline, ii. 3.

* good-conditioned, a. Having good qualities or symptoms; free from any ill symptoms.

"No surgeon dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned."—Sharp.

good-consideration, s.
Law: (See extract.)

"A good-consideration is that of blood or natural affection between near relations; the satisfaction accruing from which, the law esteems an equivalent for whatever benefit may move from one relation to another."—Blackstone: Commentary, bk. ii., ch. 26.

good-day, s. or interj. A form of salutation at meeting or parting.

* good-deed, adv. In very deed; in truth; assuredly.

"Yet good-deed, Leontes, I love thee."—Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, i. 2.

good-e'en, good-even, good-evening, s. or interj. A kind wish or salutation in the evening.

* good-faced, a. Having a handsome face; pretty.

"No, good-faced sir; no, sweet sir."—Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iv. 2.

good-fellow, s. A person of a good, easy nature; a genial, sociable person.

* good-fellow, v.t. To make a companion of; to treat or salute as a good fellow.

"Let me rather be disliked for not being a beast than be good-fellowed with a hug for being one."—Feltham.

good-followship, s. Sociableness, companionableness.

"Oh, to the club, the scenes of savage joys
The school of coarse good-fellowship and noise."
Cowper: Conversation, 422.

good-folk, s. pl. A popular euphemistic name for the fairies; also called good people or good neighbours. [GOODMAN, 5.]

Good Friday, s.

1. Calendar & Eccles.: The comparatively modern English appellation for the day of the Saviour's crucifixion, the appellation "good" possibly referring to the beneficial effects which flow from keeping the anniversary; the Continental term, which is of great antiquity, being Holy Friday. The Anglo-Saxons again denominated it Long Friday, from the protracted religious services which characterized the day. The Church of England regards Good Friday as the most sacred day of the year, and has appropriate services, for which see the Litorgy.

In Roman Catholic countries this day is not a holiday of obligation, on which the faithful are bound to hear mass and to abstain from servile works. It is observed as a rigid fast—in some of the stricter religious communities a single meal of bread and water being all that is allowed—and the church services are sad and mournful, regard being had to the terrible incidents of the crucifixion rather than to the benefits which, as the Church teaches, that event has brought to mankind. The altar is stripped of ornaments, the sanctuary is bare, the sacerdotal vestments are black. The Passion as recorded by St. John is chanted, and then follows the Adoration of the Cross, which is kissed first by the celebrant and his assistants, and in turn by the congregation. The consecrated species is brought from the reposoir (q.v.), and the priest receives. [PRE-SANCTIFIED.] Vespers immediately follow. In the evening the matins and lauds for Holy Saturday [TENEBRAE] are usually recited in public. [HOLY-WEEK.]

Custom: Good Friday is kept as a legal holiday in many of the states and in many parts of Europe.

good humor, s. A cheerful pleasant temper or disposition; a feeling of satisfaction.

"I was a lover of mirth, good-humour, and even sometimes of fun."—Goldsmith: Essays, i.

good-humored, a. Of a cheerful temper or disposition; characterized by good humor; not easily provoked or annoyed.

good-humoredly, adv. In a good-humored, cheerful manner.

good-king-Harry, s.
Bot.: Chenopodium (Blitum), Bonus Henricus.

good-lack, interj. An exclamation of surprise, wonder, or admiration.

¶ Lack here is probably a corruption of ladykin or lakin, a diminutive from lady, as applied to the Virgin Mary, Our Lady.

good-looking, a. Of a pleasing countenance; well-favoured.

good-looks, s. pl. Pleasing features.

good-luck, s. Fortune, prosperity, success.

good-manners, s. pl. Politeness, decorum; propriety of behaviour.

good-morning, * good-morrow, s. A kind wish or salutation in the morning.

"Good-morrow to the sun. Hail, thou fair heaven!
We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly."
Shakesp.: Cymbeline, iii. 3.

good-nature, s.

* 1. Among the older divines, the amount of good of which man is capable when unaided by the grace of God.

"Good-nature, being the relics and remains of that shipwreck which Adam made, is the proper and immediate disposition to holiness."—Jeremy Taylor: Sermon at the Funeral of Sir George Dalstone.

2. Natural kindness or mildness of disposition.

"The good-nature and generosity which belonged to his character."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xi.

good-natured, a.

* 1. Naturally disposed to goodness or holiness.

2. Of a mild, kind, and benignant temper or disposition; benignant.

A gay, good-natured, easy friend."
Cowper: Horace, sat. i. 5.

good-naturedly, adv. In a good-natured manner; with good nature or kindness.

good-naturedness, s. The quality or state of being good-natured; good-nature, good-humour.

good-neighbours, s. pl.

1. A euphemistic title for the fairies.

" In the hinder-end of harvest on Allhallow even,
When our good-neighbours dois ride, if I read right."
Montgomerie: Flyting.

2. Witches.

good-night, s.

I. Ordinary Language.

1. A kind wish or salutation at parting at night.

" 'Beware the pine-tree's withered branch!
Beware the awful avalanche!'
This was the peasant's last good-night."
Longfellow: Excelsior.

* 2. A short poem, probably to be sung as a serenade.

"Sure they were his fancies or good-nights."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., III. 1.

II. Bot.: Argyreia bona-nox.

good people, s. pl. The fairies; the good-folk.

good-sense, s. A sound and clear understanding; good-judgement, common-sense.

"Good-nature and good-sense must ever join,
To err is human, to forgive divine."
Pope: Essay on Criticism, 524.

good-speed, s. & interj. Good-luck; godspeed.

* good-tasted, a. Having a pleasant taste or flavour.

"They then brought up a dish of apples, and they were very good-tasted fruit."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. ii.

good-tempered, a. Having a mild temper; not easily provoked or irritated; good-humoured.

good-temperedly, adv. In a good-tempered manner; with good-temper.

Good Templar, s. A member of a society of which the condition of membership is a pledge never to make, buy, or sell intoxicating liquors, or offer them to others as a beverage. It arose in the United States in 1851, where the order rapidly increased, and whence it spread to other countries. The first English lodge was formed in Birmingham in 1868. It has become a social and political power in that country. The members pass through an initiatory rite, and the organization is somewhat similar to that of Freemasonry. In 1876 a disruption took place on the question of allowing negroes to be enrolled in the same lodges as whites. The order is now spread throughout the world, and has a membership of about 500,000, with a junior membership of about one-fourth this number.

Good Templarism, Good Templary, s. The principles professed and carried out by the Good Templars. [GOOD TEMPLAR.]

good-wife, s. [GOODWIFE.]

good-will, s. [GOODWILL.]

* good-willer, s. One who wishes well to another; a well-wisher.

"The earle Douglas wold nevir give ear to his good-willeris and favoureris."—Pitscottie: Cron., pp. 41, 42.

* good-woman, s. The mistress of a family; a goodwife.

good-works, s. pl.

1. Theol.: Works the fruit of faith.

2. Ch. Hist.: There was a dispute from 1548 to 1552 between Melanchthon and Nicholas Amsdorf, the latter being an enthusiastic follower of Luther, as to the necessity of good works to salvation. Melanchthon took the positive and Amsdorf the negative side. (Mosheim: Ch. Hist., cent. xvi., pt. ii., ch. i., § 29.)

* good, * god-en, v.t. & i. [A.S. gódian; O. H. Ger. guotjan; M. H. Ger. güeten.]

A. Transitive:

1. To make good; to turn to good.

" Uss birrth sone thess te bett,
And tess te mare uss godenn."
Ormulum, 11,831.

2. To manure, to improve.

"A fruitful hill not by nature, but by grace . . . God hath taken it from the barren downs, and gooded it."—Bp. Hall: Fast Sermon, 1628.

B. Intrans.: To become good; to turn to what is good.

"God mann . . . godeththth azy and hegheththth."
Ormulum, 6,014.

† good-ĕn'-ĭ-a, s. [Named after the Rev. Dr. Goodenough, Bishop of Carlisle, and a lover of botany.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the order Goodeniaceæ (q.v.). They are generally herbaceous plants with axillary or terminal yellow flowers.

good-ĕn'-ĭ-ā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. goodeni(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: An order of calyciferal exogens, alliance Campanales. It consists of herbaceous plants or rarely shrubs without milk, the hairs of any one present simple or glandular. Leaves scattered, often lobed, without stipules. Inflorescence terminal, flowers never capitate, usually yellow, blue, or pink. Calyx usually superior, rarely inferior, in three to five divisions; corolla monopetalous, irregular, withering after splitting into five pieces. Stamens five, distinct style, one simple fruit, a two or four-celled capsule with many seeds. There are twenty-four genera and 200 known species. They are from Australia and the Southern Pacific. Some are esculent vegetables.

good-ĕn'-ĭ-ădş, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. goodeni(a); Eng., &c. pl. suff. ads.]

Bot.: The name given by Lindley to the order Goodeniaceæ (q.v.).

good-ĕn'-ĭ-ē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. goodeni(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Goodeniaceæ, having capsular fruit.

† goŏd'-ĕ-nŏw, s. [GOODENOUGH.]

* goŏd'-fûl, * god-ful, * god-fulle, a. [Eng. good; ful(l).] Kind, gracious, benevolent.

"Magan thene king grætte mid godfulle worde."
Layamon, ii. 236.

* goŏd'-fûl-lĭ̆, * good-ful-lyche, adv. [Eng. goodful; -ly.] In a kind, gracious manner; kindly.

"The martyrs the vnderstonde Godfullyche in heore bonde."
Old Eng. Miscell., p. 90.

goŏdg'-eŏn, s. [GOOGING.]

goŏd'-ĭ̆ng (1), s. [Eng. good; -ing.] (For def., see extract.)

"To go a gooding is a custom observed in several parts of England on St. Thomas's Day, by women only, who ask alms, and in return for them wish all that is good, such as a happy New Year, &c., to their benefactors, sometimes presenting them with sprigs of evergreens. In some parts of Surrey and Kent the custom is thus kept up; and in other counties gooding is the word among the poor for collecting before Christmas what may enable them to keep the festival."—Todd.

goŏd'-ĭ̆sh, a. [Eng. good; -ish.] Rather good than bad; pretty good; fair, tolerable, passable.

"I fetched a goodish compass around."—R. D. Blackmore: Lorna Doone, ch. lviii.

* goŏd'-lĕss, good-les, a. [Eng. good; -less.] Destitute; having no goods or money.

" Goodles for to ben it is no game."
Chaucer: C. T., 13,220.

goŏd'-lĭ-nĕss, * good-li-nesse, * good-ly-nesse, s. [Eng. goodly; -ness.]

1. Kindness, benevolence.

" Goodlynesse, Benignitas, benevolencia."—Prompt. Parv.

2. The quality of being goodly; grace, elegance, beauty.

"In boldness, greatness, godlinesse, and might,
Above the princes born of human seed."
Fairfax: Godfrey of Boulogne, xx. 107.

goŏd'-lĭ̆, * god-li, * god-liche, * god-lyche, * good-liche, * goode-ly, * gude-li, * gud-liche, * gude-ly, a. & adv. [A.S. godlic; O. S. gódlik; O. Fris. gódilik; O. H. Ger. guotlih; Icel. gódhligr.]

A. As adjective:

I. Noble, excellent, fine, elegant, handsome, graceful.

" The good-lyeste mayde . . . in al the town of Troye."
Chaucer: Troilus, ii. 880.

2. Kind, friendly, gracious, benevolent.

"Syn ye so goodlich have be unto me."
Chaucer: C. T., 12,981.

3. Pleasant, agreeable.

" Of flowers perpetual, goodly to the eye And blooming from afar."
Logan: Episode of Levina.

4. Pretty large or considerable: as, a goodly number.

* 5. It is used ironically for fine, noble.

"'Tis a goodly credit for you."
Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2.

* B. As adverb:

1. Finely, splendidly, nobly, elegantly, excellently.

"With sper and target gudely grayd."
Gawaine & Gawaine, 332.

2. In a friendly manner; kindly.

"Ye ben wel and goodly advised."
Chaucer: Melibeus, p. 192.

3. Happily.

"And then shall hartie loue continue long togither goodly, in case both parties due theyr duties accordingly."—Udal: Ephesians vi.

* goŏd'-lĭ̆-hĕad, * goŏd'-lĭ-hĕad, * good-li-hede, * good-ly-hood, * gude-li-hed, s. [Eng. goodly; -head.] Goodness, grace, elegance, goodliness.

" For oner this, to spake of goodlihede
She passeth all that I can of rede."
Chaucer: The Flower of Curtesie.

goŏd'-măn, * gude-man, s. [Eng. good, and man.]

* 1. A familiar appellation of civility; a rustic term of compliment; gaffer; frequently used ironically.

"I'll lay my head to any goodman's hat."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1.

2. A proprietor of land; a landowner, a laird. (Scotch.)

* 3. The head of a family; the master of a house.

"And how in three minutes the goodman of the house had been wallowing in a pool of blood at his own door."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

* 4. A gaoler.

"That morning before his death, February 17, the goodman of the Tolbooth came to him in his chamber, and told him he might save his life, if he would sign the petition."—Wodrow: History, ii. 536.

* 5. Used euphemistically for the devil. From the earliest ages there has been a tendency to treat the various personifications of evil with respect. Thus the Erinnys of Greek mythology became the σεμναὶ θεαί (= venerable goddesses) of popular phrase, and the Eumenides (well-meaning ones) of later poets. In Jude 9 we read that "Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee." As an instance of the survival of this custom, Moncure D. Conway (Demonology, i. 13) relates a story of a Hampshire lady who asked a friend of his if she made her children bow when they mentioned the devil's name, adding solemnly, "I do, I think it's safer."

goodman's-croft, s.

Anthrop.: A strip of ground or corner of a field formerly left untilled, in Scotland, in the belief that unless some such place were left, the spirit of evil would damage the crop.

"Scotchmen still living remember the corner of a field being left untilled for the goodman's-croft."—Tylor: Primitive Culture, ii. 370.

goŏd'-nĕss, * god-nesse, * gode-nes, gode-nesse, * good-nesse, * gud-nes, * guid-ness, gud-ness, s. [A.S. gódness; M. H. Ger. guotnisse.]

1. The quality of being good morally; virtue, excellence of character.

" You could not know, nobody but myself could know, her goodness."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xx.

* 2. That which is good; right.

" Flee schame and schrewednesse and doo goodnesse."
—Chaucer: Melibeus, p. 189.

3. Kindness, mercifulness, beneficence.

" Poor soul, God's goodness has been great to thee: Let never day nor night unhallowed pass."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., ii. 1.

4. The quality or state of being good, undamaged, or free from deterioration.

5. Used as a euphemism for God: as, Goodness knows.

goŏds, s. pl. [GOOD, s. (4).]

goods-engine, s.

Railway Eng.: A heavy engine for drawing goods-trains; a freight-locomotive.

goods-shed, s. A covered or inclosed shed or shelter for goods at railway stations, docks, &c.

goods-train, s. pl. A train consisting of waggons or trucks laden with goods.

goods-truck, s. A goods-wagon.

goods-waggon, s. A railway waggon or truck used in the transportation of goods: called in America a freight-car.

good'-ship, *good-schipe. s. [Eng. good; -ship.] Goodness, grace, kindness, mercy.

"In whom, of whom, therw whom heoth Alle the goodschipes that we here iseoth."
Castel of Love, 15.

good'-wife, gude-wife, s. [Eng. good, and wife.]

1. The wife of a landed proprietor or laird; a farmer's wife.

"This samen Sunday the lady Pittmedden, the good-wife of Iden, Mr. William Lumsden and his wife, &c. were excommunicate."—Spalding, i. 238.

2. The mistress of a house.

"When the lad came to the house, the goodwife hasted, and gave him meat."—Peden: Life, p. 87.

good will', s. [Eng. good, and will.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Benevolence; kindly or favourable disposition or feelings.

"Peace, goodwill, order, and esteem." — Burke: American Taxation.

2. Heartiness, zeal, earnestness, readiness.

II. Comm.: The custom of any trade or business; the influence of the seller of any business to secure to his successor the custom already existing; the right or title to keep up and continue the business purchased from an outgoing tenant; the money paid for such right or title.

good'-ỹ, *good-die, *good-ie, a. & s. [Eng. good; -y.]

* A. As adj.: Simple, innocent, silly.

"So goodie agent? and you think then there is no punishment due for your agentship?" — Beaum. & Flet.: Lover's Progress, v. 1.

B. As substantive:

1. A term of civility applied to women: corresponding to goodman as applied to men.

"Old Goody Blake was old and poor."
Wordsworth: Goody Blake.

2. The kernel of a nut. (American.)

3. (Pl.): Sweetmeats, bonbons.

"Adjourning from time to time to some café for the purpose of eating ices or sucking goodies."—H. A. Murray: Lands of the Slave & the Free, ch. xii.

good-ỹ-ĕr'-a, s. [Named after John Goodyer, an English botanist.]

Bot.: A genus of orchids, tribe Neottideæ, and that section of it which has the upper lobe of the lip flat, the lower one two-lobed. The lip is free from the base of the column and saccate. Goodyera repens, a plant with ovate, acute, reticulate leaves and cream-white flowers, is widely distributed, being found in the United States, and in the continents of Asia and Europe.

good'-ỹ-shĭp, s. [Eng. goody; -ship.] Goodness.

"The more shame for her goodyship,
To give so near a friend the slip."
Butler: Hudibras, pt. 1, c. iii.

googe, v.t. [Gouge.]

goŏg'-ĭngş, goŏdg'-eŏnş, goŏd'-ĭngş, s. pl. [Gudgeon.]

Ship-build.: The metallic eyes bolted to the stern-post, on which the rudder is hung. In each there is a hole to receive a correspondent pintle bolted on to the back of the rudder, which this turns from side to side, as on an axis. They are generally four, five, or six in number.

goôl, *goule, goold, a. & s. [A.S. geolo.] [Goel.]

A. As adj. (Of the two first forms): Yellow.

"Thou art now both gool and green." Sir Egeir, p. 3.

B. As subst. (Of the forms gool and goold).

Bot.: Various plants, as Calendula officinalis, Chrysanthemum segetum, and Caltha palustris.

goôle, s. [O.Fr. goule = the throat; Lat. gula.] A breach in a sea-wall or bank; a passage worn by the flux and reflux of the tide.

goôm, ghoôm, s. [Mahratta mar-ghoom.]

Bot.: One of the Mahratta names for Bearded Wheat (Triticum æstivum), a grass cultivated in parts of India.

goon, v.i. [Go, v.]

ġôonch, s. [Mahratta.]

Bot.: The Mahratta name for Abrus precatorius. [Abrus.]

goôr, s. [Hindust. gŭr; Mahratta, gool.] Raw sugar, jaggree made in India, from the juice of the date-palm. Goor was eaten by the Thugs as the initiatory rite, pledging them to their nefarious occupation.

gôor'-a-kōo, gôod'-a-kōo, s. [Hind. goorakhoo, guruku; Mahratta goodakhoo, gudakhu.] The name given in parts of India to balls, prepared of different ingredients, to be smoked by the natives in a hookah, or pipe.

gôo'-roô, gû'-rû, s. [Mahratta gooroo, guru; Sansc. guru.] A spiritual preceptor among the Hindoos.

goô-săn'-dĕr, s. [A tautological formation; Eng. goose, and gander.]

Ornith.: Mergus merganser, a natatorial bird of the family Anatidæ (Ducks), and the sub-family Merginæ. The male is variegated with black, greenish-black, rose-coloured, and white. Most of the bill dark-red, the feet very clear red; the female whitish-ash, ash, reddish-brown, white, &c.; the bill faded red, the feet yellowish-red. It is a native of the Arctic regions, whence it extends into the northern part of America, Asia, and Europe. It is sometimes called the Jack-saw in England.

goôse, s. [A.S. gós.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II.

2. Figuratively:

(1) A silly person, a simpleton.

(2) A tailor's smoothing and pressing iron, from the handle being like the neck of a goose.

"Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, ii. 3.

* (3) A game of chance played on a card divided into small compartments, number from one to sixty-two, and arranged in a spiral form round an open central space. It was played by two or more persons, who moved their counters over the compartments, according to the numbers which they threw on dice. The name was derived from the figure of a goose being depicted on every fourth and fifth compartment in succession; if the throw of the dice carried the counter of a player on to a goose he was entitled to move forward double the actual number thrown.

II. Ornithology:

1. Sing: Any bird of the genus Anser. The domestic goose is believed to have descended from Anser ferus, called in books the Greylag goose. The White Snow goose (Chen hyperboreas) and the Canada goose (Bernicla canadensis) are common species in the United States and throughout the continent, breeding in the far north. Among the sea geese the Bernicle goose and Brent goose are specially to be noted. There are numerous other species. Domesticated, the goose is of great value, both for the table and for its fine soft feathers.

"So screams a goose when swans melodious sing."
Beattie: Pastorals, ix.

2. Pl.: Anserinæ, a sub-family of Anatidæ (Ducks). The body is large and heavy, the neck long, the head small, and the bill conical, the wings long and powerful, the feet somewhat long, with small toes. In summer they inhabit the polar regions, migrating southward in flocks on the approach of winter. The nest, which is of coarse grass, and situated in marshy places, is large; the egga several.

¶ Obvious compounds: goose-herd, goose-pie, &c.

goose-and-goslings, s.

Bot.: Orchis Morio.

goose-corn, s.

Bot.: The Heath-rush, Juncus squarrosus. It is not a genuine grass. (Loudon, &c.)

goose-dung ore, s.

Min.: The same as Ganomatite (q.v.).

goose-feast, s. Michaelmas.

goose-flesh, s. The same as Goose-skin (q.v.).

†goose-mussel, s.

Zool.: A barnacle. It is not a genuine mussel, which is a mollusc, but is a crustacean or crustaceous family.

goose-skin, s. A peculiar roughness of the human skin produced by cold, fear, &c.

"Her skin began to rise into what is vulgarly termed goose-skin."—Miss Ferrier: Inheritance, ch. ii.

goose-step, s.

Mil.: The act of a recruit in balancing himself on one foot while moving the other backwards and forwards without taking a step.

goose-tansy, s.

Bot.: Potentilla anserina.

¶ (1) To cook one's goose: To do for one. (Slang.)

(2) A wild goose chase: A striving after impossibilities.

goôso, v.t. [Goose, s.]

1. To hiss; to condemn by hissing. (Slang.)

"He was goosed last night, he was goosed the night before last."—Dickens: Hard Times, ch. vi.

* 2. To iron linen clothes.

goọşe'-bĕr-rў, s. & a. [Goose has lost r; it was originally groise or grose, from O. Fr. groisele, groselle, groiselle; Ir. groisaid; Gael. groiseid = a gooseberry; Wel. grwys = a wild gooseberry, from M. H. Ger. & Ger. krûs; Dut. kroes; N. H. Ger. kraus = criap, criaped. Cf. Scotch grozet. (Skeat & Mahn.)]

A. As substantive:

1. Ord. Lang., Bot., &c.: The fruit of Ribes Grossularia, also the bush itself. Sir Joseph Hooker places it under a first section Grossularia, of the genus Ribes, with the character branches spinous; leaves plaited in bud; pedunncles one to three flowered. There are two varieties of the wild gooseberry, Ribes Grossularia proper, with the leaves thinning above, and the fruit glandular hairy; and R. Uva crispa, with the leaves smaller and the ripe fruit glabrous. The large European gooseberry (Ribes Grossularia), grown so widely on that continent, has not been domesticated in the United States, where, however, there are several native species, some of which extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific. R. oxyacanthoides is grown largely for the market. The snowy-flowered Gooseberry (R. nireum) is remarkable for its white pendulous flowers.

¶ The Barbadoes gooseberry is Pereskia aculeata; the Cape gooseberry, Physalis pubescens; that of Coromandel, Averrhoa Carambola; the Indian Hill gooseberry Rhodomyrtus tomentosa, and the Tahiti gooseberry Cicca disticha. (Treas. of Bot.)

2. Fig.: A silly person.

B. As adj.: Of, belonging to, or resembling the gooseberry.

¶ (1) To play gooseberry: To play propriety; to accompany two young lovers in public.

(2) To play old gooseberry: To play the dence, to act, to throw everything into confusion.

gooseberry-bush, s. The same as Gooseberry (q.v.).

gooseberry-fool, s. A compound made of gooseberries acalded and pounded with cream. [Fool.]

"Then came sweets . . . some hot, some cool, Blancmange, and quince custards, and gooseberry-fool." Barham: Ingold. Leg.; Lay of St Romwald.

gooseberry-moth, s.

Entom.: The Magpie-moth, Abraxas grossulariata. [Magpie-moth, Abraxas.]

goôse'-căp, s. [Eng. goose, and cap = Lat. caput = the head.] A silly fellow, a simpleton, a goose.

"Why, what a goosecap would'st thou make me?"
Beaum. & Flet.: Beggar's Bush, iv. 4.

goôse'-foọt, s. [Eng. goose; -foot; from the shape of the leaves in some species of the genus.]

Botany:

1. The genus Chenopodium (q.v.).

2. Aspalathus Chenopoda.

¶ The goosefoot tribe:

Bot.: The order Chenopodiaceæ.

goôse'-grass, s. [Eng. goose, and grass; from the common idea that it is a favourite food or medicine for geese.]

Bot.: Galium Aparine, a common British plant. Its leaves, six or eight in a whorl, are hispid, their margins, midrib, and the angles of the stem very rough, with reflexed prickles, which, if dragged along the tongue, will bring blood. The flowers are white. Called also Cleavers or Clivers.

"Goosegrass, or wild tansy, is a weed that strong clays are very subject to."—Mortimer; Husbandry.

goôse'-nĕck, s. [Eng. goose, and neck.]

I. Nautical:

(1) An iron fitted at the end of a yard or boom for various purposes.

"The gooseneck must be spread out by the armourer." —Marryat: Peter Simple, ch. vi.

(2) A davit.

2. Hydraul.: A nozzle having a universal-joint connection to a fire-engine stand-pipe.

3. Agric.: A stick used in thatching.

goôse'-păd-dle, v.t. [Eng. goose, and paddle.] To row in an awkward, irregular manner.

goôse'-quĭll, s. [Eng. goose, and quill.] One of the quills or large wing-feathers of a goose; a pen made of such a feather.

* goôs'-ĕr-y, s. [Eng. goose; -ry.]

1. A place for keeping geese.

2. Silliness, stupidity like that of a goose.

"Who will soon look through and through . . . the finical goosery of your neat sermon actor."—Milton: Apology for Smectymnus.

goôse'-shăre, s. [Eng. goose, and share.]

Bot.: Galium Aparine.

goôse'-tŏngue, s. [Eng. goose, and tongue.]

Bot.: A composite plant, Achillea Ptarmica, wild in Britain.

goôse'-wĭng, s. [Eng. goose, and wing.]

I. Ord. Lang.: The wing of a goose used as a dust-brush.

II. Nautical:

1. Another name for a studding-sail.

2. One of the clews or lower corners of a square mainsail or fore-sail, when the middle part is furled or tied up.

goôs-eÿ-găn'-dĕr, s. [Eng. goose, and gander.]

1. A gander.

2. A silly fellow, a simpleton, a goose.

* goot, s. [Goat.]

gō'-phĕr (1), s. [Fr. gaufre = (1) a honeycomb, (2) a wafer, a kind of cake.]

Zool.: A name given by the early French settlers in America to various animals which honeycomb the ground by burrowing in it. In Canada and Illinois it was given to a grey burrowing squirrel, Spermophilus Franklini, west of the Mississippi to S. Richardsonii, in Wisconsin to a striped squirrel, and in Missouri to a burrowing-pouched rat, Geomys bursarius. All these are mammals; but in Georgia the term was applied to a snake, Coluber coupen, and in Florida to a turtle, Testudo polyphemus. (Goodrich & Porter.) gopher-hole, s.

I. Ord. Lang.: The burrow of a gopher. [Gopher (1).]

II. Fort.: A small bomb-proof in a line of rifle-pits. (American.)

"Against [mortar shells] rifle-pits are no protection, and the soldiers burrow into the earth places known as gopher-holes."—Harper's Weekly, Aug. 6, 1864, p. 502.

gō'-phĕr (2), s. [Heb. גֹּפֶר (gopher), from the obsolete verb גָּפַר (gaphar) = to cover.] For def., see etym. and compound.

gopher-wood, s.

1. Scrip.: The wood of which Noah's ark was directed to be made. Various attempts have been made to identify the tree. The most probable view is that it was the cypress; Lat. cupressus; Gr. κυπάρισσος (kuparissos); the c, p, r of the Latin and k, p, r of Greek being the Hebrew g, ph, r, differently pronounced. [Cypress.]

"Make thee an ark of gopher-wood."—Gen. vi. 14.

2. Bot.: Lawsonia alba.

* gŏp'-pĭsh, a. [Cf. Icel. gopt = a vain person.] Proud, pettish.

gör'-ăl, s. [A Nepaulese word.]

Zool.: Nemorhedus goral, an antelope found in the Himalaya mountains. It is about the size of the common goat, has black horns about four and a half inches long, the general colour of the body mouse-gray.

gör'-a-mȳ, gôur'-a-mî, s. [A Javanese name.]

Ichthy.: Osphromenus olfax, a fish, a native of China, but has been introduced into the Mauritius, and into remote Cayenne. It is about the size of a turbot, possesses great tenacity of life even when out of the water, and is much valued for the table. The female is said to form a cavity in the sand for the reception of her eggs.

gor'-bĕl-lĭed, a. [Eng. gorbelly; -ed.] Fat, big-bellied.

"Nero did not take
A noble club-foot stripling; ne'er contract
With one throat-swoln, gorbellied, or crump-backed."
Holiday: Juvenal, sat. x.

* gor'-bĕl-lȳ, s. [A.S. gor = dirt, filth, and Eng. belly.]

1. A fat belly or paunch.

"With crump shoulders, side, and gorbellies."—P. Holland: Camden, p. 53.

2. A fat-bellied person.

gorçe, s. [Norm.-Fr. gorse; O. Fr. gorge, from Lat. gurges = a whirlpool.] A weir; a pool of water to keep fish in.

gor'-cŏck, s. [Etym. of first element doubtful, but perhaps A. S. gor = dirt; Eng. cock.] The moor-cock, red-grouse, or red-game.

"Mongst desert hills, where, leagues around, Dwelt but the gorcock and the deer."
Scott: Bridal of Triermain, iii. 6.

gor'-crōw, gore-crow, s. [A.S. gor = dirt, filth, and Eng. crow.] The carrion-crow.

"It will also eat grain and insects, and like the raven will pick out the eyes of young lambs when just dropped, for which reason it was formerly distinguished from the rook, which feeds entirely on grain and insects, by the name of the gor or gorecrow." —Pennant: British Zoology; Carrion Crow.

gor-dĭ-ā'-çē-a, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gordi(us), and Lat. neut. pl. adj. suff. -acea.]

Zool.: Hair-worms; an order of Scolecida, consisting of vermiform or thread-like animals with distinct sexes, having their alimentary canal, if present at all, imperfectly developed, and their water-vascular system rudimentary or absent. During a portion of their existence they live in the interior of insects.

gor'-dĭ-an, a. [Named after Gordius, a half mythic king of Phrygia, father of Midas.] Of or pertaining to Gordius, or the knot tied by him: hence, intricate, complicated.

"She was a gordian shape of dazzling hue."
Keats: Lamia, i.

gordian-knot, s. A knot tied by Gordius in the rope which bound the yoke of his chariot to the draught-tree in such an artful manner that the ends of the cord could not be perceived. So intricate was it that the report went abroad that the empire of Asia was promised by the oracle to him who could untie it. Alexander the Great, wishing to inspire his soldiers with courage and his enemies with the belief that he was born to conquer Asia, cut the knot with his sword, and so claimed to have fulfilled the oracle. Hence, the term gordian-knot is used for any apparently inextricable difficulty or deadlock; and to cut the gordian-knot is equivalent to removing or solving a difficulty by bold or unusual measures.

"Whatsoever it was, I must be fain to leave it as a Gordian-knot, which no writer helps me to untie."—Baker: King Stephen (an. 1154).

* gor'-dĭ-an, v.t. [Gordian, a.] To knot or tie up.

"Locks . . . simply gordianed up and braided."
Keats: Endymion, bk. i.

gor'-dĭ-ŭs, s. (pl. gor'-dĭ-ī). [Gordian.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the order Gordiaceæ (q.v.). It consists of those extraordinarily thin and long inhabitants of the water, popularly believed, at least till recently, to be animated horse-hairs, and producible by the simple process of putting horse-hairs into a pond, ditch, or country well. After a time they bore their way into the bodies of insects. When mature they quit their insect residence and, returning to the liquid element, deposit their eggs in long chains. When gordii are dried they become hard and brittle, and apparently dead, but water returns them to their wonted suppleness and vitality. Gordius aquaticus is the Common Hair-worm.

göre (1), s. [A.S. gor = filth, dirt: cogn. with Icel. gor = gore, the cud in animals; Sw. gorr = dirt, matter: cf. Gr. χορδή (chordē) = a gut, a cord; Lat. hira = gut; Icel. garnir, görn = guts.]

* 1. Dirt, filth.

"Gore and ferr and full wast
That was out ykast." Lybeaus Disconus, 1,471.

2. Clotted or congealed blood; blood which has become inspissated after effusion.

"But the bloody fact
Will be avenged, and th' other's faith approved
Lose no reward, though here thou see him die, Rolling in dust and gore." Milton: P. L., xi. 460

* 3. Blood flowing from a wound.

"Now, warriors, grieve no more;
Lo, there the Trojans! bathe your swords in gore."
Pope: Homer; Iliad xv. 248.

* 4. Filth, loathsomeness, wickedness.

"With her vnworthelych werk me wlatez withinne
The gore ther of me hatz greued."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems: Cleanness, 305.

* 5. A clotted mass.

"They were in one gore of blood."—H. Brooke: Fool of Quality, i. 68.

* gore-blood, * goare-blond, s. Gore, blood.

"Downe strait he falles, & armour large with goare-bloud embrues." Phaer.: Virgill; Æneidos xii.

göre (2), * gair, * gare, * goore, s. [A.S. gára = a projecting point of land, from gár = a spear; Icel. geirr = a triangular piece of land: geirr = a spear; O. H. Ger. kero; M. H. Ger. gere = a promontory; Ger. gehre = a wedge, a gusset; Dut. geer = a gusset, a gore.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A triangular or wedge-shaped piece: as—

(1) A triangular piece sewed into a dress, a sail, &c., to widen it out at any part; a gusset.

(2) An angular piece of planking used in fitting the skin of a vessel to the frames.

* (3) A triangular or pointed piece of land.

* 2. Dress.

"Geynest under gore, herkne to my roune."
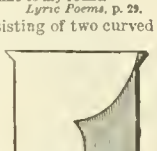
Lyric Poems, p. 29.

II. Her.: A charge consisting of two curved lines, one from the sinister chief point, the other from the base middle point, meeting in an acute angle in the middle of the fesse point.



GORE.

gore-bill, s. A name given to the garfish (q.v.) from its long beak or nose.

gore-strake, s.

Ship-build.: A strake which terminates before reaching the stem or stern-post. Such strakes are at or near the centre of the ship to lessen the spiling of the plank.

göre (1), v.t. [A.S. gár = a spear; Icel. geira; M. H. Ger. ger; O. H. Ger. kér.]

1. To pierce, to stab, to penetrate with a pointed instrument.

"O let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear."
Shakesp.: Richard II., i. 3.

2. To pierce as with a horn.

"An ox that attempts to gore the attendants."—Cogan: Ethical Treatise, Dis. 2, § 1.

* 3. To wound, to tear, to lacerate.

"The willing redbreast, flying through a thorne, Against a prickle gored his tender side."
Browne: The Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

* göre (2), v.i. [Gore (1), s.] To bleed profusely.

göre (3), v.t. [Gore (2), s.]

* 1. To break a passage into, as with a wedge.

"And now, their mightiest quelled, the battle swerved,
With many an inrode gored." Milton: P. L., vi. 387.

2. To cut in a triangular shape; to pierce with a gore.

gor'-flȳ, s. [A.S. gor = dung; Eng. fly.] A species of fly.

gorge, s. [Fr., from Low Lat. gorgia = the throat, a narrow pass; Lat. gurges = an abyss; the throat; Ital. gorga, gorjia.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The throat, the gullet.

"He with him closed, and, laying mighty hold Upon his throte did gripe his gorge so fast,
That wanting breath him down to ground he cast."
Spenser: F. Q., VI. iv. 22.

2. That which is swallowed or gorged; swallowed food caused to rise by nausea or disgust.

"And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spewed vp his gorge, that all did him deteast."
Spenser: F. Q., I. iv. 21.

3. The act of gorging; a heavy meal.

"The counseler heareth causes with lesse pain being emptie, then he shal be able after a ful gorge."—Wilson: Arte of Rhetorique, p. 112.

4. A narrow passage or entrance; a pass between hills.

"I heeded not the eddying surge;
Mine eye but saw the Trosachs gorge."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, vi. 19.

5. Disgust. (Shakesp.: Hamlet, v. 1.)

* 6. Indignation, temper.

"My gorge began to rise. 'Yes,' said I, sulkily, 'my family does live at Richmond.'"—Washington Irving: Ralph Ringwood.

II. Technically:

1. Arch.: The narrowest part of the Tuscan and Doric capitals between the astragal, above the shaft of the column, and the annulets; also, a cavetto or hollow moulding.

2. Fort.: A line joining the inner extremities of a work; as—

(1) A line drawn between the rear ends of the faces of a redan.

(2) A line across the narrow portion of a bastion, from the points of junction of its flanks with the curtains.

3. Mason.: A small groove at the underside of a coping, to keep the drip from reaching the wall; a throat.

4. Naut.: The groove or score of a pulley.

gorge-hook, s. Two fish-hooks separated by a piece of lead.

gorge, v.t. & i. [Fr. gorger.] [Gorge, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To swallow greedily or in large mouthfuls.

"Dislodging from a region scarce of prey,
To gorge the flesh of lambs or yeanling kids."
Milton: P. L., iii. 434.

2. To fill up to the throat, to glut, to satiate.

"The full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit or altogether balk."
Shakesp.: Rape of Lucrece, 694.

3. To fill to overflowing, to glut.

"A house in England which has been gorged with undeserved riches."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiii.

B. Intrans.: To feed greedily, to stuff oneself.

"When the Bushmen of South Africa have enough food, they gorge and sleep."—Lindsay: Mind in the Lower Animals, i. 41.

* gorged, a. [Eng. gorge, s.; -ed.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Having a gorge, or throat; throated.

2. Her.: Encircled round the throat, as when an animal is represented bearing a crown or the like round the neck. It is blazoned as gorged with a crown, &c.

GORGED.

gor'-gĕ-oŭs, a. [O. Fr. gorgias, gorgiais = gorgeous, from gorgias = a gorget, from gorge = the throat.] Splendid, magnificent, showy, glittering with splendid colours, resplendent, sumptuously adorned, or gay.

"The heralds and pursuivants were waiting in their gorgeous tabards."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. x.

gor'-gĕ-oŭs-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gorgeous; -ly.] In a gorgeous manner, splendidly, magnificently: with showy magnificence.

"Golden and red above it
The clouds float gorgeously."
Longfellow: The Castle by the Sea.

gor'-gĕ-oŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. gorgeous; -ness.] The quality or state of being gorgeous; showy or sumptuous magnificence; splendour.

"It seemed to outvye whatever had been seene before of gallantry and riches, and gorgeousness of apparel."—Baker: Charles II. (an. 1661.)

* gorg'-ĕr, * gorg-ere, s. [O. Fr. gorgiere, from gorge = the throat; Ital. gorgiera.]

1. A piece of armour for the throat; a gorget.

"Hys vyser and his gorgere."
Richard Cœur de Lion, 521.

2. A kerchief for the neck.

"That other wyth a gorger watz gored ouer the swyre" Gawaine, 957.

* gor'-gĕr-ĭn, s. [Fr., from gorge = the throat.]

Arch.: The neck of a capital; more commonly the part forming the junction between the shaft and the capital.

gor'-gĕt, s. [Fr. gorgette, from gorge = the throat.]

* 1. Arm.: A metal covering for the throat, worn by an armed man, to protect the juncture between the helmet and the breast-plate; also a kind of breast-plate like a half-moon. The camail (q.v.), or throat covering of chain-mail, is sometimes called the gorget of mail.

"See how his gorget peers above his gown
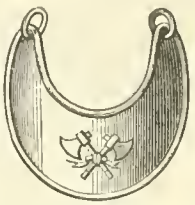
To tell the people in what danger he was."
Ben Jonson: Catiline, iv. 2.

* 2. Dress: A kind of ruff formerly worn by females.

*3. Mil.: A small, crescent-shaped, metallic ornament worn on the breast by officers on duty. The gorget was the last remnant of body armour worn by infantry in England.



GORGET.

4. Surgery:

(1) A lithotomic cutting-instrument.

(2) A canulated or concave conductor used in operation for fistula; called also a blunt gorget.

Gor'-gŏn, s. & a. [Lat. Gorgon, Gorgo, from Gr Γοργώ (Gorgō) = the Gorgon, from γοργός (gorgos) = fearful, terrible.]

A. As substantive:

1. Lit. & Gr. Mythol.: One of three female monsters of terrible aspect. They were the daughters of Phorcys and Ceto, and were named Euryalē, Stheno, and Medusa, the two first being immortal. Their hair was entwined with serpents, their hands were of brass, their bodies covered with impenetrable scales, their teeth resembling the tusks of a wild boar, and their eyes possessing the power of turning all on whom they fixed them to stone. By the aid of Minerva they were finally conquered by Perseus, and the drops of blood which fell to the ground from Medusa's head were changed into serpents, which have ever since infested the sandy deserts of Libya. The head was placed on the ægis of Minerva, and retained its power of turning the beholder into stone.

"But brave Aconteus, Perseus' friend, by chance Looked back, and met the Gorgon's fatal glance."
Maynwaring: Ovid; Metamorphoses iv.

2. Fig.: Anything very ugly or horrid; a woman of repulsive manners or appearance.

B. As adj.: Like a Gorgon; terrific; fearful.

"Pallas, holding forth
The terror of the Gorgon shield in vain."
Cowper: Nature Unimpaired by Time.

gorgon steam-engine, s. A form of direct-acting steam-engine, invented as a means of obviating the use of the beam in marine-engines. It is called the "Gorgon" engine, from having been first employed in an English government steamer of that name.

gor-gō'-nĕ-an, gor-gō'-nĭ-an, a. [Lat. Gorgoneus, from Gorgon, or Gorgo = a Gorgon; Gr. Γοργονειος (Gorgoneios).]

1. Of or pertaining to a Gorgon; like a Gorgon; terrific.

"Medusa, with Gorgonian terror, guards
The ford."
Milton: P. L., ii. 611.

2. As though caused by a Gorgon; petrified; stony.

"The rest his look Bound with Gorgonian vigour not to move."
Milton: P. L., x. 297.

gor-gō'-nĕ-ĭ-ă, s. pl. [Gr., neut. pl. of Γοργονειος (Gorgoneios) = pertaining to a Gorgon; Γόργω (Gorgō) = a Gorgon.]

Arch.: Masks in relief representing the Gorgon's or Medusa's head; one of the grotesque representations of forms of terror which occupied a considerable rank in the plastic art of the Greeks. They were used as key-stones in an arch.

gor-gō'-nĭ-a, s. [Lat., = a kind of coral with a rigid framework. (Pliny.)]

Zool.: Sea-fan; the typical genus of the family Gorgonidæ (q.v.). The sclerobasis is horny and more or less arborescent. Four species are described by Johnson as British.

gor-gō'-nĭ-an, a. [Gorgonean.]

* gor-gŏn'-ĭ-çal, a. [Eng. gorgon; -ical.] The same as Gorgonean (q.v.).

gor-gŏn'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. gorgonia, and fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

1. Zool.: Sea-shrubs; a family of Actinozoa, order Alcyonaria (Asteroid polypes). The cœnosarc, which is arborescent, is permanently rooted, and has a grooved or furrowed branching sclerobasis with dermoscelerites—i.e., tissue secretions. The species occur mostly in shallow water in the warmer seas, attaining their maximum in the tropics. Besides Gorgonia, the family contains the genus Corallium, of which the type is Corallium rubrum, the red coral of commerce.

2. Palæont.: The Gorgonidæ have existed at least from Eocene and perhaps from Oolitic times.

gor'-gŏn-īze, v.t. [Eng. gorgon; -ize.] To petrify as though by the glance of a Gorgon; to turn to stone.

"Whose eies so gorgonized that can endure
To see the all-upholder forced to bow" Davies: Holy Roode, p. 15.

gor'-hĕn, s. [Gorcock.] The female of the gorcock.

gor-ĭl'-la, s. [The name was found current in parts of Western Africa, when, in the fifth century B.C., the Carthaginian navigator Hanno visited it on his exploratory and colonizing expedition. It was applied, however, not to an ape, but to a negro tribe, members of which he invited to Carthage, but they could not be prevailed upon to accompany him.]

Zool.: A celebrated anthropoid ape (Troglodytes Gorilla), generally believed to come nearer than any known one to man, though some contend that the affinity of the gibbon is closer. [Gibbon.] The number of teeth in the gorilla, and all the old world monkeys, except the lemurs, is thirty-two, the same as in man. The hand has the same bones as in man. Professor Huxley considers Cuvier's order Quadrumana (four-handed) inaccurate, maintaining that the hinder extremities of all the monkeys and lemurs are framed anatomically as feet and not hands. The height is about five feet, almost the same as man. On the other hand, the greatest capacity of the gorilla's brain is only 34½ cubic inches, the least 23, against 62 in the least capacious human skull, and 114 in the greatest. The formidable canines, so conspicuous in the specimens in museums, as in the Academy of the Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, look very brutal, but they are only sexual characteristics, being of more moderate size in the female. The low facial angle also and the abundant hair, with the extraordinary breadth of the chest, diminish the resemblance. The last-mentioned characteristic imparts to the animal colossal strength, which it is said to use in its native haunts against man. It is a native of Lower Guinea and the interior of equinoctial Africa. It has a congener in the same region, Troglodytes niger, the Chimpanzee (q.v.).

gŏr'-ĭng (1), pr. par., a., & s. [Gore (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: A prick, a puncture.

gŏr'-ĭng (2), pr. par., a., & s. [Gore (3), v.[1]

A. As pa. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

Naut.: A term applied to a sail cut gradually sloping, so as to be broader at the clew than at the earing.

C. As substantive:

Naut.: That part of the skirts of a sail where it gradually widens towards the bottom or foot; a goring-cloth.

goring-cloth, s.

Naut.: The same as Goring (2), C.

gor-mand, s. & a. [Fr. gourmand.] [Gourmand.]

A. As subst.: A greedy or ravenous eater; a glutton, a gourmand.

"Many are made gormands and gluttons by custom that are not so by nature."—Locke.

B. As adj.: Greedy, gluttonous, voracious, ravenous.

"The sillie sauls, that bene Christes sheip, Sould nocht be giviu to gormand wolfis to kelp."
Lyndsay, S. P. R., ii. 235.

* gor'-mand-ĕr, s. [Gourmander.]

* gor'-mand-īse, s. [O. Fr. gourmandise.] Gluttony, greediness.

"With the fish which in your banks do breed
And daily there increase, man's gormandise can feed."
Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

gor'-mand-ĭsm, s. [Eng. gormand; -ism.] Gluttony.

gor'-mand-īze, v.i. & t. [GORMANDISE, s.]

A. Intrans.: To eat greedily or like a glutton; to gorge.

"Who on occasion in a dark hole
Can gormandize on lighted charcoal."
King: Orpheus & Eurydice.

B. Trans.: To swallow anything greedily.

"The pampered stomach, more than well sufficed, Casts up the surfeit lately gormandized." Drayton: Baron's Wars, vi. 23.

gor'-man-dī-zĕr, s. [Eng. gormandiz(e); -er.] One who gormandizes; a glutton; a greedy or voracious eater.

gor-rel-bel-lied, a. [GORBELLIED.]

gorse, *gorst, *gorsto, s. [A.S. gorst = a bramble-bush, the origin of which is unknown.]

Bot.: One of the names of the Furze, or Whin (Ulex europæus).

"There's neither Johnny nor his horse
Among the fern or in the gorse." Wordsworth: Idiot Boy.

gor'-sĭ, gors'-tĭ, a. [Eng. gors(e); -y.] Of the nature of, resembling, or abounding in gorse.

gor-tĕr'-ĭ-a, s. [Named after David Gorter, Professor of Botany at Hardewyck.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the sub-tribe Gorterieæ (q.v.). They are herbaceous plants from South Africa.

gor-tĕr'-ĭ-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gorteri(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A sub-tribe of composite plants, tribe Cynareæ.

gor-tȳ'-na, s. [Lat. Gortyna, Gortys, Gortyn (from Gr.) = (1) a city in the Morea, now in ruins; (2) a city in Crete.]

Entom.: A genus of moths, family Apamidæ. Gortyna flavago is the Frosted Orange.

gŏr'-y, *gŏar'-ȳ, a. [Eng. gore (1), s.; -y.]

1. Covered with gore or congealed blood.

"Hospitable beds
To rest the stranger, or the gory chief."
Dyer: Fleece, bk. iii.

2. Bloody, deadly, murderous.

"The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, iv. 5.

gory-dew, s.

Bot.: Palmella cruenta, an algal of simple organization, common on damp walls in shady places. It appears at first in the form of rosy gelatinous patches, ultimately becoming confluent over a wide expanse, presenting the appearance of coagulated venous blood, whence its English name. (Griffith & Henfrey, &c.)

gos, s. [GOOSE.]

gŏs'-ba, s. [Arab.]

Mus.: An Arabian flute. There are two sorts of the gosba, the one with three holes in the lower extremity, producing four sounds which, with their harmonics at the fifth, complete the octave. The instrument is employed to guide the voice of a singer. The other gosba is larger and pierced with six holes, with a double hole at the back. (Stainer & Barrett.)

gos'-hâwk, gos-hauk, s. [Properly goose-hawk; from A.S. gósháfuc, from gós = a goose, and hafuc = a hawk; Icel. gás-haukr.]

Ornith.: Astur palumbarius, a bird of prey somewhat widely distributed. It is brown above, white underneath, barred across with brown, with five browner bands on the tail; the eyelids whitish. The female is twenty-four or twenty-five inches long, the male almost one-third less. It is abundant in parts of the European continent. The Goshawk of the northern United States (A. atricapillus) is a larger and handsomer bird, but otherwise little different. The Goshawk can be used, as it often is in the East Indies, for falconry. It pursues its prey directly, instead of swooping down upon it from above like a falcon.

"The goshawk was in high esteem among falconers."
—Pennant: British Zoology: Goshawk.

gō'-shĕn-īte, s. [Named from Goshen, in Massachusetts, where it occurs.]

Min.: A variety of beryl.

goş'-lar-īte, s. [From Goslar, in the Harz, where it occurs.]

Min.: An orthorhombic, white, reddish, bluish, transparent or translucent, brittle mineral, of vitreous lustre and nauseous taste. Hardness, 2 to 2·5; sp. gr., 1·9 to 2·1. Compos.: Sulphuric acid, 27·9; oxide of zinc, 28·2; water, 43·9. Found in mines at Holywell, in Wales; at Fahlun, in Sweden, &c. Called also Gallitzenite (q.v.).

gŏş'-lĭńg, *ges-lyng, *gos-lyng, *gos-lynge, s. & a. [A.S. gós = a goose, and Eng. dimin. suff. -ling.]

A. As substantive:

1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

"I'll never Be such a gosling to obey instinct."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, v. 3.

2. A catkin on nut-trees and pines.

3. An unfledged bird.

4. A goose, a silly fellow, a simpleton.

B. As adj.: Silly, stupid.

"Surprised at all they met, the gosling pair . . .
Discover huge cathedrals, built with stone."
Cowper: Progress of Error, 379.

gŏş'-pĕl, *gods-pel, *godds-pel, *gods-pelle, *gos-pelle, s. & a. [A.S. godspell, from god = God, and spell = a story, a history; Icel. gudhspjall = God-story; O. H. Ger. gotspel. It is not from A.S. gód = good, and spell, though this derivation would exactly agree with the Gr. εὐαγγέλιον (euanggelion) = good message, from εὖ (eu) = well, and ἄγγελος (anggelos) = a messenger.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II. 1.

(2) In the same sense as II. 2.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Anything which announces good news, political, social, personal, or of any other character.

(2) Anything accepted as infallibly true; as, You must not take the words just for gospel.

(3) Anything constituting a powerful principle of action.

II. Technically:

1. Scrip. & Theol.: A term signifying good news, founded originally on certain words used by the angel in the annunication of the Saviour's birth: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy" (Luke ii. 10). It is generally held to signify salvation through the atoning death of Christ.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Matthew xvi. 15.

¶ Some minor Christian sects adopt the word Gospel in this sense as part of their name. There are several sects thus entitled in Great Britain, bearing the followiog names: (1) Gospel Army Mission, (2) Gospel Band, and (3) Gospel Temperance Blue Ribbon Army. The first two are of recent origio, the last is older.

2. Script. Canon, &c.: The four canonical records of our Saviour's life, by St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John. This signification of the word is derived from the first one. It is the historical narrative of that first advent of Christ, the announcement of which was disclosed by the angel to be good tidings [ii. 1]. The titles are not worded the Gospel by Matthew, by Mark, &c.; it is the Gospel according to Matthew, according to Mark, &c. This implies that the gospel is that of God (Rom. xv. 16; 1 Thess. ii. 2, &c.) or of Christ (Mark i. 1; Rom. i. 16, &c.) as related by Matthew, by Mark, &c. In one place, however, St. Paul says "my gospel" (1 Tim. ii. 8). In the New Testament the word gospel, εὐαγγέλιον (euanggelion) is used only of communications made orally. The earliest known use of the term for written accounts of the Saviour's life, is in Justin Martyr's first "Apology," about A.D. 150. He speaks of "Memories of the Apostles, called Gospels." Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons from 177 to 202, used the word gospel for the four evangelical narratives taken collectively [CANON]; but he also employs it of each of them taken separately, and speaks of their "fourfoldness." He places them in the order which now obtains, as do Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Eusebius, and the early church generally. Some investigators however, think that Mark's gospel comes first in time; that the next was perhaps Matthew, that Luke was the third, and John certainly the last. The first three are called synoptics, because they all look at the events which they describe from the same point of view; while the stand-point of John is quite different. [SYNOPTIC.] Though the Gospels stand in the New Testament before the Epistles, some of the latter undoubtedly preceded them in point of time. [JOHN, LUKE, MARK, MATTHEW.]

3. Liturgy: The part of the gospels prescribed in the Prayer-book to be read on any particular day in the Communion service.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the gospel in any of the senses enumerated under A.

¶ Obvious compounds: Gospel-offer, gospel-preacher, gospel-sermon, &c.

gospel-book, *godspel-bok, *goddspell-boc, s. The gospel.

"Noght ne seyyth the goddspellboc Thatt Josæp wass thærinne."
Ormulum, 6,458.

gospel-gossip, s. One who is over-zealous in preaching religion to his neighbours.

gospel-lights, s. pl.

Eccles. & Ch. Hist.: Two lighted candles borne by acolytes who stand facing the deacon as he intones the gospel at high mass.

gospel-side, s.

Eccles. & Ch. Hist.: The side of the church corresponding with the corner or horn of the altar at which the gospel is read.

"The acolytes, bearing their tapers elevated, and the thurifer, with the incense, proceed to the gospel-side of the sanctuary."—Rock: Hierurgia, p. 14.

gospel-wright, *goddspell-wrihhte, s. The composer or author of one of the gospels; an evangelist.

"An otherr goddspellwrihhte was Marcus."
Ormulum, 5,773.

 gŏs'-pĕl, v.t. [GOSPEL, s.] To instruct in the precepts of the gospel; to fill with sentiments of religion.

"Are you so gospelled
To pray for this good man and for his issue, Whose heavy hand hath bowed you to the grave?"
Shakesp.: Macbeth, iii. 1.

gŏs'-pĕl-īze, v.t. [GOSPELLIZE.]

 gŏs'-pĕl-la-rȳ, a. [Eng. gospel; -ary.] Of or pertaining to the gospel; theological, evangelical.

"Let any man judge how well these gospellary principles of our Presbyterians agree with the practice and doctrine of the holy apostles."—The Cloak in its Colours (1679).

gŏs'-pĕl-lĕr, * god-spel-ler, * gods-pel-lere, * gos-pel-ere, * gos-pel-lere, * gos-pel-lour, s. [Eng. gospel; -er.]

 1. One of the four evangelists.

"Mark the gospeller was the goostli son of Petre in baptysm."—Wycliffe: The Prologue of Marke.

 2. One who preaches the gospel; an adherent of the Reformed faith, in contradistinction from a Roman Catholic, the former, in the sixteenth century, giving a prominence to preaching, in which they were not imitated by their opponents.

"The persecution was carried on against the gospellers with much fierceness by those of the Romau persuasion."—Strype: Memorials of Archbishop Cranmer, bk. iii., ch. xvi.

3. The priest or deacon who reads the gospel in the Communion service.

"The Archbishop of York was the celebrant, the epistoller being the Dean, and the gospeller the Bishop of Sydney."—Pall Mall Gazette, Feb. 7, 1884.

4. A contemptuous term for an evangelical preacher. [HOT-GOSPELLER.]

 gŏs'-pĕl-līze, s. [Eng. gospel; -ize.]

1. To form or lay down as gospel.

"The command thus gospellized to us hath the same force with that whereon Ezra grounded the pious necessity of divorcing."—Milton: Doct. & Discipline of Divorce, bk. i., ch. viii.

2. To convert by preaching the gospel to; to evangelize.

"In the meantime give me leave to put you in mind of what is done in the Corporation (whereof you are a member) for gospellizing (as they phrase it) the natives of New England."—Boyle: Works, vol. i., p. 109. Life.

 gŏs'-pĕl-lў, adv. [Eng. gospel; -ly.] According to the teaching of the Gospel.

 goss, * gosse, s. [GORSE.]

gŏs'-sa-mĕr, *gŏs'-sa-mĕre, *gose-somer, * gos-so-mer, * gos-som-mer, * gos-so-myre, * gos-sum-mer, s. & a. [Lit. goose-summer; cf. Ger. sommerfäden (summer-threads) = gossamer; Dut. zomerdraden (summer-threads) = gossamer; Sw. sommertråd (summer-tread) = gossamer.]

* 1. The slender cobweb-like threads which are seen floating in the air in calm clear weather, especially in autumn. They can also be seen on a clear frosty morning on furze-bushes, grass, &c.

"Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamere."
Drayton: The Court of Fairy.

2. A thin, filmy silk veil or gauze.

* gŏs'-sa-mĕr-y, a. [Eng. gossamer; -y.] Like gossamer; filmy; unsubstantial.

gŏs'-san, gŏz'-zan, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Mining: The upper part of a metallic vein, presenting a red and ferruginous appearance, produced by the decomposition of the iron pyrites contained in or associated with the ore; the matrix in which a metallic ore is imbedded.

"There [in North Devon] the matrix or gossan of the lode [of copper ore] is suffused by particles of gold."—Murchison: Silluria, ch. xvii.

gŏs-san-if'-er-oŭs, a. [Eng. gossan; -i connective; Lat. fero = to produce, and suff. -ous.] Producing gossan.

gŏs'-sĭb, s. [Gossip.]

gŏs'-sip, * god-sib, * god-sibbe, * god-sybbe, * gos-sib, * gos-syp, s. [A.S. god = God, and sib = kin, relative.] [Gossib.]

* 1. A sponsor in baptism; a godfather or godmother.

"They had mothers as we had; and those mothers had gossips (if their children were christened) as we are."—Ben Jonson: Staple of News. (Induction.)

* 2. (Pl.): Sponsors engaged in familiar talk with each other.

* 3. (Pl.): Those who engage in trivial talk, whether they are sponsors or not.

"The gossips report
She has come to King Olaf's court."
Longfellow: Musician's Tale.

4. A friend; a neighbour; an intimate acquaintance.

"One mother, . . . her little babe reuil'd,
And to her gossips gan in counsell say."
Spenser: F. Q., I. xii. 11.

5. One who runs about tattling and repeating tales; an idle tattler.

"The common chat of gossips when they meet."
Dryden: Hind & Panther, iii. 908.

* 6. A tippling, gossiping woman.

"Sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 1.

7. Mere tattle; idle talk; trifling or unfounded rumour or talk.

"Bubbles o'er like a city with gossip, scandal, and spite." Tennyson: Maud, I. iv. 8.

gŏs'-sip, v.t. & i. [Gossip, s.]

* A. Trans.: To stand gossip or sponsor to; to christen.

"Adoptious christendom,
That blinking Cupid gossips."
Shakesp.: All's Well That Ends Well, i. 1.

B. Intransitive:

1. To talk familiarly; to chat.

"Noisy groups at the house-door
Sat in the cheerful sun, and rejoiced and gossiped together."
Longfellow: Evangeline, i. 4.

2. To chatter; to run about repeating tales or tittle-tattle.

"Those little jarrings and dissonances which arise from anger, censoriousness, gossiping, and coquetry."—Steele: Spectator, No. 147.

* 3. To make merry, as at a christening feast.

"With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, v.

* 4. To make a ceaseless chattering noise.

"Flax for the gossiping looms."
Longfellow: Evangeline, i. 1.

gŏs'-sip-ĕr, s. [Eng. gossip; -er.] One who gossips; a gossip.

* gŏs'-si-prēd, * gos-si-prede, * god-si-brede, s. [A.S. god = God: sibræden = relation, kin.]

1. The condition of a gossip or sponsor in baptism; relationship through baptism; sponsorship.

"Gossipred or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent."—Davies.

2. Intimacy; close acquaintance.

3. Gossip; idle talk; tittle-tattle.

* gŏs'-sip-ry, * gŏs'-sip-rie, s. [Eng. gossip; -ry.] The condition or state of gossips; close intimacy.

"He was seized hard & fast on the bishoprick, whereby all gossiprie gade up between him and my uncle Mr. Andrew."—Melvill: MS., p. 36.

gŏs'-sip-y, a. [Eng. gossip; -y.] Full of gossip; inclined to gossip: as, a gossipy woman.

"A writer of amusing gossipy letters."—Athenæum, Feb. 25, 1882.

* gŏs'-sō-mĕr, s. [Gossamer.]

gŏs-sōo'n, gor-soon, s. [Fr. garçon = a boy.] A boy, a lad. (Irish.) gŏs-sȳp'-i-ŭm, s. [Lat. gossypion, gossipion, gossympinus. (Pliny.)]

Bot.: A genus of Malvaceæ, tribe Hibisceæ. The leaves are generally three or five-lobed; around the flower is an involucre, cordate at the base, and terminating at the apex in three broad, deeply-cut segments. Calyx five-toothed, corolla of five petals, stamens united into a column, fruit a three or five-celled capsule, each cell when ripe bursting through the middle and exhibiting the seeds enveloped in cotton. The species cultivated in the United States, which furnishes so much cotton to Lancashire, is Gossypium barbadense, of which there are two well marked varieties, the Sea-island or Long-staple cotton, and the Upland, Georgian, Bowed, or Short-staple cotton; that of India, largely brought into use during the American civil war of 1861 to 1865, is G. herbaceum. How many more species exist has not been determined, the genus being very variable. A bland oil is made from the seeds, which also, after having been pressed, have been used as a food for cattle. Martius states that in Brazil the young leaves and seeds of Gossypium vitifolium are used in dysentery, and steeped in vinegar are applied to the head in hemicrania.

* gost, s. [Ghost.]

* gōst'-ĭng, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Bot.: "An herb." Ainsworth, quoted by Johnson, who calls it Rubia. If so, it is a madder.

gŏt, pret. & pa. par. of v. [Get, v.]

* gŏtch, s. [Ital. gozzo = a kind of bottle; gotto = a drinking-glass.] A water-pot, a pitcher.

"A gotch of milk I've been to fill."
Bloomfield: Richard & Kate.

gote (1), gowt, s. [Dut. goot; Low Ger. góte; Ger. gosse.]

1. A sluice, a drain, a gutter.

"Gote, or water schetelys. Aquagium, stinglocitorium."—Prompt. Parv.

2. A slough, a miry place.

* gote (2), s. [Goat.]

* got-er, s. [Gutter.]

Gŏth, s. [Lat. Gothi = the Goths.]

1. Lit.: One of an ancient race belonging to the Teutones, who originally occupied a great portion of European and Asiatic Russia. Filmer, their king, conducted a body of his nation to the coast of the Euxine, where it afterwards increased into a numerous and formidable people under the names of Visigoths and Ostrogoths, the former occupying the countries to the west of the Dnieper, the latter those to the east. The Visigoths crossed the Danube, plundered Rome and Italy, and fixed their residence in Spain, while their kindred, the Ostrogoths, took possession of Italy, which they held till A.D. 544, when they were overthrown by Narses, general of Justinian. From this time the Goths as a nation make no figure in history, except in Spain; but traces of their language, manners, and arts are still to be found in every country of the East. A branch of the Visigoths, settled in Mœsia, the modern Bulgaria, are known as Mœsogoths, and the translation of a great portion of the Bible by Wulfila, or Ulfila, a Christian bishop, about A.D. 350, fragments only of which have come down to us, is the earliest known specimen of the Gothic or Teutonic tribe of tongues.

2. Fig.: A barbarian; one deficient in or utterly without taste; a rude, ignorant person.

gō'-tham-ĭst, s. [See def.] An inhabitant or native of Gotham, a village in Nottinghamshire, said to be celebrated for the blunders made by its inhabitants.

gō'-tham-īte, s. [Eng. Gotham; -ite.]

1. A Gothamist.

2. A term applied in sport to an inhabitant of New York city, sometimes known as Gotham.

gŏt'-har-dīte, s. [From the St. Gothard Alps, where it occurs.]

Min.: The same as Dufrenoysite (q.v.).

* gothelen, v.i. [Cf. Icel. gutla.] To rumble, as the stomach.

"Hise guttes bigonne to gothelen."
P. Plowman, 3,167.

gŏth'-ĭc, * gŏth'-ĭck, a. & s. [Lat. Gothicus.]

A. As adjective:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: Of or pertaining to the Goths; as, Gothic customs, &c.

"Confining his labours almost wholly to religious and legendary histories, he [Albert Durer] turned the Testament into the history of a Flemish village; the habits of Herod, Pilate, Joseph, &c., their dwellings, their utensils, and their customs, were all Gothic and European."—Walpole: Catalogue of Engravers, vol. v.

2. Fig.: Rude, uncivilized, barbarous.

"The Gothic cloud
Of time and language o'er thy genius thrown."
Thomson: Summer, 1,578.

II. Arch.: A term sometimes used to distinguish mediæval from classical architecture. In a more limited sense it comprehends those styles only of mediæval architecture which are characterized by the pointed arch. In the narrower sense, Gothic architecture dates from the middle of the twelfth century; in the wider, it includes as well Anglo-Saxon, which prevailed from the close of the sixth to the middle of the eleventh century, and also Anglo-Norman, which flourished during the succeeding hundred years. The latter was followed by the Semi-Norman or Transition; this gave place, at the beginning of the thirteenth century, to Early English, and this, at the commencement of the fourteenth century to Decorated English, replaced at the beginning of the fifteenth century by the Florid, or Perpendicular. Gothic architecture attained its perfection in the Decorated English period. The free, flowing lines and the chaste ornamentation by which it is distinguished, degenerated into the stiff, staring lines and the too-elaborate decoration of the Perpendicular; and the process of debasement continued until, in the early part of the seventeenth century, Gothic fell into entire disuse. Towards the close of the eighteenth century a re-action began, and the movement has gone on gathering strength ever since. [Decorated, Early English, Perpendicular, Pointed.]

B. As substantive:

I. Ord. Lang.: The language of the Goths. It belongs to the Low German group of the Teutonic dialects, to which belong English, Frisian, Dutch, Flemish, and Old Saxon. It is the oldest and most primitive of the Teutonic dialects of which any remains are known; it was spoken by the eastern and western Goths, who occupied the province of Dacia. It is closely akin to English and Dutch.

II. Technically:

1. Arch.: The Gothic style of architecture. [A. II.]

"The parish church of Lambeth is at a small distance from the Palace, has a plain tower, and the architecture is of the Gothic of the time of Edward IV."—Pennant: London; Lambeth Church.

2. Print.: A name given to a bold-faced type, used for titling and jobbing work.

* gŏth'-ĭc-al, a. [Eng. gothic; -al.] The same as Gothic (q.v.).

* gŏth'-ĭ-çĭsm, s. [Eng. Gothic; -ism.]

1. A Gothic idiom or custom.

2. Conformity to the Gothic style of architecture.

3. Rudeness of manners; barbarousness.

"Night, gothicism, confusion, and absolute chaos are come again."—Shenstone.

gŏth'-ĭ-çīze, v.t. [Eng. Gothic; -ize.] To make Gothic; to bring back to barbarousness.

* gŏth'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. Goth; -ish.] Pertaining to or resembling the Goths; Gothic; rude; uncivilized.

goth'-īte (o as ę), s. [Named after the great German poet Göthe, or Goethe, who was born in 1749, and died in 1832.]

Min.: An orthorhombic, yellowish, reddish, or dark-brown mineral, sometimes blood-red by transmitted light. Lustre imperfectly adamantine. Hardness, 5 to 5·5; sp. gr., 4·0 to 4·4. Compos.: sesquioxide of iron, 83·5 to 90·5; sesquioxide of manganese, 0 to 2·5; silica, 0 to 4·3; and water, 9·4 to 11·5. Found at Clifton,

In Gloucestershire; near Botallack and Lostwithiel, in Cornwall; in Saxony, &c. Called also Pyrrhosiderite and Onegite (q.v.). (Dana.) Mr. W. J. Sollas describes it also as occurring in the Rhymney quarry in bedding-planes of rocks immediately below the Rhymney grit of Silurian age, near Cardiff. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxxv. 505.)

 got-ish, a. [Goatish.]

gôu-ā'-nĭ-a, s. [Named after Anthony Gouan, Professor of Botany, at Montpelier.]

Bot.: A genus of Rhamnaceæ, consisting of evergreen climbers. Gouania domingensis, a species from the West Indies and Brazil, is atomachic.

 goud, s. [Woad.]

gouge, * goode, * gowge, s. [Fr. gouge, from Low Lat. guvia = a kind of chisel; Sp. gubia; Port. goiva.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II. 3.

2. Fig.: A cheat; an imposition; an impostor. (Amer.)

II. Technically:

1. Bookbind.: A finisher's hand-tool for blind-tooling or gilding, having a face which forms a curve.

2. A shaped incising-tool used for cutting out forms or blanks for gloves, envelopes, or other objects cut to a shape from fabric, leather, or paper.

3. Wood-work.: A chisel with a curved blade adapted to make a rounded groove in cutting or turning wood. They are known as flat, middle, and quick; their curves being respectively obtuse, medium, and acute. The gouge existed in early ages in stone, bone, and bronze.

gouge-bit, s. A wood-boring tool used in a brace. It has a rounded end, and a groove which contains the chips.

gouge-slip, s. An oil-stone or hone slip, for sharpening on the concave side of the edge of the gouge.

gouge, * googe, v.t. [Gouge, s. Fr. gouger.]

I. Lit.: To scoop out or make a groove in with a gouge.

"Googing of hem out
Just to the size of my bottles, and not slicing."
Ben Jonson: The Devil is an Ass, ii. 1.

II. Figuratively:

1. To force out the eye of with the thumb or finger.

2. To cheat; to impose upon. (Amer.)

 gou-jeers, * good-ier, * good-year, * good-yere, s. [Fr. goujère, from gouge = a trull.] The venereal disease.

"The goodyeurs shall devour them."
Shakesp.: Lear, v. 3.

 goul, s. [Ghoul.]

 goul, * goule, * goul-en, * gowle, v.i. [Icel. gaula.] To howl, to yowl, to cry aloud, to shout.

"Sone of man, cry thou and goul."—Wycliffe: Ezekiel xxi. 12.

 gôul'-and, s. [A.S. geolo = yellow.] A flower; perhaps the gowan or mountain daisy.

Gou-lard', s. [Named after Thomas Goulard, a surgeon at Montpelier, about A.D. 1750, who discovered it.]

Pharm.: The same as Goulard's-extract.

goulard's-extract, s.

Pharm.: A saturated solution of basic lead acetate. It is used as a lotion in cases of inflammation.

goule (1), s. [O. Fr. goule; Fr. gueule; Lat. gula.] The throat.

"There may be seue ane throll, or aynding stede,
To Acheron reuin doun that hellis sye, Gapand with his pestiferus goule full wyde."
Douglas: Virgil, 227, 45.

 goule (2), s. [Ghoul.]

 goules, * gowlys, s. [Gules.]

 goune, s. [Gown.]

gour, s. [Gaur.]

gôu'-ra, s. [The name in some of the Eastern islands.]

Ornith.: Ground pigeon; the typical genus of the family Gouridæ. Goura coronata is the size of a turkey. It is wild in the Eastern Archipelago, and is domesticated in Java.

gôur'-a-mĭ, s. [Gohamy.]

gourd (1), * goord, * gourde, * gowrde, s. [O. F. youhourde, coharde, congourde, choourde; Fr. gourde, from Lat. cucurbita = a gourd; prob. connected with corbis = a basket.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. In the same sense as II.

"The gourd and olive brown Weave the light roof." Dyer: Ruins of Rome.

2. A bottle or vessel for carrying water, so called from its shape.

"I haue heer in a gourde
A draught of wyn." Chaucer: C. T., 17,014.

II. Technically:

1. Bot.: Cucurbita pepo; a hispid plant, with tendrils, large yellow flowers, and oblong or ovate fruit; a native of Astrachan, but cultivated in many countries. It was introduced into England in A.D. 1570. It has run into many varieties. The fruit is used as a culinary vegetable in soups and stews, or mixed after being sugared and spiced, with sliced apples, to constitute pumpkin pie. Called also the Pumpkin-gourd or Pompion.

2. Scripture: Hebrew קִיקָיוֹן (qiqayon); Septuagint κολοκύνθη (kolokunthē). The Hebrew word is apparently so much akin to the Greek word κίκι (kiki) used by Dioscorides for the castor-oil plant (Ricinus communis), that the "gourd" of Scripture was probably that species. It is a euphorbiaceous plant, and not of the order Cucurbitaceæ. For the wild gourd of Scripture, see ¶ (2).

¶ (1) Of the genuine Cucurbitaceæ, the Bitter or Colocynth Gourd is Citrullus Colocynthis; the Bottle, Club, or Trumpet Gourd is Lagenaria vulgaris, which so varies in the form of its fruit as to suggest in the several individuals all these appellations. The Gooseberry gourd is Momordica echinata; the Orange gourd is Cucurbita aurantia; Red gourd and Spanish gourd are popular names for Cucurbita maxima, the flesh of which, when boiled, is like a tender carrot; the Snake gourd is the genus Trichosanthes, and especially T. colubrina; the Squash gourd is Cucurbita Melopepo; and the White gourd is Benincasa cerifera. It is extensively used by the natives of India in their curries.

(2) The Wild Gourd of Scripture: Hebrew pl. פַּקֻּעוֹת (paquoth), and פַּקָּעִים (peqaim). It is from פָּקַע (paqa) = to be split or burst. It is a plant which grew on a wild vine,—i.e., was procumbent, and had tendrils. It moreover produced "death in the pot;" discoverable in a moment by the taste. It was probably either the Colocynth (Citrullus Colocynthis), or the Squirting Cucumber (Momordica Elaterium), the one called by Gesenius by its ancient name, Cucumis agrestis.

(3) In Lindley's Natural System of Botany, the order Cucurbitaceæ is called the Gourd tribe, altered in his Vegetable Kingdom to Cucurbits.

gourd-shell, s. The shell or rind of the gourd, which is used for drinking-cups, &c.

"It [the catalogue of household utensils] consists of gourd-shells, which they convert into vessels that serve as bottles to hold water, and as baskets to contain their victuals and other things, with covers of the same; and of a few wooden bowls and treuchers of different sizes."—Cook: Voyages, vol. vi., bk. iii., ch. 9.

gourd-tree, s.

Bot.: Crescentia Cujete, more frequently called in English the Calabash tree (q.v.). See also Crescentia.

gourd-worm, s.

Zool.: The same as fluke worm (q.v.). It infests the liver of the sheep.

 gôurd, * gord (2), s. [O. Fr. gourt.] A kind of false dice, probably so called from being hollowed out.

"To eke out your living . . .
By fulham and gourd."
Scott: Fortunes of Nigel, ch. xxvii.

gôurde (1), s. [Sp. gordo = large.] The Franco-American name for the colonial dollar in use in Hayti, Cuba, &c.

 gourde (2), * gourd-er, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A torrent.

"Let the gourders of raine come doune."—Harding: Against Jewel, p. 189.

gôurd'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gourdy; -ness.]

Farr.: The quality or state of being gourdy or swelled in the legs; a swelling in a horse's leg, after a journey.

 gôurd'-ĭng, s. [Eng. gourd; -ing.]

Farr.: The same as Gourdiness (q.v.).

gourd-y, a. [Eng. gourd (1); -y.]

Farr.: Swelled in the legs, as a horse after a journey.

gour-i dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. goura (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ornith.: Ground-pigeons; a family of pigeons having certain affinities to the gallinaceous birds. They feed on the ground in flocks. They occur in the hotter parts of both the Eastern and Western hemispheres.

gour-ī'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. &c. gour(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.] Ornith.: A sub-family of Columbidæ (Pigeons), sometimes elevated into a family Gouridæ (q.v.).

gour'-lĭ-ĕ-a, s. [Named after Mr. Robert Gourlie, who gathered plants at Mendoza.]

Bot.: A genus of papilionaceous plants, tribe Sophoreæ. The pulp of the fruit is used at Buenos Ayres to flavour sweet wine.

gour'-mand, * gour-mond, s. & a. [Fr.]

A. As substantive:

1. A greedy or gluttonous eater; a glutton.

"That great gourmond, fat Apicius."
Ben Jonson: Sejanus, i. 1.

2. An epicure; a daioty feeder.

B. As adj.: Greedy, gluttonous, gormandizing.

 gour'-mand-dĕr, s. [Eng. gourmand; -er.] A gormandizer.

"The Persians are great gourmanders and greedy gluttons."—P. Holland: Plutarch, p. 385.

 gour'-mand-ize, v.i. [Gormandize, v.]

 gour'-mand-ize, s. [Gormandise, s.]

gour'-mêt (t silent), s. [Fr. = a connoisseur in or judge of wines.] An epicure; a dainty feeder; a connoisseur in wines and meats; a man of keen palate.

gour-net, s. [Gurnet.]

gous-ly, s. An old form of harp used by the Slavonians, whose bards were called gouslas, the poetry which they chanted being called gouslo.

 goûs'-troûs, a. [Goustу (2).] Gusty, dark, wet, stormy; as, a goustrous night.

 goûst'-ў (1), goûst'-lĕ, a. [Low Lat. guastus; Ital. guasto; Fr. gast = waste, desert.]

1. Waste, desolate, deserted.

"Wind like this, at twal o'clock at night, to thir wild gousty wa's?"—Scott. Antiquary, ch. xxv.

2. Ghostly; preternatural.

3. Ghastly.

 goûst'-ў (2), a. [Gusty.]

goût (1), * goute, * gowte, s. [Fr. goutte, from Lat. gutta = a drop.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A drop.

"I see thee still,
And on the blade o' th' dudgeon gouts of blood."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, ii. 1.

2. In the same sense as II.

"The goute lette hir nothing for to daunce."
Chaucer: C. T., 16,394.

II. Pathol.: A disease produced by the excess of uric acid in the blood in the form of urate of soda. It is usually hereditary, is rare before the age of thirty, and generally arises from excessive indulgence in wines or malt liquors, the last giving rise to "poor man's gout." It is rarely produced by the use of spirits, and is therefore much less common in Scotland than in England, whisky being the national intoxicant in the former country. The great toe is the part most frequently affected, pain and irritability are leading symptoms; it may become chronic, and is very intractable to treatment. When it attacks internal parts it is termed irregular or retrocedent gout, and is proportionately more dangerous. Diet requires strict regulation, with abstemiousness or abstinence from alcoholic liquors. Colchicum, &c., internally, and certain mineral waters, such as Buxton and Bath and various German waters, are useful in the treatment of this complaint. Excessive exertion and fatigue, or mental labour, have been known to produce gout also, but whenever it is, as it usually is, hereditary, extreme precautions ought to be taken to prevent the occurrence or recurrence of an attack.

gout-stones, s. pl.

Pathol.: The same as CHALK-STONES (q.v.).

gout-weed, s.

Bot.: Ægopodium podagraria. [GOAT-WEED.]

goût (t silent) (2), s. [Fr. goût, from Lat. gusto = to taste.] A taste; a relish; a liking. [GUST.]

"Catalogues serve for a direction to any one that has a gout for the like studies."—Woodward: On Fossils.

gŏût'-ĕn, gowt-on, v.i. [Fr. goutter, from Lat. gutto, from gutta = a drop.] To drop or gutter as a candle.

"Gowton, as candelys. Gutto."—Prompt. Parv.

gŏût'-ĭ-lў, adv. [Eng. gouty; -ly.] In a gouty manner.

gŏût'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gouty; -ness.] The quality or state of being gouty.

gŏût'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gout; -ish.] Inclined or predisposed to gout; in some degree affected by gout; gouty.

gŏût'-ŏŭs, gowt-us, a. [O. Fr. gutus, guteux.] Gouty.

"A quene gowtus and croket."—Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 196.

gŏût'-wŏrt, s. [In this word gout seems to be a corruption of Eng. goat, and wort.] The same as GOAT-WEED (q.v.).

gŏût'-ў, a. [Eng. gout; -y.]

I. Literally:

1. Suffering from or diseased with the gout; subject to the gout.

"Not giving like to those, whose gifts though scant Pain them as if they gave with gouty hand."
Darenant: Gondibert, i. 6.

2. Pertaining to the gout.

"The settlement of a gouty matter in the substance of the lungs."—Blackmore.

3. Swollen as though with gout.

"Which makes the young shoots tumify and grow knotty and gouty."—Derham: Physico-Theology, bk. vi., ch. vi. (Note 22.)

II. Figuratively:

1. Swollen out of proportion.

"This humour in historians hath made the body of ancient history in some parts so gouty and monstrous."—Spenser.

2. Boggy: as, gouty land.

gouty-bronchitis, s.

Pathol.: Bronchitis arising as a secondary disease during the progress of gout.

gouty-concretions, s. pl.

Pathol., Chem., &c.: Concretions composed of urate of soda, occurring in the joints, the kidneys, &c., of some persons affected with gout.

gouty-kidney, s.

Pathol.: A kidney morbidly affected during the progress of gout. It usually shrivels to one-half or one-third of its usual size, and contains secretions of urate of soda. [GOUTY-CONCRETIONS.]

gouty-neuritis, s.

Pathol.: Inflammation of a nerve in a gouty or rheumatic subject. It is believed that in such a constitution it may occur idiopathically.

gouty-stemmed, a. (See the compound.)

¶ Gouty-stemmed tree:

Bot.: An Australian name for Delabechea rupestris, a tree with a bulged-out stem; called also the Bottle-tree.

gŏve, s. [GOFF (2).] A rick, stack, or mow of hay.

gŏve, v.i. [GOVE, s.] To put hay into a stack, rick, or mow.

"In goving at harvest, learn skillfully how,
Each grain for to lay by itself on a mow."
Tusser: August's Husbandry.

gŏv'-ĕrn, gov-erne, gov-ern-i, gov-ern-y, gov-ern-yn, v.t. & i. [O. Fr. governer (Fr. gouverner), from Lat. guberno, from Gr. κυβερνῶ (kubernō) = to steer a ship; Sp. gobernar; Port. governar; Ital. governare.]

A. Transitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

 1. To steer, to manage a ship, to pilot.

"He lakked schipmen to governe here schippes."—Trevisa, iv. 63.

2. To regulate the course or motion of; as, A helm governs a ship.

3. To manage, to direct, to regulate.

"And for His glory all things made, all things Orders and governs." Milton P. R., iii. 112.

4. To rule as a chief magistrate; to direct and control, as the actions and conduct of men, by established laws or arbitrary will; to regulate by authority.

"After king [Lud] ther was kyng ys brother Cassibel, That noble prince was y now & that lond gouernede wel." Robert of Gloucester, p. 44.

 5. To regulate; to order.

"If ye governe yow by sapience put away sorwe out of youre hert."—Chaucer: Tale of Melibeus, p. 141.

 6. To control; to restrain.

"She's desperate: govern her."—Shakesp.: Lear, v. 3.

II. Gram.: To cause to be in a particular case: as, A verb transitive governs the noun in the accusative case; to require a particular case to follow: as, A verb governs the accusative case.

B. Intransitive:

1. To exercise authority, to administer the law; to be or act as governor or ruler.

"While the chief magistrate governs according to the law he ought to be obeyed."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xi.

2. To maintain the superiority; to have the control, to prevail.

"The heart of brothers governs in our loves."
Shakesp.: Antony & Cleopatra, ii. 2.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between to govern, to rule, and to regulate: "The exercise of authority enters more or less into the signification of these terms; but to govern implies the exercise likewise of judgment and knowledge. To rule implies rather the unqualified exercise of power, the making the will the rule; a king governs his people by means of wise laws and an upright administration: a despot rules over a nation according to his arbitrary decision. These terms are applied either to persons or things: persons govern or rule others; or they govern, rule, or regulate things. In regard to persons, govern is always in a good sense, but rule is sometimes taken in a bad sense; it is naturally associated with an abuse of power: to govern is so perfectly discretionary, that we speak of governing ourselves; but we speak only of ruling others. To govern necessarily supposes the adoption of judicious means; but ruling is confined to no means but such as will obtain the end of subjecting the will of one to that of another. Regulate is a species of governing simply by judgment; the word is applicable to things of minor moment, where the force of authority is not so requisite: one governs the affairs of a nation, or a large body where great interests are involved; we regulate the concerns of an individual, or we regulate in cases where good order or convenience only is consulted: so likewise in regard to ourselves, we govern our passions, but we regulate our affections." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) gŏv'-ĕrn, s. [O. Fr. governe; Fr. gouverne; Port. & Ital. governo; Sp. gobierno.] Government.

"His bischoprickes laadde ibeo withoute govern and rede."—Life of Beket (1739).

gŏv'-ĕrn-ą-ble, a. [Eng. govern; -able.]

1. That may or can be governed, ruled, or managed; manageable, tractable, obedient.

"'Only this I must acknowledge,' he mildly added; 'they were not governable.'"—Macaulay. Hist. Eng., ch. v.

2. Pliable, manageable.

"There is not a more tonsile and governable plant in nature."—Evelyn: On Forest Trees, ch. xxiii.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ą-ble-nĕss, s. [Eng. governable; -ness.] The quality or state of being governable; tractability.

"It is likely that governableness was not his strong point."—Saturday Review, Jan. 26, 1883, p. 120.

gov-ern-aille, gov-ern-all, gov-ern ayl, gov-ern-ayle, s. [O. Fr. governail; Fr. gouvernail, from Lat. gubernaculum = a rudder, from guberno = to steer.]

1. A helm, a rudder.

"And lo schippis whanne thei ben greete, and ben dryuun of stronge windis, yet thei ben borun aboute of a litil gouernail."—Wyclife: James iii.

2. Government, rule, authority, direction, management.

"He of his gardin had the governale." Spenser F. Q., II. xii. 43.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ąnçe, gov-ern-aunce, s. [Fr. gouvernance.]

1. Government, rule, management, direction, regulation.

"Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time."—1 Maccabees ix. 31.

2. Control, management, restraint.

"What; shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloster's governance?"
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., i. 1.

3. Behaviour, manners.

"Now schalle I telle you the governance of the court of the grete Chan."—Maundeville, p. 232.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ante, s. [Fr. gouvernante, fem. pr. par. of gouverner = to govern.] A lady who has the charge of children; a governess.

"The very picture of the governante of one of your noblemen's houses."—L'Estrange: Quevedo's Visions, p. 38.

gŏv-ĕrn-ā'-tion, gov-er-na-cioń, s. [Lat. gubernatio.] Government, regulation.

"And tables as wel for the gouernacion of the clock, as to find the altitude, meridian, and many another note conclusion."—Chaucer: Of the Astrolabie.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ĕss, gou-vern-esse, gov-ern-esse, s. [O. Fr. gouverneusse, from Lat. gubernatrix; Ital. governatrice.]

 1. A woman invested with authority to regulate, control, or direct.

"The Lady Mgargaret, gouernesse of Flaunders."—Hall: Henry VIII. (an. 17).

2. A lady who has the care and instruction of young children; a tutoress.

"Frances de Maintenon, the governess of his natural children."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xi.

 3. Anything which directs, controls, or instructs; an instructress.

"Shall cruelties be your gouernesse Alas, what hart may it long endure."
Chaucer: La Belle Dame sans Merci.

 4. The wife of the governor of a prison.

"The governess of the mansion had, out of curiosity followed her into the room."—Fielding: Amelia, bk. iv., ch. ii.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ĕss-ĭńg, s. [Eng. governess; -ing.] The profession or occupation of a governess.

"Those who take up 'governessing,' because it is genteel."—E. J. Worboise: Susie, ch. xxi.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ĕss-shĭp, s. [Eng. governess; -ship.] The office, post, or duties of a governess.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ĭńg, gov-ern-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [GOVERN, v.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adj.: Holding the superiority; having the control; controlling, prevalent, directing: as, a governing party, a governing wind.

C. As subst.: Government, rule, authority, power.

"The Frenche kynge had hen vnder the gouernynge of his vncles euer syth the dethe of the laste kynge his father."—Bernes: Froissart's Cronycle, vol. ii., ch. cl.

gŏv'-ĕrn-lĕss, a. [Eng. govern; -less.] Without a governor or government.

gŏv'-ĕrn-mĕnt, s. & a. [Fr. gouvernement, from gouverner = to govern; Ital. governamento.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of governing; control, direction, regulation, or administration of public or private affairs.

"The kingly government of this your land."
Shakesp.: Richard III., iii. 7.

2. Guidance, regulation, direction: as, Precepts serve for the government of the conduct.

3. Self-control, evenness of temper.

"Defect of manners, want of government."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., iii. 1.

4. Control; restraint; regulation; moderation.

 5. Manageableness; docility; obedience.

"Each part deprived of supple government, Shall stiff and stark and cold appear, like death."
Shakesp.: Romeo & Juliet, iv. 1.

 6. The power of controlling or regulating.

"Quite beyond the government of patience."
Shakesp.: Cymbeline, ii. 4.

7. The form of policy in a state; the mode or system according to which the legislative, executive, and judicial powers are vested and exercised; a system of laws and customs; a constitution (q.v.). There are numerous forms of government, as aristocracy, democracy, despotism, monarchy, oligarchy, republicanism, &c. (See these words.)

"That ancient constitution and government which is our only security for law and liberty."—Burke: On the French Revolution.

8. The right or power of governing, or of exerting supreme power.

"I here resign my government to thee."
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., iv. 6.

9. An empire, kingdom, or other state; a body politic under one authority; a territory, province, or district under a governor.

10. The council or body of persons entrusted with the administration of the laws; the management of home and foreign affairs, and generally the public business of a state; the administration; the ministry; the executive power.

* 11. Management of the limbs or body. (Spenser.)

II. Gram.: The influence of one word in determining the case of a second: especially of nouns, verbs, and prepositions; the influence of a word in regard to construction.

B. As adj.: Of or pertaining to a government; employed in, by, or for a government: as, a government office, a government official.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between government and administration: "Both these terms may be employed either to designate the act of governing and administering, or the persons governing and administering. In both cases government has a more extensive meaning than administration: the government includes every exercise of authority; the administration implies only that exercise of authority which consists in putting the laws or will of another in force: hence, when we speak of the government, as it respects the persons, it implies the whole body of constituted authorities; and the administration, only that part which puts in execution the intentions of the whole."

(2) He thus discriminates between government and constitution: "Government implies generally the act of governing or exercising authority under any form whatever; constitution implies any constituted or fixed form of government: we may have a government without a constitution; we cannot have a constitution without a government." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) gŏv-ĕrn-mĕnt'-ăl, a. [Eng. government; -al.] Of or pertaining to a government.

"Members . . . favourable to the governmental policy."—Times, Jan. 22, 1856.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ŏr, * gov-ern-our, s. [Fr. gouverneur; Sp. gobernador; Port. governador; Ital. governatore, from Lat. gubernator, from guberno = to steer.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. A steersman; a pilot.

"Neuerthelater the vnder captayne beleued the gouernour and the master, better than the thynges which were spoken of Paule."—Bible, 1551. Acts ch. xxvii.

2. One who is invested with supreme power or authority to administer or enforce the laws in a state; a chief ruler; a chief magistrate; the chief ruler in a colony sent out as representative of the mother country.

3. One who rules with delegated power.

4. One who has the supreme direction or regulation.

"They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies."—Bentley.

5. Anything which has the power or quality of ruling, directing, or regulating.

"The Deity, or that perfect mind which is the supreme governor of all things."—Cudworth: Intellectual System, p. 110.

6. A tutor; a guardian; one who has charge of the education of a young man.

"The heir . . . under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father."—Galatians iv. 1, 2.

7. A person, or one of a number of persons, to whom are intrusted the direction and management of a business, an institution, &c., —occasionally, but not commonly, employed in this sense.

8. A master or superior; an employer. (Slang.)

9. An elderly person; a father. (Slang.)

¶ At first even "fast" young men called one of their parents father, then "governor" was the term employed, now in certain extreme cases it is "relieving officer."

II. Technically:

1. Gas: A device which regulates the passage of gas from the holder to the mains, admitting it thereto in quantities determined by the rate at which it is used. The pressure in the mains determines the area of the opening through which the gas enters. [Gas-governor.]

2. Steam-eng.: A device which regulates the admission of steam to the engine according to the rate of motion. The intention is to maintain uniform velocity, and any acceleration of speed above a given rate causes a valve to be partially closed, diminishing the area of steam passage; contrariwise in case of flagging in the speed of motion of the engine. The favourite form of governor has a pair of balls suspended from a vertical shaft, so as to swing outward when the shaft is rotated. The greater the speed the greater the centrifugal force, and consequently the farther the balls depart from the axis of rotation; the inclination of the ball arms is made effective in working the valve.

governor cut-off, s.

Steam-eng.: An automatic arrangement in which the acceleration or retardation of the motion of the governor, due to changes of speed of the engine, is made to cut off the steam at an earlier or later period of the stroke of the piston, so that with the increased boiler-pressure or lighter work the steam shall be cut off earlier in the stroke, and when greater work is imposed on the engine, or the steam-pressure flags, the steam-cylinder shall receive steam from the boiler during a larger proportion of the stroke of the piston.

governor-general, s. A governor who has under him subordinate or deputy governors; a viceroy: as, the governor-general of India.

governor-valve, s.

Steam-eng.: A valve in a steam-pipe operated by the governor to vary the area of steam, opening according to the rate of moving, and consequently the requirement of the engine; the object being to maintain a uniform rate.

Governor-valve gear:

Steam-eng.: An arrangement of parts whereby the position of the governor balls, resulting from their rate of motion, is made to act upon the induction valve of an engine.

gŏv'-ĕrn-ŏr-shĭp, s. [Eng. governor; -ship.] The position or office of a governor.

gŏw, s. [Gull.]

1. A gull.

2. A fool; a stupid fellow.

"Gow, a name for a fool. What a difference there is between John Gerrond the gow, and George Wishart the sage."—Gall: Encycl., p. 224.

gŏw'-ăn, s. [Gsel & Ir. gugan = a bud, a flower.] A daisy; a perennial plant or flower.

"And now he's had his bit sleep out, and is as fresh as a May gowan, to answer what your honour likes to speir."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. xxxiii.

¶ (1) Ewe-gowan:

Bot.: The common daisy; apparently denominated from the ewe, as being frequently in pastures, and fed on by sheep.

"Some hit waefu' love story, enough to mak the pinks an' the ewe-gowans blush to the very lip."—Brownie of Bodsbeck, i. 215.

(2) Horse-gowan:

Bot.: This name includes the Leontodon, the Hypochæris, and the Crepis.

(3) Large white-gowan:

Bot.: The ox-eye.

"Some of the prevailing weeds in meadows and grass lands are, ox-eye, or large white gowan, chrysanthemum leucanthemum, &c."—Wilson: Renfrewshire, p. 136.

(4) Lucken-gowan:

Bot.: The Globe-flower.

(5) Witch-gowan: (See extract).

"Witch-gowan flowers are large yellow gowans, with a stalk filled with pernicious sap, resembling milk, which when anointed on the eyes is believed to cause instant blindness. This pernicious juice is called by the peasantry witches' milk."—Remains Nithsdale Song, p. 110.

gŏw'-aned, a. [Eng. gowan; -ed.] Covered with the mountain daisy.

"On yon gowaned lawn she was seen."
Tarras: Poems, p. 80.

gŏw'-ăn-ў, gŏw'-ăn-ĭĕ, a. [Eng. gowan; -y.]

1. Abounding with mountain daisies.

2. Having a fair and promising appearance: as, a gowanie day, a day which has a flattering appearance, but attended with such circumstances as are commonly understood to indicate an approaching storm.

gŏwd, s. [Gold.]

gŏwd'-ăn-ŏŏk, gŏwd'-nŏŏk, gaup-nook, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A name given by the fishermen on the shores of the Frith of Forth, to the Saury Pike of Pennant, Esox saurus, Linn. occasionally called the Snipe fish. It arrives in the Forth in shoals, generally about the month of September.

"Sometimes about the end of September, there comes a vast shoal of fish, called gowdanooks, or Egyptian herrings."—P. Alloa, Statist. Acc., viii. 598.

gŏwd'-ĕn, gŏwd'-ăn, a. [Golden.]

gowden-knap, s. A species of pear.

"The golden-knap or gouden-knap, as it is here called, seems peculiar to this part of Scotland."—Agric Survey of Stirlingshire, p. 202.

gŏw'-dĭe, s. [Scotch gowd = gold; suff. -ie.] Ichthy.: The Sword Dragonet, Callionymus lyra.

gŏw'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gow; -ish.] Foolish; silly; stupid.

gŏw'-ĭsh-nĕss, s. [Eng. gowish; -ness.] Folly; stupidity.

"As fine a specimen of gowishness as I have ever seen."—Gall: Encycl., p. 224.

gŏwk, gŏuk, s. [Gawk.]

1. A cuckoo.

"The cuckoo (Cuculus canorus), or gouk of this place."—Barry: Orkney, p. 311.

2. A fool; a simpleton.

"'Hout awa, ye auld gouk,' said Jenny Rintherout."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. x.

¶ To hunt the gowk: To go on a fool's errand.

gowk's-errand, s. A fool's errand; an April errand.

gowk-storm, gowk's-storm, s.

1. Lit.: A storm consisting of several days of tempestuous weather, believed by the peasantry to take place periodically about the beginning of April, at the time that the gowk, or cuckoo, visits this country.

2. Fig.: To denote an evil, or obstruction, which is only of short duration.

"That being done, he hoped that this was but a gowk-storm."—Sir G. Mackenzie: Memoirs, p. 70.

gŏwk'-ĭt, gauk-ĭt, gokt, a. [Eng. gowk; -it; -ed.] Foolish, stupid, silly.

"Ane hundreth standis heirby Peranter as as gauckit fulis as I."
Lyndsay: S. P. R., ii. 98.

gŏwl, v.i. [Goul.] To howl; to yowl.

"May ne'er misfortune's gowling bark, Howl thro' the dwelling of the clerk!"
Burns: To Gavin Hamilton, Esq.

gŏwle, s. [Fr. gueule; Lat. gula = the throat.] A hollow between hills; a defile between mountains.

"From thence we, passing by the windy gowle, Did make the hollow rocks with echoes yowle."
H. Adamson: Muses Threnodie, p. 149.

gŏw'-lĕe, gaw-a-lee, gaw-a-lĭ, gaw-a-ree, s. [Hind. goala; Mahratta gawaree = a cowherd.] A cowherd. (Anglo-Indian.) gŏwl'-ĭng, s. [Goulino.] (Scotch.) gŏwn, * gounne, s. [Probably from Wel. gwn = a gown; gunio = to sew; Fr. gunn; Gael. & Corn. gun; Manx. goon; cf. O. Fr gone = a gown.]

I. Lit.: A long, loose upper garment: specif.—

(1) A woman's dress or outer garment.

"Let's amongst ourselves agree,
Of what her wedding gown shall be."
Drayton: Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 8.

(2) A loose wrapper worn by gentlemen indoors; a dressing-gown.

(3) The official or distinctive dress worn by members of certain professions, as divinity, medicine, law, and also by students of universities, officials of a court of justice, &c.

"He set out for his constitutional in his cap and gown."—Cuthbert Bede: Verdant Green, pt. i., ch. 8.

* 4. An official or state dress.

"The Duke of Buckingham ware a goune wrought of needle worke and set vpon cloth of tissue, furred with sables."—Stow: Henry VII. (an. 1507).

II. Figuratively:

1. The dress of peace; as in the Latin cedant arma togæ.

"The toga, or gown, seems to have been of a semicircular form, without sleeves, different in largeness, according to the wealth or poverty of the wearer."—Kennet: Roman Antiquities, pt. ii., bk v., ch. vii.

2. One of the learned professions of law or divinity.

"Any other man of the gown."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

* 3. Any dress, garb, or covering.

"He comes, and in the gown of humility."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, iii. 2.

4. The members of the University of Oxford, as opposed to town, the citizens or townspeople.

"When Gown was absent Town was miserable."—Cuthbert Bede: Verdant Green, pt. ii., ch. iii.

gown's-man, gown-man, s. [GOWNSMAN.]

gŏwn, v.t. & i. [GOWN, s.]

A. Trans.: To put a gown on; to dress in a gown. (Used only in the pa. par.)

"Regent of the gowned race."
Cowper: Death of Vice-Chancellor.

B. Intrans.: To put on a gown; to dress oneself in a gown.

gŏwn'-măn, gŏwn'-măn, s. [Eng. gown, and man.]

1. A member of one of the learned professions; one whose professional dress is a gown, as a lawyer, a professor or student at the universities, &c.

"A loud murmur of applause arose from the gownsmen who filled the hall."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. viii.

2. One devoted to the arts of peace, in contradistinction to a soldier.

"A soldier who ran away from a battle, and a gownsman who pushed himself into a battle were the two objects which most strangely excited William's spleen."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng. ch. xvi.

gŏw'-pĕn, gŏw'-pin, gŏw'-pĭng, s. [Icel. gaupn, gupn = the hollow of the hand; Sw. göpn.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The hollow of the hand, when contracted in a semicircular form to receive anything. Gaupins, both hands held together in the form of a round vessel.

2. A handful.

"And nocht allanerly kepis thair faith efter the reason of thair contract, bot geuys ane gowpin, or ellis sum thingis mair ebone the just mesure that thay sell."—Bellendene: Descr. Alb., ch. 16.

II. Scot's Law: One of the perquisites allowed to a miller's servant.

gŏw'-pĕn, gŏw'-pin, v.t. [GOWPEN, s.] To lift, or lade out, with the hands spread out and placed together.

gŏw'-pĕn-fûl, gŏw'-pin-fûl, s. [Eng. gowpen; -full.] A handful.

gŏwt, s. [GOTE (1), s.] A sluice in a sea-embankment for letting out the land-water when the tide is out, and preventing the ingress of sea-water.

* gō'-zĕll, s. [Fr. groseille; Sp. grosella.] A gooseberry.

* gŏz'-zard, s. [A corrupt. of gooseherd.]

1. One who tends geese; a gooseherd.

"A person called a gozzard—i.e., a gooseherd, attends the flock."—Pennant: Brit. Zoology; The Graylag Goose.

2. A fool, a simpleton, a goose.

graaf'-ĭ-an, a. [See def.]

Anat.: Pertaining to Herr de Graaf, discoverer of the follicles described in the compound.

graafian-follicles, s. pl.

Anat.: Small follicles in the human ovary containing ova.

grăb, v.t. & i. [Sw. grabba = to grasp.] [GRAPPLE, GRIP, GRIPE.]

A. Trans.: To seize, clutch, or grasp suddenly or eagerly.

B. Intrans.: To make a clutch or grab at.

grab-gains, s. The act of thieving by snatching a purse, &c., suddenly and running away with it.

grăb (1), s. [GRAB, v.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A sudden grasp, clutch, or seizing of anything.

2. Mach.: An instrument for clutching objects for the purpose of raising them. The term is specially applied to devices for withdrawing pipes, drills, reamers, &c, from artesian, oil, and other wells which are drilled, bored, or driven.

grăb (2), s. [Native name (?).]

Naut.: A large East Indian coaster, two-masted, with a prow-stern, and from 150 to 300 tons' burden.

grăb'-bĕr, s. [Eng. grab; -er.] One who grabs or seizes suddenly or eagerly. [LAND-GRABBER.]

"A tenant farmer, whom Mr. —— denounced as a land grabber."—Daily Telegraph, Oct. 27, 1880.

* grăb'-ble (1), * gra-ble, v.i. [A frequent. of grab (q.v.); cf. Dut. grabbelen = to snatch; Ger. grübeln = to grab.] [GRAPPLE, GROPE.] To grope, to feel about.

"And so [Cato] went forward at adventure, taking extream and incredible pains, and to much danger of his life, grabling all night in the dark without moonlight."—North: Plutarch, p. 294.

* grăb'-ble (2), v.i. [GROVEL.] To grovel; to lie on the ground prostrate; to sprawl.

grāçe, * gras, s. [Fr., from Lat. gratia = favour, from gratus = dear, pleasing, from the same root as Gr. χαίρω (chairō) = to rejoice; χαρά (chara) = joy; χάρις (charis) = grace, favour; Eng. yearn.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Favour, kindness, good-will; disposition to oblige.

"Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace."
Dryden: Palamon & Arcite, iii. 394.

2. In the same sense as II. 5.

"Judgment, umpire in the strife,
That Grace and Nature have to wage through life."
Cowper: Tirocinium, 30.

* 3. Pardon, mercy.

"Wilt thou kneel for grace?"
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., ii. 2.

4. A favour conferred; a kindness.

"Certis said he, I n'ill thine offred grace Ne to be made so happy due intend."
Spenser: F. Q., II. vii. 33.

5. An allowance granted as a favour, not as of right; as, To give a person ten minutes' grace to keep an appointment.

* 6. Honourable distinction; honour.

"Do grace to them and bring them in."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 2.

* 7. A privilege.

"But to return and view the cheerful skies,
To few great Jupiter imparts this grace."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid vi. 196.

8. That element or characteristic in behaviour, deportment, or language which renders it elegant, graceful, or pleasing; elegance in action or language.

"In this case, the roundness, this delicacy of attitude and motion, it is that all the magick of grace consists."—Burke: On the Sublime & Beautiful, § 22.

9. Any excellence which conciliates love or makes pleasing to others; any endowment or quality which recommends the possessor to the favour, liking, respect, or esteem of other persons.

"Nothing could be more natural than that graces and accomplishments like his should win a female heart."—Macaulay: Hist. England, ch. xv.

10. An embellishment, an ornament, a beauty.

11. (Pl.) A game designed to promote or display grace of motion. It consists in passing a small hoop from one to another by means of two short sticks.

12. An affectation of refinement, dignity, or elegance.

* 13. Virtue, power, quality.

"O, mickle is the powerful grace that lies In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities."
Shakesp.: Romeo & Juliet, ii. 3.

14. A form of respect used in addressing or speaking of an archbishop or a duke; formerly used also of a sovereign.

"High and mighty king, your grace, and those your nobles here present, may be pleased to how your ears."—Bacon: Henry VII.

* 15. A blessed disposition of mind; virtue.

"If you have any pity, grace, or manners."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 2.

* 16. Thanks.

"Yeldinge graces and thankinges to here lord Melibe."—Chaucer: Tale of Melibeus, p. 193.

17. A short prayer before or after meat; a blessing asked or thanks returned.

"Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, iv. 7.

II. Technically:

1. Greek Myth.: One of three sister goddesses, called Aglaïa, Thalia, and Euphrosynê, daughters of Jupiter and the ocean nymph Eurynomê. In their gift were grace, loveliness, and favour. By the Greeks they were known as Charitês, and by the Romans as Gratiæ.

2. Law: A faculty, licence, or dispensation; a general or free pardon by Act of Parliament; called also an Act of Grace.

"Between an Act of Grace originating with the sovereign and an Act of Indemnity originating with the Estates of the Realm there are some remarkable distinctions. An Act of Indemnity passes through all the stages through which other laws pass, and may during its progress be amended by either House. An Act of Grace is received with peculiar marks of respect, is read only once by the Lords and once by the Commons, and must be either rejected altogether or accepted as it stands."—Macaulay; Hist. Eng., ch. xv.

3. Music: A general term for ornamental notes or short passages, introduced as embellishments into vocal or instrumental music, not actually essential to its harmony or melody. In former times, in vocal music, the selection of graces was left to the judgment of the performer to a great extent, but in instrumental music numerous signs have, from time to time, been used, explanations of which will be found under their distinctive names. In our own time a reaction has taken place against the absurd embellishments indulged in by our forefathers, and it has become fashionable to sing and play music just as it is written. This is perhaps to be regretted, as those who are reodering music should carefully consider whether the writer wished ornaments to be excluded or omitted to write them under a belief that they would certainly be introduced in performance. (Stainer & Barrett.) [CADENZA.]

4. Univ.: An act, vote, or decree of the senate or governing body.

"What I mean is in relation to the grace, which the assertors of the right of appeal thought fit to propose, in order to refer the decision of this point to the arbitration of the senate."—Hurd: Opinion of an Eminent Lawyer.

5. Scrip.: The word grace with a religious meaning is used in many senses in Scripture. The most distinctive are—

(1) Unmerited favour (Rom. iii. 24, iv. 4). It is opposed to debt—i.e., is not a payment of debt (Rom. iv. 4)—and to works—i.e., it is not merited by good works (ibid.). It is called the grace of God (Titus ii. 11), and the grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ (Acts xv. 11; 2 Cor. xiii. 14). By the "grace of God" is meant his love for mankind, as evinced by sending his Son into the world to make atonement for sin and offer salvation through faith in his blood (Eph. xi. 7, 8; Acts xx.). "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ" signifies his loving favour as evinced by his undertaking and carrying out this mission of mercy (2 Cor. viii. 9).

(2) The results of such favour; privilege, as of apostleship, &c. (Ephes. iii. 8; I Peter i. 10).

(3) The transforming influence of the Spirit of God. (Acts xviii. 21.)

(4) The results of such influence, spiritual and moral character, conduct, and conversation and attainments, &c. (2 Cor. viii. 6; Col. iv. 6). In this sense the Christian is supposed to have many graces; as, for instance, the grace of liberality (2 Cor. viii. 7).

(5) Loving character, benevolence, suavity, sympathy. Used pre-eminently of Jesus. In this sense it is sometimes coupled with truth (John i. 14, 17).

6. Ch. Hist.: Such doctrines as those relating to the decrees of God, predestination, freewill, and the operations of the Holy Spirit on the human conscience, are often called the Doctrines of Grace. A great contest arose on the subject in the fifth century, the antagonistic views being those of Pelagius and Celestius, who gave much prominence to the tenet of man's natural ability to do what is right [PELAGIANISM, SEMIPELAGINISM], and of Augustine, who, strongly holding the sovereignty of God, the natural depravity of man, and the spiritual inability thus resulting, attributed the salvation of the latter solely to Divine grace, with little of human co-operation. The controversy thus commenced went on with intermissions for some centuries. At the Reformation Luther held views essentially Augustinian, as did most of the other reformers. Calvin formulated them as one of his five points. [CALVINISM.] In the next century the antagonistic system of Arminianism was also formulated and urged upon the church. [ARMINIANS.] It leans in the direction of Pelagianism, but stops considerably short of that system in its extreme form.

¶ (1) * To do grace:

(a) To embellish, to become well, to set off.

"Mourning doth thee grace." Shakesp.: Sonnet 132.

(b) To reflect credit upon.

"To do the profession some grace."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., ii. 1.

(2) Day of grace:

(a) Law: [Day, C. 4 (1)].

(b) Theol.: The time during which divine grace is obtainable by one who seeks it in prayer; the period during which probation extends—i.e., during which one is in this world. The expression "day of grace" does not occur in Scripture; it is regarded as the same in meaning with day of salvation in 2 Cor. vi. 2. This again is a quotation from Isa. xlix. 8. Cf. also Heb. iv. 7, which is a quotation from Psalm xcv. 7, 8. Day of grace is the opposite of the day of wrath, Rom. ii. 5.

"That day of grace fleets fast away." Watts.

(3) Days of grace:

Comm.: [Day, C. 4 (2)].

(4) Means of grace:

Theol.: Means through which Divine grace may be expected to operate. (Often used of attendance on Christian worship.)

(5) Throne of grace:

Scrip.: A figurative expression, the literal meaning of which would be a throne from which God dispenses his loving favour.

(6) To come to the throne of grace: To approach God in prayer (Heb. iv. 16).

(7) To get into (or to be in) one's good graces: To become (or be) in favour or friendship with one.

(8) With a good grace: Gracefully, graciously; with a show of willingness and pleasure.

"What might have been done with a good grace would at last be done with a bad grace."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

(9) With a bad grace: Ungraciously, ungracefully.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between grace and favour: "Grace is never used but in regard to those who have offended and made themselves liable to punishment; favour is employed for actual good. . . . The term favour is employed indiscriminately with regard to man or his Maker; those who are in power have the greatest opportunity of conferring favours; but all we receive at the hands of our Maker must be acknowledged as a favour."

(2) He thus discriminates between grace and charm: "Grace is altogether corporeal; charm is either corporeal or mental; the grace qualifies the action of the body, the charm is an inherent quality in the body itself. A lady moves, dances, and walks with grace; the charms of her person are equal to those of her mind." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

 grace-drink, s. The designation commonly given to the drink taken by a company, after the giving of thanks at the end of a meal; a grace-cup.

"To this queen [Margaret, Malcolm Canmore's queen] tradition says we owe the custom of the grace-drink; she having established it as a rule at her table, that whoever staid till grace was said, was rewarded with a bumper."—Encycl. Britann., s. v. Forfar.

grace-notes, s. pl.

Music: [Grace, s., II. 3].

grace-stroke, s. A finishing touch or stroke; a coup-de-grace.

"To perfect and give the grace-stroke to that very liberal education."—Scotland Characterized (1701) in Harl. Miscell., vii. 377.

grāçe, v.t. [Grace, s.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. To adorn, to decorate, to set off.

"Ten hardy striplings, all in bright attire,
And graced with shining weapons."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vii.

2. To add grace or dignity to; to endow.

"With many a social virtue graced."
Longfellow: Tales of a Wayside Inn. (Prel.)

* 3. To celebrate.

"And indeed great reason it was, that he that was Lord of Heaven should have his descending into the flesh graced and owned with the testimonies of stars and angels."—South: Sermons, vol. xi., ser. 4.

* 4. To dignify or raise by an act of favour; to honour.

"He might at his pleasure grace or disgrace whom he would in court."—Knolles: Historie of the Turkes.

* 5. To exalt; to praise.

"I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit."
Shakesp.: All's Well That Ends Well, iii. 6.

* 6. To favour; to oblige.

"So you will grace me . . . with your fellowship O'er these waste downs whereon I lost myself."
Tennyson: Elaine, 224.

* 7. To supply with heavenly grace.

"Grace the disobedient."—Bp. Hall.

II. Music: To add grace-notes, cadenzas, &c. to.

 grā'çe-cŭp, s. [Eng. grace, and cup.]

1. A cup or vessel in which a health is drunk after grace.

2. A health drunk after grace.

"The gracecup follows to his Sovereign's health."
King: Art of Cookery, 275.

grāçed, pa. par., & a. [Grace, v.]

A. As pa. par: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Endowed with graces; graceful; elegant; dignified.

"He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best graced men that ever I saw, being of a middle age and a mean stature."—Sidney: Arcadia.

* 2. Virtuous, chaste, honourable.

"More like a tavern or a brothel, Than a graced palace." Shakesp.: Lear, i. 4.

grā çe-fûl, a. [Eng. grace; -ful(l).]

1. Full of or displaying grace or beauty in form or action; elegant; neat; handsome.

"My boy was by my side, so slim
And graceful in his rustic dress."
Wordsworth: Anecdote for Fathers.

2. Elegant, well-chosen, becoming.

"He took his seat there with the mace at his right hand, rose, and in a few graceful words returned his thanks."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiv.

¶ 1. Crabb thus discriminates between graceful, comely, and elegant: "A graceful figure is rendered so by the deportment of the body. A comely figure has that in itself which pleases the eye. Elegant is applicable, like graceful, to the motion of the body, or like comely, to the person, and is extended in its meaning also to the words and even to the dress. A person's step is graceful; his air or his movements are elegant; the grace of an action lies chiefly in its adaptation to the occasion." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

2. For the difference between graceful and becoming, see Becoming.

grā'çe-fûl-lў, adv. [Eng. graceful; -ly.] In a graceful or elegant manner; elegantly; with gracefulness or elegance of manner or deportment.

"Lamps gracefully disposed, and of all hues, Illumined every side." Cowper: Task, v. 149.

grāçe-fûl-nĕss, s. [Eng. graceful; -ness.] The quality or state of being graceful; grace; elegance of manner or deportment; dignity with beauty.

"In like manner the flowers and adornments of Moral Philosophy, are apt and serviceable for the affecting and entertaining our Imagination by the gracefulness and elegancy of their perswasions."—Mountague: Devoute Essayes, pt. i., tr. 19, § 3.

grā'çe-lĕss, * grace-lesse, a. [Eng. grace; -less.] Void of grace or dignity; corrupt; depraved; abandoned.

"A graceless heart." Cowper; Olney Hymns, lviii.

† grā'çe-lĕss-lў, adv. [Eng. graceless; -ly.] In a graceless manner; without grace or elegance.

"The French, in his whole language, hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable, saving two, called antepenultima; and little more hath the Spanish; and therefore very gracelessly may they use dactyls."—Sidney: Defence of Poesy.

† grā'çe-lĕss-nĕss, s. s. [Eng. graceless; -ness.] The quality or state of being graceless.

 grāç'-ĕr, s. [Eng. grac(e); -er.] One who graces or gives grace.

grăç-ĭ-lār'-ĭ-ą, s. [Lat. gracil(is) = thin, slender, and suff. -aria.]

1. Bot.: A genus of rose-spored Algæ. It contains the Corsican and Ceylon "mosses." Called also Plocaria (q.v.).

2. Entom.: The typical genus of the family Gracilariidæ (q.v.). Gracilaria syringella discolours the leaves of the lilac in the middle of the summer, and the larva of G. stigmatella in August and September rolls the leaves of willow, sallow, and poplar, on which it feeds, into the form of a sugar-loaf. (Stainton.) grăç-ĭ-lār'-ĭ-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gracilari(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ. Named from the gracileal appearance of these insects.]

Entom.: A family of Moths, group Tineina. The antennæ are as long as the anterior wings, which are elongate, the posterior ones lanceolate. The insect reposes with its head much raised. Larvæ, with fourteen legs, mining in leaves or rolling themselves up. British species known, twenty-eight. (Stainton.)  grăç'-ile, * grăç'-ĭ-lent, a. [Lat. gracilis, gracilentus.] Slender, small.

grăç'-ĭ-lis, s. [Lat. = thin, slender.]

Anat.: A slender muscle of the thigh, connecting it with the trunk. Called also the Abductor gracilis.

 grą-çĭl'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. gracilitas, from gracilis = slender.] Slenderness, smallness.

"Reduced to little more than a third of its original gracility."—Sir W. Hamilton.

grā'-cious, * gra-cios, * gra-ciouce, * gra-ciouse, a. [Fr. gracieux, from Lat. gratiosus, from gratia = favour, grace; Ital. grazioso; Sp. & Port. gracioso.]

1. Endowed with grace; well-disposed, kind, affable.

"He was a gracious master, a trusty ally, a terrible enemy."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

2. Exhibiting or characterized by grace, kindness, favour, or friendliness; kind, friendly.

"The stalks he gave her With a gracious gesture."
Longfellow: Musician's Tale, xvi.

3. Full of grace, mercy, or benevolence; merciful, benevolent, beneficent, benignant.

"And the Lord was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them."—2 Kings xiii. 23.

4. Exhibiting or characterized by grace, mercy, or benevolence; merciful.

"The call of Abraham from a heathen state, represents the gracious call of Christians to forsake the wickedness of the world."—Gilpin: Sermons, vol. ii., ser. 16.

* 5. In a state of heavenly grace; virtuous.

"Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues."—Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iv. 2.

* 6. Acceptable; finding favour or grace; agreeable.

"Is he gracious in the people's eyes?"
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., iii. 3.

* 7. Proceeding from, or produced by divine grace.

* 8. Tending to bring into a state of grace; as, a gracious sermon.

* 9. Happy, fortunate, prosperous, favourable.

"Gracious be the issue."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iii. 1.

10. Graceful, attractive, elegant, comely, beautiful.

"No face so gracious is as mine."
Shakesp.: Sonnet 62.

¶ (1) Gracious is used as a mild oath or interjection.

"Married! O, my gracious! Just think of the creature's talking about it!"—Mrs. H. B. Stowe: Dred, ch. xi.

(2) Crabb thus discriminates between gracious, merciful, and kind: "Grace is exerted in doing good to an object that has merited the contrary; mercy is exerted in withholding the evil which has been merited. God is gracious to his creatures in affording them not only an opportunity to address him, but every encouragement to lay open their wants to him; their unworthiness and sinfulness are not made impediments of access to him. God is merciful to the vilest of sinners, and lends an ear to the smallest breath of repentance; in the moment of executing vengeance he stops his arm at the voice of supplication; he expects the same mercy to be extended by man towards his offending brother. Gracious, when compared with kind, differs principally as to the station of the persons to whom it is applied. Gracious is altogether confined to superiors; kind is indiscriminately employed for superiors and equals." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) grā'-cious-lў, * gra-cious-liche, * gra-cyous-ly, * gra-cyous-lye, adv. [Eng. gracious; -ly.]

1. In a gracious manner; with kindness, affability, or friendliness.

"The brave aduentures of this faery knight,
The good Sir Guyon, graciously to beare."
Spenser: F. Q. II. (Introd.)

* 2. Virtuously, holily.

"Graciously to know I am no better."
Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, ii. 4.

grā'-cious-nĕss, s. [Eng gracious; -ness.]

1. The quality or state of being gracious, favourable, merciful, kind, or benignant; kind condescension.

"The graciousness and temper of this answer made so impression on them; but they proceeded in their usual manner."—Clarendon: Civil War, i. 325.

* 2. The quality or state of being acceptable; acceptability.

"Then it is [when a sinner repents] that our blessed Lord feels the fruits of his holy death, the acceptation of his holy sacrifice, the graciousness of his person, the return of his prayers."—Bp. Taylor: Sermons, vol. i., ser. 1 grăc'-kle, s. [Lat. graculus = a jackdaw; from the sound made by the bird.] A bird of the genus Gracula (q.v.).

grăc'-ụ-la, s. [Lat. graculus = a jackdaw, according to Quinctilian, from its note gra, gra.]

Ornith.: The typical genus of the sub-family Graculinæ. Gracula religiosa, the Grackle or Mina-bird, is found in Sumatra, Java, and the adjacent islands. It is black, variegated with white, the legs, bill, and some caruncles behind the eye yellow. It can be domesticated, and can be taught to pick up some words in parrot fashion. Vieillot called it Eulabes javanus.

grăc'-ụ-lĭ'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gracula, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: A family of Corvidæ, having broad, slightly curved bills, rounded nostrils, long wings, a short tail, and elongated toes. Found in India and the Eastern Islands. [GRACULA.]

grā'-çy, grā'-çĭĕ, a. [Eng. grace; -y.]

1. Endowed with spiritual grace; religious.

2. Full of teaching about grace.

gra-dāte', v.t. & i.

A. Trans.: To arrange or blend by insensible degrees, as colors.

B. Intr.: To effect gradation.

gra-dā'-tion, s. [Fr., from Lat. gradationem, acc. of gradatio = an ascent by steps; gradus = a step; Sp. graduacion; Ital. gradazione.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A moving or progressing by degrees; a regular advance or progression from step to step.

"The Chinians therefore do vse a kinde of gradation in aduancing men vnto sundry places of authority."—Hackluyt Voyages, vol. ii., pt. ii., p. 94.

2. A step or degree in any order, series, or sequence.

"It preserves the same superiority through all the subordinate gradations."—Burke: On the Sublime & Beautiful, pt. ii., § 5.

3. Arrangement in order according to size, quality, rank, degree of advancement, &c.; sequence.

"If each system in gradation roll Alike essential to th' amazing whole."
Pope: Essay on Man, i. 247.

II. Technically:

1. Art: The just arrangement or subordination of the parts of any work, so as to produce the best effect; as the gradation of color and light in painting, to express depth and relief, to define distances, and to show the state of the atmosphere.

2. Logic: A regular advance from step to step, as in an argument.

3. Music: An ascending or descending by a regular succession of chords.

4. Rhet.: An ascending or descending in terms, as towards a climax. (Wilson: Art of Rhetorique, p. 207.)

* gra-dā'-tion, v.t. [GRADATION, s.] To form by gradation or with gradations.

* gra-dā'-tion-al, a. [Eng. gradation; -al.] Of or pertaining to gradation; with gradations; by regular steps.

grād'-ạ-tŏr-ў, a. & s. [Lat. gradatus = formed with steps: gradus = a step.]

A. As adjective:

1. Ord. Lang.: Proceeding by gradations or steps; gradational.

"Could this gradatory apostacy [of Macbeth] have been shown us; could the noble and useful moral which results, have been thus forcibly impressed upon our minds, without a violation of those senseless unities."—Seward, let. iii., p. 243.

2. Zool.: Adaptable for progressive or forward motion.

B. As substantive:

Arch.: Steps from a cloister into a church.

grăd'-dạn, v.t. [GRADDAN, s.] To parch or dry.

"At breakfast this morning, among a profusion of other things, there were oat-cakes, made of what is called graddaned meal, that is, meal made of grain separated from the husks, and toasted by fire, instead of being threshed and kiln-dried."—Boswell: Tour, p. 190.

grăd'-dạn, s. [Gael. & Ir. gradan = parched corn.]

1. Parched corn.

2. Finely ground snuff, made of leaf-tobacco, high-dried, but without fermentation.

grā'do, s. [Fr., from Lat. gradus = a step; Sp. & Ital. grado; Port. grao.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A degree, step, or rank in order of dignity, civil, ecclesiastical, military, or otherwise.

2. A step or degree in any series, quality, rank, or order.

3. The inclination from the horizontal of a portion of a road or railroad. It is expressed in degrees, in feet per mile, or as a foot in such a distance: as, a grade of 3°; or, a grade of 35 feet per mile.

II. Philol.: The two classes of consonants called tenues and mediæ.

"Initial consonants retain the grade of each organ in the purest and truest way, medial consonants have a tendency to soften, finals to harden. By the expression grade must be understood the two classes of tenues and mediæ."—Beames: Comp. Gram. of the Aryan Lang. of India, vol. i. (1872), chap. iii., p. 190.

grāde, v.t. [GRADE, s.]

1. To arrange in order, steps, or degrees, according to size, quality, rank, advancement, &c.

2. To mark the grades, or ascents and descents of.

3. To reduce to or construct with a certain grade or inclination: as, To grade a road.

grād'-ĕd, pa. par. or a. [GRADE, v.] graded-school, s. A school taught in departments by different masters, in which the pupils pass from the lower to the higher classes as they advance in education.

grā'de-lў, a. & adv. [GRAITHLY.] (Prov.)

A. As adj.: Decent, proper; becoming.

B. As adv.: Decently, properly, becomingly.

grād'-ẽr, s. One who or that which grades.

grā'-dĭ-ent, a. & s. [Lat. gradiens, pr. par. of gradior = to walk; gradus = a step.]

A. As adjective:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Walking, moving, or advancing by steps.

"Amongst those gradient automata, that iron spider is especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary bigness, did creep up and down as if it had been alive."—Wilkins: Dædalus, bk. ii., ch. iv.

* 2. Rising or falling by regular degrees of inclination: as, the gradient line of a road.

II. Her.: A term applied to the tortoiss, as supposed to be walking.

B. As substantive:

1. The rate of ascent or descent in a railway or road; a grade; the degree of slope or inclination of the ground over which a railway, road, &c., passes: as, The gradient is 1 in 100; that is, the ground rises one foot in every hundred feet.

2. A part of a road, &c., which slopes upward or downward; a slope.

gradient-post, s.

Railroad Engineering:

1. A post placed by the side of the track, at a change of grade, carrying a board slanted to the slope, and indicating in figures the grade in feet per 100, or otherwise.

2. A stake set in the ground, and marked to indicate the proper height of an embankment or of road metal at that point.

grā'-dĭn, gra-dĭ'ne, s. [Fr. gradin = a step, from Lat. grādus.]

1. One of a series of seats rising one above another.

2. A toothed chisel used by sculptors.

grād'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRADE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or process of reducing to a certain grade or level.

grading instrument, s. A level with an alidade, a transit, or other sighting instrument, by which the angle of inclination of a slope may be measured, or a row of stakes driven to mark a given gradient.

grading-plough, s. A kind of plough used for breaking up soil or ploughing down banks, in order to fit the earth for being scooped up by the earth-scraper, and thereby deported.

grading-scraper, s. A large two-handled shovel, drawn by horses, and used as an earth-scoop for raising and removing loosened earth. It is used in road-making, scooping out beds of canals in certain situations, &c., when the soil is suitable, and the distance where it is to be deposited is not too great. [HORSE-SHOVEL.]

grăd'-ụ-al, a. & s. [Low Lat. gradualis, from gradus = a step; Fr. gradual; Ital. graduale; Sp. gradual.]

A. As adj.: Progressing or advancing by steps or degrees; passing from one step or stage to another by regular gradations without breaks or starts; slow.

"Flowers and their fruit
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublimed, To vital spirits aspire." Milton: P. L., v. 482.

B. As substantive:

* 1. Ord. Lang.: A series or order of steps.

"Before the gradual prostrate they adored,
The pavement kissed, and thus the saint implored."
Dryden.

2. Ecclesiastical:

(1) A service-book, containing the hymns or prayers to be sung by the choir, so called from certain short phrases after the Epistle sung in gradibus (upon the steps of the altar).

(2) That part of the service of the mass in the Roman Catholic Church which immediately follows the Epistle, and is sung as the deacon returns to the steps of the altar.

Eccles. & Ch. Hist.: Fifteen psalms, from Ps. cxx. to Ps. cxxxiv. inclusive; so called because they were formerly chanted from the steps of the choir, more especially during Advent. [SONGS OF DEGREES.]

* grăd-ụ-ā'-lē, s. [Low Lat.] The same as GRADUAL, B. 2.

* grăd-ụ-ăl'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. gradual; -ity.] The quality or state of being gradual; regular progression or gradation.

"Which while some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light, they have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. vi., ch. x.

grạd'-ụ-al-lў, adv. [Eng. gradual; -ly.]

1. In a gradual manner, by degrees; step by step, slowly; in regular gradations.

"Already the designs of the court began gradually to unfold themselves."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vi.

* 2. In degree.

"Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the fantastic reason of brutes."—Grew.

* grăd'-ụ-al-nĕss, s. [Eng. gradual; -ness.] The quality or state of being gradual; graduality.

"The gradualness of this movement and the obscurity which enwrapped its beginnings."—M. Arnold: Study of Celtic Literature, p. 94.

* grăd'-ụ-and, s. [As if from the gerundive participle of an imaginary Low Lat. word graduor. So in the Scottish universities there is a word magistrand, from a Low Lat. verb magistror.] One who has passed all the examinations for a degree, but has not yet been capped.

grăd'-ụ-āte, v.t. & i. [Low Lat. graduatus = one who has taken a degree; Lat. gradus = a step, a degree; Ital. graduare; Sp. & Port. graduar; Fr. graduer.]

A. Transitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. To mark with degrees or a scale.

"The places were marked where the spirit stood at the severest cold and greatest heat, and according to these observations he graduates his thermometers."—Derham: Physico-Theology, bk. i., ch. ii. (note 8).

2. To mark or arrange with degrees or differences: as, To graduate punishment according to the nature of the offence.

"Then it evidently follows that, if there were any such action in the next life, the pure soul would apply itself thereunto according to the proportion of her judgments, and as they are graduated and qualified."—Digby: Of Man's Soul, ch. ii.

3. To confer a degree upon in a university; to dignify with a degree or diploma.

"John Tregonwel, graduated a doctor and dubbed a knight, did good service."—Carew: Survey of Cornwall.

* 4. To prepare gradually.

* 5. To heighten in effect.

"That the salts of natural bodies do carry a powerful stroke in the tincture and vernish of all things, we shall not deny, if we contradict not experience, and the visible art of dyars, who advance and graduate their colours with salts."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. vi., ch. xii.

II. Chemistry:

* 1. To raise to a higher place in the scale of metals.

"The tincture was capable to transmute or graduate as much silver as equalled in weight that gold."—Boyle.

2. To bring a fluid to a certain degree of consistency, as by evaporation.

B. Intransitive:

1. To pass gradually or by degrees; to change gradually.

2. To become gradually modified; to shade off.

3. To proceed to a degree in a university; to take a degree.

"He was brought to their bar, and asked where he had graduated."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiv.

grăd'-u-ate, a. & s. [Low Lat. graduatus.] [GRADUATE, v.]

A. As adj.: Arranged in or proceeding by steps or degrees.

B. As subst.: One who has proceeded to a degree in a university; one who has been admitted to a degree.

"Invest me with a graduate's gown, Midst shouts of all beholders."
Smart: On taking a Bachelor's Degree.

grăd'-u-ā-tĕd, pa. par. or a. [GRADUATE, v.] graduated-bottle, s. A bottle having horizontal marks blown, pressed, or cut on its side to indicate quantity of contents at given levels. Sometimes the stopper is hollow, and has graduations for doses of certain amounts.

graduated-cup, s. A medicine-cup, on whose sides are marks to indicate quantities at given levels. If of glass, they are usually impressed in the mould; if of porcelain, they are painted on the ware before burning.

graduated-glass, s. A tube with a foot, and with horizontal marks at varying heights to indicate quantity of contents. A measuring-glass.

grăd'-u-ate-shĭp, s. [Eng. graduate; -ship.] The state or position of a graduate.

"[He may] finish his circuit in an English concordance and a topic folio, the gatherings and savings of a sober graduateship."—Milton: Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.

grăd'-u-ā-tĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRADUATE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of dividing into degrees or parts; graduation.

graduating-engine, s. An engine or machine for dividing lines, &c., into minute regular intervals or degrees; a dividing-engine.

grăd-u-ā'-tion, s. [Low Lat. graduatio, from graduatus; Fr. graduation; Sp. graduacion; Ital. graduazione.]

1. Regular progression by succession of degrees.

"The graduation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole."—Grew.

2. The act of dividing into degrees or parts, as a scale, scientific instruments, &c.

3. A scale or series of marks or lines on an instrument to indicate degrees or parts.

"Even though it is not provided with a graduation to show the angle through which it has been turned."—Proceedings of the Phys. Soc. of London, pt. ii., p. 105.

4. The act or process of improving or heightening in effect or power.

"Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oil of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall."—Browne: Vulgar Errours.

5. The act of proceeding to a degree in a university; the taking of a degree.

"The bounty which that Philosophical Emperor, [Marcus Antoninus] as we learn from Lucian, bestowed upon one of the teachers of philosophy, probably lasted no longer than his own life. There was nothing equivalent to the privileges of graduation."—Smith: Wealth of Nations, bk. v., ch. i.

6. The exposure of a liquid in large surfaces to the air, so as to accelerate evaporation.

grăd'-u-ā-tŏr, s. [Eng. graduat(e); -or.] One who or that which graduates; specif.—

(1) An instrument for dividing any line, right or curved, into equal parts; a graduating or dividing-engine.

(2) An apparatus for accelerating spontaneous evaporation by the exposure of surfaces of liquids to a current of air. Used in making vinegar.

grā'-dŭs, s. [Lat. = a step, from the phrase gradus ad Parnassum = a step to Parnassus.] A dictionary of prosody, used as an aid in writing Greek or Latin poetry.

"He set to work as much as possible without gradus or other help."—T. Hughes: Tom Brown's School-days, pt. ii., ch. iv.

grād'-ў, s. [Fr. gradé.]

Her.: A term used to express steps or degrees, and one battlement upon another; also called battled embattled or embattled grady.

* graef, s. [GRAVE, v.] Carved work.

"Sculpturia, græf."—Wright's Vol. of Vocab., p. 89.

* graf (1), s. [GRAVE, s.]

* graf (2), s. [Ger.] The German equivalent of an earl.

* grafe, s. [GRAVE, s.]

* graf-er, * graf-ere, s. [GRAVER.]

* graff (1), s. [A.S. gerēfa; O. H. Ger. grávo; Dan. greve; O. Fris. gréva; Icel. grefi.] A steward, an overseer, a greave.

"For all this, he [a prince] is nothing but a servant, overseer, or graff, and not the head, which is a title belonging only to Christ."—Knox: Hist. of the Reformation. (ProL)

* graff (2), * graffe (1), s. [A.S. græfe; O. H. Ger. grabo; M. H. Ger. grabe; Goth. graba.]

1. A ditch, trench, foss, or channel.

"The enemy forsaking our workes unconquered, the graffe filled with their dead bodies, equal to the banck, the workes ruined in the day-time could not be repaired."—Monro: Exped., pt. i., p. 69.

2. A grave.

* graff (3), * graffe (2), s. [O. Fr. grafe, greffe; O. Dut. grafie; Low Lat. graffiolum.] [GRAFT, s.] A graft.

"The first is, to set the graffe or slon betweene the barke and the wood: for in old time truly men were affraid at first to cleave the stocke, but soon after they ventured to bore a hole into the very heart of the wood: and then they set fast into the pith just in the mids thereof, but one sion or graffe, for by this kind of grafting, impossible it was that the said pith should receive or bear any more."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xvii., ch. xiv.

* graff, * graffe, * graff-en, * graff-yn, v.t. & i. [O. Fr. greffer; O. Dut. grafien.] [GRAFT, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To graft.

"They lerned to plant and graffe their olyues."—Goldyng: Justine, fo. 178.

2. To fasteo, to attach, to fix.

"So long have I listened to thy speech,
That graffed to the ground is my breach."
Spenser: Shepheards Calender; Feb.

3. To implant.

"Nature is a right that phantasie hath not framed, but God hath graffed and gyuen man power thereunto whereof these are deriued."—Wilson: Arte of Rhetorique, p. 35.

B. Intrans.: To graft; to insert grafts.

graff'-age (age as ĭj), s. [Eng. graff (2); -age.] The scarp of a ditch or moat.

* graff'-ĕr, * graff-are, s. [O. Fr. greffeur, greffier.] [GRAFF, v.]

1. A notary, a scrivener.

2. A grafter.

"Gryffare, or graffare. Insertor."—Prompt. Parv.

graf-fĭ'-tĭ, s. pl. [Ital., pl. of graffito = a scribbling, from graffiare = to write; Lat. graphium = a style for writing; Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write.] Rude inscriptions and drawings of figures, found on the walls of Pompeii, and among the Catacombs and other Roman ruins.

graft, s. [GRAFT, v.]

1. Lit.: A small scion or shoot of a tree inserted or grafted in another tree, as the stock which is to support and nourish it. The two unite and become one, but the fruit is determined by the graft.

"The slimy snail, the worm, and labouring ant, Which many times annoy the graft and tender plant."
Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

2. Fig.: Any thing inserted or incorporated in a thing to which it did not originally belong; an addition.

"It is false husbandry to graft old branches upon young stocks."—Darenant: Gondibert. (ProL) graft, *graff, v.t. & i. [O. Fr. graffe, grafe = a style for writing with, a sort of pencil; Fr. greffe = a graff or graft; from the shape of the cut slip, which resembles a pointed pencil; Low Lat. graphiolum = (1) a small style; (2) a graft, or shoot; Lat. graphium = a style; Gr. γραφίον (graphion), γραφεῖον (grapheion) = a style or pencil; γράφω (graphō) = to write. The correct form of the word is graff.]

A. Transitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II.

2. Fig.: To insert or incorporate in a body to which that which is inserted or incorporated did not originally belong; to join or attach one thing on to another.

"These are the Italian names, which fate will join With ours, and graft upon the Trojan line."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid vi. 1,028.

II. Technically:

1. Carp.: To attach or join one piece of timber to another by scarfing.

2. Husb.: To insert as a scion or shoot in another tree; to fix a graft or grafts upon; to propagate by grafting.

"Old crab-trees here at home, that will not Be grafted to your relish."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, ii. 1.

3. Naut.: To unlay the two ends of a rope, placing the strands one within the other as for splicing and stopping them at the joint.

4. Surg.: To transplant a portion of skin to a denuded surface.

B. Intrans.: To carry out the process or operation of grafting.

"To have fruit in greater plenty, the way is to graft, not only upon your stocks, but upon divers boughs of en old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few."—Bacon.

* graft, pa. par. & a. [GRAFF, v.] Grafted; impregnated with a scion.

"Her face defaced with scars of infamy,
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants."
Shakesp.: Richard III., iii. 7.

graft'-ĕr, s. [Eng. graft; -er.]

1. One who grafts; one who propagates plants or shrubs by grafting.

"I am informed by the trials of more than one of the most skilful and experienced grafters of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the insition is made."—Boyle: Works, i. 341.

* 2. A tree from which a scion is taken to be inserted in another.

"Shall a few sprays of us
The emptying of our father's luxury,
Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,
Spirt up so suddenly into the clouds,
And overlook their grafters?"
Shakesp.: Henry V., iii. 5.

graft'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRAFT, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. Carp.: A scarfing or endwise attachment of one timber to another, as in attaching an extra length or false pile to one already driven.

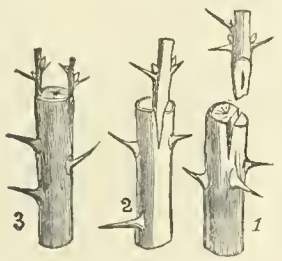
2. Husb.: The act or process of inserting a shoot or scion taken from one tree or shrub in a vigorous stock of its own or a closely allied species, so as to cause them to unite and enable the graft to derive a larger supply of nutritive power than it could otherwise obtain. There are numerous methods of grafting. One is grafting by approach, or inarching, when two growing plants are united together, and after adhesion one is severed from its own stock and left to grow on the other. This kind of adhesion sometimes takes place naturally in trees growing close together. The usual method of grafting is by scions or slips, which are applied to the stock by a sloping surface, or are inserted into slits in it by cleft-grafting, or into perforations by wimble or peg-grafting. Sometimes several slips are placed in a circular manner round the inside of the bark of the stock, by crown-grafting; or the bark of a portion of the stock is removed, and that of the scion is hollowed out, so as to be applied over it like the parts of a flute, hence called flute-grafting. Budding is practised by the removal of a bud from one plant, along with the portion of the bark and new wood, and applying it to another plant, in which a similar wound has been made. In whip-grafting, or tongue-grafting, the stock is cut obliquely across, and a slit or very narrow angular incision is made in its centre downwards across the cut surface, a similar deep incision being made in the scion upwards at a corresponding angle, and a projecting tongue left, which, being inserted in the incision in the stock, they are fastened closely together. Splice-grafting is performed by cutting the ends of both the stock and the scion across at such an angle that the oblique surfaces exactly



GRAFTING.
1, 2. Cleft grafting. 3. Crown grafting.

fit each other, and are fastened together. In saddle-grafting the end of the stock is cut into the form of a wedge, and the middle of the scion cut away so as to rest exactly upon the stock. Grafting is usually performed between the woody parts of the plants, but herbaceous parts may also be united in this way. It is requisite that the growing parts be brought into apposition—the two albumens and the two libers. Union will only take place where the active processes of life are freely exercised. The graft and stock are secured together by means of clay, or a mixture of bees'-wax and tallow, or by bits of india-rubber.

3. Naut.: The tapering of the end of a rope, usually covered by weaving yarns around it.

4. Surg.: The transplanting of a portion of skin to a denuded surface.

grafting-chisel, s.

Husb.: A kind of chisel for splitting a stock for the insertion of a scion.

grafting-knife, s. A knife having a blade for splitting a limb and a wedge for opening the cleft for the insertion of the scion.

grafting-saw, s. A tenon-saw for cutting off stocks for grafting; a pruning-saw.

grafting-tool, s. A very strong spade, much curved across the blade; used in digging canals.

graft'-ling, s. [Eng. graft; dimin. suff. -ling.] A little or tender graft or scion.

"The gardner's care over some graftlings choice."
Sylvester: St. Lewis, 88.

Grā'-ham bread, s. Bread made from unbolted wheat flour as originally prepared by Sylvester Graham (1794–1851), an American vegetarian.

Grā'-ham-īte, s. [Named after Graham, a friend of Wurtz.]

Min.: A mineral, supposed to be inspissated and oxygenated petroleum; hardness, 2; sp. gr., 1·145. Found in West Virginia, filling a fissure in a sandstone of Carboniferous age. (Dana.)

graif, grafe, v.t. [GRAVE, v.] grāil (1), graile (1), grayle (1), s. [O.Fr. greel; from Low Lat. gradale.] The same as GRADUAL (B. 2).

grāil (2), graile (2), grayle (2), s. [O. Fr. graile; from Lat. gracilis = slender.]

1. Small particles of any kind; sand, gravel.

2. One of the small feathers of a hawk.

grāil (3), graile, (3) grayle (3), s. [O. Fr. graal, greal, grasal = a flat dish; from Low Lat. gradale, grasale.] Properly applied to the legendary dish used at the Last Supper, said to have been stolen by a servant of Pilate, used by him to wash his hands in before the multitude, afterwards given to Joseph of Arimathea as a memorial of Christ, and finally used by Joseph to collect the blood which flowed from our Lord while hanging on the cross.

"This," said he [Christ], "is the holy dish wherein sate the lamb on St. Kerthin's day." Malory: Morte Arthure, bk. xvii., ch. xx.) The word (which is commonly qualified by the adjective san, saint, sayn, sant = holy) was afterwards applied to the cup used at the Last Supper. According to one legend, the Holy Grail was brought by Joseph of Arimathea to England, where he settled at Glastonbury about A.D. 63. Finally it was transported to India, where it still remains. In A.D. 1101 the Crusaders, at the capture of Cæsarea, found what they believed to be the veritable Holy Grail, a dish made of a single large emerald. It is now preserved in the Cathedral of San Lorenzo, in Genoa. Another legend says that the holy vessel was brought from heaven by angels, and entrusted to the care of a body of knights, who guarded and watched it on the top of a high mountain. It was invisible to any one not perfectly pure. The search, or quest, for the Holy Grail after its loss or disappearance, formed the subject of numerous romances or poems, such as those of Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table.

"And when King Arthur made His table round, and all men's hearts became Clean for a season, surely he had thought That now the Holy Grail would come again."
Tennyson: The Holy Grail.

grāille, s. [Etym. doubtful; cf. O.Fr. graile; Fr. grêle = slender.] A single-cut file or float, having one curved and one straight face. It is used by comb-makers.

grāin, *grayn, *grein, *greyn, s. [Fr. grain; from Lat. granum = a grain, corn; cogn. with corn (q.v.).]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A single seed of a plant. (Particularly used of those plants the seeds of which are used as food for man.)

"His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all ere you find them." —Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

2. Used collectively, and without a definitive, for corn in general, or the fruit of cereal plants, as wheat, barley, rye, &c. In America restricted to the grain of wheat.

"For winter drought rewards the peasant's pain,
And broods indulgent on the buried grain."
Dryden: Virgil; Georgic i. 148.

3. Those plants the seeds of which constitute the food of man; cereal plants, as wheat, barley, oats, &c.

"The same Grecians preferred before all other graine those three sorts, to wit, Dracontias, Strangias, and Selinusium."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xviii., ch. vii.

4. (Pl.): [GRAINS].

5. Any small, hard particle, as of sand, sugar, &c.

"The people there inhabiting used to set many fleeces of wool in those descents of waters in which the grains of gold remain."—Raleigh: History of the World, bk. ii., ch. xiii., § 7.

6. Hence, used for a minute portion or particle, the smallest particle or amount.

"Do they [worldly goods] either recommend him more to God or wise men, or even to himself, if he have a grain of sense in him, than if he was without them?"—Sharp: Sermons, vol. i., ser. 4.

7. One of the constituent particles of a body, as of a metal, a stone, &c.

8. The body or substance of anything considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles; the form or appearance of the surface of a body with respect to the quality or arrangement of the particles.

"When any side of it was cut smooth and polite, it appeared to have a very lovely grain, like that of some curious close wood."—Evelyn: Forest Trees, ch. xxx., § 12.

9. The arrangement or direction of the fibres of wood or other fibrous substance.

"The marks of the grain of the wood . . . have been found upon celts."—Evans: Ancient Bronze Implements, ch. vi.

10. The body or substance of wood with respect to the arrangement, quality, or direction of the constituent fibres.

"Here are forests of vast extent, full of the straitest, the cleanest, and the largest timber trees that we had ever seen; their size, their grain, and apparent durability, render them fit for any kind of building."—Cook: First Voyage, bk. ii., ch. vii.

*11. A kind of spice; cardamum; grains of paradise.

"He cheweth grcyn and lycoris."
Chaucer: C. T., 3,690.

*12. A seed-pearl.

"A grein in golde that godly shon."
Lyric Poems, p. 38.

*13. An old name applied to several insects of the genus Coccus, from their round, seed-like form.

*14. A red or scarlet dye, obtained from the coccus insect; cochineal; a scarlet or purple colour.

"All in a robe of darkest grain, Flowing with majestic train."
Milton: Il Penseroso, 33.

*15. An essential element in anything.

"The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain."—Hayward.

II. Technically:

1. Dyeing: A firm dye, or one applied thoroughly; in the wool, not in the web.

2. Painting: A style of painting in imitation of the natural grains of wood, marble, &c

3. Weights: The unit of weight in the English system. In a pound avoirdupois are 7,000 grains, in a pound troy 5,760 grains. A grain is equal to ·0647990 grammes.

"Lay by the arbitrary names of pence and shillings, and consider and speak of it [money] as grains and ounces of silver, and 'tis as easy as telling of twenty." —Locke: Letter to Mr. Molyneux.

4. Skins: The hair side of skins, in contradistinction to the flesh side.

¶ (1) Against the grain: Against the natural bias or inclination.

"Hither, though much against the grain,
The dean has carried Lady Jane."
Swift: Progress of Marriage.

(2) In grain, * In grayne:

(a) In a permanent colour. (Originally spoken only of red.)

"How the red roses flush up in her cheekes,
And the pure snow, with goodly vermill stayne,
Like crimson dyde in grayne."
Spenser: Epithalamion.

(b) Innate, natural, real, not factitious; genuine.

(c) Deeply seated; in nature.

(3) Grains of allowance: Some little quantity or part allowed or remitted; a little allowance made.

(4) Grains of Paradise:

Bot.: The seeds of Amomum Grana Paradisi. They are acrid seeds, used to give a pungent taste to spiritnous liquors. Called also Guinea-grains.

grain-bin, s. A box or compartment in which grain is stored in a granary or elevator grain-binder, s. An attachment to a harvester for binding a gavel into a sheaf. (American.) grain-bruiser, s. A machine for mashing grain for feed, to render it more digestible. It does not grind but crushes the kernel, corn, or oats. It has two iron rollers of different diameters, turned by connecting cog-wheels of the same size, so that a rubbing is added to the crushing action.

grain-cleaner, s.

1. A machine in which wheat, oats, rye, and barley are separated from their chaff, dust, and pieces of straw, the result of the thrashing operation; a fanning or winnowing machine.

2. The shoe or cleaning portion of a thrashing-machine, which acts after the thrasher and the straw-carrier.

3. A machine in which grain is rid of cockle, garlic, &c., which are so nearly the size and weight of the grain that the size of mesh and strength of blast of the fanning-mill are ineffective

4. A machine in which grain is rubbed, brushed, and blown to remove smut and dust.

grain-conveyor, s. [ELEVATOR, II. 2, 3.]

grain-cradle, s. [CRADLE, B. 8 (1).]

grain-damper, s. A device for applying steam to grain to scald the bran and facilitate the process of decortication. A jet of steam entering a tube where the grain descends a series of inclines is a usual method.

grain-drier, s. An apparatus or machine in which damp grain is dried, or grain in ordinary condition is kiln-dried to fit it for ocean shipment.

grain-drill, s. A machine for sowing grain in drills or rows.

grain-fork, s. A light fork with long, curved tines, used for pitching gavels of cut grain on to a waggon, when the straw is too short for convenient binding.

grain-gauge, s. [Grain-tester.]

grain-huller, s. A machine for taking the cortex or skin from grain, making hulled wheat, pearl barley, hominy, &c.; a decorticator.

grain-leather, s.

1. Dressed horse-hides.

2. Goat, seal, and other skins blacked on the grain side for women's shoes, &c.

grain-meter, s. A machine for measuring grain.

grain-mill, s. A mill for grinding corn; a grist-mill.

grain-moth, s.

Entom.: Two moths, the larvæ of which feed on grain. They are Tinea granella and Butalis cerealella. The perfect insects have narrow wings of satiny lustre, and with marginal fringes.

grain-rake, s.

1. A rake used in raking grain in the swath into gavels for binding.

2. A rake used by one who rides on the reaper in raking gavels from the platform of the machine.

grain-sacker, s. A device for loading grain into sacks.

grain-scourer, s. A machine for cleaning grain; a smut-mill; a machine in which grain is rubbed and chafed, and eventually sorted into qualities by gravity and blast.

grain-screen, s. A shaking sieve, or a rotating cylindrical reel of wire-cloth in which grain is sorted by quality, according to its ability to pass through the meshes of the sieve.

grain-separator, s. A thrashing-machine.

grain-shovel, s. A shovel for handling grain in sacks on the floor of a kiln, granary, or warehouse, or in the hold of a vessel where it is in bulk.

grain-tester, s. A means for weighing small quantities, as samples of grain. The cup has a known capacity, as a certain aliquot part of a bushel, and the divisions on the scale indicate the pounds which a bushel of the grain tested would weigh.

grain-tin, s. Crystalline tin ore. Metallic tin smelted with charcoal. Tin reduced from the loose grains of tin stone. [Stream-tin.]

grāin (2), grane, *grayn, *greyn, s. [Icel. grein = a branch; Sw. gren; Dan. green.]

1. A branch of a tree.

"Apoun ane grane or branche of ane grene tre."
Douglas: Virgil, 350, 12.

2. A stalk or stem of a plant.

"The chesbow bedes oft we se Bow down thare knoppis, sowpit in thare grane."
Douglas: Virgil, 292, 8.

3. The branches of a valley where it divides into two; the point of juncture of two rivers; a branch of a river.

"That branch of the river which runs between Mr. Fraser's bank and the Allochy Island is called the Allochy Grain, or North Branch of the river, and the other is called the South Branch of the river."—State, Leslie of Powis, &c. (1805), p. 22.

4. A blade, as of a sword or knife.

"The grayn al of grene stele and of golde bewen."
Gawaine, 710.

5. A tine, prong, or fork.

6. (Pl.): An iron instrument with four or more barbed points, used for striking and catching dolphins and other fish.

grāin (3), graine, *grane, s. [Groan.]

grāin (1), greyne, v.t. & i. [Grain (1), s.]

A. Transitive:

I. Ord. Lang.: To form into grains, as sugar, powder, &c.

II. Technically:

1. Paint.: To paint or colour so as to give the appearance of the grain of wood, marble, &c.

2. Tan.: To take the hair off; to soften and raise the grain of: as, To grain skins or leather.

B. Intransitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. To yield fruits; to be fruitful.

"The loud began to greyne."
Gower, in Halliwell, p. 417.

2. To form grains; to assume a granular form.

II. Paint.: To paint or colour wood, stone, &c., so as to give the appearance of the grain of wood, marble, &c.

grāin (2), grāne, v.i. [Groan.]

grāin'-age (age as ĭj), s. [Eng. grain; -age.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A duty or duties on corn.

2. An ancient duty in London, consisting of the twentieth part of the salt imported by aliens.

II. Farr.: A term applied to certain mangy tumours on the legs of horses.

grāined, a. [Eng. grain (1); -ed.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Formed or divided into grains or small particles.

2. Rough, made less smooth; showing the grain.

"Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
Yet hath my night of life some memory."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, v. 1.

3. Dyed deep or in grain; ingrained.

"I see such black and grained spots,
As will not leave their tinct."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 4.

4. Painted or coloured with a grain.

II. Bot.: Having minute granules or tubercles, as the petals of some plants.

grained-leather, s. The same as Grain-leather (q.v.).

grāin'-ĕr, s. [Eng. grain; -er.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. One who grains or paints in imitation of the grain of wood, marble, &c.

2. The brush used in graining woods, &c.

II. Tanning:

1. An infusion of pigeon's dung for giving flexibility to skins in the process of tanning. Also called bate.

2. A knife used by tanners for taking the hair off skins.

3. A granary.

grāin'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Grain (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A crop of grain or corn.

"It received moreover grainings with cornefields, vineyards, pastures, and woodes."—P. Holland: Suetonius, p. 193.

2. An indentation or milling.

"The engines which put the letters upon the edges of the large silver pieces, and mark the edges of the rest with a graining, are wrought secretly."—Locke: Further Considerations.

II. Technically:

1. Leather manufacture:

(1) The process of rubbing leather with a board to raise the grain. The leather having been shaved to a thickness at the beam, and daubed, is hung up to dry, and is then folded, grain side in, and rubbed on the flesh side with a pommel or crippler to give the leather a granular appearance and render it supple. The hide is then extended and rubbed on the grain side. This is termed bruising.

(2) A process for giving markings to the surface of leather to imitate the wrinkled appearance of morocco, hog-skin, and some other leathers.

2. Paint.: The imitation of the natural grain of wood by means of tools. Combs, brushes, rollers, and the corner of a folded rag are used in making the various patterns.

3. Lithog.: A mode of giving a certain texture to the face of a stone. One stone is laid upon another with a quantity of sifted sand of a given fineness, and, by a peculiar oscillation and gradual progression, the surface is cut into a set of fine prominences more or less deep and distant, according to the character of the work to be placed upon the stone.

graining-board, s.

Leather Manufacture:

(1) A board on which leather is spread while being grained by the crippler.

(2) A board with a surface impressed or engraved with a pattern, in imitation of the natural grain of some kind of leather, and used to confer the same appearance upon the other leather by pressure.

graining-machine, s.

1. Paint.: A roller with a pattern surface representing the grain of wood, and used to transfer the pattern in paint to wood.

2. Leather manuf.: A machine having rollers with raised, parallel, straight, or diagonal threads, which indent the goat or sheep skins and give the wrinkled appearance to morocco leather.

graining-tool, s. Hand tools resembling combs, &c., for imitating in painting the lines which represent the growths of timber.

grāin'-ĭng (2), s. [Etym. doubtful; cf. Graining (1).]

Ichthy.: Leuciscus lancastriensis. A fish found in England in the Mersey and its tributaries; it was recognised by Agassiz during a visit to this country as occurring in some Swiss lakes. It is from seven to nine inches long, the upper parts pale drab, tinged with bluish-red, the under parts pale.

grāins (1), s. pl. [Grain (1), s.]

1. A residuum of fibre and insoluble matters after infusion or decoction; as the grains of malt after the wort is decanted.

2. A bating solution of birds' dung, used in destroying the effect of lime, and in improving the flexibility of leather.

3. Pieces of sheet-metal, cast-iron, or tinned iron inserted into a mould for the purpose of supporting an accessory portion, such as a core, in position.

grāins (2), s. pl. [Grain (2), s.]

grāin'-staff, s. [Eng. grain, and staff.] A quarterstaff (q.v.).

grāin'-ў, a. [Eng. grain (1); -y.]

1. Full of grains or granular particles; granular.

"It presented on its surface the grainy ripple of primæval seas."—Edinburgh Review (July, 1858), p. 9.

2. Full of grain or corn.

grāip, *grāpe, v.t. & i. [Grope.]

grāip (1), grāpe (1), s. [Grype.] A vulture, a griffin.

"Apperit to Remus sex grapis, afore ony foul apperit to Romulus."—Bellendene: Livy, bk. i., ch. iii.

grāip (2), grāpe (2), s. [Sw. grepe; Gael. grapadh.] A dung-fork.

"A grape; vbi Forke: tridens."—Cathol. Anglicum.

grāith, *grayth, *graythe, *greithe, a. [Icel. greidhr.]

1. Ready, willing, prepared.

"Loke thou, be graythe to go." Gawaine, 448.

2. Straight, direct.

3. Earnest.

4. Small, short.

grāith, *grayth, *graythe, *greith, *greythe, v.t. [Icel. greidha.]

1. To make ready; to prepare.

"He dide greythe a super riche." Havelok, 1,762.

2. To dress.

"The quen greithed hem gaili in garnemens ricce.", William of Palerne, 3,207.

3. To dress food.

"Of coukes graithand or makand reddie flesh or fishe, not wel nor convenient for men to be eaten."—Chalmerlan Air, ch. xxxviii., § 41.

4. To steep in a ley of stale urine.

grāith, *graythe, *greythe, s. [Icel. greidhi.] Apparatus, furniture, or equipment generally: as,

1. Harness.

"They got ony leather graith that they had use for ready-made out of Holland."—Scott: Heart of Midlothian, ch. v.

2. Accoutrements for war.

3. A miner's tools.

4. Substance, riches, property

5. An article of dress.

"They make shoone, buites, and other graith, before the lether is barked."—Chalmerlan Air, ch. xxii.

6. Any composition used by tradesmen in preparing their work.

"They [skinners] hunger their lether in default of graith, that is to say, alme [alum], egges, and other graith."—Chalmerlan Air, ch. xxiii. § 2.

7. Warm water so wrought up with soap as to be fit for washing clothes.

8. The twisted threads through which the warp runs in the loom.

"To delluer to the vobster ane grayth of iiij c."—Aberd. Reg. (1548), v. 20.

gra-kle, s. [GRACKLE.]

† grăl'-læ, s. pl. [Lat. = stilts.]

Ornith.: The name given by Linnæus to the order of Wading Birds now called Grallatores (q.v.).

grăl-la-tōr'-ēş, s. pl. [Pl. of Lat. grallator = one who goes on stilts.] [GRALLÆ.]

1. Ornith.: Wading Birds; an order of birds sub-class Carinatæ. They have long legs, a great portion of them often bare. This structure admirably fits them to wade, and that without having their feathers wet. They have often long necks and bills to reach the ground when wading. The toes are four, the hind one variable both in size and position. They have rudimentary webs, sometimes connecting the base of the tarsi, but not the extensive webs of the Natatores; yet some of them swim and dive well. They mostly frequent marshy places, the sides of streams and lakes on the sea-shore, where they pick up worms and insects. The order may be divided into four tribes: Macrodactyli, Cultrirostres, Longirostres, and Pressirostres; they have been divided also into six families: (1) Rallidæ (Rails), (2) Scolopacidæ (Snipes), (3) Ardeidæ (Herons), (4) Charadriidæ (Plovers), (5) Otitidæ (Bustards), and (6) Gruidæ (Cranes).

HERON.

2. Palæont.: Representatives of the order have been found in the Cretaceous rocks, and a succession of others in the Tertiary.

grăl'-la-tōr'-ĭ-ăl, a. [Lat. grallator = a walker on stilts; Eng. adj. suff. -ial.] Of or pertaining to the Grallatores, or wading-birds; wading.

grăl'-la-tōr'-ў, a. [Lat. grallator; Eng. adj. suff. -y.] The same as GRALLATORIAL (q.v.).

grăl'-lic, a. [Lat. grall(æ) = stilts; Eng. adj. suff. -ic.] Of or pertaining to the grallæ; grallatory.

grăl'-lŏck, s. [Etym. doubtful.] The offals of a deer.

grăl'-lŏck, v.t. [GRALLOCK, s.] To remove the offals of a deer.

* grăm, * grame, * gramm, * grom, a. & s. [A.S. gram, grom; O.S., O.H.Ger., & Dut. gram; Icel. gramr; Dan. gram; Sw. gramse; O.Fr. gram; Ital. gramo; Ger. gram.]

A. As adjective:

1. Angry, enraged. (Ormulum, 7,144.)

2. Warlike. (Gawan & Golopas, ii. 13.)

B. As subst.: Grief, anger, sorrow, vexation.

"A maanes mirth it wol turne al to grame."
Chaucer: C. T., 16,871.

-gram, suff. [Gr. γράμμα (gramma) = that which is written; γράφω (graphō) = to write.] A suffix frequently used with words of Greek origin to express something written, as, epigram, chronogram, telegram, &c.

grăm (1), s. [GRAMME.]

grăm (2), s. [Etym. doubtful.] The Chick-pea (Cicer arietinum), used in the East Indies for fodder. (Anglo-Indian.) ¶ Horse-gram:

Bot.: Dolichos uniflorus.

* grăm, * grame, * gramie, * grome, * gromien, v.t. & i. [A.S. gramian; O. H. Ger. & Goth. gramjan.]

A. Transitive:

1. To vex, to annoy, to make angry.

"For a lytyl wurde thou wilt men grame."
Robert de Brunne: Meditations, 845.

2. Impersonally:

"Swithe sore me grometh that heo sculle senden."
Layamon, ii. 637.

B. Intrans.: To be angry, vexed, or annoyed.

"His heorte gromede." Layamon, ii., 151.

* grăm'-ar-yĕ, s. [Fr. grimoire = a conjuring book. (Cotgrave.) This is only another form of Fr. grammaire, and did not appear till the sixteenth century. Grammaire among the uneducated stood for any book of occult science, by reading which it was supposed adepts could raise the devil.] [GRAMMAR.] Magic.

"I hope that in Mr. Scott's next poem his hero or heroine will be less addicted to gramarye and more to grammar."—Byron: English Bards & Scotch Reviewers (Note).

grą-măsh'-ĕş, s. pl. [GAMASH.] Gaiters reaching to the knee; leggings.

"His strong gramashes, or leggings, of thick gray cloth."—Scott: Heart of Midlothian, ch. xiii.

* grame, a. & s. [GRAM, a.] grā'-mĕn-ite, s. [Lat. gramen = grass, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.). Named from the grass-green colour.]

Min.: A variety of Chloropal found at Menzenberg, in the Siebengebirge. (Dana.)

* grăm'-ĕr, s. [GRAMMAR.]

grą-mĕr'-çў, interj. [O.Fr. grammerci; Fr. grand merci = great thanks.] An exclamation expressive of thanks, mingled with a feeling of surprise.

"'Gramercy!' quoth Lord Marmion."
Scott: Marmion, i. 25.

grăm'-ĭ-nąs, s. pl. [Pl. of Lat. gramen (genit. graminis) = grass.]

Bot.: The name given by Linnæus in 1751 to the fourteenth of his natural orders of plants. Jussieu in 1782 retained the name; Robert Brown in 1810 altered it to Gramineæ. Lindley's name for it is Graminaceæ (q.v.).

grăm-ĭn-ā'-çĕ-æ, grą-mĭn'-ē-æ, s. pl. [Lat. gramen; genit. gramin(is) = grass, and fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ, -eæ.]

Bot.: Grasses. An order of endogens, alliance Glumales. It consists of evergreen herbs, a few of them reaching a great size and living for many years. The rhizoma is fibrous or bulbous; the stem, which is covered with a coat of oil, is cylindrical, generally fistular, closed at the joints, but sometimes solid; the leaves are narrow and undivided; they are alternate with a split-sheath and a ligula or membranous expansion at the junction of the stalk and blade. The flowers, which are green, are in little spikes, called locustæ, arranged in racemes or panicles. Flowers formed of imbricated bracts, the outer ones called glumes, those within them paleæ, and the innermost ones scales. Glumes, two or five; paleæ, two, the outer one simple, the inner composed of two, united by their continuous margins, usually two-keeled; stamens generally three, rarely one; two, four, six, or more anthers, versatile; ovary, simple; styles, two or three, distinct, more rarely combined into one; seed, one, anatropal; generally undistinguishable from the membranous pericarp; albumen farinaceous. The order has a remote affinity to the Palms (Palmaceæ), and a closer one to the Sedges (Cyperaceæ). Grasses occur in all countries and in nearly all situations. There are 250 genera, and about 4,500 species. They constitute about one-twentieth, if not even one-sixteenth, of all known plants. In individuals they transcend all other orders, but a genuine greensward is more common in temperate countries than in the tropics, in which the grasses grow less closely together, besides being often larger. All the cereals belong to this order, particular genera and species flourishing better in one country than in another. Thus the oat and the barley come to great perfection in Scotland, rye in the north of continental Europe, wheat in the United States, and in several countries of Europe; rice where water abounds, in Southern Asia; and maize in the United States. The order furnishes abundant fodder for cattle and horses. Sugar exists in all grasses, and is of great economic value in one; silex is made from them, also cordage, &c. Some yield a fragrant oil; a minute fraction are poisonous. The order Graminaceæ is divided by Lindley into the following thirteen tribes:—

"Oryzeæ, Phalareæ, Paniceæ, Stipeæ, Agrosteæ, Arundineæ, Pappophoreæ, Chloreæ, Aveneæ, Festuceæ, divided into two families—Bromidæ, and Bombusidæ; Hordeæ, Rottboelleæ, and Andropogoneæ (q.v.).

grăm-ĭ-nā'-çĕ-oŭs (or ceous as shŭs), a. [Mod. Lat. graminace(æ); Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Of or belonging to the order Graminaceæ (q.v.); having the characteristics of grasses.

"Nitrogenous manures are more peculiarly adapted for graminaceous plants, such as the meadow-grasses and the cereals."—J. Wrighton, in Cassell's Technical Educator, pt. x., p. 231.

grą-mĭn'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [GRAMINACEÆ.]

grą-mĭn'-ĕ-al, grą-mĭn'-ē-oŭs, a. [Lat. gramineus, from gramen = grass.] Pertaining to or like grass; pertaining to the tribe of grasses.

"The true nard was a gramineous plant, and a species of Andropogon."—Sir W. Jones: On the Spikenard of the Ancients.

grăm-ĭn-ĭ-fō'-lĭ-oŭs, a. [Lat. gramen (genit. graminis) = grass, folium = a leaf, an Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having leaves like those of grasses,—i.e., long, slender, pointed, and so veined as to split longitudinally.

grăm-ĭ-nĭv'-ŏr-oŭs, a. [Lat. gramen (genit. graminis) = grass; voro = to devour; -ous.] Grass eating; feeding or living upon grass.

"In the swan, the web foot, the spoon bill, the long neck, the thick down, the graminivorous stomach, bear all the relations to one another."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. xv.

grăm'-ma-lŏgue, s. [Gr. γράμμα (gramma) = that which is written, a letter, and λόγος (logos) = a word.]

Phonog.: A word represented by a logogram; as it represented by |, that is t.

grăm'-mar, * gram-aire, * gram-er, * gram-ere, * gram-mere, * gram-or-y, s. & a. [O. Fr. gramaire; Fr. grammaire, from Low Lat. * grammaria, from Lat. gramma = Gr. γράμμα (gramma), from γράφω (graphō) = to write.]

A. As substantive:

1. The science which treats of the words of which language is composed, and of the laws by which it is governed. It is of two kinds, descriptive and comparative. Descriptive grammar classifies, arranges, and describes words as separate parts of speech, and notes the changes they undergo under certain conditions. Comparative grammar, which is based on the study of words, goes further; it analyzes and accounts for the changes they have undergone, and endeavours to trace them back to their origin; it thus deals with the growth of language.

"Grammar is the art of true and well speaking a language."—Ben Jonson: English Grammar, ch. i.

2. A book or work containing the principles and rules for speaking and writing a language; a treatise on the principles of language.

"Alfric composed several grammars and dictionaries."—Goldsmith: Polite Learning, ch. iii.

3. The art of speaking or writing a language with correctness and propriety according to established rules.

4. A correct use of words in accordance with the established rules of language; propriety of speech.

"Varium et mutabile semper fœmina, is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar."—Dryden.

5. A treatise on the elements or principles of any science or subject; as, a grammar of geography.

B. As adj.: Pertaining to or contained in grammar; as a grammar rule.

grammar-school, * gramer-scole s. A school in which languages, especially Latin and Greek, are grammatically taught.

"Thou has most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar-school."—Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., iv. 7.

* grăm'-mar, * grăm'-mĕr, v.i. [GRAMMAR, s.] To discourse according to the rules of grammar.

"She is in her
Moods and her tenses: I'll grammer with you.
And make a trial how I can decline you."
Beaum. & Flet.: Laws of Candy, ii. 1.

gram-mär'-ĭ-an, *gram-ar-i-an, *gram-ar-i-en, *gram-ar-y-on, *gram-ar-y-one, *gram-mar-y-on, s. [O. Fr. gramarien; Fr. grammairien.]

1. One who is versed in grammar or the science of languages; a philologist; a master of grammar.

"Among the priests who refused the oaths were some men eminent in the learned world, as grammarians, chronologists, canonists, and antiquaries."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiv.

2. One who writes or teaches grammar.

"Casaubon was led into that mistake by Diomedes the grammarian."—Dryden: Juvenal. (Dedic.)

gram-mär'-ĭ-an-ism, s. [Eng. grammarian; -ism.] The principles or use of grammar.

gram-mär'-ĭ-oŭr, s. [Grammar.] Formerly, the teacher of grammar in a college; the term Professor of Humanity has long been used in its stead. (Scotch.) grăm'-mar-lĕss, a. [Eng. grammar; -less.] Destitute of grammar; without a grammar.

 grăm'-mar-yĕ, s. [Gramaye.]

 grăm'-mātes, s. [Gr. γράμματα (grammata), pl. of γράμμα (gramma) = a letter.] Elements, first principles, or rudiments, as of grammar.

"These apish boys, when they but task the grammates,
The principles of theory, imagine
They can oppose their teachers."
Ford: Broken Heart, i. 3.

gram-măt'-ĭc-al, a. [Fr. grammatical, from Lat. grammaticus = grammatical, from Gr. γραμματικος (grammatikos) = knowing one's letters or rudiments; γράμμα (gramma), gen. γράμματος (grammatos) = a letter; γράφω (graphō) = to write.]

1. Of or pertaining to grammar.

"And thus (i.e. by taking certain grammatical distinctions for real differences in nature) the grammatist has misled the grammarian."—Tooke: Diversions of Purley, vol. i., ch. ix.

2. According to the rules of grammar; grammatically correct.

"It is certainly not true in that sense of the words that the natural proper grammatical construction of them leads to."—Sharp, vol. v., Disc. 9.

gram-măt'-ĭc-al-lў, adv. [Eng. grammatical; -ly.] In a grammatical manner; according to the rules or principles of grammar.

"The words will grammatically bear this construction."—Waterland: Works, ii. 128.

gram-măt'-ĭc-al-nĕss, s. [Eng. grammatical; -ness.] The quality or state of being grammatical or according to the rules of grammar.

 gram-măt'-ĭ-căs-tĕr, s. [Formed from Eng. grammatic, on analogy with poetaster, criticaster, &c.] A low petty grammarian; a pretender to the knowledge of grammar.

"He tells thee true, my noble Neophite; my little grammaticaster."—Ben Jonson: Poetaster, i. 2.

 gram-măt-ĭ-cā'-tion, s. [Eng. grammatic; -ation.] A rule or principle of grammar.

gram-măt'-ĭ-çĭsm, s. [Eng. grammatic; -ism.] A point or principle in grammar.

"If we would contest grammaticisms, the word here is passive."—Leighton: Com. on 1 Peter ii. 25.

 gram-măt'-ĭ-çize, v.t. & i. [Eng. grammatic; -ize.]

A. Trans.: To render grammatical; to set out or arrange in accordance with a system of grammar.

"This was the very first attempt to embody, to arrange, or to grammaticize this language [the Celtic]."—Fuller: Worthies: Wales (General). (Note.)

B. Intrans.: To display one's knowledge of grammar; to act the grammarian.

"Grammaticising pedantically, and criticising spuriously."—Up Ward.

 grăm'-ma-tĭst, s. [Gr. γραμματιστής (grammatistēs).] A preteeder to a knowledge of grammar.

"Not instruments of burning plates . . . as some grammatists have imagined."—P. Holland: Ammianus, bk. xiv. (Annot.)

grăm'-ma-tīte, s. [Gr. γράμμα (gramma), genit. γράμματος (grammatos) = a written character, a line.]

Min.: The same as Tremolite (q.v.).

grămme, s. [Fr., from Gr. γράμμα (gramma) = a written character, a letter . . . a weight used by physicians = a scruple.]

Weights & Measures, Physics, &c.: A French weight, equivalent to that of a cubic centimetre of distilled water at 4° C. It weighs 15·443 grains. On the C.G.S. System of Units it is nearly equal to 981 dynes.

gramme-centimetre, s.

Physics: A measure of work on the C. G. S. System of Units. It is nearly = $9{\cdot}81 \times 10^7$ ergs. It is rather less than the kilerg.

gramme-degree, s.

Physics: A measure of heat. One gramme degree Centigrade is = $4{\cdot}2 \times 10^7$ ergs = forty-two million ergs.

grăm'-mīte, s. [Gr. γράμμα (gramma) [Grammatite], and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: The same as Wollastonite (q.v.).

grăm-mīt-ĭd'-ē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grammit(es), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -ideæ.]

Bot.: A sub-tribe of Polypodiaceous Ferns having naked sori.

grăm-mī'-tĭs, s. [Gr. γραμμή (grammē) = the stroke of a pen, an outline; from the arrangement of the sori.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the subtribe Grammitideæ (q.v.). What was once termed Grammitis ceterach was next called Ceterach officinarum, and has now returned to Asplenium ceterach, its old Linnæan name.

Grăm-mŏn'-tĭ-ąns, Grănd'-mŏn-tīnes, Grăn'-dĭ-mŏn-tāins, s. pl. [From Grammont, in Limoges, Muret, near which the order was first established.]

Ch. Hist.: A monastic order founded in A.D. 1073, with the sanction of Pope Gregory VII., by Stephen of Thiers, a nobleman of Auvergne, who is sometimes called Stephen de Muret. [Etym.] His rules enjoined poverty and obedience; abstinence from animal food, which was not allowed even to the sick; as also silence, and forbade conversation with females. The lay brethren were to manage the secular affairs of the monastery while their clerical associates devoted themselves exclusively to spiritual contemplation. The reputation of the order remained high during the eleventh and twelfth centuries. Ultimately, however, variance arose between the clerical and lay brethren, and the rigour of the rules was modified, both courses tending to lower the reputation of the order in the Christian world.

¶ The order came into England in the reign of Henry I., A.D. 1100 to 1135. They established themselves at Abberbury, in Shropshire, at Cressewell, in Herefordshire, and at Grosmont or Eskdale, in Yorkshire. (Mosheim: Ch. Hist., cent. xi., pt. ii., ch. ii., § 26, &c.)

† grăm-mŏ-pĕt'-a-loŭs, a. [Gr. γραμμή (grammē) = the stroke of a pen, a line; πέταλον (petalon) = a leaf, and Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having linear petals.

 grăm'-ple, s. [O. Fr. grampelle, crampelle.] A crab-fish.

grăm'-pŭs, * grăm'-pässe, * grănd'-pĭsçe, s. [A corruption of Ital. gran pes = great fish, or of Port. gran peixe, or Sp. grand pez, from Lat. grandis piscis = a great fish. There is an analogous etymology to Porpoise (q.v.). (Skeat.)]

Zool.: A cetacean, Phocæna Orca, closely akin to the porpoise, P. communis, but much larger, being sometimes twenty-one feet long. It has eleven thick conical teeth, a little crooked, the posterior ones flattened transversely. It is black above and white below. It is a voracious animal. It is found in the North Atlantic, extending also to the British seas.

GRAMPUS.

grăn, a. [Grand.] (Scotch.) grā'-nạ, s. pl. [Pl. of Lat. granum = a grain.]

Pharm., &c.: Grains.

 grana-moluccana, s. pl.

Pharm.: The seeds of Croton Tiglium and C. Pavana, two euphorbiaceous trees from the East Indies, the oil of which is acrid, and blisters the skin.

 grą-nā'de, * grą-nā'-dō (1), s. [Grenade.]

I. A grenade.

2. A squib, a pamphlet, a satire.

 grăn-ą-dier', s. [Grenadier.]

grăn-ą-dĭl'-lą, s. [Sp.]

Bot.: Various species of Passiflora (Passion Flower), as Passiflora quadrangularis, &c., having edible fruits; also those fruits themselves.

 grą-nā'-dō (2), s. [Lat. granatum.] A pomegranate. [Granatum.]

grăn'-ąm, s. [Grandam.]

grăn'-ar-ў, s. [Lat. granaria, from granum = corn; Ital. granaro; Sp. granero; Port. granicr; Fr. grenier. Granary and garner are thus doublets.] A storehouse or repository for grain after it has been threshed; any place where grain is stored.

"Of forecast, the sitta, and the ant, which lay up nuts and other seeds in their granaries, which serve them in winter."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. iii., ch. iii.

grăn'-at, s. [Garnet.]

Min.: The same as Garnet (q.v.).

 grăn'-ate (1), s. [Granite.]

 grăn'-ate (2), s. [Lat. granatum.] A pomegranate.

 grăn'-ate, a. [Lat. granatus.] Ingrained; dyed in grain.

"Syne nixt hir raid in granate violat Twolf damsellis, ilk ane in that estait."
Lindsay: Palice of Honour, l. 11.

grą-nā'-tī, s. [Gen. sing. of Lat. granatum.] [Granatum.]

Granati radicis Cortex: [Pomegranate-root Bark].

grăn'-ą-tīte, s. [Grenatite.]

 grą-nā'-tŭm, s. [Lat. (pomum) granatum = (an apple) with grains; granum = a grain.] A pomegranate.

grănd, * grannd, a. & s. [Fr. grand = great, from Lat. grandis, from the same root as gravis = heavy; Sp. & Ital. grande.]

A. As adjective:

1. Great, principal, chief.

"Whom the grand foe with scornful eye askance, Thus answered." Milton: P. L., vi. 148.

* 2. Weighty, important.

"In grand affairs thy days are spent,
In waging weighty compliment."
Dryden: Ep. 7.

3. Complete, full.

"Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles Collected from his life."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., iii. 2.

4. Great; illustrious; high in dignity, rank, or power; noble.

"God hath planted, that is, made to grow, the trees of life and knowledge, plants only proper and becoming the paradise and garden of so grand a Lord."—Raleigh: Hist. of the World.

5. Splendid, magnificent.

"I have ever observed, that colonnades and avenues of trees of a moderate length, were without comparison far grander, than when they were suffered to run to immeasure distances."—Burke: On the Sublime & Beautiful, pt. ii., § 10.

6. Worthy of admiration, noble, illustrious, admirable.

7. Noble; sublime; lofty; conceived or expressed in noble or dignified language: as, a grand conception, a grand idea.

8. It is used principally in composition to denote ascent or descent of consanguinity: as, grandfather and grandson, grandmother and grandchild, &c.; more remote in descent.

"Say first what cause
Moved our grand parents in that happy state, Favoured of Heaven so highly, to fall off
From their Creator." Milton: P. L., i. 29

B. As substantive:

1. The head or chief of certain secret societies: a grand-master.

2. [Grand-piano.]

grand-action, s. A pianoforte action, in which three features are combined: (1) A hammer to strike the string; (2) a hopper to elevate the hammer, and then, escaping therefrom, leave the latter instantly to fall away from the string, independently of the position of the key; and (3) a check to catch the hammer and prevent rebounding.

Grand Army of the Republic, s. A secret organization of the survivors of the Federal Army of 1861–65, who have been honorably discharged. [Abbrev.: G. A. R.]

grand-commander, grand-cross, s. The highest class in certain orders of knighthood.

grand-distress, s.

Law: A writ of distress issued in the real action of quare impedit, when no appearance has been entered after the attachment. It is directed to the sheriff, and commands him to distrain the defendant's goods and chattels, in order to compel appearance.

grand-duke, s.

1. Ord. Lang.: A title applied to members of the Imperial family of Russia, and also to the sovereigns of certain German states, who are considered as holding a position between duke and king. Before the establishment of the Italian kingdom under Victor Emmanuel, in 1861, there was a grand-duke of Tuscany.

† 2. Zool.: A name for the Eagle-owl, Bubo maximus.

¶ Grand Duke of Tuscany: One of the largest diamonds; now in the possession of Austria.

 grand-guard, * grande-garde, * graun-garde, s.

Old Arm.: A piece of plate-armour used in the tournament as an extra protection for the left shoulder and breast. It was screwed to the breast-plate, and allowed little or no room to the left arm, being only used on horseback in "jousts of peace." (Fairholt.)

"The one bare the helme, the second his graun-garde, the thirde his spere."—Hall: Henry VIII. (an. 5).

grand-juror, s. A member of a grand-jury (q.v.).

grand-jury, s.

Law: At common law, a jury consisting of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three duly qualified men, whose duty is to inquire into charges of crime or misdemeanor, to decide from evidence offered whether there is prima facie ground for a criminal accusation, and thence to find bills of indictment or ignore the charges, as the evidence heard may warrant. The legal number constituting a grand-jury varies in the several States from twelve to twenty-three; but in no State can an indictment be made without the concurrence of at least twelve grand-jurors. When a full panel of twenty-four is drawn, as under the common law, not more than twenty-three are sworn, so that twelve invariably constitutes a majority. [JURY.]

"The grand jury, having chosen their foreman, are next instructed in the articles of their inquiry by a charge from the judge who presides upon the bench. They then withdraw to receive indictments, which are preferred to them in the name of the sovereign, but at the suit of any private prosecutor; and they are only to hear evidence on behalf of the prosecution; for the finding of an indictment is only in the nature of an inquiry or accusation, which is afterwards to be tried and determined; and the grand jury are only to inquire upon their oaths whether there be sufficient cause to call upon the party to answer it."—Blackstone: Comment., bk. iv., ch. 23.

grand-juryman, s.

Law: A grand-juror.

 grand-larceny, s.

Old Law: The stealing of goods above the value of twelve pence.

 grand-lect, s. A great assembly.

"In the grand-leets and solemn elections of magistrates."—P. Holland: Livy, p. 25.

grand-lodge, s. The principal lodge of Freemasons and other societies. It is presided over by the grand-master, and grants charters of foundation or affiliation, and acts generally as the governing body of the order. The officers of grand-lodge are delegates from the various inferior lodges.

grand-mamma, s. [GRANDMAMMA.]

grand-master, s.

1. The title given to the head of the military orders of knighthood; as, the Hospitallers, the Templars, &c.

2. The chief officer in the grand-lodges of various secret societies.

grand-mercie, s. [GRAMERCY.]

grand-nephew, s. The grandson of a brother or sister.

grand-niece, s. The granddaughter of a brother or sister.

 grand-panch, s. A gourmand, a glutton.

"Our grand-panches and riotous persons."—P. Holland: Pliny, bk. xix., ch. iv.

grand-pensionary, a. [PENSIONARY.]

grand-piano, s. A harp-shaped piano, whose form is caused by the varying lengths of the strings, the mechanism being introduced in the most effective manner regardless of the dimensions of the instrument. [PIANOFORTE.] grand-relief, s.

Sculp.: [ALTO-RELIEVO].

grand-seignior, s. A title formerly given to the Sultan of Turkey.

 grand-serjeanty, s.

Law: A form of tenure by military service.

"These were the principal qualities, fruits, and consequences of the tenure by knight-service: of which there were some other species, such as the tenure by grand-serjeanty, per magnum servitium, whereby the tenant was bound, instead of serving the king generally in his wars, to do some special honorary service to the king in person; as to carry his banner, his sword, or the like; or to be his butler, champion, or other officer, at his coronation."—Blackstone: Comment, bk. ii, ch. 3.

grand-stand, s. The principal stand or structure, on a race-course, &c., from which a view of a race or other spectacle can be obtained.

grand-vizier, s. The prime minister of the Turkish Empire. [VIZIER.]

 grand, * graund, v.t. [GRAND, a.] To make great.

"To graund His grace is sacrilegious."—Davies: Summa Totalis, p. 6.

grănd'-çhĭld, s. [Eng. grand, and child.] The offspring of a son or daughter; a grandson or granddaughter.

"With cross and garland over its green turf,
And thy grandchildren's love for epitaph."
Byron: Manfred, ii. 1.

grăn'-dăm, * gran-dame, s. [Eng. grand, and dam.] A grandmother; an old woman.

"Make merry, wives! ye little children stun Your grandam's ears with pleasure of your noise!"
Wordsworth: Sonnet; Anticipation, No. 1.

grănd'-dâugh-tĕr (gh silent), s. [Eng. grand, and daughter.] The daughter of a son or daughter.

"Shortly after the Lady Jane Grey, granddaughter to the second sister of King Henry the Eighth, was publicly proclaimed Queen of England."—Camden: Elizabeth. (Introd.)

grănde, s. [Sp.]

Sugar Man.: The largest evaporating-pan of a battery.

grăn-dēē', s. [Sp. grande = a nobleman.] A nobleman; a person of high rank, power, or dignity: specif., in Spain, a nobleman of the highest rank, who has the privilege of remaining covered in the king's presence.

"The pageantry of life, considered in a political view, as designed by the grandees to awe the people, and keep them out of the park of selfish happiness, which the grandees have fenced with high pales."—Knox: The Spirit of Despotism, § 22.

grăn-dēē'-shĭp, s. [Eng. grandee; -ship.] The rank, dignity, or estate of a grandee.

"I think the Conde de Altamira has no less than nineteen grandeeships centred in his person."—Swinburne: Spain, let. 42.

grănd'-eur (eur as yŭr), s. [Fr., from grand = great.] The quality of being grand; splendour; magnificence; state; dignity; vastness of size; splendid or magnificent appearance; elevation of sentiment, language, or thought; sublimity.

"This grandeur and majestic show Of luxury." Milton: P. R., iv. 110.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between grandeur and magnificence: "An extensive assemblage of striking qualities in the exterior constitutes the common signification of these terms, of which grandeur is the genus and magnificence the species. Magnificence cannot exist without grandeur, but grandeur exists without magnificence: the former is distinguished from the latter both in degree and in application. When applied to the same objects they differ in degree; magnificence being the highest degree of grandeur. Grandeur is applicable to the works of nature as well as art, of mind as well as matter; magnificence is altogether the creature of art. A structure, a spectacle, an entertainment, and the like, may be grand or magnificent: but a scene, a prospect, a conception, and the like, is grand, but not magnificent." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)  grănd-ĕv'-ĭ-tў, * grănd-æv'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. grandævitas, from grandis = great, and ævum = age.] Great age, long life; length of life.

"Upon a true account the present age is the world's grandævity."—Glanvill: Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. xv.

 grănd-ĕv'-oŭs, a. [Lat. grandævus.] Of great age; long-lived.

 grand-ee-a, s. [Sp.] A grandee.

"Of all the grandeezs he had received."—Howell: Dodona's Grove, p. 101.

grănd'-fa-thĕr, s. [Eng. grand, and father.] The father of a mother or father; the male ancestor next above a father or mother in the acale of ascent.

 grănd-if'-ĭc, a. [Lat. grandificus, from grandis = great, and facio = to make.] Making great.

 grănd'-ĭ-fў, v.t. [Eng. grand; suff. -fy (q.v.).] To make, grand, great, or splendid.

 grănd-ĭl'-ô-quençe, s. [GRANDILOQUENT.] The quality or state of being grandiloquent; lofty or pompous language; bombast.

 grănd-ĭl'-ô-quent, a. [Lat. grandiloquens from grandis = great; loquens, pr. par. of loquor = to speak.]

1. Using lofty or pompous language; bombastic.

2. Bombastic; consisting of lofty or pompous language.

"For incident and style (with the exception of a few grandiloquent extravagances), it stands out favourably from the common run of novels."—Athenæum, Feb. 9, 1884, p. 182.

 grănd-ĭl'-ô-quoŭs, a. [Lat. grandiloquus, from grandis = great; loquor = to speak.] The same as GRANDILOQUENT (q.v.).

Grăn-dĭ-mŏn'-tāins, s. pl. [GRAMMONTIANS.]

 grănd'-ĭn-oŭs, a. [Lat. grandineus, from grando (genit. grandinis) = hail.] Full or consisting of hail.

 grănd'-ĭ-ōse, a. [Fr., from grand = great, Ital. grandioso.]

1. Grand, sublime, imposing, magnificent; full of grandeur.

"Hardly anything could seem more grandiose."—G. Eliot: Romola, ch. xxi.

2. Pompous, bombastic; vulgarly showy or grand; grandiloquent.

"Worth more than the grandiose memoirs of immortal statesmen."—Forster: Life & Times of Goldsmith, bk. iii., ch. v., p. 301.

 grănd-ĭ-ŏs'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. grandios(e); -ity.] The quality or state of being grandiose; bombastic or pompous style or language.

 grănd'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. granditas, from grandis = great.] Greatness, grandeur, magnificence.]

"Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness."—Camden: Remaines; Poems.

 grănd'-lĭng, s. [Eng. grand; dim. suff. -ling.] A petty noble or grandee.

"Should he (not) heare of billow, wind and storm,
From the tempestuous grandlings."
Ben Jonson: Speech according to Horace.

grănd'-lў, adv. [Eng. grand; -ly.] In a grand manner, splendidly, magnificently, admirably, sublimely.

grănd'-ma, s. A colloquial abbreviation of grandmamma.

grănd'-mam-ma, s. [Eng. grand, and mamma (q.v.).] A grandmother (q.v.).

 grănd-ma-tĕr'-nal, a. [Eng. grand, and maternal (q.v.).] Of or pertaining to a grandmother or female ancestor.

Grănd-mŏn'-tāneş, s. pl. [GRAMMONTIANS.]

grănd'-mŏth-ĕr, s. [Eng. grand, and mother.] The mother of one's father or mother.

grănd'-mŏth-ĕr-lў, a. [Eng. grandmother; -ly.] Pertaining to or becoming a grandmother. (Generally used in the expression grandmotherly legislation or government, that is, fit for children, childish, treating those concerned as children.)

grănd'-nĕss, s. [Eng. grand; -ness.] The quality or state of being grand; grandeur.

grănd'-pa, s. A colloquial abbreviation of grandpapa.

grănd'-pa-pa, s. A familiar variant of grandfather.

grănd'-pâunch, s. [Eng. grand, and paunch.] A greedy fellow, a glutton, a gourmand.

"Our grandpaunches and riotous persons."—P. Holland.

grănd'-sçhĭr, *grănt'-sçhīr, s. [Eng. grand; Scotch schir = sir.] A great-grandfather.

"His seid vmquhile darrest grandschir decelsit frome this present lyff in the field of Flowdoune."—Acts Jas. VI., 1592 (ed. 1814), p. 619.

grănd'-sĭre, *grand-sier, s. [Eng. grand, and sire.]

1. A grandfather.

"The boy set up betwixt his grandsire's knees."
Tennyson: Dora, 128.

2. An ancestor, a forefather.

"Great Romulus, the grandsire of them all."
Spenser: F. Q., I. v. 49.

grănd'-sŏn, * grand-senne, s. [Eng. grand, and son.] The son of one's son or daughter.

"Alcæus grandsonne searching long."
Warner: Albions England, bk. iii., c. xi.

gran-dy, s. [Grandee.]

 grāne (1), s. [Grain, s.]

 grāne (2), s. [Groan, s.]

 grāne, v.i. & t. [Groan, v.]

A. Intrans.: To groan. (Scotch.)

B. Trans.: To exhaust or wear out by groaning.

"I might grane my heart out or onybody wad gie me either a baue or a hodie."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xii.

gran-er, s. [Granary.] A granary, a garner.

grānge, *graunge, * grenge, s. [Fr. grange, from Low Lat. granea = a barn, a grange; granum = grain, corn; Sp. & Port. granja.]

*1. A barn, a granary.

"Their teeming flocks, and granges full."
Milton: Comus, 178.

2. A farmhouse or farmstead standing away at a distance from other houses or a village; applied to the residence of the bailiff of a feudal, the dwelling of a yeoman, &c.

"Till thou return, the Court I will exchange For some poor cottage, or some country grange."
Drayton: Lady Geraldine to the Earl of Surrey.

*3. The farmhouse or farmstead of a religious house, where the crops from the ground attached to the monastery and also the tithes and rent paid in kind were stored: one of the monks, called the prior of the grange, was deputed to keep the account of the farm.

"An officer out for to ride,
To sen her granges and her bernes wide."
Chaucer: C. T., 12,996.

4. A combination, society, or association of farmers for the promotion of the interests of agriculture, by abolishing the restraints and burdens imposed on it by railway and other companies, and by getting rid of the system of middlemen or agents between the producer and the consumer.

grānge, v.t. [Grange, s.] Apparently, to farm.

"They presume thus to grange and truck causes."—Birch: Memoirs of Queen Elizabeth, i. 354.

gr ĭn'-ğĕ-a, s. [Named probably after some one called Grange, known to Addison (Paxton).]

Bot.: The typical genus of the sub-tribe Grangeineæ (q.v.). Grangea maderaspatana, found in India and in Brazil, is used in the latter country as a substitute for calomel.

grăn-ğĕ-ĭn'-ē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grange(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -ineæ.]

Bot.: A sub-tribe of Compositæ, tribe Asteroideæ.

grānğ'-ĕr, * graung-er, s. [Eng. grange; -er.]

* 1. A farm bailiff or steward.

"The graunger or maister of husbandrie hath not done his part."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xviii., ch. xxiii.

2. A member of a grange or association for the promotion of the interests of agriculture. (American.)

Grānğ'-ĕr-īşe, v.t. [Grangerism.] To mutilate books in the manner described under Grangerism (q.v.).

"Mr. Ashton's Social Life in the Reign of Queen Anne . . . would be a capital book to Grangerise."—G. A. Sala, in Illust. London News, Nov. 4., 1882, p. 463.

Grānğ'-ĕr-ĭşm, s. [For etym. see def. and extract.] The practice of illustrating some particular book with engravings torn from others. As will be seen from the example under Grangerite the custom itself was known in the last century, but the name is derived from the special delight bibliophiles took in thus illustrating Granger's Biographical History of England. G. A. Sala (loc. cit.) says, on the authority of the advertisement of the fifth edition, that at its first appearance the rage to illustrate it became so prevalent that scarcely a copy of any work embellished with portraits could be found in an unmutilated state.

"Grangerism, as the innocent may need to be told, is the pernicious vice of cutting plates and title-pages out of many books to illustrate one book."—Saturday Review, Jan. 29, 1883, p. 123.

Grānğ'-ĕr-īte, s. [Granger; -ite.] One who mutilates books for the purpose of illustrating others.

"Diderot was not only a hardened Grangerite but as far in advance of his epoch, in respect of the theory of book illustration, as he was in respect of art criticism."—Saturday Review, Feb. 17, 1883, p. 207.

gran gûs'-tō, s. [It.]

1. Music: Elevated taste or expression.

2. Paint.: Anything in a picture very extraordinary or calculated to excite surprise.

 grăn'-ĭ-ĕr, s. [Garner.]

grą-nĭf'-ĕr-æ, s. pl. [Graniferous.] A name given by Agardh in 1821 to the Endogens (q.v.).

grą-nĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Lat. granum = grain, seed; fero = to bear, to produce; and Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Bearing grain or seeds like grain.

grăn'-ĭ-form, s. [Lat. granum (genit. grani) = grain, seed, and forma = form, shape.]

Bot.: Resembling grains of corn in form.

† grăn'-ĭ-līte, s. [Fr., from grani(t), and Gr. λίθος (lithos) = stone.]

Petrology:

1. Granite with small grains. (Littré.)

2. Indeterminate granite.

3. Granite which contains more than three constituent parts. (Ogilvie.) The word is not recognised by Rutley.

grą-nĭl'-ą, s. [Sp., dimin. of grano; Lat. granum = a grain, seed.] The dust or small grains of the cochineal insect.

gran-ĭt, a. [Eng. grain (2), s.; -it, -ed.] Forked, barbed.

"He has na power nor aucthorytye
On seyis, nor on the thre granit sceptour wand, Quhilk is by cut geuin me to bere in hand."
Douglas: Virgil, 17, 23.

grăn'-ĭ-tar, s. [Eng. grain; -ter.] An officer belonging to a religious house, who had the charge of the granaries; a grainger.

"Memorandum that the granitar sete na teynds to na baronis, nether landit men."—Chart. Aberbroth. fo. 126, in Macfarl., p. 433.

grăn'-īte, s. & a. [Ital. granito, as s. = granite, as adj. = grained, from Lat. granum = a grain, Port. granito; Fr. granit; Sp. granate. So named because the rock has a coarse granular structure.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. In the same sense as II. 1.

2. Anything very difficult to be destroyed, as when an individual is said to have a constitution of granite.

II. Technically:

1. Petrol. & Geol.: An unstratified rock, normally consisting of three simple minerals, felspar, quartz, and mica, or, in Dana's nomenclature, of orthoclase, quartz, and mica. For a long time the universally accepted view, which is still the prevalent one, was that it is an "igneous" rock, of a "plutonic" type. The difficulty has, however, to be encountered that it is not seen in process of formation on the earth's surface. This was met by Sir Chas. Lyell, the apostle of Uniformitarianism, by the hypothesis that it originates beneath the surface and under high pressure, produced in most cases by earth, but in some instances by a weight of incumbent water. Like surface volcanic rocks it has been fused and afterwards cooled; but it does not like them comprehend tuffs and breccias, &c., but assumes a crystalline texture, destitute of pores, or cellular cavities to which gases entangled in lava or any such rock give rise. It is in favour of its igneous origin that it has in many places broken through ordinary sedimentary or metamorphic strata, sending veins through them in various directions. It rarely, however, overtops or caps them, as if coming up molten through a crater it had overflowed them above. Hence Mr. Necker proposed for it the term underlying to distinguish it from the volcanic rocks, called by Dr. MacCulloch overlying rocks. Some geologists consider it not an "igneous" or "plutonic," but a metamorphic rock, more altered than gneiss, which agrees with it in composition, but in which stratification has not been obliterated. The two views are not necessarily antagonistic; some granites may have the one origin and others the other. Werner ranked granite as one of his "primary" rocks, and long after his time it was looked upon as always very old, if not even the most ancient of rocks. This view is obsolete; it is of all ages, some granite in the Alps having broken up the strata during Tertiary times. Mr. Sorby, F.G.S., has shown that granite encloses fluid cavities, having in them water, containing chlorides of potassium and sodium, with sulphates of potash, soda, and lime. He reasons out that the Cornish elvans (granite dykes) were consolidated on an average at a temperature not less than 250° C., and a pressure of 40,300 cubic feet of rock; the Cornish granites at a temperature of 216°, and under a pressure of 50,000 feet, and the centre of the mass of granite at Aberdeen at a temperature of 89°, and under a pressure of 78,000 feet. (Sorby, in Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xiv. 484, &c.)

2. Chem., &c.: M. Durocher supposes that a mass containing in combustion silica, alumina, alkaline, and earthy bases, potash, soda, sometimes lithia, with a little lime magnesia, the oxides of iron and manganese, with minute quantities of hydrofluoric, and even of boracic acid, would, as it cooled, separate into quartz, mica, and felspar, the felspar crystallizing sooner than the quartz, which would long remain in a viscous state. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., v., page c.)

3. Physical Geog., Scenery, &c.: Granite often constitutes the axis of high mountain chains; the Sinaitic range has an axis of granite. Granite hills have a peculiar rounded form, with a scanty vegetation. They are easily distinguishable from the flat-topped precipice-flanked basaltic hills. Von Buch considers that granitic mountains so much tend to be portions of a sphere, that he looks upon them as ellipsoidal bubbles, which were forced upwards only in a partially fluid state; then, when the upper dome-shaped surface contracted, many granitic blocks were formed. Both phenomena exist in the Brocken mountains.

4. Comm., &c.: Granite is of much economic value as a building stone. Aberdeen is sometimes called the Granite City, from the majority of its houses being built of that material, and New Hampshire is popularly called the Granite State, on account of the quantity of granite composing its mountains. [Granite-polishing.] Aberdeen granite is grayish-white, Peterhead granite is red.

B. As adjective:

I. Ord. Lang.: Consisting of or belonging to granite.

"All round the mouth of Eskdale and south in the direction of Bootle, the granite blocks are chiefly congregated."—Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., x.

II. Fig.: Resembling granite in any of the qualities for which that material is noted.

"So up thy hill, ambrosial Richmond! heaves Dull Maurice all his granite weight of leaves:
Smooth, solid monument of mental pain."
Byron: English Bards & Scotch Reviewers

granite-dispersing, a.

Geol.: Dispersing granite in the form of erratic blocks.

granite-dispersion, s.

Geol.: The act of dispersing or scattering granite in the form of erratic blocks.

granite-group, s.

Petrol.: A group of rocks of which granite is the type, arranged under the class Crystalline Rocks. Rutley includes in it the following species: granite, porphyritic granite, felatone, granitite, cordierite granite, luxullianite, aplite or haplite, granulite, greisen, gneiaa, protogine, and cornubianite (q.v.).

granite-polishing, s. The polishing of granite. The method of doing this was discovered by MacDonald of Aberdeen. Tombstones, and pedestals of statues, pillars, &c., cut, smoothed, and polished on his system, may be seen all over the United States, and much of Europe.

granite-ware, s. Various kinds of ware having somewhat the appearance and claiming the durability of granite.

grăn'-ĭ-tĕl, grăn'-ĭ-tĕllo, s. [Fr. granitelle.]

Petrol.: A variety of grey granite with small crystalline granules, the components being felspar and quartz. It was worked by the ancient Romans as marble. Graphic granite is a variety of it.

grą-nĭt'-ĭc, † gra-nĭt'-ĭc-al, a. [Eng. granit(e); -ic, -ical; Fr. granitique.] Of or pertaining to granite; like granite; of the nature of granite; consisting or composed of granite. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., ix. 264.)

† granitic-aggregate, s.

Petrol.: A granular rock consisting of two or more simple minerals, only one of which is one of the ordinary constituents of granite. Thus there may be rock of quartz and hornblende, or of felspar and achorl.

grą-nĭt-ĭ-fĭ-cā'-tion, s. [Eng. granitify; c connective; snff. -ation.] The act of forming into granite; the state or process of becoming formed into granite.

grą-nĭt'-ĭ-form, a. [Eng. granite, and form.] Having the form of granite; having a granitic structure or shape.

grą-nĭt'-ĭ-fy, v.t. [Eng. granite; snff. -fy (q.v.).] To form into granite.

grăn'-ĭ-tĭn, *grăn'-ĭ-tine, s. [Fr. granitin.]

Petrol.: A rock consisting of felspar and quartz. Called also Pegmatite (q.v.).

grăn'-ĭ-tĭte, s. [Eng. granite, and snff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Petrol.: Any variety of granite which contains a certain amount of plagioclase (oligoclase). It has also flesh-red orthoclase, quartz, and a small quantity of blackish-green magnesian mica. (Rutley.)

grăn'-ĭ-tŏĭd, a. [Eng., &c., granit(e), and auff. -oid; from εἶδος (eidos) = form, appearance.]

Petrol.: Resembling granite; having the same mineral composition as granite, or having the minerals of which the rock is composed distinct, as in granite.

"We found it to be only a huge erratic of the usual granitoid gneiss."—Prof. Geikie, in Macmillan's Magazine, Oct., 1881, p. 426.

grăn-ĭ-tŏĭd'-īte, s. [Eng. granitoid; -ite.]

Petrol.: A name proposed, in 1879, by Prof. Bonney for certain Dimetian granitoid rocks, which in general aspect, much resemble a granite poor in mica; they are metamorphic clastic rocks, but differ from ordinary gneiss in being scarcely, if at all, foliated, and in the small amount of mica. The word has a plural, granitoidites.

grăn'-ĭ-tōne, s. [Ital.]

I. Petrol., &c. The name given in Tuscany to a very dense rock with large crystals of diallage, and milk-white or slightly steel-gray crystals of felspar of the hardest kind, occasionally replaced by steatite. The same as EUPHOTIDE (q.v.).

2. Palæont.: It is of miocene age. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xvi. 481.)

grą-nĭv'-ŏr-oŭs, a. [Lat. granum = grain, seed; voro = to devour; and Eng. adj. auff. -ous.] Feeding or living on grain.

"I speak of granivorous birds, such as common fowls, turkeys, ducks, geese, pigeons, &c."—Paley: Natural Theology, ch. xvi.

grăn'-nam, *grăn'-nŭm, s. [A corrupt. of grandam (q.v.).] A grandmother.

"Ghosts never walk till after midnight, if I may believe my grannam." Beaum. & Flet.: Lover's Progress, iv. 1.

grăn'-nў, grăn'-nĭe, s. [GRANNAM.] A grandmother; an old woman.

"I've heard my reverend grannie say,
In lanely glens you like to stray."
Burns: Address to the Deil.

granny's-knot, s.

Naut.: A knot in which the second tie is across, differing from a reef-knot, in which the end and outer part are in line.

grant, *granti, *grantte, *grante, *graunt, *graunte, v.t. & i. [O. Fr. grounter, graunter, forms of craanter, creanter = to caution, to assure, from Low Lat. * credento, creanto = to guarantee; credentia = a promise; from Lat. credeus, pr. par. of credo = to trust.]

A. Transitive:

1. To bestow, give, or confer, particularly in answer to prayer or request; to concede.

"He is worthie that thou graunte to him this thing."
Wycliffe: Luk vii.

2. To admit as true something not yet proved; to allow, to concede.

"I take it for granted . . . in this article it signifieth not holy things, but holy ones."—Pearson: On the Creed.

3. To transfer or bestow the right or title to; to convey by deed or writing; to give or make over for any good consideration.

"Grant me the place of this threshing-floor."—Chron. xxi. 22.

* 4. To agree with; to assent to.

"Us thought it was not worth to make it wise,
And granted him withouten more avise."
Chaucer: C. T., 778.

* 5. To admit of, to allow, to permit.

"His heart granteth
No penetrable entrance to her plaining."
Shakesp.: Rape of Lucrece, 558.

B. Intransitive:

1. To allow, to concede, to admit.

"But granting your excellence has at last forced envy to confess that your works have some merit."—Goldsmith: Polite Learning, ch. x.

* 2. To consent, to agree.

"Before I would have granted to that act."
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., i. 1.

¶ For the difference between to grant and to give, see GIVE.

grant, s. [GRANT, v.]

* I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of granting, bestowing, or conferring.

* 2. Consent, agreement.

"You grant or your denial shall be mine."
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., iii. 3.

3. That which is granted, bestowed, or conferred; a gift, a boon; property conveyed by deed or patent.

"All the Irish grants of William were annulled."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxv.

* 4. The admission of something not yet proved as true; concession.

"But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage."—Hooker: Eccles. Polity.

II. Law: The conveyance in writing of such things as cannot be passed or conveyed by word only, as lands, reversions, rents, &c., or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed.

"Thus mutual convenience introduced commercial traffic, and the reciprocal transfer of property by sale, grant, or conveyance; which may be considered either as a continuance of the original possession which the first occupant had, or as an abandoning of the thing by the present owner, and an immediate successive occupancy of the same by the new proprietor."—Blackstone: Comment., bk. ii., ch. 1.

 grant'-ą-ble, a. [Eng. grant; -able.]

1. That may or can be granted or conveyed by grant.

"Tithes and Church lands . . . coming to the crown became grantable in that way to the subject."—Burke: Dormant Claims of the Church.

2. That may or can be granted, allowed, or conceded.

"The Statute of Clarendon gave the accused of felony or treason, although quitted by the ordeal, forty days to pass out of the realm with his substance, which to other felons taking sanctuary and confessing to the coroner, he affirms not grantable."—Selden: Illustrat. Drayton's Poly-Olbion. s. 17.

grant-ĕd, pa. par. or a. [GRANT, v.]

¶ To take as or for granted: To assume as conceded or allowed; to take as admitted to be true, though not yet proved.

grant-ee', s. [Eng. grant; -ee.]

Law: The person to whom a grant or conveyance is made.

"Some of the living grantees were unpopular."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiii.

grant'-ẽr, * graunt-cr, s. [Eng. grant; -er.] One who grants.

"Both sides being desirers, and neither granters, they broke off the conference."—Sidney: Arcadia, bk. iii.

 grant'-ĭşc, s. [O. Fr.] A grant or granting.

"Asked Henry a bone of grantise of grace."
Robert de Brunne, p. 134.

 grant'-lў, adv. [Eng. grant; -ly.] Willingly; with consent or willingness.

grant'-ŏr, s. [Eng. grant; -or.]

Law: The person by whom a grant or conveyance is made.

"A duplex querela shall not be granted under pain of suspension for the grantor from the execution of his office."—Ayliffe: Parergon.

grăn'-ų-lą, s. pl. [Lat. granulum, dimin. of granum = a grain.]

Botany:

1. Large sporulca contained in the centre of many algals, as in the genus Gloionema. (Lindley.)

2. The spore-case of a fungal. (Treas. of Bot.)

grăn'-ų-lar, a. [Eng. granul(e); -ar.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Composed of or resembling granules or grains.

"The protoplasm comprising them is finely granular throughout."—Quain: Anatomy, ii. 23.

2. Bot.: Divided into little knobs or knots, as the roots of Saxifraga granulata. (Lindley.) granular crystalline-orthoclase, s.

Min. & Petrol.: A variety of orthoclase. Dana includes under it granite, gneiss, micaschist, syenite, syenitic gneiss, granulyte, albitic granite, pyroxenite, and miascyte.

granular-diabase, s.

Petrol.: A variety of diabase in which the individual constituents can be recognised by the naked eye. (Rutley.) granular-limestone, s.

Petrol.: A metamorphic limestone, composed of small grains or minute crystals intersecting each other in all directions, so as to produce a glimmering lustre, though they themselves, taken singly, are brilliant. It is white, grey, yellowish, bluish grey, reddish, greenish, &c., occasionally veined or spotted. It has no fossils, but at times contains various minerals, such as quartz, garnet, mica, hornblende, talc, actinolite, asbestos, sulphuret of lead and of zinc, &c. Of old it was called also primitive limestone, but it is now known that it may be of any age. It is often called crystalline limestone. Probably it is in all cases indirectly of animal origin. [LIMESTONE.] It occurs in many parts of the United States and various other countries. A variety of it is called statuary-marble (q.v.). (Phillips, &c.) grăn'-ų-lar-lў, adv. [Eng. granular; -ly.] In a granular manner or form.

 grăn'-ų-lar-ў, a. [Eng. granul(e); -ary.] Granular; resembling granules or grains; consisting of granules.

"Proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granulary bodies."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. ii., ch. v.

grăn'-ų-lāte, v.t. & i. [Eng. granul(e); -ate; Fr. granuler.]

A. Transitive:

1. To form into granules or small masses.

"Tin and lead may be quickly and better granulated by the mechanical way."—Boyle: Works, iii. 464.

2. To raise grannles or small asperities; to make rough on the surface.

"It would be too much to assert that the skin of the dog-fish was made rough and granulated on purpose for the polishing of wood."—Paley: Nat. Theol., ch. v.

B. Intrans.: To be formed into granules or small masses; to become granulated.

"It is a property of granulating substances to adhere promptly and permanently if brought together accurately."—Ashhurst: Encyclopædia of Surgery, i. 114.

grăn'-ụ-late, grăn'-ụ-lāt-ĕd, pa. par. or a.

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Consisting of or resembling grains or granules; granular.

2. Having numerous small asperities.

II. Bot.: The same as GRANULAR, 2 (q.v.).

granulated-glass, s. A kind of roughened glass, used for stained windows.

granulated-steel, s.

Metall.: Melted pig-iron is scattered by a wheel into a cistern of water, and thus reduced to fragments. These are imbedded in powdered hematite or sparry iron ore, and subjected to furnace heat. The exterior of the fragments become decarbonized, and thus reduced to the condition of malleable iron. The metal is made homogeneous by melting, and steel is produced.

grăn ụ-lā'-tion, s. [Fr.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of forming into granules or grains.

2. The state or process of becoming granular.

II. Technically:

1. Chem.: Zinc and tin are granulated by pouring the melted metal into cold water: the metal is thus obtained in small fragments. Granulated zinc is used for preparing hydrogen gas, and granulated tin along with concentrated hydrochloric acid is used to reduce nitro compounds to amido compounds.

"Granulation is the process by which metals are reduced to minute grains. It is effected by pouring them, in a melted state, through an iron cullender pierced with small holes, into a body of water, or directly upon a bundle of twigs immersed in water. In this way copper is granulated into bean shot, and silver alloys are granulated preparatory to refining."—Ure: Cyclopædia.

2. Surgery.

(1) A process by which little granular or grain-like fleshy bodies are formed on the surfaces of ulcers and suppurating wounds, and serve both for filling up the cavities and bringing closer together and uniting their sides.

"The mode of healing by granulation."—Ashhurst: Encyclopædia of Surgery, i. 112.

(2) The fleshy grain-like bodies thus formed.

"Small conical eminences called granulations, . . . in which, by the aid of a pocket lens, minute vessels can be distinguished."—Ashhurst: Encyclopædia of Surgery, i. 113.

grăn'-ụle, s. & a. [Fr., from Lat. granulum, dimin. of granum = a grain.]

A. As substantive:

I. Gen. (for the most part technically): Any small body like a grain of wheat, oats, &c.; a little grain.

"With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow."—Boyle: Works, i. 680.

II. Specially:

1. Anat.: There are granules in the blood and in the nerve substance. (See also B. ¶)

2. Botany:

(1) & (2) [GRANULA.]

(3) Pl.: Pollen-grains.

(4) Knobs or knots constituting portions of a root. [GRANULAR.]

3. Petrol.: A minute grain of a simple mineral, as one of the mechanically united constituents of a rock.

"The quartz occurs in small rounded granules in the rock."—Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xii. 183.

4. Astron.: [¶ (1), (2)].

B. As adj.: Consisting of granules.

¶ There is a granule-layer of the cerebellum. It consists of granule-like corpuscles lying in dense groups near the medullary centre. (Quain.)

¶ (1) Granules of Huggins:

Astron.: Groups of the granules described under (2).

(2) Granules of Langley:

Astron.: Minute bodies scattered over the whole surface of the sun, and assumed to be the immediate source of solar light and heat.

granule-cells, s. pl.

Anatomy:

1. Gen.: Cells containing globules of fat or oil existing in animal solids or liquids.

2. Spec.: Such cells when of new formation in inflammation, cancer, &c. (Griffith & Henfrey.) grăn-ụ-lĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Eng. granule; Lat. fero = to bear, to produce, and Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Bearing grains; full of grains.

grăn'-ụ-lĭ-form, a. [Eng. granule, and form.]

Petrol. & Min.: Having a granular structure.

grăn'-ụ-līte, grăn'-ụ-lȳte, s. [Mod. Lat. granul(um), and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Petrol.: A mixture of granular orthoclase and more or less quartz. It is sometimes called semi-granite. It often contains small garnets. Rutley considers it a metamorphic rock. A variety of it is termed Aplite. Granulite is called also Leptinite.

"This granulite or 'semi-granite,' as it is well-called."—Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxxiii. 320.

grăn'-ụ-lōse, s. [Eng., &c. (granul(e); -ose.] A name given to the part of the starch granules which is dissolved by dilute acids and acted upon by ferments; the residue is said to consist of a variety of cellulose, insoluble in water, which by long boiling is converted into granulose.

grăn'-ụ-loŭs, a. [Fr. granuleux, from granule; Sp. granuloso; Ital. granelloso.] Full of grains or granules; granular.

grāpe (1), s. [GRAIP (1), s.]

grāpe (2), s. [GRAIP (2), s.]

grāpe (3), * graap, s. [Fr. grappe = a bunch or cluster of grapes; M. H. Ger. krappe; O. H. Ger. chrapho = a hook; M. H. Ger. kripfen; O. H. Ger. chripphen = to seize, to clutch.]

I. Ordinary Language:

A. As substantive:

Bot., Hort., &c.: The fruit of the several species of the genus Vitis, of which the best known and most widely cultivated is Vitis vinifera. The native country of this plant is the region around the Caspian Sea, extending through Armenia to the Crimea. It has been cultivated from the remotest antiquity, and is widespread in Europe and Asia, but does not flourish in the United States except in California, where it has become a very important wine-making plant. There are several species in the United States, popularly known as the Fox Grape, the Chicken Grape, &c., from which excellent cultivated varieties have been produced.

¶ Bear's grape is Vaccinium arctostaphylos, also Arctostaphylos Uva ursi; the Corinth grape is the Black Corinth variety of Vitis vinifera, the one which furnishes dried currants; the Sea-grape is Ephedra distachya, also Sargassum bacciferum; and the Seaside grape Coccoloba uvifera.

II. Technically:

1. Farr. (Pl.): A mangy tumour on the legs of horses.

2. Mil.: [GRAPESHOT].

3. Ord.: The cascabel or knob at the end of a cannon.

B. As adj.: Of, belonging to, or in any way resembling the fruit described under A or the climbing shrub on which it grows.

* grape-bunch, s. A bunch or cluster of grapes.

"Bees like a long grape-bunch settle on Some temple's top."
Holiday: Juvenal, sat. xiii.

grape-flower, s.

Bot.: Muscari racemosum.

grape-fungus, s.

Bot., &c.: Oidium Tuckeri. [VINE-MILDEW.]

grape-hyacinth, s.

Bot.: The genus Muscari.

grape-pear, s.

Bot.: Amelanchier Botryapium.

grape-sugar, s. [GLUCOSE.]

grape-trellis, s. A trellis on which grape-vines are trained. [TRELLIS.]

grape-vine, s. The vine which bears grapes. [VINE.]

"She was sporting with her women, Swinging in a swing of grape-vines."
Longfellow: Song of Hiawatha, iii.

¶ In America the word vine is used more generically than with us. It is made to signify any plant climbing with tendrils. Thus there is the melon-vine and even the pea-vine. It is, therefore, necessary to have a specific word to distinguish one from the other; hence the use of the term "grape-vine."

* grape, v.i. [GROPE.]

grā'pe-lĕss, a. [Eng. grape; -less.] Without grapes, wanting the strength and flavour of the grape.

* grā'pe-lĕt, s. [Eng. grape; dimin. suff. -let.] A little grape.

"With its grapelets of gold Growing bright through my fingers."
E. B. Browning: Rhapsody of Life's Progress.

grāp'-ĕr-ў, s. [Eng. grape; -ry.] A building, inclosure, or other place where grape-vines are cultivated; a vinery.

"A little grapery and a little aviary."—Miss Edgeworth: Absentee, ch. vi.

grā'pe-shŏt, s. [Eng. grape, and shot.]

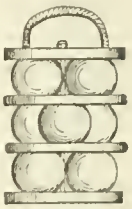
Ordnance: Spherical iron shot, rather less than half the diameter of the bore of the piece for which they are intended, and put up in stands consisting of three tiers of three shot each; the stand has a circular cast-iron plate at top and bottom, connected by a bolt and nut. Grapeshot is now little used. Quilted grape is formed by sewing the shot up in a sort of canvas-bag, which is afterwards wrapped around with twine or cord, so as to form meshes; bullets put up in this way were formerly employed for blunderbusses and small artillery. This form has some resemblance to a bunch of grapes, whence the name.



GRAPE-SHOT.

"One of these guns, laden with grapeshot, was now fired at the boats."—Marryat: Peter Simple, ch. xxxiii.

grā'pe-stōne, s. [Eng. grape, and stone.] The stone or seed of the grape.

"Nay, in Death's hand, the grapestone proves As strong as thunder is in Jove's."
Cowley: Elegy upon Anacreon.

grā'pe-wŏrt, s. [Eng. grape, and wort.]

Bot.: The Bane-berry, Actæa spicata.

-graph, suff. [Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write, to draw.] A suffix largely used in the names of scientific instruments: as, pantograph, seismograph, telegraph, &c., to denote the action of delineation or figuring performed by such instruments.

grăph'-ĭc, * grăph'-ĭck, * grăph'-ĭc-al, a. [Lat. graphicus = pertaining to drawing or painting = Gr. γραφικός (graphikos), from γράφω (graphō) = to write, to draw; Fr. graphique.]

* 1. Of or pertaining to the art of writing, delineating, or describing.

* 2. Written, drawn, inscribed; well or plainly delineated.

"Writing with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young: for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical."—Bacon: Natural History, § 503.

3. Described with vivid and clear language; vividly or forcibly described.

"Could the prophet have possibly given a plainer or more graphical description?"—Warburton: Divine Legation, bk. iv., § 6.

4. Having the power or faculty of describing things graphically: as, a graphic writer.

graphic formula, s.

Chem.: Graphic formulæ represent the relations of the atoms contained in a molecule to each other. Thus, the nitro-paraffins contain the same number of atoms of the various elements as are contained in the corresponding nitrous ethers, as CH_3NO is the formula for methyl nitrite and nitro-methane, but the graphic formula shows that in nitromethane, the nitrogen atom is in direct union with a carbon atom, and in methyl nitrite the nitrogen atom is attached to an oxygen atom,

When atoms are united by two affinities it is represented by a double bond, by three affinities by a triple bond, &c.

graphic-gold, graphic-ore, graphic-tellurium, s.

Min.: The same as SYLVANITE (q.v.). The term graphic refers to the arrangement of the crystals in a manner to suggest written characters.

graphic-granite, s.

Petrol.: Granite consisting of felspar (orthoclase), quartz, and a little mica. When a section is made in a particular direction, an appearance is presented as if the stone had been written over with characters bearing a remote resemblance to Hebrew letters.

graphic-microscope, s. A microscope provided with a reflector, which casts down the image upon a piece of paper. The instrument has two reflectors, the second one of which is a prism, across the edge of which the eye observes the image, which may be traced by a pencil.

graphic-ore, s. [GRAPHIC-GOLD.]

graphic representation, s. Representation by means of lines or diagrams.

graphic-tellurium, s. [GRAPHIC-GOLD.]

grăph'-ĭc-al-lў, adv. (Eng. graphical; -ly.] In a graphic manner; with graphic language.

"Those infernal throes and frightful agitations so graphically described."—Warburton: Doctrine of Grace, bk. ii., ch. viii.

grăph'-ĭc-lў, adv. [Eng. graphic; -ly.] In a graphic manner; graphically.

grăph'-ĭc-nĕss, *grăph'-ĭc-al-nĕss, s. [Eng. graphic, graphical; -ness.] The quality or state of being graphic.

grăph-ĭ dā'-çē-æ, s. pl. [Lat. graphis (genit. graphidis, graphidos), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: An order proposed by Lindley for those lichens which have the nucleus breaking up into naked spores. The same as GRAPHIDEI (q.v.).

grăph'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. graph(is), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of lichens, tribe Idiothalameæ. (Lindley.) It is now elevated into an order Graphidei (q.v.).

grą-phīd'-ē-ī, †grą-phīd'-ē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. graphis, genit. graphid(is), and Lat. masc. pl. adj. suff. -ei, or fem. -eæ.]

Bot.: A natural order of lichens, having the disc of the fruit linear, and either simple or branched. In most cases there is a distinct receptacle. The species occur both in temperate and tropical countries. They are sometimes called Letter-lichens.

grăph-ĭ-ŏl'-ō-ğў, s. [Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse, a treatise.] The art of writing or delineating; a treatise on the art of writing.

grăph'-ĭs, s. [Lat. graphis; Gr. γραφίς (graphis) = a style for writing, a drawing in outline.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the family Graphidæ, or the order Graphideæ (q.v.).

grăph'-ĭte, s. [Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to delineate, to write; suff. -ite (Min.) q.v.).]

1. Min.: An hexagonal mineral, crystallizing in flat six-sided tables. Hardness, 1 to 2; sp. gr., 2·1 to 2·2. Color, iron-black to dark steel gray, with a metallic lustre and a black shining streak. Compos.: carbon, either pure with an admixture of iron, or occasionally of silica, alumina, and lime. It occurs foliated, columnar, radiated, scaly, granular, massive, earthy, &c. It is met with in the metamorphic rocks, being occasionally altered coal, and also in greenstone. It is found in many parts of the world, the principal mines in the United States being at Ticonderoga, N. Y. It is popularly called blacklead, though there is no lead even as an impurity in its composition.

2. Comm.: It is used for the manufacture of pencils. In some cases solid graphite is used, but more generally the mechanical method of consolidating the dust of pure graphite by great pressure is used, the gritty portions being thus eliminated.

3. Geol.: Graphite probably arose from considerably altered vegetable or animal remains, in all likelihood the former.

graphito-battery, s.

Elect. Mach.: A galvanic battery consisting of zinc and carbon in sulphuric acid.

gra-phĭt'-ĭc, a. [Eng., &c. graphit(e); -ic.] Derived from graphite (q.v.).

graphitic-acid, s.

Chem.: $C_{11}H_4O_6$ Obtained by mixing one part of powdered graphite with three parts of potassium chlorate, and treating the mixture with concentrated nitric acid, and warming to 60° till no more orange vapors are given off. The residuum is washed with water, dried, and the operation repeated five times. Graphitic-acid is scarcely soluble in water, and forms transparent light-yellow crystals. When heated it gives off gases, and leaves finely divided charcoal. It forms compounds with bases.

grăph-ĭ-tōĭd, grăph-ĭ-tōĭd'-al, a. [Eng. graphite, and Gr. εἶδος (eidos) = appearance.] Having the appearance of graphite.

grăph-ŏl'-ō-ğў, s. The science of handwriting as indicative of the writer's character.

grą-phŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write, to draw, and μέτρον (metron) = a measure.] A surveying instrument for taking angles. It is also called a demi-circle.

grăph-ŏ-mĕt'-rĭc-al, a. [Eng. graphometer; -ical.] Pertaining to or measured by a graphometer.

grăph'-ŏn, s. [GRAPHITE.] An allotropic form of graphite. (Rossiter.) grăph'-ō-phōne, s. A species of phonograph having a hard rubber cylinder.

grăph'-ō-scōpe, s. [Gr. γραφή (graphē) = delineation, a drawing, and σκοπέω (skopeō) = to look at.] An optical apparatus for magnifying and giving fine effects to engravings, photographs, &c. Invented by C. J. Rowsell, exhibited in 1871. (Haydn.) grăph'-ŏ-spąşm, s. Writers' cramp.

grăph'-ō-tўpe, s. [Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write, and Eng. type.] A process for obtaining blocks for surface-printing. A zinc plate is covered with a thick coating of oxide of zinc, placed under an hydraulic press to make a perfectly plane and hard surface, and the design drawn upon the oxide with an ink consisting of a chloride of zinc and a menstruum. This produces, as to the parts where the ink touches, a very hard material, the oxychloride of zinc. The remaining surface is rubbed away by brushes, velvet, and the fingers, leaving the lines in relief to be printed from.

grăp'-nel, grăp'-nall, *grape-nel, s. [Formed with dimin. suff. -el, from Fr. grappin = a grapnel, from grappe = a hook.]

I. A small anchor with four or more flukes arranged in a circular manner, used by boats or small vessels, and sometimes as a kedge in warping or hauling.

"After this a canoe was left fixed to a grapnel in the middle of the harbour."—Anson: Voyage round the World, bk. ii., ch. xiii.

* 2. A grappling-iron used in sea-fights, to enable one ship to seize and hold on to another for the purpose of boarding.

3. An implement for recovering tools, &c., dropped into a bored shaft; or for breaking and raising the axial stem left by the annular borer.

grăp'-plo, *gra-ple, v.t. & i. [GRAPPLE, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To seize, to lay fast hold of, either with the hands or hooks.

* 2. To fasten; to fix with grappling-hooks.

"The gallies were grapled to the Centurion in this manner."—Hackluyt: Voyages, vol. i., pt. ii., p. 168.

* 3. To apply, to fasten.

"Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy."
Shakesp.: Henry V., iii. (Chorus.)

B. Intransitive:

1. To seize and contend; to wrestle; to struggle.

"Fiercely with Roderick grappled Græme."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, v. 34.

2. To struggle or contend, as with difficulties.

"To grapple with the difficulties of the quinquarticular controversy."—Bp. Horsley: Charge, Aug., 1806.

* 3. To seize, to lay hold.

"Their hands oft grappled to their swords."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, vi. 3.

grăp'-ple, s. [O. Fr. grappil, from grappe = a hook.] [GRAPE.]

I. A struggle; a contest hand to hand; a hug

"In mortal grapple overthrown."
Scott: Lord of the Isles, iii. 29.

* 2. A close fight.

"In the grapple I boarded them."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 6.

3. A hook for securing one vessel to another or one object to another. Used in holding vessels in engagement while boarding, or in a more peaceable way to hold them associated while loading, unloading, or transferring cargo; a grappling-iron.

"At the end he [Archimedes] fastened a strong hook or grapple of iron."—Wilkins: Archimedes, bk. i., ch. xii.

4. Grasping tongs, used in various shapes, and for many purposes, as for recovering well-tubes from bored wells or shafts.

* 5. Anything by which a body attaches itself to another.

"The creeping ivy to prevent his fall, Clings with its fibrous grapples to the wall."
Blackmore: Creation, bk. ii.

grapple-plant, s.

Bot.: The name given at the Cape of Good Hope to Uncaria procumbens, one of the Pedaliaceæ. The name was given because the hooks surrounding the fruit grapple or lay hold of the clothes of people, the fur of animals, &c., and are difficult to disengage.

* grăp'-ple-mĕnt, s. [Eng. grapple; -ment.] A grapple, a grappling, a close struggle.

"[They] down him stayed With their rude hands and grisely grapplement."
Spenser: F. Q., II. xi. 39.

grăp'-plĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRAPPLE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act of seizing or laying fast hold on.

2. A grapple, a struggle.

"A match for pards in fight, in grappling for the bear."
Dryden: Palamon & Arcite, iii. 57.

* 3. A grapple, a grapnel, a grappling-iron.

* 4. An anchorage.

"We run under the land, and came to a grappling, where we took such rest as our situation would admit."—Cook: First Voyage, vol. i., bk. ii., ch. iii.

grappling-iron, s. An iron instrument made with four or more claws or hooks for laying hold on anything.

grăp'-sĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. graps(us), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: Grapsoidians; a family of brachyurous crustaceans, tribe Catametopes. Milne Edwards places them between the Gonoplacians and the Oxystomes. They have a less regularly quadrilateral carapace than in the Gonoplacians, to which they are closely akin. They are inhabitants of the seashore or of rocks bordering the ocean. They are timid, and escape with much speed at the first appearance of danger.

grăp-sōĭd'-ĭ-ąns, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grapsus; Gr. εἶδος (eidos) = form, appearance, and Eng. pl. suff. -ans.]

Zool.: The English name of the family Grapsidæ (q.v.).

grăp'-sŭs, s. [Gr. γραψαῖος (grapsaios) = a crab.]

1. Zool.: The typical genus of the family Grapsidæ (q.v.). The genus was founded by Lamarck, but its limits have been narrowed by Milne Edwards, who confines it to species with their body greatly flattened. They are widely distributed.

2. Palæont.: Grapsus is found in the Tertiary strata.

grăp'-tō-lite, s. [GRAPTOLITES.]

Palæont.: The English name of any animal of the sub-class Graptolitidæ, and specially of the typical genus Graptolites (q.v.).

¶ (1) Double graptolites.

Zool.: Diplograpsus, didymograpsus, &c.

(2) Twin graptolites:

Zool.: Didymograpsus. [GRAPTOLITE.]

graptolite-schists, graptolitic-schists, s. pl.

Geol.: Schists of Lower Silurian age containing graptolites with their slope as a rule E.N.E. and W.S.W.; occurring in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbrightshire, Wigtownshire, and elsewhere. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., vii. 46.)

grăp-tō'-lī-tēş, *grăp-tō-lĭth'-ŭs, s. [Gr. γραπτός (graptos) = painted, marked with letters, written, and λίθος (lithos) = stone.]

Palæontology:

*I. (Of the form graptolithus): A genus belonging to the mineral kingdom, instituted by Linnæus, and placed by him in his class Fossilia and his order Petrificata. He defines it as a petrifaction resembling a picture. It is quite a medley. One species resembles a map; a second is variegated Florentine marble; another looks like a fossil alga; a fourth is a recent serpula on oysters and other shells; and a fifth dendritic markings on agates. None of these are graptolitea in the modern sense.

2. (Of the form graptolites): The typical genus of the sub-class (formerly the family) Graptolitidæ. Only one side has a row of cellules.

grăp-tō-lĭth'-ŭs, s. [Graptolitea.]

grăp-tō-lĭt'-ĭc, a. [Mod. Lat. graptolit(es), and Eng., &c. suff. -ic.] Palæont.: Of, belonging, relating to, or containing graptolites.

graptolitic-schists, s. pl. [Graptolite-schists.]

grăp-tō-lĭt'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. graptolit(es), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.] Palæont.: A sub-class (formerly a family) of Hydrozoa. They have a compound hydrosoma, occasionally branched, consisting of numerous polypites protected by hydrothecæ, and united by a cœnosarc enclosed in a strong tubular polypary. Their nearest living allies are the Sertularida. Some have a GRAPTOLITIDÆ.

1. Rastrites peregrinus (Barraude).
2. Diplograpsus folium (Hisinger).
3. Didymograpsus Murchisoni.

row of cellules only on one, and others on both sides. They are characteristic Silurian fossils. They occurred where the sea-bed was of mud. Prof. Allman calls the sub-class which they constitute Rhabdopleura. Genera Graptolites and Rastrites, with rows of cellules only on one side, the former coiled like a watch-spring, Diplograpsus, Didymograpsus, &c., with two rows, the cellules in the latter turned to, and in the former away from each other. For English, Scotch, and other species, see Murchison's Siluria; see also for the latter Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., vii. 46.

grăp'-ў, a. [Eng. grap(e); -y.] Consisting of or resembling grapes.

"The grapy clusters spread."
Addison: Ovid; Metam., iii.

gras (1), s. [Grace.]

gras (2), s. [Grass.]

grase, v.t. [Graze.]

gras-hop, *gres-hop, s. [Grasshopper.]

grasp, *graasp, *graspe, *grasp-en, v.t. & i. [From grapsen, an extension of grapen = to grope; cf. Ger. gropsen = to snatch; Ital. graspare = to grasp.]

A. Intransitive:

I. Lit.: To seize and hold fast in the hands or arms; to clutch.

"[He] fiercer grasped his gun."
Scott: Don Roderick, vii. (Conc.)

II. Figuratively:

1. To seize or try to win or gain; to take possession of.

"Kings, by grasping more than they could hold, First made their subjects, by oppression, bold."
Denham: Cooper's Hill, 343.

2. To lay hold of mentally; to become thoroughly acquainted or conversant with; to comprehend thoroughly.

"The memory will grasp and retain all that is sufficient for the purposes of valuable improvement."—Knox: Liberal Education, § 11.

*3. To have in one's power; to rule.

"Great king of seas, that graspest the ocean, heare."
P. Fletcher, Ecl. 2.

B. Intransitive:

1. To catch or seize.

2. To make grasps; to clutch, to struggle.

"See, his face is black, and full of blood;
His hands abroad displayed, as one that grasps
And tugged for life."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., iii. 2.

3. To seize eagerly or avariciously; to act greedily or avariciously.

"Like a miser midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps 'till he can hold no more."
Dryden. (Ogilvie.)

¶ To grasp at: To try to seize or gain; to catch at; to struggle after.

"For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,
But bubbles on the rapid stream of time."
Young: Love of Fame, ii. 255.

grasp, s. [Grasp, v.]

1. The grip or seizure of the hand.

2. The reach of the hand.

"They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp."—Clarendon.

3. The power of seizing or grasping: hence, possession, power, hold.

"I would not be the villain that thou thinkest,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, iv. 3.

4. The power of the intellect to grasp or comprehend things; the reach or range of the intellect.

grasp'-a-ble, a. [Eng. grasp, and able.] That may or can be grasped.

"His every sense had grown Ethereal for pleasure; 'bove his head Flew a delight half graspable."
Keats: Endymion, ii. 673.

grasp-ĕr, s. [Eng. grasp; -er.]

1. One who grasps or seizes.

*2. A grapple or grappling-hook.

"The handes and graspers wherewith the galyes were fastned togethers."—Brende: Quintus Curtius, fo. 59.

grasp'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Grasp, v.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Seizing, laying hold on.

2. Avaricious, greedy, covetous, miserly, exacting.

"My wealth, on which a kinsman nigh Already casts a grasping eye."
Scott: Rokeby, iv. 28.

C. As subst.: The act of seizing or laying fast hold on.

grasp'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. grasping; -ly.] In a grasping manner; avariciously, greedily, covetously.

grasp'-ĭng-nĕss, s. [Eng. grasping; -ness.] The quality of being grasping; greed, covetousness, avarice.

"A graspingness that is unworthy of that indulgence."—Richardson: Clarissa, i. 137.

gras'-ple, *gras'-pel, v.i. [Eng. grasp; freq. suff. -le.] To grapple.

"With whom the cynquereme graspeled."—Brende: Quintus Curtius, fo. 61.

gras'-ple, s. [Grasple, v.] A grapnel, or grappling-hook.

"To the which they fastened grasples of iron and great hookes lyke sithes."—Brende: Quintus Curtius, fo. 60.

gras'-plĕr, s. [Eng. graspl(e); -er.] A grappling-hook; a grapnel.

"The grasplers letten downe (called Corvi) tooke violently awaye many of the souldiers that were within the shippes."—Brende: Quintus Curtius, fo. 60.

grasp'-lĕss, a. [Eng. grasp; -less.] Relaxed, not grasping.

"From my graspless haud Drop friendship's precious pearls, like hour-glass sand."
Coleridge. On a Friend.

grass, *græs, *gras, *grasse, *gres, * gress, * gresse, * gers, * gerse, * griss, * gyrse, s. [A.S. gærs, græs; cogn. with Dut. gras; Sw. & Dan. gräs; Icel. gras; Goth. gras; Ger. gras.]

I. Ord. Lang.: The herbage, or verdant covering of the earth.

"She checks her reins, and on the verdant grass,
Beneath the covering trees her limbs she throws,
Hoole: Orlando Furioso, xxiii.

II. Technically:

1. Botany:

(1) Strictly:

(a) Sing.: Any plant belonging to the order Graminaceæ and no others.

(b) Pl.: The order Graminaceæ.

(2) Loosely:

(a) The popular name of various endogens, some of them not belonging to the Graminaceæ. Thus, the Arrow Grass is Triglochin, a genus of Juncaginaceæ, and the Cotton Grass is Eriophorum, a genus of Cyperaceæ.

(b) The popular name for various genera, which are not even endogens. Thus, the Grass of Parnassus (Parnassia) is an exogen of the order Saxifragaceæ; and the Goose Grass (Galium Aparine), also an exogen, of the order Rubiaceæ.

¶ The numerous plant names, in which grass is the last word of a compound, will be found scattered throughout the work. They are too numerous to be brought together here

2. Scripture:

(1) Lit.: In the same sense as I. 1.

(2) Fig.: That which is fading, or subject to decay and death.

"All flesh is grass . . . Surely the people is grass."—Isa. xl. 6, 7.

¶ To give grass: To yield.

grass-blade, s. A single blade or stem of grass. (Byron: Don Juan, viii. 47.)

grass-cold, *gerse-cauld, s. A slight cold or catarrh affecting horses.

"There is a grass-cold, as the farmers call it, that seldom does much harm, or lasts long."—Agr. Surv. Dumfr., p. 380.

grass-cutter, s. One who, or an instrument which, cuts grass; specif. one of the attendants on an Indian army, whose business it is to cut and bring into the camp green fodder for the chargers and transport cattle.

grass-fed, a. Fed on grass or green food; fed by pasturing, as distinguished from stall-fed.

"Killing cattle young and only grass-fed."—Sir W. Temple: Of Trade in Ireland.

grass-finch, grass-quit, s.

Ornith.: The genus Spermophila, consisting of American birds placed by Swainson under the family Fringillidæ and the sub-family Pyrrhulinæ (Bullfinches).

grass-grown, a. Overgrown with grass or weeds.

"A solitary sentinel paced the grass-grown pavement."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xi.

grass-hearth, s.

Law: An old customary service of tenants, who brought their ploughs and did one day's work for their lord.

grass-ill, s. A disease of lambs.

"When about three weeks old, and beginning to make grass their food, a straggling lamb or two will sometimes die of what is called the grass-ill."—Prize Essay, Highl. Soc. Scot., iii. 351.

grass-lambs, s. pl. Lambs of which the dams are running on pasture-land; hence their milk is richer, and the flesh of the lambs of a superior quality than under other conditions.

grass-male, *gerss-male, s. Rent for grass, or the privilege of grazing.

"James Weir grantit that he resavit the said scheipe in gresing [for grazing] fra the said lady, and tuke and is pait of his gerss male thairfor."—Act. Dom. Conc. (1479), p. 41.

grass-moths, s. pl.

Entom.: The family Crambidæ, which belongs to the group Pyralidina. Thirty-four British species are known. They are called also Veneers. (Stainton.) grass of Parnassus, s.

Bot.: The genus Parnassia. It consists of perennial herbs, with radicle quite entire, exstipulate leaves, and a scape bearing at the top a solitary large yellow or white flower, with a five-lobed calyx, five persistent petals, five stamens, alternating with five staminodes and a many-seeded superior capsular fruit. Twelve species are known, one (Parnassia palustris) in British bogs, and two (P. caroliniana and P. asarifolia) from the United States grass-oil, s. A fragrant volatile oil, distilled from various kinds of Indian grasses, especially of the genus Andropogon, and used in perfumery.

grass-snake, s. The same as RINGED-SNAKE (q.v.).

grass-table, s.

Arch.: The same as EARTH-TABLE (q.v.).

grass-tree, s.

Bot.: The liliaceous genus Xanthorrhæa. On the Swan River and elsewhere in Australia they furnish valuable fodder for cattle. Before the native Tasmanians became extinct, they were wont to eat the tender leaves at the top of the stem. The name grass-tree is used also of Richea dracophylla and Kingia australis.

grass-vetch, s.

Bot.: Lathyrus Nissolia.

grass-week, s. An old name in the Inns of Courts for Rogation-week, because the commons then consisted chiefly of vegetables and salads.

grass, v.t. & i. [GRASS, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To cover with grass or turf; to sow grass on.

2. To bleach on the grass or ground, as flax.

3. To bring to the ground; to lay or cause to lie on the grass: as, To grass a fish.

"At the close of the twenty-fifth round the doctor had killed twenty out of twenty-five, while his opponent had grassed seventeen out of the same number." —Daily Telegraph, Nov. 26, 1891.

B. Intrans.: To produce grass; to become pasture.

"Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,
With oats ye may sow it the sooner to grass,
More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pass."
Tusser: Husbandrie.

grăs-sā'-tion, s. [Lat. grassatio, from grassatus, pa. par. of grassor, freq. of gradior = to walk.] A progress or progression.

"If in vice there be a perpetuall grassation, there must be in virtue a perpetuall vigilance: and 'tis not enough to be incessant, but it must be universall."—Feltham: Resolves, pt. ii., res. 8.

grass'-clŏth, s. [Eng. grass, and cloth.] Cloth made from the grassy fibres of the inner bark of the grasscloth-plant (q.v.). It equals the best French cambric in softness and fineness. In India it is made into light white jackets, used by guests at parties, when cloth costs would be oppressively hot.

grasscloth-plant, s.

Bot.: Böhmeria nivea, one of the Urticaceæ. It grows in Sumatra, China, and Assam. Called more fully the Chinese grasscloth-plant.

grass'-greĕn, *grasse-greene, *gras-grene, a. & s. [A.S. græsgrene; Dut. grasgroen; Icel. grasgrœn; Dan. græsgrön; Ger. grasgrün.]

A. As adjective:

I. Ordinary Language.

1. Green with grass; verdant.

"As grass-green meads pronounced the summer near."
Fawkes: Theocritus, Idyl. xiii.

2. Of the colour of grass; dark green.

"A gown of grassgreen silk she wore."
Tennyson: Lancelot & Guinevere. 24.

II. Bot., &c.: Clear, lively green, without any mixture. The rendering of Lat. smaragdinus and prasinus.

B. As subst.: The colour of grass.

grass'-hŏp-pĕr, *gras'-hŏp-pĕr, *gras-hop-pyr, *gras-hop, *gres-hoppe, *gress-hope, *gress-hoppe, *gres-sop, *grys-ope, s. [A.S. gærshoppa; Icel. grashoppa; Dut. grashupper; Sw. græshoppa; Dan. græshoppe.]

Entomology:

1. Singular:

(1) Properly Gryllus viridissimus, an orthopterous insect, with long antennæ, and its hind legs formed for leaping. It is above two inches long, and is common in marshy places.

(2) Various other grasshoppers are really small species of locusts.

2. Pl.: The family Acridiidæ, belonging to the order Orthoptera. They are sometimes called Gryllina. They have long setaceous antennæ, thus distinguishing them from the Locusts (Locustidæ), to which they are allied, and which have short antennæ.

grasshopper-beam, s. One form of beam used in steam-engines; the fulcrum is at one end, and the connecting rod between it and the piston-rod, usually midway.

grasshopper-engine, s. An engine having a grasshopper-beam.

grasshopper-warbler, s.

Ornith.: Salicaria locustella, one of the Sylviidæ. Its note is like that of a cricket. It is a summer visitant to Britain, arriving in the middle of April and departing in September.

gras-sil, *gris-sel, *girs-sil, v.i. [Fr. gresiller = to crackle.] To rustle; to make a rustling or crackling noise.

"Sone eftir this of men the clamor rais,
The takillis grassillis, cabillis can frate and frais."
Douglas: Virgil, 15, 44.

grass'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. grassy; -ness.] The quality or state of being grassy or abounding in grass.

grass'-lănd, s. [Eng. grass, and land.] Land kept always under grass, as distinguished from land which is alternately under grass and tillage.

grass'-lĕss, *grasse-lesse, a. [Eng. grass; -less. Destitute of grass.

"Grassless floor of red-brown hue,
By sheddings from the pining umbrage tinged."
Wordsworth: Yew-trees.

grass'-măn, gerss-man, s. [Eng. grass, and man.] One who possesses a house in the country without any land.

"The tenants, cottars, and grassmen, who for fear of their lives had fled here and there."—Spalding, ii. 187.

grass'-plŏt, s. [Eng. grass, and plot.] A plot or piece of ground covered with grass; a space consisting of beds of flowers with grass between them instead of gravel.

"Here on this grassplot, in this very place."
Shakesp.: Tempest, iv. 1.

grass'-pŏl-ў, *grass'-pŏl-ą, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Bot.: Lythrum hyssopifolia, the Hyssop-leaved Purple-loosestrife. It is a small plant with red axillary flowers, growing occasionally in inundated places in the east of England.

grass'-ŭm, gĕr'-sŭm, gĕr'-sŏme, s. [A.S. gærsuma = store, treasure, a premium.] A sum of money paid by a tenant to a landlord on entering upon a farm. (Scotch.) grass'-wĭd-ōw, s. [Fr. grace = courtesy; Eng. widow.]

1. An unmarried woman who has had a child.

2. A married woman whose husband is temporarily separated from her, as when the wife lives in England and the husband in India.

"She is a grass-widow; her husband is something in some Indian service."—Saturday Review, Feb. 11, 1882.

grass'-wrăck, s. [Eng. grass, and wrack.]

Bot.: The genus Zostera, belonging to the order Naiadaceæ. Two species are British, the Broad-leaved Grasswrack, Zostera marina, and the Dwarf Grasswrack, Z. nana. The resemblance to grass is in the leaves, and the term "wrack" suggests that the plants are cast on beaches like seawrack of algæ, zoophytes, &c. The Common Grasswrack is used for packing bottles and earthenware. Pallas says that in the south of Russia it is found with pottery in old tombs. It is the alva (ulva or alga) of the shops, sold to stuff beds, a purpose for which it is largely used in Iceland and in the north of continental Europe.

gras'-sў, *gras-sie, a. [Eng. grass; -y.]

1. Covered or abounding with grass.

2. Like grass, green, verdant.

"The wearied eye
Reposes gladly on as smooth a vale
As ever Spring yclad in grassy dye."
Byron: Childe Harold, ii. 54.

 graste, pa. par., or a. [GRACED.]

gras'-tīte, s. [Gr. γράστις (grastis) = grass, fodder.]

Min.: The same as CLINOCHLORE (q.v.).

grat, pret. of v. [GREET (2), v.] Cried, wept.

"But he grat when he spak o' the Colonel, ye never saw the like."—Scott: Waverley, ch. lxiii.

grāte, s. [Low Lat. grata, crata, from Lat. crates = a hurdle; Ital. grata.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A partition or screen made of bars fixed parallel or at angles to each other with interstices; a kind of lattice-window, such as is used in cloisters, nunneries, &c.

"Glimmering vaults, with iron grates."
Tennyson: Dream of Fair Women, 35.

2. A grated box or basket, or a box with a series of bars for a floor, in which fuel is burned.

"My dear is of opinion that an old-fashion grate consumes coals, but gives no heat."—Steele: Spectator, No. 308.

II. Min.: A metallic perforated plate on which ores are stamped.

grate-bar, s. The iron bar in a furnace which supports the fuel. A part of a grid in a furnace.

grate-surface, s.

Steam-engin.: The area of surface of grate by which air has access to the fuel. In an average boiler this is one square foot per horse-power, and is expected to evaporate one cubic foot of water per hour.

grāte (1), v.t. [GRATE, s.] To furnish with a grate or grating; to fill in or cover with cross bars.

"She has grated port-holes between the decks."—Burke: Sketch of the Negro Code.

grāte (2), v.t. & i. [O. Fr. grater; Fr. gratter, from Low Lat. crato, from Sw. kratta = to scrape; Dan. kratte, kratse; Dut. krassen = to scratch; Ger. kratzen; Mid. Eng. cracchen; Ital. grattare.]

A. Transitive:

1. To rub one thing against another, so as to cause a harsh sound: as, To grate one's teeth.

2. To rub two bodies together, so as to reduce one or both to small particles.

"Grate it [horse radish] on a grater which has no bottom, and so it may pass through."—Evelyn: Acetaria.

3. To offend, to vex; to annoy by anything harsh or vexatious.

"Grating so harshly all his days of quiet."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 1.

4. To cause to creak or make a harsh, grating noise.

5. To produce as a harsh, discordant sound by the collision or friction of rough bodies.

"On a sudden open fly . . .
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate Harsh thunder." Milton: P. L., ii. 881.

6. To grind down, to reduce.

"Mighty states are grated to dusty nothing."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, iii. 2.

B. Intransitive:

1. To rub together; to touch.

"Their speres grated nat; il they had, by moont lykelhod they had taken hurt."—Berners: Froissart; Cronycle, vol. ii., ch. clxviii.

2. To rub against any body so as to produce a harsh, discordant noise; to give out a harsh sound.

"Hear a dry wheel grating on the axle-tree."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., iii. 1.

3. To be offensive, to offend.

"I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent." —Locke.

4. To be grieved, to fret.

"For grief his heart did grate."
Spenser: F. Q., II. i. 56.

grāte, a. [Lat. gratus = pleasant.] Pleasant, agreeable.

"It becomes grate and delicious enough by custom." —Sir T. Herbert: Travels.

grāte'-fŭl, a. [From the stem seen in Lat. gratus; O. Fr. grat; Mid. Eng. grate = pleasing; Eng. suff. -ful(l).]

†1. Pleasing; pleasant; acceptable; welcome; gratifying.

"O death was grateful!"
Longfellow: Skeleton in Armour.

2. Having a due sense of benefits received; willing and ready to acknowledge obligations for kindnesses done; thankful.

"The Queen herself, Grateful to Prince Geraint for service done, Loved her." Tennyson: Geraint & Enid, 15.

3. Exhibiting or expressing gratitude; indicative of gratitude.

"Although the constant sun Cheer all their seasons with a grateful smile."
Cowper: Task, i. 628.

grāte'-fŭl-lў, adv. [Eng. grateful; -ly.]

†1. In a pleasing, gratifying, or agreeable manner.

2. In a grateful manner; with gratitude.

"They do gratefully recommend you and your well-devoted labours in their prayers to God."—Boyle: Works, vi. 652.

grāte'-fūl-nĕss, s. [Eng. grateful; -ness.]

† 1. The quality of being grateful, pleasing, or acceptable; pleasantness.

2. The quality of being grateful or thankful for benefits received or kindnesses done; gratitude; thankfulness.

"Out of gratefulness, in remembrance of the many courtesies done to him."—Baker: Henry II. (an. 1155).

grāt'-ēr, s. [Eng. grate (2), v.; -er; Fr. gratoir.]

1. Ord. Lang.: One who or that which grates; specif., a plate roughened by punching holes which raise protuberances forming a rasping surface. Used for grating ginger, nutmeg, horseradish, lemons, biscuits, &c.

"Whose bony hips, which out of both sides stick, Might serve for graters."
Sherburne: Choice of his Mistress.

2. Bookbind.: An iron instrument used by the forwarder in rubbing the backs of sewed books.

* grą-tĭc-ŭ-lā'-tion, s. [Fr. graticulation, craticulation, from graticuler, craticuler = to divide into squares, from graticule, craticule; Lat. craticula = a little hurdle; crates = a hurdle.] The division of a design or drawing into little squares for the purpose of producing a copy of it on a larger or smaller scale.

* grāt'-ĭ-cūle, s. [Fr.] [Graticulation.] A design or drawing divided into little squares for the purpose of reproduction on a larger or smaller scale.

grăt-ĭ-fĭ-cā'-tion, s. [Lat. gratificatio, from gratificatus, pa. par. of gratificor = to gratify (q.v.); Fr. gratification; Ital. gratificazione; Sp. gratificacion.]

1. The act of gratifying or pleasing.

"The infant desires only the gratification of its physical wants."—Lindsay: Mind in the Lower Animals, i. 98.

* 2. Congratulation; well-wishing.

"Whereupon she sent . . . a letter of gratification."
—Hakluyt: Voyages, ii. 306.

3. That which gratifies or pleases; anything which affords pleasure; a pleasure; a satisfaction; an enjoyment.

"The riches of the world, and the gratifications they afford."—Bp. Horsley: Sermons, vol. i., ser. 10.

* 4. Reward; recompense; gratuity.

¶ For the difference between gratification and enjoyment, see Enjoyment.

grăt'-ĭ-fī-ĕr, s. [Eng. gratify; -er.] One who or that which gratifies or pleases; any person or thing which affords gratification, pleasure, or satisfaction.

"It chanced he had under him in one of his dominions, a barber, a gift taker, a gratifier of rich men."
—Latimer: Sermon the third, before King Edward.

grăt'-ĭ-fy, * grat-ĭ-fie, * grat-ĭ-fye, v.t. [Fr. gratifier, from Lat. gratificor = to please; gratus = pleasing, and facio = to make; Ital. gratificare; Sp. gratificar.]

1. To please, to afford pleasure, satisfaction, or gratification to; to meet the wishes of.

"The soldan devised how to gratify the pope and to slay his enemy."—Bale: Pageant of Popes, fo. 100.

* 2. To congratulate, to welcome.

"To gratifie and welcome him into those parts."—Hall: Henry II. (an. 15.)

* 3. To humour, to indulge.

"Much less might serve, when all that we design Is but to gratify an itching ear."
Cowper: Task, vi. 613.

* 4. To make pleasing, agreeable, or grateful.

"Some one that would with grace be gratifide."
Spenser: Mweopotmos, 110.

* 5. To grant or allow for the sake of pleasing.

"You steer between the country and the court, Nor gratify whate'er the great desire."
Dryden: To John Dryden, 129.

* 6. To reward, to requite, to recompense.

"To gratify his noble service."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, ii. 2.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between to gratify, to indulge, and to humour: "To gratify is a positive act of the choice. To indulge is a negative act of the will, a yielding of the mind to circumstances. One gratifies the appetites; one indulges the humours. To gratify and indulge, as individual acts, may be both allowable; but to gratify is unrestricted by any moral consideration; indulging always involves the sacrifice of some general rule of conduct or principle of action. We may sometimes gratify a laudable curiosity, and indulge ourselves by a salutary recreation; but gratifying as a habit becomes a vice, and indulging as a habit is a weakness. To humour is to indulge or fall in with the humour; it may be selfish or prudent. A good parent indulges his child in whatever he knows is not hurtful; it is sometimes necessary to humour the temper in some measure, the better to correct it. Things gratify; persons only indulge." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

grāt'-ĭng, s. [Grate (1), v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of furnishing with a grate; a grate.

2. An open frame of iron bars covering the entrance to a sewer or drain in a street.

3. An open iron frame or lattice in the pavement, to admit light to a basement.

II. Naut.: Open wood-work of cross slats to cover hatchways, and yet to admit light and air. Before the abolition of flogging in the Navy, men sentenced to be flogged were tied to a grating to receive their punishment.

grāt'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Grate (2), v.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Making a harsh, discordant sound, as of two rough bodies rubbing together.

"To have his ears wounded with some harsh and grating sound."—Burke: Sublime & Beaut., pt. i., § 2.

2. Harsh, vexing, irritating, annoying, unpleasant.

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of causing a harsh, discordant sound, by the rubbing together of two bodies.

"The grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets."—Wilkins: Dædalus, ch. xv.

2. A harsh, discordant sound.

"The contrary is called harshness, such as is grating, and some other sounds, which do not always affect the body, but only sometimes, and that with a kind of horror beginning at the teeth."—Hobbes: Of Human Nature, ch. vii.

3. Annoyance, irritation, vexation.

"The hard grating and afflicting contrariety that bears to the flesh."—South: Sermons, vol. xi., ser. 1.

II. Optics: [Diffraction-gratings].

grāt'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. grating; -ly.] In a grating, harsh, discordant, or offensive manner; harshly, discordantly, offensively.

grāt'-ĭ-ō-la, s. [Lat. gratia = grace, favour; meaning here the grace of God, from the supposed medicinal virtues of the plant, which was formerly called gratia Dei.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the family Gratioleæ (q.v.). Gratiola officinalis, the Hedge Hyssop, grows in the south of Europe, and, according to Haller, is so abundant in the Swiss pastures as to render them useless for cattle. It is very bitter, and acts both as a purgative and an emetic. It is said that it was the base of the gout medicine, called eau medicinale. It has been used in hypochondria. G. peruviana is also a purgative and emetic.

grą-tī-ŏl'-ē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gratiol(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Scrophulariaceæ, divided into four sub-tribes, Aptosimeæ, Manuleæ, Eugratioleæ, and Lindernieæ.

grāt-ĭ-ō-lēr'-ĭ-tĭn, s. [Gratiolin.]

grăt-ĭ-ō-lē-tĭn, s. [Gratiolin.]

grăt'-ĭ-ō-lĭn, s. [Eng., &c., gratiol(a); -in.]

Chem.: $C_{20}H_{34}O_7$. A glucoside contained in Gratiola officinalis. It dissolves in sulphuric acid, forming a purple solution. When boiled with dilute sulphuric acid, it yields Gratioletin $C_{17}H_{22}O_5$, a crystalline substance insoluble in water and ether; gratideretin, $C_{17}H_{28}O_3$, a resinous substance insoluble in water, but soluble in ether; and glucose.

gra-tĭ-ō-şą, adv. [Grazioso.]

* gra-tious, a. [Gracious.]

grā'-tis, odv. & a. [Lat.]

A. As adv.: For nothing; freely: without charge or recompense; gratuitously.

"Justice never was in reality administered gratis in this country."—Smith: Wealth of Nations, pt. ii., bk. iv., ch. i.

B. As adj.: Given or done freely or for nothing; gratuitous.

grāt'-ĭ-tūde, s. [Fr., from Low Lat. gratitudo, from Lat. gratus = pleasing, thankful; Ital. gratitudine.]

1. The quality or state of being grateful; a feeling of thankfulness for benefits or kindness received; grateful sentiments towards a benefactor; gratefulness; thankfulness.

"Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense, and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received."—South: Sermons, vol. i., ser. 12.

* 2. A gratuity; a reward; a recompense.

grāt'-toir (oi as wà), s. [Fr.] [Scraper.]

* grą-tū'-ĭ-tal, a. [Lat. gratuit(us); Eng. adj. suff. -al.] Gratuitous, free.

* gra-tuite, s. [Fr. gratuité.] A favour, kindness.

* grāt'-ŭ-ląnce, s. [Lat. gratulans, pr. par. of gratulor.] [Gratulate.] A favour, a kindness, a gratuity.

"Some add disburse, some bribe, some gratulance."
Machin: Dumb Knight, v.

* grăt-ŭ-lant, a. [Lat. gratulans, pr. par. of gratulor = to congratulate.] Congratulating.

"At Heaven's wide-open portal gratulant." Coleridge: Dawning of Nations.

grą-tū'-ĭ-toŭs, a. [Lat. gratuitus, from gratis = pleasing, thankful; Fr. gratuit; Ital. & Sp. gratuito.]

1. Given freely or for nothing; granted without claim or charge; free; voluntary; gratis.

"The peasantry were forced to give their gratuitous labour six days in the year."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

2. Not required, called for, or warranted by the circumstances of the case; done or made without sufficient grounds or reason; as, a gratuitous assumption, a gratuitous insult.

¶ "Gratuitous is opposed to that which is obligatory; voluntary is opposed to that which is compulsory or involuntary." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) gratuitous-deeds, s. pl.

Scots Law: Deeds granted without any value being given for them.

grą-tū'-ĭ-toŭs-lў, adv. [Eng. gratuitous; -ly.]

1. Freely; voluntarily; without any claim or merit; without charge or compensation; gratis.

"Gratuitously conferred upon him by the credulity of posterity."—Scott: Thomas the Rhymer. (Note.)

2. Done, said, or adopted without sufficient grounds, reason, or cause; without sufficient reason or grounds.

"This obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter."—Cheyne: Philosophical Principles.

grą-tū'-ĭ-toŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. gratuitous; -ness.] The quality or state of being gratuitous.

grą-tū'-ĭ-tў, s. [Fr. gratuité, from Low Lat. gratuitas, from Lat. gratuitus = gratuitous, free.]

1. That which is given or granted gratuitously, or as a free gift; anything given or done freely or for nothing; a free gift; a donation; a kindness.

"These gratuities nuayled not to make this King James friendly to the realme of Englande."—Grafton: Henry VI. (an. 2).

2. Something given in return for a favour or service; an acknowledgment; a recompense; a return.

"Performing, now and then, certain offices of religion for such gratuities."—Burke: Penal Laws against Irish Catholics.

¶ "Gratuity and recompense both imply a gift, and a gift by way of return for some supposed service; but the gratuity is independent of all expectation as well as right; the recompense is founded upon some admissible claim." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

* grāt'-ŭ-lāte, v.t. & i. [Gratulate, a. Sp. gratular; Ital gratulare.]

A. Transitive:

1. To congratulate; to wish joy to; to salute with congratulations.

"Dangers? how mean you dangers, that so courtly
You gratulate my safe return from dangers?"
Ford: Lover's Melancholy, i. 1.

2. To welcome

"To gratulate the sweet return of morn."
Milton: P. R., iv. 438.

3. To reward; to recompense.

"I could not choose but gratulate your honest endeavours with this remembrance."—Heywood.

B. Intrans.: To exult. (Milton: P. L., ix. 472.)

grăt'-ụ-lāte, a. [Lat. gratulatus, pa. par. of gratulor = to wish one joy; gratus = pleasing, thankful.] Gratifying, felicitous; to be rejoiced at; fortunate.

"There's more behind that is more gratulate."
Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, v. 1.

grăt-ụ-lā'-tion, *grat-ụ-la-clon, s. [Lat. gratulatio, from gratulatus, pa. par. of gratulor; Ital. gratulazione; Sp. gratulacion.] The act of congratulating or felicitating; a congratulation or expression of joy or pleasure.

"Angelic gratulations rend the skies."
Cowper: Truth, 587.

grăt'-ụ-la-tŏr-ĭ-lў, adv. [Eng. gratulatory; -ly.] In a gratulatory or congratulatory manner.

grăt'-ụ-lā-tŏr-ў, a. & s. [Lat. gratulatorius, from gratulatus, pa. par. of gratulor; Ital. & Sp. gratulatorio.]

A. As adjective:

1. Congratulatory; expressing gratulation or congratulations.

"The usual groundwork of such gratulatory odes."
—Bp. Horsley: Sermons, vol. i., ser. 5.

2. Expressing gratitude or thanks; grateful.

"Whereas formerly he had disowned any propitiatory sacrifice, content with gratulatory . . . he now makes it properly propitiatory."—Waterland: Works, viii. 263.

B. As subst.: An address or expression of congratulation or felicitation to any person for some good which has befallen him.

grăt'-ụ-lĭng, a. [Lat. gratulor = to congratulate.] Congratulatory, well-wishing.

"Where's orator Higgen with his gratuling speech now?" Beaum. & Flet.: Beggar's Bush, ii. 1.

gràul'-īte, s. [From Graul, near Schwarzenberg, in Saxony, where it occurs; suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: The same as Tecticite (q.v.). (Dana).

gràu'-wăc-kĕ, s. [Graywacke.]

grą-vā'-mĕn, s. [Lat., from gravo = to weigh down; gravis = heavy.]

1. The substantial cause of an action at law; the ground or burden of complaint; that part of an accusation which weighs most heavily against the accused.

2. A representation; a motion: specif., a motion proposed in Convocation.

grą-văm'-ĭn-ŏus, a. [Lat. gravamen, gen. gravamin(is); Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Grievous, burdensome.

grāve (1), v.t. [Graves.]

Naut.: To clean a ship's bottom by burning off the weeds, barnacles, &c., and coating it with pitch and tallow.

grāve (2). graif, *grav-yn, v.t. & i. [A.S. grafan = to dig, to engrave; cogn. with Dut. graven; Dan. grave; Sw. grafva; Icel. grafa; Goth. graban = to dig; Ger. graben; Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write, to engrave; Fr. graver = to engrave; Ir. grafaim = to scrape.]

A. Transitive:

1. To dig.

"Thei . . . hadde grave on the ground many grete cauys." Alexander & Dindimus, 6.

2. To bury, to inter, to entomb.

"Than in a grafe thai gan him grave."
Legends of Holy Rood, p. 79.

3. To carve; to form or shape by cutting with a chisel, as a sculptor.

"Thou shalt not make to thee any graven image."—Exodus xx. 4.

4. To carve; to cut as letters or figures on stone, wood, metal, &c., with a chisel or graver; to engrave.

[He] graved it on a gem and wore it next his heart."
Cowper: Anti-Thelyphthora.

5. To impress deeply.

B. Intrans.: To carve; to write or cut words or figures on wood, metal, &c.; to engrave.

"Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it."—Exodus xxviii. 36.

grāve, *grafe, *graive, s. [A.S. græf; O. S. graf; O. Fris. gref; Dut. graf; O. H. Ger. graf; Icel. gröf; Sw. graf; Dan. grav; Ger. grab.]

1. A hole or excavation in the earth, in which a human body is buried; a place of interment; a tomb, a sepulchre.

"The graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, v. 2.

2. Anything graven or carved; a carved image.

3. A place of great slaughter or mortality.

4. Destruction; ruin; death.

"Richard marked him for the grave."
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., ii. 6.

grave-clothes, s. pl. The clothes or dress in which the dead are buried; a winding sheet.

"Alice, in her grave-clothes bound, Ghastly smiling, points a seat."
Scott: Frederick & Alice.

grave-digger, s.

1. Ord. Lang.: One who digs graves.

2. Entom.: The name given in Jamaica to a fossorial insect of the order Hymenoptera, family Sphegidæ, which digs holes in clay, in which it lays its eggs, depositing along with them, for the future sustenance of its larvæ, caterpillars and spiders slightly stung, so as to leave them half dead. Its allies everywhere pursue essentially the same method of operation.

grave-maker, * graf-makere, s. A grave-digger.

"Gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, v. 1.

grave-making, s. The act or occupation of digging graves.

"Has this fellow no feeling of his business? he sings at grave-making."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, v. 1.

 grave-man, s. A sexton, a grave-digger.

grave-mound, s.

Anthrop.: The generic term for what is probably the earliest, and certainly the most widely-distributed form of funeral monument. Greenwell (British Barrows (Introd.), p. i.) pertinently applies to the grave-mound the words of Horace, "monumentum ære perennius;" how pertinently may be perceived by a mental glance at the barrows of the Yorkshire wolds, at the grave-mounds that spread like a covering over the steppes of Western Asia, and at the pyramids, the sepulchres of the early Egyptian kings. The facility with which the savage could heap a mound of earth over the remains of his dead commended this form of commemoration to his little-developed mind, and to this day such sepulture is common among certain tribes of American Indians; on the other hand, as civilization advanced, its durability—whether in the form of an artificial hill, a huge cairn, or a stupendous pyramid—was recognised and seized on by those who wished to raise a monument befitting a hero, or to perpetuate their own memory. In British barrows flints and broken pottery are found scattered in such a way as to preclude the idea of accident. Greenwell suggests that they symbolised some religious idea, and adds that the lines in Hamlet (v. 1)—

"For charitable prayers, Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her"— may have reference thereto. He accounts for the rite being practised at the grave of a suicide denied Christian burial, by the supposition that, as a survival of paganism, it was held in detestation by the professors of a higher form of religion. [Barrow, Cairn, Pyramid, Tumulus.]

"If people passing by the spot called out to her, 'Musalamma!' she would reply 'Ho!' as the Norse heroes used to speak from their grave-mounds."—Jour. Anthrop. Instit., xi. 417.

grave-post, s.

Anthrop.: A board fixed at the head of the graves of many Indian tribes. It usually contains the totem of the deceased, and should the tomb be that of a warrior, devices denoting how often he had been in war parties and the number of scalps he had taken.

"On looking at his grave-post, it bore a pictorial inscription of this kind."—Schoolcraft: Indian Tribes, i. 338.

grave-robber, s. One who steals dead bodies from graves; a resurrectionist (q.v.).

grave-robbing, s. The act of robbing a grave; body-snatching.

grave-stone, s. A stone or slab laid over or erected near a grave, on which are written or cut the name, age, &c., of the person there buried; a tombstone.

"Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily." Shakesp.: Timon, iv. 3.

† grave-wax, s. Adipocere (q.v.).

grave-yard, s. An inclosed ground in which the dead are buried; a burial-ground; a cemetery.

grāve, a. [Fr., from Lat. gravis = heavy, grave; cogn. with Goth. kaurs = heavy; Gr. βαρύς (barus); Sansc. guru; Sp. & Ital. grave.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: Heavy; of weight.

"His shield grave and great." Chapman.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Weighty; serious; important; momentous.

"Gordon however positively refused to take on him self so grave a responsibility."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

(2) Important; of weight, credible.

"The gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra.

3. Sedate; solemn; sober; serious.

"Justice is grave and decorous."—Burke: On the French Revolution.

4. Serious; heavy: as, a grave charge.

5. Plain; staid; sedate; not gaudy; quiet: as, a grave dress.

6. Not sharp of sound; not acute. [Accent.]

"The acute accent raising the voice . . . and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis,—i.e. more vigorous pronunciation."—Holder.

II. Music:

1. Deep in pitch: as, grave hexachord, the lowest hexachord in the Guidonian system.

2. Slow in pace; solemnly.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between grave, serious, and solemn: "Grave expresses more than serious; it does not merely bespeak the absence of mirth, but that heaviness of mind which is displayed in all the movements of the body. A man may be grave in his walk, in his tone, in his gesture, in his looks, and all his exterior; he is serious only in his general air, his countenance, and demeanour. Solemn expresses more than either grave or serious; like serious, it is employed not so much to characterize either the person or the thing: the judge pronounces the solemn sentence of condemnation in a solemn manner; a preacher delivers many solemn warnings to his hearers." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

grāve (3), v.t. [Grave, a.]

Music: To render grave, as a note or tone.

grăv'-ęl, *grav-elle, *gra-vylle, s. [O. Fr. gravele, gruvelle; Fr. gravelle, gravier, dimin. of O. Fr. grave, greve = rough and mixed with stones. Prob. from the same root as Bret. grouan; Corn. grow; Wel. gro = gravel; Gael. grothlach = gravelly; Sansc. grávan = a stone.]

I. Ord. Lang.: Small pebbles, stones, or fragments of stone, intermixed with sand, loam, clay, flints, &c.

"Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles; sometimes with a few pyritæ, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common sand."—Woodward.

II. Technically:

1. Geol.: Gravel is formed by the action of water upon disintegrated portions of rock, which tend to be first blocks or boulders, then pebbles, next gravel, and finally sand, if not even silt. The fragments of which it is composed vary from the size of a pea to that of a hen's egg.

2. Pathol.: The presence of minute concretions in the urine constitutes the affection known as the gravel. It is usually owing to the presence of uric acid, urates, oxalates, and phosphates. Amongst exceptional urinary calculi are carbonate of lime, cystine, xanthine, fatty and fibrinous concretions. The chief symptoms are dull, aching pains over the renal regions, extending to the thighs, frequent micturition, and the occasional appearance in the urine of blood, pus, epithelium, or unorganized sediments, chiefly uric acid and oxalates.

"Most physicians doe highly commend their roots [asparagus] brused and taken in white wine, for to expell the stone and grauell."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xx., ch. x.

gravel-path, gravel-walk, s. A path or alley covered with gravel; a gravelled path.

"My garden was laid out in gravel-walks, intersecting each other in right angles."—Knox: Essays, No. 75.

gravel-pit, s. A pit or excavation out of which gravel is dug.

"He saw Mr. Such-a-one go this morning at nine o'clock towards the gravel-pits."—Steele: Spectator, No. 138.

gravel-root, s.
Bot.: Eupatorium purpureum.

gravel-stone, s.
Chem., &c.: One of the minute concretions whose presence in the urine constitutes the disease called Gravel (q.v.).

grăv'-ĕl, v.t. [Gravel, s.]
I. Literally:
1. To cover with gravel; to lay gravel on.
"The lounger seldom strays Beyond the smooth and gravelled maze."
Scott: Bridal of Triermain, II. ii. 28.
*2. To run a ship on to the sand or beach.
"And when we were fallen into a place between two seas, they gravelled the ship." [Gr. ἐπωκείλαν (epōkeilan), Auth. Vers., ran the ship aground.]—Acts xxvii. 41. (Rheims.)
*3. To cause to stick in the sand or gravel.
"William the Conqueror, when he invaded this island, chanced at his arrival to be gravelled; and one of his feet stuck so fast in the sand, that he fell to the ground."—Camden: Remains.
4. To hurt the foot of, as a horse by sand or gravel lodged under the shoe.
*II. Fig.: To perplex utterly, to confound, to worry and distress. [Gravel, s. II. 2.]
"The physician was so gravelled and amazed withall, that he had not a word more to say."—North: Plutarch, p. 764.

grā've-lĕss, a. [Eng. grave, s.; -less.] Without a grave or tomb; unburied.
"My brave Egyptians all,
By the discandying of this pelletted storm,
Lie graveless."
Shakesp.: Antony & Cleopatra, iii. 11.

grăv'-ĕlled, pa. par. or a. [Gravel, v.]

grăv'-ĕl-li-nĕss, s. [Eng. gravelly; -ness.] The quality or state of being gravelly, or abounding with gravel.

grăv'-ĕl-lĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Gravel, v.]
A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).
C. As substantive:
I. Literally:
1. The act of covering or coating with gravel.
2. The gravel with which any area is covered.
II. Fig.: The act of worrying, perplexing, or confounding utterly.

grăv'-ĕl-lў, a. [Eng. gravel; -ly.] Full of or abounding with gravel; consisting or of the nature of gravel; covered with gravel.
"Oft pacing, as the mariner his deck, My gravelly bounds." Cowper: Four Ages.

grā've-lў, adv. [Eng. grave, a.; -ly.]
1. In a grave, serious, or solemn manner; seriously; solemnly; in sober earnest.
"It was gravely said that she had cast fearful spells on those whom she hated."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.
*2. In a sober, staid, or quiet manner; without grandness or show: as, To be gravely dressed.

gra-vē-mĕn'-tē, adv. [Ital.] Music: Slowly and in a solemn style.

grāv'-ĕn, pa. par. or a. [Grave, v.] grā've-nĕss, s. [Eng. grave, a.; -ness.] The quality or state of being grave; serious; solemnity; gravity; sobriety of behaviour; dignity.

"His sables and his weeds Importing health and graveness."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 7.

grą-vē'-ō-lĕnce, s. [Lat. graveolentia, from graveolens = smelling strongly (q.v.); Fr. graveolence.] A strong and offensive smell.

grą-vē'-ō-lĕnt, a. [Lat. graveolens, from gravis = heavy, and olens, pr. par. of oleo = to smell.] Smelling strongly and offensively; stinking.
"The butter was yellow, and something graveolent."
—Boyle: Works, iv. 588.

grāv'-ĕr, graf-er, graf-ere, grav-owre, s. [A.S. grafere; Fr. graveur.]
1. One who carves or engraves; one whose business is to carve or engrave upon wood, stone, metal, &c.; an engraver, a sculptor
"Just like a marble statue did he stand, Cut by some skilful graver's artful hand."
Cowley: Pyramus & Thisbe. The Song.
2. The tool or style used in graving. They are made of different shapes, according to the purpose intended, and are of fine steel; a burin.
3. An instrument used for turning iron after it has been roughed out by the heel-tool.

grāv'-ĕr-ў, s. [Eng. graver; -y.] The process or art of graving; engraving, engravery.
"Any piece of picture, or gravery and embossing."—P. Holland.

grāveș, s. pl. [Greaves (2).]

grăv'-ĭc, a. [Eng. grav(ity); -ic.] Pertaining to or causing gravitation; as, gravic forces, gravic attraction.

grăv'-ĭd, a. [Lat. gravidus, from gravis = heavy.] Big or heavy with child; pregnant; fruitful. (Lit. & fig.)
"The gracious king
To ease and crown their gravid piety, Grants their request."
Beaumont: Psyche, c. xv.

grăv'-ĭ-dāte, v.t. [Lat. gravidatus, pa. par. of gravido = to load, to impregnate; gravidus = loaded, pregnant.] To cause to become gravid or big with child.
"Her womb is said to bear him (blessed is the womb that bare thee), to have been gravidated or great with child."—Barrow: Sermons, vol. ii., ser. 24.

grăv-ĭ-dā'-tion, s. [Lat. gravidatus, pa. par. of gravido.] The act of making pregnant; the state of becoming or being pregnant; pregnancy.
"As ἐν γαστρι ἐχειν expresseth a proper gravidation, so doth ἐν γαστρι συλλαβειν a proper conception."—Pearson: On the Creed, Art. iii.

grą-vĭd'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. gravidus = loaded, pregnant.] The state of being pregnant; pregnancy.
"The signs of gravidity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning."—Arbuthnot: On Diet.

grą-vĭf'-ĭc, a. [Lat. gravis = heavy, and facio = to make.] Making heavy; adding or giving weight to.

grăv-ĭ-grā'-dą, s. pl. [Lat. gravis = heavy, and gradus = a step; gradior = to take steps, to walk.]
Palæont.: Ground-sloths; a tribe or family of edentate mammals, now extinct. The name is modelled on Tardigrada, sometimes used for the Bradypodidæ, or ordinary sloths, to which the Gravigrada were akin. Besides other differences, they were much larger. The tribe or family comprised the huge Megatherium, the Mylodon, the Megalonyx, &c. (q.v.). All are American, and of Post-pliocene age.

grăv'-ĭ-grāde, a. [Gravigrada.]
Palæont.: Walking heavily; of or belonging to the edentate tribe or family Gravigrada (q.v.).

grą-vĭl'-ō-quençe, s. [Lat. gravis = heavy, grave, and loquens, pr. par. of loquor = to speak.] Grave or weighty speech or language.

grą-vĭm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Lat. gravis = heavy; Gr. μετρον (metron) = a measure.] An instrument for determining the specific gravities of bodies, solid or liquid.

grăv-ĭ-mĕt'-rĭc, a. [Eng. gravimetr(y); -ic.] Of or pertaining to gravimetry; determined or ascertained by a gravimeter.

gravimetric-analysis, s.
Chem.: The method of analyzing compound bodies, performed by decomposing them and finding their elemental weight.

grą-vĭm'-ĕ-trў, s. [Lat. gravis = heavy, and Gr. μετρον (metron) = a measure.] The art or science of determining the specific gravity of bodies.

grāv'-ĭng, pa. par., a., & s. [Grave (2), v.]
A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).
C. As substantive:
I. Literally:
1. The act or art of engraving or carving wood, stone, metals, &c.
"He [Holbein] learned besides, graving, casting, modelling, and architecture."—Walpole: Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i., ch. iv.
2. That which is carved or engraved; carved work.
"Skilful to work in gold: also to grave any manner of graving."—2 Chronicles ii. 4.
II. Fig.: Anything impressed deeply upon the heart or mind.
"For new gravings upon their souls."—King Charles: Eikon Basilike.

grāv'-ĭng, s. [Grave (1), v.] Cleaning a ship's bottom by burning off the sea-weed, and then paying the planks with pitch. Ships were formerly beached for this purpose, and the work was done during the time of the ebb. It is also called beaming (q.v.).
"At work on the outside of the ship's bottom and side, washing, and graving, and stopping, as every seafaring man knows how."—Defoe: Robinson Crusoe, pt. ii.

graving-dock, s. A dock into which vessels are floated to have their bottoms examined and cleaned; a dry-dock. The vessel is floated in and the gates at the entrance closed when the tide is at ebb.

graving-piece, s.
Shipbuild.: A small piece of wood inserted to supply the defects of a plank.

gra'-vĭ-ta, adv. [Ital.]
Mus.: With weight, dignity, and majesty.

grăv'-ĭ-tāte, v.i. [Lat. gravitatem, accus. of gravitas = weight, gravity; Fr. graviter.]
1. Lit.: To be affected by or under the influence of gravitation; to move by gravitation; to tend to the centre.
"All its parts magnetic power assert,
And to each other gravitate."
Blackmore: Creation, bk. ii.
2. Fig.: To tend towards any centre of attraction; to be attracted.
"A multitude of those mean and timid politicians who naturally gravitate towards the stronger party."
—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

grăv-ĭ-tā'-tion, s. [Eng. gravitat(e); -ion = Fr. gravitation.]
I. Ordinary Language:
1. Lit.: In the same sense as II. 1.
"When the loose mountain trembles from on high, Shall gravitation cease, if you go by?"
Pope: Essay on Man, iv. 128.
2. Figuratively:
(1) Attraction produced not by a physical, but by some moral force.
(2) Downward tendency in the literary world.
"With all the might of gravitation blest."
Pope: Dunciad, ii. 318.
II. Physics: A natural force acting upon all material bodies throughout the universe, with the effect of attracting or drawing them to each other. Hence it is often called the attraction of gravitation. It has been shown that every molecule of one body acts upon every molecule of the other. The attraction between two material particles is directly proportional to the product of their masses, and inversely proportional to the square of their distances asunder,—i.e., the force of gravity decreases in exact proportion as the square of the distance increases. Universal or general gravitation may be divided into celestial and terrestrial gravitation; but when the earth is viewed as a planet the second category disappears in the first.
1. Celestial gravitation:
(1) Hist.: A glimmering perception that the heavenly bodies attracted each other was possessed by Democritus and Epicurus in ancient times, and by Bacon, Galileo, Kepler, and Hooke during the dawn of modern science; but the decisive discovery of the universality of gravitation and the "law" regulating the operations was reserved for Sir Isaac Newton. Cavendish illustrated Newton's discovery by experiment.
(2) Gravitation among the heavenly bodies: Two forces operate against each other, the one a projectile and the other an attractive force. If the former only existed, the several planets would go off into space, moving, unless collision with other bodies occurred, in straight lines onward for ever, unless, indeed, some subtle ether gradually retarded their progress and ultimately brought them to a state of rest. If gravity alone operated, the planets would fall towards the centre of the sun with continually increasing velocity, till they impinged upon his surface with destructive effect. The working against each other of the two antagonistic forces makes them move around the central luminary in elliptic orbits, the motion being so beautifully adjusted that when the planet is nearest the sun and apparently in danger of becoming too powerfully under his attraction, the increased velocity thus acquired carries the body past the danger. Not merely does the sun attract the planets, but the planets attract the sun. Properly speaking, they do not revolve around him, but he and they mutually revolve round the common centre of gravity of them all, which is a point (not the centre) within the body of the sun. The same laws operate in the case of the planets with each other, the primary bodies with their satellites, &c.,—i.e., they attract each other directly as their respective masses, and inversely as the square of their distances.

2. Terrestrial gravitation: The law of gravitation as operating on the earth, as, for instance, on the fall of a stone to the ground. [GRAVITY.]

¶ Law of gravitation: [GRAVITATION, II.].

gravitation-measure, s.

Physics: (For def. see example).

"Force is said to be expressed in gravitation-measure, when it is expressed as equal to the weight of a given mass."—Everett: The C. G. S. System of Units, ch. iii., p. 13.

grăv'-ĭ-tā-tĭve, a. [Eng. gravitat(e); -ive.] Causing to gravitate, or tend towards a centre.

grăv'-ĭ-tȳ, * grav-i-teo, * grav-i-tio, s. [Fr. gravité; from Lat. gravitas = weight, gravity; gravis = heavy; Ital. gravita; Sp. gravidad.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The quality or state of being heavy; weight, heaviness.

"A thing of that waight and gravitee, that it waieth some soules downe vnto the deepe pyt of hell."—Sir T. More: Workes, p. 1,035.

2. Weight or importance; seriousness.

"Length therefore is a thing which the gravitie and weight of such actions [prayer] doth require."—Hooker: Ecclesiastical Polity, bk. v.

3. Seriousness, enormity, flagrancy, atrociousness; as, the gravity of the offence.

4. Graveness, soberness, seriousness, or dignity of demeanour.

"Such ill-timed gravity, such serious folly, Might well befit the solitary student."
Johnson: Irene, iii. 1.

II. Technically:

1. Mus.: Lowness or depth of tone or note.

2. Physics: Terrestrial gravitation, the operation of the law of gravitation on the earth, specially in making heavy bodies fall in all parts of the planet in the direction of its centre. Newton and Bessel have shown that in a vacuum a sovereign and a feather will fall with equal speed, though the rate will be very different in the atmospheric air. The attraction of the whole earth, considered as a sphere, on a body at its surface, is the same as if the whole matter of the earth were collected at its centre. The attraction of the earth on a body within its surface is the same as if the spherical shell situated between the body and the earth's surface was removed; or is the same as if all the matter situated nearer to the earth's surface than the body was collected at the centre, and all the matter situated at a greater distance was removed. The weight of a body is proportioned to the attraction which it exerts, hence gravity in many cases means simply weight. [Specific gravity.]

¶ (1) Centre of gravity: [CENTRE, III. (21)].

(2) Specific gravity:

Physics, Min., &c.: The relative density of a substance; the weight of a body compared with that of another body having the same magnitude. To obtain this, it is first weighed in air, which shows its absolute weight. Next it is weighed in water, to show how much it loses in this element. There have now been ascertained the absolute weights of two bodies of equal bulk,—viz., the one experimented on, and water, and the ratio of these weights is that also of their specific gravities. Let 1 be the weight of water, and first let the body be heavier than that liquid, then the weight which it loses in water is to the absolute weight as 1 to the specific gravity required. If lighter than water, then as the weight of the body in air, plus the weight needful to make it sink in water, is to its weight in air, so is 1 to the specific gravity. On this principle are constructed such instruments as Nicholson's portable balance. In solids and liquids the standard is generally distilled water; for the gases, atmospheric air. Specific gravity is proportionate to density, and the words may be used almost interchangeably. [DENSITY.]

gravity-battery, s. A form of double-fluid battery, in which the fluids range themselves at different heights in a single jar by virtue of their different specific gravities. The copper or − element is in the bottom, and the zinc or + in the upper part of the cell.

gravity-railroad, s. A railroad on which the cars move down an inclined plane by their own weight alone.

* grāv'-oŭs, a. [Lat. gravis = heavy, grave.]

1. Grave, serious, sage, thoughtful, weighty.

"The most prudent grauous persons of euery countie, cytie, porte, and borough."—Hall: Henry VII. (an. 1).

2. Grave, important, serious, momentous.

"Grauous matters concernyng the welths of bothe the realmes."—Hall: Edward IV. (an. 22.)

* grāv'-oŭs-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gravous; -ly.] In a grave, serious, or thoughtful manner; gravely.

* grav-owre, s. [GRAVER.]

grā'-vȳ, * grea-vy, * grea-vie, s. [Etym. doubtful; probably formed from graves (q.v.).] The juice which drops from meat while roasting, made into a dressing for the meat when served up.

"I have been invited to a pawnbroker's table, by pretending to hate gravy."—Goldsmith: Citizen of the World, let. 26.

grạ-wa'-thạ, s. [A Brazilian word.]

Bot.: A kind of Bromelia used in South America for the manufacture of ropes. Called also Curra-tow.

grāy, * gra, * grai, * graye, * grei, * grey, * greye, a. & s. [A.S. grég; cogn. with Dut. graauw; Icel. grár; Dan. graa; Sw. grå; Ger. grau; Lat. ravus; O. H. Ger. grâw.]

A. As adjective:

I. Literally:

1. Of a colour between white and black; hoary; of the colour of hair whitened by age; ashy-coloured.

"These gray and dun colours may also be produced by mixing whites and blacks."—Newton: Optics.

2. Having hair whitened by age; gray-haired.

"Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray."—Bacon: Natural Hist.

3. Whitened or made hoary by age.

"My hair is gray, but not with years."
Byron: Prisoner of Chillon.

4. Dusky, dark.

"Gray dawn appears, the sportsman and his train Speckle the bosom of the distant plain."
Cowper: Progress of Error, 82.

* II. Fig.: Old, mature; as, gray experience.

B. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A gray colour; a colour between white and black; a neutral tint.

* 2. A gray-beard; an old, gray-headed man.

"Telling his tale alway this old grey."
Chaucer: Troilus, bk. iv.

* 3. A kind of fur.

"Gold ne soluer, ‡vouh ne gray."
O. Eng. Miscell., p. 94.

* 4. A badger.

"The grayes, polcats, or brocks, have a cast by themselves, when they be afraid of hunters."—P. Holland: Pliue, bk. viii., ch. xxxviii

5. A kind of salmon (Salmo erox).

¶ The gray of the morning: The dawn.

II. Technically:

1. Bot.: A genus of colours; the species are ash-gray, ash-grayish, pearl gray, slate gray, lead-coloured, smoky, mouse-coloured, hoary, and rather hoary. (Lindley.)

2. Entom.: A moth, Dianthœcia cœsia. (Newman.)

¶ Obvious compounds: Gray-eyed, gray-headed, gray-haired, &c.

gray-antimony, s.

Min.: The same as STIBNITE (q.v.).

gray-beard, s. & a.

A. As substantive:

1. A man with a gray-beard; an old man (frequently in contempt).

"Then said the Lord: This glass to praise
Fill with red wine from Portugal!
The gray-beard with trembling hand obeys."
Longfellow: Luck of Edenhall.

2. The name given to a large earthen jar, or bottle, for holding wine or spirituous liquor. Originally applied to a kind of stoneware drinking jugs, with bearded faces on them in relief, introduced in the early part of the sixteenth century.

"There's plenty o' brandy in the grey-beard that Luckie Maclearie sent down."—Scott: Waverley, ch lxiv.

B. As adj.: Having a gray beard; gray-bearded; old.

gray-bird, s. A species of thrush.

gray-bread, s. Bread made of rye or oats.

gray-carpet, s.

Entom.: Aleucis pictaria, a British moth of the group Geometrina and the family Caberidæ.

gray cast-iron, s.

Metall.: Gray cast-iron contains carbon chemically combined, and also graphite in a free state. When gray cast-iron is treated with an acid, the graphite separates out in black scales.

gray-cobalt, s.

Min.: The same as SMALTITE (q.v.).

gray copper-ore, s.

Min.: The same as TETRAHEDRITE (q.v.).

gray-cotton, s.

Comm.: Unbleached and undyed cotton cloth.

gray-fibres, s. pl.

Anat.: Pale gray fibres found with or without white ones in the sympathetic or other nerves. They were first discovered by Remak, and are often called after his name. (Quain.)

gray-fly, s. [GRAYFLY.]

gray-friars, grey-friars, s. The Franciscans (q.v.).

gray-geese, s. pl. A name vulgarly given to large field stones, lying on the surface of the ground.

"Biggin a dry-stane dyke, I think, wi' the grey-geese, as they ca' thae great loose stones."—Scott: Black Dwarf, ch. iv.

gray-goods, s. [GRAY-COTTON.]

gray-heads, s. pl. Heads of gray-coloured oats, growing among others that are not. (Gall: Encyc.) gray-hen, s. The female of the black-cock.

* gray-hoodcd, a. Gray; dusky.

"They left me, then, when the gray-hooded even,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus wain."
Milton: Comus, 188.

gray-malkin, s. [GRIMALKIN.]

gray-mare, grey-mare, s. A cant term for a wife; from the proverb "The gray-mare is the better horse," that is the wife is master.

"The vulgar proverb, that the grey-mare is the better horse, originated, I suspect, in the preference generally given to the grey-mares of Flanders over the finest coach horses of England."—Macaulay: Hist. of Eng., ch. iii.

gray-owl, grey-owl, s.

Ornith.: The same as the tawny owl, Syrnium stridula.

gray-pease, s. pl. Common pease in a dried state.

* gray, v.i. & t. [GRAY, s.]

A. Intrans.: To become gray or white.

"All grays the gres, that grene watz ere."
Gawaine, 526.

B. Trans.: To make gray.

"Thou hast gray'd a thousand."
Shirley: Bird in a Cage, v.

grāy'-flȳ, s. [Eng. gray, and fly.]

Entom.: A species of Œstrus, called also the trumpet fly (q.v.).

"What time the grayfly winds her sultry horn."
Milton: Lycidas, 28

grāy'-hound, s. [GREYHOUND.]

grāy'-ĭsh, * gra-ish, grey'-ish, a. [Eng. gray; -ish.] Somewhat gray in colour.

"A globe-like head, a gold-like haire,
A forehead smooth and hie,
On either side did shine a graish eie."
Warner: Albions England, bk. iv., ch. 20.

grāy'-lăg, grāy'-lägg, s. [Eng. gray, second element doubtful; cf. A.S. lagu = water, the sea, a lake, or Ital. lago = a lake.]

Ornith.: Anser ferus, believed to be the origin of the domestic goose.

grāyle, s. [GRAIL.]

grāy'-lĭng, a. & s. [Eng. gray; dimin. aff. -ling.]

A. As adj.: Of a dull brown or gray colour. (See the compound.)

B. As substantive:

1. Ichthy.: A British fresh-water fish, Thymallus vulgaris, one of the Salmonidæ. It is common in some British streams.

"Wholesale destruction of trout, smelt, and grayling in the Teviot."—Weekly Scotsman, July 12, 1873.

2. Entom.: [GRAYLING-BUTTERFLY].

grayling-butterfly, s.

Entom.: A British butterfly, Hipparchia or Satyrus Semele. Its general colour is dull brown above, fulvous beneath, with dark spots.

grāy'-lȳ, grēy'-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gray, grey; -ly.] In a grey colour; with a gray tinge. (Keats: Endymion, i. 231.)

grāy'-mĭll, grāy'-mĭl-lĕt, s. [GROMWELL.]

* grāyne, s. [GRAIN.]

grāy'-nĕss, grēy'-nĕss, s. [Eng. gray, grey; -ness.] The quality or state of being gray.

grāy'-stōne, s. [GREYSTONE.]

grāy'-wăck-ĕ, s. [GREYWACKE.]

grāy'-wĕth-ĕr, s. [GREYWETHER.]

grāze (1),  grāse, v.t. & i. [Etym. doubtful. According to Skeat coined from rase = to scrape slightly, with some confusion with graze, v.; according to others connected with graze (2). Cf. graze (2), A. II.]

A. Trans.: To touch or rub slightly in passing; to brush the surface lightly.

"It merely tore his coat, grazed his shoulder, and drew two or three ounces of blood."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xvi.

B. Intrans.: To touch lightly in passing; to brush.

"Mark then a bonnding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing, Breaks out." Shakesp.: Henry V., iv. 3.

grāze (2),  gras-en, * gres-yn, v.i. & t. [From grass (q.v.). O. H. Ger. gagrasôn; M. H. Ger. grasen; Dut. grazen; Ger. grasen.]

A. Intransitive:

I. Literally:

1. To eat grass; to feed on grass or growing herbage.

"The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, iii. 2.

2. To supply or furnish grass for grazing.

"The ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year."—Bacon.

* 3. To feed in any way; to browse.

"Grazing at large in meadows submarine."
Cowper: To the Memory of the Halibut.

* II. Fig.: To move along devouring, as spreading fire.

"As every state lay next to the other that was oppressed, so the fire perpetually grazed."—Bacon.

B. Transitive:

1. To supply with grass or pasture; to find pasture for.

"They feede and graze theyr cattele wandering through the deserts and wylde forests."—Goldyng: Justine, bk. i.

* 2. To tend while grazing.

"Jacob grazed his uncle Laban's sheep."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 3.

* 3. To feed on; to eat, as growing herbage; to browse.

"He gave my kine to graze the flowery plain."
Dryden: Virgil; Ecl. i. 11.

grāze (1), s. [GRAZE (1), v.]

1. The act of grazing or touching lightly; a light or slight touch or rub in passing.

2. A slight mark or cut made by an object touching in passing.

grāze (2), s. [GRAZE (2), v.] The act of grazing or feeding upon grass.

grāz'-ĕr, s. [Eng. graze (2); -er.]

1. Ord. Lang.: An animal that grazes or feeds on grass. (Philips: Cider, i.)

2. Ch. Hist.: The rendering of the Greek word Βοσκοί (Boskoi) = herdsmen, given by Sozomen as the name of an order of monks which arose in the fifth century in Mesopotamia, and spread to Palestine. They are said to have fed on herbs, and gone about almost in a state of nudity. (Townsend.)

grā'-zier (zier as zhŭr), * gras-ier, s. [Eng. graze (2); -er.] One who grazes or pastures cattle; one who raises and deals in cattle.

"The inhabitants be rather for the most parte graziers then ploughmen."—Stow: Description of England, p. 2.

* grā'-zier-lȳ (zier as zhŭr), adv. [Eng. grazier; -ly.] Relating to or like a grazier.

grāz'-ĭng (1),  grāṣ-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRAZE (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of touching or rubbing lightly in passing; a graze.

"With the grazing of a bullet upon the face of one."
—Ludlow: Memoirs, i. 51.

grazing-angle, s.

Fort.: The angle, of 10° or less, of a glacis, at which a shot will not penetrate, but will glance from the surface.

grazing-fire, s.

Fort.: A fire when the trajectory is low, and the projectile strikes the object, whether vertical or horizontal, at a grazing angle. Used in howitzer batteries in the third parallel, to enfilade the covered way; ricochet fire.

grāz'-ĭng (2), pr. par., a., & s. [GRAZE (2), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act of feeding on grass or growing herbage.

2. A pasture, a grazing-ground.

gra-zi-ō'-sō (z as ts), adv. [Ital.]

Mus.: A sign or direction that the notes or passage to which it is prefixed must be played with grace and elegance.

* grē (1),  greē (1), s. [O. Fr. gret, gre; Fr. gré, from Lat. gratum, neut. sing. of gratus = pleasing; Ital. grato.] That which is pleasing; will, pleasure, satisfaction.

"Lene me thy grace, for to go at thi gre."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems; Patience, 347.

grē (2),  greē, s. [GREE (2), s.]

* grē'-a-ble, a. [Mid. Eng. gre; -able.] Agreeable, willing, ready.

"The parti be greable & convenient."—Acts James III., 1485 (ed. 1814), p. 170.

grēase, * grece, * grese, * grees, * gresse, s. [O. Fr. gresse, graisse; Fr. graisse, from O. Fr. gras, cros; Lat. crassus = thick, fat; Sp. grasa; Port. graxa; Ital. grasso.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Animal fat in a soft state; the oily or unctuous part of animal matter of any kind, as tallow, lard, &c.; especially the fatty matter of land animals, as distinguished from the oily matter of marine animals.

"Especially swines grease, which in old time they used with great ceremonie in religion."—P. Holland Plinie, bk. xxviii., ch. ix.

2. Min.: A term used in relation to lustre; fat quartz has a greasy lustre. (Phillips.)

3. Farriery: A swelling and inflammation of the legs of a horse, attended with the secretion of oily matter and cracks in the skin.

grease-box, s.

Rail. Eng.: The receptacle over an axle arm, which contains the lubricating material.

grease-cock, s.

Mach.: A faucet by which oil is admitted to a journal-box, or other part requiring lubricating. It is used on the cylinder cover for lubricating the piston without permitting the escape of steam or the entrance of air.

grease-cup, s.

Mach.: A cup attached to a part requiring lubrication, and from which it is supplied with oil.

grease-pot, s. An iron pot, the third in the series in which iron plates are tinned. [TIN-PLATE.]

grēaṣe, * gres-yn, v.t. [GREASE, s.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: To smear or anoint with grease or fatty matter.

"They rub soot over the greased parts, especially their faces, which adds to their natural beauty as painting does in Europe."—Dampier: Voyage (an. 1691).

* 2. Fig.: To bribe; to corrupt or influence with presents. (Still in use in America.)

"Every gaping heir
Would gladly grease the rich old bachelor."
Dryden: Juvenal, sat. vi.

II. Farr.: To affect with the disease called grease.

* ¶ To grease in the hand or fist: To bribe.

"He betrayed Scythopolis, having been well greased in the fist for his pains."—Usher: Annals (an. 3895).

grēaṣ'-ĕr, s. [Eng. greas(e); -er.]

1. One who or that which greases; specif., a man whose business it is to see that the wheels of locomotives, carriages, waggons, &c., are properly supplied with lubricants.

2. A contemptuous name for a Mexican Creole.

grēase'-wood, s. One of the various low, prickly shrubs, mostly of the goosefoot family, found in the saline valleys of our western States.

grēaṣ'-ĭ-lȳ, adv. [Eng. greasy; -ly.]

1. Lit.: In a greasy manner or state.

* 2. Fig.: Nastily, foully, indelicately, obscenely.

"You talk greasily; your life's grown foul."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 1.

grĕaṣ'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. greasy; -ness.]

1. Lit.: The quality or state of being greasy; oiliness, unctuousness.

"Upon the most of these stones, after they are cut, there appears always, as it were, a kind of greasiness or unctuosity."—Boyle: Works, i. 453.

* 2. Fig.: Grossness, obscenity, indelicacy.

grēaṣ'-ȳ, * gries-ie, a. [Eng. grease; -y.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) Composed or consisting of grease; oily, fat, unctuous.

(2) Smeared or daubed with grease.

"His grisie lockes long growen and unbound."
Spenser. F. Q., I. ix. 35.

(3) Like grease or oil; smooth, oily.

* 2. Figuratively:

1. Fat, corpulent, bulky.

"Let's consult together about this greasy knight."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 1.

* 2. Gross, indelicate, indecent, obscene.

"Chaste cells, when greasy Aretine
For his rank fico, is surnamed sublime."
Marston: Scourge of Villainy.

II. Technically:

1. Farr.: Affected with the disease called grease: as The legs of a horse are greasy.

2. Bot.: Having a surface which feels as if it was greasy, though not so in reality.

greāt, * greate, * gret, * grete, * grat, * grit, a. & s. [A.S. greát; O.S. grót; cogn. with Dut. groot; Ger. gross; O. H. Ger. groz.]

A. As adjective:

1. Large in bulk or size; big.

"The man to whom the great dog belonged."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. ii.

2. Large in number; numerous.

"Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves."—Matt. xxvi. 47.

3. Large in amount, extent, or value.

"By money and by having grete possessions."—Chaucer: Tale of Melibeus.

4. Large in extent or surface; wide, extended, extensive.

"He could make a small town a great city."—Bacon: Essays; Of the True Greatness of Kingdoms.

5. Large, extensive, or considerable in degree; beyond the common.

"But, after all, it is with great parts, as with great virtues: they naturally border on some imperfection."—Pope: Homer; Iliad. (Pref.)

6. Considerable or extended in length or duration; of long duration; long-continued.

"Thou hast spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come."—2 Sam. vii. 19.

7. Marvellous, wonderful, extraordinary, surprising, remarkable.

"The works of the Lord are great."—Psalm cxi. 12.

8. Venerable, adorable, awful.

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised."—1 Chron. xvi. 25.

9. High in rank or position; distinguished; holding an eminent position in respect of rank, position, mental endowments or requirements; eminent; illustrious.

"He had been too great to sink into littleness without a struggle."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiv.

10. In a bad sense, notorious: as, a great liar.

11. Important; weighty; involving important interests or consequences; serious.

"And though this be a great truth, if it be impartially considered, yet it is also a great paradox."—Tillotson.

12. Chief, principal.

"Our great enemy
All incorruptible would on his throne Sit unpolluted." Milton: P. L., ii. 187.

13. Of elevated sentiments; generous, noble, magnanimous.

"In her every thing was goodly and stately; yet so, that it might seem that great mindedness was but the ancient bearer to the humbleness."—Sidney.

14. Wonderful, sublime.

"The addition of his empire, how it showed
In prospect from his throne, how good, how fair, Answering his great idea." Milton: P. L., vii. 557.

15. Opulent, magnificent, sumptuous.

"Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence Equalled." Milton: P. L., i. 718.

16. Sumptuous, expensive, costly; on an extensive scale: as, a great feast.

17. Swelling, proud, haughty; exhibiting pride or haughtiness.

"Solyman perceived that Vienna was not to be won with words, nor the defendants to be discouraged with great looks."—Knolles: Hist. of the Turkes.

18. Pregnant.

"From following the ewes great with young."—Psalm lxxviii 71.

* 19. Teeming, swollen, swelling.

"My heart is great, but it must break with silence." Shakesp.: Richard II., iv. 1.

20. Familiar, intimate, closely acquainted. (Colloq.)

"For those that would not censure, or speak ill of a man immediately, will talk more boldly of those that are so great with them."—Bacon: Essays; Of Followers & Friends.

21. Hard, difficult.

"It is no great matter to live lovingly with good-natured and meek persons."—Taylor: Devotion.

22. Burdensome, grievous, unfair.

"If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?"—1 Corinth. ix. 11.

23. Denoting a step of ascending or descending consanguinity: as great-grandfather, the father of a grandfather; great-grandson, the son of a grandson, and so on.

"I dare not yet affirm for the antiquity of our language, that our great-great-great grandsire's tongue came out of Persia."—Camden: Remains.

* B. As adv.: Greatly, very much.

"'Tis great like he will."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., iii. 1.

C. As substantive:

1. The mass, the bulk, the gross.

"To let out thy harvest by great or by day."
Tusser: Husbandry; August.

2. (Pl., with the definite article): Powerful, influential, rich, and distinguished.

"Beneath the good how far—but far above the great."
Gray: Progress of Poesy.

3. (Pl.): The great-go, or final examination at Oxford for a degree. [Go, s., ¶.]

"Both smalls and greats are sufficiently distant to be altogether ignored, if we are that way inclined."—T. Hughes: Tom Brown at Oxford, ch. x.

¶ (1) Crabb thus discriminates between great, large, and big: "Large is properly applied to space, extent, and quantity; big denotes great as to expansion or capacity. A house, a room, a heap, a pile, an army, &c., is great or large; an animal or a mountain is great or big. Great is used generally in the improper sense; large and big are used only occasionally."

(2) He thus discriminates between great, grand, and sublime: "These terms are synonymous only in the moral application. Great simply designates extent; grand includes likewise the idea of excellence and superiority. . . Grand and sublime are both superior to great; but the former marks the dimension of greatness, the latter designates that of height." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

¶ (1) By the great: In the gross; by the bulk.

(2) Greatest common measure: [Measure].

great-anteater, s.
Zool.: Myrmecophaga jubata.

great-armadillo, s.
Zool.: Dasypus gigas.

great-burnet, s.
Bot.: The genus Sanguisorba.

* great-bellied, a. Far advanced in pregnancy.

"Great-bellied women
That had not half a week to go."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., iv. 1.

* great-born, a. Nobly descended.

great-cattle, s. pl.
Law: All manner of cattle except sheep and yearlings. (Wharton.)

Great Charter, s. [Magna Charta.]

great-circle, s. [Circle.]
Great circle sailing:
Naut.: A system of navigation first introduced by Mr. John Towson of navigating a ship upon the principle that the nearest path between any two places upon a globe is by the great circle drawn upon it between them; the nearest course between two places on a sphere.

great-coat, s. An overcoat, a top-coat.

great-coated, a. Having a great-coat or overcoat on.

great-eared, a. Having large ears.
Great-eared leaf-bat: [Macrotus].
Great-eared tribes:
Anthrop.: A name sometimes employed to designate savage races who disfigure themselves by stretching their ears to an enormous size with what may be called exaggerated earrings. In this case the lobes are stretched into pendent fleshy loops; but the savages by no means answer the description of Pliny's Panotii (N.H., iv. 27), "whose ears were large enough to be used for covering their bodies." As a matter of fact the name Oregon is only a corruption of the Spanish Orejones (Big-ears), a nickname jocularly conferred on the inhabitants from their practice of enlarging the lobes of their ears. (Tylor.) great-go, s.

Univ.: The same as Greats. [Great, C. 3.]

great-gun, s. [Gun.]

great-hearted, a. High-spirited, undejected, brave.

"The earl, as great-hearted as he, declared that he neither cared for his friendship, nor feared his hatred."—Clarendon.

great macaw-tree, s.
Bot.: Cocos or Acrocomia fusiformis.

* great-master, s. The same as Grand-master (q.v.).

"With reverence
To our Great-master and this consistory."
Beaum. & Fl.: Knight of Malta, i. 3.

* great-merey, s. Great thanks. [Gramercy.]

great-organ, s.
Music: One (and the most important) of the three organs which are most usually associated in large combined organs. They are the great organ, the choir-organ, and the swell; to which may be added the pedal-organ or footkeys for acting on the larger pipes. The keyboard of the great-organ contains the principal keys, and has the middle position, the swell having the next highest row and the choir the lowest. [Organ.]

great-primer, s.
Print.: A type four sizes larger than long primer. For example—

Great Primer.

great-seal, s. [Seal.]

great sympathetic-nerve, s. [Sympathetic.]

great-tithes, s. pl. [Tithe.]

great white-owl, s.
Ornith.: The genus Nyctea.

* greāt, * grete, v.i. & t. [Great, a.]

A. Intrans.: To become great or big; to grow large, to swell.

"Hys wombe higan to grete."
Robert of Gloucester, p. 68.

B. Trans.: To make great; to aggrandize.

"Plotting to great himself."
Sylvester: The Lawe, 637.

* greāt'-en, v.t. & i. [A.S. greátian; O. H. Ger. grôzen.]

A. Trans.: To make great, to enlarge, to magnify, to aggrandize.

"That the House of Austria . . . should be greatened by the addition of England."—Camden: Elizabeth (an. 1560).

B. Intrans.: To become great or greater; to increase.

"Being committed against an infinite majesty, it [sin] greatens, and rises to the height of an infinite demerit."—South: Sermons, vol. x., ser. 10.

greāt'-lȳ, * grat-liche, * greet-li, * grete-ly, * gret-liche, adv. [Eng. great; -ly.]

1. In or to a great degree or manner; much.

"Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not."
Shakesp.: Richard II., v. 2.

2. In a noble or illustrious manner; nobly, illustriously.

3. In a magnanimous or high-minded manner; nobly, generously.

"Where are these bold intrepid sons of war,
That greatly turn their backs upon the foe?"
Addison: Cato, iii. 2.

4. In a sublime or noble manner; sublimely.

"So God has greatly purposed."
Cowper: Task, vi. 820.

greāt'-nĕss, * gretc-nesse, * gret-ncs, * greet-nesse, * gret-nesse, * gret-nis, s. [A.S. greátness.] The quality or state of being great; as

1. Largeness in bulk or size; bigness.

"Goodly rivers (that have made their graves,
And buried both their names, and all their good,
Within his greatness, to augment his waves)."
Daniel: Barons Wars, bk. ii.

2. Largeness in number.

3. Largeness in amount, extent, or value.

4. Largeness in extent or surface.

5. Largeness in degree; high degree, extent.

"In the greatness of his folly he shall go astray."—Proverbs v. 23.

6. Marvellous or wonderful nature; marvellousness.

7. Awfulness.

8. High rank or place; elevation, distinction, dignity, eminence, power.

"Our greatness will appear Then most conspicuous." Milton: P. L., ii. 257.

9. Importance, seriousness.

10. Wonderful nature or character; sublimity, grandeur.

11. Swelling pride; affected state; haughtiness.

12. Nobility of mind or sentiment; magnanimity.

"Greatness of soul is more necessary to make a great man, than the favour of a monarch."—Knox: Letters to a Young Nobleman, Let. 42.

13. Force, intensity, power: as, the greatness of sound, of force, of passion, &c.

* 14. A title of dignity. Its equivalent is still used in France when speaking of bishops.

"Nay, mighty Soldan, did your greatness see
The frowning looks of mighty Tamburlaine . . .
It might amaze your royal majesty."
Marlowe: Tamburlaine, iv. 1.

* grēave, * grafe, * greyve, s. [A.S. gerēfa; Dan. greve; O. Fris. greva; Icel. greifi; Sw. gerfve.] A steward, a reeve, a grieve.

* grēave (1), * griēve, s. [Grove.]

grēave (2), s. [Greaves (1).]

grēave, v.t. [Greaves (2).] [Grave (1), v.] grēaves (1), s. [Fr. grèves, from O. Fr. greve = the shin.] Armour for the legs made of metal, and lined with some soft material. They were fastened with straps and ankle-rings, and were richly ornamented and embossed.

"The greaves below his knee that wound,
With silvery scales were sheathed and bound."
Byron: Bride of Abydos, ii. 9.

grēaves (2), s. [Of Scandinavian origin: cf. Sw. dial. grevar = greaves; Low Ger. greven = greaves; Ger. griebe = the fibrous remains left in the preparation of lard. (Skeat.)] The sediment or insoluble parts of tallow gathered from the melting pots and made up into cakes for dogs' food.

grē'be, s. [Fr. grèbe, from Bret. or Arm. krib = a comb; kribel, kriben = a crest; Wel. crib = a comb, a crest; cribell = a cock's comb. So named because one of the species is crested.]

Ornith.: Podiceps, a genus of Colymbidæ (Divers). It consists of tailless birds with large fimbriations on their toes, which act as webs. Among the species may be named:—(1) The Great crested Grebe (Podiceps cristatus); (2) the Red-necked Grebe (P. rubricollis); (3) the Sclavonian Grebe (P. cornutus); (4) the Eared Grebe (P. auritus); and (5) the Little Grebe or Dabchick (P. minor). The Grebes of this genus are confined to the Eastern continent. An allied genus, Podilymbus, is found throughout America. The fur of the grebe is used for making muffs, ladies' collars, &c.

Grē'-çian, a. & s.

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Greece.

B. As substantive:

1. A native of Greece.

2. One who spoke Greek; one who adopted Greek manners or habits. [HELLENIST.]

"There arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews."—Acts vi. 1

3. One who is versed in or studies the Greek language.

4. One of the senior boys at Christ's Hospital.

Grecian architecture, s. The styles of architecture which prevailed in Greece and its colonies up to the conquest of the country by the Romans. The oldest examples which now remain belong to that type which is known under the name Cyclopean. [CYCLOPEAN.] Our earliest information respecting the architecture of Greece is gained from the poems of Homer. From him we learn that the palace was surrounded by Cyclopean walls, and had an outer and an inner court, the latter being surrounded by porticos and chambers. This led to a large columnar hall for festive purposes. The chambers for the family and women were behind. Treasure-houses often existed in connection with the palaces, for the preservation of valuables. In plan these treasure-houses were circular, and the covering was dome-shaped. Of all that remain to this day, that of Atreus, at Mycenæ, is the most remarkable. The earliest style of regular architecture was that known as Doric [DORIC], which is characterized by simplicity and strength. The oldest example of it is a temple at Corinth. The Ionic order of architecture arose much about the same time,—i.e., about 600 B.C. [IONIC.] Its characteristic features are grace and delicacy. To it belonged the temple of Diana, at Ephesus. About the beginning of the fifth century B.C. the Corinthian order began to come into use. It differs little from the Ionic except in greater lightness and increased richness of decoration. In spite of all differences of form and character of the details, the entire structure in their orders rests on the same principles. The use of the column is the great characteristic of all, and the differences between the three orders is most clearly perceptible in its treatment. The arch was never used in Grecian architecture.

Grecian-fire, s. [GREEK-FIRE.]

 Grē'-çian-īze, v.i. [Eng. Grecian; -ize.] To speak the Greek language.

 Grē'-çĭşm, s. [Lat. Græcismus, from Græcus; Gr. Γραικός (Graikos) = Greek; Fr. grécisme.] An idiom or peculiarity of the Greek language.

"Lofty thoughts . . . clothed with admirable Grecisms."—Dryden: Origin & Progress of Satire.

 Grē'-çīze, v.t. & i. [Lat. Græcisso, from Gr. γραικίζω (Graikizo), from Γραικός (Graikos) = Greek; Fr. Gréciser; Sp. Grecisar.]

A. Intrans.: To speak the Greek language.

B. Transitive:

1. To render Grecian.

2. To translate into Greek.

grĕ̈eque (que as k), s. [Fr., = fretwork.]

1. An apparatus placed in coffee-pots for holding the coffee-grounds. The bottom is perforated with minute holes, and hot water being poured upon the coffee placed in it, carries through with it the strength and aroma of the coffee without the grounds.

2. A coffee-pot having provided such an apparatus.

 grĕd, * grădde, s. [GREDE, v.] A cry, a shout.

"On Moysen he setten a gred."
Genesis & Exodus, 3,230.

grĕd'-a-lĭn, s. [GRIDELIN.]

 grēde (1), s. [GREED.]

 grēde (2), s. [A.S. greâda.] A bosom, a lap.

"Thi coppe he putte undur his grede."
Alisaunder, 4,187.

 grēde, * grad-en, v.i. & t. [A.S. grædan.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To cry, to weep.

"Thanne bygynne thay to grede and honte."
Sir Ferumbras, 3,225.

2. To cry out, to shout.

"Loude he gan to grede."
Robert of Gloucester, p. 460.

3. To cry or call in prayer.

"Theruore scolle we ofte grede to God."—Ayenbite of Inwit, p. 212.

B. Trans.: To cry or beg for; to pray for.

"Grace he gradde and grace he hadde." Gower, iii. 16.

 grēd'-ęl, s. [GRIDDLE.]

 gred-ire, s. [A form of gredil = griddle, by change of l into r.] A gridiron (q.v.).

 greē (1),  grē, s. [Fr. gré = pleasure, from Lat. gratum, neut. sing. of gratus = pleasing.]

1. Pleasure, satisfaction, goodwill.

"My spirit . . . receyve in gre."
Chaucer: Troilus, iv. 292.

2. Satisfaction for an offence or injury done.

"To Josepe he made is gre." Kindhert Jesu, 1,428.

 greē (2),  grece, * greece, * grees, * grice, * gresse, * grie, * grize, s. [O. Fr. gre; Lat. gradus = a step; gradior = to walk.] [GRADE.]

1. A step.

"The lord archbishop vpon the greece of the quire, made a long oration."—Bacon: Henry VII., p. 179.

2. A degree or measurement.

"The last and outmaist ile is named Hirtha, quhare the eleuation of the pole is lxiii. greis."—Bellenden: Descr. Alb., ch. xiii.

3. A degree or step in consanguinity.

"Swa he and he Wes evynlike in the tothir gre."
Wyntown, ix. 27, 56.

4. A step or gradation in an argument or climax.

"The prophet in discription of these vanities, maketh these gries."—Knox: Reasoning with Crossaguell, Prol. ii. b.

5. Pre-eminence, superiority.

"To James Lord of Dowglas thay the gre gave,
To go with the Kingis hairt." Houlate, ii. 11.

¶ To bear or win the gree: To carry off the prize; to have the victory.

"And eik wha best on fute can ryn lat se,
To preif his pith, or wersill, and bere the gre."
Douglas: Virgil, 129, 36.

greē, v.i. & t. [Fr. gréer; GREE (1), s.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To agree, to consent.

2. To live in amity; to agree together.

"'And they're just neighbour-like,' replied the covenanter; 'and nae wonder they gree sae weel.'"—Scott: Waverley, ch. xxxvi.

B. Trans.: To reconcile parties at variance.

 greē'-ançe, s. [GREE, v.] Agreement, concord.

 greēçe, * grees, * gryse, s. [GREE (2), s.] greēd, * gredo, s. [From the adj. greedy (q.v.); cf. Icel. grâdhr; Goth. gredus=hunger; M. H. Ger. grit.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. An eager desire or longing; greediness; especially avarice or covetousness.

* 2. A greedy fellow.

II. Bot. (Pl.): A popular name for the genus Potamogeton.

 greēd, v.t. [GREED, s.] To covet.

greēd'-ĭ-lў, * gred-i-liche, * gred-e-ly, * gred-liche, adv. [A.S. grâdiglice; Icel. gradhigliga.] In a greedy manner; voraciously, ravenously, eagerly; with eagerness or greediness.

"The hog greedily devours many things rejected by every other useful animal."—Smith: Wealth of Nations, bk. i., ch. xi.

greēd'-ĭ-nĕss, * gred-i-nesse, * greed-i-nesse, s. [A.S. grædignes, from grædig = greedy (q.v.).] The quality of being greedy; an eager longing or desire; ravenousness, avidity, greed.

"The greedinesse of glorye, and the vnsaciable desire of fame."—Brende: Quintus Curtius, fo. 257.

greēd'-ў, * gred-i, * gred-ie, * gred-y, a. [A.S. grædig, grêdig; cogn. with Dut. gretig; Icel. grâdhugr; O. Sw. gradig, grâdig; Dan. graadig; Goth. gredags; O. H. Ger. grâtag; O. S. grâdag; Sansc. gridhnu, griddhin, from gridh = to be greedy.]

1. Have a keen or eager desire for food or drink; very hungry; voracious, ravenous.

"Be not unsatiable in any dainty thing, nor too greedy upon meats."—Ecclus. xxxvii. 29.

2. Having an eager or ardent desire for anything; eager to obtain.

"He was greedy of wealth and honours, corrupt himself, and a corrupter of others."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. ii.

¶ Formerly it was followed by to: as, Greedy to know, greedy to kill.

3. Covetous, avaricious, grasping.

"A crowd of greedy informers."—Macaulay Hist Eng., ch. v.

greedy-gut, greedy-guts, s. A greedy fellow, a glutton.

greē'-greē, s. [A West African word.]

Bot.: The ordeal tree of Guinea—Erythrophyllum guineense.

Greēk, Greēke, a. & s. [Lat. Græcus, from Gr. Γραικός (Graikos); Fr. Grec.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to Greece; Grecian.

B. As substantive:

I. Literally:

1. A native or inhabitant of Greece.

"I prithee, foolish Greek, depart from me; There's money for thee."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, iv. 1.

2. The language spoken by the inhabitants of Greece.

II. Fig.: A knave, a cheat, a low fellow. (Slang.)

"Without a confederate the now fashionable game of baccarat does not seem to offer many chances for the Greek."—Saturday Review, Feb. 16, 1884, p. 202.

Greek Church, s.

Ecclesiol. & Ch. Hist.: The Eastern Church, that of the old Eastern Empire, which, prior to the Turkish conquest, had its metropolis at Constantinople, as distinguished from the Western Church, which had its capital at Rome; the church of the people speaking the Greek language rather than that of the Greek nation.

1. Ch. Hist.: That the Eastern and Western Churches would first disagree, and then separate, was ensured from the first by the difference in their mental constitution. The Greeks were notable for intense intellectual acuteness, which they used to frame hair-splitting subtleties of doctrine. The Romans, on the contrary, who had the imperial instinct, employed the new faith as a means of building up again a world-embracing dominion, with the "eternal city" as its capital. The first variance between the East and the West arose in the second century regarding the time of keeping Easter. The disputes which succeeded were chiefly as to personal dignity. As long as Rome was the metropolis of the empire, the Bishop of Rome had indisputably the most important see in the Church; but when, on May 11, 330, Constantine removed the seat of government to Byzantium (Constantinople), the bishop of the new metropolis became a formidable rival to his ecclesiastical brother at Rome. In the second General Council, that of Constantinople, A.D. 381, the Bishop of Constantinople was allowed to sit next to the Bishop of Rome; by the 28th canon of the Synod of Chalcedon, A.D. 403, he was permitted to enjoy an equal rank. In 588, John, Patriarch of Constantinople, assumed the title of œcumenical or universal bishop, for which he was denounced by Pope Gregory the Great. Disputes in the eighth century about image-worship widened the breach, as did the continued rejection by the Greek Church of the words Filioque, asserting the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son as well as from the Father, introduced by the second Council of Constantinople, A.D. 381. The last General Council in which the Churches of the East and the West were united was the Seventh, or Second Concil of Nice, A.D. 787. The feud continued through the ninth and on to the eleventh century. In the thirteenth an effort was made by Michael Palæologus to promote a reunion of the two great churches at the Council of Florence, but all was in vain. They have remained separate till now.

2. Doctrine & discipline: The Bible as now interpreted by tradition is the rule of faith. Regarding the Trinity, the Divinity of Christ, the Atonement, and the work of the Holy Spirit, the Greek Church holds the ordinary faith of Christendom. Regarding what is termed the procession of the Holy Ghost, the East holds that he proceeded from the Father only, while the churches of the West believe that he did so from the Father and the Son (Fifth of the Thirty-nine Articles). With regard to the decrees of God, the Greek tenets are what would now be called strongly Arminian. Worship of a superior or of an inferior kind is rendered to the Virgin Mary, to saints and angels. The secular clergy are enjoined to marry once, and with a virgin. Images are in use. The Communion is administered even to the laity in both kinds. The doctrine of purgatory is not accepted. Baptism is by immersion, and is followed by chrism or anointing. The government is episcopal. Excepting the Church of Rome, the Greek Church is the largest Christian organization, though it would be only the third if the several Protestant Churches were united into one. Its political importance arises mainly from the fact that the Emperor of Russia is regarded as its earthly head. It is the most numerous Christian body in the Turkish empire, and has a patriarch at Constantinople. It has many adherents also in the heterogeneous Austrian empire. The Russian emperor Nicholas delighted to call it "the orthodox faith." [ORTHODOX.]

Greek-fire, s. An incendiary composition used in the early times by the Tartars, and afterwards by the Greeks, but little used in more modern times.

Greek-kalends, s. pl. [CALENDS.]

Greek-nuts, s. pl. Amygdalus communis.

Greek-valerian, s.
Bot.: The genus Polemonium.

greēk, s. [Etym. doubtful.] The grain, the texture, or particular quality of one stone as distinguished from another.

"They [the stone quarries] consist of three different kinds of stone, one of a bluish-black colour, with a fine greek, capable of receiving a polish like marble."—P. Carnock: Fife Statist. Acc., xi. 483.

* Greēk'-ĕss, s. [Eng. Greek; -ess.] A female Greek.

* Greēk'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. Greek; -ish.] Of or pertaining to Greece; Greek.

"Thou should'st not beare from me a Greekish member Wherein my sword had not impressure made."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, iv. 5.

* Greēk'-ĭsm, s. [Eng. Greek; -ism.] A Grecism (q.v.).

* Greēk'-lĭng, * Greēke'-lĭng, s. [Eng. Greek, and dimin. suff. -ling.] A little or unimportant Greek.

"Which of the Greekelings durst ever give precepts to Demosthenes?"—Ben Jonson: Discoveries.

* greē'-ment, * grē'-ment, s. [Fr. greer = to agree.] Agreement, consent.

"Agamynon by grement of all meuyt unto missam."
Destruction of Troy, 9,384.

greēn, * grēne, a. & s. [A.S. grēne; O. S. grōni; cogn. with Dut. groen; Icel. grœnn; Dan. & Sw. grön; Ger. grün; M. H. Ger. gruene; O. H. Ger. kruoni; O. Fris. grêne = green; Russ. zelene = greenness; Gr. χλωρός (chlōros); Sansc. hari = green, yellow.]

A. As adjective:

1. Lit.: Having a colour resembling that of growing herbage; of a colour formed by compounding blue and yellow; verdant.

"On the green bank I sat and listened long"
Dryden: Flower & Leaf, 132.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Flourishing, fresh; full of life and vigour like a growing plant: as, a green old age.

(2) New, fresh, recent: as, a green wound.

"Though of Hamlet's death the memory be green."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, i. 2.

*(3) Fresh, unhealed.

"A man that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green."—Bacon: Essays; Of Revenge.

(4) Not dry; containing the sap.

'One of you will prove a shrunk panel, and, like green timber, warp."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, iii. 3.

* (5) Not roasted, half raw.

"We say the meat is green when it is half roasted."
—Watts: Logic.

(6) Unripe, immature; not arrived at maturity: as, green fruit.

"If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

(7) Immature in age or judgment; inexperienced, young.

"The text is old, the orator too green."
Shakesp.: Venus & Adonis, 806.

(8) Simple, raw; easily imposed upon.

"'He is so jolly green,' said Charley."—Dickens: Oliver Twist, ch. ix.

(9) Of a greenish, pale colour; pale, sickly, wan.

"Hath it slept since?
And wakes it now to look so green and pale
At what it did?" Shakesp.: Macbeth, i. 7.

(10) Fresh, not salted: as, green fish.

B. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The colour of growing herbage; the colour of the solar spectrum between blue and yellow; a secondary colour composed of the primaries blue and yellow in different proportions.

"The thick young grass arose in fresher green."
Dryden: Flower & Leaf, 67.

2. A grassy plot or plain; a piece of ground covered with verdant herbage: as, a village green.

"Lordes, beholdeth than amercl younder out on the grene." Sir Ferumbras, 3,361.

3. Used elliptically for green clothes.

"They were clothide alle in grene." Perceval, 277.

* 4. (Pl.): Fresh leaves or branches of trees, shrubs, &c.; wreathes.

"It was finely wrought above head, beautified with greens, furnished with benches and settles."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. ii.

5. (Pl.): The young leaves and stems of plants of the cabbage kind, used in cookery and dressed for food.

II. Technically:

1. Paint.: Green pigments are derived chiefly from the mineral world, and owe their colour to the presence of copper. Among the most valuable to the painter are malachite or mountain green, terra verte, Veronese green, native carbonate of copper, cobalt green, and chrome green.

2. Bot.: A genus of colours, in Latin viridis, in words of Greek composition, chloro-. The typical species called simply green is a clear green, less bright than grass green; virens, virescens, viridulus, and viridescens are shades of it. The other species are grass-green, verdigris-green, sea-green, deep-green, yellowish-green, and olive-green. (Lindley.)

3. Her.: [SINOPLE, VERT].

¶ Obvious compounds: Green-coated, green-garbed, green-growing, green-grown, green-mantled, &c.

green-bird, s. The greenfinch.

green-blights, s.pl.
Hort.: The Aphidæ (Plant-lice).

green-bone, s.
1. The viviparous blenny (Zoarces viviparus).

"The viviparous blenny, from the colour of the back-bone, has here got the name of green-bone."—Barry: Orkney, p. 391.

2. The garfish (Belone vulgaris).

green-brier, s.
Bot.: A name given in America to the genus Smilax.

green - cow, s. A cow just calved. (Scotch.) green-crab, s.

Zool.: Carcinus mænas.

green-crop, s. A crop used for food while in a green or growing state; in contradistinction to grain-crop, root-crop, or grass-crop.

green-diallage, s.
Min.: (1) Diallage, a variety of Pyroxene; (2) Smaragdite.

green-dragon, s.
Bot.: Arisæma Dracontium. A plant growing in the United States.

green-earth, s.
1. Min. & Path.: A variety of Glauconite, often filling cavities in amygdaloid and other eruptive rocks.

2. Painting: A pigment, mountain green.

green-ebony, s.
Bot.: Two trees—(1) Excœcaria glandulosa, (2) Jacaranda ovalifolia.

green-eyed, a.
1. Lit.: Having green eyes.

"Green-eyed Neptune raves."
Milton: College Exercise.

2. Fig.: Seeing things distorted or discoloured, green being the colour symbolical of jealousy.

"And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

green-fly, s.
Entom.: A bright-green fly—Musca chloris.

green-groeer, s. [GREENGROCER.]

green-grosbeak, s.
Ornith.: The same as GREENFINCH (q.v.).

green-hand, s. An inexperienced person; a novice.

green-headed, a. Of immature judgment.

"With green-headed Ignorance, I would presume to go on to the gate."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. ii.

green iron-ore, s.
Min.: The same as DUFRENITE

green-laver, s.
Bot.: Ulva latissima, an algal.

green lead-ore, s.
Min.: The same as PYROMORPHITE (q.v.).

green-linnet, s. [GREENFINCH.]

green-lizard, s.
Zool.: Lacerta viridis—a small lizard occurring in Jersey.

green-malachite, s.
Min.: The typical variety of Malachite (q.v.).

green-man, s. A savage, a wild man.
Green-man orchis:
Bot.: Aceras anthropophora.

green-marble, s.
Stone-cutting: Serpentine.

green-mineral, s.
Painting: A carbonate of copper, used as a pigment.

green-osier, s.
Bot.: Salix rubra.

green-room, s.
1. A room close to the stage in a theatre, in which the actors wait until it is time for them to go on to the stage, or during the intervals of their parts. Called from having been originally painted in green.

2. A room in a warehouse where new or green cloth is received from the weaving factory.

Green Salt of Magnus, s.
Chem.: $Pt(NH_3)_4Cl_2 + PtCl_2$. A double salt of platinous chloride with platinous tetramine chloride. Obtained by pouring a boiling solution of platinous chloride in hydrochloric acid into excess of aqueous ammonia. It is green crystalline powder, insoluble in water.

green-sand, s. [GREENSAND.]

green - sickness, s. The same as CHLOROSIS (q.v.).

"I was almost eaten up by the green-sickness."—Steele: Spectator, No. 431.

green-sloke, s. The same as GREENLAVER (q.v.).

green-stall, s. A stall on which greens and other vegetables are exposed for sale.

green-tea, s. A tea having a greenish colour, due to the mode in which the leaves are treated in the process of drying. The chief varieties of it are Hyson-skin, Twankay, Hyson, Young Hyson, Imperial, and Gunpowder. [TEA.]

green-tortrix, s.
Entom.: A moth (Tortrix viridana), common in England.

green-turtle, s.
Zool.: Chelone Midas. [CHELONE, TURTLE.]

* green-vitriol, s.
1. Chem.: Crystallized ferrous sulphate, $FeSo_4{\cdot}FH_2O$.

2. Min.: The same as MELANTERITE, COPPERAS, and SULPHATE OF IRON.

green-weed, s. [GREENWEED.]

* greēn, v.i. & t. [A.S. grénian; O. H. Ger. gruonen; Dut. groenen.]

A. Intrans.: To become or grow green.

"The newe spryng
Whanne it greneth in the gynnyng."
Romaunt of the Rose, 4,328.

B. Trans.: To make green.

1. Absolutely.

"Great Spring before Greened all the year." Thomson: Spring, 321.

2. Completed by preposition.

"Have not rains Greened over April's lap?"
Keats: Endymion, i. 217.

greēn'-băck, s. [Eng. green, and back.] A popular name for the paper money first issued by the Treasury of the United States in 1862.

"This was accomplished by the issue of Legal Tender notes (popularly known as 'Greenbacks,' from the colour of the ink with which the reverse of the note was printed)."—Echo, May 8, 1873.

† greēn'-broŏm, s. [Eng. green, and broom.] [GREENWEED.]

greēn'-cloth, s. [Eng. green, and cloth.] A board or court of justice, formerly held in the counting-house of the king's household. It was composed of the lord-steward and the officers under him, and had cognizance of all matters of government and justice in the household, and also power to keep the peace, and to punish offenders against it within the verge of the palace, and two hundred yards beyond the gates.

greēn'-ēr-y, s. [Eng. green; -ery.]

1. A place where green plants are reared.

2. A bunch or mass of green plants or foliage; a wreath.

"The greenery should be either growing naturally upward or twining."—Harper's Monthly Magazine (Dec., 1880), p. 28.

greēn finch, s. [Eng. green, and finch.]

Ornith.: Coccothraustes chloris, an insessorial bird of the family Fringillidæ. In the male the upper parts and breast are yellowish-green; the head tinged with grey; the edges of the wings, the outer webs of the primary quills, and the base of the tail-feathers yellow. In the female the upper parts are greenish-brown, and the breast greyish-brown. It is a permanent resident in Britain, frequenting gardens, orchards, small woods, &c. It lays from four to six eggs, which are white, tinged with blue. Called also Green-Grosbeak and Green-linnet.

greēn'-fĭsh, s. [Eng. green, and fish.]

Ichthy.: An American name for Temnodon saltator, one of the Scombéridæ (Mackerels); widely diffused in the warmer oceans and seas of both hemispheres.

greēn-gāġe, s. [Eng. green, and gage, named after the Rev. M. Gage, who first brought it to England.]

Hort.: A delicious variety of plum, Prunus domestica. Its skin and juicy pulp are of a green colour; it has a delicious flavour.

greēn'-grō-cẽr, s. [Eng. green, and grocer.] A retailer of green vegetables.

greēn'-heart (heart as hart), s. [Eng. green, and heart.]

Bot.: The name given in Demerara to Nectandra Rodiæi, a tree of the Laurel order, which furnishes hard timber, and yields the febrifuge called Bibiri, or Bebeera.

* greēn'-hoŏd, * grene-hed, * gren-hed, * grcn-hede, s. [Eng. green; -hood.]

1. Greenness, verdure.

"Ane nayre gardyne nol of grenhede."—Ayenbite of Inwit, p. 94.

2. Folly, foolishness, ignorance.

"Youth, withouten greneheed or folie."
Chaucer: C. T., 4,583.

greēn'-horn, s. [Eng. green, and horn.] A simpleton; a silly fellow; a raw, inexperienced person; one easily imposed upon.

greēn'-hoŭse, s. [Eng. green, and house.]

1. Hortic.: A house or structure, the roofs and sides of which are composed of glass, constructed for the purpose of cultivating and preserving tender or exotic plants. It is furnished with apparatus for maintaining an artificial temperature, and the necessary ventilation.

"Who loves a garden, loves a green-house too."
Cowper: Task, iii. 566.

2. Pottery: A house moderately warmed, where some kinds of green-ware are placed to become partially dried before taking to the hot-house, where the drying is completed by strong heat. The ware is then arranged in saggars and fired in the kiln.

greēn'-ĭng, * gren-ing, s. [Eng. green; -ing.]

* 1. The act or state of becoming green.

"On the morn o that grening."
Cursor Mundi, 10,867.

2. Greenness, verdure.

"The tender greening
Of April meadows." Keats: Sleep & Poetry.

3. A name given to certain varieties of apples which preserve their green colour even when ripe.

greēn'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. green; -ish.] Somewhat or rather green; tending to green.

"Resembling the fore-mentioned sally, with reddish twigs, and more greenish."—Evelyn: Discourse of Forest Trees, ch. xix.

greenish-glaucous, s.

Bot.: Between a green and glaucous colour.

greēn'-ĭsh-nĕss, s. [Eng. greenish; -ness.] The quality or state of being greenish.

Greēn'-land, s. & a. [Eng. green, and land. So called from the bright green appearance of the mosses which grow there.]

A. As substantive:

Geog.: A country or large island constituting the north-east part of America, from 59° 49° northwards.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the country described under A.

Greenland-whale, s. Balæna mysticetus. Called also the Right Whale. [BALÆNA, WHALE.]

Greēn'-land-ẽr, s. [Eng. Greenland; suff. -er.] A native of Greenland.

greēn'-land-īte, s. [From Greenland = the country; suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: The same as COLUMBITE (q.v.).

greēn'-lĕss, a. [Eng. green; -less.] Destitute of any greenness or verdure.

greēn'-lĕt, s. [Eng. green; dimin. suff. -let.]

Ornith.: Vireoninæ, a sub-family of Muscicapidæ (Flycatchers). They are so called from having much green or olive in the colours of their plumage. They are small American birds, arriving in the United States from South America and the West Indies about the month of May, and departing again in August. Some of them sing sweetly. [VIREO.]

* greēn'-lў, adv. [Eng. green; -ly.]

1. In a green manner or state.

"Gray hut leafy walls, where Ruin greenly dwells."
Byron: Childe Harold, iii. 46.

2. Freshly.

"Sprouting youth did now but greenly bud."
P. Fletcher: Purple Island, i.

3. Like a novice or a green person; foolishly.

"We have done but greenly
In hugger mugger to inter him."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 5.

greēn'-nĕss, * gren-es, * grene-nesse, s. [A.S. grenness.]

I. Lit.: The quality or state of being green, or of a green colour; a green colour.

"The ground without greenness in those months of June and July."—Sir F. Drake: The World Encompassed.

II. Figuratively:

1. Freshness, vigour.

"It is this alone that for a while gives growth and greenness to his comforts."—South Sermons, vol. x., ser. 2.

2. Newness.

3. The quality or state of being unripe; immaturity.

"It cannot be wondered at, considering the greenness of his years."—Murphy: Life of Fielding.

4. Immaturity of judgment; simplicity, rawness, inexperience.

greēn'-ŏck-īte, s. [Named after Lord Greenock, afterwards Earl Cathcart; suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: An hexagonal, nearly transparent mineral, of yellow colour, adamantine lustre, and strong double refraction. Compos.: CdS or $CdSn$ = sulphur 22·3 to 22·56, and cadmium 77·30 to 77·70. Found in amygdaloid at Bishoptown in Renfrewshire, in Bohemia, &c.; also as a furnace product.

greēn'-ŏ-vīte, s. [Named by Dufrénoy after Mr. G. B. Greenough, a celebrated geologist.]

Min.: Manganesian Titanite, a red or rose-coloured variety of Titanite, the hue produced by the presence of a little manganese (Dana). The Brit. Mus. Cat. makes it a variety of Sphene, which Dana makes a sub-variety of Ordinary Titanite.

greēn'-sănd, s. & a. [Eng. green, and sand.]

A. As substantive:

Geol.: The name given to two series of beds in the cretaceous formations, the one called the Upper, the other the Lower Greensand:—

1. The Upper Greensand: This is a subdivision of the Upper Cretaceous Rocks, and is situated immediately below the Chalk-marl, and just above the Gault. The beds of which it is composed have in them green particles of a mineral called Glauconite (q.v.). In parts of Surrey calcareous matter is intermixed in quantities sufficient to convert the beds into what is there termed firestone. In the southern part of the Isle of Wight, the Upper Greensand is 100 feet thick, and contains bands of siliceous limestone and calcareous sandstone, with nodules of chert. Mr. A. J. Jukes Browne shows that there are two faunas in the Upper Greensand of Cambridge, the one derivative, whilst the other, which belongs to the Sandy marl, is in position. Among the fossils peculiar to it are various ammonites, two pterodontas, two species of Fusus, &c. Of the derivative fauna, which is probably from the Gault, Mr. Sollas described coprolites constituting phosphatic nodules, and Prof. Seeley an Ichthyosaurian, Cetarthrosaurus Walkeri, from the railway bridge at Ditton, north-east of Cambridge, and other reptiles. Some are of opinion that the so-called Upper Greensand from which these fossils came, is itself Gault. This formation, so far as its green particles are concerned, is principally confined to England.

2. The Lower Greensand: A series of beds constituting the Lower Cretaceous Rocks, and the lowest member of the Cretaceous group. It is called on the continent Neocomian, a name adopted by Lyell in his Students' Elements of Geology, he considering the term greensand peculiarly inapplicable, as in the district where these strata were first observed sand of a green colour was the exception instead of the rule. [NEOCOMIAN.] Dr. Fitton enumerated as fossils in various beds, Gryphæa sinuata, Perna Mulleti, the genera Scaphites, Ammonites, &c. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., iii., plate 12.)

B. As adj.: Of, belonging to, or found in the Greensand: as, Greensand fossils.

greēn'-shăńk, s. [Eng. green, and shank.]

Ornith.: Totanus glottis; a sandpiper, of the family Scolopacidæ, found in Britain.

greēn'-snāke, s. [Eng. green, and snake.]

Zool.: The popular name of more than one Coluber in the United States.

greēn'-stĭck, s. [Eng. green, and stick.] (See the compound.)

greenstick-fracture, s.

Surg.: This term is used when a bone is partially broken or cracked. This especially occurs in the bending of bone in young children, where the fracture is frequently incomplete or partial, simply extending across the convexity of the curve made by the bending instead of the breaking of the bone.

greēn'-stōne, s. & a. [Eng. green, and stone.]

A. As substantive:

1. Petrology:

* (1) Formerly: A granular rock consisting of hornblende and imperfectly crystallized felspar, the felspar being more abundant than in basalt, and the grains or crystals of the two minerals more distinct from each other. It was called also Dolerite. Sir Charles Lyell also included under the term greenstone those rocks in which augite was substituted for hornblende, the "dolorite" of some writers, and those in which albite replaced common felspar. This was sometimes termed Aodesite. (Lyell.)

(2) Now: The same as diorite, which is an essentially crystalline granular admixture of triclinic felspar and hornblende. Rutley proposes a partial return to the earlier signification, and would use greenstone as an ambiguous and comprehensive term useful in field geology, but expressive of ignorance with regard to the exact composition of volcanic rocks, either decomposed or otherwise incapable of exact identification. It is not now held to be the equivalent of dolerite (q.v.).

2. Geol.: Greenstone is a volcanic rock, occurring in dykes, tabular masses, &c.

B. As adj.: Containing more or less of greenstone, or akin to it in composition or other characters.

¶ Syenitic greenstone: [SYENITIC].

greenstone-trachytes, s. pl.

Petrol. & Geol.: Eruptive rocks, usually consisting of a more or less felspathic base, in which large crystals of plagroclase felspar, with others of hornblende and mica, are imbedded so as to give them a more or less strikingly porphyritic character. They are found in Hungary. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxvii. 298.)

greenstone-tuffs, s. pl.

Petrol. & Geol.: Tuffs associated with greenstone. Rutley places them in the diabase group of crystalline eruptive rocks.

green'-sward, s. Turf covered with grass.

"A long straight path Traced faintly in the greensward."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vii.

green'th, s. [Formed on the analogy of warmth, &c.] Greenness; the quality of being green.

"Amidst the gleams and greenth of summer."—G. Eliot: Daniel Deronda, bk. iv., ch. xxx.

green'-weed, s. [Eng. green, and weed.]

Bot.: Two species of Genista, G. tinctoria and G. pilosa.

green'-withe, s. [Eng. green, and withe.]

Bot.: An orchid, Vanilla claviculata.

green'-wood, *greene-wood, s. & a. [Eng. green, and wood.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A wood in summer when the trees, &c., are green.

2. Wood which has become green in tint under the influence of the fungus Peziza.

II. Bot.: The same as GREENWEED (q.v.).

B. As adj.: Pertaining to a greenwood.

"In the brown shades and greenwood forest lost."
Thomson: Castle of Indolence, ii. 17.

green'-y, a. [Eng. green; -y.] Of a greenish or somewhat green tint; inclined to a green colour.

green'-yard, s. [Eng. green, and yard.] A pound; an inclosure in which stray cattle are confined.

 greęs, grēse, s. [GREE (2), s.] grce-sheeh, s. [GRIESHOCH.]

greet (1), grete, *gret-en, *gret-yn, v.t. & i. [A.S. grétan = to approach, to address; cogn. with Dut. groeten; O. H. Ger. gruozan; M. H. Ger. gruezen; O. Fris. grēta; Ger. grüssen.]

A. Transitive:

1. To address at meeting with salutations or expressions of kind wishes; to salute kindly; to pay respects to; to hail.

"The square was thronged by a multitude which greeted him with loud acclamations."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

2. To meet, to welcome: as, The cries which greeted his ears.

* 3. To congratulate, to felicitate.

"Why so sadly greet you our victory?"
Shakesp.: Cymbeline, v. 5.

* 4. To address in any way.

"Let him greet England with our sharp defiance."
Shakesp.: Henry V., iii. 5.

* 5. To look upon or regard kindly.

"A merrier day did never yet greet Rome."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, v. 4.

* 6. To meet as one who goes to offer congratulations.

"We will greet the time."
Shakesp.: Lear, v. 1.

* 7. To assign or bestow with praises or congratulations.

"And thether also came in open sight
Fayre Florimell, into the common hall,
To greet his guerdon unto every knight."
Spenser: F. Q., V. iii. 14.

B. Intrans.: To meet and salute.

"There greet in silence as the dead are wont."
Shakesp.: Titus Andronicus, i.

greet (2), greit, *greete, * grete (2),  gretcn (2), gretyn (2),  greyt, v.i. [A.S. grétan, grétan; cogn. with Icel. grāta; Dan. græde; Sw. gråta; Goth. gretan, all = to weep.] To weep, to cry.

"Freyndes I had fulle foyn,
That gars me grete and grone."
Towneley Mysteries, p. 227.

 greēt, * greēte, s. & a. [GREET (2), v.]

A. As subst.: Weeping.

B. As adj.: Mournful.

"Docked in a pocke of gray;
Hey, ho! gray is greete."
Spenser: Shepheards Calender; August.

greēt'-ēr (1), s. [Eng. greet (1), v.; -er.] One who greets or salutes another.

greēt'-ēr (2), s. [Eng. greet (2), v.; -er.] One who cries or weeps.

greēt'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GREET (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of saluting or welcoming; a salutation; a welcome.

"What horrid greetings these unclean wretches will give each other."—Hopkins: Exposition upon the Seventh Commandment.

 greēve, s. [GRIEVE, s.]

 greēze, s. pl. [GREE (2), s.]

 grēf'-fī-ēr, s. [Fr., from Low Lat. grefarius, graffarius, greffarius, from Lat. graphium = a style for writing; Gr. γράφω (graphō) = to write.] [GRAFFER, GRAFT.] A registrar; a clerk; a notary.

"The Duke of Orleans, Monsieur the Prince, and the Superintendents deliver them to the Greffier or clerk."—Evelyn: State of France.

 grē'-gal, a. [Lat. gregalis, from grex (genit. gregis) = a flock; Ital. gregale.] Of or pertaining to a flock; like a flock or herd.

"For this gregal conformity there is a cause and an excuse."—W. S. Mayo: Never Again, ch. vii.

 grĕ-gär'-ĭ-an, a. [Lat. gregarius = belonging to a flock; grex (genit. gregis) = a flock.] Of or pertaining to a flock or herd; gregarious; herding together; common.

"The gregarian soldiers and gross of the army is well affected to him."—Howell, bk. iii., let. 1.

 grĕ-gär'-ĭ-an-ĭsm, s. [Eng. gregarian; -ism.] The habit of flocking or herding together; gregariousness.

"This tendency to gregarianism is nowhere more manifest."—Truth, Oct. 13, 1881.

grĕg-ar-ī'-na, s. [Lat. gregarius = of or belonging to a flock, from grex = a flock; so named because numbers of individuals are found together.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the class Gregarinida (q.v.).

grĕg'-ar-īne, s. [GREGARINA.]

Zool.: A gregarina, or at least one of the Gregarinida. Minute organisms of this character were found in the chignons of imported hair once fashionable among ladies.

grĕg-ar-ī'-nĭ-da, grĕg-ar-ī'-na, s. [Mod. Lat. gregarina, and Lat. neut. pl. adj. suff. -ida.]

Zool.: The lowest of the eight classes into which Professor Huxley divides Cuvier's sub-kingdom Radiata. He places them in the sub-kingdom Protozoa. The species are all microscopic, and consist of a not very well defined membrane, more or less without structure, except that it contains a soft semi-fluid substance, having in the middle, or at one end of it, a delicate vesicle, inside of which is a more solid particle. Such a structure recalls that of an ovum, the outer membrane of the Gregarinida recalling the vitelline membrane of an ovum, the semi-fluid contents its yolk, the vesicle its germinal vesicle, and the more solid particle its germinal spot. There is no division of the body into parts. No mouth or digestive apparatus has been traced; there is, however, an expansion and contraction of the animal. The Gregarinida are found parasitic within the bodies of animals, specially the larvæ of insects, in annelids, crustaceans, mollusca, &c., and even in vertebrated animals. They are specially abundant in the alimentary canal of the common cockroach, in earthworms, &c. Various genera are known, and the species are numerous.

grĕ-gär'-ĭ-ŭs, a. [Lat. gregarius, from grex (genit. gregis) = a flock.] Flocking or herding together; living or going in flocks or herds; not living solitarily.

"Of wild fowl, those which are the most useful fly not singly as other birds, but are commonly gregarious."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. iii., ch. ii.

grĕ-gär'-ĭ-ŭs-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gregarious; -ly.] In a gregarious manner; in flocks or companies.

grĕ-gär'-ĭ-ŭs nĕss, s. [Eng. gregarious; -ness.] The quality or state of being gregarious; the habit of living or going in flocks or herds; a disposition to associate.

 grĕg'-ar-ȳ, a. [Lat. gregarius.] Ordinary, common, gregarious.

grĕg'-ōe, grē'-gō, grĭē'-gō, s. [Port. grego; Ital. greco; Sp. griego = Greek.] A short jacket or cloak, with a hood attached, made of thick coarse cloth, and worn by the Greeks and others in the Levant.

"The three latter, with their gregos, or night great-coats, with hoods."—Marryatt: Mr. Midshipman Easy, ch. xix.

Grĕ-gōr'-ĭ-an, a. [Low Lat. Gregorianus, from Gregorius; Gr. Γρηγόρος (Gregoros) = Gregory, from Gr. γρηγορέω (grēgoreō) = to be awake, from ἐγρήγορα (egrēgora), perf. of ἐγείρω (egeirō) = to awake; Ital. & Sp. Gregoriano; Fr. Grégorien.] Pertaining to, established or produced by any one bearing the name of Gregory.

Gregorian-calendar, s. [CALENDAR, II. 3.]

Gregorian chant, s.

Music: [PLAIN-SONG].

Gregorian telescope, s. The first and most ordinary form of reflecting telescope, invented by James Gregory, Professor of Mathematics at St. Andrews, and afterwards in Edinburgh, and described by him 1663. The image is viewed through an eye-piece in the aperture of the object-speculum. [TELESCOPE.]

Grĕg'-ōr-ȳ, s. [Named after Dr. Gregory, who first compounded it.]

Gregory's-powder, s. A name given to Pulvis Rhei Compositus, compound rhubarb powder. It consists of powdered rhubarb, two ounces; light carbonate of magnesia, six ounces; and powdered ginger, one ounce.

greĭş'-ęn, s. [Ger. = to grasp, to lay hold of, to seize.]

Petrol. & Geol.: A granular, crystalline rock, consisting of quartz and mica, the former predominating, the latter usually of the variety containing lithia. If orthoclase be superadded, the rock becomes granite. (Rutley: Study of Rocks.)

grēlt, v.i. [GREET (2), v.]

 grēith, v.t. [GRAITH, v.]

grēith, s. [GRAITH, s.]

 grē'-męnt, s. [GREEMENT.]

grē'-mĭ-al, a. & s. [Eccles. Lat. gremiale, from Lat. gremium = the bosom.]

* A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to the lap or bosom.

B. As substantive:

* 1. Ord. Lang.: A bosom friend.

"Amongst those fourteen, two were gremials."—Fuller. (Webster.)

2. Eccles.: An episcopal ornament for the breast, lap, and shoulders, originally a towel of fine linen, used in ordination to protect the sacred vestments from any drops of unction that might fall in the act of anointing the candidates for the priesthood. In later times it was made of silk or damask to match the episcopal vestments.

* 3. Univ.: One who resides in the bosom of the University.

"Which the governors and the rest of the gremials very well knew."—Strype: Cranmer, bk. ii. c. 6.

 gro-mi-en, v.t. & i. [A.S. gremian; Icel. grema.] [GRAME.]

A. Trans.: To annoy, to grieve.

"State nu . . . to gremien mi mare."—St. Marherete, p. 12.

B. Intrans.: To grieve.

"The grettest of Grise gremyt therat."
Destruction of Troy, 1,004.

 gremthe, s. [Icel. grimmdh.] [GREMIEN.] Annoyance, anger, grief.

"The gremthe of the grim folke glod to his hert."
Alisaunder, 279.

grĕ-nā'-de, * grą-nā'-dō, s. [Fr. grenade, from Sp. granada = a pomegranate, a grenade; granado = full of seeds, from Lat. granatus, from granum = a seed, a grain; Ital. granata.] A hollow ball or shell of metal or of annealed glass, filled with powder and fired by a fuse.

After the fuse is lighted the ball is thrown among the enemy, when it bursts and causes great injury or loss.

¶ (1) Hand-grenade: A small grenade, usually about 2½ inches in diameter, intended to be thrown by hand into trenches or saps, or upon besiegers scaling a breach.

* (2) Rampart-grenade: A grenade of various sizes used for rolling over the parapet in a trough.

grĕn-a-dĭer', s. [Fr., from grenade = a grenade (q.v.).]

Milit.: Originally a foot-soldier armed with grenades. The grenadiers were men of long service and approved courage, and only a few were attached to each regiment. Afterwards every regiment had one company of grenadiers, and they retained their name even after the disuse of grenades, and were distinguished by a particular dress, as in England by the tall bearskin cap. The title now only remains in one regiment of the British army—viz., the Grenadier Guards.

"Five hundred grenadiers rushed from the English trenches to the counterscarp, fired their pieces, and threw their grenades."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xvi.

grĕn-a-dĭl-lō, grą-nĭl'-lō, s. [Sp. (?).]

Bot.: A cabinet wood from the West Indies. It resembles the common cocoa, having, however, at first a lighter colour than it, though becoming darker on exposure. Called also Grenada cocos or cocus, and Red Ebony.

grĕn'-a-dīne, s. [Fr.]

Fabric: A thin, gauzy silk or woollen fabric, used for ladies' dresses, shawls, &c.

* grĕ-nā'-dō, s. [Grenade.]

* grĕn'-at, s. [Fr.] A garnet (q.v.).

"Of grenaz, and of alabraundynes."
Maundeville, p. 219.

grĕ-năt'-ĭ-form, a. [Eng. granatite, and form.] Being in the form of grenatite (q.v.).

grĕn'-a-tīte, grăn'-a-tīte, s. [Lat. granatum = a pomegranate: granum = a grain, and -ite (Min.) (q.v.); Fr. grenat. Named from its colour.]

Min.: The same as Staurolite (q.v.).

* grene-hede, s. [Greenhood.]

grĕnǵ'-ĕ-sīte, grănǵ'-ĕ-sīte, s. [From Grangesberg, in Dalecarlia, Sweden; suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A dark green variety of Pyrochlorite.

Grĕsh'-ăm, s. [See definition.]

Biog.: Sir Thomas Gresham, founder of the London Royal Exchange, England, 1519–1579.

Gresham's law, s.

Pol. Econ. and Fin.: "Bad money drives out good"—i. e., if two forms of currency be in circulation, the inferior or cheaper will drive out the other through the process of hoarding and exportation. This is merely an application of the general laws of commodity to money considered as a commodity; to wit, a dear commodity may always be displaced by a cheaper article that answers the same purpose equally well. Gresham's law assumes that the dearest money is necessarily the best, which assumption is opposed by many recent economists. [See Bimetallism, Money, ¶.]

* gres-hop, * gres-hoppe, * gres-sop, s. [Grasshopper.]

* gres-som, s. [Garsum.]

† grĕs-sōr'-ĭ-al, a. [Mod. Lat. gressorius, from Lat. gressus = a stepping.]

Ornith.: Adapted for stepping or for walking. Used of birds which have three toes forward, two of them connected, and one behind.

greut, s. [Grit.]

grĕ-vĭl-lē-a, s. [Named after C. F. Greville, a patron of botany.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the proteaceous family Grevilliæ (q.v.) It consists of handsome Australian plants, more than fifty of which have been introduced into British greenhouses.

grĕ-vĭl'-lĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grevillea); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Proteaceæ, sub-order Follicularea.

grew' (ew as ô), pret. of v. [Grow.]

grew (ew as ô), grûe, v.i. [Dut. gruwen; Ger. grauen; Dan. grue = to shudder; from grue = horror.] [Gruesome.] To shudder, to feel horror, to shiver.

"I downa look at them—I never see them but they gar me grew."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxvii.

grew (ew as ô), s. [Icel. grey = a dog.] A greyhound (q.v.).

"I have six terriers at hame, forby two couple of slow-hunds, five grews, and a wheen other dogs."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. xxii.

* grew, * greu, * gru, a. & s. [O. Fr. greu.] Greek.

"This written in grew."—Maundeville, p. 76.

grew'-ĭ-a (ew as ô), s. [Named after Nehemiah Grew, M.D., F.R.S., a celebrated English physiologist, who died in 1711.]

Bot.: The typical genus of Grewidæ, sepals 5, petals 5; stamens numerous; style, 1; stigma 4-lobed, drupe with one to four small nuts, one or two-seeded. About eighty species are known. They occur in the warmer regions of the Old World. Grewia sapida and G. asiatica have pleasant acid berries, used for making sherbet. The wood of G. elastica, called in India dhamnoo, is strong and elastic; it is used for bows, the shafts of carriages, &c.

grew'-ĭ-dæ (ew as ô), s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grew(ia); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.] grew'-sŏme (ew ô), a. [Grew, v.] Horrible, gruesome.

Bot.: A family of plants, order Tiliaceæ, tribe Tileæ.

"And sic gruesome wishes, that men should be slaughtered like sheep."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxx.

* grewt, * greut, s. [Grit.]

* grewte, v.i. [Greet.]

grey, a. & s. [Gray.]

¶ Compounds not inserted here will be found under Gray.

grey-falcon, s.

Ornith.: A name for the Peregrine Falcon (Falco peregrinus). [Falcon, Peregrine.]

grey-wether, s.

Petrol.: A boulder or slate of siliceous sandstone. Some of the so-called Druidic standing stones are grey-wethers.

"From their long exposure to the atmosphere they are encrusted with various lichens, which at times gives them a darkish hue, from the decay of the vegetable matter; whence, and from the circumstance of their resembling at a distance a flock of sheep, they have received the name of Grey-wethers."—J. Britton: Beauties of England & Wales, xv. 716.

grey'-hound, * grai-hond, * grai-hound, * gray-hund, * grea-hund, * gre-hound, * gre-hownde, * grei-hound, * grey-hownd, * grew-hounde, s. [Icel. grey-hundr, from grey = a dog, and hundr = a hound.]

Zool., &c.: A variety of the Canis familiaris, or Common Dog, characterized by its slender and symmetric form, its strength, its keen sight, and its swiftness. A dog, apparently of this type, is figured on the Egyptian monuments. It is used in the chase, and domestication has led to its separation into various breeds, as the Irish, the Highland, and the Arabian Greyhounds. An old rhyme describes the characters deemed the best:

"Headed like a snake, neckyed like a drake,
Fotted like a catte, tayled like a ratte,
Syded like a breme, and chyned like a beme."

Youatt suggests that the greyhound may be identical with the gazehound of old English writers. Against this view must be set the fact that Tickell distinguishes them.

"See st thou the gazehound? how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destined deer?
How every nerve the greyhound's stretch displays,
The hare preventing in her airy maze."
Fragment of a Poem on Hunting.

grey'-bēard, s. & a. [Graybeard.]

grey'-ĭsh, a. [Grayish.]

Greys, s. pl. [Grey, a.]

Mil.: A regiment of cavalry in the British army, originally Scottish, and so called from the horses being all of a gray colour. They are also called the Scots Greys.

grey'-stōne, grāy'-stōne, s. [Eng. gray or grey, and stone; Ger. graustein, with the same signification.]

Petrol.: A volcanic lead-gray or greenish rock, composed of felspar and augite, the felspar being more than seventy-five per cent. (Scrope.) Greystone lavas are intermediate in composition between basaltic and trachytic lavas. (Lyell.)

* grey-wăc'-kĕ, grāy-wăc'-kĕ, grâu-wăc'-kĕ, s. [Ger. grauwacke.]

1. Petrol.: The popular name used by German miners to designate a particular kind of sandstone, usually an aggregate of small fragments of quartz, flinty slate, or Lydian stone and clay-slate cemented by argillaceous matter. (Lyell.)

2. Geol.: The older palæozoic strata. As, however, rocks of the petrological aspect called Grauwacke occur in the Old Red Sandstone, in the millstone grit of Carboniferous age, in the Cretaceous Rocks, and in the Eocene, the term is not a good one to distinguish any single geological period; it has, therefore, been exchanged for Silurian (q.v.).

grey'-wĕath-ĕr, s. [Grey-wether.]

grī'-as, s. [From Gr. γράω (graō) = to gnaw, to eat.]

Bot.: A genus of Barringtoniaceæ. Grias cauliflora is the Anchovy Pear (q.v.).

grĭb'-ble, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Zool.: Limnoria terebrans, an isopod crustacean, section Cymothoada. It is above two lines in length; it rolls itself up like a woodlouse; it inhabits the seas of Europe; it attacks the timber of ships, to which it is most destructive.

* grīçe (1), s. [Gree (2), s.] grīçe (2), * gris, * grise, * gryce, * grys, * gryse, s. [Icel. griss; Sw. gris; Dan. gruss.]

1. A young or sucking-pig.

"I'se e'en lay the head o' the sow to the tail of the grice."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxiv.

2. A young badger.

"I am a lord of other geere! this fine
Smooth bowsou's cub, the young grice of a gray;
Twa tyme urchins, and this ferret gay."
Ben Jonson: The Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

grĭd'-dle, gĭrd'-dle, * gred-el, * gred-il, * grid-ele, s. [Wel. gredyll, greidell, gradell = a griddle, from greidio = to scorch; Ir. greideal, greideil, from greadaim = to parch, to burn (Skeat). Or from Low Lat. graticula, craticula, dimin. of Lat. crates = a hurdle.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A broad circular plate of iron used for baking cakes.

"Rost hit afterwarde apone a gredel."—Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 13.

2. Mining: A sieve with a wire bottom.

griddle-bread, griddle-cake, s. A cake baked on a griddle.

* grīde, v.t. & i. [A metathesis of gird (q.v.). (Skeat.)]

A. Transitive:

1. To pierce, to cut through.

"With brandisht tongue the emptie aire did gride.
Spenser: Virgil's Gnat, 254.

2. To jar, to grate.

"The wood which grides and clangs Its leafless ribs."
Tennyson: In Memoriam, cvi 11.

B. Intransitive:

1. To cut, to pierce.

"The griding sword, with discontinuous wound, Passed through him."
Milton, P. L., vi. 329.

2. To wound or cut mentally.

"Griding anguish pierced his fluttering breast."
Sir W. Jones: Pindar; First Nemean Ode.

* grīde, s. [Gride, v.] A harsh or grating sound, as of scraping or cutting. (Whittier.)

grĭd'-ĕ-lĭn, grĕd'-a-līne, s. [Fr. gris de lin = the gray of flax.] A colour mixed, or white and red, or a gray violet. (Dryden: Flower & Leaf, 343.)

* grĭd'-ĭl, s. [Griddle.]

grĭd'-iron (iron as ī-ĕrn), * gyrd-iron, * gred-irne, * gred-eyrne, * gred-ire, * gred-yre, * grid-ire, * gryd-yrne, s. [A corrupt. of Mid. Eng. gredire = a griddle (q.v.).] [Gredire.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A grated iron utensil on which fish, flesh, and fowl are exposed for broiling.

2. Hydraul. Engin.: A grated frame on which snips are hauled out of the water for examination, cleaning, and repairs. Or a framing of cross-timbers which receives a ship with the falling tide.

gridiron-pendulum, s.

Horol.: A compensatioo pendulum in which the bob is supported by parallel bars of two metals which are unequally expanded by heat. These are so disposed that, while one tends to lengthen it, the other tends to shorten it. The ratio of lengths is determined by the relative expansibility. [PENDULUM.]

gridiron-valve, s.

Steam-engin.: A valve whose opening is divided into a number of narrow parts by which the travel may be abridged, and the more rapid opening or closing of the valve effected.

griēçe, s. [GREE (2), s.]

Her.: A step or degree, as one of the ateps upon which crosses are sometimes placed.

griēf, * greef, * greif, * grefe, * greefe, * grcfic, * greve, * grecve, s. [O. Fr. grcf, grief; Fr. grief, from Lat. gravis = heavy.]

1. Pain of mind, sorrow, or trouble for something past, as the loss of a friend or relation, misconduct, or ungratefulness on the part of others, &c.; sadness.

"Grief is sometimes considered as synonymous with sorrow; and in this case we speak of the transports of grief. At other times it expresses more silent, deep, and painful affections, such as are inspired by domestic calamities."—Cogan: On the Passions, vol. i., pt. i., ch. ii.

2. That which causes sorrow, sadness, or pain of mind; a trial, a grievance, a misfortune.

"I here forget all former griefs."
Shakesp.: Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 4.

*3. Bodily pain or suffering; disease.

"My limbs weakened with grief."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., i. 1.

*4. A fault, an offence.

"To implore forgifnes of all greif."
Douglas: Virgil, 453, 43.

¶ To come to grief: To come to rnin; to fail utterly; to come to a bad end.

grief-worn, a. Worn out by grief.

"A gray and grief-worn aspect of old days."
Byron: Childe Harold, iii. 65.

* griēf'-fūl, a. [Eng. grief; -ful(l).] Full of grief or sorrow; very sad.

"Which when she sees with ghastly grieful eyes Her heart does quake."
Spenser: F. Q., VI. viii. 40.

* griēf'-hood, * gref-hed, s. [Eng. grief; -hood.] That which causes grief.

"Yowth withoute grefhed or folye."
Chaucer: C. T., 4,582.

* griēf'-lĕss, a. [Eng. grief; -less.] Free from or without grief.

* griēf'-lў, * grecf-li, * greef-ly, a. & adv. [Eng. grief; -ly.]

A. As adj.: Grievous, sad.

"With dayly diligence and griefly groans."
Sidney: Arcadia, p. 154.

B. As adv.: Grievously.

"Whan I was greefly bigo with a grim peeple."
Alisaunder: Frag., 994.

* griēf'-shŏt, a. [Eng. grief, and shot.] Pierced or stricken with grief; sorrow-stricken.

"Griefshot with his unkindness."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, v. 1.

griē-gō, s. [GREOOOE.]

* griēs, s. [Ger.] Gravel.

* griē'-shŏch, greē'-shŏch (ch guttural), s. [Gael. grioaach.]

1. Lit.: Hot embers; properly those of peat or moss-peat.

"By the same token there 'was a pit greeshoch burning yet."—Scott: Heart of Mid-Lothian, ch. ii.

2. Fig.: A glowing affection.

* griēş'-ĭng, s. [GREE (2), s.] A stair, a staircase.

* gries-ly, a. [GRISLY.]

* griēv'-a-ble, * grev-a-ble, a. [Eng. grievc(e); -able.] Causing grief; lamentable.

"There is a vice ful greuable
To hym, whiche is therof culpable."
Gower: C. A., bk. v.

griēv'-ance, * grev-ance, * grev-aunce, s. [O. Fr. grevance, from gref, grief; Ital. gravenza.]

* 1. Hurt, harm, annoyance.

* 2. A state of grief, sorrow, or pain of mind; affliction, uneasiness.

"If y do ao y potte meselue . . . to gret greuaunce."
Sir Ferumbras, 4,161.

3. Anything which causes grief, sorrow, or pain of mind; especially anything which gives grounds for complaint, remonstrance, or resistance; a hardship, an injury, an injustice.

"It bears no sounding name, nor ever bore;
A standing grievance."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. ix.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between grievance and hardship: "The grievance implies that which lies heavy at heart. Hardship implies that which presses or bears violently on the person. The grievance is in general taken for that which is done by another to grieve or distress: the hardship is a particular kind of grievance that presses upon individuals. There are national grievances, though not national hardships. An infraction of one's rights, an act of violence or oppression, are grievances to those who are exposed to them, whether as individuals or bodies of men: an unequal distribution of labour, a partial indulgence of one to the detriment of another, constitutes the hardship." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) grievance-monger, s. One who is always raking up or talking about his own or his party's grievances or supposed grievances, public or private.

* griēv'-ançe-ēr, s. [Eng. grievanc(e); -er.] One who causes or commits a grievance; one who gives grounds for complaint.

"Some petition against the bishops as grievancers."
—Fuller. (Webster)

griēve, * greve, * greven, * grev-y, * grev-yn, v.t & i. [O. Fr. grever; Prov. grevar, greviar, from Lat. gravo = to burden; gravis = heavy; Ital. gravare; Sp. & Port. gravar.]

A. Transitive:

* 1. To annoy, to harass.

"Hil nadde non recet vorto grevy ys loud."
Robert of Gloucester, p. 275.

2. To cause grief, sorrow, or pain of mind to; to make sorrowful; to wound the feelings of; to affect.

"The prycke of conscyence grevyth me sore."
Penitential Psalms, p. 8.

3. To offend against.

"Grieve not the holy epirit of God."—Ephes iv. 30.

*4. To lament, to mourn, to deplore, to sorrow over.

"The nothing that I grieve."
Shakesp.: Richard II., ii. 2.

B. Intrans.: To feel grief, sorrow, or pain; to mourn, to lament, to sorrow. (Generally followed by at, for, or over.)

"Grieve, and they grieve." Dryden: Juvenal, sat. iii.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between to grieve, to mourn, and to lament: "To grieve is the general term; mourn the particular term. To grieve, in its limited sense, is an inward act; to mourn is an outward act: the grief lies altogether in the mind. A man grieves for his sins; he mourns for the loss of his friends. Grieve is the act of an individual; mourn may be the common act of many: a nation mourns, though not grieves, for a public calamity. Grieve and mourn are permanent sentiments; lament is a transitory feeling; the former are produced by substantial causes, which come home to the feelings. Mourn and lament are both expressed by some outward sign; but the former is composed and free from all noise; the latter displays itself either in cries or simple words." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

* griēve, * greēve s. [A.S. gerefa; Icel. greifi; Sw. grefve; Dan. greve.] An overseer, a steward, a reeve, a bailiff.

"And sicklike dung as the grieve has gi'en me."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xiv.

* griēve'-mĕnt, s. [Eng. grieve; -ment.] An injury; a cause or source of grief.

"Wounds, bruises, bangs, and other grievements."—Ward: England's Reformation, i. 90.

griēv'-ĕr, s. [Eng. griev(e); -er.] One who or that which grieves, or causes grief or pain.

"Griever and queneher of the spirit."—Hammond: Works, iv. 514.

griēv'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRIEVE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of causing grief or pain to; the state of being grieved.

* griēv'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. grieving; -ly.] In a grieving or aorrowful manner; aorrowfully, aadly; with grief or regret.

"Grievingly, I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost." Shakesp.: Henry VIII., i. 1.

griēv'-oŭs, * grev-ous, a. [O. Fr. grevos, grevus, grevous, from gref, grief = grief; Sp. & Ital. gravoso.]

1. Causing grief, sorrow, or pain of mind; lamentable, afflictive, painful; hard to be borne.

"Grievous and corroding to the mind of man."—South: Sermons, vol. ix., ser. 1.

2. Causing physical or bodily pain; painful.

"He hadde a grevous wounde." Ferumbras, 499.

3. Expressive of grief, sorrow, or anguish; piteous, pitiable. full of grief; as, a grievous cry.

4. Atrocious; exceeding bad; heinous, flagitious.

"Grevous outrage, which he red
A knight had wrought against a lady gent."
Spenser: F. Q., II. i. 30.

griēv'-oŭs-lў, * grcv-os-ly, * grev-ous-ly, * grev-us-ly, adv. [Eng. grievous; -ly.]

* 1. With grief, pain, or sorrow; painfully; aorrowfully.

"The common sort are wont to take the deathe of yong folks much grievouslyer then of old."—Udal: Mark v.

2. So as to cause grief, sorrow, or annoyance; vexatiously.

"Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt."—Ray: On the Creation.

3. With bodily or physical pain or auffering; painfully.

"My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil."—Matthew xv. 22.

* 4. Heavily; hardly.

"It was a grievous fault;
And grievously hath Cæsar answered it."
Shakesp.: Julius Cæsar, iii. 2.

5. To a great degree; very much; exceedingly.

"Grievously disturbed with odd, unreasonable, nay, and sometimes impious, blasphemous phantasies."—Sharpe: Sermons, vol. iii., ser. 5.

6. Atrociously; heinously.

"Jerusalem hath grievously sinned."—Lam. i. 8.

* 7. Criminally; with or of a serious crime; bitterly.

"He was accused greuously to the emperour."—Gesta Romanorum, p. 65.

griēv'-oŭs-nĕss, * grev-ous-nesse, s. [Eng. grievous; -ness.] The quality or state of being grievous.

"The grievousness of the offence is to be opened."—Strype: Life of Grindal, bk. ii., ch. xi.

griff (1), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Weav.: A series of horizontal parallel-edged bars, also known as knives or blades, arranged in a reciprocating frame to raise and lower the vertical hooked rods connected to the shedding mechanism, when the hooked ends of the rods are brought by a pattern device within the patb of the knives.

* griff (2), s. [A variant of GRIP.] Reach, grasp, grip.

"A vein of gold within our spade's griff."—Holland. (Webster.) grĭf'-fĭn (1), s. [GRIFFON.]

grĭf'-fĭn (2), s. [Etym. doubtful, but perhaps the same word as Griffin (1), (q.v.), the newcomer being looked upon as a strange animal neither English nor Indian, as a griffon is neither lion nor eagle.] An Anglo-Indian sportive term for a new-comer who has arrived from Europe. He makes ludicrous mistakes, not however like the scholastikos of the Greeks from deficiency of intellect, but from want of Indian experience. Taking advantage of this, if he be a young cadet, his companions in arms sometimes wilfully cause him to fall into blunders, which left to himself he might avoid. [GRIFFINAGE.]

"All the griffins ought to hunt together."—H. Kingsley: Geoffry Hamlyn, ch. xxviii.

grĭf'-fĭn-age (age as ĭğ), s. [Eng. griffin; -age.] The state of a griffin—i.e., of a newcomer from Europe. It is generally held to continne a year. [ANGLO-INDIAN.]

* grĭf'-fĭn-ĭsh, a. [Eng. griffin; -ish.] Like a griffin; fierce.

"That griffinish excess of zeal."
Hood: Ode to Rae Wilson.

grĭf'-fĭn-ĭşm, s. [Eng. griffin; -ism.] The same as GRIFFINAGE (q.v.). (Anglo-Indian.)

Grĭf'-fĭth, s. [From Griffith, who first compounded it.] (See the compound.)

Griffith's-mixture, s.

Phar.: Mistura Ferri Composita, compound mixture of iron. It consists of carbonate of iron, and is prepared by rubbing sixty grains of powdered myrrh with four fluid drachms of spirit of nutmeg and thirty grains of potassium carbonate, then adding while rubbing nine and a half fluid ounces of rose-water, then sixty grains of sugar, and lastly twenty-five grains of ferrous sulphate. It must be kept in a stoppered bottle. It possesses the blood-restoring properties of iron and is not astringent.

grĭf'-fŏn, grĭf'-fĭn, * grĭf-foun, * grĭf-fyn, * gryf-fon, * gryf-fown, s. [Fr. griffon, from Low Lat. griffus, from Lat. gryphus, an extension of gryps; Gr. γρύψ (grups) = a griffin, from Gr. γρυπός (grupos) = hooked, curved: from the beak being hooked; Ital. grifone; Sp. grifo; Port. gripho.]

1. Myth.: A fabulous animal, usually represented with the body and legs of a lion, and the head and wings of an eagle, signifying the union of strength and agility. Figures of griffons are frequently used as ornaments in works of art. It is employed as an emblem of vigilance, the animals being supposed to be the guardians of mines and hidden treasures. Figures of it are met with in tombs and sepulchral lamps, as guarding the remains of the deceased.

GRIFFON.

"They quelled gigantic foe, Braved the fierce griffon in his lair."
Scott: Bridal of Triermain, iii. 19.

2. Ornith.: The Bearded Vulture, Gypaëtus barbatus, a predatory bird, gray or blackish-brown above, the tips of the shafts white, the lower parts orange yellow, the head and neck whitish. Length four and a half feet, the expansion of the wings between nine and ten feet. It is found in the Alps, where it feeds chiefly on young chamois, and in some parts of Southern and Central Europe, as well as in Asia and Africa. It feeds on birds, small mammals, lambs, &c., and children also have been carried off by it. When pressed by hunger it will devour putrescent meat. It is said to pursue animals till it makes them fall over precipices. Called also the Lammergeyer (q.v.).

griffon-like, a. Resembling a griffon in shape or qualities; rapacious.

"A corporality of griffon-like promoters and apparitors."—Milton: Of Reformation in England, bk. i.

griffon-male, s.

Her.: A griffon represented without wings, and having large ears.

 grĭf-fŏn (2),  grĭf-foun (2),  gryf-fon, s. [O. Fr. grifon, griffon.] A Greek.

"Chase these gryffons if thou might."
Richard Cœur de Lion, 1,767.

grĭg, * grĭgge, s. [Representing an older * crick, of which cricket is the derivative. Cf. Dut. krick = krekel = a cricket.] [Cricket.]

I. A cricket; a grasshopper.

"High-elbowed grigs that leap in summer grass."
Tennyson: Brook, 54.

2. A small lively eel; a sand-eel.

"Known in the Thames by the name of grigs."—Pennant: British Zoology; The Eel.

¶ The proverbial saying, as merry as a grig, may either refer to the liveliness of the grasshopper or sand-eel, or may be a corruption of as merry as a Greek, the Greeks being proverbially spoken of by the Romans as fond of good living and free potations. Cf. "She's a merry Greek, indeed" (Shakesp.: Troilus, i. 2).

grĭgg, s. [Cf. A.S. grég, græg = gray.]

Bot.: Calluna vulgaris.

 grĭll, * grille, * grylle, a., adv., & s. [M. H. Ger. grel.]

A. As adj.: Horrible, hideous, fierce, cruel.

"To riche men was he grille." R. de Brunne, p. 92.

B. As adv.: Horribly, dreadfully.

"Thai grete and groned grille." St. Alexius, p. 46.

C. As subst.: Cruelty, hardship.

"Therefore y rede that we lym sloo,
He hath done us grete grylle."
Erle of Tolous, 278.

 grĭll (1),  grille, * grulle, * grylle, v.t. & i. [A.S. grillan, grellan = to provoke; M. H. Ger. grillen; Dut. grillen = to shiver.]

A. Transitive:

1. To provoke, to vex, to offend against.

"Never more the greeve no grill." Chester Plays.

2. To terrify; to cause fright or horror; to cause to shake or shiver.

"The grones of Sclir Gawayan dos my hert grille."
Sir Gawan & Sir Galahad, ii. 23.

B. Intrans.: To cause horror or fright.

"Game ne gle lyked hym noght, So gretly can he grylle." Erle of Tolous, 164.

grĭll (2), v.t. & i. [Fr. griller, from gril = a gridiron; O. Fr. grail, greil, from Lat. craticula, dimin. of crates = a hurdle.] [Grille.]

A. Transitive:

1. Lit.: To broil or roast on a gridiron or similar apparatus.

"Boilyng of men in caldrons, grilling them on gridirons."—Marvell: Works, 448.

2. Fig.: To torment, as if by fire.

B. Intrans.: To cook by broiling on a gridiron.

grĭll, s. [Grill (2), v.]

1. Meat, fish, &c., broiled on a gridiron.

2. A gridiron.

"Make grills of it [wood] to broil their meat."—Cotton: Montaigne, ch. xxiv.

grill-room, s. A room where meat, &c., is cooked on a grill.

grĭl-lā'de, s. [Fr., from griller = to grill.]

1. The act of grilling.

2. Meat, fish, &c., broiled on a grill or gridiron.

grĭll'-age (age as ĭj), s. [Fr., from grille = a grate, a grating.]

Hydr. Eng.: A structure of sleepers and cross-beams forming a foundation in marshy soil for a pier or wharf.

grille, s. [Fr.] [Grill (2), v.] An open grate or grating; lattice-work of metal; used—

(1) As a screen to shut in and protect any particular spot or thing, as a tomb, a relic, a shrine, &c.

(2) The gate or entrance to a religious house or sacred building.

(3) A small screen or open grating inserted in the outer door of a monastic or conventual building, to enable the inmates to converse with visitors or to answer enquiries without the necessity of opening the door.

GRILLE.

 grĭl'-lỹ, v.t. [Grill (1), v.] To harass; to annoy; to hurt; hence, fig., to hold up to ridicule, to mock.

grĭlse, s. [Sw. grå = grey, and lax = salmon (?) (Jamieson.)] In the north of Ireland the form is grawl.]

Ichthy.: A young salmon, when it makes its first return to the fresh water, which is usually in the second year of its life. (Prof. John Wilson.)

"Sea-fish frae Hartlepool and Sunderland by land carriage, forbye trouts, grilses, salmon."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. vi.

grĭm, * grimme, * grym, * grymme, a. [A.S. grim = fierce, cruel, from gram = angry, furious; cogn. with Dut. grimmig = angry, grimmen = to foam with rage; Icel. grimmr grim, stern, gramr = wrathful; Dan. grim = ugly, grim, gram = wrathful; Sw. grym = cruel, grim; Goth. gram = angry; Ger. grimmig = furious, grimmen = to rage, grimm = fury, gram = hostile.]

1. Fierce, stern, ferocious, forbidding.

"With a grim and surly voice he bid them awake."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. i.

2. Fierce, furious, mercilessly cruel.

"Now is the Kyng wroth and grym."
Alisaunder, 754.

3. Of a forbidding aspect; ghastly, horrid, horrible, hideous.

"Making death more grim." Addison: Cato, ii. 1.

4. Cruel, furious, merciless.

"Well sterne strokes and well grym, Ther wer in eche a side."
Launfal: Ritson, vol. i.

¶ Obvious compounds: Grim-faced, grim-grinning, grim-looked, grim-visaged, &c.

 grĭm, * grym, s. [M. H. Ger. grim; O. H. Ger. grimme; Dut. grim; Ger. grimm.] Fury, rage.

"To him he stirt with briful grim." Gawaine & Gawaline, 1,661.

 grĭm, v.t. [Grim, a.] To make grim or fierce.

"Grimmed by the shadow of the Red Hag."—Carlyle: French Revolution, pt. ii. bk. v., ch. viii.

grĭ-mā'çe, s. [Fr., from Icel. grima = a mask, a hood; A.S. grima = a mask.] A distortion of the face, expressive of some feeling, as pain, disgust, contempt, satisfaction, &c.; a smirk.

"With hollow form, and gesture, and grimace." Cowper: Expostulation, 122.

 grĭ-mā'çe, v.i. [Grimace, s.] To make grimaces; to distort the countenance; to smirk.

 grĭ-mā'çed', a. [Eng. grimac(e); -ed.] Distorted; having a crabbed look.

grĭ-mal'-kĭn, s. [For gray-malkin, from gray, and malkin = moll-kin = little Mary; cf. tom-cat.] An old cat; generally a female cat.

"Grimalkin, to domestic vermin sworn An everlasting foe." Philips: Splendid Shilling.

grīme, s. [Dan. grim, grum = soot, grime; Icel. grima = a mask, a covering; O. Dut. grijmsel, grimsel = soot, smut; grimmelen = to soil, to begrime.] Dirt or foul matter; dirt deeply insinuated or ingrained; sullying blackness not easily cleansed; smut.

"She sweats; a man may go over shoes in the grime of it."—Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, iii. 2.

grīme, v.t. [Grime, s.] To dirt, to foul, to begrime.

"Masks and disguises grimed with mud."
Scott: Rokeby, vi. 4.

grīm'-ĭ lỹ, adv. [Eng. grimy; -ly.] In a grimy manner or condition; foully.

grīm'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. grimy; -ness.] The quality or state of being grimy; foulness, bitterness.

grĭm'-lỹ, * grym-ly, a. & adv. [Eng. grim; -ly.]

A. As adj.: Grim, hideous, ghastly, stern-looking.

"In came Margaret's grimly ghost."
Beaum. & Flet.: Knight of the Burning Pestle, ii. 1.

B. As adverb:

1. Horridly, hideously, ferociously, cruelly, sternly.

"The uncircumcised smiled grimly with disdain."
Cowley: Davideis, bk. iii.

2. Sternly, sullenly, forbiddingly.

"From its tall rock look grimly down."
Scott: Marmion, ii. 8.

Grĭmm, s. [See compound.]

Grimm's-law, s.

Philol.: A law formulated by Jacob Grimm, the eminent German philologist, relative to the changes undergone by mute consonants in the most important of the Aryan languages. According to this law, if the same roots or the same words exist in Sanscrit, Greek, Latin, Celtic, Slavonic, Lithuanian, Gothic (with which are included English and other Low German dialects), and Old High German, then, whenever the Sanscrit or Greek has an aspirate, the Gothic has the corresponding flat mute. If in Sanscrit, Greek, &c., we find a flat mute, then we find a corresponding sharp mute in Gothic, and a corresponding aspirate in High German. If in Sanscrit, Greek, &c. we find a sharp mute, the Gothic shows the corresponding aspirate, and Old High German the corresponding flat mute. Thus the labials, b, p, f, in Greek, Latin, or Sanscrit, become f, t, p respectively in Gothic, and b (v), f, p in Old High German; the dentals t, d, th in Greek, Latin, or Sanscrit become th, d, t in Gothic, and d, z, t in Old High German; and the gutturals k, g, ch in Greek, Latin, or Sanscrit become h (not quite regularly), k, g in Gothic and g, ch, k in Old High German. Thus: Sanskrit pitri; Greek πατηρ (patēr); Latin, pater = Gothic, fadrein; English, father; Old High German, vatar.

grĭm'-mē-ī, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grimm(ia) (q.v.), and Lat. masc. pl. adj. suff. -ei.]

Bot.: A sub-order of apocarpous Mosses, having an equal often seesile capsule, a mitre-shaped calyptra, and dark-green leaves, terminated by a white hair.

grĭm'-mĭ-a, s. [Named after J. F. Grimm, a German botanist.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the sub-order Grimmei (q.v.). Grimmia pulvinatum is the Swan's Neck Bryum. It occurs in hoary cushion-like tufts.

grĭm'-nĕss, *grim-nesse, *grym-nesse, s. [A.S. grimnĕss.] The quality or state of being grim; fierceness, sternness, ferocity, forbiddingness.

"They were not able to abyde the grimnesse of their countenances."—Goldinge: Cæsar, fo. 29.

 grĭm'-sĭr, * grĭm'-sĭre, s. [Etym. doubtful; probably a compound of grim and sir, or sire; but by some derived from Fr. grincur = an angry gnasher of the teeth (Cotgrave); from grincer = to gnash the teeth.] A haughty or arrogant person in office; a stern, grim, or severe person.

"Tiberius Cæsar, who otherwise was known for a grimsir and the most unsociable."—P. Holland: Pliny, ii. 297.

grĭm'-y (1), a. [Eng. grim(e); -y.] Full of grime, foul, filthy, grimed, begrimed.

"[They] with stern grimy look do still avise Upon their works."
More: On the Soul, pt. i., bk. iii., s. 6.

 grĭm'-ў (2), a. [Eng. grim; -y.] Grim, stern.

grĭn, * gĭrn, * gren, * grenn, * gren-nen, * gren-nyn, v.i. & t. [A.S. grennian; cogn. with Dut. grijnen = to weep, to cry, to fret; Icel. grenja = to howl; Dan. grine = to grin; Sw. grina = to grimace, to grin; Ger. greinen.]

A. Intransitive:

I. Literally:

1. To snarl or show the teeth as a dog; to gnash the teeth.

"And thei herden these thingis and weren dyuersell turmentid in her hertis, and grennyden with teeth on hym."—Wycliffe: Dedis ch. vii.

2. To show the teeth as in laughter, scorn, or pain.

"[He] grinn'd and forc'd an ugly smile that it might not seem to smart."—Bp. Taylor: Sermons, pt. i., ser. 20.

* 3. To be exposed, as the teeth in laughter.

"Her heart for rage did grate, and teeth did grin." Spenser: F. Q., V. iv. 37.

* II. Fig.: To show pleasure or approbation.

"Even the most saintlike of his party grinned at it with a pious smile."—Dryden: Religio Laici. (Pref.)

B. Transitive:

1. To set, show, or gnash the teeth in grinning.

2. To express by grinning.

"Grinned horribly a ghastly smile."
Milton: P. L., ii. 846.

grĭn (1), s. [Grin, v.] The act of closing the teeth and showing them by withdrawing the lips; a smile, a smirk.

"These move the censure and illib'ral grin Of fools."
Cowper: Hope, 747.

 grĭn (2),  grane, * gren, * grene, * gryn, s. [A.S. grin, gryn.] A trap, a snare or gin.

"Like a bird that hasteth to his grin,
Not knowing the peril of his life therein."
Chaucer: Remedie of Love.

grĭn, v.t. [An abbreviation of grind (q.v.).] To grind.

 grĭn'-cŏmęs, s. [Etym. doubtful.] Syphilis.

"I am now secure from the grincomes."
Massinger: Guardian, iv.

grĭnd, v.t. & i. [A.S. grindan.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To break and reduce to powder or fine particles by friction or attrition; to comminute.

"Do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal?"—Bentley: Sermons.

2. To wear down or smooth by friction; to sharpen or give an edge to by rubbing against some hard substance; to whet.

"I have ground the axe myself."
Shakesp.: Pericles, i. 2.

3. To rub one thing against another; to grate, as, To grind one's teeth.

II. Figuratively:

1. To oppress by harsh or cruel exactions; to harass. (Generally with down.)

"To grind the subject or defraud the prince."
Dryden: Hind & Panther, iii. 747.

2. To prepare for examination. (University slang.)

† 3. To teach, to instruct in: as, To grind Latin or Greek. (Univ. Slang.)

† 4. To study; to prepare oneself for examination by studying. (Univ. Slang.)

* 5. To whet, to sharpen.

"Mine appetites I never more will grind." Shakesp.: Sonnet 90.

B. Intransitive:

I. Literally:

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill or other apparatus for grinding.

"Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves."
Milton: Samson Agonistes, 1,162.

2. To be moved, rubbed, or grated together; to grate.

"Smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws."
Rowe. (Johnson.)

3. To be ground or pulverized as in a mill, &c.: as, Corn grinds well when dry.

4. To be reduced to a smooth or sharp condition: as, Steel will grind sharp.

5. To gnash or grate as with the teeth.

"[He] grinte with his teeth, so was he wroth."
Chaucer: C. T., 7,743.

II. Figuratively:

1. To study or work up for an examination. (Univ. Slang.)

2. To drudge; to perform hard or distasteful work.

grĭnd, s. [Grind, v.]

* I. Lit.: The act or operation of grinding or reducing to powder in a mill.

"Hie . . . binimeth totthen here grind."—O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 181.

II. Figuratively:

1. The act of studying or reading up for an examination; study.

"'Come along, boys,' cries East; always ready to leave the grind, as he called it."—T. Hughes: Tom Brown's School Days, pt. ii., ch. v.

2. Hard or distasteful work.

 grĭn-del, * gryn-del, a. [A.S. grendil; Icel. graind = hurt.] Cruel, ferocious.

"Bolde burne, on thir bent be not so gryndel." Sir Gawaine, 2,3.8.

 grĭn-del-li, * gryn-del-ly, adv. [Eng. grindel; -ly.] Fiercely.

"Gawayn full gryndelly sayde." Sir Gawaine, 2,299.

grĭnd'-ĕr, * grynd-er, s. [A.S. grinderc.]

I. Ordinary Language:

I. Literally:

(1) One who or that which grinds; one who works in a mill.

(2) One who or that which grinds or gives an edge to anything; the instrument of grinding.

"Harder than the grinder's nether stone."
Sandys: Paraphrase of the Psalms.

(3) In the same sense as II.

(4) A tooth generally.

"Her grinders like two chalk stones in a mill."
Bishop Hall: Satires, iv. 1.

(5) A grinding-clamp (q.v.).

2. Figuratively:

(1) One who prepares students for an examination; a coach, a tutor, a crammer.

"Put him into the hands of a clever grinder or crammer, and they would soon cram the necessary portion of Latin and Greek into him."—Miss Edgeworth: Patronage, ch. iii.

(2) One who reads or studies hard.

II. Anat.: [Molar].

grĭnd'-ĕr-ў, s. [Eng. grind, v.; -ery.]

1. Shoemakers and other leather-workers' materials.

2. A shop or warehouse where materials for shoemakers and other leather-workers are kept on sale.

grĭnd'-ĭng, * grynd-ynge, * grint-ing, pr. par., a., & s. [Grind, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. Literally:

1. The act or operation of breaking and reducing to fine particles by friction or attrition; a crushing to powder.

2. The act or operation of giving an edge to or sharpening by rubbing against another body.

* 3. The act of rubbing or grating together; a gnashing.

"But in helle her hering (shal be) ful of waimenting and grinting of teeth."—Chaucer: Persones Tale.

* 4. Money paid for the grinding of corn.

"[He] hath ylost the grinding of the wheat."
Chaucer: C. T., 4,006.

II. Figuratively:

1. The act of oppressing or harassing by harsh or severe exactions.

2. The act or occupation of preparing students for an examination. (Univ. Slang.)

3. The act of reading or studying hard. (Univ. Slang.) grinding-clamp, s. A grinding-clamp for cylindrical work has two semi-cylindrical leaden blocks enclosed between the halves of the clamp, which are adjusted by binding-screws. The halves of the clamp are adjusted to the desired distance, slips of wood being placed in the jaws while the melted lead is run in to form the cheeks. For internal work the grinder consists of two semi-cylindrical rods of iron, fitted to each other by dowel-pins and set screws, so as to be expanded to the required distance. The leaden cheeks are cast upon the rods, which are placed in a mould for that purpose.

grinding-frame, s. A cotton-spinning machine.

grinding-mill, s.

1. A mill for grinding corn.

2. A lapidary's wheel of lead, the disc surface of which is touched with emery and water. It follows the slitting or roughing mill, and like them is mounted to rotate on a vertical axis.

grinding-slip, s. [Hone.]

grinding-vat, s.

Porcelain: A cylindrical tank in which calcined and stamped flints are ground into a fine paste with water. The vat is paved with chert-stone.

grĭnd'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. grinding; -ly.] In a grinding, harassing, or oppressive manner; oppressively; cruelly.

 grĭn'-dle-stōne, * gryn-del-ston, s. [Eng. grind, dimin. or frequent. suff. -le, and stone.] A grindstone.

"By the lead-men for the nonce
That turne about like grindlestones." Ben Jonson: Entertainment at Welbeck.

 grĭn'-dle-tāll, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A dog with a curly tail.

"Like grindletails with their heels upward."
Beaum. & Fl.: Island Princess, v. 1.

grĭnd'-stōne, s. [Eng. grind; -stone.] A flat circular stone used for grinding or sharpening tools.

"The grindstone to unpolished steel Gives edge."
Sherburne: Virtue improved by Suffering.

¶ To bring, hold, or put one's nose to the grindstone: To oppress, harass, or punish one; to bring one to justice; to treat harshly.

"They might be ashamed, for lack of courage to suffer the Lacedæmonians to hold their noses to the grindstone."—North: Plutarch, p. 241.

grĭn'-nĕr, s. [Eng. grin; -er.] One who grins; one who distorts his face.

"Grinners in the pantomime, murderers in tragedies, who make ugly faces under black wigs."—Burke: On a Regicide Peace, let. 4.

grĭn'-nĭng, * gren-nyng, * gren-nynge, pr. par., a., & s. [Grin, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of closing and showing the teeth; a smile; a smirk.

grĭn-nĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. grinning; -ly.] In a grinning manner; with a grin.

 grint, pres. indic. of v. [Grind, v.] For grindeth. (Chaucer: C. T., 5,971.)

grĭp (1), gripe, s. [A.S. græp (Somner).] [GROPE, s.] A small ditch; a furrow or channel to carry off water.

"Or in a grip or in the fen." Havelok, 2,101.

grĭp (2), * gripe, * gryp, * grype, s. [Icel. gripr; Sw. grip; Dan. grib; Dut. grijpvogel; O. H. Ger. grif, grife; Ger. greif; Lat. gryps, from Gr. γρυψ (grups).] A kind of vulture; a griffin or griffon.

"That him ne hane the grip or ern." Havelok, 572.

grĭp (3), * grĭpe, s. [Cf. Dut. greef, grief; M. H. Ger. grif.] [GRIP, v.]

I. The act of seizing or holding in the hand; the manner or mode of grasping; specifically, a grasp peculiar to any secret society: as, a masonic grip.

2. A gripe, s grasp.

"If he can haud the grip he has gotten."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. iv.

* 3. That by which anything is grasped or held: as, the grip of a sword.

4. A clutching device on a cable-car by which a car may be attached to or freed from the traction cable.

grĭp-car, s. A car having a grip; a cable-car.

grip-man, s. The man who operates the grip on a cable-railroad.

grĭp, v.t. & i. [Fr. gripper, from Icel. grípa.]

A. Trans.: To gripe, to seize hold of; to grasp firmly.

B. Transitive:

Naut.: To take firm hold: as, The anchor grips.

grīpe, * grĭp-en (pa. t. * grap, * græp, * grop), v.t. & i. [A.S. gripan = to seize; cogn. with Dut. grijpen; Icel. grípa; Dan. gribe; Sw. griba; Goth. greipan; Ger. greifen; O. H. Ger. grífan; O. Fris. gripa; Eng. grab.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally.

1. To seize and hold firmly in the hand; to grasp firmly; to hold with the fingers closed.

"Fit well his helm, gripe fast his orbèd shield." Milton: P. L., vii. 453.

* 2. To clutch, to clench, to shut tightly.

II. Figuratively:

* 1. To seize and hold fast; to take possession of.

"That present greif now gripith me and striues to stop my breath." Gascoigne: Absent Dame thus complaineth.

* 2. To pinch, to oppress; to grind down by exaction.

"A disposition is everywhere exhibited by men in office to gripe and squeeze all submitted to their authority."—Brougham.

3. To give a pain in the bowels to.

B. Intransitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: To lay fast hold of anything; to grasp or clasp things firmly in the hand.

"Struggling they gripe, they pull, they bend, they strain." Brooke: Constantia.

2. Figuratively:

(1) To get money by hard bargains or oppression; to be grasping after money; to extort.

(2) To suffer griping pains.

II. Naut.: To lie too close to the wind, as a ship.

grīpe (1), s. [GRIPE, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) A grasp; a fast or firm hold with the hands or paws; hold.

"Our blooming girl, Caught in the gripe of death."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. iii.

(2) A pressure, a squeeze.

"'Tis true, the hardened breast resists the gripe." Dryden: Ovid; Metamorphoses x.

(3) The part by which anything is gripped or grasped, as the hilt of a sword.

2. Figuratively:

* (1) A grasp, a seizure, a clutch, a grip.

"To ease a present load or gripe of conscience."—Bp. Taylor: Sermons, vol. ii., ser. 5.

* (2) Oppression; cruel exaction; a grinding down.

"I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., v. 2.

* (3) Pinching distress; hardship.

* (4) A mean, niggardly fellow; a miser.

"Let him be a hawd, a gripe, an usurer, a villain."—Burton: Anat. of Melancholy.

(5) In the same sense as II. 2.

II. Technically:

1. Mach.: A brake applied to the wheel of a crane or derrick. It generally consists of an iron hoop under the control of a lever, and is drawn closely around the wheel to check its motion.

2. Med. (Generally pl.): A popular name for keen but more or less intermittent pains in the abdomen, produced by colic or any similar disease.

"Torn with the gripes as if he should be pulled to pieces."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. ii.

3. Nautical:

(1) The fore-foot of a ship, on to which the stem is planted. The forward end of the keel. It is scarfed to the stem-piece and false-keel, and is secured by a horseshoe or ring to the stem.

(2) A broad plait of rope or bars of iron, with lanyard rings and claws, passing over a large boat, and by which it is secured to the ring-bolts of the deck.

(3) One of a pair of bands passing round a boat near the stem and stern when suspended from the davits, to prevent the boat from swinging about.

* gripe-penny, s. A niggardly fellow; a miser.

grīpe (2), s. [GRIP (2), s.] A griffon. (Ferrex & Porrex, ii. 1.)

* gripe's-egg, s.

1. Lit.: The egg of a griffon or vulture.

2. Fig.: A technical name for a vessel used in alchemy. (Ben Jonson: Alchemist, ii. 3.)

* grī'pe-fŭl, a. [Eng. gripe; -ful(l).] Disposed to gripe.

* grīp'-ēr, s. [Eng. grip(e), v.; -er.] One who gripes; specif., a miserly fellow, an extortioner, an oppressor.

"Others pretend zeal, and yet are professed usurers, gripers, monsters of men, and harpies."—Burton: Anat. of Melancholy.

grīp'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRIPE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

I. The act of seizing or grasping firmly in the hand; a grasping; a clutching.

2. A pain in the bowels; the gripes.

"Those gripings men feel when they take physick."—Digby: Of Bodies, ch. xxxiv.

* grīp'-ĭng-lȳ, adv. [Eng. griping; -ly.] In a griping manner; with griping pains.

"Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work grippingly."—Bacon: Natural History, 865.

* grĭ-ple, a. [GRIPPLE.]

* grĭ-ple-nĕss, s. [GRIPPLENESS.]

* grĭp'-ŏl-ŏŭs, * grĭp'-ŭ-lŏŭs, a. [Eng. grippal, gripple; -ous.] Greedy, avaricious, grasping.

"In the gripolous landlord's hand."—Adams: Works, i. 213.

* grip-pal, a. [GRIPPLE.]

grĭppe, s. [Fr.] A term applied to various epidemic forms of catarrh.

grĭp'-pĕr, s. [Eng. grip, v.; -er.]

I. Ord. Lang.: One who seizes; specifically in Ireland, a sheriff's officer; a bailiff.

2. Print.: The fingers on an impression which seize the paper by one edge and carry it to, and sometimes through, the press. In some cases tapes conduct it after it has been fed in by the grippers.

grĭp'-pĭĕ, grĭp'-pȳ, a. [Eng. grippe; -y.] Disposed to defraud or extort; rapacious, grasping.

* grĭp'-pĭng, a. [Eng. grip; -ing.] Avaricious, grasping.

* grĭp'-pĭng-nĕss, s. [Eng. gripping; -ness.] Avarice, graspingness.

"With a logick-fisted grippingness." — Kennet: Erasmus Praise of Folly, p. 87.

* grĭp'-ple, * grĭ-ple, * grip-pal, a. & s. [Eng. gripe; -le.]

A. As adjective:

I. Grasping, tenacious; holding firmly or fast; tight.

"One his shield he gripple hold did lay." Spenser: F. Q., VI. iv. 6.

2. Griping, greedy, avaricious.

"Nachody wad be sae gripple as to take his gear."—Scott: Waverley, ch. lxvii.

B. As subst.: A grasp, a hold.

"Ne even Artegall his gripple strong For anything wold slacke."
Spenser: F. Q., V. ii. 14.

* gripple-minded, a. Of a rapacious or grasping disposition; griping, greedily, miserly.

grĭp'-ple-nĕss, * grĭ-ple-ness, s. [Eng. gripple; -ness.] The quality or state of being gripple or avaricious; avarice; a grasping disposition.

"His grippleness, techinesse, loquacity."—Bishop Hall: Satan's Fiery Darts Quenched (Dec. 3).

* gris, * grys, s. [Fr. = grey.] A kind of fur.

"Two thik mantels yfurred with grys." Alisaunder, 5,502.

grĭş-āil'le, s. [Fr. gris = gray.]

Art: A style of painting representing solid bodies in relief, such as friezes, mouldings, &c., by means of a mixture of black and white pigments, producing gray tints.

* grĭş-ām'-bĕr, s. [See def.] Used by Milton for AMBERGRIS (q.v.).

grisamber-steamed, a. Flavoured with the steam of melted ambergris.

"In pastry built, or from the spit, or boiled Grisamber-steamed." Milton: P. R., ii. 344.

* grīse (1), s. [GREE.] A step, a stairs.

"Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers Into your favour." Shakesp.: Othello, i. 3.

* grīse (2), * gryce, * grys, * gryse, s. [Icel. griss; Sw. gris; Dan. grüss.] A pig, a swine.

"Wyth grys, and gees, and capouns."
Sir Ferumbras, 2,695.

* grīse, * gryse, a. [Cf. A.S. agrisan = to terrify; Ger. graus = terrible.] Terrible. [GRISLY.]

"The aghtand pine it es ful grise." Cursor Mundi, 23,249.

* grīse, * gris-en, * gryse, v.i. & t. [A.S. grisan = to terrify.]

A. Intrans.: To be afraid, to tremble, to fear.

"Another king gaine the sal rise
That sal make the to grise."
Cursor Mundi, 21,825.

B. Trans.: To fear.

"The which thou grisedist for hateful werkis."—Wycliffe: Wisdom xii. 13.

* grĭş'-ĕ-ŏŭs, a. [Low Lat. griseus; Fr. gris = gray.] Gray, grizzled, grizzly; white mottled with black or brown.

grĭ-şĕt'te, s. [Fr., from gris = gray.]

* 1. A sort of gray woollen fabric used for dresses by women of the lower classes.

2. A girl or young married woman of the lower classes; a gay young girl.

* gris-ful, * grise-ful, a. [Mid. Eng. grise, v.; -ful(l).] Terrible, fearful, horrid.

"Hit is so griful forto loke and forto hir the bitter dome." E. Eng. Poems, p. 4.

* gris-ful-ly, * gris-ful-li, adv. [Eng. grisful; -ly.] Horribly, fearfully.

"Thei ben scatered dredende grisfulli."—Wycliffe: Wisdom xvii. 3.

* gris-il, * grs-yl, a. [GRISE, v.] Horrible; terrible.

"Grysyl. Horridus, terribilis."—Prompt. Parv.

* gris-l-ness, * gris-y-nes, s. [Mid. Eng. grise, v.; -ness.] Fear, terror, dread.

"Gret grisynes assaileden hym."—Wyclife: Gen. xv 12

grĭş'-kĭn, s. [Eng. grise = a pig, and dimin. suff. -kin.] The spine of a hog.

grĭş'-lĕ-a, s. [Named after G. Grisley, a Portuguese surgeon and botanical writer.]

Bot.: A genus of Lythraceæ, tribe Lythreæ, now limited to one species, Grislea secunda, a native of Venezuela and New Grenada. What used to be called G. tomentosa is now denominated Woodfordia tomentosa. Its flowers mixed with those of Morinda are used in India as a dye called dhall.

* grĭş'-led (led as ęld), a. [GRIZZLED.]

 grĭş'-lĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. grisly; -ness.] The quality or atate of being grisly; horribleness, horridness.

"That ill-agreeing musick was beautified with the grislinesa of wounds." — Sidney: Arcadia, bk. iii., p. 441.

grĭş'-lў (1),  gris-li, * gris-lic, * gris-lich, * gris-liche, * grys-lych, * grys-ly, a. & adv. [A.S. grysliċ: cf. agrisan = to terrify; Ger. graus, grausig = horrible.]

A. As adj.: Horrible, dreadful, terrible, fearful, grim.

"All the grisly legions that troop Under the sooty flag of Acheron."
Milton: Comus, 603.

B. As adv.: Horribly, terribly, fearfully, horridly.

"Gristiche the develen yulle."—St. Brandan, p. 28.

 grĭş'-lў (2), a. [Grizzly.]

grĭ'-şŏn, s. [Fr. = gray.]

Zool.: Grissonia, or Galictis vittata, a genus of Brazilian mammals, placed by some among the Mustelidæ (Weasels), by others among the Melidæ (Badgers). It is called also the Huron.

grĭst, * grest, * gryste, s. [A.S., from the same root as grind (q.v.).]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: Corn to be ground; corn which has been ground.

"Always wrought and ground the neighbour's grest."
Browne: Britannia's Pastorals, bk. i., s. 4.

2. Fig.: A supply, a provision.

"Form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter bring no grist."
Swift: Progress of Beauty.

II. Technically:

1. Mill.: A batch of grain to be ground in a custom mill, or the resnlt of the grinding less the toll.

2. Rope-making: A given size of rope. Common grist is a rope three inches in circumference, with twenty yarns in each of the three strands.

¶ To bring grist to the mill: To bring profitable business or gain; to be a source of profit.

"A sly old Pope created twenty new saints to bring grist to the mill of the London clergy."—Bp. Horsley: Speech, July 23, 1804.

grist-mill, s. A mill for grinding grain.

gristle (as grĭs'l),  gris-tel, * grys-tyl, * grys-tylle, s. [A.S. gristle, a dimin. of grist (q.v.); cogn. with O. Fris. gristel, gristl, grestel.]

Anat.: The popular name of what is called by scientific men cartilage (q.v.).

"The gristle of the earepiece, beeyng once cutte in twoo, cannot close ne growe togetber agayne."—Udal: Luke xxii.

grĭs'-tlў (t silent), a. [Eng. gristl(e); -y.]

Ord. Lang. & Anat.: Composed or consisting of gristle; of the nature of or like gristle; cartilaginous.

"Those fishes which be not soft, but gristly, have a kind of marrow in their ridge bone."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xi., ch. xxxvii.

grĭt, * grcet, * greete, * greot, * greote, * grete, s. [A.S. greót = grit, dust; cogn. with O. Fris. gret; Icel. grjót; Ger. gries; O.S. griot; O. H. Ger. griioz; Eng. groats and grout (q.v.).]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

* (1) Sand, gravel.

"Dust and greot . . . hwon hit is isundred."—Ancren Riwle, p. 252.

(2) Coarse, rough particles.

"Silesian hole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap."—Grew.

(3) The coarse part of meal.

(4) Oats husked or coarsely ground. (Generally in the plural.) [Groats.]

(5) The structure or character of a stone as regards fineness, closeness, or their opposites.

* (6) A kind of crab.

2. Fig.: Firmness, determination or resolution of mind; pluck.

"Youth, and grit, and sober living told more than ever."—Reade: Cloister & Hearth, ch. xxi.

II. Petrol.: A term vaguely used for any coarse-grained sandstone, especially if the grains in it are angular or sub-angular. Rutley defines it as a coarse-grained and somewhat coherent, or at times a fine-grained and very hard and compact sandstone, frequently containing fragments and granules of other minerals, besides quartz, flint, or chert.

grit-berry, s.

Bot.: The genus Comarostaphylis.

grit-rock, s. [Grit, s., II.]

 grĭt, v.i. & t. [Grit, s.]

A. Intrans.: To give out a grating sound, as sand under the feet; to grate.

"The sanded floor that grits beneath the tread."
Goldsmith: Deserted Village.

B. Trans.: To grate; to grind or rub together: as, To grit the teeth.

grĭt, a. [Great.] (Scotch.)  grĭth, s. [A.S. & Icel.; O. Sw. grith, gruth, grid.]

1. Peace, goodwill.

"Grith on eorthe and grith on hefene, and grith bitwenen awile cristene monne."—O. E. Homilies, p. 45.

2. Mercy, kindness.

"Alle schulen gledien i Godes grith."—St. Marherete, p. 21.

 grith-breach, * grith-bruche, s. A breach or breaking of the peace.

"Yef ye doth grith-bruche on his lond."
Owl & Nightingale, 1,732.

 grĭth'-fûl, a. [Eng. grith; -ful(l).] Kind, merciful, forgiving.

"Basian wes grithful king." Layamon, ii. 12.

 grĭth'-ĭ-ĕn, v.i. [A.S. grithian.]

1. To protect, to keep in peace or security.

"Ich eow wulle grithien and freoscipe eow given."
Layamon, ii. 17.

2. To reconcile. (Layamon, ii. 496.)

 grith-lichc, a. & adv. [A.S.]

A. As adj.: Kind, gracious.

"He grete tham king mid grithliche speche."
Layamon, i. 19.

B. As adv.: Kindly, graciously.

"He grithliche spæc." Layamon, i. 6.

 grĭth'-scr-ĝeant (cr as ar), s. [Eng. grith, and sergeant.] An officer to keep the peace.

"Grithsergeans wit longe steyues." Havelok, 266.

grĭt'-stōne, s. [Eng. grit, and stone.] The same as Grit, II. (q.v.).

grĭt'-tĭc, a. [Eng. grit; -ic = -y.]

Her.: A term applied to the field when composed equally of metal and colour.

grĭt'-tĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gritty; -ness.] The quality or state of being gritty or abounding in grit.

"In fuller's earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

grĭt'-tў, a. [Eng. grit; -y.]

1. Lit.: Consisting of or containing grit; of the nature of grit; full of hard particles; sandy.

"I found this powder . . . somewhat gritty between the teeth."—Boyle: Works.

2. Fig.: Plucky, courageous, resolute. (American.) grĭv'-ĕt, s. [Fr., from Abyssinian (?).]

Zool.: Cercocebus or Cercopithecus griseoviridis, an Old World monkey with greenish-gray fur, some white hairs near the hinder extremities, the tail gray. Found in Africa.

grĭ-wĕn'-nĭck (w as v), s. [Russ.] A small silver coin current in Russia of the value of ten kopecks, or about twopence sterling. It weighs 2·039 grammes, and is ·5 fine. (Bithell.)

 grîze, s. [Grise (I).]

 grĭz'-ĕ-lĭn, a. [Gridelin.]

 grĭz'-zlc, * gris-el, * gris-ell, s. & a. [Fr. gris = gray; suff. -el.] [Grizzled.]

A. As substantive:

1. A gray colour; a mixture of black and white.

"Time hath sowed a grizzle on thy face."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, v.

2. A gray-haired man.

"That olde grisel is no fole." Gower, iii. 356.

* 3. A kind of wig.

"Our clergy moult their feathered grizzles."
Colman: The Spleen, ii.

B. As adj.: Gray, grizzled.

"Among the popplar leaues in grisell gowne."
Phaer: Virgill: Æneidos viii.

grĭz'-zlcd (zled as zcld), a. [Eng. grizzle; -ed.] Gray; of a grayish colour; interspersed with gray.

"His beard was grizzled."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, i. 2.

grizzled-skipper, s.

Entom.: A small butterfly—Thymele Alveolus, of the family Hesperidæ. The wings are blackish, tinged with green and with creamy spots. The larva feeds on the raspberry. (Stainton.)

grĭz'-zlў, a. & s. [Eng. grizzl(e); -y.]

A. As adj.: Of a grayish colour; grayish.

"Through the realms where grizzly spectres dwell."
Cowper: To Charles Deodati. (Trans.)

B. As subst.: [Grizzly-bear].

grizzly-bear, grisly-bear, † grizzle-bear, s.

1. Zool.: Ursus ferox. A huge bear, sometimes nine feet from the nose to the end of the very short tail, and weighing 800 lbs. The hair, which varies between gray and blackish brown, is more or less grizzled, whence the animal's English name. It inhabits North America, especially the plains east of the Rocky Mountains, and those mountains themselves. It feeds partly on fruits and roots, but partly also on animal food, overcoming the huge bison.

2. Palæont.: Ursus priscus, of the Post-Tertiary caves, is supposed to be the same as the Grizzly bear.

grōan, * gran-i-en, * grane, * grone, v.i. & t. [A.S. grânian; allied to Grin (q.v.).]

A. Intransitive:

1. Lit.: To breathe with a heavy, or deep murmuring noise, as in pain or agony; to utter a moaning sound; to utter a mournful voice; to sigh deeply.

"I have groaned under them, been sorry for them."
—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. i.

II. Figuratively:

1. To grieve; to suffer hardship; to be burdened so as to cause murmuring, as, A nation groans under excessive taxation.

2. To long or strive earnestly after anything.

"Nothing but holy, pure, and clear,
Or that which groaneth to be so."
Herbert: Superliminare.

B. Trans.: To silence or put down by groans; as, The speaker was groaned down.

grōan, * grane, * grone, s. [Groan, v.]

1. A low moaning sound, as of one in pain, sorrow, or agony; a deep, mournful sound or voice; a deep sigh, a moan.

"Heave a pitying groan." Cowper: Truth, 177.

* 2. Any hoarse dead sound; a moan.

"Such groans of roaring wind and rain."
Shakesp.: Lear, iii. 2.

3. A deep, murmuring sound, uttered in derision or disapprobation; as, The speaker's voice was drowned in groans.

grōan'-ĕr, s. [Eng. groan; -er.] One who groans.

 grōan'-fûl, * grône-full, a. [Eng. groan; -ful(l).] Causing or tending to cause groans or sadness; sad, lamentable.

"And gave against his mother earth a groanful sound."
Spenser: F. Q., II. xi. 42.

grōan'-ĭng, * gran-unge, * gron-ing, * gron-ynge, pr. par., a., & s. [Groan, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of giving utterance to groans or moanings; a groan.

"Ther is gronynge and grure."
Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 91.

groaning-malt, s. Drink provided against a woman's confinement, and drunk by the women assembled on that occasion. (Scotch.)  grōat, * grote, s. [O. Low Ger. = great, from its being larger than the small copper coins formerly in use; O. Dut. groote; Dut. groot.] [Great.]

* 1. A small silver coin, formerly current in England, of the value of four pence sterling; hence four pence, or a fourpenny piece.

"But now groats of four-pence, and half groats of two-pence, equivalent to the sterling money, are coined."—Baker: Edward III. (an. 1376).

2. Used proverbially for any small or trifling sum.

"His apparel is not worth a groat."—Fielding: Journey from this World to the Next, ch. xix.

groats, * grotes, s. pl. [Icel. grauts = porridge; Sw. grot; Dan. grod; Dut. gort.] Oats or wheat without the husks. [Grouts.]

"The people of Rome for three hundred years together, used no other food than the groats made of common wheat." — P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xviii., ch. vii.

grŏb'-man, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Ichthy.: The Sea Bream (q.v.).

grō'-çēr, * gros'-sĕr, s. [O. Fr. grossier = one who sells by the gross or wholesale; gros, fem grosse = great.] A dealer in tea, sugar, coffee, spices, &c. [Gross.]

"None of that compaine, nor anie of the vinteners, butchers, grossers . . . should be admitted maior of the citie."—Holinshed: Chron. Richard II. (an. 1382) grocer's-itch, s.

Path.: Echthyma, produced by handling sugar. It is most common in spring and summer. Sometimes the eruption is local, at others it almost covers the body.

* grō'-çēr-lȳ, a. [Eng. grocer; -ly.] Belonging to the grocery trade.

"Some grocerly thieves."
Hood.: Tale of a Trumpet.

grō'-çēr-ȳ, * grōs'-sēr-ȳ, s. [O. Fr. grosserie.]

1. Grocers' wares, such as tea, sugar, coffee, &c. (Usually in the plural.)

"Mounted upon the colt, with a deal box before him to carry groceries in."—Goldsmith: Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xii.

2. A grocer's shop; a place where groceries are sold. (American.)

* groche, v.t. & i. [Grudge, v.]

* grŏff, * groffe, * gruf, adv. [Icel. grúfa, in the phrase, liggja á grúfu = to lie grovelling: grúfa = to grovel; Sw. dial. gruva = flat on one's face; ligga å gruve = to lie grovelling on one's face.] Grovelling; flat on one's face. [Grovel.]

"And groff he fell al platte upon the ground."
Chaucer: C. T., 13,605.

grŏg, s. [Named after a nickname of Admiral Vernon, who, from his wearing grogram breeches, was called "Old Grog." About 1745 he ordered his sailors to dilute their rum with water.]

1. Spirits and water mixed but not sweetened; strong drink generally.

2. For def. see extract.

"Deceased had been accustomed to drink a vile mixture procured at spirit stores known as grog, and compounded of drippings from wine, spirit, and beer casks."—Standard, Feb. 20, 1884.

3. [Firebrick.]

grog-blossom, s. A redness or pimple on the nose or face, arising from excessive indulgence in strong drink.

grog-shop, s. A place where spirits or strong drinks are sold; a dram-shop.

* grog, v.t. [Groo, s.] To mix water with; to weaken with water. (Davies.)

"The defendants had grogged the casks by putting in hot water."—Lincoln Mercury, March 3, 1873.

grŏg'-gĕr-ȳ, s. [Eng. grog; -ery.] A place where spirits or other strong liquors are sold; a grog-shop. (American.)

grŏg'-gī-nĕss, s. [Eng. groggy; -ness.]

* 1. Ord. Lang.: The state of being under the influence of drink; tipsiness.

2. Farr.: A tenderness or stiffness in the foot of a horse, or weakness in the forelegs.

"The peculiar knuckling of the fetlock-joint, and the tottering of the whole of the fore-leg, known by the name of grogginess, and which is so often seen in old and overworked horses, is seldom an affection of either the fetlock or the pastern-joints simply."—Youatt: On the Horse, ch. xvi., p. 379.

grŏg'-gȳ, a. [Eng. grog; -y.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Under the influence of drink; tipsy, drunk.

2. Staggering or stupefied, as one dazed with blows; acting like one stupefied with drink.

II. Farr.: Moving uneasily, as with tender feet or forelegs.

"It [grogginess] is common among all kinds of fast workers, and long journeys at a fast pace will make almost any horse groggy."—Youatt: On the Horse, ch. xvi., p. 380.

grŏg'-ram, * grŏg'-ĕr-an, * grŏg'-ran, s. & a. [O. Fr. grosgrain, from gros = gross, thick, coarse, and grain = grain.]

A. As substantive:

Fab.: A coarse stuff of silk or silk and mohair.

"He shall have the grograns at the rate I told him."—Ben Jonson: Every Man in His Humour, ii. 2.

B. As adj.: Made of the fabric described in A.

"Plain goody would no longer down
'Twas madam in the grogram gown."
Swift: Baucis & Philemon.

groin (1), * grain, s. [Icel. grein = a branch, arm; greina = to branch or fork off; Dan. green = a branch; Sw. gren = a branch, a fork.]

1. Anat.: The hollow in the human body where the thigh and the trunk unite.

"The little dart arrives . . .
Passed through and pierced his groin." Dryden: Virgil; Æneid x. 828.

2. Arch.: The angle or angular curve formed by an intersection of vaults; most of the vaulted ceilings of the middle ages were groined, and therefore called groined ceilings. During the early part of the Norman style the groins were left purposely plain, but afterwards they were invariably covered with ribs.

3. Civil Eng.: A frame of wood-work, constructed across a beach, between high and low water, perpendicular to the general line of it, either to retain the shingle already accumulated, to recover it when lost, or to accumulate more at any particular point; also to break and check the action of the waves. The component parts of a groin are piles, planking, land-ties, land tie-bars, blocks, tail-piles, and keys and screw-bolts.

groin-rib, s.

Arch.: A rib or projecting member following the line of junction of the two arches forming a groin.

* groin (2), * groine, * groyn, * groyne, s. [O. Fr. groing; Fr. groin; Prov. groing, grong; Ital. grugno; O. Port. gruin.]

1. The snout of a swine.

"A ring of gold that is worne in the groine of a sowe."—Chaucer: Persones Tale.

2. A hanging lip.

"Be wroth, than schalt thow have a groyn." Chaucer: Troilus, i. 348.

groin (1), v.t. [Groin (1), s.]

Arch.: To form into groins; to ornament or furnish with groins.

* groin (2), * groigne, * groyne, v.i. [Fr. grogner; O. Fr. groigner; Prov. gronhir, gronir; Sp. gruñir; Port. grunhir; Ital. grugnire, grugnare, from Lat. grunnio.] To groan or grunt; to hang the lip in discontent; to pout.

"Whether so that he loure or groyne."
Romaunt of the Rose, 7,051.

groined, a. [Eng. groin (1), s.; -ed.]

Arch.: Having an angular curve formed by the intersection of two arches.

groined-arch, s.

Arch.: An arch intersected by another cutting it transversely.

groined-ceiling, groined-roof, s.

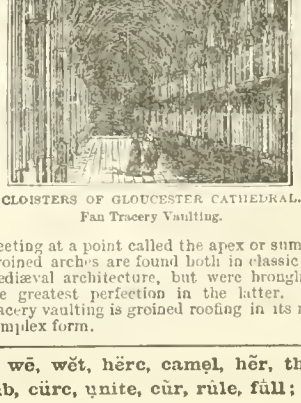
Arch.: A ceiling formed by three or more intersecting arches, every two of which form a groin at the intersection, all the groins



CLOISTERS OF GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.
Fan Tracery Vaulting.

meeting at a point called the apex or summit. Groined arches are found both in classic and mediæval architecture, but were brought to the greatest perfection in the latter. Fan tracery vaulting is groined roofing in its most complex form.

* grōin'-ĕr, * groyn-erc, s. [Eng. groin (2), v.; -er.] One who tells tales; a tale-bearer.

"The groynere with drawen striues to gidere resten."—Wycliffe: Prov. xxvi. 20.

grōin'-ĭng (1), s. [Groin (1), v.]

Arch.: The same as Groin (1), s., 1.

* grōin'-ĭng (2), * groyn-ing, * groyn-ynge, s. [Groin (2), v.]

1. Grunting.

"Groynynge of swyne. Grunnitus."—Prompt. Parv.

2. A grumbling; tale-bearing. (Chaucer; C. T., 2,462.)

grom-el, grom-mel, s. [Gromwell.]

grŏm'-ĕt, grŏm'-mĕt, s. [Fr. gourmette = a curb; gourmer = to curb.]

1. Naut.: A ring formed of a strand of rope laid round and spliced. Used as a hank, a thimble, or with large oars, in connection with a pin, as a substitute for a rowlock. Metallic grommets, or ring eyelets, are sometimes substituted. An iron flange is cast to the wrought-metal thimble; after insertion, the edge is spun over upon the other cast-metal ring.

2. Ord.: A wad made of rope, rammed down between the ball and the charge. Made of oakum and bound with spun-yarn, it is called a junk-wad.

gromet-wad, s.

Ord.: A wad used in firing from smooth-bore guns, when the elevation is less than 3°.

¶ Shot-gromet:

Ord.: The same as Gromet, 2.

grō'-mĭ-a, s. [Lat. groma = a surveyor's pole or measuring-rod.

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Gromidæ (q.v.).

grō'-mĭ-da, grō'-mĭ-dæ, s. [Mod. Lat. gromia, and Lat. neut. adj. suff. -ida, or fem. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of Foraminifera, with an imperforate test. It is brownish-yellow, membranous, soft, and globular, with long, filiform processes protruding.

grŏm'-wĕll, grŏm'-il, gro-mel, gray-mell, gray-millet, s. [Fr. gremil; Wel. cromandil.]

Bot.: Lithospermum officinale, anciently administered for the cure of gravel.

¶ False Gromwell: The genus Onosmodium.

* grone, v.i. [Groan, v.]

Gron'-in-gĕn-ists, Gron-ĭn-gĕn'-sĭ-ans (o as ę), s. pl. [From the town of Groningen in the Netherlands, at which the early adherents of the sect held their conventions.]

Ch. Hist.: A division of Mennonites, who flourished in the seventeenth century.

grŏ-nō'-vĭ-a, s. [Named after J. F. Gronovius, a botanist of Leyden.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gronovieæ (q.v.).

grŏ-nō'-vĭ-ĕ-æ, s.pl. [Mod. Lat. gronovia, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Loasaceæ.

groom, * grom, * grome, s. [Etym. doubtful; prob. from A.S. guma = a man, the r being inserted as in cartridge, partridge, corporal, &c.; Dut. gom (in bruidegom = bridegroom); O. H. Ger. gumo; Icel. gumi; Goth. guma; Lat. homo = a man; O. Dut. grom; Icel. gromr = a boy.] [Bridegroom.]

* 1. A young man, a lad.

"Ich am non no grom ich am wel waxen."
Havelok, 790.

* 2. A menial, a servant.

"Als wel thi maister as thi grome." Gower, i. 274.

3. Specifically a man or boy who has the charge of horses or of the stable.

"Unmissed but by his dogs and by his groom."
Cowper: Progress of Error, 95.

4. A man newly-married or about to be married; a bridegroom.

"By this the brides are waked, their grooms are dressed." Dryden: Cymon & Iphigenia, 540.

5. One of several officers in the royal household; as, Groom of the Stole, &c.

¶ Groom of the Stole: [Stole].

groom-porter, s. An officer of the Royal household, whose duty it was to see that the king's lodging was furnished with tables, chairs, stools, and firing, and also to provide cards and dice, &c., and to decide disputes arising at cards, dice, bowling, &c. He was allowed to keep an open gaming-table at Christmas. The office was abolished by George III.

"The groom-porter had a room appropriated to gaming."—Pope: Dunciad, i 210 (Note).

grooms-man, s. One who attends on the bridegroom at a wedding; the best man.

"Sudden at the gro ms-man's side
'Tis he! a well-known voice has cried."
Longfellow: Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé, iii.

groôm, v.t. [Groom, s.] To tend, care for, or dress, as a groom does a horse.

groôm'-lĕss, a. [Eng. groom; -less.] Without a groom.

"A rough colt, listless and groomless."—Disraeli: Lothair, ch. xxviii.

groôm'-lĕt, s. [Eng. groom, s.; dimin. suff. -let.] A little or young groom. (Hook.)

groôm'-shĭp, *grome-ship, s. [Eng. groom; -ship.] The office or position of a groom.

"He [Silas Titus] did with the consent of his Majesty resign his gromeship."—Wood: Athenæ Oxon.

groôt, s. [Dut. = great.] An old money of account in Bremen, value $\frac{1}{10}$ ths of an English penny. [Groat.]

groôve, *grove, s. [Dut. groef, groeve = a grave, a groove.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: A channel, furrow, or long hollow, such as may be cut with a tool; a rut, furrow, or channel, such as may be formed by the action of water; a channel formed by any agency.

2. Fig.: The natural course or fixed routine of one's life or events.

II. Technically:

1. Gun.: A spiral channel between the lands in rifling.

2. Join.: A channel in the edge of a board. In matched-boarding it receives the tongue.

*3. Mining: A shaft or pit.

4. Anat.: There are many grooves in the human frame, as, the bicipital, the lachrymal, and the subcostal grooves.

groove-ram, s.

Needle-making: A stamp for making the groove in which the eyes of needles are formed.

groôve, v.t. [Groove, s.] To cut or form a groove or channel in; to furrow.

"The aperture is grooved at the margin."—Pennant: Brit. Zool.: The Wreath Shell.

groôved, a. [Groove, s.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Having a groove, furrow, or channel in it; channelled; furrowed.

"Each grooved and dovetailed like a box."
Swift: George-Nim-Dan-Dean's Answer to T. Sheridan.

2. Bot.: Fluted, channeled, marked with longitudinal furrows.

grooved-bit, s. A wood-boring tool, adapted to be used in a brace, and having a cylindrical stem with a spiral groove.

grooved-wheel, s.

1. A wheel having circumferential indentations, as a mode of increasing the traction or effective frictional surface contact; a friction-wheel.

2. A band-wheel or pulley having peripheral depressions for a round band, as in some lathes.

groôv'-ĕr, s. [Eng. groove, v.; -er.]

* 1. One who or that which cuts or forms a groove.

2. A miner. (Provincial.) groôv'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Groove, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or process of cutting or forming a groove; a groove, or set of grooves.

grooving-planes, s. pl. Carpenters' and joiners' planes, which are adapted for cutting grooves, as the plough, fillister, router-plane, banding-plane, &c.

grōpe, *groop, *groupe, *growpe, *grupe, s. [O. Fris. grôpe; Dut. groep; Sw. & Dan. grop.] A channel to carry off urine from a stable or stall.

"A grupe: minsorium."—Cathol. Anglicum.

grōpo (1), growpe, *growpyn, v.i. [Grope, s.] To make a groove or channel; to form grooves.

"I growpe, sculpe, or euche as coulde grave, groupe or carve."—Palsgrave.

grōpe (2), grape, *graip, *gropen, *groop, v.i. & t. [A.S. grápian = to handle, to seize, from gráp = the grasp of the hands, the grip of the fingers, from grípan = to gripe; O. H. Ger. greifon; Icel. greifa.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To feel with the hands.

"Loke what ther is put in thin hond and grope."
Chaucer: C. T., 13,164.

2. To use the hands; to handle.

"If my fader groop and fele, by drede lest he wene me wiln to bigile hym."—Wycliffe: Genesis xxvii. 12.

3. To search or seek to find something in the dark; or, as a blind person, by feeling about with the hands; to feel one's way as with the hands.

"We grope for the wall like the blind."—Isa. lix. 10.

4. To seek to find one's way through doubt or perplexity.

"Groping no longer in night."
Longfellow: Children of the Lord's Supper.

*5. To seek to find anything.

"As blindly groped they for a future state."
Dryden: Religio Laici, 23.

*6. To examine closely.

"He is the gropande God."
Early Eng. Allit. Poems: Cleanness, 591.

B. Transitive:

1. To feel with the hands; to touch; to handle.

"Than gropede he euery wounde."
Sir Ferumbras, 1,389.

2. To seek out by feeling with the hands in the dark or as a blind person: as, To grope one's way.

"We have groped as blinde men the wall."—Wycliffe: Isaiah lix. 10.

* 3. To try to discover or find out; to seek into; to try; to sound; to probe.

"How vigilant to grope men's thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain."—Hayward.

* 4. To inquire into; to examine.

"To grope tenderly a conscience."
Chaucer: C. T., 7,399.

grōp'-ĕr, s. [Eng. grop(e); -er.] One who gropes; one who tries to find his way by groping.

"A groper after novelties, in any wise do flye."
Drant: Horace; Epistle to Lollius.

grōp'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Grope, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or state of seeking one's way by feeling with the hands in the dark, or as a blind person.

groping-iron, *grupinge-yren, s. A tool for forming grooves.

"The groping-iron then spake he."—MS. in Halliwell.

grōp'-ĭng-lĭ, adv. [Eng. groping; -ly.] In a groping manner: as one who gropes.

grŏp'-pīte, s. [From Gropp(torp), in Sweden, where it occurs, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A rose-red or brownish-red crystalline mineral of splintery fracture: its hardness, 2·5; sp. gr., 2·73. Compos.: 45·01; alumina, 22·55; sesquioxide of iron, 3·06; magnesia, 12·28; lime, 4·55; soda, 0·22; potassa, 5·23; water, 7·11 = 100. Occurs in limestone. (Dana.) grŏp'-ple, v.i. [A frequent. from grope (q.v.).] To grope.

"To gropple in the brook for crayfish."—T. Hughes: Tom Brown at Oxford, ch. xxx.

grŏr-ōī'-lite, s. [From Groroi, in Mayenne, France, where it occurs, and Gr. λίθος (lithos) = stone.]

Min.: A variety of Wad (Bog-manganese). The colour is brownish-black, the streak reddish-brown. (Dana.) grōs (s silent), s. [Fr., = thick, strong.] [Gross, a.]

Fabric: A heavy silk with a dull finish.

gros-em, s. A silver coin, used in Switzerland, value 4s. 8d. sterling.

grŏs'-bēak, *grŏss'-bēak, s. [Eng. gross, and beak. So named from the thick bills of the several species.]

1. Singular:

(1) Spec.: The genus Coccothraustes (q.v.).

(2) Gen.: Some other birds having thick bills. [¶]

2. Pl.: The English name of Coccothraustinæ, a sub-family of Fringillidæ.

¶ The Cardinal Grosbeak (Cardinalis virginianus), an American bird. The Pine Grosbeak is Loxia enucleator, called also Pine Bullfinch; and the Social or Republican Grosbeak is Philæterus socius. It is from South Africa, and belongs to the sub-family of Ploceinæ (Weaver-birds).

grōs'-grāin (s silent), s. [Fr.] A stout and durable corded silk stuff.

grō'-sçhen, s. [Gross.] A small silver coin used in the North German States, value $\frac{1}{30}$th of a thaler, or about $1\frac{1}{2}$th of a penny sterling. Each groschen is sub-divided into ten pfennings.

grō'-sĕr, grō'-sĕrt, grō'-sĭ-ĕr, s. [Grossart.]

grōss, *grosse, a. & s. [Fr. gros (fem. grosse) = thick, coarse, from Low Lat. grossus, from Lat. crassus = thick, coarse; Ital. grosso; Sp. grueso.]

A. As adjective:

I. Literally:

1. Thick; fat; bulky; great and coarse.

"A gross fat man."—Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., v. 4.

2. Coarse; opposed to fine or delicate.

"Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance."—Wotton: Architecture.

* 3. Thick; dense; not attenuated; not pure; coarse.

"They would shake the gross clouds to the ground."
Drayton: Barons' Wars, bk. ii.

* 4. Coarse; unbecoming; inelegant.

"The gloomy hue,
And feature gross." Thomson: Summer, 888.

II. Figuratively:

1. Dull; stupid; crass; heavy.

"If she doth then the subtile sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in the blood?"
Davies.

2. Coarse; vulgar; not refined; indelicate; sensual; obscene.

"He shuns the grosser joys of sense."
Byron: Corsair, i. 2.

3. Enormous; great; shameful; disgraceful; flagrant.

4. Whole; entire; total; applied to a sum or amount without any deduction; opposed to net.

* 5. Plain; palpable; easily discernible.

"'Tis gross you love my son."
Shakesp.: All's Well that Ends Well, i. 3.

B. As substantive:

* 1. The main body, part, or mass; the chief part, the mass.

"Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things."—Bacon.

* 2. The main force or body.

"Several casuists are of opinion that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person."—Addison: Freeholder.

* 3. The sum total; the full or entire amount.

"I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 3.

* 4. A collective or united body.

"After they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross."—Dryden.

5. The gross or great hundred; the number of twelve dozen; twelve times twelve.

¶ 1. A great gross: Twelve gross or 144 dozens.

2. In the gross; in gross:

(1) In the bulk, or undivided whole; wholesale.

"Trafficking in grosse."—Carew: Survey in Cornwall, p. 65.

(2) On the whole; as a whole, without regard to the separate parts.

"Some men pass swiftly from the effect they look upon in gross to the most obvious seeming cause."—Digby: Of Bodies, ch. xxxvi.

3. Advowson in gross:

Law: An advowson separated from the property of a manor, and annexed to the person of its owner.

4. Common in gross:

Law: A common not appurtenant to land, but annexed to a man's person.

* 5. Villein in gross:

Feud. Law: A villein who did not belong to the land, but immediately to the person of his lord, and who was transferable by deed, as other chattels, from one person to another.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between gross and coarse: "These terms are synonymous in the moral application. Grossness of habit is opposed to delicacy: coarseness to softness and refinement. A person becomes gross by an unrestrained indulgence of his sensual appetites, particularly in eating and drinking; he is coarse from the want of polish either as to his mind or manners." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) gross-fed, a. Fed or supported on grosa or coarse food.

gross-headed, a. Thick-headed, dull, stupid. (Milton.)

Gross-Mennonites, s. pl.

Ch. Hist.: A name given on the Continent in the seventeenth century to the more wild or lax Mennonites, as distinguished from those who were refined or more strict. The former were called again Waterlandera. (Mosheim: Ch. Hist., cent. xvii.)

gross-weight, s.

Comm.: The weight of any merchandise or commodity, including the dross, dust, bag, case, cask, chest, or other receptacle in which it is contained. The net or neat weight is that of the commodity after the tare and tret have been deducted. [NET, a., TARE, s.] grŏs-sā'-lēs, s. pl. [Lat. gross(us); masc. or fem. suff. -ales.] [GROSSAL.]

Bot.: An alliance of epigynous exogens, having the flowers dichlamydeous and polypetalous, the seeds numerous and minute, with the embryo small, lying in a large quantity of albumen. Lindley includes under it the orders Grossulariaceæ, Escalloniaceæ, Philadelphaceæ, and Barringtoniaceæ (q.v.).

grŏs'-sart, grŏs'-sĕrt, s. [A corrupt. of Fr. groseille.] A gooseberry (q.v.).

grŏss'-bēak, s. [GROSBEAK.]

* grŏss'-fŭl, * grosse-full, a. [Eng. gross; -full.] Exceeding gross.

"Thy grosseful faults."
Chapman: Bussy D'Ambois, I. 2.

grŏss-if-ĭ-eā'-tion, s. [GROSSIFY.]

1. Ord. Lang.: The act of making gross, coarse, or thick; the state of becoming gross or thick.

2. Bot.: The swelling of the ovary after fertilization.

* grŏss-ĭ-fȳ, v.t. & i. [Eng. gross; i connective, and suff. -fy.]

A. Trans.: To make gross, coarse, or thick.

B. Intrans.: To become gross, coarse, or thick.

grŏss'-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gross; -ly.]

* 1. In a gross manner; in bulky parts; coarsely; bulkily.

"London likes grossly; but this nicer pit Examines, fathoms, all the depths of wit."
Dryden: Prologue to the Univ. of Oxford.

2. Coarsely, vulgarly; without refinement; rudely.

"Speak not so grossly."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, v.

3. Shamefully, disgracefully, flagrantly.

"But that which in an age of good government is an evil may, in an age of grossly bad government, be a blessing."—Macaulay: Hist. of Eng., ch. i.

* 4. Stupidly.

"Led so grossly by this meddling priest."
Shakesp.: King John, III. 1.

* 5. Palpably, evidently, plainly.

"To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave."
Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, ii. 2.

grŏss'-nĕss, s. [Eng. gross; -ness.]

* 1. The quality or state of being gross or bulky; bulk, bulkiness.

"The element immediately next the earth in grossness is water."—Digby: Of Bodies, ch. xxvii.

2. Coarseness, rudeness; want of refinement or delicacy.

"I will purge thy mortal grossness so."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, III. 1.

3. Enormity; shocking nature or qualities; shamefulness; disgracefulness.

"Hiding the grossness with fair ornament."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, II. 2.

* 4. Stupidity.

"Such impossible passages of grossness."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, III. 2.

* 5. Coarseness; want of clearness or purity; density.

"[Its] foggy grossness so opposed the light
As it would turn the moonsted into night."
Drayton: Moon-Calf.

† grŏs-sụ-lā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [GROSSULARIACEÆ.]

grŏs-sụ-lā'-çĕ-oŭs (or ceous as shŭs), a. [Mod. Lat. grossulace(æ); suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Of or belonging to the Grosaulaceæ or Grossulariacæ (q.v.).

grŏs'-sụ-lar, a. & s. [Low Lat. grossula = a gooseberry; Class. Lat. grossulus = a small unripe fig, dimin. of grossus = an unripe fig; and Eng. suff. -ary.]

A. As adj.: Of, belonging to, or resembling a gooseberry.

B. As substantive:

Min.: The mineral, called by the French grossulaire. The same as GROSAULARITE (q.v.).

grossular-garnet, s.

Min.: The same as GROSAULARITE (q.v.).

grŏs-sụ-lār'-ĭ-ą, s. [Low Lat. grossul(a) = a gooseberry; and Lat. fem. sing. adj. suff. -aria.]

Bot.: A sub-genus of Ribes, having spinous branches, the leaves plaited in bud, and one to three flowered peduncles. (Sir Joseph Hooker.) grŏs-sụ-lār-ĭ-ā'-çĕ-æ, † grŏs-sụ-lā'-çĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grossularia (q.v.), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: Currantworts; the typical order of Lindley's alliance Grossales. It consists of either unarmed or spiny shrubs, with alternate lobed leaves having a plaited vernation, flowers in axillary racemes, a superior calyx four or five-parted, five minute petals, five stamens; a two, three, or four-cleft style; a one-celled ovary, with two opposite parietal placentæ; and the fruit a berry, enclosing numerous seeds suspended among the pulp by long fundamental cords. Lindley enumerated two genera, and estimated the known species at ninety-five. They are from the temperate and mountainous parts of Europe, Asia, and America. The typical genus is Ribes, containing the gooseberry, currant, &c. Sir Joseph Hooker calls the order Ribesieæ, and reduces it to a tribe of Saxifragraceæ.

grŏs'-sụ-lar-īte, s. [Mod. Lat. grossularia = the gooseberry genus; suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A variety of garnet, called by Dana from its composition Lime-alumina-garnet. The most typical sub-variety is the Wiluite, of Siberia, which is pale green. Others are Cinnamon-stone or Essonite, Succinite, and Romanzovite.

* grŏss'-ȳ, * grŏss'-ĭĕ, a. [Eng. gross; -y.] Gross.

"Spending their grossie humours."—Fuller: Worthies; Lincoln, ii. 2.

* grot (1), s. [GROAT.]

grŏt (2), s. [Fr. grotte, from Low Lat. crupta = a crypt; Lat. crypta.] A grotto. [CRYPT.]

"The Sibylline grot beside the dead Lake of Avernus." Dyer: Ruins of Rome.

grŏ-tĕs'que (que as k), * gro-tesc, * grotes-co, a. & s. [Fr., from Ital. grottesca, from grotta = a grotto, because such paintings were found in old crypts and grottoes.]

A. As adjective:

1. Strangely or wildly formed; of irregular or extravagant form or proportions; antic, ludicrous, laughable, ridiculous.

"Many a grotesque form and face."
Longfellow: To a Child.

2. Applied to artificial grotto-work, decorated with rock-work, shells, &c.

B. As substantive:

1. This term, which is now familiar among all the lovers of the art of painting, was by the Italians appropriated to that peculiar manner of composition and invention observed among the antique monumental paintings which were discovered in the subterraneous chambers that had been decorated in the times of the ancient Romans; and as the Italians apply the word Grotto to express every kind of cave or grot, all paintings which were in imitation of the antique designs discovered in those chambers, which for ages had been covered with ruins, are grotesqued or grotesque, which is now applied to English subjects of a quaint and anomalous character.

2. A name given to the light and fanciful ornaments used formerly to characterize persons and things.

3. Whimsical figures or scenery.

4. Artificial grotto-work.

5. In printing, a squat-shaped type.

GROTESQUE TYPE.

grŏ-tĕs'que-lȳ (que as k), adv. [Eng. grotesque; -ly.] In a grotesque, extravagant, or ludicrous manner.

"Death has despoiled the jester of his habiliments, and grotesquely decorated himself therewith."—Explanation of Holbein's Dance of Death, p. 49.

grŏ-tĕs'que-nĕss (que as k), s. [Eng. grotesque; -ness.] The quality or state of being grotesque; extravagance.

grŏ-tĕsq'-nĕr-y (q as k), s. [Eng. grotesque; -ry.] The act or practice of indulging in grotesque whims or antics; extravagant or ludicrous conduct; the expression of grotesque ideas.

"The most daring grotesqueries of humour."—Chambers' Encyc. (1868), x. 210.

grō'-thīte, s. [Named after P. Groth, who first described it; suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: A mineral akin to Titanite or Sphene, but differing from it in cleavage. It is clove-coloured or dark brown in mass, and reddish-brown and translucent in thin splinters. Hardness, 6·5; sp. gr., 3·5 to 3·6. Compos.: Silica, 30·51; titanic acid, 31·16; sesquioxide of iron, 5·83; lime, 31·34, &c. Occurs in ayenite near Dresden.

* grŏt'-ą, s. [GROTTO.]

grŏt-tĕs'que (que as k), s. [GROTESQUE.]

grŏt'-tō, * grŏt'-ą, s. [Ital. grotta; Fr. grotte.] [GROT (2).]

1. A cave or natural cavity in the earth; a natural covered opening in the earth.

"Zoroaster consecrated a round grotto, such as nature had formed it."—Bolingbroke: Letter to Mr. De Pouilly.

2. An artificial or ornamental cave or cavern-like apartment, decorated with rock-work, &c., and resorted to for coolness in hot weather.

grotto-work, s. Artificial and ornamental rock-work, shell-work, &c., in a garden.

grou-an, s. [GROWAN.]

grŏund, * grond, * gronde, * grounde, * growndd, * grund, s. [A.S. grund; cogn. with Dut. grond; Icel. grunnr; Dan. grund; O.H.Ger. grunt; Ger. grund; Goth. grundus; Sw. grund; O. Fris. & O. S. grund; Gael. grunnd; Ir. grunnt. Probably from A.S. grindan = to grind, the original meaning being dust or earth.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) The surface of the earth; the outer crust of the globe. (Milton: P. L. vii. 332.)

(2) The surface of a floor or pavement, as supposed to be resting upon the earth.

"Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground."—1 Samuel v. 4.

*(3) The pit of a theatre. [GROUNDLING.]

(4) The earth, as distinguished from air or water.

"They . . . soaring the air sublime,
With clang despised the ground."
Milton: P. L., vii. 422.

5. A region, a territory, a country.

"The brook that parts Egypt from Syrian ground." Milton: P. L., I. 421.

(6) Land; estate; property.

"A fair house built on another man's ground."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

(7) Pl.: The ornamental land attached to a house; as a lawn, a park, &c.

(8) The position or place where a body of men is set; the position occupied by an army.

(9) Bottom; solid earth. (Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., i. 3.)

* (10) The lowest depths; the bottom. (Old Eng. Homilies, p. 19.)

2. Figuratively:

(1) (Pl.): The foundation or basis on which anything is built up or supported.

"Not that the grounds of hope were fixed."
Tennyson: Two Voices, 227.

(2) (Pl.): The first or fundamental principles of knowledge.

"Their thoughts will he best taken up in the easy grounds of religion and the story of scripture."—Milton: On Education.

* (3) A fundamental principle.

"Contrary to this true ground of Plato."—Raleigh: Hist. World, bk. i., ch. i., § 15.

(4) The fundamental cause; the true reason, cause, or motive.

"Albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown."—Hooker: Eccles. Polity.

(5) A foil or background to set anything off.

"Like bright metal on a sullen ground."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., i. 2.

(6) Pl.: Sediment; dregs; lees, fæces, at the bottom of liquors: as, the grounds of coffee, &c.

* (7) The bottom; lowest or deepest part.

"Crist saht all hiss hentess ground."
Ormulum, 13,286.

II. Technically:

1. Carpentry:

(1) Pl.: Pieces of wood nailed on as guides for the plastering, which comes flush with the face of the grounds. To them the mouldings and other finishings are nailed.

(2) Framing or pieces forming a basis for other structure, as ground-sills.

(3) Sheathing upon quartering or studding to form a basis for cornice work or mouldings.

2. Engrav.: An acid-resisting composition of asphaltum, four parts; Burgundy pitch, two parts; white wax, one part. This is melted and mixed, and tied up in a silk rag; the plate is heated and the composition smeared on. It is then spread by a silk dabber, and blackened by the smoke of a candle or an oil-lamp. When cool it is ready for the etching-point.

3. Fabric: The prevailing colour.

4. Japan.: The pigment mixed with hard varnish which forms the basis for the japan or polished varnish surface.

5. Mining: Strata containing the mineral lode, or coal seam; also called the country.

6. Music:

(1) A composition in which the base, consisting of a few bars of independent notes, is continually repeated to a continually varying melody.

(2) The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

"For on that ground I'll build a holy descant."
Shakesp.: Richard III., iii. 7.

7. Painting:

(1) The first layer of paint placed upon canvas previous to the commencement of the artist's work on a picture; the substratum of house-painting.

(2) Pl.: The substance with which the canvas and panel are covered to render them fit for painting on. Grounds are either absorbent or non-absorbent. Absorbent grounds are prepared by mixing chalk or plaster into a paste with animal glue or flour paste. By the old painters, gold grounds were used. Also called priming.

8. Sculpt.: The flat surface from which the figures rises; said of works in relief.

9. Sports: The place, or piece of ground assigned to a player.

10. Telegraphy:

(1) An accidental connection between the line wire and the earth.

(2) The earth in its capacity as the return-circuit carrying body. The wire is carried to earth and connected to a ground-plate, or in cities to a water or gas-main, which forms an admirable and extensive conductor.

¶ For the difference between ground and foundation, see FOUNDATION.

¶ 1. To break ground:

(1) Lit.: To penetrate or cut through the soil for the first time.

(2) Fig.: To take the first step, or make the first move in any direction or undertaking; to make a start.

* 2. To come to the ground: To fall to the ground. (Lit. & fig.)

3. To fall to the ground: To come to nought; to fail.

4. To gain ground:

(1) To advance; to make way against opposition; to meet with success.

(2) To prevail; to become more general or widely spread.

"I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places."—Temple.

* 5. To gather ground: To gain ground.

"And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning." Milton: P. L., xii. 631.

* 6. To get ground: To gain ground.

"They got ground and vantage of the king."
Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV., ii. 3.

* 7. To give ground: To give way; to yield; to recede; to retire.

"Giving no ground unto the house of York."
Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., ii. 6.

8. To lose ground:

(1) To be driven back; to retreat; to give way.

"At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground."—Sidney.

(2) To lose advantage.

"He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far."—Dryden: Fables. (Pref.)

(3) To lose credit; to become less general or extensive.

9. To stand one's ground: To stand firm; not to yield or give way.

"He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity."—Atterbury.

10. To take the ground:

Naut.: To touch the bottom; to become stranded.

* 11. To set on ground: To discomfit, to gravel; to run aground.

"To set him on ground, and expose him to the contempt of the people."—Andrewes: Sermons, v. 127.

ground-angling, s. Angling without a float, with the weight placed a few inches from the hook.

ground-annual, s.

Scots Law: A estate created in land by a vassal, who, instead of selling his land for a gross sum, reserves an annual ground-rent from the vendee, this ground-rent being a perpetual charge upon the land.

ground-ash, s.

1. A young ash-plant; an ash sapling.

"Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call ground-ash."—Mortimer: Husbandry.

2. Ægopodium Podagraria.

ground-bailiff, s.

Min.: A man who has the supervision of a mine or mines; an overseer.

ground-bait, s. Bait made of barley or malt boiled and dropped into the bottom of the water where a person intends to fish for the purpose of attracting the fish thither.

"Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait and to fish."—Walton: Angler.

ground-base, ground-bass, s.

Music: A bass passage of four or eight bars in length, constantly repeated, each successive time accompanied with a varied melody and harmony.

† ground-bear, s.

Zool.: Ursus arctos.

ground-beetles, s. pl.

Entom.: The predatory family of Carabidæ (q.v.). They pursue their prey upon the ground.

* ground-chamber, s. A room or apartment on the ground floor.

"A ground-chamber just under the college-library."—Mede. Life, p. 72.

ground-cherry, s.

Bot.: (1) Cerasus Chamæcerasus; (2) In America, Physalis viscosa.

ground-cistus, s.

Bot.: Rhododendron Chamæcistus.

ground-crista, s.

Bot.: Cassia Chamæcrista.

ground-cuckoos, s. pl.

Ornith.: Cuckoos of the genus Centropus. They have a long hind claw like that of a lark. (Swainson.) ground-cypress, s.

Bot.: Santolina Chamæcyparissus.

ground doves, s. pl. [GROUND-PIGEONS.]

ground-elder, s.

Bot.: Dogs' Mercury, Mercurialis perennis.

ground-enell, s.

Bot.: Scandix pecten.

ground-fern, s.

Bot.: Nephrodium Thelypteris. (Britten & Holland.)

ground-finches, s. pl.

Ornith.: The name given by Swainson to Fringillinæ, the typical sub-family of the family Fringillidæ.

ground-flax, s.

Bot.: The genus Camelina (q.v.).

ground-floor, s. The lower story of a house; the floor on a level, or nearly so, with the exterior ground.

* ground-form, s.

Gram.: The stem or basis of a word to which the inflexions are added in declension or conjugation.

ground-furze, s.

Bot.: Ononis arvensis.

ground-glass, s. Glass whose surface is ground, so as to break up the pencils of light passing through it, preventing the passage of a distinct image. Lamp globes are ground in order to mellow and disperse the light passing through them. The process is effected by the wheel, sand-blast, by rotating with pebbles inside, or by fluoric acid.

ground-gru, s. The name given in Lincolnshire to ground-ice (q.v.).

ground-hele, s.

Bot.: Veronica officinalis.

ground-hemlock, s.

Bot.: Taxus baccata, a creeping variety of the Common Yew. (American.) ground-hog, s.

Zoology:

1. The name given by the English at the Cape of Good Hope to Orycteropus capensis, a mammal like a short-legged hog; called by the Dutch aardvark (q.v.)

2. The American name for Arctomys monax, the woodchuck of New England. (Goodrich & Porter.)

* ground-hold, s.

Naut.: Tackle for holding on to the ground.

"Like as a ship with dreadfull storm long tost, Having spent all her masts and her ground-hold."
Spenser: F. Q., VI. iv. 1.

ground-honeysuckle, s.

Bot.: Lotus corniculatus. (Britten & Holland.)

ground-ice, s.

Hydrol., Geol., &c.: Ice which forms at the bottom of a river or other body of water, before the surface appears to freeze. As water at 40° F. is heavier than that at 32°, the former tends to sink and the latter to rise. It is therefore difficult to explain why, in some cases, the former should freeze first. Such, however, is the fact. Ground-ice can bring up gravel and even boulders from the bottom of a river, and float them away. It has been observed to do so in the Siberian rivers, in the Baltic, and even in the Thames. (Lyell.) Called also Anchor-ice and Ground-gru.

ground-ivy, s.

Bot.: Nepeta Glechoma, a labiate plant, with blue purple flowers and deeply crenate pubescent leaves, common in Britain in hedgerows and copses. It is found also in the north of Europe, on the continent of Asia, and in Japan. It flowers from March to June. It is bitter and aromatic. It was formerly used for beer and tea. Country people employ it as a pectoral medicine.

ground-jasmine, s.

Bot.: Stellera Chamæjasma.

ground-joint, s

Mach.: A joint made by grinding together two pieces of metal with emery and oil; or pieces of glass with fine sand and water; the glass stopper is a specimen of the latter.

ground-joist, s.
Carp.: A joist of the basement or ground-floor; often termed a sleeper.

ground-lackey, s.
Entom.: Clisiocampa castrensis, a moth of the family Bombycidæ, which occurs on the banks of the Thames below Erith.

ground-law, s. Fundamental or essential law. (C. Kingsley.)  ground-layer, s. One who lays the foundation of anything; the origin or cause.

"He was the ground-layer of the other peace."—Stow (an. 1603).

ground-laying, s.
Porcelain: A coating of boiled oil to the surface of porcelain, in course of manufacture, to receive the colour; bossing.

ground-line, s.
Geom. & Perspect.: The line of intersection of the horizontal and vertical planes of projection.

ground-liverwort, s.
Bot.: A lichen, Peltidea canina. Dog-lichen.

ground-lizard, s.
Zool.: Ameiva dorsalis, a small lizard from the West Indies. It frequents roadsides and open pastures in Jamaica.

ground-mail, s. Money or a fee paid for the right of interring a corpse in a churchyard. (Scotch.) ground-marker, s.

1. An implement for laying off corn-rows. It is frequently attached to a corn-planter, to make a mark for planting on the next bout.
2. An apparatus for marking out the ground for cricket or lawn-tennis.

ground-mould, s.
Civ. Eng.: A templet or frame by which the surface of the ground is brought to the required form, as in terracing or embanking.

ground-needle, s.
Bot.: Erodium moschatum.

 ground-nest, s. A nest built on the ground.
"And now the herald lark Left his ground-nest." Milton: P. R., ii. 280.

ground-niche, s.
Arch.: A niche having its base or seat on a level with the ground-floor.

ground-nut, s.
Bot.: Various plants; spec. (1) Arachis hypogæa; (2) the Earth-nut, Bunium flexuosum; (3) Apios tuberosa; (4) an American name for Panax trifolium.

ground-oak, s.
1. Ord. Lang.: An oak sapling.
2. Bot.: Teucrium Chamæpitys.

ground-pearl, s.
Entom.: Coccus or Margarodes formicarum, found in ants' nests in the West Indies. (Goodrich & Porter.) ground-pig, s.

Zoology:
1. A South African mammal, Aulacodus Swinderianus.
2. & 3. The same as Ground-hog (q.v.).

ground-pigeons, ground-doves, s.pl.
Ornith.: The family Gourdæ (q.v.).

ground-pine, s.
Botany:
1. Ajuga Chamæpitys. It is not of the pine, but of the mint order, and is an annual villous plant with the cauline leaves tri-partite, and the solitary axillary flowers yellow. It grows on the continent of Europe, in the north of Africa, and the west of Asia. Said to be called pine from its resinous smell.
2. Persoonia Chamæpitys.
3. Lycopodium complanatum and L. Carolinanum, two species of club mosses growing in the eastern United States, the latter a trailing evergreen, with erect slender peduncles, which is used largely for Christmas wreaths.

ground-plan, s.
Arch.: A representation, on a horizontal plane, of the foundation or of the arrangement of the lower tier of rooms of a building.

ground-plane, s.
Perspect.: The horizontal plane of projection in perspective drawing.

ground-plate, s.
1. Build.: The lower horizontal timber of a building on which the frame is erected; a sill.
2. Rail. Eng.: A bed-plate for sleepers or ties in some kinds of ground. [Mudsill.]
3. Teleg.: A metallic plate buried in the earth to conduct the electric current thereto. It should bear a certain proportion to the size of the conductor which is attached to it; it should have a surface as many times larger than the surface of the conductor as the difference in the conductivity of the conductor and the earth. Connection to the pipes of a gas or water-main is usual in cities.

ground-plot, s.
I. Literally:
1. The ground upon which any building is placed.
2. The same as Ground-plan (q.v.).
II. Fig.: Any basis or foundation.

ground-plum, s.
Bot.: Astragalus caryocarpus, found in the United States. It is not a genuine plum, but a papilionaceous plant.

ground-rat, s. The same as Ground-pig (q.v.).

ground-rent, s. Rent paid for the privilege of building on the ground of another.
"The ground-rent is scarce anything."—Smith: Wealth of Nations, bk. v., ch. ii.

 ground-room, s. A room on the ground-floor of a house.
"I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him."—Tatler.

ground-rope, s. The rope along the bottom of a trawl-net.

ground-seat, s.
Sadd.: A ply of canvas or linsey drawn over the straining which supports the padding and seat of a saddle.

ground-snake, s.
Zool.: Celuta amœna, a salmon-coloured snake of small size, and not venomous, occurring in the United States. Called also Worm-snake.

ground-squirrel, s.
Zool.: Tamias, a genus of burrowing squirrels, found in the United States. One species is called the Chipmunk.

ground-star, s.
Bot.: Geastrum (q.v.).

ground-table, s.
Arch.: The foundation course of stones.

ground-tackle, s.
Naut.: The ropes and tackle connected with the anchors and mooring apparatus.

ground-tier, s.
1. Nautical:
* (1) The lowest range of water-casks in the hold of a vessel.
(2) The lowest range of any materials or commodities stored in the hold.
2. Theat.: The lower or pit range of boxes in a theatre.

ground-timbers, s. pl.
Shipbuild.: Those which lie on the keel and are bolted to the keelson; floor-timbers.

ground-ways, s. pl.
Shipbuild.: The large blocks and planks which support the cradle on which a ship is launched.

ground-wheel, s.
Agric.: That wheel of a harvester which, resting on the ground, is turned by contact therewith, when the machine is at work, and which drives the cutter.

ground-willow, s.
Bot.: Polygonum amphibium, the form which grows on land. (Britten & Holland.) ground, * grounde, * growd-yn, * grund, v.t. & t. [A.S. gryndan; O. H. Ger. grunten; Dut. gronden; Sw. grunda; Dan. grunde.]

A. Transitive:
I. Ordinary Language:
1. Literally:
(1) To set or place upon or in the ground.
"Every burgher . . . should ground arms in token of submission."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.
(2) To bring to the ground; to bring down.
"What paetricks at a shot he grundit."
Hogg: Scottish Pastorals, p. 7.
(3) To found; to lay the foundation of.
"It es to the sawl als a wall Grunded ful fast." Cursor Mundi, 28,852.
2. Figuratively:
(1) To found, as upon a cause, reason, principle, or basis; to base.
"One is art, another is rhetorike, in which two all laws of mens reason been grounded."—Chaucer: Testament of Love, bk. iii.
(2) To instruct thoroughly in the first or elementary principles.
"He was grounded in astronomye"
Chaucer C. T., 416.
II. Naut.: To run ashore or aground; to cause to take the ground; as, To ground a vessel.
B. Intransitive:
Naut.: To run ashore or aground; to take the ground.
¶ For the difference between to ground and to found, see Found.

ground, pret. & pa. par. of v. [Grind, v.] ground'-age (age as ĭj), s. [Eng. ground; -age.] A tax or due paid for the ground or space occupied by a ship while in port.

"It is ordinary to take toll and custom for anchorage, groundage, &c."—Spelman: Of the Admiral Jurisdiction.

ground'-ĕd, pa. par. or a. [Ground, v.]

 ground'-ĕd-lȳ, adv. [Eng. grounded; -ly.] In a grounded or firmly-established manner; upon firm grounds or principles.
"He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject."—Glanvill.

 ground'-ĕn, pa. par. [Grind, v.] ground'-hecle, s. [Ground-hele.]

ground'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Ground, v.]
A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).
C. As subst.: The act or process of founding or establishing; instruction in elementary principles.

grounding-in, s. The application of the secondary and subsequent colours to a cotton cloth, after it has received the colour of the first block. It is a term used in hand-block printing, and the grounding-in or re-entering may be of a mordant, a topical colour, or a resist. The correspondence of position of the colour in the pattern is secured by points on the block; equivalent to the register-point of the chromatic process of letterpress-printing or lithography.

grounding-tool, s.
Engr.: The rocker by which the mezzotint steel plate is roughened.

 ground'-ĭng-lȳ, adv. [Eng. grounding; -ly.] On firm or sure grounds or principles.
"He hath given the first hint of speaking groundingly and to the purpose."—Digby: Of Bodies, ch. xxxii.

ground'-lĕss, * ground-les, a. [A.S. grundlás; O. H. Ger. gruntlos; Icel. grunnlaus; Dan. grundlös; Ger. grundlos.]
* 1. Having no bottom; bottomless.
"I wolde it were a groundles pit." Gower, iii. 254.
2. Having no ground or foundation; wanting reason or cause for support; baseless, unauthorized.
"Is it but a groundless creed?"
Wordsworth: Glen-Almain.

ground'-lĕss-lȳ, adv. [Eng. groundless; -ly.] In a groundless manner; without any ground, reason, or cause.
"Divers persons . . . have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors."—Boyle: On Colours.

grŏund'-lĕss-nĕss, s. [Eng. groundless; -ness.] The quality or state of being groundless or without just reason, cause, or foundation.

"Sophron alone might evince the groundlessness of such an opinion."—F. Knox: Essays, No. 159.

grŏund'-lĭng, s. [Eng. ground, and dimin. suff. -ling.]

* 1. Ord. Lang.: A spectator who stood on the floor of a theatre; hence, one of the vulgar.

"To split the ears of the groundlings."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 2.

2. Zoology:

(1) Various fishes which tend to keep to the bottom of the water in which they live; spec., the Spined Loach, Cobitis taenia.

(2) Gobius niger, more commonly called the Black Goby, Rock Goby, or Rock-fish.

 grŏund'-lў, * grund-lichc, * grund-like, a. & adv. [O. H. Ger. gruntlicho; Dut. grondelijk; Ger. gründlich.]

A. As adj.: Hearty, strong.

"Ich habbe bigunnen a weorc mid grundliche strengthe." Layamon, ii. 233.

B. As adverb:

1. Heartily, strongly.

"O bok ful grundlike he swore." Havelok, 2,307.

2. Deeply; solidly; not superficially.

"A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself in using by epitome to draw other men's works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room."—Ascham.

grŏunds, s. pl. [Ground, s.] grŏund'-sel (1), grŏund'-swĕll, *grene-swel, * groun-soyle, * grun-sel, ground-ie-swal-low, s. [A.S. grundeswylige, grundeswelge, grundeswilie, grundswylige, lit. = ground-swallower—i.e., occupier of the ground, abundant weed, from grund = ground, and swelgan = to swallow.]

Bot.: A composite plant with pinnatifid leaves and small yellow flowers, as a rule with no rays, which grows as a weed in gardens, and is given to cage-birds, which are fond of the seeds.

"This groundswell is an hearbe much like in shape to germander."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xxv., ch. xiii.

grŏund'-sĕl (2), grŏund'-sĭll, *ground-syll, *grun-sel, s. [Eng. ground; -sill.]

I. Literally:

1. A sleeper; the lower timber which supports the remainder of the frame.

* 2. A threshold.

"[He] so fyll downe deed on the groundsyll."—Berners: Froissart; Cronycle, vol. i., ch. clxxvi.

* II. Fig.: A groundwork; a basis; a foundation.

"Who the groundsill of that work doth lay."
Drayton: Lady Geraldine to Earl of Surrey.

groundsel-tree, s.

Bot.: Baccharis halimifolia, a North American composite plant.

 grŏund'-sĭll, v.t. [Groundsill, s.] To furnish with, or as with a threshold.

"They groundsilled every door with diamond."
Quarles: Emblems, v. 14.

grŏund'-sŭp, *grownde-sope, *grund-sope, s. [A.S. grundsópa; Dut. grondsop; Ger. grundsuppe.] Dregs, lees, grounds.

"Growndesope of any lycoure. Fex, sedimen."—Prompt. Parv.

grŏund'-swĕll (2), s. [Eng. ground, and swell (s).] A long, deep swell, or rolling of the sea, occasioned along the shore, or where water is shallow, by a distant storm or gale.

"Heavily the groundswell rolled."
Longfellow: Sir Humphrey Gilbert.

grŏund'-wăll, *grownd-walle, *grund-wal, s. [A.S. grundweal; M. H. Ger. gruntwal; Sw. grundval.] A foundation.

"Crist iss stan to ben grunndwall Off all hiss hallghe temmple."
Ormulum, 13,372.

grŏund'-wŏrk, s. [Eng. ground, and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; that which forms the foundation or basis of anything.

"The groundwork is of stars." Dryden

2. A fundamental principle; the fundamental part.

"The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations upon every occasion as may best."—Milton: On Education.

3. The first principle; the original reason.

"The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain."—Spenser: State of Ireland.

grôup, s. [Fr. groupe, from Ital. groppo = a knot, heap, or group, from Ger. kropf = a bunch, a crop, or craw; cf. Icel. kroppr = a bunch or hunch on the body; Scotch craupen = hump-backed.]

I. Ord. Lang.: An assemblage; a cluster or number of persons or things collected without any regular arrangement or order.

II. Technically:

1. Art: The union of several figures, or of various material objects placed in contact with each other, for the purpose of forming a single mass. It is necessary that some of the figures comprised in a group be subordinate to the rest, that those which are most important in the action be also the most prominent, and call the attention to the place which they occupy in the group by the attitude, light, development, &c.

2. Music:

(1) A series of notes, of small time-value, grouped together; a division or run.

(2) The method of setting out band parts in score.

3. Natural Science:

(1) Min.: A number of minerals essentially agreeing in their chemical composition. Dana has a group called fluorides, another called oxygen-compounds, &c. Many of these again are sub-divided.

(2) Geol.: A series of rocks, or strata, which, speaking broadly, were deposited at the same period. Lyell arranged the fossiliferous strata in groups and periods, the former referring to the order of succession on the surface of the earth, the latter to the series of events thence inferred.

(3) Bot.: A particular grade in classification. Lindley had groups in his Natural System of Botany, though he abolished them in his Vegetable Kingdom. The designation "group" was inferior in extent to "sub-class," and superior to "alliance." He made them end in -osa, as Albuminosa.

(4) Zool.: A designation which may be considered as equivalent to "tribe," and superior to "family." Stainton, in his British Butterflies, makes them end in -ina, as Bombycina, Noctuina, &c.

grôup, v.t. [Group, s. Fr. grouper.] To form into or place in a group; to bring together into a group or cluster; to arrange in a group or groups; specif., in art to combine or arrange in groups a number of material objects or figures so as to produce a picturesque and harmonious whole.

grôup'-ēr, s. A serranoid fish inhabiting the Southern Atlantic coasts of the United States. Also spelled grooper.

grôup'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Group, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. Ord. Lang.: The act of forming or placing in groups; as arrangement in groups.

2. Art: The combining or joining objects in a picture for the satisfaction of the eye, and also for its repose; and although a picture may consist of different groups, yet these groups of objects, managed by the chiaro-oscuro, should all tend to unity.

 grôup'-lĕt, s. [Eng. group; dimin. suff. -let.] A little group.

grôuse, * growse, * grouss, s. [Etym. doubtful. According to Skeat grouse is a false form, evolved as a supposed singular from the older word grice (cf. mouse, mice). Grice is from O. Fr. griesche = gray or peckled (speckled), poule griesche = a moorhen, the hen of the grice or moorgame. (Cotgrave.)]

Ornithology, &c.:

1. Sing.: Various game-birds, specially the Tetrao tetrix, called the Black-grouse, and Lagopus scoticus, the Red-grouse. The male of the former is called the Black-cock (q.v.), and the female the Grey-hen. The Red, called also the Common Grouse, inhabits moors, feeding on the young shoots of the heath. It is considered to be peculiar to Britain.

2. Pl.: The family Tetraonidæ.

grouse-family, s. pl.

Ornith.: The family Tetraonidæ (q.v.). Besides Tetrao it contains the genus Lagopus (Ptarmigan), &c. The Ruffled-grouse is the genus Bonasia, Sand-grouse are the family Pteroclidæ, and the Wood-grouse is the the Capercailzie (q.v.).

 grôuse, v.i. [Grouse, s.] To hunt after or shoot grouse.

grou-some, a. [Grewsome.]

grôut, * grut, s. [A.S. grit = groats, coarse meal; cogn. with Dut. grut = groats; Icel. grautr = porridge; Dan. gröd = boiled groats; Sw. gröt = thick pap; Ger. grütze = groats; Lat. rudus = rubble, rubbish. Allied to grit and a doublet of groats.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Coarse meal; pollard.

"As for grout, it is an old Danish dish."—King: Art of Cookery, let. 5.

* 2. Rubbish, dirt, filth.

3. (Pl.): Lees, grounds, dregs.

4. That which purges off.

5. A kind of thick ale; liquor with malt infused for ale or beer before it is fully boiled.

6. A species of wild apple.

II. Building:

1. A thin, coarse mortar used to run into crevices between the stones or bricks of a structure.

2. A finishing or setting coat of fine stuff for ceilings.

grôut, v.t. [Grout, s.]

Build.: To fill up the joints or spaces between stones by pouring in grout.

 grôut'-hĕad, s. [A corrupt. of O. Fr. grosse-teste = great head.] A blockhead; a thick-head.

"Yet trust not Hob Grouthead, for sleeping too long."
Tusser: May's Husbandry, § 82.

grôut'-ĭng, s. [Eng. grout; -ing.]

Building:

1. The act or process of filling up the joints or spaces between stones by pouring in grout.

2. Grout.

 grôut'-nōl, * grôut'-nōld, s. [Cf. grout-head; nol = head.]

1. A blockhead.

"That same dwarfe's a pretty boy, but the squire's a groutnold."—Beaum. & Flet.: Knight of the Burning Pestle, ii.

2. A kind of fish.

grôut'-ў, a.

1. Turbid, or full of dregs.

2. Of persons: Irritable, disagreeable.

grōve, s. [A derivative from grave = to cut Hence grove is a doublet of groove (q.v.).]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: A cluster or group of trees shading an avenue or walk; a small wood.

"Then shuldest never out of this grove pace."
Chaucer: C. T., 1,604.

2. Fig.: A cluster or group of objects resembling a grove or wood.

II. Comparative Religion:

1. Ethnic: The sacred character of groves is closely but not inseparably connected with Tree- and Serpent-worship (q.v.). Bearing in mind the dictum of Statius (Theb., iii. 661), "Primus in orbe deos fecit timor," one can imagine how the solitude and mystery of primeval forests must have wrought on uncultured races, and led them to hold such places in reverence as the abode of the mighty and not always beneficent nature-forces. As man progressed, and the objects of his worship became personified, the sacred character of groves by no means passed away. The grove at Dodona, and Grant Allen's spirited translation of Catullus (Carm. lxiii.), in which we read of the frantic fury of Atys, of his repentance and flight, and how when the turret-crowned goddess heard his plaint, she sent one of her lions after the fugitive, with the result that he "Fled back to the grove aghast, There all the days of his lifetime as Cybelle's thrall he passed"— will prove the case for Greece; and there is scarcely a Latin poet whose works do not furnish instances in point. Ovid (Met. viii. 741, sqq.) tells of the fate that befel Erisichthon, because he ravaged Ceres' sacred grove—i.e., in which Ceres herself was worshipped. The Germania of Tacitus (7, 9, 39, 40, 43) furnishes the earliest testimony to the estimation in which groves were held by Teutonic and kindred nations. Other passages occur in the Annals and the History, and Stallybrass thus Englishes Grimm's (Deut. Myth., ch. iv.) condensation of them :—

"Gods dwell in these groves; no images are mentioned by name as being set up, no temple walls are reared. But sacred vessels and altars stand in the forest, heads of animals hang on the boughs of trees. There divine worship is performed and sacrifice offered."

From Pliny (H. N., xvi. 95) we learn the part that groves of oak-trees played among the ancient Druids, and he seems to favour the derivation of their name from the Greek δρῦς. There is also a fine passage on the same subject in Lucan (Phar., i. 447–54). In remote places, a belief in the sacredness of groves still lingers. Sir John Lubbock (Origin of Civilisation (1882), p. 287) says that "even recently an oak copse in the Isle of Skye was held to be so sacred that no one would venture to cut the smallest branch from it." Dennis (Buried Cities of Etruria, i. 57) says that he saw a clump of trees on Monte Musino, and considers it a relic of a sacred grove; and Fergusson (Rude Stone Monuments, ch. xiii.) says of the Khonds and the Khassias, "In Cuttack we have sacred groves, human sacrifices, and a powerful priesthood, all savouring of Druidism."

2. Jewish :

(1) In a solitary passage of the Old Testament, "grove" is the probably correct rendering of the Hebrew word אֶשֶׁל (eshel). Abraham "planted" one in Beersheba, and "called there on the name of the Lord, the everlasting God" (Gen. xxi. 33). The original meaning of the word Eshel is a particular tree; Gesenius thinks the Oriental Tamarisk (Tamarix orientalis), which, however, would scarcely be shady enough. אֵלוֹן (Elon), rendered in the Authorized Version "plain," seems to mean "grove." If so, then Abraham at a certain period lived in one, that of Mamre (Gen. xiv. 13), and built an altar in it to Jehovah (Gen. xiii. 18); whilst in a second one there was an important pillar (Judg. ix. 6). Other groves were those of Moreh (Gen. xii. 6), of Zaanaim (Judg. iv. 11), of Tabor (1 Sam. x. 3), &c.

(2) In all other cases in the text of the A. V., "grove" is the rendering of the Hebrew word אֲשֵׁרָה (Asherah), which is almost certainly an idol, and not a plantation of trees, for Josiah brought one out of the house of the Lord (2 Kings xxiii. 6). The people of Judah also "built them" high places, images, and groves (1 Kings xiv. 23). The combination of images and groves occurs constantly (2 Kings xvii. 16; 2 Chron. xiv. 3; Isa. xxvii. 9, &c.). The idol seems to have been of wood, for it could both be cut down (Exod. xxxiv. 13; Deut. vii. 5; Judg. vi. 25–28; 2 Kings xviii. 4, xxiii. 14; 2 Chron. xiv. 3, xxxi. 1, xxxiv. 3–4) and burnt (Deut. xii. 3; 2 Kings xxiii. 15). It was upright (?), and therefore probably of the human and not the bestial form (Isa. xxvii. 9). The name Asherah recalls that of the Phœnician goddess Ashtoreth; the former, as suggested by Bertheau, being probably the name of her idol, the latter of herself. There was a relation between Baal and Asherah, and while in Elijah's time there assembled at Carmel 450 prophets of Baal, there were with them 400 "prophets of the groves" (1 Kings xviii. 19). The Asherah seems to have been connected with phallic rites. [Ashtoreth.] grove-dock, s.

Bot. : Rumex Nemolapathum.

grove-spirits, s. pl. [Forest-spirits.]

Grove, s. [William Robert Grove, F.R.S.]

Grove battery, Grove's battery, s.

Elect. Mach.: A double fluid galvanic-battery, invented, in 1839, by Mr. Grove. It consists of a plate of amalgamated zinc, generally bent into a shape like the letter U, so as to embrace a flat cell of porous earthenware in which is suspended a sheet of platinum foil. The porous cell is filled with strong nitric acid, and the whole arrangement placed in a jar containing dilute acid one in twenty.

Grove's cell, s.

Elect. : A cell or jar of a Grove's battery.

"The destructive force of a Grove's cell."—Everett : C. G. S. System of Units (1875), ch. xi., p. 74.

Grove's gas-battery, s.

Elect. Mach. : A battery in which there are two glass tubes, and within each a platinum electrode, covered with finely-divided platinum, and furnished on the outside with binding screws. One of the tubes is partially filled with hydrogen, the other partially with oxygen, and they are inverted over dilute sulphuric acid, so that half the platinum is in the liquid and half in the gases. By joining the dissimilar plates a battery is produced so powerful that one element of it will decompose iodide of potassium, and four will decompose water. (Ganot.) grŏv'-ĕl, v.i. [From the adv. groveling (q.v.), the termination -ing being mistaken for the sign of the pr. par. of a verb.] [Grof.]

1. Lit. : To creep on the earth; to lie prone or with the face towards the ground; to move with the body prostrate on the earth.

"Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire."
Milton : P. L., i. 280.

2. Fig. : To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation; to act meanly; to take pleasure in mean or base things.

"Several thoughts may be natural which are low and grovelling."—Addison : Spectator.

grō've-like, a. [Eng. grove, and like.] Thick, bushy; resembling a grove.

"Once, grove-like, each huge arm a tree."
Tennyson : Aylmer's Field, 510.

 grĕv'-el-ĭng, * grof-lynges, * grov-el-yng, * gruf-el-ynge, * gruf-linges, adv. [Icel. grúfa, in the phrase liggja á grufu = to lie grovelling.] [Grof.] Prone; flat on one's face or belly.

"Grouelyng to his fete thay felle."
E. Eng. Allit. Poems; Pearl, 1,119.

grŏv'-el-ĕr, s. [Eng. grovel; -er.] One who grovels; a person of low, mean spirit or tastes.

"This lagging race of frosty grovellers."—Johnson : Lives of the Poets; Milton.

grŏv'-ĕl-lĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Grovel.]

A. As pa. par. : (See the verb).

B. As adjective :

1. Lying prone or flat on the face; creeping on the belly or in the dust.

"Downward fell into a grovelling swine."
Milton : Comus, 53.

2. Mean, base, low; with low tastes or desires.

"I was a grovelling creature once."
Cowper : Olney Hymns, lii.

C. As subst. : The act of lying or creeping on the belly; mean; base conduct or desires.

"Sink without grovelling : without rashness rise."
Broome : To Pope.

 grōv'-ĕt, s. [Eng. grov(e); dimin. suff. -et.] A little grove.

"With divers boscages and grovets upon the steep or hanging grounds thereof."—Beaum. & Flet. : A Masque; The Device.

 grōv'-ў, a. [Eng. grov(e); -y.] Pertaining to or abounding in groves.

grōw, * growe, * grow-yn, v.i. & t. [A.S. grówan (pa. t. greów, pa. par. grówen): cogn. with Dut. groeijen; Icel. gróa; Dan. groe; Sw. gro; allied to green (q.v.).]

A. Intransitive :

I. Literally :

1. To increase or become enlarged; to increase in bulk by the assimilation of new matter into the living organism.

"Fair hangs the apple frae the rock,
But we will leave it growing."
Wordsworth : Yarrow Unvisited.

2. To be produced by vegetation; to spring up and come to maturity by a natural process.

"Not fairer grows the lily of the vale."
Falconer : Shipwreck, i.

3. To increase in stature.

"I hope he is much grown since last I saw him."
Shakesp. : Richard III., ii. 4.

4. To issue or spring, as plants out of a soil.

II. Figuratively :

1. To increase in any way; to become larger, greater, stronger, or more prevalent; to wax; to be augmented.

"The growing labours of the lengthened way."
Pope : Essay on Criticism, 230.

2. To advance to any state.

"Days that grow to something strange."
Tennyson : In Memoriam, lxx. 11.

* 3. To increase in number.

"Growe ye and be ye multiplied."—Wycliffe : Genesis i. 28.

4. To improve; to make progress; to advance.

"Grow in grace."—2 Peter iii. 18.

5. To come forward, to come nearer; to advance.

"It was now the beginning of October, and winter began to grow fast on."—Knolles : Hist. of the Turkes.

6. To accrue; to be forthcoming.

"And he seith, this thing I schal do: I schal throwe doune my bernes: and I schal make gretter, and thidir I schal gedere thingis that growen to me in my goodis."—Wycliffe : Luke xii.

* 7. To be due or owing.

"Ev'n just the sum that I do owe to you,
Is growing to me by Antipholus."
Shakesp. : Comedy of Errors, iv. 1.

8. To be changed from one state to another; to become.

"I should grow light-headed, I fear."
Tennyson : Maud, I. xix. 100.

9. To arise, to spring; to proceed as from a cause or reason, as plants out of a soil. (Followed by out.)

"They will not seem stuck into him, but growing out of him."—Dryden : Virgil; Æneid. (Dedic.)

10. To adhere, to become attached; to take root, to become rooted. (Followed by to or unto.)

"That we become a part of what has been,
And grow unto the spot, all-seeing but unseen."
Byron : Childe Harold, iv. 183.

* 11. To awell.

"Mariners are used to the tumbling and rolling of ships from side to side, when the sea is never so little grown."—Raleigh : Hist. of the World.

B. Trans. : To cause to grow; to cultivate; to raise by cultivation; to produce: as, To grow wheat, &c.

¶ 1. To grow up :

(1) To arrive at manhood, to advance to full stature or maturity; to attain full growth.

(2) To close and adhere; to become united in one body.

2. To grow together : To become united in one body; to be closely united; to be incorporated. (Lit. & fig.).

"We grew together like a double cherry."
Shakesp. : Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2.

¶ For the difference between to grow and to be, see Be.

grōw'-ąn, s. [Arm. grouan = aand.]

Min. : Decomposed granite.

¶ Soft growan : A name commonly applied to any decomposed gritty rock. (Weale.) growan-lode, s.

Mining : Any lode which abounds in rough gravel or sand.

 growe, s. [Grove.]

 growe, v. [Grow.]

grōw'-ĕr, s. [Eng. grow; -er.]

1. One who or that which grows or increases in bulk or size.

"It will grow to a great bigness, being the quickest grower of any kind of elm."—Mortimer : Husbandry.

2. One who grows, cultivates, or raises; a producer, a cultivator.

grōw'-ĭng, * grow-ynge, pr. par., a. & s. [Grow.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj. : (See the verb).

C. As substantive :

1. The act or state of increasing in bulk by natural process; growth.

"Lich to tres he hath growing."—Gower, i. 35.

2. The act or business of raising or producing vegetables, &c.; cultivation.

* 3. That which has grown; a growth, a crop.

"A more thicke and more large growyng of heare."—Udal : Corinthians xi.

growing-point, s.

Bot. : A minute cellular axis in the centre of a bud, from which growth proceeds. It is in direct communication with the woody and cellular tissue of the stem.

growing-slide, s. A cell formed between two glasses, adapted as a slide for a microscope, and supplied with water by the capillary action of a few filaments of cotton extending thence to a little reservoir of water. It is designed for preserving algæ or infusoria in a growing condition.

grŏwl (1), v.i. & t. [Dut. grollen = to grumble; Ger. grollen = to be angry, to bear ill will, to rumble; Gr. γρυλλίζω (grullizō) = to grunt, γρυλλός (grullos) = a pig, from γρῦ (gru) = a grunt.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To snarl or murmur like an angry cur.

"The gaunt mastiff, growling at the gate."
Pope: Moral Essays, iii. 108.

2. To grumble; to speak angrily or gruffly.

"'What took him there?' growled the King."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xvi.

3. To make a hoarse, murmuring sound.

"The growling winds contend."
Armstrong: Art of Preserving Health, bk. i.

B. Trans.: To utter or express in a growling or gruff manner.

"Growled defiance in such angry sort."
Cowper: Task, vi. 379.

growl (2), v.i. [A corrup. of crawl (q.v.).] To crawl, to creep.

"Lice continually growling out of his fleshe."—Udal: Apoph. of Erasmus, p. 178.

growl, s. [Growl, v.] The snarl of an angry cur; a grumbling or gruff sound made by an angry person; a grumble, a complaint.

growl'-ẽr, s. [Eng. growl; -er.]

1. Lit.: One who growls; a grumbling, gruff person.

2. Fig.: A four-wheeled cab. (Slang.)

"He had evidently studied the driver of a London growler, and produced a good sound readable type of man."—Daily Telegraph, Oct. 16, 1883.

growl'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Growl, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of snarling or grumbling; a growl.

growl'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. growling; -ly.] In a growling, gruff, or grumbling manner.

growl'-sŏme, a. [Eng. growl; -some.] Inclined to growling or grumbling.

"Growlsome people, who talk about religion, and don't practise it."—E. J. Worboise: Sissie, ch. xxx.

grŏwn, pa. par. & a. [Grow.]

A. As pa. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Increased or advanced in growth.

"Tarry at Jericho till your beards be grown."—2 Samuel x. 5.

2. Advanced to full age, stature, or maturity.

"I saw lately a pair of China shoes, which I was told were for a grown woman, that would scarce have been big enough for one of our little girls."—Locke.

grown-over, a. Overgrown; covered with growth of anything.

"I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding, and lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof."—Proverbs xxiv. 31.

grown-up, a. & s.

A. As adj.: Advanced to full age; full-grown.

B. As subst.: A grown-up person. (Colloq.)

"I always did like grown-ups."—Dickens: Our Mutual Friend, bk. ii., ch. i.

grŏwse, v.i. [Ger. grausen = to make to shudder, to shiver.] To shiver; to have chills. (Scotch.) grŏwth, grothe, s. [Icel. gródhr, gródhi.] [Grow.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act or process of growing; the gradual increase of animal or vegetable bodies by the assimilation of new matter into the living organism; development from a seed, root, or germ by the addition of matter through ducts and secretory vessels.

2. Increase in number, extent, prevalence, bulk, frequency, &c.

"The growth of their trade, riches, and power at home."—Sir W. Temple: On Government.

3. Increase in stature; advance towards maturity.

"Though an animal arrives at its full growth at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life."—Arbuthnot: On Aliments.

4. That which grows or is grown; anything produced in growth; a product.

"The prosperous growth of this tall wood."
Milton: Comus, 269.

II. Technically:

1. Physiology:

(1) Animal: Growth continues as long as the addition of new matter to the body exceeds the amount of waste. This happens in early life; after maturity is reached new matter and waste about balance each other.

(2) Vegetable: Similar principles regulate the growth of plants.

2. Mining: The accumulation of water in the levels of a mine.

¶ Correlation of Growth:

Biol.: [Correlation].

grŏwt'-hĕad, s. [Grouthead.]

grŏwt'-nōl, s. [Groutnol.]

grŏyne (1), s. [Groin (1), s.]

grŏyne (2), s. [Groin (2), s.]

grŏyned, a. [Groined.]

grŏyn'-ĭng, s. [Groin (2), v.]

1. The grunting of a pig.

2. Discontent, grumbling.

grōz'-ĕt, s. [A corruption of Fr. groseille.] A gooseberry. (Scotch.)

"As plump and grey as onie grozet."
Burns: To a Louse.

grōz'-ĭng, a. [Etym. doubtful.]

grozing-iron, s.

1. An instrument with an angular steel projection, used for cutting glass before the general application of the diamond to that object.

2. Plumb.: A tool used in smoothing the solder joints of lead pipe.

grŭb, grobbe, grubbe, grub-byn, v.i. & t. [Prob. a variant of grope (q.v.).]

A. Intransitive:

1. To dig in or under the ground.

"So depe thai grubbed and so fast Thre crosses fand thai at the last."
Legends of Holy Rood, p. 94.

2. To take one's food. (Slang.)

3. To drudge about, to perform low, dirty, or menial work.

B. Transitive:

1. To dig up; to root up by digging; to dig up by the roots. (Generally with out or up.)

2. To supply with food; to provide with victuals. (Slang.)

grŭb, s. [Grub, v.]

1. The chrysalis of an insect; also its larva; a maggot, a caterpillar.

2. A short, thick-set man; a dwarf. (Used in contempt.)

3. A dirty, slovenly person.

4. That which is grubbed up, roots or stumps of trees, &c. (American.)

5. Food, victuals. (Slang.)

grub-axe, s. [Grubbing-axe.]

grub-plank, s. Offal plank used in fastening the cribs and strings of a lumber raft together. (American.) grub-saw, s. A hand-saw used for sawing up marble slabs into strips, such as shelves, mantelpieces, &c. The kerf is started by a narrow chisel while lying upon the rubbing-bed. It has an iron blad notched at the edge, and stiffened by a backing of wood, like the metallic back of a tenon-saw.

grub-stake, s.

Mining: The various supplies furnished to a prospector on condition of participating in the profits of his finds. (U. S. Slang.)

grub-worm, s. A grub.

"And gnats and grub-worms crowded on his view."
Smart: The Hilliad.

grŭb'-bẽr, s. [Eng. grub, v.; -er.]

I. Ord. Lang.: One who or that which grubs.

II. Agriculture:

1. An agricultural implement used for stirring and loosening the soil to plough depth. It is a heavy cultivator drawn by four horses, and supported on wheels.

2. A machine or tool to pull up stumps and roots of bushes, saplings, and small trees.

grŭb'-bĭ-a, s. [Named after Michael Grubb, a Swedish patron of botany.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the order Grubbiaceæ (q.v.).

grŭb'-bĭ-ā'-çē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grubbi(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: The name given in 1841 by Endlicher to an order of epigynous exogens, included by Lindley in Brunniaceæ (q.v.).

grŭb'-bĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Grub, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act or operation of digging or rooting up stumps, roots, &c.

grubbing-axe, s. An implement having a curved bit presented at right angles to the helve, like an adze, and another bit presented in the line of the helve, like an axe; a mattock.

grubbing-hoe, s. A heavy hoe for digging round stumps or stones.

grŭb'-ble, v.i. & t. [A frequent. from grub (q.v.); cf. Ger. grübeln, and Eng. grovel.]

A. Intrans.: To feel or grope as in the dark; to grovel.

"But being now deprived of the image of God, the soul grubbles here below."—Hopkins: On Regeneration, ser. ii.

B. Trans.: To feel with the hands; to grope over.

grŭb'-bў, a. [Eng. grub(b); -y.] Dirty, slovenly. (Hood: A Black Job.)

Grŭb'-strēt, s. & a. [See def.]

A. As substantive:

1. Lit.: Originally the name of a street near Moorfields, in London, much inhabited by men engaged in the production of low-class fugitive literature; whence any mean production is called grubstreet. Foxe, the martyrologist, lived in Grub-street. Its name was changed in 1830 to Milton-street.

2. Fig.: Poor, mean, or needy authors.

B. As adj.: Mean, poor, low.

grucche, grucch-en, gruch-en, v.i. [Grudge, v.] grucch-yng, s. [Grucche.] A grumbling or complaint.

grŭdge, grochen, grucche, gruchen, gruchen, v.i. & t. [O. Fr. grocer, groucher, gruger = to murmur; a word of doubtful origin, but probably onomatopoetic and Scandinavian.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To murmur; openly to express dissatisfaction; to complain.

"Mid the farisees and scribes grucchiden; seiynge for this resceyveth synful men and eteth with them."—Luke xv. 2.

2. To grieve, to repine, to feel compunction.

"We grudge in our conceyence when we remember our synnes."—Bp. Fisher.

3. To find fault; to raise objection.

"They grucht not with her burial there."—Walpole, Anec. of Painting, vol. i., ch. ii.

4. To feel unwillingness or reluctance to do any act or for any reason.

"Use hospitality one to another without grudging."—1 Peter iv. 9.

5. To feel envy or ill-will against any one or for any reason; to be envious.

"Grudge not one against another."—James v. 9.

B. Transitive:

1. To see with envy or ill-will; to envy; to feel discontent or envy at; to grumble at; to find fault with. (Tate: Absalom & Achitophel, ii. 206.)

2. To grant, allow, or permit with reluctance; to begrudge the acquisition or possession of.

"They grudge me my natural right to be free."
Cowper: Trans. from Guion.

3. To cherish or harbour with malice or with an envious and discontented spirit.

"Perish they
That grudge one thought against your Majesty."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry VI., iii. 1.

grŭdge, s. [Grudge, v.]

1. Ill-will, discontent, anger.

"Heavy looke, and lumpish pace, that plaine
In him bewraid great grudge, and maltalent."
Spenser: F. Q., III. iv. 41.

2. An unwillingness or reluctance to benefit.

3. A feeling of malice or malevolence; hatred; secret enmity.

"There is some grudge between 'em; 'tis not meet
They be alone." Shakesp.: Julius Cæsar, iv. 3.

4. A remorse of conscience.

5. A slight symptom of disease.

"Struggling against the grudges of more dreadful calamities."—Milton.

grŭd'ge-fŭll, a. [Eng. grudge; -full.] Feeling a grudge, envy, or discontent; grudging, envious.

"Rayle at them with grudgefull discontent."
Spenser: F. Q., IV. viii. 28.

grŭd'ge-kĭn, s. [Eng. grudge; dimin. suff. -kin.] A little or slight grudge. (Thackeray.) grŭdg'-ĕŏns, s. pl. [Fr. grugeons, from aruger = to grind, to crush.] Coarse meal, groats; the siftings of meal remaining after the fine parts have passed through the sieve.

grŭdg'-ĕr, groch-er, grucch-er, grutch-arc, s. [Eng. grudg(e); -er.] One who grudges or grumbles; a grumbler.

"These ben gruccheris, ful of phynte, wandringe after desires."—Wycliffe: Judas ii.

grŭdg'-ĭng, groch-ing, grucch-yng, *grudge-yng, *grutch-ing, pr. par., a., & s. [GRUDGE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. Grumbling, murmuring, complaining.

"As by continual murmur or grutching."
Chaucer: C. T., 5,988.

2. Uneasiness or discontent at the possession of anything by another; envy.

3. Reluctance, unwillingness.

"Such as they would leave behinde them at their awne price, without any grudging."—Grafton: Edward II. (an. 1325).

*4. A secret wish or desire.

"Even in the most sincere advice he gave,
He had a grudging still to be a knave."
Dryden: Medal, 58.

*5. Afterpain; remains of any pain or disease.

"So clerely was she delivered from all grudgeyng of the ague."—Udal: Matthew viii.

*6. A symptom of disease, as the chill before a fever.

* 7. An anticipation or premonitory feeling of anything; a presentiment.

grŭdg'-ĭng-lĭ,  groch-inde-liche, *grucch-en-de-li, adv. [Eng. grudging; -ly.] In a grudging manner; with reluctance, unwillingness, or grudging.

"Trouble is grudgingly and hardly brooked, While life's sublimest joys are overlooked."
Cowper: Charity, 218.

grŭdg'-ĭngş, s. pl. [GRUDGEONS.] Coarse meal.

grŭdg'-mĕnt, s. [Eng. grudg(e); -ment.] Discontent, grudging.

"Rather to Jacynth's grudgment."
Browning: Flight of the Duchess.

grûe, v.i. [GREW, v.]

grû'-el, s. [O. Fr. gruel (Fr. gruau), from Low Lat. grutellum, dimin. of grutum = meal, from O. Low Ger. grut = groats (q.v.).] Food made by boiling oatmeal in water; any kind of mixture made by boiling ingredients in water.

"Make the gruel thick and slab."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, IV. i.

¶ To give one his gruel: To severely punish or kill a person. (Brewer says that the allusion is to the practice, common in France in the sixteenth century, of giving poisoned posset, an art brought to perfection by Catherine de Medici and her Italian advisers.)

"Gave the truculeat rascal his gruel."
Barham: Ingoldsby Legends; Babes in the Wood.

grûe'-sŏme, a. [GREWSOME.]

gruf, grufe, adv. [GROFF.]

grŭff, s. [Prob. connected with grave (q.v.).] A pit.

"In one of the deepest gruffs (for so they call their pits)."—Boyle: Works, v. 686.

grŭff, a. & s. [Dut. grof = coarse, great, heavy; Sw. grof = coarse; Dan. grov; Ger. grob; M. H. Ger. gerob, grop.]

A. As adj.: Of a rough, surly, or harsh aspect or look; sour, rough, harsh, hoarse. (Applied to the voice.)

"After some gruff muttering with himself."
King: The Skillet.

B. As substantive:

Min. (Pl.): The worst pieces rejected in the manufacture of black-lead pots. These are coarse, harsh, gritty, and deficient in lustre.

grŭff'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gruff; -ish.] Rather or somewhat gruff.

"A short elderly gentleman, with a gruffish voice."—Dickens: Sketches by Boz; Watkins Tottle.

grŭff'-lĭ, adv. [Eng. gruff; -ly.] In a gruff, rough, or surly manner.

"The four of Mars high on a chariot stood,
All sheathed in arms, and gruffly looked the god."
Lewis: Statius, Thebaid vii.

grŭff'-nĕss, s. [Eng. gruff; -ness.] The quality or state of being gruff; roughness; surliness.

grû'-grû, s. [An American negro word (?).]

1. Entom.: The larva of a huge insect (Calandra palmarum), eaten in South America. Called also Ver Palmiste.

2. Bot.: A name given in Trinidad to two palms—Astrocaryum vulgare and Acrocomia sclerocarpa.

grû'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. grus (genit. gruis) = a crane.]

Ornith.: A family of Grallatores, tribe Cultrirostres. It consists of large handsome birds, with a strong sharp-edged bill, long slender legs, with a considerable part of the tibiæ bare; toes four, the two outer ones connected by a very small membrane, the hind one short and elevated. It contains two sub-families; Gruinæ (Cranes proper), and Psophinæ (Trumpeters) (q.v.).

grû-ĭ'-næ, s. pl. [Lat. grus (genit. gruis) = a crane, and fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: The typical sub-family of the family Gruidæ (q.v.). The mandibles are of equal length and pointed at the tip; the tertiary feathers of the wings are often long and decomposed into beautiful pendent plumes on each side of the tail. The sub-family contains the Cranes proper.

grû-ĭn-ā'-lēş, s. pl. [Lat. grus (genit. gruis) = a crane, and masc. or fem. pl. adj. suff. -ales.]

Bot.: The name given by Linnæus to an order in his Natural System, under which he included the Cranesbills.

grŭl'-shy, a. [Etym. doubtful.] Gross, coarse, clumsy.

"They had a geuteeler turn than the grulshy bairns of the cottars."—Gult: Annals of the Parish, p. 28.

grŭm, a. [A.S. gram, grom = furious, angry, offended; O. S. gram; Icel. gramr = wroth, grim = fiends.]

1. Sour, surly, severe, harsh, morose, glum.

2. Low, deep in the throat, gruff, guttural; as, a grum voice.

grŭ'-măch (ch guttural), a. [Gael. gruamach = gloomy, sulky, morose, sullen, of a forbidding countenance.] Ill-favoured, grim. (Scotch.)

"The nickname of Gillespie Grumach (or the grim)."—Scott: Legend of Montrose, ch. xii.

grŭm'-ble, v.i. & t. [Fr. grommeler; O. Ger. grummelen; a frequent. of grummen, grumen, or grömman; Dut. grommen = to grumble, to growl; cf. Ger. gram = vexation, grimmen = to rage; Russ. grome = thunder; A.S. grim = angry.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To murmur with discontent; to give vent to expressions of dissatisfaction.

"Now wrangling and grumbling to keep up the ball!"
Goldsmith: Retaliation.

2. To growl, to snarl.

"From the old Thracian dog they learned the way To snarl in want and grumble o'er their prey."
Pitt: To Mr. Spence.

3. To make a hoarse noise or rattle; to rumble.

"Shake the woods
That grumbling wave." Thomson: Winter, 75.

B. Trans.: To express or utter in a grumbling manner.

grŭm'-ble, s. [GRUMBLE, v.]

1. The act or state of grumbling; a complaint.

2. (Pl.) A grumbling, discontented disposition.

* 3. Grime, dirt.

"The grumbles and mud of their acquaintance."—Sanderson: Sermons, I. 150.

grŭm'-blĕr, s. [Eng. grumbl(e); -er.]

1. Ord. Lang.: One who grumbles; a discontented or dissatisfied person.

"Some uncourtly grumblers described it as the only good thing that had been done since the king came in."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. ii.

2. Ichthy.: Various species of Trigla (Gurnard), which utter sounds like grumbling when, being caught, they are lifted from the water. (Griffith's Cuvier.)

Grŭm-ble-tō'-nĭ-ănş, s. [Apparently modelled on some such word as Accringtonians = inhabitants of Accrington, Barringtonians = inhabitants of Barrington, &c.]

Hist.: The inhabitants of an imaginary town or parish notable for grumbling; a nickname given in England to the Country party during the reigns of the later Stuarts. The reason why they grumbled was that, in modern language, they constituted the Opposition, and naturally found fault with the measures of their political adversaries who were in power.

"Who were sometimes nicknamed the Grumbletonians, and sometimes honoured with the appellation of the Country party."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

grŭm'-blĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GRUMBLE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of murmuring in discontent; complaining in dissatisfaction.

"I have served Without or grudge or grumblings."
Shakesp.: Tempest, I. 2.

grŭm'-blĭng-lĭ, adv. [Eng. grumbling; -ly.]

1. In a grumbling, dissatisfied, or discontented manner; with grumblings or complaints.

*2. Hoarsely, roughly.

"They speak good German at the Court and in the city; but the common and country people seemed to speak grumblingly."—Browne: Travels, p. 156.

grŭm'-hôl, s. [GRUMBLE.] A term of reproach; a surly person.

"Come, grumbol, thou shalt mum with us."—Dekker: Satiromastix.

grûme, s. [O. Fr., Fr. grumeau = a clot; from Lat. grumus = a little heap.] A fluid of a thick, viscid consistence; a clot, as of blood grŭm'-lĭ, a. [Eng. grum(e); -ly.] Muddy thick, as with dregs or sediment.

grŭm'-lĭ, adv. [Eng. grum; -ly.] In a grum surly, morose, or sullen manner.

grŭm'-meļş, s. pl. [Eng. grume; dim. suff. -el.] Dregs, sediment.

grŭm'-mĕt, s. [GROMMET.]

grŭm'-nĕss, s. [Eng. grum; -ness.] Sourness, sullenness.

"The grumness of thy countenance."—Wych-rley: Country Wife, I. 1.

grŭ'-mōse, a. [Mod. Lat. grumosus, from Class. Lat. grumus = a little hill, a hillock.]

Bot.: Clubbed, knotted. (Paxton.) [GRUMOUS.]

grû-mōŭs, a. [Eng. grum(e); -ous.]

* I. Ord. Lang.: Thick, clotted, concreted.

"But, having for this purpose exposed some serum of human blood to cold air, in two freezing nights consecutively, the serum was not found to congeal, though some grumous parts of the same blood did, as has formerly been noted."—Boyle: Works, vol. iv., p. 751.

II. Technically:

1. Anat. (of blood): Clotted, coagulated.

2. Bot.: Divided into little clustered grains, as the fæcula in the stem of the sago palm, or the root of Neottia Nidus-avis. (Lindley.) grû'-mōŭs-nĕss, s. [Eng. grumous; -ness.] The quality or state of being grumous; clotted or concreted.

grŭmph, v.i. [An imitative word.] To grunt; to make a noise like a sow.

"A grumphin, girnin, snarlin jade."
Tarras: Poems, p. 52.

grŭmph, s. [GRUMPH, v.] A grunt; a noise like a sow.

"He drew a long sigh or rather grumph, through his nose."—Saxon & Gael, I. 42.

grŭm'-phĭe, s. [Eng. grumph; -ie.] A sow. (Scotch.)

"Wha was it but Grumphie."
Burns: Hallowe'en.

grŭmp'-ĭ-lĭ, adv. [Eng. grumpy; -ly.] In a grumpy, sullen, surly, or gruff manner; gruffly.

grŭmp'-ĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. grumpy; -ness.] The quality or state of being grumpy or surly; surliness, gruffness.

"The amount of bearish grumpiness he displays towards those determined to see him off."—The World, quoted in Times, April 15, 1876.

grŭmp'-ish, a. [Eng. grumpy(y); -ish.] Cross.

"If you blubber or look grumpish."—Mrs. Trollope: Michael Armstrong, ch. vi.

grŭmp'-ў, a. [From the same root as grum and grumble (q.v.).] Surly, cross, angry, gruff.

gru'-nâu-īte (the first u as ü in German), s. [From Grünau, in Sayn Altenkirchen, where it occurs.]

Min.: An isometric brittle mineral of metallic lustre, light steel-gray to silver-white colour, becoming yellowish or grayish when tarnished, and a dark gray streak; its hardness 4·5; sp. gr. 5·13. Compns.: sulphur 33·10 to 38·46; bismuth 10·41 to 14·11; nickel 22·78 to 40·65; iron 0·28 to 11·73; copper 1·68 to 11·59; and lead 1·58 to 7·11. (Dana.)

* grund, s. [Ground.] The ground; bottom.

grŭnd'-ęl, s. [Eng. grund = ground; -el.] The fish called a Groundling (q.v.).

* grŭnd'-sęl, s. [Groundsel (1), s.] gru'-nĕr-īte (u as ü in German), s. [Ger. grünerit. Named after Grüner, who first described it.]

Min.: Iron Amphibole, an asbestiform or lamellar fibrous brown and silky variety of Amphibole. (Dana.) The British Museum Catalogue makes it a variety of Hornblende.

* grŭn'-sęl, s. [Groundsill.]

grŭn'-stāne, s. [For grund = grind; stane = stone.] A grindstone. (Scotch.)

"Hand their noses to the grunstane." Burns: Dedic. to Gavin Hamilton, Esq.

grŭnt, * gronte, * grunt-en, * grunt-on, v.i. & t. [An extension of A.S. grunan = to grunt; cogn. with Dan. grynte; Sw. grymta; Ger. grunzen; Lat. grunnio; Gr. γρύζω (gruzo) from γρῦ (gru) = the grunt of a pig.]

A. Intransitive:

1. To make a noise like a pig; to snort; to groan like a hog.

"Gryll could but grunt."
P. Fletcher: Purple Island, viii.

* 2. To gnash the teeth.

"They gruntiden with teeth on hym."—Wyclife: Deeds vii. 54.

B. Trans.: To express or utter in a grunting manner.

grŭnt, s. [Grunt, v.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A deep guttural sound, like the snort or noise made by a hog.

"Meditative grunts of much content."
Tennyson: Walk to the Mail, 79.

2. Ichthy. (Pl.): A popular name given in the United States to a fish, Pogonias chromis.

grŭnt'-ĕr, * grunt-are, s. [Eng. grunt; -er.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. One who grunts.

"Gruntare. Grunnitor."—Prompt. Parv.

2. A hog.

"A draggled mawkin,
That tends her bristled grunters in the sludge."
Tennyson: Princess, v. 26.

II. Technically:

Brass-found.: An iron rod, with a hook on the end, by which an assistant aids in supporting the crucible, by catching hold of the shoulder of the crucible-tongs.

grŭnt'-ĭng, * grunt-inge, * grunt-ynge, * grynt-ing, pr. par., a., & s. [Grunt, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act of snorting or making a noise like a hog.

"And thereupon followed such cruel slaughter, that nothing was heard but grunting and groning of people, as they lay on heapes ready to die, weltering together in their own blood."—Holinshed: Historie of Scotland (an. 1331).

* 2. The act of gnashing or grinding the teeth.

"There schal be wepyng and grynting of teeth."—Wyclife: Matthew viii. 12. (Purvey.) grŭnt'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. grunting; -ly.] In a grunting manner; with a grunt.

grŭn'-tle, * groun-tle, v.i. [A frequent. from Grunt (q.v.).] To grunt.

"Ly as a sowe muzling and grountling vpon the earth."—Rollock: On 1 Thes. p. 9.

grŭn'-tle, s. [Gruntle, v.]

1. A grunting noise.

2. A snout.

"An' gouts torment him inch by inch, Wha twists his gruntle wi' a glunch."
Burns: Scotch Drink.

* grŭnt'-lĭng, s. [Eng. grunt; dimin. suff. -ling.] A young pig or hog.

grŭnts, s. [Grunt, s., II.]

grŭn'-zĭč, s. [Groin (2), s.] The mouth; the snout.

"She dights her grunzie wi' a hushion."
Burns: She A Wife As Willie Had.

Grŭs, grŭs, s. [Lat., = a crane.]

1. Ornith.: (Of the form grus): The typical genus of the sub-family Gruinæ, and the family Gruidæ. [Crane.]

2. Astron.: (Of the form Grus): The Crane, a constellation introduced by Bayer, and now arranged as one of Lacaille's twenty-seven Southern constellations. It is situated between Eridanus and Sagittarius.

grŭsh'-ĭe, a. [Etym. doubtful.] Thick; of a thriving growth. (Scotch.)

"Their grushie weans an' faithfu' wives."
Burns: Twa Dogs.

* grŭtçh, v. & s. [Grudge. v. & s.]

* grў, s. [Gr. γρῦ (gru) = a grunt, a syllable; a bit.]

1. A measure, equal to one-tenth of a line.

"Three inches and nine grys long, and one inch seven lines in girt. —Boyle: Works, vi. 541.

2. Anything very small, or of little value.

Grŭ'-yèrc, s. & a. [Fr. Gruyère, Gruyères; Ger. Greyerz.]

A. As subst.: A town in Switzerland, canton Friberg.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the place, described under A.

Gruyère-cheese, s. A celebrated kind of cheese made at Gruyère. It owes its flavour chiefly to Melilotus officinalis.

grўde, v.t. [Gride.

* gryf-on, s. [Griffin.]

grўl'-lĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. grylli(us); fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of saltatorial orthoptera, made to include the crickets, or sometimes the grasshoppers. [Gryllus etym.] In the former case the grasshoppers are called Acridiidæ, from the genus Acridium or Acrydium. In the latter the Crickets are termed Achetidæ (q.v.). The family Gryllidæ is now elevated into a tribe Gryllina (q.v.).

grўl'-lī-nə, s. pl. [Lat. gryllus; neut. pl. adj. suff. -ina.]

Entom.: A tribe of saltatorial orthoptera. The outer wings in repose are sloped like a roof, the antennæ are long, slender, and tapering. The tarsi are four-jointed. The males have an apparatus at the base of the wing-covers for chirping. The female has an exserted ovipositor.

grўl'-lō-tăl'-pą, s. [Lat. gryllus = a cricket, and talpa = a mole.]

Entom.: Mole-cricket; a genus of crickets (Achetidæ or Gryllidæ) having the legs and tarsi of both the anterior feet broad, flat, and indented like hands, so as to be well adapted for digging. It is a British insect.

grўl'-lŭs, s. [Lat., = a cricket, a grasshopper.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Gryllidæ and the tribe Gryllina (q.v.). [Grasshopper.]

* grўpe, v.t. [Gripe, v.]

* grўpe, s. [Gripe (2), s.]

grў'-phæ-ą, s. [Lat. grype, (genit. gryphis) = a griffin.]

Palæont.: A sub-genus of Ostrea (oyster), having the left valve with a prominent incurved umbo, the right one small and concave. Thirty species are known from the Lias to the Chalk. Gryphæa incurva, from the Lias of England, France, Germany, &c., is the type. (Woodward, &c.)

† grўph'-īte, s. [Lat. gryphus = a griffin, and -ite (Palæont.).] [Gryphæa.]

Palæont.: An old name for a gryphæa (q.v.).

† gryphite-limestone, s.

Geol.: Lias, so called from the fact that Gryphæas abounds in it.

* gryph-on, s. [Griffon.]

grўp'-ĭ-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. grypus, gryphus, and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: Wedge-tailed Humming-birds, a sub-family of Trochilidæ (Humming-birds), type Gryphus (q.v.).

grў-pō'-sĭs, grў-phō'-sĭs, s. [Mod. Lat., from Gr. γρυπόω (grupoō) = to become bent. (Used of the nails.)]

Pathol.: The growing of the nails inward.

grў'-pŭs, grў'-phŭs, s. [Lat. gryphus = a griffin; grypus = Gr. γρυπός (grupos) = curved, hook-nosed.]

Ornith.: The typical genus of the sub-family Gryphinæ (q.v.). Only one species is known, which is from Brazil.

grўş'-bŏc, grўş'-bŏk, s. [Dut. grijsbok, from grijs = gray, and bok = goat.]

Zool.: A South African antelope (Calotragus melanotis). It has straight, upright, pointed, shining horns, with two or three small annuli at the roots. On the upper parts the hair is red mixed with white, below it is sandy-brown or red, and on some there is black about the head. Length of the animal, nearly three feet. It is found in South Africa, goes in pairs, not in flocks, and furnishes excellent venison.

gû-a-çhar'-ō, s. [Sp. guacharo and guacharaca, from the cavern and mountain of Guacharo, in the valley of Caripe, in Venezuela.]

Ornith.: Steatornis Caripensis, a goatsucker from South America, which feeds, however, not on flying insects, but on hard fruits, a very rare characteristic of a nocturnal bird. It is valued for its fat, to obtain which the Indians slaughter it in the cavern of Guacharo once a year. (Humboldt.) guacharo-bird, s.

Ornith.: The same as Guacharo (q.v.).

guacharo-oil, s. The fat of the Guacharo-bird, which, on being melted, becomes half liquid, transparent, and inodorous. It will keep for a year without turning rancid.

guacharo-seeds, s. pl. Seeds found in the gizzard of the Guacharo-bird.

gû-a'-cō, s. [Native name in Central America.]

Botany:

1. Properly: Aristolochia Guaco, a plant celebrated for its efficacy in curing snake-bites.

2. Hence: Other plants with the same properties, spec., Mikania Guaco and Aristolochia anguicida.

¶ Mexican guaco:

Pharm.: A poison stated by Dr. Uslar to be from a species of convolvulus.

guă-dăl-cą-zar'-īte (u as w), s. [Named by Petersen from its original locality, Guadalcazar, in Mexico.]

Min.: A mineral essentially a seleno-sulphide of mercury and zinc. It is represented by the formula 6 Hg S + Zn S. It occurs massive and crypto-crystalline, and is of a deep black colour. Though resembling cinnabar in composition, it is quite different in its physical properties, having a bluish-black streak and a greasy metallic lustre. (T. Davies, F.G.S.)

gū'-ăg, s. [Cornish.]

Min.: An old, abandoned working.

guaiac (as gwā'-yăk), a. & s. [Native name of the tree in parts of South America.]

A. As subst.: Guaiacum (q.v.).

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to guaiacum.

guaiacic (as gwā-yăs'-ĭc), a. [Eng., &c. guaiac(um); -ic.] Pertaining to, or derived from, Guaiacum (q.v.).

guaiacic-acid, s.

Chem.: Guaiaretic acid, $C_{20}H_{25}O_4$. Obtained by boiling powdered guaiacum resin with milk of lime for half an hour, filtering and extracting the residue with hot alcohol, distilling off the alcohol, and dissolving the acid in caustic soda, decomposing the crystallized sodium salt with hydrochloric acid, and recrystallizing from glacial acetic acid. Guaiacic acid is thus obtained in colourless needles, which melt at 80°. They are soluble in alcohol, and the solution gives a grass-green colour with ferric chloride. It forms crystalline salts.

guaiacol (as gwā'-yạ-cŏl), s. [Eng., &c. guaiac(um), and (alcoh)ol.]

Chem.: $C_7H_8O_2$, or $C_6H_4\langle^{OH\,(1)}_{OCH_3\,(2)}$. Methyl ether of pyrocatechin. Obtained by the dry distillation of guaiacum resin. It also occurs in wood-tar creosote. It is also formed by the dry distillation of calcium vanillate with slaked lime; and by heating to 170° equal molecules of pyrocatechin, caustic potash, and methyl potassium sulphate. Guaiacol is a pleasant-smelling aromatic oil, boiling at 200°. When heated with hydriodic acid, it is decomposed into methyl iodide and pyrocatechin. When heated with zinc dust, it yields anisol, $C_6H_5{\cdot}OCH_3$. Its alcoholic solution gives an emerald-green colour, with ferric chloride. It unites with alkalis.

guaiaconic (as gwā-yạ-cŏn'-ĭc), a. [Eng., &c. guaiac(um), and -onic.] See the compound.

guaiaconic acid, s.

Chem.: $C_{19}H_{20}O_5$. Contained in the mother liquid obtained in the preparation of guaiacic acid. The liquid is evaporated to dryness, and the residue treated with boiling alcohol, evaporated, and separated from the resin by means of ether. Guaiaconic acid is amorphous, melting at 100°, and is insoluble in water. It is easily soluble in alcohol, ether, chloroform, and in acetic acid. It is turned blue by oxidizing agents. The calcium and lead salts are insoluble in alcohol.

guaiacum (as gwā'-yạ-cŭm), s. [Latinized from guaiac (q.v.).]

1. Bot.: A genus of Zygophyllaceæ, tribe Zygophylleæ (q.v.). Calyx of five unequal segments; petals five-stalked; stamens ten; fruit, a five-angled, five-celled capsule, sometimes by abortion two or three-celled. Guaiacum officinale is an ornamental tree with blue flowers, growing in Jamaica. The wood furnishes Lignum vitæ (q.v.); its resin is called Gum guaiacum (q.v.). The leaves of G. sanctum are used in the West Indies as a substitute for soap. The bark and wood of both species are used as sudorifics, diaphoretics, or alteratives.

2. Phar.: Guaiac wood, Lignum vitæ, Guaiaci lignum, the wood of Guaiacum officinale, a native of St. Domingo and Jamaica. When a log is bored longitudinally, and placed in the fire, a dark brown aromatic resin exudes, which is collected, and which is soluble in alcohol and ether. An alcoholic solution gives a blue colour when placed on a slice of a raw potato, the guaiacic acid acting on the gluten. The resin is used to prepare Mixtura guaiaci (Mixture of guaiacum), and Tinctura guaiaci ammoniata (Ammoniated tincture of guaiacum). The resin taken internally causes irritation of the intestinal canal. The tincture is used externally in cases of chronic rheumatism as a stimulant.

guaiacum resin, s.

Chem.: A reddish-brown resin, obtained from the wood of Guaiacum officinale. The resin dissolves in potash; and in concentrated sulphuric acid with a red colour. A tincture of the resin is turned blue by oxidizing agents: as chromic acid, ferric chloride. Guaiacum resin, fused with caustic potash, yields protocatechuic acid.

gû'-an, s. [The Guiana name of the bird.]

Ornith.: The genus Penelope, which belongs to the family Cracidæ (Curassows). [PENELOPE.]

† guâ'-nạ (u as w), s. [IGUANA.] The same as IGUANA (q.v.).

guă-nā'-cō (u as w), s. [Sp. American.]

Zool.: Auchenia Guanaco, a llama, believed by many to be the original stock from which the domesticated animal of that name was derived. The guanaco inhabits the chain of the Andes to their most southerly point.

guăn'-a-mīde (u as w), s. [Eng. guan(o), and -amide.]

Chem.: $C_4H_5N_3O$. Aceto-guanamide. Obtained by heating one part of aceto-guanamine with two parts of concentrated sulphuric acid to 160°. The cold solution is treated with alcohol, the precipitate dissolved in water, and re-precipitated by lead acetate, and the lead salt decomposed by H_2S. Guanamide crystallizes out of alcohol in small rhombic needles, easily soluble in water, acids, and alkalis, slightly soluble in alcohol.

guăn'-a-mīnes (u as w), s. pl. [Eng., &c. guan(o), and amines.]

Chem.: Bases obtained by heating the fatty acid salts of guanidine to from 220° to 230°. Guanamine, $C_3H_5N_3$, or Formoguanamine, obtained by heating guanidine formate to 200°. $3(CH_5N_3{\cdot}HCO{\cdot}OH) = C_3H_5N_3 + 4NH_3 + CO_2 + 2CO + 2H_2O$. The fused mass is mixed with an equal volume of cold water filtered, the residue dissolved in a small quantities in hot water, and precipitated with a concentrated solution of oxalic acid. The oxalate is decomposed by caustic soda, which throws down the base in white crystalline needles, melting above 350°, which are easily soluble in boiling water, and slightly soluble in alcohol. Aceto-guanamine is obtained by heating dry guanidine acetate to 230°. It melts at 265°, and is soluble in alcohol and in hot water. This substance was formerly called guanamine.

guăn'-ĭ-dīne (u as w), s. [Eng., &c. guan(in), and -idine.]

Chem.: CH_5N_3. Carbotriamine, $N_3\begin{cases}\text{Civ.}\\ H_5\end{cases}$ or Carbimido-diamine, $C\langle^{NH_2}_{NH}{}^{NH_2}$. An organic amine, obtained by the action of potassium chlorate and hydrochloric acid on guanin. $C_5H_5N_5O + H_2O + O_3 = CH_5N_3 + CO_2 + C_3H_2N_2O_3$, parabanic acid; by heating biuret and hydrochloric acid gas in a sealed tube to 170°; by the action of alcoholic ammonia on chloropicrin at 100°, $C(NO_2)Cl_3 + 7NH_3 = CH_5N_3 + 3{\cdot}NH_3{\cdot}HCl + NH_3{\cdot}HNO_3$; also by the action of aqueous ammonia on ethyl orthocarbonate at 150°, $C(OC_2H_5)_4 + 3NH_3 = CH_5N_3 + 4C_2H_5{\cdot}OH$; by heating ammonium chloride with cyanamide in an alcoholic solution to 100°, $NH_4Cl + CN{\cdot}NH_2 = CH_5N_3{\cdot}HCl$. Guanidine is best obtained by preparing the sulphate from the carbonate, and then removing the sulphuric acid by baryta water. Guanidine forms colourless deliquescent crystals, which are very soluble in alcohol and in water. The solution absorbs carbonic acid from the air. When guanidine is boiled with baryta water, it is converted into ammonia and urea, $CO\langle^{NH_2}_{NH_2}$. By the action of concentrated acids on alkalis, it is decomposed into CO_2 and NH_3.

guanidine-carbonate, s.

Chem.: $2CH_5N_3{\cdot}H_2CO_3$. Obtained by boiling 100 parts of guanidine sulpho-cyanate with fifty-eight parts of K_2CO_3, dissolved in a very small quantity of water. The carbonate is then precipitated by alcohol, and recrystallized out of boiling water.

guanidine-nitrate, s.

Chem.: $CH_5N_3{\cdot}HNO_3$. Obtained by boiling guanidine sulpho-cyanate with ammonium nitrate, and concentrating the solution, when guanidine nitrate, which is only slightly soluble in cold water, crystallizes out in large plates.

guanidine-sulphocyanate, s.

Chem.: $CH_5N_3{\cdot}HCNS$. This salt is easily prepared by heating ammonium sulphocyanate to between 180° and 190°, for twenty hours, in a flask over a flame, with a long tube to carry off the vapours. It is then dissolved in its own weight of cold water, filtered, and concentrated by evaporation on a water bath. On cooling, it deposits crystals of guanidine-sulphocyanate, which melt at 118°.

¶ Substitution Compounds of Guanidine are obtained by heating cyanamide with the hydrochlorates of primary amines, $CN{\cdot}NH_2 + NH_2{\cdot}CH_3{\cdot}HCl = CN_3H_4(CH_3){\cdot}HCl$. Methyl-guanidine is also obtained by boiling creatine with mercuric oxide and water. Triethyl-guanidine, $CN_3H_2(C_2H_5)_3$, is obtained by boiling an alcoholic solution of diethyl-thio-carbamide and ethylamine with mercuric oxide, $CS\langle^{NHC_2H_5}_{NHC_2H_5} + NH_2{\cdot}C_2H_5 + HgO = HgS + H_2O + C_2H_5{\cdot}N = C\langle^{NH{\cdot}C_2H_5}_{NH{\cdot}C_2H_5}$. Diphenyl-guanidine, $C\langle^{NH{\cdot}C_6H_5}_{NH}{}^{NH{\cdot}C_6H_5}$, is obtained by the action of gaseous cyanogen chloride on dry aniline, and also by boiling cyananilide with aniline hydrochlorate. It crystallizes in needles, which melt at 147°.

guan-if'-ĕr-oŭs (u as w), a. [Eng. guano, and Lat. fero = to produce.] Producing guano.

gua'-nine (u as w), s. [Eng., &c. guan(o), and -ine.]

Chem.: $C_5H_5N_5O$. It exists in the pancreatic juice of mammalia and in the excrement of the spider. It is prepared by boiling Peruvian guano with milk of lime till the liquid is no longer coloured brown. The residue, containing guanine and uric acid, is boiled with a solution of sodium carbonate and filtered, and then sodium acetate is added, and hydrochloric acid added till the solution is strongly acid. The guanine is precipitated, and purified by dissolving in hot nitric acid and precipitating by ammonia. Guanine is an amorphous powder, insoluble in water, alcohol, and ether. Soluble in excess of concentrated ammonia. It forms crystalline salts with acids. By the action of nitrous acid it is converted into xanthin. Guanine, when evaporated with fuming nitric acid on a piece of platinum foil, leaves a yellow residue; this, when treated with caustic soda, gives a red colour, which, on being heated, becomes a purple-red.

gua'-nīte (u as w), s. [Peruvian guano, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

Min.: The same as STRUVITE (q.v.).

gua'-nō (u as w), s. [Peruvian Spanish = the droppings of sea-fowl.]

1. Min.: A grayish-white, yellowish, dark brown, or reddish substance, classed by Dana as a mineral, which he places among his Anhydrous Phosphates and Sulphates. It is a bone phosphate of lime or osteolite with some impurities. Its lustre on a fresh fracture is resinous; its structure often granular or oolitic. Found in islands off the Peruvian and other South American coasts, also in those of the coast of Africa and elsewhere. Guano from different localities has been differently named. It has been called Pyroclasite, Pyroguanite, Sombrerite, and Glaubapatite (q.v.).

2. Geol.: Guano is formed by the droppings of multitudinous birds, in secluded places where they have been undisturbed for ages. If, in any locality, little rain falls, this tends to the rapid accumulation of guano. The dried bodies of the birds are often found in it.

3. Comm.: Immense quantities of guano have been imported into Britain from the islands off the coast of Peru, it being an exceedingly valuable manure.

gua'-nō (u as w), v.t. [GUANO, s.] To manure or dress with guano.

gua'-rạ (u as w), s. [Brazilian.]

Ornith.: Ibis rubra, the Scarlet Ibis of America. [IBIS.]

gua-ra'-chạ (u as w), s. [Sp.]

Music: A lively Spanish dance in $\frac{3}{4}$ or $\frac{3}{8}$ time, usually accompanied on the guitar by the dancer himself.

guâ-râ'-nạ (u as w), s. [A Brazilian Indian word.]

Phar.: The powdered seeds of Paullinia sorbilis, from Brazil. An infusion is used instead of coffee in South America. Guarana contains five per cent. of theine.

guarana-bread, s. Bread made by the Brazilian Indians from guarana. It is used in Brazil as a stomachic, a febrifuge, and an aphrodisiac.

* guăr'-and, s. [GUARANTEE.] A guarantee, a warranty.

"Your majesty having been the author and guarand of the Peace of Aix."—Temple: Letter to the King, Nov. 30, 1674.

guăr-an-teē', * gar-ran-tie, * gua-ran-ty, * gar-ran-ty, * gar-ran-ty, s. [O. Fr. garrantee; Fr. garantie, fem. of garanti, pa. par. of garantir = to warrant, from garant = a warrant, a guarantee.] [WARRANT, WARRANTY.]

I. An engagement or undertaking on the part of a third person or party that the conditions or stipulations of an engagement or promise entered into by any person shall be fulfilled; the act of guaranteeing the performance or carrying out of any engagement.

"The guaranty of the Peace of Aix."—Temple: Letter to Arlington, Sept. 2, 1670.

2. One who binds himself or becomes surety for the performance of certain acts by another; a guarantor.

"The Treaty of Nimeguen, of which the King of England was guarantee."—Burnet: Own Time (an. 1685).

3. The person or party to whom a guarantee is given.

4. Any security or warranty.

"We might be secured by the guaranty of the general peace."—Marvell: Works, i. 586.

guăr-an-tee', * gŭar'-an-ty', v.t. & i. [GUARANTEE, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To give or be a guarantee for the performance of; to warrant; to undertake or engage the due fulfilment of any engagement or promise entered into by any person; to be surety for; to become bound for.

2. To be a warrant that any article, such as a purchase, is of the quality represented.

3. To be surety or warrant to; to bind oneself to; to be or act as a security or guarantee.

"To guaranty them against any thing like a necessity for giving in to that pernicious practice."—Burke: On the Affairs of India.

4. To undertake to secure to another; to undertake to uphold or maintain; to be guarantee for the acquisition or possession of.

"By the treaty of alliance she guaranteed the Polish constitution in a secret article."—Brougham.

5. To indemnify; to hold harmless.

B. Intrans.: To be surety, warrant, or guarantee; to warrant; to be responsible.

guarantee-society, s. A joint-stock society established for giving guarantees for the due and proper fulfilment of engagements between two parties, or for making good losses caused by defalcations, &c., on the payment of a premium.

guăr-an-tor', s. [Eng. guarant(ee); -or.] One who gives a guarantee to another for the due fulfilment by a third party of any engagement or promise entered into by him; a warrantor; a surety; one who engages to guarantee or secure another in any right or possession.

* gŭar'-an-ty', s. & v. [GUARANTEE, s. & v.] guard (u silent), v.t. & i. [O. Fr. guarder, garder, warder; Fr. garder, from O. H. Ger. warten; M. H. Ger. warden = to watch; cogn. with Eng. ward (q.v.).]

A. Transitive:

1. To secure the safety of against loss, damage, injury, or attack by watching; to watch over for purposes of defence or security; to defend, to protect.

"I'll guard thee like a tender flower."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, iv. 17.

† 2. To watch over, so as to keep in restraint: as, To guard one's tongue, To guard one's actions. [GUARDED.]

* 3. To provide or secure against objection or attack.

"Homer has guarded every circumstance."—Broome: On Odyssey.

* 4. To protect or secure the edge or border of by trimming or binding; to edge, to trim, to deck out. (Lit. & fig.)

"A long motley coat, guarded with yellow."
Shakesp.: Henry VIII., Prol. 16.

* 5. To gird; to fasten by binding.

* 6. To protect; to arm against attack.

"Our heart guarded with the breast-plate of righteousness."—Barrow: Sermons, vol. ii., ser. 3.

B. Intrans.: To watch by way of caution or defence; to be wary, to be cautious, to take precautions; to be on one's guard, to take heed. (Followed by against.)

"To guard against such mistakes it is necessary to acquaint ourselves a little with words."—Watts.

¶ To guard one's self against: To be on one's guard; to take precautions; to make one's self secure by caution.

"One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection."—Addison.

guard (u silent), * garde, s. [O. Fr. guarde; Fr. garde.] [GUARD, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act or state of guarding or watching; a state or posture of caution or vigilance for the protection, defence, or security of any person or thing against injury, loss, or attack.

2. One who or that which guards, secures, protects, or watches over any person or thing for protection against injury, loss, or attack, or to secure the safety of or prevent escape.

(1) A man or body of men engaged to defend a person or place against attack or injury, or prevent escape; a sentinel, a watch.

"Slain by the garde."—Goldyng: Justine fo. 88.

(2) A man in charge of a railway train or mail coach. (English.)

(3) A quality or endowment which serves to keep off evil.

"His greatness was guard
To bar heaven's shaft." Shakesp.: Pericles, ii. 4.

(4) That which serves to secure against objection or censure; caution of expression.

"They have expressed themselves with as few guards and restrictions as I."—Atterbury.

3. An attachment or appliance designed to secure anything against loss or injury of any kind.

(1) The bow or basket of a sword hilt to protect the hand.

(2) A chain or cord for attaching a watch to one's person or dress.

(3) A bow or wire round a lantern to protect the glass.

(4) An upright piece of wood in a narrow passage to prevent the lock of a canal or the corner of a street from being injured by passing boats or vehicles. A fender, guard-pile, or post, as the case may be.

(5) An ornamental edging, lace hem, or border.

"The guards are but slightly basted on."—Shakesp.: Much Ado About Nothing, i. 1.

(6) A kind of fender used to prevent the too close access of children to the fire.

"Round the guard of our nursery."—De Quincey: Autob. Sketches, i. 13.

* 2. (Pl.): Ornaments in general.

"Rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose."
Shakesp.: Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.

II. Technically:

1. Bookbind.: One of the slips of paper bound in with a blank book to thicken it at the back, when the leaves are intended to contain mounted slips or drawings.

2. Cricket: The position of the bat for most effectually protecting the wicket.

3. Fencing & Boxing: The position of the arms or weapon in defence; a posture of defence.

4. Firearms:

(1) A bow beneath a gun-stock protecting the trigger.

(2) A safety-lock of a fowling-piece to prevent the accidental dropping of the hammer.

(3) A nipple-shield to protect the little tube which receives the percussion-cap.

5. Agric.: One of the teeth projecting forward from the cutter-bar of the harvester. The knife plays through the guards, and the knife sections make a shear cut against the soles of the guard-slots.

6. Mach.: A light frame in which the nuts of bolts fit to prevent their becoming unscrewed by the vibration of the engine.

7. Mil.: The élite of the army, so called from its being their especial duty to guard the person of the President, Governor of a State, King, or other ruling dignitary. The most celebrated corps under this title was the Old Guard of Napoleon, whose brilliant services have given them historical renown. Guards are superior in rank to and better paid and clothed than the rest of the army. The title is sometimes applied to the militia, as "The National Guard of Pennsylvania."

8. Naut.: An extension laterally of the deck of a river steamboat, beyond the lines of the hull, making it overhang the water. It frequently comes flush with the outside of the paddle-box.

9. Zool.: The cylindrical fibrous sheath protecting the phragmacone (internal chambered shell) of a Belemnite.

¶ (1) To be or stand on one's guard: To be watchful or cautious.

"'Tis best we stand upon our guard."
Shakesp.: Tempest, ii. 1.

(2) To be off one's guard: To be careless, inattentive, or heedless.

(3) To mount guard:

Mil.: To go on duty as a guard or sentinel.

guard-boat, s. A boat employed to row round and about ships of war in a harbour to see that a proper look-out is kept; also a boat employed by the harbour authorities to see that the quarantine regulations are properly observed.

"At night the launch was again moored with a top chain, and guard-boats stationed round both ships as before."—Cook: Third Voyage, bk. v., ch. iv.

guard-cells, s. pl.

Bot.: Cells of crescent form, with thinner walls than those of the ordinary cells, from which, moreover, they are distinguished by containing chlorophyll.

* guard-chamber, s. A guard-room.

* guard-coat, s. A coat guarded or edged with lace, &c.

"Coming down a tavern-stairs in his master's fine guard-coat."—Steele: Spectator, No. 88.

guard-finger, s. [GUARD, s., II. 5.]

guard-lock, s.

Hydraul. Engin.: A tide-lock, forming a communication between a basin and tide-water.

guard mounting, s.

Mil.: The act and ceremony of going on guard.

guard-pile, s. [GUARD, s., I. 3 (4).]

guard-plate, s. The plate which closes the opening in front of a cupola-furnace; it is attached to the iron casing by staples. In the centre of the plate is the tapping-hole, through which the melted metal flows when the stopping is withdrawn.

guard-rail, s.

1. Railroad: A short rail placed on the inside of a main rail, so as to keep a wheel on the track by pressing against the inside of the flange of the wheel. It is used when there is a short break in the continuity of the other rail, as in switches and crossings. A safety, side, or wing rail.

2. Nautical:

(1) A hand-rail on the bridge of a steam-vessel.

(2) A breast-rail on the break of a poop.

(3) A safety-rail around a hatchway.

guard-room, s. A room or apartment for a guard; a room where military offenders are confined.

"To seek his guard-room in the porch."
Scott: Rokeby, v. 18.

guard-ship, s.

Naut.: A vessel of war stationed in a port or harbour to act as a guard, to see that the harbour regulations are observed, and to receive seamen until they can be draughted off to their respective ships.

"Our guard-ships were remote at sea."—Baker: Charles II. (an. 1667).

* guard'-a-ble (u silent), a. [Eng. guard; -able.] That may or can be guarded, defended, or protected.

* guard-age (pron. gard'-ĭj), s. [Eng. guard; -age.] That which guards or protects one; a guard, wardship.

guard'-ant (u silent), a. & s. [O. Fr., pr par. of guarder = to guard.]

A. As adjective:

* 1. Ord. Lang.: Guarding, watching; acting as a guard or watch.

"Guardant before his feet a lion lay." Southey.

2. Her.: [GARDANT].

* B. As subst.: A guard, a guardian.

"My angry guardant stood alone."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry VI., iv. 7.

guard'-ĕd (u silent), * gard'-ĕd, pa. par. & a. [GUARD, v.]

A. As pa. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Protected, watched over, defended.

"What! said he nought . . .
Of guarded pass?"
Scott: Lady of the Lake, iv. 18.

* 2. Edged, trimmed, bound.

3. Circumspect, cautious, careful, wary, as, To be guarded in one's language.

4. Done, uttered, or managed with care or circumspection; characterized by care.

"However moderate his opinions, however guarded his conduct."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

guard'-ĕd-ly (u silent), adv. [Eng. guarded; -ly.] In a guarded, careful, or circumspect manner; with care or circumspection.

"So guardedly, that it was impossible to make any serious charge against the author."—Sheridan: Life of Swift.

* guard'-ĕd-nĕss (u silent), s. [Eng. guarded; -ness.] The quality or state of being guarded; care, caution, circumspection.

guar-den, s. [GUARDIAN.]

guar-den-age, s. [GUARDIANAGE.]

guard'-ẽr (u silent), s. [Eng. guard; -er.] One who guards; a guard.

"The bold guarders of the house shall shake."
Scott: Epidemic Mortality.

guard'-fûl (first u silent), a. [Eng guard; -ful(l).] Guarded, wary, circumspect, cautious.

"I meanwhile Watch with guardful eye these murderous motions."
Aaron Hill.

guard'-ĭ-an (u silent), guard-en, s. & a. [O. Fr. gardien.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. One who has the charge, care, or custody of any person or thing.

"She speaks of him, her author, guardi'an, friend."
Cowper: Charity, 399.

* 2. A repository or storehouse.

"Colmeskill,
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones."
Shakesp: Macbeth, ii. 4.

II. Law: One who has the charge, custody, and supervision of any person not legally capable of managing his own affairs.

"Of the several species of guardians, the first are guardians by nature—viz., the father and (in some cases) the mother of the child. This guardianship is a mere personal right in the father or other ancestor to the custody of the person of the infant, until he or she attains twenty-one years of age. For if an estate be left to an infant, the father is by common law the guardian, and must account to his child for the profits. There are also guardians for nurture, which are the father, or, if he be dead, the mother, till the infant attains the age of fourteen years; a guardianship which, like that by nature, has no reference to the infant's property, but relates merely to his person."
—Blackstone: Commentaries, bk. i., ch. 13.

B. As adj.: Guarding, watching, defending; acting as a guardian or protector, especially in the phrase guardian angel.

"No father's guardian hand my youth maintained."
Savage: The Bastard.

¶ (1) Guardians of the poor: Persons elected by the ratepayers and owners of property in a parish to supervise the relief of the poor, the management of the workhouses, &c., and generally to carry out the poor laws.

* (2) Guardian of the spiritualities: A person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see. He may be either guardian in law or jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese within his province; or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbishop or vicar-general doth for the time depute. (Cowel.)

* (3) Guardian of the temporalities: A person to whom the temporal jurisdiction and the profits of a vacant see are committed.

guardian angel, s.

1. Lit. & Theol.: It is a pious belief (q.v.) but not an article of faith in the Latin and Greek Churches that to every individual of the human race there is assigned at birth an angel as guardian and protector. These duties are fulfilled by warding off temptations that may injure the person's spiritual condition, or by instilling into the soul wise counsels and holy warnings. Theologians deduce this belief immediately from Matt. xviii. 10, and the Fathers of the Church strongly inculcate it, and in the Lives of the Saints instances are given of the active interference of guardian-angels. The belief is shared by Anglican High Churchmen. Bishop Bull (Sermons (ed. 1714), ii. 506) speaks of the belief that every Christian has a guardian-angel as "highly probable." Smith (Dict. of Bible, s.v. Angel) says that the notion of special guardian-angels watching over individuals is consistent with the text in Matthew, though not necessarily to be deduced therefrom. He adds that the existence of the belief in the early Church is shown from Acts xii. 5. The Roman Church celebrates the Feast of Guardian Angels on October 2. It is a double. [GUARDIAN-SPIRIT.]

"Whence is taken the name of guardian-angels? From the following words of Holy Scripture: He shall give his angels charge over thee to guard thee in all thy ways (Ps. xci. 11)."—Schaff: Creed of the Greek & Latin Churches, p. 462.

2. Fig.: A protector, a defender.

guardian-spirit, s.

Compar. Relig.: Probably the idea of guardian-spirits had its origin in a low form of Animism—that each person is double, that when he dies his other self, whether remaining near at hand or gone far away, may return, and continue capable of injuring his enemies and aiding his friends. It finds expression in some form in all primitive religions, and in many which have reached a higher stage of development. The Australian native believes that when a warrior kills his first foe the spirit of the slain enters the body of the slayer, and becomes his guardian; in Tasmania a native has been heard to ascribe his deliverance from danger to the care of his deceased father's spirit; and the most important religious rite of a North American Indian is to obtain a patron genius. In Asia, in Africa, and among the Indians of South America, the belief in guardian-spirits obtains, as it did formerly among the Aryans of Northern Europe. (Grimm: Deut. Myth. (ed. Stallybrass), ch. xxviii.) But it is in classic paganism that it appeals to us most gracefully. Menander (ap. Clement. Stromat., v.) tells us of the good mystagogue given to every man at his birth, and the Demon of Socrates has quite a bibliography of his own, beginning with Plato and ending with Cardinal Manning. In Roman times the guardian-spirit was represented as a lar among the household gods, and specially venerated on the anniversary of the birth of the guarded one, with festive rites. There are few more touching passages in Roman poetry than those in which Ovid describes his feelings in exile on the recurrence of the days sacred to his own and to his wife's guardian-spirits. (Trist., iii. 13, v. 5). [GUARDIAN-ANGEL.]

guard'-ĭ-an-age (u silent; age as ĭj), s. [Eng. guardian; -age.] Guardianship, protection, care.

"During the time of my nonage (whiles I was under his guardianage), he bare himself, not only valiant, but also true and faithfull unto me."—P. Holland: Livius, p. 1,093.

guar'-dĭ-an-ẽss (u silent), s. [Eng. guardian; -ess.] A female guardian.

"I have placed a trusty watchful guardianess."
Beaum. & Flet.: Wit at several Weapons, i.

guar'-dĭ-an-ize (u silent), v.i. [Eng. guardian; -ize.] To act the part of a guardian.

guar'-dĭ-an-lĕss (u silent), s. [Eng. guardian; -less.] Without a guardian; unprotected, undefended.

"But first I'll try to find out this guardianless graceless villain."—Wycherley: Plain Dealer, iii. 1.

guar'-dĭ-an-shĭp (u silent), s. [Eng. guardian; -ship.] The office of a guardian; care, protection.

"A legitimate and salutary guardianship became an unjust and noxious tyranny."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. i.

guard'-ĭng (u silent), gard'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GUARD, s.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. The act of watching over or protecting; protection, care, guardianship.

"That thei maie vnder the tuicion and guarding of their besuenly father, bee safely defended against Satan's engens."—Udal: Luke xi.

* 2. Trimming, or edging of a coat, &c.

guard'-irons (as gard-ī-ûrnz), s. pl. [Eng. guard, and irons.]

Naut.: Curved bars of iron placed over the ornamental figures on a ship's head or quarter to guard them from injury.

guard'-lĕss (u silent), guard-lesse, a. [Eng. guard; -less.] Without guard or defence; unguarded, defenceless.

"His flocks left guardlesse."
Chapman: Homer: Iliad v.

guard'-shĭp (u silent), s. [Eng. guard; -ship.] Guardianship, care, protection, defence.

"Under whose wise and careful guardship
I now despise fatigue and hardship."
Swift: A Panegyric on the Dean.

guards'-man (u silent), s. [Eng. guard, and man.]

1. One who guards, defends, or protects; a guard.

2. An officer or private in the guards.

gua'-rĕ-a (u as w), s. [From guara, the name given to one of the species by the natives of Cuba.]

Bot.: A genus of Meliaceæ, tribe Trichilieæ. The species have pinnate leaves and axillary clusters of flowers, with four or eight seeds. The juice of the bark of Guarea Aubletii and that of G. trichilioides are purgatives and violent emetics. G. purgans and G. spiciflora tend to produce abortion.

guar'-ĭn-ite (u as w), s. [Named after Prof. Guarini, of Naples.]

Min.: A tetragonal, yellow, transparent or translucent mineral with a gray streak, having a somewhat adamantine lustre, on the cleavage face. Hardness, 6; sp. gr., 3·5. Compos.: silica, 33·04; titanic acid, 39·92; lime, 25·01, &c. Found in small cavities in a grayish trachyte on Mount Somma. (Dana.)  guar'-ish,  gar'-ish, v.t. [O. Fr. guarissant, pr. par. of guarir = to heal; Fr. guérir.] To heal, to cure. (Spenser: F. Q., III. v. 41.)

guât-tẽr'-ĭ-a (u as w), s. [Named after John Baptiste Guatteri, an Italian botanist.]

Bot.: A genus of Anonaceæ, tribe Anoneæ. The flowers of Guatteria virgata are very sweet; the tree, which occurs in Jamaica, is said to be one of those furnishing lancewood. G. longifolia is planted for ornament along roadsides in Bengal.

gua'-va (u as w), s. [The native name of the fruit in Guiana.]

Bot.: The fruit of various species of the myrtaceous genus Psidium, specially P. pyriferum, P. pomiferum, &c., also the trees on which they grow. Their native country is GUAVA.

America. The fruits are pulpy and luscious to the taste. P. pomiferum is more acid than P. pyriferum. Both make with sugar a cooling, but somewhat astringent preserve. The young bark and leaves, indeed, are used as astringents, and the leaves in Brazil for medicated baths.

guava-flycatcher, s.

Ornith.: Turdus analis.

guava-jelly, s. An excellent jelly prepared in the West and also in the East Indies, from the fruit of the guava.

guaÿ'-a-can-ite (u as w), s. [Named from its locality Guayacana, in the Chilian Cordilleras.]

Min.: The same as ENARGITE (q.v.).

gū-ây-a-quil'-lite, s. [GUYAQUILLITE.]

gua'-za (u as w), s. [Some East Indian languages.] The narcotic tops of Indian hemp (Cannabis sativa, variety indica).

gua'-za, guaz'-zō (u as w), s. [Ital.] A distemper painting used by the ancients; it is very hard and durable, and the vehicle being white of egg, gum, or glue, resists the action of damp and preserves the colours completely.

gua-zû'-ma (gua as gwa), s. [The Mexican name of the plant.]

Bot.: A genus of Byttneriaceæ, tribe Byttnereæ. It consists of shrubs or small trees, with elm-like leaves, axillary cymes of pink or yellow flowers, and tubercular, nut-like fruits. They are found in tropical America, India, and Africa. The fruit of Guazuma ulmifolia is filled with a sweet and agreeable mucilage. In Martinique the young bark is used to clarify sugar, while the infusion of the old bark is employed as a sudorific, and as a remedy in cutaneous diseases. G. tomentosa is called in Jamaica Bastard Cedar. Strong fibres are made in India from its young shoots.

gua-zû'-tĭ (gu as gw), s. [A South American word.]

Zool.: Cervus campestris, a South American deer. An offensive smell proceeds from it, perceptible half a mile off. (Darwin.)

 gŭ'-bẽr-nançe, s. [Lat. gubernans, pr. par. of guberno = to govern.] Government.

"With the gubernance of all the king's tenants and subjects."—Strype: Memorials (an. 1550).

 gŭ'-bẽr-nāte, v.t. [Lat. gubernatus, pa. par. of guberno = to govern.] To govern, to rule, to administer.

 gu-bẽr-nā'-tion, s. [Lat. gubernatio, from gubernatus, pa. par. of guberno = to govern.] The act of governing; government; rule; direction.

"May not the matters of external gubernation of the church be disputed?"—Spottiswood: Church of Scotland, bk. vi. (an. 1596).

 gŭ'-bẽr-nā-tive, a. [Eng. gubernat(e); -ive.] Having the power of governing; governing.

"Real and gubernative wisdom."—Bp. Hacket.

 gu-bẽr-na-tŏr'-ĭ-al, a. [Lat. gubernator = a governor; Eng. adj. suff. -ial.] Of or pertaining to a governor or government.

gŭd, gūde, a. [Good.]

gŭd'-dle (1), v.t. [Etym. doubtful. Jamieson suggests Icel. gutla = to agitate a liquid; gull = the agitation of a liquid.] To catch fish with the hands, by groping under the stones or banks of a stream.

"I guddle them in aneath the stanes."—Hogg.

gŭd'-dle (2), v.i. [A variant of guzzle (q.v.).] To guzzle; to drink much or greedily.

gŭd'-dle (3), v.t. [Etym. doubtful.] To perform or do in a bungling, awkward manner; to bungle.

gŭd'-dle, s. [Etym. doubtful.] Work of a dirty or greasy nature.

gŭd'-dlĭng, s. [Guddle (1), v.] The act of catching fish by groping.

"This is gumpling or gudding, ony o' them ye like to ca't."—Hogg.

gŭd'-dŏk, s. [Russ.] A Russian fiddle.

gūde, gūid, a. [Good.]

gūd'e-lў, a. & adv. [Goodly.]

gūd'e-măn, s. [Goodman.]

gūd'e-sire, s. [Scoteh gude = good; Eng. sire.] A graudfather. (Scott: Antiq., ch. ix.)

 gūd'e-will, s. [Goodwill.]

1. A gratuity.

2. The designation given to the proportion of meal, ground at a mill, which is due to the under-miller.

 gūde'-will-ў, a. [Eng. gudewill; -y.]

1. Liberal.

2. Acting spontaneously; volunteering.

"Ane army rasit of gudewilly knichtis."—Bellenden: T. Livius, p. 821.

gŭdg'-eŏn, * go-jon, * goj-one, * goj-une, * goy-on, s. [Fr. goujon, from Lat. gobionem, accus. of gobio = a gudgeon, from Gr. κωβιός (kōbios) = a gudgeon or teneh.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: A kind of small fresh-water fish, Gobio fluviatilis, belooging to the family Cyprinidæ. It is easily caught, and is also used as a bait in pike-fishing.

"Minnows and gudgeons gorge the unwholesome food." Cowper: Progress of Error, 483.

2. Figuratively:

(1) A person easily caught, duped, or cheated; a gull.

(2) A bait; an allurement; something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage.

"But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool s gudgeon, this opinion."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

II. Technically:

1. Machinery:

(1) The metallie journal piece let into the end of a wooden shaft.

(2) The bearing portion of a shaft.

(3) One of the notches in the carrick-bits for receiving the metal bushes wherein the spindle of a windlass traverses.

2. Naut.: The metallie eye bolted to the aftern-post to hang the rudder upon.

B. As adj.: Voracious, greedy, insatiable.

"In vain at glory gudgeon Boswell snaps."
Wolcot: Peter Pindar, p. 107.

 gŭdg'-eŏn, v.t. [Gudgeon, s.] To cheat, to deceive, to impose upon.

"To be gudgeoned of the opportunities which had been given you."—Sir W. Scott. (Ogilvie.)  gud-line, * gud-leno, * gud-ling, s. [A corrupt. of O. H. Ger. gulden = golden (q.v.).] A denomination of foreign geld coin.

"Granted for payment of the gudlines, silver-work, and others publick debts."—Acts Charles I. (ed. 1814), vi. 163.

 gue (1), s. [Fr. gueux.] A rogue, a vagabond.

 guc (2), s. [Etym. doubtful.] (See extract.)

"Before violins were introduced, the music was performed on an instrument called a gue, which appears to have had some similarity to a violin, but had only two strings of horse hair, and was played upon in the same manner as a violincello."—Edmonstone: Zetland, ii. 59, 60.

Guē'-bre, Ghē'-bẽr, Guē'-bẽr, Ghe-ber, Ghe-bre, s. [Pers. Ghebar.]

Religions & Ethnology:

A. As subst.: One of the Fire-worshippers (q.v.). See also Parsees and Zoroâstrians.

"The Ghebers lay so much stress on their cushee or girdle, as not to dare to be an instant without it."—Moore: Fire-Worshippers. (Note.)

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the Fire-worshippers.

"The Gheber belt that round him clung."
Moore: Fire-Worshippers.

Guĕl'-dẽr, gĕl'-dẽr, guel-dres, s. & a. [From Gueldres, the French name of Geldern, a town of Germany, on the Niers.]

guelder-rose, gelder-rose, guel-dres-rose, s.

Bot.: Viburnum Opulus, a shrubby plant, six or eight feet high, belonging to the order Caprifoliaceæ, and the tribe Sambuceæ. It has subglabrous three-lobed stipulate leaves, and cymes of white flowers, and fruits of red translucent drupes. It is wild in the United States, Europe, and Siberia.

Guĕlph, † Guĕlf (u as w), s. [A proper name = Wolf.] (See def.)

History:

1. Gen.: The name given to sueeessive Dukes of Bavaria. In A.D. 1089 Guelph, the son of Guelph, Duke of Bavaria, married that Matilda, daughter of Bonifaee, Duke of Tuscany, who in 1076 or 1077 made the ehureh of Rome heir to all her estates in and out of Italy, and being divorced and remarried, formally confirmed the gift in 1102.

2. Specif.: The name of a political party. It arose in the twelfth eentury, when a eontest took place for the Imperial erown between Conrad of Hohenstaufen, whose adherents were called Ghibellines (q.v.), and Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, and nephew of Guelf or Welf, Duke of Bavaria, who commanded for him in the fight. Conrad was sueeessful in the struggle. The exclamations Hie Guelf and Hie Gibelin are said to have been used as battle eries in a battle before Weinsberg between the two rivals in A.D. 1140. The name Guelphs was greatly extended to all opponents of the Emperor, and as the Pope had a standing feud with the representatives of the temporal power as to the line of demarcation between their respeetive jurisdictions, he naturally took the part of the disaffected. Besides this, he had reasons for gratitude to the House of Guelph. [1.] During the remainder of the Middle Ages, this feud divided Italy and Germany into hostile factions. The royal family of Britain are by descent Guelphs.

Guĕl'-phĭe (u as w), a. [Ger. Guelph (q.v.), and suff. -ic.] Of or belonging to the Guelphs.

Guelphic-order, s.

Her.: An order of knighthood instituted for Hanover on Aug. 12, 1815, by the English Prince Regent, afterwards George IV.

BADGE OF GUELPHIC ORDER.

guē'-noń, s. [Fr.]

Zool.: The name given by the French to certain Simiadæ (Monkeys) of the Old World. They belong to the genera Cercopithecus and Cercocebus; their type is the Green Monkey, Cercocebus sabæus.

† guĕr-dŏn, * guĕr'-dŏno, s. [O. Fr., from Low Lat. widerdonum, widar'ón, a hybrid compound, from O. H. Ger. wider (Ger. wieder) = against, and Low Lat. donum = a gift; cf. A.S. widherlean, a recompense, from widher = against, back again, and lean = a loan. (Skeat.)] A reward, a recompense, a return, a requital.

"Verse, like the laurel, its immortal meed, Should be the guerdon of a noble deed."
Cowper: Charity, 293.

 guĕr'-dŏn, v.t. [Guerdon, s.] To reward, to recompense, to give a guerdon to.

"For al it be so that they ben youre frendes, therefore shulden ye not sufren, that they serve you for nought, but ye oughte the rather guerdone hem, and shewe hem youre largesse."—Chaucer: Tale of Melibeus.

 guĕr'-dŏn-a-ble, a. [Eng. gverdon; -able.] That may or should be rewarded; deserving of a guerdon or reward.

"Finding it as well guerdonable, as grateful, to publish their libels."—Sir G. Buck: Hist. Researches, iii. 75.

 guĕr'-dŏn-lĕss, * guer-don-lesse, a. [Eng. guerdon; -less.] Without reward; unrewarded.

"But loue alas quite him so his wage
With cruel danger plainly at the last
That with the death guerdonlesse he passt."
Chaucer: Complaynte, 397.

guĕr-ĭl'-la, guĕr-rĭl'-la, s. & a. [Sp. guerrilla = a skirmish, a little war; dimin. of guerra (Fr. guerre) = war, from O. H. Ger. werra = discord.] [War.]

A. As substantive:

1. An irregular warfare carried on by small independent bands; an irregular, petty war.

2. One who carries on war in an irregular manner; a member of an independent band engaged in predatory and irregular attacks upon an enemy.

B. As adj.: Pertaining or belonging to a band of guerillas; carrying on war in an irregular manner; consisting of guerillas.

"The Guerilla band Came like Night's tempest, and avenged the land."
Scott; Vision of Don Roderick, 49.

¶ Guerilla war or warfare: An irregular mode of carrying on war by means of small, independent bands of armed men, self-constituted and ordered, unconnected with a regular army, and entitled to dismiss themselves at any time. Guerilla warfare is mainly carried on in a country occupied by an enemy.

Guĕrn'-sĕy, s. & a. [Norm. Fr. (?).]

A. As substantive:

Geog.: One of the Channel Islands.

B. As adj.: (See the compound).

Guernsey-lily, s.

Bot.: Nerine sarniensis.

guĕr-rĭl-le'-rō (le as lyē), s. [Sp.] A guerilla, or guerillist.

guĕr-rĭl'-lĭst, guĕr-ĭl'-lĭst, s. [Eng. guerill(a); -ist.] A member of a band of guerillas; one who carries on guerilla warfare.

guĕss, * ges, * gesse, * gess-yn, v. t. & i. [Dan. gisse; Sw. gissa = to guess; cogn. with Icel. giska; Dut. gissen; Dan. gjette = to guess. Probably guess meant originally to try, to get, being a secondary (desiderative) verb formed from to get. (Skeat.)]

A. Transitive:

1. To form an opinion concerning without any certain grounds or means of knowledge; to judge of at random.

"And guessing what words anciently meant, without consulting the ancients to know the fact."—Waterland: Works, iii. 275.

2. To form an opinion or idea of on probable or reasonable grounds; to conclude with probability.

"Ambushed men, whom, by their arms and dress,
To be Taxallan enemies I guess."
Dryden: Indian Emperor, i. 2.

3. To conjecture rightly; to divine; to solve by a correct conjecture; to form a correct opinion concerning; as, To guess a riddle.

"So much room as to guess what he would be at."—Warburton: Divine Legation (Dedic. to the Free Thinkers).

* 4. To hit upon; to reproduce from memory.

"Tell me their words, as nearly as thou canst guess them." Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., iv. 1.

5. To think, to suppose, to imagine, to believe.

B. Intransitive:

1. To form a conjecture; to make a guess; to estimate.

"The met of this llond, as Englische men gesseth."—Trevisa, II. 39.

2. To believe, to suppose.

"There ben now fewe of suche, I gesse" Gower, III. 180.

*3. To imagine.

"I gesside that I bar in o panyere . . . alle metes that ben maad bi craft of bakers."—Wycliffe Genesis xl 47 (Purvey.)

4. To judge at random. (Followed by at.)

"Guess at her years."
Shakesp.: Antony & Cleopatra, III. 3.

*5. To aim.

"The archeres to hem gesse"
Richard Cœur de Lion, 4,481.

¶ Crabb thus discriminates between to guess and to conjecture: "We guess that a thing actually is; we conjecture that which may be: we guess that it is a certain hour; we conjecture at the meaning of a person's actions. The guessing is opposed to the certain knowledge of a thing; the conjecturing is opposed to the full conviction of a thing; a child guesses at that portion of his lesson which he has not properly learned; a fanciful person employs conjecture where he cannot draw any positive conclusion." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

guĕss, * gesse, * guesse, s. [Guess, v.]

1. A conjecture; a judgment at random, or without certain grounds or reasons.

"If right this guess of mine."
Scott: Lord of the Isles II. 10.

2. A riddle. (Scotch.) guess-rope, guess-warp, s.

Naut.: A rope having one end fastened to a distant object, in order to warp a vessel towards the object.

Guess-warp boom:

Naut.: A spar run out from the side of a vessel, with a rope attached near its outer extremity, for boats to ride by when the vessel is at her moorings.

guess-work, s. [Guesswork.]

†guĕss (2), s. [A corruption of guise (q.v.).] Guise, manner, fashion, sort.

"My lady Isabella is of another guess mould."—H. Walpole.

guĕss'-ĕr, * gess-are, s. [Eng. guess; -er.] One who guesses or conjectures; a conjecturer.

"A man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser."—Bentley: Sermons, III.

guĕss'-ĭng, * gess-ing, * gess-inge, gess-ynge, pr. pa., a., & s. [Guess, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As subst.: The act of conjecturing or judging at random; a guess, a conjecture.

"William wroot so by his owne gessynge."—Trevisa, II. 59.

guĕss-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. guessing; -ly.] By guess, by conjecture; conjecturally, at random.

"I have a letter guessingly set down."
Shakesp.: Lear, III. 7.

guĕss'-ĭve, a. [Eng. guess; -ive.] Conjectural.

"They are only guessive interpretations of dim-eyed man."—Feltham: Resolves, xcvi.

guĕss'-wŏrk, s. [Eng. guess, and work.] Work performed by mere guess or at random; guessing, conjecture.

gŭcst, * gest, * geste, * gist, s. [A.S. gæst, gest, gast, gist, giest; cogn. with Icel. gesti; Dan. giest; Sw. gäst; Dan. gast; Goth. gasts; Ger. gast, all = a guest; Lat. hostis = a stranger, a guest, an enemy, from a root ghan = to strike.]

1. A person received and entertained in the house or at the table of another, whether by invitation or otherwise; one who lodges or resides temporarily at an hotel or lodging-house.

"Lochiel, surrounded by more than six hundred broadswords, was there to receive his guests."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

2. Any person, thing, or being temporarily residing, living, or placed in another.

"Go, soul, the body's guest."
Sir Walter Raleigh: The Lie.

3. A name given by the superstitious vulgar in the south of Scotland to any object which they consider as the prognostic or omen of the approach of a stranger.

guest-chamber, s. A room appropriated to the entertainment of guests.

"Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?"—Mark xiv. 14.

guest-hall, * gest-halle, s. A guest-chamber.

"Fair him gret in the gest-halle."
Lay le Freine, 257.

guest-heus, * gest-hus, s. An inn, a place of entertainment.

"Hospitium, gesthus."—Wright: Vol. of Vocab., p. 95.

guest-rite, s. The offices due towards a guest.

"He would not bear
In his black fleete that guest-rite to the war."
Chapman: Homer; Odyssey xxi.

guest-rope, s. [Guess-rope.]

guĕst'-tāk-ĕr, s. [A corruption of gist-taker, that is, one who took in cattle to pasture.] An agister.

guĕst, * gest-en, v.t. & i. [M.H.G. gesten; Sw. gästa; Dan. gjeste.] [Guest, s.]

A. Trans.: To entertain as a guest; to treat hospitably.

"His men wer well gested with brede, wyne and light."
Robert de Brunne, p. 160.

B. Intrans.: To lodge as a guest; to be a guest.

"My hope was now
To guest with him, and see his hand bestow Rights of our friendship"
Chapman: Homer; Odyssey xxiv.

guĕst'-ĕn, * gest-nen, * gist-nen, v.t. & i. [Guest, s.]

A. Trans.: To entertain or lodge as a guest.

"He gestened thani wit him that night"
Cursor Mundi, 2,711.

B. Intrans.: To lodge, to be a guest.

"He wule gistnen mid on."—Ancren Riwle, p. 402.

guĕst'-ĭng, * gest-ing, * gest-inge, s. [Eng. guest; -ing.] A lodging as a guest.

"Thal toke thair gesting in the tun."
Cursor Mundi, 11,443.

guĕst-ĭve, a. [Eng. guest; -ive.] Pertaining or suited to a guest; hospitable.

"Besides, if I go home,
My mother is with two doubts ouercome:
If she shall stay with me, and take fit eare
For all such guests, as there seeke guestiue fare."
Warner: Albions Eng., bk. xvi.

guĕst'-nĭng, * gest'-ĕn-ўng, * gest-ning, * gest-ninge, * gest-nyng, s. [Eng. guesten; -ing.] A lodging as a guest; hospitality, a feast.

"Darie holdith riche gestnyng." Alisaunder, 1,778.

guest'-en-ye, s. [Eng. gesten; -y.] A feast.

"The lordys that of valew were,
They come to that gestonye."
Torrent of Portugal, 2,724.

guĕst'-wīse, adv. [Eng. guest; -wise.] In the manner of a guest; like a guest.

"I entering guest-wise on a time
The frolicke Thæbane court."
Warner: Albions England, vi. 31.

guĕt-tar'-dă, s. [Named after Etienne Guettard, a French botanist.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the family Guettardiaceæ. The bark and root of Guettarda coccinea, G. Antirrhœa, and G. Angelica are febrifuges and astringents.

guĕt-tar'-dĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. guettard(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Cinchonaceæ, tribe Coffeæ.

gueux (eux nearly as ū), s. [Fr. = a beggar, a ragamuffin, a rascal, a blackguard.]

Hist.: The nickname taken by the patriots of the Low Countries who, in the sixteenth century, opposed the religious and political tyranny of Philip II., King of Spain.

guĕ-vē'-ī, s. [A South African word.]

Zool.: Various species of Cephalopus, spec. C. pygmœa, a diminutive antelope about a foot high, occurring at the Cape of Good Hope. Called by the Dutch the Kleene Boe, &c. There are other species of Guevei.

guĕ-vī'-nĭ-ą (u as w), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Bot.: A genus of Proteaceæ. The fruit of one species of the genus is said to be sold in the markets of Chili, under the name of Avellano.

gŭf-fâw', gŭf-fâ', s. [Onomatopoetic.] A loud burst of laughter.

"The skirl at the end of the guffa."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xxxv.

gŭf'-fĕr, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A local name for the viviparous Blenny, Zoarcus viviparus.

gŭg'-gle, v.i. [Imitative; cf. gurgle.] To make a sound like that of a liquid passing through a narrow aperture, or of air being forced through a liquid; to gurgle.

"One . . . red guggling turkey-cock."—Carlyle: French Revolution, pt. ii., bk. iv., ch. iv.

gŭg'-gle, s. [Guggle, v.] A sound as of water or other liquid passing through a narrow aperture, or of air being passed through a liquid; a gurgle.

† gûhr, s. [Ger., = (1) fermentation, working; (2) See def., from gähren = to ferment.]

Min.: A loose earthy deposit in the cavities of rocks, generally white, in which case it is probably calcareous, but sometimes reddish or reddish-yellow from a mixture of oxide of iron.

guî'-ăc, guî'-ą-cŭm (gui as gwī), gwī'-ą-cŭm, s. [Guaiacum.]

Guî-â'-ną, Guy-â'-ną, Guay-â'-ną (Gui, Guy, and Guay as Gwē), s. & a. [The native name.]

A. As subst.: An extensive country in the northern part of South America, between the Amazon and the Orinoco rivers, divided into Brazilian, British, Dutch, French and Venezuelan Guiana.

B. As adj.: Of or pertaining to the place described under A.

Guiana-bark, s.

Pharm.: The bark of Portlandia hexandra, used as a febrifuge. Called more fully French Guiana Bark.

† guī'-bąa, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Zool.: An unidentified mammal resembling the gazelle. (Goldsmith.)

guĭ'-bĕl-line, s. & a. [Ghibelline.]

Guî'-cē-war, s. [Mahratta = cowherd.] The title of the Mahratta sovereign of Guzerat, in the west of India. His capital is Baroda.

guīd'-ą-ble, a. [Eng. guid(e); -able.] That may or can be guided, led or directed.

"A submissive and guidable spirit, a disposition easy to all."—Sprat: Sermon before the King (1676), p. 12.

guīd'-age (age as ĭj), s. [Eng. guid(e); -age.]

1. Ord. Lang.: The act of guiding; guidance; direction.

2. Law: The reward or pay given for safe-conduct through a strange or unknown country.

guīd'-ançe, * guyd-ance, s. [Guide, v.] The act of guiding, leading, or directing; direction; government.

guīde, * gyden, * gyde, v.t. [Fr. guider; Ital. guidare; Sp. guiar; ultimately from Goth. witan = to watch; A.S. witan = to know, witan = to observe; hence the original meaning was to cause or make to know, to show.]

1. To direct, lead or conduct in a way, course, or path.

"A foole may eke a wise man oft gide."
Chaucer: Troilus, bk. i.

2. To direct, to rule, to regulate, to manage.

"How incapable is he frequently found of guiding himself."—Goldsmith: On Polite Learning, ch. x.

3. To point out the course to be pursued by; to direct or lead towards the proper or correct course.

"To assist your recollection, and guide your judgment."—Sir W. Jones: Charge to the Grand Jury at Calcutta, Dec. 4, 1782.

4. To influence; to direct, turn, or lead in any direction.

"In all this they are guided by nature."—Burke: On the Sublime & Beautiful, pt. iii., s. 9.

5. To instruct and direct.

*6. To attend to, to manage, to superintend.

"I will that the younger woman marry, bear children, and guide the house."—1 Timothy v. 14.

¶ For the difference between to guide and to conduct, see Conduct.

guīde, * gide, * gyde, s. [Fr. guide; Ital. guida; Sp. guia.] [Guide, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. One who or that which guides, directs, or conducts another in his way or course; a conductor; a leader.

"My feet and hands at length became Guides better than mine eyes."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. v.

2. One who or that which guides or directs a person in his conduct or course of life; a director.

"They have all the same pastoral guides appointed."
—Pearson.

3. A director; a regulator; a ruler.

"Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature?"—Hooker: Eccles. Polity.

4. A guide-book (q.v.).

II. Technically:

1. Civ. Eng.: A pile driven to mark a site.

2. Mach.: A pulley to direct a band in a new direction.

3. Mil. (Pl.): A corps of the French army, formed in 1774. They were made by Napoleon I. into a guard. When, in 1860, Savoy and Nice were annexed by France in compensation for aid rendered to Italy in the war with Austria, it was a party of Guides who placed the French flag on the summit of Mont Blanc to shouts of "Vive l'Empereur."

4. Music: A direction; a mark of direction.

5. Print.: A printer's copy-holder, which marks the line.

6. Rail. Eng.: An additional rail to keep a locomotive or car on the track in curves, crossings, or steep grades. [GUIDE-RAIL, GUARD-RAIL.]

7. Sewing-mach.: A means of directing cloth to the edge or face-plate of a gauge, in making a hem or tuck.

8. Steam-eng.: One of the bars which keep in line the blocks on the cross-head of the piston-rod. [GUIDE-BLOCK.]

9. Surg.: A tool or instrument director, as the staff or director of a surgeon's probe or bistoury.

10. Water-wheels: A plate in the curb of a water-wheel to direct the water upon the buckets of the wheel.

guide-blocks, s. pl.

Steam-engin.: Metallic pieces with parallel sides fitted on the ends of the cross-head, and sliding as guides on the side frames to keep the motion of the piston-rod direct.

guide-book, s. A book containing directions for travellers or tourists in a strange country, giving information as to places passed through, means of transit, &c.

guide-main, s. A hand-guide, a mechanical contrivance for regulating the position of the wrist in pianoforte playing, invented by Kalkbrenner.

guide-pile, s.

Hydraul. Engin.: A pile driven to mark out or limit the field of operation or a site.

guide-pulley, s.

Mach.: A pulley for directing or changing the line of motion of a belt, but not otherwise concerned in the transmission of motion.

guide-rail, s.

Rail. Engin.: An additional rail, usually placed midway between the two ordinary rails of a railway, and employed in connection with mechanical devices on the engine, carriages, or both, in preventing the rolling-stock from running off the rails. The centre rail, gripped by horizontally rotating wheels, acts as a guide-rail.

guide-screw, s.

Mach.: A screw for directing or regulating certain movements.

guide-tube, s.

Mach.: A contrivance by which a boring-bit or drill is guided, consisting commonly of a fixed tube to prevent swerving.

guide'-lĕss, a. [Eng. guide; -less.] Destitute of or without a guide, leader, or director.

"His guideless youth."
Pope: Homer; Odyssey ii, 219.

guide'-lĕss-nĕss, s. [Eng. guideless; -ness.] The quality or state of being without a guide.

"To fight with poverty and guidelessness."—C. Kingsley: Alton Locke, ch. ii.

guide'-pōst, s. [Eng. guide, and post.] A post erected at the junction of two or more roads for the purpose of pointing out the way to travellers; a finger-post.

guĭd'-ĕr, *gyd-er, s. [Eng. guid(e); -er.] One who guides, directs, or conducts; a guide, a leader, a director.

"Hence, and shut your gates upon us.
Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, i. 7.

 guĭd'-ĕr-ĕss, * gid'-ĕr-ĕsse, s. [Eng. guider; -ess.] A female guide or leader, a conductress.

"O, quod I, thou that are guideress of very light."—Chaucer: Boethius, p. 108.

 guĭde'-shĭp, * guid-schip, * guide-schip, s. [Eng. guide; -ship.]

1. Guidance, government.

"He desired that they would send to France for the duik of Albanie, to cum and ressaive the auctoritie and guidschip off the realme."—Pitscottie: Cron., p. 290.

2. Treatment.

"An' our ain lads—
Gar'd them work hard, an' little sust'nance gae,
That I was even at their guideship wae."
Ross: Helenore, p. 62.

guĭ'-dŏn, s. [Fr.]

1. A swallow-tailed company flag in a cavalry regiment, half red and half white, dividing at the fork. The red above has "U. S." in white. The white is below, and has the letter of the company in red. The fly is 3 feet 5 inches to the end of the tail; the head is 27 inches. The lance is 9 feet long, including spear and ferrule.

* 2. A standard-bearer.

* 3. One of a community established by Charlemagne at Rome to guide pilgrims to the Holy Land.

Guĭg'-nĕt, s. [Adrien Guignet, a noted French painter (?).]

Guignet's-green, s.

Chem.: Chromic hydroxide, $Cr_2O(OH)_4$. Obtained by fusing together equal molecules of potassium bichromate and crystallized boric acid, and lixiviating the fused mass with water. The residue is ground into a fine powder, and used as a green pigment.

guī-lăn-dī'-na, s. [Named after Melchior Guilandina, a Prussian traveller and a Professor of Botany at Padua; he died in 1589.]

Bot.: The Nicker-tree. A genus of leguminous plants, sub-order Cæsalpioieæ, tribe Eucæsalpinieæ. The bark and very bitter seeds of Guilandina Bonduc, an Indian tree, when pounded small and mixed with castor oil, form a valuable external application in incipient hydrocele, and the leaves fried with a little castor oil, act as a discutient in hernia humeralis. The seeds, called Bonduc or Nicker-nuts, are hard and smooth; they are used in the East for rosaries, necklaces, &c.

guild, gild, *gilde, * gyeld, * gyylde, * gylde, * yilde, s. [A.S. gild = a payment; gegyldscipe = a guild; gegilda = a member of a guild; gieldan, gyldan = to pay (Eng. yield); cogn. with Dut. gild = a guild or company; Icel. gildi = payment; Goth. gild = tribute-money; Ger. gilde = a guild.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A society or corporation belonging to the same class, trade, or pursuits, combined for mutual aid and protection of their interests.

"It was originally governed by a guild and guild-master; which was the origin of corporations, and took rise before the time of the Conquest; the name being Saxon, signifying a fraternity, which unites and flings its effects into a common stock, and is derived from gildan, to pay. A guild was a public feast, to commemorate the time of the institution; and the guild-hall the place in which the fraternity assembled."—Pennant: Journey from Chester; Lichfield.

* 2. A guildhall.

"The roome was large and wide
As it some gyeld or solemne temple were."
Spenser: F. Q., II. vii. 43.

3. A company or fellowship of any kind; an association.

"He was so deserted,
Not to be called into their guild."
Ben Jonson: Masques; Chloridia.

II. Hist.: The essential principle of the guild is the banding together for mutual help, enjoyment and encouragement. Some German scholars find the origin of guilds in the sacrificial assemblies of the Teutonic tribes; Wilda, Brentano, and others see in the family the germ from which it was developed; others again maintain that guilds have sprung from the Roman collegia. More than 2,000 years ago the Greeks had their eranoi and thiasoi, and Numa is said to have encouraged the formation of craft guilds, of which Plutarch enumerates nine. The principal guilds of the Middle Ages were—

1. Frith or Peace Guilds, widely spread over the north of Europe in early times. They were sworn associations for the protection of right and the preservation of liberty, and in England the principle of the responsibility of the guild for its members was recognised. One of the most remarkable of these guilds was that founded at Roeskild by Canute for the suppression of the piracy of the Vikings.

2. On the Continent the clergy formed special societies called Guilds of the Kalenders, from the day of meeting being on the kalends of each month. The only English guild of this character, so far as is known, was at Bristol. It kept the town records, and in later years supported a school for the Jews.

3. The Social or Religious Guilds. Their object included not only devotions and orisons, but every exercise of Christian charity, above all things mutual assistance of the guild brothers in every exigency, and burial of the dead.

4. The Trade Guilds, which were of two orders—merchant guilds and craft guilds. The former, from being composed of men of substance—in many cases landowners as well as traders—early obtained State recognition by a clause in the charter of incorporation of the borough or town in which the guild was held. In London and Florence we do not hear of merchant guilds; there the craft guilds early asserted their associating power and independence, and gradually took a place in the organization of the town government. The men of the craft guilds provided for the maintenance of the customs of their craft, framed further ordinances for its regulation (including care against fraudulent workmanship), saw those ordinances properly enforced, and punished the guild brothers who infringed them. From the craft guilds arose the twelve great Companies of London and the Arte Majori of Florence. Few important towns in England were without craft guilds. London, York, Exeter, Norwich, Bristol, and Coventry were busy with their life; but "all that remains of the ancient guilds in the liveries of to-day is their common eating and drinking." In Italy, France, Germany, and even in Constantinople, guilds once formed the strength of commerce. They were abolished in France in 1789, and in Germany 90 years later, though in that country there is a movement for their revival. Russia has no guilds; the trade associations were imposed by Catherine and Peter the Great. (Miss L. T. Smith, in Encyc. Brit.) guild-brother, s. A fellow-member of a guild.

guild-rents, s. pl. Rents payable to the Crown by any guild or fraternity.

guĭld'-a-ble, a. [Eng. guild; -able.] Liable to a tax.

"Our ministers in the places guildable."—Rastall: Collection of Statutes, p. 279.

guĭld'-ĕr, *gild-er, *gild-ern, s. [A corrupt. of Dut. & Ger. gulden = a florin, as if a coin of gueders or geldrers.] A coin current in Holland and worth twenty stivers, or about 1s. 8d. sterling.

"One projector was for coining guilders; another for coining dollars."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxi.

guĭld-hăll', * gylde-halle, s. [Eng. guild, and hall.] A hall where a guild or corporation meets; a town-hall; a corporation-hall; specif., the town-hall of London.

"After this she went into Guildhall, and there gave an account of her message to Wiat, and his answer."—Burnet: Hist. Reform. (an. 1554).

guĭld-rў, s. [Eng. guild; -ry.] A guild; the members of a guild. (Scotch.) guĭle (1), * gile, * gyle, s. [O. Fr. guile, gile; Prov. guil, from an O. L. Ger. word represented by A.S. wil; Icel. vel, væl = a trick, guile. (Skeat.)] Deceit, craft, cunning, artifice, duplicity. [WILE.]

"An Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile."—John i. 47.

guĭle (2), * gile, * gil-en, * gyle, * gylle v.t. [O. Fr. guiler.] [GUILE, s.]

1. To deceive, to delude.

"Ofte sche doth me gyle." Sir Ferumbras, 3,297.

2. To disguise craftily.

"Is it repentance,
Or only a fair show to guile his mischief?"
Beaumont & Fletcher.

guiled, a. [Eng. guil(e); -ed.]

1. Deceived, deluded.

2. Deceitful, treacherous.

"Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea."
Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

guile'-fûl, *gile-ful, *guyle-full, *gyle-ful, a. [Eng. guile; -ful(l).] Wily, crafty, deceitful, treacherous; full of guile or craft.

"To whom the guileful tempter thus replied."
Milton: P. L., ix. 547.

guile'-fûl-lỹ, *gile-ful-li, *gyle-ful-li, adv. [Eng. guileful; -ly.] In a guileful, treacherous, crafty, or deceitful manner; deceitfully.

"To whom the tempter guilefully replied."
Milton: P. L., ix. 655.

guile'-fûl-nĕss, s. [Eng. guileful; -ness.] The quality or state of being guileful; treachery, duplicity, deceit, craft.

guile'-lĕss, a. [Eng. guile; -less.] Free from guile, deceit, or duplicity; sincere, frank, honest.

"If I thy guileless bosom had,
Mine own would not be dry."
Byron: Childe Harold, i. 13.

guile'-lĕss-lỹ, adv. [Eng. guileless; -ly.] In a guileless, honest, sincere, or open manner; without deceit or duplicity.

guile'-lĕss-nĕss, s. [Eng. guileless; -ness.] The quality or state of being guileless; freedom from guile or duplicity.

guil'-ĕr, s. [Eng. guil(e), v.; -er.] One who deceives, deludes, or betrays by guile.

"And now by fortune, was arrived here, Where those two guilers with Malbecco were."
Spenser: F. Q., III. x. 37.

guil-ĭ-ĕl'-ma, s. [Named after Caroline Wilhelmine, Queen of Maximilian I., King of Bavaria.]

Bot.: A genus of Palms, tribe Cocoæ, and the spiny division of them. The leaves are pinnate; the fruit, which is egg-shaped, has but one seed. Three species are known—Guilielma speciosa is the Peach-palm of Venezuela and Guiana. It is from sixty to eighty feet high, and is cultivated along the Amazon and the Rio Negro. The natives eat the fleshy portions of the fruit boiled or roasted. The taste is like that of potatoes. Sometimes molasses is added. When fermented in water, they form a beverage, while meal obtained from them is baked into cakes.

guil'-lĕ-mĕt, s. [Fr., from the name of the inventor.]

Print.: A quotation mark; a mark used to enclose a quotation (' ' " ").

guil-lĕ-mŏt, s. [Fr.]

Ornith.: Uria, a genus of natatorial birds placed under the family Alcidæ. The bill is moderate and slender, the frontal planes advancing far upon the nostrils, but divided by the culmen; the tail short, the wings pointed, the feet short, slender, and three-toed. The proper habitat of the guillemot is amid the rocks and ice-caverns of the Arctic Ocean. They deposit their solitary egg on a ledge of rock, and the young, when hatched, tumble into the sea, and swim and dive with great facility, feeding on small fish and crustaceans. The species are common both in America and Europe. The Common or Foolish Guillemot (Uria Troile) is seen occasionally in the neighborhood of New York. It is abundant in the north of Europe. The Black Guillemot (U. grylle) breeds as far south as the Bay of Fundy. It is also common in Europe.

guil'-lĕ-văt, *gyle-fat, *gyle-vat, s. [Fr. guiller = to ferment, and Eng. vat (q.v.).] A vat used in brewing for fermenting wort.

"Gif ane burges decess, his heire sall haue the best leid, with the mask-fatt, ane gylefat, ane barrell, ane gallon."—Burrow Lawes, ch. cxxv.

guil-lōche', s. [Fr., from the name of the inventor or introducer.]

Arch.: An ornament of intertwisted bands or interlaced cords, which is made continuous as a fascia.

guil-lō-tine', s. [Fr.]

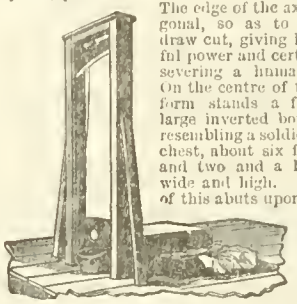
1. An apparatus for beheading criminals with a single blow. A form of it was in use in the Middle Ages, but, being improved and re-introduced by Dr. Guillotin at the time of the first French Revolution, it received its present name after him. The following description will explain the apparatus and its mode of use:—On a platform about twelve feet square, and seven feet above the ground, are erected the two upright posts between which is suspended the axe. They somewhat resemble a narrow gallows with not more than a foot between the posts. The axe, which is not unlike a hay-knife, though much heavier and broader, is drawn up to the top of the posts, between which it runs in grooves, and is held suspended by a loop in the halyards, passed over a button at the bottom. The edge of the axe is diagonal, so as to make a draw cut, giving it a fearful power and certainty in severing a human neck. On the centre of the platform stands a frame or large inverted box, much resembling a soldier's armchest, about six feet long and two and a half feet wide and high. One end of this abuts upon the upright posts; at the other end is a small truck having a strap and buckle by which the culprit is secured. He is advanced with his breast against the truck, to which his body is strapped, and tilted down, truck and all, upon his face; the truck, moving upon small wheels in grooves on the top of the chest, is run rapidly forward until the neck comes under the knife. The rope is unhooked from the button, the axe falls with a thud, the head drops into a basket, and the body is unstrapped and rolled into a large basket alongside. It is a vulgar error to suppose that Dr. Guillotin perished by the machine of his own invention, as he lived till 1814, and founded the Academy of Medicine. [Maiden.]



GUILLOTINE.

2. A guillotine-cutter (q.v.).

guilletine-cutter, s. A machine which cuts by a knife descending in guides. Cutters for paper and straw are thus made, and the descent is usually oblique, so as to give a draw cut.

guil-lō-tine', v. t. [Guillotine, v.] To execute by the guillotine.

guil-lō-tine'-mĕnt, s. [Guillotine.] Death by the guillotine.

"Bewildered by long terror, perturbations, and guillotinement."—Carlyle: French Revolution, pt. iii., bk. viii., ch. ii.

guills, s. [A.S. geolo = yellow.] A plant—the Corn Marigold.

guilt, * gelt, * gilt, * gilte, * gult, * gylt, s. [A.S. gylt = a crime, originally a fine or payment in satisfaction of a crime; gyld = a recompense, gyldan = to pay, to yield.] [Guild.]

1. A crime or an offence; a breach of law or duty.

"If geniall brands and bed me lothe not,
To this one gilt perchaunce yet might I yeld."
Surrey: Virgile; Eneis iv.

2. Criminality; the state or condition of a moral agent who has wilfully or intentionally committed a breach of any law, or duty. In guilt are included both criminality and liability to punishment.

"An involuntary act, as it has no claim to merit, so neither can it induce any guilt."—Blackstone: Comment., bk. iv., ch. 2.

* 3. An exposure or liability to forfeiture or other penalty.

"A ship incurs guilt by the violation of a blockade."
—Kent.

guilt-born, a. Springing from guilt or crime; criminal.

"There, on his sordid pallet, slept Guilt-born Excess." Scott: Rokeby, iii. 14.

guilt-concealing, s. Hiding or cloaking crimes.

"At evening snatched, Beneath the cloud of guilt-concealing night."
Thomson: Autumn, 1,173.

 guilt-sick, s. Sickened by guilt or remorse.

"A guilt-sick conscience,
To keep us waking."
Beaum. & Fl.: Custom of the Country, iv.

guilt-stained, a. Stained by guilt or crime; criminal.

 guilt, * gilt, * gult, v.t. [A.S. agyltan.] To offend; to be guilty of any crime.

"Who is forsothe, that gilteth not in his tunge?"—Wyclife: Eccles. xix. 17.

 guilt'-ĕr, * gilt-er, s. [Eng. guilt; -er.] One who offends or is guilty of any crime.

"That lawe he shal yiue to the giuteris in the weie."
—Wyclife: Psalms xxiv. 8.

guilt'-ĭ-lỹ, adv. [Eng. guilty; -ly.]

1. In a guilty manner; not innocently.

"Him that hears, and readeth guiltily."
Bp. Hall, bk. v., sat. 3.

2. With a bad conscience.

"Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings: despair, and die."
Shakesp.: Richard III., v. 3.

guilt'-ĭ-nĕss, * gylt-i-nesse, s. [Eng. guilty; -ness.] The quality or state of being guilty; guilt; criminality; consciousness of crime.

"O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness."
Shakesp.: Richard III., v. 3.

guilt'-lĕss, * gilte-les, * gilt-lese, * gylt-les, * guilte-les, a. [Eng. guilt; -less.]

1. Free from guilt or crime; innocent.

"It was proved, beyond all possibility of doubt, that this man had, by false testimony, deliberately murdered several guiltless persons."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

* 2. Without experience; ignorant.

"The teeming earth, yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovoked, did fruitful stores allow."
Dryden: Ovid; Metamorphoses i.

guilt'-lĕss-lỹ, adv. [Eng. guiltless; -ly.] In a guiltless manner; innocently; without crime, guilt, or offence.

"The rageing crueltie of them, which hated the name of Christe, hathe giltelesly driuen them out of the places where their fathers dwelt before them."—Udal: 1 Peter i.

guilt'-lĕss-nĕss, s. [Eng. guiltless; -ness.] The quality or state of being guiltless or free from guilt; innocence.

"I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be."—King Charles: Eikon Basilike.

guilt'-ỹ, * gelt-y, * gilt-y, * gult-y, * gylt-y, a. [A.S. gyltig.] [Guilt.]

1. Having incurred guilt by the commission of some crime or offence, or by the violation of any law; criminal; rendered liable to punishment.

"Let him the guilty toll commence Who has betrayed a master and a prince."
Dryden: Sixum Cuique.

2. It is followed by of before the crime or offence committed or imputed.

3. Liable to blame for, justly chargeable with.

"Nor was he guilty of those faults of temper and of manner to which, more than to any grave delinquency, the unpopularity of his associates is to be ascribed."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxv

4. Cognizant of or characterized by guilt; arising from or indicating guilt; conscious of guilt.

"She changes as a guilty dream, . . .
Goads sleeping Fancy's wild career."
Scott: Rokeby, i. 1.

* 5. Conscious, cognizant, chargeable.

* 6. Liable to; deserving of; having incurred. (Followed by of.)

"They answered and said, He is guilty of death."—Matthew xxvi. 66.

* 7. Criminal; against law and right.

"How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands Of this most grievous, guilty murder done."
Shakesp.: Richard III., i. 4.

¶ For the difference between guilty and criminal, see Criminal.

 guilty-like, adv. Like one guilty. (Shakesp.: Othello, iii. 3.)

guî-mau've (au as ō), s. [Fr., from Low Lat. bis malva, a corruption of hibiscus malva, or malva hibiscus.]

Bot.: A name for the Marsh-mallow, Althæa officinalis.

 guĭm'-bard, s. [Fr. guimbarde (q.v.).] The Jew's-harp (q.v.).

Guimet, s. [Jean-Baptiste Guimet, a French chemist, who discovered the method of producing artificial ultramarine in 1826, and erected works for its manufacture at Lyons in 1834.]

Guimet's ultramarine, s. [Gr French

Ultramarine.] A factitious pigment of a fine azure blue colour—a compound of alumina, soda, sulphur, and a trace of iron, offered as a useful substitute for the more costly ultramarine. It is a valuable addition to the palette, being transparent and durable.

guĭn'-ĕa, Guĭn'-ĕa, s. & a. [From a native West African word (?).]

A. As substantive:

I. Geog. (of the form Guinea): A territory on the West African coast between Cape Verga, in lat. 10° 20′ N., and Cape Negro, in lat 15° 41′ S.

II. Ord. Lang. (of the form guinea):

1. A gold coin, formerly current in Great Britain. By a proclamation issued December 22, 1717, the guinea was declared current at 21s. sterling. Its true value, as derived from the market values of gold and silver at that time was 20s. 8d. At present there is no English coin so called, but the fashion still prevails of quoting prices of some things in guineas, and subscriptions are frequently recorded in the same denomination.

GUINEA OF GEORGE II.

"The guinea, so called from the Guinea gold out of which it was first struck, was proclaimed in 1663, and to go for 20s.; but it never went for less than 21s., by tacit and universal consent."—Pinkerton: On Medals, vol. ii., § 19.

2. A sum of money equivalent to a guinea: as, The price was 1,000 guineas.

3. A gold piece coined in Egypt, value 100 piastres.

B. As adj.: Of, belonging to, native to, or derived from Guinea. (See the compounds.)

Guinea-corn, s.

Bot.: Sorghum vulgare. Called also millet (q.v.).

Guinea-current, s.

Hydrol. & Geog.: A current running from the north into the Bight or Bay of Benin, on the Guinea coast of Africa. (Lyell.) guinea-dropper, s. One who cheats by dropping counterfeit guineas.

"Who now the guinea-dropper's bait regards, Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards."
Gay: Trivia, iii. 249.

guinea-fowl, s.

Ornith.: The genus Numida, of which several species are found wild in Africa. The Common Guinea-fowl, or hen, is Numida meleagris. It has slate-coloured plumage covered all over with round white spots. In its native haunts in Africa it lives in large flocks, frequenting by preference marshy situations. It is excellent eating, and has been introduced into barn-yards, where, however, it is unpleasantly noisy, perpetually uttering a cry like the syllables ca-mac, ca-mac. Called also the Guinea Pintado.

Guinea-grains, s. pl.

Pharm.: [GRAINS OF PARADISE].

Guinea-grass, s.

Bot.: Panicum jumentorum, or maximum. It is a native of Western Africa, whence it has been introduced into the warmer parts of North America, where it is cultivated for fodder.

guinea-hen, *ginny-hen, s.

1. Lit.: A guinea-fowl (q.v.).

"The natives of those islands call [them] Gallena Pintada, or the painted hen; but in Jamaica, where I have seen also those birds in the dry savannahs and woods (for they love to run about in such places), they are called guinea-hens."—Dampier: Voyages (an. 1699).

* 2. Fig.: A prostitute, a courtezan.

"Ere I would drown myself for the love of a guinea-hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon."—Shakesp.: Othello, i. 3.

¶ (1) Guinea-hen flower:

Bot.: Fritillaria meleagris.

(2) Guinea-hen weed:

Bot.: Petiveria alliacea. Its English name is given because guinea-hens are said to be very fond of it. It grows wild in the savannahs and woods in the West Indies, and is so acrid as to blister the tongue and affect the milk of cattle which eat it.

Guinea-pepper, s.

I. Botany:

1. & 2. Amomum grana Paradisi and A. grandiflorum, aromatic plants growing in Western Africa, and used for the same purpose as cardamoms. (Eng. Cyclop.)

3. Habzelia æthiopica.

4. Capsicum annuum.

II. Food products: The same as CAYENNE-PEPPER (q.v.). (Treas. of Bot.)

guinea-pig, s.

I. Lit. & Zool.: Cavia aparæa. A domestic animal, usually coloured white, black, and orange. It is wild in Brazil, Paraguay, &c., and in that state is orange and black above, and dull yellow beneath.

2. Figuratively:

(1) A term of reproach. (Smollett: Roderick Random, ch. xxiv.)

(2) A name jocosely given to a person acting as a substitute, or as a director of a public company, performing duties for which the fee is a guinea.

"What would be the use, for instance, of having M.P.'s as guinea-pigs if they were disqualified by the mere fact of sitting on a board from furthering the interests of their companies in Parliament?"—Pall Mall Gazette, March 12, 1884.

Guinea-plum, s.

Bot.: Parinarium excelsum, a plant of the order Chrysobalanseæ, from Sierra Leone. It is not much esteemed. Called also Rough-skin.

Guinea-ship, s.

Zool.: One of the names given by sailors to a floating Medusa—Physalia pelagica.

Guinea worm, s.

Zool.: Filaria medinensis—a whitish or dark-brown worm, one of the human Entozoa, parasitic generally in the feet, sometimes in the scrotum, and rarely beneath the tunica conjunctiva of the eye. Its length is from six inches to five, eight, or twelve feet; its thickness from half to two-thirds of a line. It is endemic in the tropical regions of Asia and Africa, especially in Upper Egypt, Abyssinia, and Guinea. (Owen, &c.)

guĭn'-ĭ-ăd (u as w), s. [GWYNIAD.]

guî-pûre', s. [Fr.]

1. A kind of lace in imitation of the antique. Patterns are cut out of cambric to form the flowers and heavy parts; the open parts are made of stitches.

2. A kind of gimp.

guīs'-ard, gȳs'-art, s. [GUISE, v.] A disguised person; a mummer; one who volunteers vocal music for money about the time of Christmas and New Year's Day. (Scotch.) guīse, *gise, *guyse, *gyse, *guize, s. [Fr. guise, from O. H. Ger. wisa (M. H. Ger. wise; Ger. weise) = a way, a guise, a wise; Sp., Port., & Ital. guisa; cogn. with A.S. wise = manner, wise.]

* 1. Manner, way, wise, fashion, style.

"He servyd hym on the newe guse."
Tryamour, 1,550.

2. External appearance, dress, habit, garb.

"In homely guise, as nature bade,
His simple song the Borderer said."
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, vi. 10.

3. External show or covering; cover, cloak; pretence: as, This was done under the guise of religion.

* 4. Manner, mien; cast of behaviour or conduct.

"By their guise
Just men they seem." Milton: P. L., xi. 578.

* 5. Custom, practice, manner.

"But it is not their guise to looke on the order of any text, but as they find it in their doctours so alleidge they it, and so vnderstand it."—Tyndall: Workes, p. 168.

* guīse, * gȳse, v. t. & i. [O. Fr., in compos. as desguiser; Fr. déguiser.]

A. Trans.: To dress up; to array; to fit out.

"The knyghtes gysed them fulle gay."
Tryamour, 770.

B. Intrans.: To dress up or act as a guisard or mummer.

* guīs'-ẽr, s. [Eng. guis(e); -er.] A masker, a mummer, a guisard.

guĭ'-tar', s. [Fr. guitare, from Lat. cithara; Gr. κιθάρα (kithara) = a kind of lyre; Ital. chitarra; Sp. guitarra.]

Mus.: A stringed instrument, played by plucking or twitching the strings with the right hand, while the left is engaged in forming the notes by "stopping" or pressing the strings against the frets on the finger-board. The modern, or Spanish guitar as it is called, has six strings, the three highest of gut, the three lowest of silk, covered with a fine wire. The guitar is chiefly valuable as a portable means of accompaniment, but in the present day it is not much cultivated. (Stainer & Barrett.)

GUITAR.

"Till the gay mariner's guitar
Is heard, and seen the evening star."
Byron: The Giaour.

guit-guits, s. pl. [From the sound of their note.]

Ornith.: The English name given to the Cærebinæ (q.v.), the American representatives of the Sunbirds.

* guĭz'-ard, s. [GUISARD.]

guĭ-zō'-tĭ-a, s. [Named after Guizot, the French statesman.]

Bot.: A genus of Composites, sub-tribe Heliopsideæ. Guizotia (formerly Verbesina) oleifera is called in India Ram-til. It is extensively cultivated there for its bland oil. A field in flower looks pretty.

gŭ'-la, s. [Lat. = a throat.]

Arch.: The same as GOLA (q.v.).

gŭl'-ar, a. [Lat. gul(a) = the throat; Eng. adj. suff. -ar.] Of or pertaining to the throat or gullet.

gŭlch, s. [Cf. Dut. gulzig = greedy; Sw. gölka = to swallow greedily, to gulp.]

* 1. The act of swallowing or gulping down.

* 2. A glutton.

"You'll see us then; you will, gulch, you will?"
Ben Jonson: Poetaster, iii. 4.

3. A deep ravine, caused by the action of water. (Amer.)

* gŭlch, v.t. [GULCH, s.] To swallow greedily; to gulp down.

* gŭlch'-in, s. [Eng. gulch, s.; dimin. suff. -in.] A little glutton.

* gūle, v.t. [GULES.]

Her.: To give the colour of gules to.

gūle (1). s. [Norm. Fr. = the beginning or first day of a month.] (For def., see etym.)

* gūle (2), s. [Lat. gula.]

1. The throat, the gullet.

"Throats so wide and gules so gluttonous."—Gauden: Tears of the Church, p. 323.

2. Gluttony.

gūles, *goules, s. [Fr. gueules, from Pers. gul, ghul, as a. = red, as s. = a rose, any roseate flower; cf. gulnare = the flower of the pomegranate.]

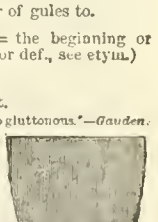
Her.: The heraldic term used to designate the colour red; on an engraved escutcheon it is represented by lines drawn vertically.



GULES.

"The showery arch
With listed colours gay, ore, azure, gules, Delights and puzzles the beholder's eye."
J. Philips: Cider, ii.

gŭlf, *gulfe, *goulfe, *gulph, s. [O. Fr. goulfe; Fr. golfe, from Late Gr. κο-φος (kolphos); Gr. κόλπος (kolpos) = (1) the bosom, the lap, (2) a bay, a creek; Sp., Port., & Ital. golfo.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II.

(2) An abyss, a chasm, an immeasurable depth.

"Many a gulf profound as that Serbonian bog,
Betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old,
Where armies whole have sunk."
Milton: P. L., ii. 592.

(3) A whirlpool, an eddy.

"England his approaches makes as fierce As waters to the sucking of a gulf."
Shakesp.: Henry V., ii. 4.

2. Figuratively:

* (1) That which swallows; the gullet; the throat.

"That with many a lamb had glutted his gulf."
Spenser: Shepheards Calender; Sept.

* (2) Anything insatiable.

"A gulf of ruin Swallowing gold." Tennyson: Sea Dreams, 79.

(3) A wide interval or difference, as in nature, position, &c.

(4) At Cambridge University, the bottom of the list of passes, where are entered the names of those who only just succeed in passing.

II. Technically:

1. Geog.: An inlet of salt water, larger than a creek, and more landlocked than a bay.

"The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatic."—Knolles: Historie of the Turkes.

2. Mining: A large deposit of ore in a lode.

¶ Gulf of the Dead: [River of Death].

gulf-indented, a. Having the line of coast broken by gulfs or bays.

Gulf Stream, s.

Hydrol., Geog., &c.: One of the leading currents in the ocean. As all these currents are so continuous as to be really but one current connected at the two ends, so that the movement of one part is the movement of all, the Gulf Stream cannot strictly be said to begin anywhere. It is due to the reflux of the equatorial current. The condensation and superheating of the last-named current takes place mainly in the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico, whence arises the name Gulf Stream. Its temperature there is about 50°. It emerges as a defined hot current through the Straits of Florida, and courses in a north-easterly direction at a little distance from the coast of the United States, so affecting the Bermudas as to make their climate semi-tropical. Between these islands and Halifax Sir Wyville Thomson found the Gulf Stream about sixty miles broad, one hundred fathoms deep, and moving at the rate of three knots an hour. It was of a deep blue colour, in marked contrast to the dull green of the Arctic reflux. The Gulf Stream moves in a north-easterly direction towards Europe. It is generally believed to be through its influence that the western coast of that continent is so much milder than the corresponding latitudes of America. Dr. William Carpenter, however, has come to the conclusion that a great part of the surface of the Atlantic is moving northwards, bringing heat with it, and in large measure producing the climatal effects hitherto credited to the Gulf Stream.

"Our beneficial ameliorator, the Gulf-stream."—Sir Wyville Thomson: Voyage of the Challenger, i. 121.

gulf-weed, s.

I. Bot.: An algal, Sargassum bacciferum, floating in the Atlantic within an area of more than 250,000 square miles between 20° and 45° N. latitude, and 19° and 47° W. longitude, or about seven times the extent of France. Stray plants of it are occasionally borne by the Gulf Stream to the western shores of Britain. It is from being found chiefly in this current that it is called gulf-weed. Columbus encountered the gulf-weed about 100 miles west of the Azores, and on seeing it feared that his ships would run upon a shoal.

"The wandering islands of gulf-weed."—Sir C. Wyville Thomson: Voyage of the Challenger, i. 120.

2. Geol.: Prof. Edward Forbes believed that the position of the gulf-weed marked where an ancient coast-line of the Lusitanian province existed on which it had originally grown. Though species of Sargassum have occasionally been found rooted on particular shores, the Sargassum bacciferum never has been so found. It may perhaps be an abnormal variety of Sargassum vulgare. It flourishes in its present position, propagating itself by breakage, the vessels which it produces not being organs of fructification, but only air vesiclea. (S. P. Woodward.)

Gulf-weed banks: The banks where gulf-weed grows. [Gulf-weed.]

* gŭlf, * gulph, v.t. & i. [Gulf, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To swallow up; to engulf; to overwhelm as in a whirlpool.

2. At Cambridge University, to place in the gulf or list of those who barely succeed in passing.

B. Intransitive:

1. To flow like a gulf.

"And deep Charybdis gulphing in and out.'
Spenser: Virgil's Gnat, 542.

2. To swallow up; to overwhelm; to drown.

"The whirlpool's gulfing stream."
Scott: Bridal of Triermain, ii. 24.

gŭlf'-ў, * gŭlph'-ў, a. [Eng. gulf; -y.] Full of gulfs, whirlpools, and eddies.

"And gulphy Simois, rolling to the main."
Pope: Homer; Iliad xii. 21.

* gŭl-ĭst, s. [Lat. gula.] A glutton, a gormandizer.

gŭll (1), * gul (1), s. [Corn. gullan; Welsh gwylan; Bret. gwelan.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

* (1) An unfledged nestling.

"That ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird."
Shakesp.: Henry IV., v. 1.

(2) In the same sense as II. 1.

"Gulls are found in great plenty in every place."—Goldsmith: Hist. of Anim. Nat., pt. iii., bk. viii., ch. vi.

2. Figuratively:

(1) One who is easily gulled or cheated; a simpleton, a dupe.

"At first I will express at full,
Who is a true and perfect gull indeed."
Sir J. Davis: Epig. 2.

* (2) One who has been cheated, defrauded, or stripped.

"For I do fear
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull."
Shakesp.: Timon of Athens, ii. 1.

* (3) A cheat, a fraud, a trick.

"I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it."—Shakesp.: Much Ado About Nothing, ii. 3.

II. Zoology:

1. Sing.: The English name of Larus, a genus of natatorial birds. They are widely distributed along the shores of the several seas and oceans, feeding voraciously on fish, or at certain times going some distance inland to look after worms in ploughed fields. They breed on rocky headlands, making a rude nest, in which they lay from two to four eggs. The genus Larus comprises 60 species, whose prevailing color is white, "with a gray mantle varying in shade from the most delicate pearl gray to a dark blackish slate or nearly black." Gulls are very plentiful on the shores of the United States, common species being the Great Black-headed Gull (L. maximus) and the Herring Gull (L. argentatus). Two other American species are L. brachyrhynicus, and L. delawarensis. The Herring Gull is the most widely distributed European species. Its nest is made of grass, and usually placed on a ledge of rock, or sometimes on the ground. In the United States, when the nests have been plundered by fishermen, this gull sometimes builds in trees. The Mackerel Gull of New Zealand is said to watch the long-billed oyster-catcher, as it digs in the sand for blue crabs and other prey, and then dash upon it and rob it of its prize. The flesh of gulls is rank and coarse, but the eggs of the Herring Gull are taken in large numbers for food.

2. Plural:

(1) The sub-family Larinæ, one of three into which the family Laridæ is divided. It contains the genus Lestris (Skua), in addition to the gulls proper.

(2) The family Laridæ. It comprehends not only the gulls, but the terns, petrels, &c.

* gŭll (2), * gul (2), * gulle, s. [Lat. gula = the throat.] [Gullet.] A gulf, an eddy, a whirlpool.

"Theyre passage sodeynely stopped by a greate gul (ingens vorago) made with the violence of the streames."—Brende: Quintus Curtius, fo. 115.

gŭll (1), v.t. [Gull (1), s.] To cheat, to trick, to deceive, to dupe, to take in.

"Be gulled no longer, for you'll find it true,
They have no more Religion, faith—than you."
Dryden: Prol. to Amboyna.

* gŭll (2), v.t. [Gull (2), s.] To swallow up or in.

"Thus wyth cruell warres and great bloud shed the church was torne in peeces, foulye mangled with sciesmes, & choaked with errors, while vnder the colour of wine it gulled in poison."—Bale. Pageant of Popes, fo. 76.

* gŭll'-age (age as ĭj), s. [Eng. gull; -age.] The act of duping or tricking; the state of being gulled.

"Had you no quirk
To avoid gullage, sir, by such a creature?"
Ben Jonson.

* gŭll'-cătch ĕr, s. [Eng. gull, and catcher.] One who gulls or catches a simple or silly people; a trickster; a guller.

"Here comes my noble gullcatcher."
Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, ii. 5.

* gŭll'-ĕr, s. [Eng. gull; -er.] A trickster; a gullcatcher; a cheat.

* gŭll'-ĕr, v.t. [Guller, s.] To cheat; to trick; to deceive.

* gŭll'-ĕr-ў, s. [Eng. gull; -ery.]

1. A pond or place for breeding or keeping gulls.

"Two other instances of such inland galleries exist in England."—E. Trollope: Sleaford (1872), p. 58.

2. Cheating; fraud; trickery.

"The sweet deception and gullery of their own corrupted fancy."—H. More: Defence of Moral Cabbala, ch. iii.

gŭl'-lĕt, * gol-et, * gol-ett, s. [Fr. goulet, dimin. of O. Fr. gole, goule (Fr. gueule), from Lat. gula = the throat.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The throat; the passage in the neck through which the food passes into the stomach; the œsophagus.

"Out of the harde bones knocken they
The mary, for they casten nought away,
That may go thurgh the gullet soft and sote."
Chaucer: C. T., 12,477.

2. A channel for water.

"The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with] the ocean."—Heylyn: Cosmographie.

3. A gore in a shirt.

II. Technically:

1. Civ. Eng.: A narrow working cutting made in the formation of an excavation, and used as a means of laying down a pair of rails to bring the dirt-cars to the bank.

2. Harness: The lower end of a horse-collar, around which passes the choke-strap, and the breast-strap which supports the pole of a carriage.

3. Saws: A hollow cut away in front of each saw-tooth, in continuation of the face, on alternate sides of the blade. Such saws are known as gullet-sawa or brier-tooth saws. The gullet is adapted to allow the saw to be sharpened by a round or half-round file, by which the face of the tooth becomes concave when viewed edgeways, and acquires a thin cutting edge. The increased curvilinear space also allows more room for the sawdust. [Gullet-saw.]

gullet-saw, s. A saw having a hollow cut-away in front of each tooth in continuation of the face and on alternate sides of the blade. Called also a brier-tooth saw.

gullet-tooth, s. A form of saw-tooth. [Gullet-saw.]

gŭl'-lĕt-ĭng, s. [Eng. gullet; -ing.]

Rail. Eng.: In excavating for railroads, a system of steps upon which different gangs of men are at work with pick, shovel, and wheelbarrow, assisted by temporary lines of rail and dumping-waggons if the work be sufficiently extensive. Also called notching.

gulleting-press, s. A press for punching or gulleting saw-blades, gumming worn saws, or paring down or retoothing broken saws. The punch is socketed in the end of a plunger whose upper portion is a double-threaded screw crowned by a fly-handle.

gŭl'-leў, s. [Gully.]

gŭl-lĭ-bĭl'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. gullible; -ity.] The quality or state of being gullible; easy credulity.

gŭl'-lĭ-ble, a. [Eng gull; -able.] That may or can be easily gulled, cheated, or duped; very credulous.

* gŭl'-lĭĕd, a. [Eng. gully; -ed.] Full of or containing gullies; channelled, furrowed.

* gŭll'-ĭsh, a. [Eng. gull; -ish.] Like a gull; foolish; stupid; simple.

"They have most part some gullish humour or other, by which they are led."—Burton: Anatomy of Melancholy; To the Reader.

* gŭll'-ĭsh-nĕss, s. [Eng. gullish: -ness.] The quality or state of being gullish; silliness, stupidity, gullibility.

gŭl'-lȳ (1), s. [Etym. doubtful.] (See extract.)

"Falre gullies, which are little haulch-backed demi-knives, the iron tool whereof is two inches long, and the wooden handle one inch thick and three inches in length."—Urquhart: Rabelais, bk. i., ch. xxvii.

gŭl'-lȳ (2), * gŭl'-leў, s. [Fr. goulet.] [Gullet.]

1. A channel or hollow worn in the earth by water; a ditch, a dike, a gutter.

"Parts of the shore interrupted by small valleys and gullies."—Cook: Third Voyage, bk. iv., ch. iv.

2. The tram-plates or rails laid for the use of tram-waggons.

* gŭl'-lȳ, v.t. & i. [Gulley (2), s.]

A. Trans.: To wear away or into a hollow or channel.

B. Intrans.: To run with noise.

* gŭl'-lȳ-gŭt, s. [Eng. gull (2), v., and gut.] A glutton, a gormandizer.

gŭl'-lȳ-hōle, s. [Eng. gully (2), s., and hole.] The hole or opening through which gutters and drains empty themselves into a sewer.

gū'-lō, s. [Lat. = a gormandiser, an epicure.]

Zool.: A genus of plantigrade carnivorous mammals, family Melidæ (Badgers). Gulo luscus is the glutton (q.v.), called also the wolverine. There are other species, some zoologists including among them also the Grison (q.v.).

* gu-lŏs'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. gulosus = gluttonous, from gulo = a glutton.] Gluttony, voracity, greediness, ravenousness.

"Erring in gulosity, or superfluity of meats."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iv., ch. ix.

gŭlp, v.t. & i. [Dut. gulpen = to swallow eagerly; O. Dut. golpen, gulpen = to quaff, from gulp = a wave; O. Dan. golpe = a gulf; Dan. gulpe = to disgorge. Thus gulp is only a variant of gulf or gulph.] [Gulf.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To swallow eagerly or in large draughts.

"He does not swallow, but he gulps it down."
Cowper: Conversation, 340.

2. To inhale eagerly.

"Then thy spruce citizen, washed artisan,
And smug apprentice gulp their weekly air."
Byron: Childe Harold, i. 69.

* II. Fig.: To swallow, to believe, to take in eagerly.

"Such jokes as these the old man not only took in good part, but glibly gulped down the whole narrative."—Fielding: Voyage to Lisbon, July 24, 1754.

* B. Intrans.: To swallow.

"See them puff off the froth and gulp amain, While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain."
Gay: Trivia, ii. 191.

¶ To gulp up: To disgorge; to eject from the stomach.

gŭlp, s. [Gulp, v.]

1. The act of swallowing eagerly or in large draughts.

2. A large mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

"As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair."
Dryden: Ovid; Metamorphoses x.

3. The act of disgorging.

* gŭlph, s. [Gulf.]

gŭl-răv'-age (age as ĭj), s. [Gilravage.]

gŭ-lŭn'-çha, gą-lŭn'-cha, s. [Some Indian languages.]

Pharm.: An Indian febrifuge prepared, according to Dr. Wright, from the bruised stems of Tinospora verrucosa, and T. cordifolia, menispermaceous plants.

* gū'-lў, a. [Eng. gule(s); -y.] Pertaining to or resembling gules; red in colour.

"The horrid standard of those fatal guly dragons."—Milton: Reform in England, bk. ii.

gŭm (1), * gome, * gomme (1), * goom, s. [A.S. góma = the palate, the jaws; cogn. with Sw. gom; Dan. gane; Icel. gómr; O. H. Ger. guomo; Ger. gaumen = the palate.]

1. Anat.: The soft covering of the dental arches. The gums consist of a dense connective tissue, covered by a scaly and stratified epithelium.

"I find upon enquiry, that the person whose tooth had been placed in my gums, was labouring under a complication of the filthiest of diseases, and that the tooth inoculated them all on me."—Knox: Winter Evenings, Even. 58.

* 2. Fig.: Chatter, talk.

"There's no occasion to bowse out so much unnecessary gum."—Smollett: Peregrine Pickle, ch. xlv.

gum-boil, s. A boil or small abscess on the gums.

gum-rash, s. A rash or papular eruption frequent in children; red gums.

gŭm (2), * gomme (2), gummc, s. [Fr. gomme, from Lat. gummi; Gr. κόμμι (kommi) = gum; Sp. goma; Port. & Ital. gomma.]

1. Bot.: Gum is a vegetable secretion, sometimes occurring in intercellular spaces, formed by the separation of the walls of cells. It is viscid, but not oily.

2. Chem.: The most typical kind of gum is Gum-Arabic, which is the exudation from the stems of several species of acacia growing in Egypt and Arabia. [Gum-Arabic.]

"Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees Their medicinal gum." Shakesp.: Othello, v. 2.

3. Pharm.: Gum is used as a demulcent to allay the irritation of the mucous membrane, also for suspending heavy powders, as nitrate of bismuth when they are given in a liquid.

4. The same as Gumming (q.v.).

¶ Doctor's gum is said to be furnished by Rhus Metopium, a Jamaica plant, to which, as well as to some other plants, Hog gum has been attributed. Other compounds, in which gum is the last word, will be found scattered through the book.

gum-animal, s.

Zool.: A name formed from "the animal of the gum," a rendering of the term applied by the Moors to Galago senegalensis, a lemur said to feed on gum in three forests consisting of the trees producing gum-senegal in the Sahara. (Griffith's Cuvier.) gum-animi, s.

Bot., Comm., &c.: A gum called in India copal, which is derived from a tree, Vateria indica. It is obtained by cutting a notch in the tree sloping inwards and downwards; the resin collects at the wound, and soon hardens. It is called in the south of India Piney Dammara. It is an excellent varnish. On the Malabar coast it is made into candles. (Wright, &c.)

gum-arabic, s.

1. Bot. & Comm.: A gum obtained from the Acacia arabica, which grows abundantly in India and Arabia. [Acacia.] It is yielded also by A. speciosa in India, A. nilotica and A. Seyal in Arabia, A. tortilis and A. Ehrenbergiana in tropical Africa, A. mollissima and A. affinis supply a similar gum in Australia. Gum arabic can be obtained also from Vachellia Farnesiana of India, a small tree closely allied to the true acacias; a gum akin to it is derived from Terminalia belerica, a Myrobalan.

2. Chem.: Gum arabic occurs in transparent white tears, which are often coloured yellow or brown by impurities; it cracks on exposure to the air on the surface; it is brittle, inodorous, and has a bland, mucilaginous taste. It dissolves in water, and the solution gives a precipitate of arabin on the addition of hydrochloric acid. Gum arabic contains about 70 per cent. of arabin, $2C_6H_{10}O_5 + H_2O$, and 17 per cent. of water; the rest consists of potash and lime, which were combined with the arabin. Gum is insoluble in alcohol. By the action of nitric acid, it is converted into mucic, saccharic, and oxalic acids. Gum can be distinguished from dextrin by containing no dextrose, and by giving a milky precipitate with oxalic acid. Gum gives precipitate with soluble salts of lead, copper, &c. The sp. gr. of gum is 1·35. Ferric chloride precipitates gum and not dextrin.

Gum-arabic tree:

Bot.: (1) Acacia arabica, (2) A. Verek.

Red gum-arabic tree:

Bot.: Acacia Adansonii.

gum-butea, s.

Bot., Chem., & Comm.: A gum exuding from Butea frondosa and B. superba, two papilionaceous plants, and hardening upon their branches in beautiful ruby-coloured masses. The natives of north-western India use it in precipitating their indigo and in tanning, but English tanners object to use it on account of the colour which it imparts to leather. (Lindley.) gum-cistus, s.

Bot.: Cistus ladaniferus, a plant introduced into British greenhouses in A.D. 1629 from Spain. It produces ladanum, but not in the same quantity that Cistus creticus does.

gum-dragon, s.

Bot., Comm., &c.: A gum derived from Pterocarpus Draco, a papilionaceous plant.

gum-elastic, s. Caoutchouc; india-rubber.

gum-elemi, s.

Bot., Chem., & Comm.: A gum said to be yielded by Amyris Plumieri and A. hexandra.

¶ American gum-elemi: A gum derived in part from Icica Icicariba.

gum-juniper, s.

Bot., Chem., Comm., &c.: The resin of Callitris quadrivalvis, a native of Barbary. The same as Gum-sandarach (q.v.). Once it was believed to come from the juniper, whence its name.

gum-kino, s.

Bot., Chem., Comm., &c.: The name given to various resins; that of the East Indies is derived from Pterocarpus Marsupium; that of Australia from Eucalyptus resinifera.

gum-lac, s.

Bot., Chem., Comm., &c.:

1. The juice of Ficus indica, benghalensis, and Tsjela, when it runs from wounds made by parasitic cocci.

2. The juice of Aleurites laccifera, a Cayenese tree, belonging to the Euphorbiaceæ.

3. The juice of Erythrina monosperma, a papilionaceous tree.

gum-passages, s. pl.

Bot.: Sap receptacles extending to a greater length through the parenchyma of plants than glands do, and designed for the passage of gum. They exist in Cactaceæ, Cycadaceæ, Amygdalaceæ, &c.

gum-pot, s. A copper boiler used by varnish-makers for melting the gum and mixing the ingredients.

gum-resins, s. pl. A name given to resins which are partly soluble in water, the remainder being soluble in alcohol.

gum-sandarach, s.

Bot., Chem., Comm., &c.: A gum exuding from Callitris quadrivalvis, one of the Cupressæ, growing in Barbary, where it is called the Arar tree. It is a whitish yellow, brittle, inflammable, resinous substance, with an acrid, aromatic taste. It is used for making varnish, and when powdered constitutes pounce (q.v.).

gum-senegal, s.

Bot., Chem., Comm., &c.: A gum obtained in the west of Africa from the Acacia Verek and A. Adansonii.

gum-succory, s.

1. Comm.: The gum of Chondrilla juncea.

2. Bot.: That plant itself; it is a composite one.

gum-tragacanth, s.

Bot., Chem., Comm., &c.: A gum produced at Sierra Leone by Sterculia Tragacantha. One akin to it is yielded by S. urens of Coromandel.

gum-trees, s. pl.

Botany:

1. The several species of the myrtaceous genus, Eucalyptus (q.v.). Some of them are giant trees, others of more moderate size; their native country is Australia. Some are called Stringy-bark Gum-trees.

2. Xanthorrhæa, a genus of Liliaceæ.

¶ The Black, called also the Yellow, Gum-tree, is Nyssa villosa; the Blue, Eucalyptus globulus; and the Red or White Gum-tree is E. resinifera.

gum-water, s. A distillation from gum.

gum-wood, s.

Bot. & Comm.: The wood of various gum-trees (Eucalypti).

gŭm (3), s. [Etym. doubtful.]

1. An instrument for shaping saw-teeth. [Saw-gummer.]

2. A hive made of a section of a hollow log; a bee-gum.

3. A hollow log inserted vertically into the ground as a curb for a spring.

gŭm (1), v.t. & i. [Gum (2), s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To cover or smear with gum; to stiffen with gum.

"Or bleaching their hands at midnight, gumming, and bridling their beards, or making their waist small."—Ben Jonson: Discoveries.

2. To fasten or seal with or as with gum.

"The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour."—Wiseman: Surgery.

† B. Intrans.: To exnde or form gum.

gŭm (2), v.t. [Gum (3), s.] To deepen and enlarge as the teeth of worn saws.

gum'-bĕl-īte (u as Ger. ü), s. [Named by von Kobell after von Gümbel.]

Min.: Esseotially a hydrated silicate of alumina and iron, the composition approaching that of pinite. It occurs in greenish-white, short, fibrous layers in clay-slate, at Nordhalben, in Bavaria. (T. Davies, F.G.S.)

gŭm'-bō, s. [Gobbo.]

gumbo-musqué, s. The name given in the West Indies to the seeds of Abelmoschus esculentus. Reduced to powder and steeped in rum, they are considered to be a powerful remedy for snake bites.

gŭm'-lĭĕ, a. [Etym. doubtful.] Muddy.

"O ye wha leave the springs of Calvin,
For gumlie dubs of your ain delvin!"
Burns: A Dedication To Gavin Hamilton, Esq.

gŭm'-mą (pl. gŭm'-mą-tą), s. [Lat. gummi = gum, which the tumour resembles in its contents.] [Gum (2), s.]

Pathol.: A muscular node or tumour, often constituting one of the tertiary symptoms of syphilitic poisoning. It ends by softening and ulcerating.

gŭmmed, pa. par. or a. [Gum, v.]

1. Lit.: Smeared, daubed, or fastened with gum.

* 2. Fig.: Stiff, starched.

"We hate the stiff and gummed deportment of the Italian."—Gentleman Instructed, p. 546.

gŭm'-mĕr, s. [Eng. gum (3), s.; -er.] A tool or machine for deepening and enlarging the interdental spaces of worn saws. [Saw-gummer, Gulleting-press.]

gŭm'-mĭe, a. [Eng., &c., gum; -ic.] Derived from or pertaining to gum.

gummic-acid, s.

Chem.: [Arabin].

* gŭm-mĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Lat. gummi = gum; fero = to bear, to produce, and Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Bearing or producing gum.

gŭm'-mĭ-nĕss, s. [Eng. gummy; -ness.]

1. The quality or state of being gummy; viscosity.

2. An accumulation of gummy matter.

"The tendons are involved with a great gumminess and collection of matter."—Wiseman: Surgery, bk. viii.

gŭm'-mĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Gum, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb).

C. As substantive:

1. Ord. Lang.: The act of smearing or fastening with gum.

2. Hort.: A disease in trees bearing stone-fruit, characterized by a morbid exudation of gum, and arising from exposure to excess of heat or cold, or sudden alteration of temperature. It is generally fatal to the tree.

3. Lithog.: The treatment of a lithographic stone with a solution of gum-arabic, after, or simultaneously with, the etching process, whereby the clean parts of the stone devoid of work are protected from receiving fatty matter, and thus reject the greasy ink when the roller passes over the stone. The clean surface of the stone is damped after each impression, but, unless the gumming process were previously performed, it would not permanently resist the ink.

gŭm'-mīte, s. [Ger. gummit, from Lat. gummi; Gr. κόμμι (kommi) = gum, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.). So called from its resemblance to gum.]

Mineralogy:

1. An amorphous mineral of greasy lustre, reddish or brownish colour, and yellow streak. Hardness, 2·5 to 3; sp. gr., 3·9 to 4·2. Compos.: sesquioxide of uranium, 72·0; lime, 6; silica, 4·26; phosphoric acid, 2·30; water, 14·75, &c. Occurs in Saxony. (Dana, &c.)

2. Halloysite (q.v.). (Breithaupt.)

* gŭm-mōs'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. gummosus = gummy; gummi = gum.] The nature of gum, gumminess; a viscous or gummy quality or nature.

* gŭm'-moŭs, a. [Lat. gummosus, from gummi = gum.] Of the natnre or quality of gum; gummy.

"Resinous or gummous bodies dissolved in spirit of wine."—Boyle: Works, iv. 307.

gŭm'-mў, * gum-mie, a. [Eng. gum; -y.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature or quality of gum; viscous, adhesive.

"Of this gummie and glutinous substance they frame also their dores and entries which are wide and large."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xi., ch. vi.

2. Covered with or bearing gum or viscous matter; productive of gum.

"Lightning, whose thwart flame driven down, Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine."
Milton. P. L., x. 1,076.

3. Closed or held together by gum or other viscous matter.

"[He] rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate."
Dryden: Persius, sat. iii.

* 4. Puffy, stuffy, swollen, puffed out. (Slang.) gŭmp, s. [Etym. doubtful; cf. Sw. & Dan. gump; Icel. gumpr = the buttocks.] A foolish fellow, a stupid. n dolt.

gŭmp'-tion, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

1. Shrewdness, cleverness, intelligence. (Colloquial.) (Lytton: My Novel, bk. iv., ch. xii.)

2. A term in painting for the art of preparing colours. Also applied to a nostrum much in request by painters in search of the supposed "lost medium" of the old masters, and to which they ascribe their unapproachable excellence. The formula for preparing this medium gives a mixture of drying linseed oil and mastic varnish which gelatinises; or simple linseed oil and sugar of lead.

gŭn, * gonne, * gunne, s. [A word of doubtful origin. Skeat refers it to Wel. gwn = a bowl, a gun; Ir. & Gael. gunna.] A weapon having a barrel adapted to receive and discharge a missile, which is projected by a charge of powder, gun-cotton, or air, as the case may be. The term is applied to pieces of all sizes, from the fowling-piece to the largest cannon, and in ordinary language more especially to the former, though in strict military language it is applied only to the ordnance. For descriptions of the various kinds, see Air-gun, Blunderbuss, Carbine, Cannon, Firearm, Howitzer, Mitrailleuse, Mortar, Pistol, Rifle, &c. A description of the various parts of a gun or fire-arm will be found under the appropriate words.

¶ I. Great gun:

(1) Lit.: A large piece of ordnance; a cannon.

(2) Fig.: A person distinguished or eminent in any branch, as in speaking, science, &c.

2. To blow great guns: To blow very strongly; to blow a gale.

gun-barrel, s. The barrel or tube of a gun. Gun-barrels are known as stub, stub-twist, wire-twist, Damascus-twist, stub-Damascus.

Gun-barrel drain: A cylindrical drain of small diameter.

gun-battery, s.

1. Fortification: The emplacement of two or more pieces of artillery, destined to act on the offensive or defensive. It may be:—En echarpe; having a line of fire oblique with the object. En revers; playing upon the rear of the enemy. Cross-fire; several batteries having a converging fire upon an object. Casemate; when protected by a bomb-proof chamber, and firing from embrasures. Barbette; firing over a parapet. Ricochet (smooth bores only); when the balls, with a low charge, traverse the inner face of the enemy's work, and rebound and roll along the same. Mountain; light pieces adapted to be dismounted and, with their dislocated carriages, carried on mules. Some of these have been made in two pieces, which unscrew for ease in transport.

GUN-BATTERY.

2. Field-artillery: The tactical unit of field-artillery, consisting of six or eight field-guns under one command, together with the officers, men, horses, waggons, and stores. [Battery.]

gun-carriage, s. The apparatus upon which a cannon is mounted for service. It may or may not be adapted for the transportation of the piece. Land gun-carriages comprise field, siege, casemate, and barbette carriages. The two former are adapted for the transportation as well as service of the piece, while the latter are intended to be kept in one position in a fortification. In Moncrieff's gun-carriage, the gun is supported upon a moving fulcrum, which, on the firing of the gun, is caused to shift nearer to the gun and farther from a counterweight, spring, or hydraulic buffer, while at the same time the gun is brought into a lowered position for reloading, and is then automatically raised into position for firing. By the shifting of the fulcrum, the statical momentum of the balance weight is made to preponderate so greatly over that of the gun that it will, when allowed free action, after the loading of the gun, raise the same into its original position.

gun-cotton, s.

Chem.: Pyroxylin. Trinitro-cellulose, $C_6H_7(NO_2)_3O_5$, more probably a nitric ether of cellulose, $C_{12}H_{14}(ONO_2)_6O_4$, as by the action of reducing agents as hydric potassium sulphide, KHS, and iron and acetic acid, it is converted into cellulose. Boiled with ferrous sulphate and concentrated hydrochloric acid, it gives off all its nitrogen as N_2O_2. Gun-cotton was discovered by Schönbein in 1845. It is prepared by drying cotton-wool at 100°, and then leaving it for twenty-four hours in a mixture of one volume of nitric acid sp. gr. 1·5, and three volumes of sulphuric acid sp. gr. 1·85, the mixture being cooled to 10°. It is then washed with water, and, if required pure, again with a mixture of one part alcohol and three parts ether to remove the lower nitrates. [Collodion.] Gun-cotton finely divided explodes between 160°—170°. It keeps best if it is washed with soda. Compressed gun-cotton burns like tinder, but is exploded by mercuric fulminate. It is used for torpedoes.

gun-deck, s.

Naut.: That deck of a ship of war which carries the bulk of her armament.

gun-fire, s.

Mil.: The hour at which the morning or evening gun is fired.

* gun-flint, s. A piece of flint fixed in the lock of a musket to fire the charge, before the introduction of percussion caps.

"Those things we brought away, leaving in the room of them medals, gun-flints, a few nails, and an old empty barrel with the iron hoops on it."—Cook: Second Voyage, bk. i., ch. vii.

gun-harpoon, s. A harpoon fired from a gun, used mounted in a crutch on the gun-wale of a whaleboat. It is made of steel, and has a chain or long shackle attached to it, to which the whale-line is fastened. Some gun-harpoons carry a grenade or flask of poison.

gun-lock, s. The lock of a gun; the combination of parts by which the propulsive charge is caused to ignite.

Gun-lock hammer: The cock or striker of a fire-arm lock.

gun-metal, s. A bronze from which cannon were formerly cast. Ordinarily nine parts copper and one tin. Other metals have been sometimes added to or substituted for tin, copper still remaining the basis of the alloy.

gun-pendulum, s.

1. [BALLISTIC-PENDULUM.]

2. [EPROUVETTE.]

gun-port, s. A port or hole in the side of a ship for a gun.

gun-searcher, s. An instrument with one or more projecting prongs to ascertain whether the bore of a gun be honeycombed.

gun-stock, s. The part of a gun to which the barrel and lock are fastened. It is usually of walnut; in Europe the Juglans regia, in America the Juglans nigra.

gun-tackle, s.

Naut.: The ropes and pulleys attached to the sides of the ports, and to the gun-carriage (for light or smooth-bore guns), by which the gun is run out. It consists of two single blocks, one movable and the other fixed, the standing end of the fall being secured to the movable block.

* gŭn, v.i. [GUN, s.] To shoot with a gun; to go fowling.

"There is less danger in't than gunning, Sanchio."
Beaum. & Flet.: Rule a Wife, i. 2.

gū'-na, s. [Sansc., = quality.]

Philol.: A term used, especially in Sanscrit grammar, to denote the changing of i and ī to e, u and ū to o, ri and rī to ar, by compounding them with the prefix ă: thus ă + i, or ī = e, ă + u, or ū = o, &c.

* gū'-nar-chy, s. [GYNARCHY.]

gū'-nāte, v.t. [GUNA.]

Philol.: To change by the process known as gunation; to subject to the change of guna (q.v.).

gu-nā'-tion, s. [GUNA.]

Philol.: The process of gunating; the state of being gunated.

gŭn'-bōat, s. [Eng. gun, and boat.] A small vessel of war, of light draught of water, carrying from one to four guns.

gŭn'-da, s. [Hind., = four of anything; a knotted string tied round a child's neck as a charm.] Four. Used by the poorer natives of Madras, &c., especially for four cowries. They are accustomed, in making their humble purchases, to place out their cowries in fours, or at least to estimate them in fours. (Anglo-Indian.)

"Five, nine, or twenty-one kowries, or as many gundas of them."—Herklots & Jaffur Shurreef: Mussulmans of India, p. 274.

* gŭn'-dĕ-lĕt, s. [GONDOLET.]

gŭn'-jah, s. [GANJAH.]

gŭnje, gaŋj, s. [Bengali.] A granary, a depot chiefly of grain for sale; a commercial depot in general; a wholesale market held on a particular day. (Anglo-Indian.) (Glossary to Mill: Hist. Brit. India.) ¶ Gunje enters as a compound into the Indian names of places, as Raneegunje or Raniganj.

* gŭn'-nage (age as ĭj), s. [Eng. gun; -age.] The armament of a ship of war.

gŭn'-nel (l), s. [GUNWALE.]

gŭn'-nĕr, * gun-nare, s. [Low Lat. gunnarius.] [GUN, s.; GUNSTER.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A person who works or is skilled in the working of a gun; a cannonier.

"Ninion Saunders, master to the sayd Gilbert Pot, and John Owen, a gunmaker, both gunners of the Tower."—Stow: Edward VI. (an. 1553).

II. Technically:

1. Mil.: An artillery soldier employed in the working of a gun.

2. Nav.: A warrant-officer who has charge of the ordnance-stores and ammunition on board ship, and acts as assistant to the gunnery officer.

gunner's-calipers, s.pl. An instrument made of sheet-brass with steel points, and shaped like a pair of bow-legged compasses. The graduations show the diameters of shot and shell, the calibres of guns, linear inches, degrees of the circle, &c.

gunner's-level, s. [GUNNER'S-PERPENDICULAR.]

* gunner's-perpendicular, s. An instrument for ascertaining the highest points at the breech and muzzle of a piece of ordnance, when on uneven ground, in order to determine the true line of sight. [GUNNER'S-LEVEL.]

* gunner's-quadrant, s. The gunner's quadrant is a graduated arc of 90°, or rather more, made of brass or wood, and having an arm attached, which is passed into the bore of the gun for the purpose of ascertaining the elevation. The wooden level has a leaden bullet suspended by a string, which indicates the perpendicular, the deviation from which is measured on the arc. The metallic quadrant is of more elaborate construction, and has a spirit-level attached. [GUNNER'S-PERPENDICULAR.]

gŭn'-nĕr-a, s. [Named after Ernest Gunner, bishop of Drontheim in Norway, and a botanist.]

Bot.: A genus of Araliaceæ (Ivyworts). Gunnera scabra or Tanke, which resembles a giant rhubarb, was found by Mr. Darwin on the sandstone cliffs of Chiloe. Its roots are used by tanners, and are astringent; its fleshy leaf-stalks are eatable. The fruit of G. macrocephala is commonly used in Java as a stimulant.

* gŭn'-nĕr-ĕss, s. [Eng. gunner; -ess.] A female gunner.

"Brown-locked Demoiselle Kéroigne, with pike and helmet, sits there as gunneress."—Carlyle: French Revolution, pt. i., bk. vii., ch. v.

gŭn'-nĕr-ў, s. [Eng. gunner; -y.] That branch of science which deals with the construction of guns, the mode of firing them under various circumstances, the quality of the material of which they are made, size, form, and material of the projectile, quality and quantity of the charge, elevation to be given to the gun, &c.; the science of artillery.

"From the first rude essays of clubs and stones, to the present perfection of gunnery."—Burke: Vindic. of National Society.

gŭn'-nĭĕ, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Mining:

1. A large, open, excavated space in a mine.

2. In Cornish, a term applied to breadth or width; single gunnies are three feet wide.

gŭn'-nĭng, s. [GUN, v.] The act of shooting or hunting game with a gun.

gŭn'-nў, gŭn'-neў, s. [Bengali gūni.]

Fabric: Heavy coarse goods used for wrapping bales of cotton, for cotton bags, &c. Gunny is made from fibres of the corchorus (jute); the bag made thereof is used to carry grain, &c., on the backs of buffaloes, and for enclosing articles for exportation—rice, saltpetre, pepper, coffee.

gŭn'-pŏw-dĕr, s. [Eng. gun, and powder.]

1. Chem.: A mechanical mixture of about 74·9 per cent. of potassium nitrate, 13·3 of carbon, and 11·8 of sulphur; but the composition varies according to the uses for which it is employed. Blasting powder generally contains more sulphur. The amount of potassium nitrate can be determined by treating the powder with hot water, and evaporating the solution; the sulphur can be extracted by bisulphide of carbon. The substances produced by the explosion cannot be represented by a chemical equation, as they vary with the pressure and the size of the grains of the powder. The principal products are carbonic anhydride, CO_2, carbonic oxide, CO, nitrogen, sulphate of potassium, carbonate of potassium, and sulphide of potassium.

¶ Smokeless powder: Various forms of gunpowder of high power are now made, the combustion of which produces little or no smoke.

2. Hist.: According to Sir George Staunton gunpowder has been known in China and India from a remote period of antiquity as an agent for blasting rocks. The statement, however, is doubtful. In Europe, Roger Bacon alluded to it in his work De Nullitate Magiæ, about A.D. 1267. A German monk, Schwartz, about 1336, is said to have discovered the method of its manufacture.

gunpowder-engine, s. A form of gas-engine in which the motion of the piston is caused by the evolution of gas resulting from the combustion of gunpowder.

gunpowder-hammer, s. A pile-driver operated by the explosive force of gunpowder.

Gunpowder Plot, s.

1. Hist.: A plot, formed about A.D. 1604, by Robert Catesby, son of Sir Thomas Catesby, various Roman Catholics of rank, goaded into excitement by the penal laws directed against their faith and its professors, joining as accomplices. Their aim was to blow up the Houses of Parliament by gunpowder on November 5, 1605, and destroy king, lords, and commons by one blow. An anonymous letter of mysterious warning, sent to Lord Monteagle, having led to the discovery of the plot, various conspirators were executed on January 30 and 31, 1606, and one on May 3 following. Among those put to death was Guy Faux, who had been caught in the vault below the House of Lords with matches and touchwood upon his person ready to fire the train. In 1825, this "cellar" was converted into offices. Since 1605 all places connected with the Houses of Lords and Commons where explosives could be stowed away are annually searched at the opening of Parliament. [GUY.]

2. Ch. Hist. & Law: A thanksgiving service for the deliverance from the Gunpowder Plot, though, properly speaking, it never formed part of the English Liturgy, was annexed to it at the commencement of each new reign. On January 17, 1859, directions were given for its discontinuance.

gunpowder-press, s. A press for pressing mill-cake into hard cake preparatory to granulating.

gunpowder-tea, s.

Comm.: A kind of green tea, the leaves used for which, generally younger than those for other sorts, are the smallest and most closely curled, so as to constitute small balls or pellets.

gŭn'-rōōm, s. [Eng. gun, and room.]

Naut.: A room on one of the lower decks of a ship of war, in which the junior executive and non-combatant officers live, except the warrant officers and, in some cases, the junior engineers. The senior officers of the navy and the marines live in the wardroom.

gŭn'-shŏt, s. & a. [Eng. gun, and shot.]

A. As substantive:

1. The act of firing a gun; a discharge of a gun; a shot.

"Gunshots were wildly fired in all directions."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xi.

2. The distance to which a shot can be thrown with effect by a gun; the range of a gun or cannon.

B. As adj.: Made or caused by a shot from a gun.

"Great hath been the contention among the learned about fire and venom in gunshot wounds."—Wiseman: On Surgery, bk. vi.

gunshot-wounds, s. pl.

Surg.: Wounds caused by shots from guns, also by splinters of wood, iron, &c., or any other substance which the firing of guns may have made to fly about as projectiles. The treatment of such wounds is an important branch of surgery which has made great advances in recent times.

gŭn'-smĭth, s. [Eng. gun, and smith.] One whose trade or occupation is to make or repair firearms.

gŭn'-smĭth-ĕr-ў, s. [Eng. gunsmith; -ery.] The art, trade, or occupation of making guns or firearms; the trade or occupation of a gunsmith.

* gŭn'-stĕr, s. [Eng. gun; suff. -ster (q.v.).] The same as GUNNER (q.v.).

¶ Steele uses gunner and gunster in a lndicroualy figurative senae.

"Those who recount strange accidents and circumstances which have no manner of foundation in truth, when they design to do mischief, are comprehended under the appellation of gunners; but when they endeavour only to surprise and entertain, they are distinguished by the name of gunsters."—Tatler, No. 88.

* gŭn'-stĭck, s. [Eng. gun, and stick.] A atick or rod for ramming down the charge into a gun; a rammer, a ramrod.

* gŭn'-stone, * gonc-stonc, s. [Eng. gun, and stone.] A shot for a cannon, round stonea having been originally used for the purpose.

"Tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turned his balls to gunstones."
Shakesp.: Henry V., i. 2.

Gŭn'-tĕr, s. [Edmund Gunter, profeasor of astronomy in Gresham college from A.D. 1619 to hia death in 1626.

Gunter's-chain, s.

Surv.: A surveyor's chain 66 feet or 4 rods (of 5½ yards each) in length, having 100 links, each joined to the adjacent one by three links. A square chain is one-tenth of an acre, or 10,000 square links. It was invented by Edmund Gunter to aid in calculating areas. 7·92 inches = 1 link; 100 lioks = 1 chain, or 4 rods, or 22 yards; 80 chains = 1 mile.

Gunter's-line, s. A line of numbers on Gunter's-scale used for performing the multiplication or division of numbers. It is the logarithmic scale of proportionals, which, being graduated upon the ruler, serves to solve problems in the same manner as logarithms do arithmetically. It is usually divided into 100 parts, every tenth of which is numbered, beginning with one and ending with ten, so that if the first great division stand for the one-tenth of an integer, the next great division will stand for two-tenths, and the intermediate divisions will represeot hundredths of an integer, whilst the large divisions beyond ten will represent units; and if the first set of large divisions represent units, the subdivisions will represent tenths, whilst the second set of large divisions will represent tens, and the snbdivisions units, &c.

Gunter's-scale, s. A large plane scale invented by Mr. Gnnter. It has various lines of numbers engraved on it, by which questions in calculation, navigatiou, and surveying are aolved mechanically by the aid of the dividers or a slider. On one side of it are scales of equal parts, chords, sines, tangents, rhombs, &c.; on the other side are the corresponding logarithmic lines. It consists of a flat ruler of boxwood, two feet long, having varions lines laid down upon it, by means of which various problems may be performed by the extension of the compasses only.

gŭn'-wale (w silent), gŭn'-nal, gŭn'-nel, s. [Eng. gun, and wale (q.v.).] The upper planking covering the timber-heads round the ship; a piece of timber around the top side of a boat, and having rowlocks for the oars.

"The first rope going athwart from gunnal to gunnal."—Dampier: Voyage (an. 1699).

* gûrge, s. [Lat. gurges.] A whirlpool, an eddy.

"The plain, wherein a black bituminous gurge Boils out." Milton: P. L., xii. 41.

* gûrge, v.t. [GURGE, s.] To swallow up; to overwhelm.

"In gurging gulfe of these such surging seas,
My poorer soule who drowned doth death request."
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 227.

gŭr'-gĭ-ŏn, s. [Fr. grugeons, from gruger = to crush.] [GRUDGINGS.] The coarser part of meal, sifted from the bran.

gŭr'-gle, v.i. [Ital. gorgoliare = to gurgle, to bubble, gorgoglia = a gurgling, gorgo = a whirlpool, a gulf; Lat. gurges.]

1. To run or pass along with a purling sound, as water over a broken or stony bottom, or as a liquid from a bottle.

"And from the turf a fountain broke And gurgled at our feet."
Wordsworth: Fountain.

* 2. To make any similar sound; to coo.

"For she will plain, and gurg'le, as she goes As does the widowed ringdove."
Mason: English Garden, iii.

gŭr'-gle, s. [GURGLE, v.] A purling, bubbling noise, as of water running over a broken or stony bottom, or a liquid from a bottle or other narrow apertnre. (Thompson: The Bower.) gŭr'-glĕt, s. [GURGLE, v.] A porous earthen jar for cooling water by evaporation.

gŭr'-gŏyle, s. [GARGOYLE.]

gŭr-hŏf'-ĭte, gŭr-hŏ'-fĭ-an, s. [From Gurlhof, in Lower Austria, where it occurs.]

Min.: Compact porcellanous dolomite, a snow-white and translncent variety of that mineral.

gŭr'-jŭn, s. [An East Indian word.] The native name of "Wood-oil," derived from Dipterocarpus lævis, in the Eastern Peninsula. [WOOD-OIL.]

* gŭr'-kĭn, s. [GHERKIN.]

gŭr'-lĕt, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Masonry, &c.: A pickaxe with one sharp point and one cutting-edge.

gŭr'-mĭĕ, s.

Mining: A level or working. [GUNNIE.]

gŭr'-nard, gŭr-nĕt, * gŭr'-narde, s. [O. Fr. gournal, gournauld, gourneau, gournaut, grongnard = a grunter; cf. Mod. Fr. grondin, from gronder = to grunt, referring to the noise which gurnards make when drawn from the water.]

Ichthyology:

1. Sing.: The genus Trigla (q.v.). They have a mailed and angular head, the opercule and shoulder bones apiny, two dorsal fins, large pectoral fina, the first three raya being without membranes and separated from the rest, ao as to constitute cirri. They inhabit deep water. There are in all about 40 species, which spread through temperate and tropical seas. The most marked peculiarity of these fish is the possession of three finger-like rays, in front of the pectoral fins, which are well supplied with nerves and are organs both of touch and locomotion. Most of the Gurnards live near the bottom, and feed on crustaceans, molluska, and small fishes. When handled they make a peculiar sound, caused by the escape of gas from the air-bladder. The Red Gurnard (Trigla pini) is common, and is much used for food. It grows to a length of 15 inches. The Gray Gurnard (T. gurnardus) is also common. A much rarer species is the Sapphirine Gurnard (T. hirundo) named from the beautiful blue color of its pectoral fins. It grows to about two feet in length. Gurnards are fished for with the traveling net, or with hook and line.

RED GURNARD.

2. Pl.: The family Sclerogenidæ or Triglidæ (q.v.). (Yarrell, Couch, &c.)

¶ Flying Gurnard. [FLYING.]

gûr'-ô-līte, gyr'-ô-līte (gyr as ĭr), s. [Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a circle, and λίθος (lithos) = a stone. The British Museum Catalogue spells the word gurolite, Dana gyrolite. U is left unaltered because of the circumflex on û.]

Min.: A white translucent mineral of pearly or vitreous lustre, occurring in lamellar radiated concretions. Hardness, 3 to 4. Compos.: silica, 50·7 to 51·9; alumina, 1·3 to 1·5; lime, 30·0 to 33·2; water, 14·2 to 15, &c. From Skye, from Nova Scotia, Greenland, &c.

gŭr'-rah, s. [Hind. gorhâ.]

Fabric: A kind of plain, coarse Indian muslin.

* gŭr'-rў (1), s. [Etym. doubtful.] An alvine evacuation. (Holland.) gŭr'-rў (2), gŭrh, s. [Hind. gurh, garh; Mahratta gud, gad.] A wall flanked with towers. (Anglo-Indian.) (Glossary to Mill: Hist. Brit. India.) Any small fort.

¶ It occurs in the names of many Indian places, but is generally written ghur, which would mean a house, and is an error. For example Gawil*ghur* should be Gawil*gurh.*

gŭrt, s. [A corrupt. of gote (q.v.).]

Min.: A channel for water.

guse, s. [GOOSE.]

gŭsh, * guseh-en, v.i. & t. [Icel. gusa, gjósa = to gush; cf. Dut. gudsen = to gush; Sw. gösa = to blow, to puff.]

A. Intransitive:

I. Literally:

1. To flow or rush out with violence or in a stream; to pour out violently.

"Out of whoes eies there gushed streames of teares."
Surrey: Virgil; Æneid ii.

2. To be poured out or uttered rapidly and copiously.

"Some humbler poet, Whose songs gushed from his heart."
Longfellow: The Day is Done.

3. To be filled with water, tears, &c.

"Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow."
Pope: Eloisa to Abelard, 88.

II. Fig.: To act in an extravagant or effusive manner; to be effusively sentimental.

* B. Trans.: To emit or pour out rapidly and copiously. (Followed by out.)

"The yawning wound Gushed out a purple stream, and stained the ground."
Dryden: Virgil; Æneid ix. 580.

¶ For the difference between to gush and to flow, see FLOW.

gŭsh, s. [GUSH, v.]

1. Lit.: A rapid and copious emission or flow of a liquid from an enclosed place; a liquid emitted rapidly and copiously; a rapid and copious emission of anything resembling a liquid.

"In a moment forth he teems
His little song in gushes."
Wordsworth: The Green Linnet.

2. Fig.: Extravagant or effusive affectation of sentiment.

* gush-et, s. [GUSSET.]

gŭsh'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [GUSH, v.]

A. As pr. par. (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

I. Literally:

1. Flowing or pouring out rapidly and copiously.

2. Emitting copiously.

"[She] strove to stanch the gushing wound."
Scott: Marmion, vii. 32.

II. Fig.: Extravagantly effusive or full of sentiment; characterized by an excessive affectation of sentiment; effusively and demonstratively affectionate.

C. As subst.: The act or state of pouring out rapidly and copiously.

"The gushing of the wave Far, far away." Tennyson: Lotus-Eaters, 31.

gŭsh'-ĭng-lў, adv. [Eng. gushing; -ly.]

1. Lit.: In a gushing manner; rapidly and copiously; in gushes.

"Parent of rivers, which flow gushingly."
Byron: Childe Harold, iv. 71.

2. Fig.: With an extravagant or effusive affectation of sentiment or affection.

gŭs'-ĭng, a. [Sc. guse = goose.] [GOOSE.] (See compound.)

gusing-iron, s. A laundress's smoothing-iron, a flat-iron.

gŭs'-sĕt, s. [Fr. gousset, dimin. of gousse = the husk or cod of a bean; Ital. guscio = a shell or husk.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A small piece of cloth inserted in a dress for the purpose of enlarging or strengthening some part.

"Seam and gusset and band."
Hood: Song of the Shirt.

II. Technically:

1. Boilers: An angular piece of iron inserted in a boiler, tank, &c., where it changes from a cylindrical to a square form, &c., as in the junction of the barrel and fire-box of a locomotive.

2. Build.: An angle-iron or bracket stiffening the angle of a structure.

3. Her.: An abatement or mark of disgrace somewhat resembling a gusset, and formed by a line drawn from the dexter or sinister chief point one third across the shield, and then descending perpendicularly to the base. It may be on either the dexter or sinister side of the shield; on the former it is an abatement for adultery; on the latter for drunkenness. Also called a gore.

GUSSET.

4. Old Armour: A small piece of chain or plate armour inserted at the junction of the armour under the arms, for the purpose of protecting that part when exposed by the movement of the arms.

gŭst (1), s. [Icel. gustr = a gust or blast; gjósta = a gust, from gjósa = to gush; Sw. dial. gust = a stream of air.]

1. Lit.: A sudden squall or violent blast of wind; a short but violent rush of wind.

"Though the weather were foule with extreme raine and gustes of windes."—Hacklayt: Voyages, vol. ii., pt. ii., p. 105.

2. Fig.: A sudden and violent outburst of passion. (Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 17.)

¶ For the difference between gust and breeze, see BREEZE.

gŭst (2), s. [Lat. gustus = a tasting; gusto = to taste.]

1. The sense of tasting.

2. The gratification of the appetite.

"They, fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit Chewed bitter ashes." Milton: P. L., x. 565.

3. Gratification of any kind; pleasure, enjoyment.

"Brisk perception of relishes and gusts, reflexions and duplications of delight."—Bp. Taylor: Sermons, 15.

4. A pleasing taste.

"Thy charming sight, but much more charming gust,
New life incites." Gay: Wine, 36.

5. A relish; a pleasing quality or nature.

"Their price would give a high gust unto them in the judgment of pallat-men."—Fuller: Worthies; Essex.

6. A turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

"According to the gust and manner of the ancients."—Dryden: Dufresnoy.

gŭst, v.t. [Lat. gusto = to taste.] To have a relish for.

"The palate of this age gusts nothing high."
L'Estrange: On Beaum. & Fletcher's Plays.

gŭst'-ą-ble, a. & s. [Eng. gust (2); -able.]

A. As adjective:

1. That may or can be tasted; tastable.

"Audible, gustable, odorous or tactile qualities."—Glanvill: Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. viii.

2. Pleasant to the taste; having an agreeable taste or relish.

"A gustable thing seen or smelt, excites the appetite."—Derham: Physico-Theology, bk. v., ch. viii.

B. As subst.: Anything pleasant or agreeable to the taste.

"The touch acknowledgeth no gustables
The taste no fragrant smell."
More: On the Soul, pt. ii., bk. ii., c. 2.

gŭst'-ard, s. [A corruption of bustard (q.v.).] A local name for the Great Bustard.

gŭs-tā'-tion, s. [Lat. gustatio, from gusto = to taste.] The act of tasting.

"The kisse of the spouse, gustation of God, and ingression into the divine shadow."—Browne: Urne-Burial, ch. v.

gŭs'-tā-tŏr-ў, a. [Lat. gustatorius, from gustatus = a tasting; gusto = to taste.] Of or pertaining to gustation or tasting.

gustatory-cells, s. pl.

Anat.: Certain cells in the tongue constituting what have been called taste-buds (q.v.).

gustatory-nerve, s.

Anat.: The lingual nerve, the one upon which taste depends. It descends under cover of the external pterygoid muscle, and is continued, till passing along the side of the tongue, it terminates in its apex.

gŭs-tā' vi-ą, s. [Named after Gustavus III., King of Sweden, who presented a large collection of Indian plants to the elder Linnæus.]

Bot.: A genus of South American plants, order Barringtoniaceæ. They are trees or shrubs, with large glossy leaves and racemes or umbels of white, pink-tinged flowers, five or six inches across. Gustavia urceolata has wood, which on exposure to the air becomes very fetid; it is used for making hoops. The fruit of G. speciosa, according to Humboldt and Bonpland, imparts a yellow colour, lasting for about twenty-four or even forty-eight hours, to the children who eat it. The root of G. brasiliana is emetic, and intoxicates fish; its root is acrid, aromatic, and bitter, and its leaves, which have a heavy unpleasant smell, are employed in cases of indurated liver, as also to bring ulcers to a head.

gŭst'-fŭl, a. [Eng. gust (2); -ful(l).] Having a pleasant taste or relish; palatable, tasteful.

"The said season being passed, there is no danger or difficulty to keep it gustful all the year long."—Digby: Of the Power of Sympathy.

gŭst'-fŭl-nĕss, s. [Eng. gustful; -ness.] The quality or state of being gustful, palatable, or pleasant.

"Then his food doth taste savourily, then his divertisements and recreations have a lively gustfulness, then his sleep is very sound and pleasant; according to that of the preacher, the sleep of the labouring man is sweet."—Barrow: Sermons, vol. iii., ser. 19.

gŭst'-lĕss, a. [Eng. gust (2); -less.] Tasteless, insipid.

"No gustless or unsatisfying offal."—Browne: Miscellanies, Tract i.

gŭs'-tō, s. [Ital., from Lat. gustus = taste.] [GUST, 2.]

1. A relish or enjoyment of anything; pleasure derived from or excited by anything.

"He feels no relish or gusto in them."—Sharpe, Sermons, vol. vi., ser. 3.

2. Intellectual taste.

"They are the rule of beauty, and give us a good gusto."—Dryden: Dufresnoy. (Note 510.)

gŭs-tō'-sō, adv. [Ital.]

Mus.: With taste.

gŭst'-ў (1), gust-ie, a. [Eng. gust (1); -y.]

1. Lit.: Subject to gusts or sudden squalls of wind; stormy, squally.

"Yon tuft of hazel trees,
That twinkle in the gusty breeze."
Wordsworth: Green Linnet.

2. Fig.: Subject to sudden and violent outbursts of passion.

gŭst'-ў (2), a. [Eng. gust (2); -y.] Tasteful. (Burns: Scotch Drink.) gŭt, gotte, gutte, s. [A.S. gut, pl. guttas. The original meaning was a channel; cf. O. Dan. gote = a channel; Ger. gorse = a drain; Mid. Eng. gote = a drain, a watercourse. (Skeat.)]

1. [INTESTINE.]

"Next to the bag of the stomacke, men and sheepe have the small guts, called lactes."—P. Holland: Plinie, bk. xi., ch. xxv.

2. (Pl.): The stomach; the digestive apparatus generally. (Vulgar.)

"What then was our writer's soul? was it brains or guts?"—Bentley. On Free Thinking, § 53.

3. Viscera; entrails generally.

"They make good slavee when bought young; but are, in general, foul feeders, many of them greedily devouring the raw guts of fowls."—Grainger: Sugar-Cane, bk. ii., v. 75. (Note.)

*4. Gluttony.

*5. A narrow passage or channel.

"You pass a narrow gut between two stone terrasses."—Walpole: On Gardening.

6. Prepared intestines of animals, as sheep, cats, &c., used for various purposes, as for the strings of a violin, or the finer lines in angling; catgut.

7. The sac of silk taken from the silk-worm and stretched into a line for a snood.

*¶ To have guts in the brain: To have sense.

"The fellow's well enough, if he had any guts in his brain."—Swift: Polite Conversation, i.

gut-scraper, s. A contemptuous name for a fiddler.

gŭt, v.t. [GUT, s.]

1. Lit.: To eviscerate; to exenterate; to draw the entrails out of.

"Their numbers [pilchards] are incredible, employing a power of poor people in polling (that is, beheading), gutting, splitting, powdering, and drying them."—Fuller: Worthies; Cornwall.

2. Fig.: To plunder or deprive of the whole or any part of the contents; to destroy the interior; to empty utterly.

"The fire originated in the billiard-room. . . . The whole structure in the course of an hour was completely gutted."—Pall Mall Gazette, April 19, 1884.

gŭtch ĕr, s. [A corrupt. of gudsire = goodsire (q.v.).] A grandsire.

gŭt'-lĕss, gŭt'-lĕsse, a. [Eng. gut; -less.] Destitute or deprived of guts.

"His guttesse bosome."
Chapman. Homer: Batrachomyomachia.

gŭt'-lĭng, s. [Eng. gut; dimin. suff. -ling.] A glutton.

"The fat paunches of these lazy gutlings."—Sanderson: Works, iii. 106.

gŭt'-ta (1) (pl. gŭt'-tæ), s. [Lat. = a drop.]

1. Anat., &c.: A drop. (Used chiefly in composition. See the compounds.)

2. Arch.: An ornament resembling a drop, placed in the epistylium of the Doric order below the triglyphs. They occur likewise in the under face of mutules in the Doric corona. They are supposed to have originated from the intention to represent drops of water running off the roof and adhering to the under surface of the canterii or rafters of early buildings.

gutta-rosacea, s.

Pathol.: The same as ACNE (q.v.), and specially Acne Rosacea.

gutta-serena, s.

Pathol.: The same as AMAUROSIS (q.v.).

gŭt'-ta (2), s. [Malay = gum.]

Chem: A white substance obtained by treating gutta-percha with boiling ether and allowing the filtrate to cool; the gutta is then deposited and again boiled with ether till the etherial solution retains nothing in solution on cooling. By dry distillation it yields hydrocarbons. The part of the gutta-percha removed by the ether consists of albam and fluavil, which are oxidized gutta.

gutta-pereha, s.

1. Bot.: Isonandra gutta of Hooker, the tree which produces the substance described under 3 (q.v.). It is of the order Sapotaceæ. It is a large tree, sixty or seventy feet high, its trunk with a diameter of two or three feet. It grows in Borneo, Sumatra, Singapore, and other islands of South-Eastern Asia. It was first brought to notice by Dr. Montgomery, of Singapore. It was then common, but the Malays, having wastefully cut down the trees to obtain the juice, instead of tapping them at intervals, have now rendered the tree extinct at Singapore.

2. Comm. & Manuf.: The raw gutta-percha arrives in this country in lumps weighing from five to six pounds. These are cut into slices, torn to shreds, and then thrown into cold water, when the impurities sink and the pure gum rises to the surface. Then the shreds are transferred to hot water, and, finally, they are made into solid masses, from which the moisture is driven out by kneading. Gutta-percha is used for making soles of boots impervious to water, for door handles, ear-trumpets, &c. It is made into bottles to contain hydrofluoric acid, as it is not acted on by that acid. Above all it is employed for coating submarine telegraph wires, partly to protect them from the salt-water, partly to insulate them, gutta-percha being a decided non-conductor of electricity. (Treas. of Bot.)

3. Chem.: The inspissated juice of Isonandra gutta, the gutta-percha tree. [1.] It occurs in tough, flexible pieces of a light-brown colour, which are soluble in benzene, chloroform, and bisulphide of carbon, insoluble in water, and only slightly soluble in alcohol and ether. In hot countries it is liable to be oxidized by the action of the air, and loses its flexibility.

Gutta-percha plates: Forms for the ordinary printing-press taken with gutta-percha. An intaglio impression is taken from the form. This, when cold, forms a matrix for obtaining a cameo gutta-percha impression which is used in the press.

gutta-trap, s. The inspissated juice of Artocarpus incisa, and Artocarpus generally. It is used in the manufacture of bird-lime.

gŭt'-tāte, a. [Lat. guttatus, from gutta = a drop.]

Bot.: Spotted or besprinkled with spots.

gŭt'-tāt-ĕd, a. [GUTTATE.] Besprinkled with drops or spots; bedropped.

gŭtte, s. [Lat. gutta.]

Her.: A drop.

gŭt'-ĕd, a. [Eng. gut; -ed.]

1. Having a gut.

2. Deprived of the guts; drawn, eviscerated.

gŭt'-tée, gŭt'-tỹ, a. [Lat. gutta = a drop.]

Her.: A term applied to a shield, &c. sprinkled with drops and of varying colours: as gutte de l'eau, represented by white drops; guttée d'or, represented by yellow; guttée de sang, by red; guttée d'huile, by green.

gŭt'-tĕr, * got-er, * gut-ter, * gut-tyr, s. [O. Fr. gutiere, goutiere; Fr. gouttiere, from O. Fr. gote, goute; Fr. goutte = a drop, from Lat. gutta; Sp. gotera; Port. goteira; Low Lat. guttorium, gutturium.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) A passage or channel for water or liquid matter.

"He digged out a gutter to receive the wine when it were pressed."—Udal: Luke xx.

(2) A channel worn by the action of water.

"Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain."—Addison: On Italy.

(3) A channel, paved or otherwise, at the side of a road or path to lead off surface-water.

(4) A trough or channel collecting the water which runs from a roof, and leading it to pipes in which it descends to the earth.

"Multitudes of all sorts of people in their streetes, houses, windows, leads, and gutters."—Stow: Queen Elizabeth (an. 1603).

2. Figuratively:

(1) Mud, dirt, mire.

(2) A receptacle for dirt or filth; a sink.

"Thou Rome shall be the sinke and gutter of the filthinesse of Asie."—Golden Boke, let. 2.

II. Technically:

I. Hydr. Engineering:

(1) The trench made to hold puddling on the side of a canal.

(2) A device for raising water by the vertical oscillation of a trough. It is principally used for small lifts, but by a succession of lifts it may be useful for higher elevations. The jantu of the Bengalese is a counter-weighted gutter.

(3) Print.: One of the sticks placed between the pages in a form to separate them to such a distance that when the sheet is printed and folded the margin shall be regular and uniform.

* gutter-blood, s. A person of low rank; one of the rabble.

"The gutter-bloods! and deil a gentleman amang them."—Scott: Heart of Midlothian, ch. xviii.

gutter-ledge, s.

Naut.: A bar laid across a hatchway to support the covers.

gutter-shaped, a. Shaped or channelled like a gutter.

gutter-snipe, s.

1. Print.: A single-slip poster for attaching to curbstones. (American.)

2. Fig.: A street Arab; a destitute boy living in the streets.

gutter-spout, s. A gutter.

gutter-stick, s.

Print.: One of the pieces of furniture which separate the pages of a form.

gŭt'-tĕr, v.t. & i. [GUTTER, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. To cut, wear, or form gutters or channels in; to furrow.

"The guttered rocks and congregated sands."
Shakesp.: Othello, ii. 1.

2. To provide with gutters or channels for carrying off water.

"First in a place, by nature close, they build A narrow flooring, guttered, walled, and tiled."
Dryden: Virgil; Georgic iv. 418.

B. Intransitive:

1. To become channelled or worn with hollows, by the melting tallow or wax running down, as a burning candle.

2. To fall or run down in drops.

gŭt'-tĕr-ĭng, s. [Eng. gutter; -ing.]

1. The act or state of forming into gutters or channels.

2. A gutter or arrangement of gutters for carrying off the water from a roof.

3. The act or state of falling in drops.

gŭt'-tĭ-fĕr, s. [Lat. gutta = a drop, and fero = to bear.]

1. Sing.: One of the Clusiaceæ (q.v.).

2. Pl.: Lindley's name for that order itself.

gŭt-tĭ-fĕr-ā'-lēs, s. pl. [Mod. Lat., from guttifer (q.v.); Lat. masc. or fem. pl. adj. suff. -ales.]

Bot.: An alliance of hypogynous exogens, with monodichlamydeous flowers, axile placentæ, imbricated calyx, imbricated or twisted corolla, and an embryo with little or no albumen. Lindley includes under it the orders Dipteraceæ, Ternstœmiaceæ, Rhizobolaceæ, Clusiaceæ, Marcgraviaceæ, Hypericaceæ, and Reaumuriaceæ (q.v.).

gŭt-tĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Lat. gutta = a drop, fero = to bear; Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Bearing or yielding gum or resinous substances.

* gŭt'-tle, v.i. & t. [Eng. gut; frequent. suff. -le.]

A. Intrans.: To swallow greedily, to gorge, to gormandise.

"His jolly brother, . . . lavish of expense, Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence."
Dryden: Persius, sat. vi.

B. Trans.: To swallow greedily; to devour.

"The fool spit in his porridge, to try if they'd hiss; they did not hiss, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops."—L'Estrange.

* gŭt'-tlĕr, s. [Eng. guttl(e); -er.] A greedy eater; a glutton; a gormandiser.

* gŭt'-tu-loŭs, a. [Lat. guttula = a little drop; dimin. of gutta = a drop; Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] In the form of a little drop or drops.

"Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. ii., ch. i.

gŭt'-tŭr, s. [Lat.] The throat.

gŭt'-tŭr-al, a. & s. [Fr., from Lat. gutturalis, from guttur = the throat.]

A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to the throat; formed in the throat.

"In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spiritally, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation."—Holder: On Speech.

B. As subst.: A letter, or combination of letters, the sound of which is formed in the throat; a guttural sound or articulation. In the English alphabet the gutturals are c (hard), g (hard), ch (hard), k, and q.

"Many words, which are soft and musical in the mouth of a Persian, may appear very harsh to our eyes, with a number of consonants and gutturals."—Sir W. Jones: On Eastern Poetry, Essay i. ¶ guttural-fossa, s.

Anat.: The central portion of the middle division in the exteraal base of the skull.

* gŭt-tŭr-ăl'-ĭ-tỹ, s. [Eng. guttural; -ity.] The quality or state of being guttural; gutturalness.

* gŭt'-tŭr-al-īze, v.t. [Eng. guttural; -ize.] To speak or pronounce gutturally.

gŭt'-tŭr-al-lỹ, adv. [Eng. guttural; -ly.] In a guttural manner; in the throat.

gŭt'-tŭr-al-nĕss, s. [Eng. guttural: -ness.] The quality or state of being guttural.

* gŭt'-tŭr-īne, a. [Lat. guttur = the throat; Eng. adj. suff. -ine.] Of or pertaining to the throat; guttural.

"The bronchocele or gutturine tumour."—Ray: On the Creation.

* gŭt'-tŭr-īze, v.t. [Lat. guttur = the throat; Eng. suff. -ize.] To form or pronounce in the throat; gutturally.

"For which the Germans gutturize a sound."—Coleridge (Ophelie).

gŭt'-tỹ, a. [GUTTÉE.]

gŭt'-wŏrt, s. [Eng. gut, and wort. So called from the violent action of the plant, which is a purgative, on the intestines.]

Bot.: Globularia Alypum.

guȳ (1), * gȳ, s. [Sp. guia = a guide, a guy; guiar = to guide; Fr. guier.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A rope to steady a body in hoisting.

II. Technically:

1. Mach.: A stay-rope passing from the top of a spar to a post or anchor in the ground, and used to steady it: as, the guys of a derrick or shears.

2. Eng.: The stay-rod which connects the floor of a suspension-bridge with the land on each side, in order to prevent swaying.

3. Nautical:

(1) A rope which trims and steadies a lower studding-sail boom. The fore-guy leads from the boom-end to the spritsail-gaff, thence to the heel of the bowsprit, and thence inboard: the after-guy leads from the boom-end to a sheave in the ship's side, and thence inboard.

(2) A rope from the end of a jib-boom or flying jib-boom to the end of a spritsail-yard or spritsail-gaff, and thence to the ship's bow, to stay the spar laterally.

guȳ (2), s. [From the fantastical dress of the effigies of Guy Fawkes, burnt on November 5.] A fright, a dowdy; a fantastical or ludicrous figure. [GUNPOWDER-PLOT.]

guȳ, v.t. [GUY (1), s.] To guide, direct, or steady by means of a guy.

guȳ-ą-quĭl'-līte, s. [From Guyaquil, in Ecuador, where it occurs.]

Min.: A pale yellow amorphous mineral, easily cut by the knife, and soluble in alcohol. Compos.: carbon 76·7; hydrogen 8·2; oxygen 15·2.

* guȳde, v.t. [GUIDE, v.]

* guȳle, v.t. [GUILE.]

gūze, s. [Etym. doubtful.

Her.: A roundlet of a sanguine tint, representing an eyeball.

Gū-zĕr-a'-tī, Goô-zĕr-a'-teĕ, s. [A native word.]

1. A native of Guzerat or Goozerat in India.

2. The language spoken in that region. It was probably at first a Turanian language or dialect, but is now completely transformed by the introduction into it of a great multitude of words derived from Sanscrit.

gŭz'-zle, v.i. & t. [O. Fr. gouziller, in compound desgouziller = to gulp or swill down; cf. also Fr. s'egosiller = to make one's throat sore with shouting; gosier = the throat. (Skeat.)]

A. Intrans.: To swill or drink liquor greedily; to drink much or frequently; to be constantly drinking or swilling.

"They fell to lapping and guzzling, till they burst themselves."—L'Estrange.

B. Trans.: To drink or swill greedily.

"[He] knew no medium between guzzling beer
And his old stint—three thousand pounds a year."
Cowper: Retirement, 601.

* gŭz'-zle, s. [GUZZLE, v.]

1. One who guzzles; a guzzler; a swiller; an insatiable eater or drinker.

"That senseless, sensual epicure,
That sink of filth, that guzzle most impure."
Marston: Scourge of Villainy, iii. 7.

2. A debauch.

3. Drink.

"Over sealed Winchesters of threepenny guzzle."—T. Brown: Works, ii. 184.

gŭz-zlĕr, s. [Eng. guzzl(e); -er.] One who guzzles; an insatiable eater or drinker.

"Being an eternal guzzler of wine."—T. Brown: Works, iii. 265.

gwŷn'-ĭ-ąd, gwĭn'-ĭ-ąd, guĭn'-ĭ-ąd, s. [Wel. gwyniad; from gwyn = white.]

Ichthy.: Coregonus Pennantii or fera, a fish of the family Salmonidæ, abundant in Ullswater and other large lakes in Cumberland. It exists also in some Welsh lakes

* gy, * gye, v.t. [GUIDE.]

gȳ, s. [GUY (1).]

gȳ'-ąll, s. [GAYAL.]

ġȳbe (1), v.t. [JIB.]

Naut.: To shift over the boom of a fore-and-aft sail.

* ġȳbe (1), v. [GIBE, v.]

ġȳbe (1), s. [GIBE, s.]

ġȳbe (2), s. [GYBE (1), v.]

Naut.: The shifting over of the boom of a fore-and-aft sail.

 gye, v.t. & i. [Guide, v.]

 gyeld, s. [Guild.]

gȳle, guile, s. [Fr. guiller = to ferment.] [Guillevat.]

1. Fermented wort for making vinegar.

2. A large vat or cistern. The liquor gyle in a brewery is the water-cistern or vat. A gyle-tun.

gyle-tun, s. The same as Oyle (q.v.).

gȳltc, s. [Guilt.]

gȳm-na-dĕn'-ĭ-a, s. [Pref. gymn(o-), and Gr. ἀδήν (adēn) = a gland.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the family Gymnadeniidæ (q.v.). About twenty-five species are known. Gymnadenia conopsea is the Fragrant Orchis, a plant with rose-red or purple flowers; it is wild in Britain, and occurs in dry pastures, ascending to 2,000 feet high in the Highlands. It occurs also in the arctic parts of Europe, in Siberia, the West of Asia, &c. G. odoratissima has also been called British, but on doubtful authority.

¶ The pronunciation of the initial consonant in words commencing with g and derived from the Greek is unsettled. The majority of scientific words and some few relating to classic antiquity, which have not passed, and probably will not pass, into general use, are marked with g hard (g). There is also a tendency, which originated in Germany and was first adopted in this country by Mitford, to approach more closely both in orthography and pronunciation to the primary form.

gȳm-na-dĕn'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod Lat. gymnaden(ia); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of Orchids, tribe Ophreæ.

gȳm-nās'-ĭ-arch, s. [Gr. γυμνασίαρχος (gumnasiarchos), from γυμνάσιον (gumnasion) = a school for athletics; γυμνός (gumnos) = naked; ἄρχω (archō) = to rule or govern.]

Gr. Antiq.: A magistrate or public official in Greece who superintended the gymnasia or palæstra, paid the athletes who were training for the public games, and provided them with oil and other necessaries at his own expense.

gȳm-nās'-ĭ-ŭm, s. [Lat., from Gr. γυμνάσιον (gumnasion), from γυμνάζω (gumnazō) = to train naked, to exercise, from γυμνός (gumnos) = naked.]

1. A building or place where athletic exercises are practised or performed; a place where athletes exercise and train.

"Gymnasium properly signifies the place where people exercise themselves being stript."—Grew: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. iv., ch. viii.

2. A school or place of instruction for the higher branches of literature and science.

gȳm'-năst, s. [Gr. γυμναστής (gumnastēs) = a trainer of athletes; γυμνάς, γυμνός (gumnas, gumnos) = naked.]

* 1. One who teaches gymnastic exercises; a trainer of athletes.

2. One who practises or performs gymnastic exercises; an athlete.

gȳm-năs'-tĭc, * gym-nas-tique, * gym-nas-tick, a. & s. [Lat. gymnasticus, from Gr. γυμναστικός (gumnastikos) = fond of or pertaining to athletic exercises; ἡ γυμναστική τέχνη (hē gumnastikē technē)) = (the art of) gymnastics.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining to athletic exercises; consisting of leaping, wrestling, running, boxing, or similar exercises for the body.

"Great reputation in all the gymnastic exercises united."—Goldsmith: On Polite Learning, ch. viii.

B. As substantive:

* 1. A gymnast; a teacher of gymnastics.

2. Pl.: Athletic exercises; disciplinary exercise for the body or intellect.

"Academies dedicated chiefly to this discipline, and other martial gymnastiques." — Evelyn: The State of France.

 gȳm-năs'-tĭc-al, a. [Eng. gymnastic; -al.] Gymnastic; athletic.

"And harlequins and clowns, with feats gymnastical." Byron: Beppo, lii.

 gȳm-năs'-tĭc-al-lȳ, adv. [Eng. gymnastical; -ly.] In a gymnastic manner; as a gymnast or athlete; athletically.

"Such as with agility and vigour are not gymnastically composed, nor actively use those parts."—Browne: Vulgar Errours, bk. iv., ch. v.

gȳm-năs'-tĭcs, s. [Gymnastic, B. 2.]

gȳm-năx'-ŏn ȳ, s. [Gr. γυμνός (gumnos) = naked; ἄξων (axōn) = an axle, an axis, and suff. -y.]

Bot.: An abnormal condition of the ovary, in which the placenta protrudes through it. (R. Brown, 1874.)

gȳm-nō'-ma, s. [Gr. γυμνός (gumnos) = naked, and νῆμα (nēma) = yarn; νέω (neō) = to spin; named from the naked stamens.]

Bot.: A genus of Asclepiadaceæ, tribe Stapelieæ. Gymnema lactiferum has been reported to be the cow plant, or Kiringhuma plant, of Ceylon, the milk of which the natives use as food, boiling and eating the leaves also. Gymnema tingens, a native of Pegu, is said to furnish excellent indigo and green dyes. (Lindley.)

gȳm-nē'-trŭs, s. [Gr. γυμνός (gumnos) = naked, and ἦτρον (ētron) = the abdomen.]

Ichthy.: A genus of Cepolidæ (Ribbon-fishes). The body is long and slender, with a dorsal fin running its whole length. Gymnetrus Banksii is sometimes twelve feet long, with a thickness of only two inches and three-quarters. G. Hawkenii, Hawken's Gymnetrus, or the Oared Gymnetrus, has been found in the British seas. Its length is eight and a-half feet. A long gymnetrus moving through the sea and leaving a trail behind which might be mistaken for a prolongation of the body, might be taken by a nautical observer for a "sea serpent."

gȳm'-nĭc, * gȳm'-nick, a. & s. [Fr. gymnique, from Gr. γυμνικός (gumnikos), from γυμνός (gumnos) = naked.]

A. As adj.: Pertaining to or connected with athletic exercises; practising or performing gymnastics.

"Gymnick artists, wrestlers, riders, runners." Milton: Samson Agonistes, 1,323.

B. As subst.: Gymnastics; athletic exercises.

 gȳm'-nĭc-al, a. [Eng. gymnic; -al.] Gymnic, gymnastic.

"Gymnical exercises at Pitana."—Potter: Antiq. of Greece, bk. ii., ch. xx.

gȳm'-nīte, s. [Gr. γυμνός (gumnos) = naked, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.) Named from Bare Hills, where it was found.]

Min.: The same as Dewevlite (q.v.). The Brit. Mus. Catal. makes Gymnite the name, and reduces Deweylite to a synonym.

gȳm-no-, pref. [Gr. γυμνός (gumnos) = naked.]

1. Anat., Zool., &c.: Naked; destitute of hairs, a shell, or other protective covering.

2. Bot.: Destitute of a pericarp or other covering.

gȳm-nō-blăs'-tĭc, a. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. βλαστός (blastos) = a sprout, a shoot, a sucker; and suff. -ic.]

Zool.: Not having the nutritive and reproductive buds protected by horny receptacles. Used of the Hydrozoa. (Allman.) gymnoblastic-hydroids, s. pl.

Zool.: A name given by Professor Allman to the Corynida, because neither their polypites nor their generative buds are enclosed in a chitinous investment.

† gȳm-nō-car'-pĭ-ans, s. pl. [Pref. gymno-, Gr. καρπός (karpos) = fruit, and pl. suff. -ans.]

Bot.: One of two classes into which Mirbel divides all fruits. It consists of those in which the fruit is not disguised by the adherence of any other organ than the calyx. Opposed to Angiocarpians (q.v.).

† gȳm-nō-car'-poŭs, a. [Gymnocarpians.]

Bot.: Having the structure of fruit described under Gymnocarpians (q.v.).

gymnocarpous-lichens, s. pl.

Bot.: Lichens in which the apothecia or hymenial layers are open from the first. (Thomé.)

gȳm-nō-çĭd'-ĭ-ŭm, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. οἰκίδιον (oikidion), dimin. of οἶκος (oikos) = a house (?).]

Bot.: A swelling at the base of some urn mosses.

gȳm-nō-clā'-dŭs, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. κλάδος (klados) = a shoot, a branch.]

Bot.: A genus of leguminous plants, sub-order Cæsalpinieæ, tribe Encesalpinieæ. The only known species is Gymnocladus canadensis, sometimes called the Kentucky Coffee-tree, because the early settlers in that state used it as a substitute for coffee. The timber is suitable for cabinet work; the bark is very bitter, and contains saponine.

gȳm-nō-dĕ-rĭ'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gymnoder(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: Fruit crows; a sub-family of Ampelidæ (Chatterers), some of which have the neck bare of feathers. They are nearly of the size of crows, and inhabit South America, feeding on fruits and insects. [Umbrella-bird.]

gȳm-nō-dĕr'-ŭs, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. δειρή (deirē), Attic for δειρή (deirē) = the neck.]

Ornith: The typical genus of the sub-family Gymnoderinæ.

gȳm'-nō-dŏn, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. ὀδούς (odous), genit. ὀδόντος (odontos) = a tooth.]

Ichthy.: The typical genus of the family Gymnodontidæ (q.v.).

gȳm'-nō-dŏnt, s. [Gymnodon.]

Ichthyology:

1. Sing.: A fish belonging to the genus Gymnodon, or, at least, to the family Gymnodontidæ.

2. Pl.: That family itself.

gȳm-nō-dŏn'-tĭ-dæ, gȳm-nō-dŏn'-ta, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gymnodon, genit. gymnodont(os); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ichthy.: Globe-fishes; a family of fishes, sub-order Plectognathi. Instead of teeth there is a sheath of a substance resembling ivory enclosing the jaws. This enables these fishes to break the shells of crustaceans and molluscs, which, with sea-weeds, constitute their food. They have leathery skins, usually defended by spines. They chiefly inhabit the warmer seas. Genera: Diodon, Gymnodon, Tetraodon, &c. (q.v.).

gȳm-nŏg'-ĕn-oŭs, a. [Eng. gymnogen; -ous.]

Bot.: Of or pertaining to the Gymnogens: gymnospermous.

gȳm'-nō-ġĕns, s. pl. [Pref. gymno-, and γεννάω (gennaō) = to engender, to produce. So named from the seeds being quite naked.]

1. Bot.: The sixth of the seven classes into which Lindley divides the Vegetable Kingdom. He places it between the Dictyogens and the Exogens. It is not, however, the Dictyogens, but the Higher Acrogens, like the Lycopodiaceæ, which approach them from below. In the other direction they are closely akin to Exogens, agreeing in everything pertaining to their vegetation, in their concentric zones of wood, and in having a vascular system and spiral vessels, and a central pith. The essential point in which they differ is that there is no pericarpal covering in the female flower, which receives fertilisation through the foramen of the ovule without intervention of style or stigma. There are also large perforations or discs in the wood, a structure seen only in a few Exogens. The Gymnogens are often called Gymnosperms or gymnospermous plants. The class contains four orders, Cycadaceæ, Pinaceæ, Taccaceæ, and Gnetaceæ (q.v.).

2. Palæobotany: The Cryptogams and Gymnogens or Gymnosperms seem to have been brought into being and to have flourished long prior to the Monocotyledons and Dicotyledons; all the supposed Palms, Aroids, and other Monocotyledons of the Carboniferous period having been explained away. Apparently true Gymnogens exist in the Devonian rocks. Dadoxylon, which is from them, seems a Conifer, and that order was well represented in the Carboniferous period. Cycads also occurred, and perhaps Taxaceæ. (Prof. Williamson, Brit. Assoc. Rep. (1883), pp. 485, &c.)

gȳm-nō-grăm'-mē, gȳm-nō-grăm'-ma, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. γραμμή (grammē) = a line, an outline. Named from the naked scri.]

Bot.: A genus of ferns with one to three pinnate leaves; sori dorsal oblong or linear, often confluent; involucre none. Known species eighty-four Gymnogramme leptophylla, a small fern with fragile fronds one to three inches long, is British. It is found also in continental Europe, in Asia, Africa, America, Australia, and New Zealand. (Sir J. Hooker.)

GYMNOGRAMME.

gym-nŏg'-y-noŭs, a. [Pref. gymno-, Gr. γυνή (gunē) = a woman, and suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having the ovary naked.

gym-nŏ-læ'-ma-ta, s. pl. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. λαιμός (laimos) = the throat.]

1. Zool.: An order of Polyzoa, in which the mouth is destitute of the valvular structure called the epistome, and consequently the opening into the gullet is uncovered. It is divided into four sub-orders, Paludicellea, Cheilostomata, Cyclostomata, and Ctenostomata.

2. Palæont.: Apparently the order has existed from the Upper Cambrian times till now.

gym-nō-mī'-trī-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gymnomitri(um), and Lat. fem. adj. pl. suff. -idæ.]

Bot.: A family of plants, sub-order Jungermanneæ.

gym-nō-mī'-trī-ŭm, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. μιτρίον (mitrion), dimin. of μίτρα (mitra) = a belt or girdle.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the family Gymnomitridæ (q.v.).

gym-nō-phī'-ŏn-a, s. pl. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. ὀφιόνεος (ophioneos) = of or belonging to a serpent; ὄφις (ophis) = a snake.]

Zool.: The name given by Professor Huxley to an order of Amphibia. They have rounded worm-like bodies, devoid of limbs and tail. They have scales imbedded in the integument; the dorsal vertebræ are biconcave, and possess double transverse processes, with which the capitula and tubercula of the ribs articulate. Called by Cuvier Naked Serpents; by some authors Cæciliæ; and by Prof. Owen Ophiomorpha. Known genera: Cæcilia, Siphonops, Ichthyopsis, and Rhinatrema. (Huxley, &c.)

gym-nŏph-thăl'-ma-ta, s. pl. [Pref. gymno-; Gr. ὀφθαλμός (ophthalmos) = an eye, and Lat. neut. pl. suff. -ata.]

Zool.: The craspedote Medusæ of the class Hydrozoa. (Huxley.) [GYMNOPHTHALMATE MEDUSAS.]

gym-nŏph-thăl'-mate, a. [GYMNOPHTHALMATA.]

Zool.: Naked-eyed.

gymnophthalmate medusas, s. pl.

Zool.: The name given by Prof. Edward Forbes to living organisms, now known to be of two distinct kinds, (1) free medusiform gonophores of various Corynida, Campanularida, and the Oceanic Hydrozoa; (2) free Medusidæ in all respects resembling No. 1 in anatomical structure, but whose ova do not give rise to a free zoöid, but to a free swimming organism like the parent hydrosoma—viz., Trochymenidæ, Geryonidæ, and Ægioidæ. (Nicholson.) gym-nŏph-thăl'-mĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gymnophthalm(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Zool.: A family of saurians, having a very long snake-like body, with the limbs rudimentary or wanting. They have wide mouths, their eyes without eyelids, either covered by a transparent capsule, or concealed under the skin. Found in Australia; more rarely in the east of Europe and the West Indies.

gym-nŏph-thăl'-mŭs, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. ὀφθαλμός (ophthalmos) = an eye.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Gymnophthalmidæ (q.v.).

gym-nō-rhī'-na, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. ῥις (rhis), genit. ῥινός (rhinos) = the nose.]

Ornith.: A genus of Corvidæ, sub-family Streperinæ (Piping Crows). Gymnorhina tibicen is the Flute-player of Australia.

gym-nŏ-sō-mą-ta, s. pl. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. σώματα (sōmata), pl. of σώμα (sōma) = body.]

Zool.: One of two families into which the molluscous class Pteropoda is divided. The animal is naked, without mantle or shell, the head distinct, the gill indistinct, the fins attached to the sides of the neck. It contains the solitary family Cliidæ. (S. P. Woodward.) gym-nŏs'-ō-phĭst, s. [Gr. γυμνοσοφισταί (gymnosophistai), from γυμνός (gumnos) = naked, and σοφιστής (sophistēs) = a master of one's craft, a skilful man, a wise man, a sophist; σοφός (sophos) = wise.]

Philos. & Hist. (Pl.): Another name for the sophists, the first of seven classes of Indian society described by Arrian, a writer of the second century, whose descriptions, however, were founded on the authority of Alexander the Great's companions in arms, and on that of Megasthenes. According to Arrian, the sophists went naked (whence the name Gymnosophists), in winter basking in the sun, and in summer sheltering themselves under trees so umbrageous that they could shelter 10,000 men. The allusion is evidently to the Banian tree (Ficus indica). According to Strabo, one of them, Calanus by name, brought to Europe, ascended the funeral pile "according to the law of his country." Arrian identifies the sophists with the Brahmans, as do Ambrose and others. But as the position of sophist was open to all classes of the community, and as the sophists ate with others, it is probable that they were Hindoo Sunyasis or other ascetics, or Boodhists free from the restraints of caste. (Sykes: Ancient India; Jour. Asiat. Soc., vi. 365, &c.)

gym-nŏs'-ō-phy, s. [GYMNOSOPHIST.] The teaching or doctrines of the Gymnosophists.

gym-nō-spĕr'-mą, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. σπέρμα (sperma) = seed. So named because the seed is destitute of pappus.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gymnospermeæ.

gym-nō-spĕr'-mĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gymnosperm(a), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A subtribe of composite plants, tribe Asteroideæ.

gym-nō-spĕr'-mĭ-ą, s. pl. [GYMNOSPERMA.]

Botany:

1. The name given by Linnæus to an order of Didynamia characterized, he believed, by naked seeds. He included under it most of the Labiatæ, which at the first glance seem to have four erect seeds quite uncovered. Careful observation shows, however, that they are enclosed in a thin pericarp, and the term gymnospermia (naked-seeded) is consequently inaccurate.

2. Gymnosperms (q.v.). These have seeds really naked.

gym-nō-spĕr'-moŭs, a. [Mod. Lat. gymnosperm(ia), and Eng., &c. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having the ovules or seeds apparently or really naked—i.e., not enclosed in an ovary. [GYMNOSPERMIA.]

"Tissues of gymnospermous plants in the state of mineral charcoal."—Quar. Jour. Geo. Soc., xv. 630.

gym'-nō-spĕrms, gym-nō-spĕr'-mą, s. pl. [GYMNOSPERMA.]

Bot.: A class of plants having naked seeds. Called also Gymnogens (q.v.).

gym-nō-spor-ăn'-gĭ-ŭm, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Eng. sporangium (q.v.).]

Bot.: A naked sporangium or spore-case. Example, the fruit of Juniperus communis. (De Candolle.) gym'-nō-spōre, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Eng. spore (q.v.).]

Bot.: A naked spore.

gym-nō-spōr'-oŭs, a. [Pref. gymno-, Eng. spore, and suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having naked sporea.

gym-nŏs'-tō-moŭs, a. [Pref. gymno-, Gr. στόμα (stoma), genit. στόματος (stomatos) = the mouth, and suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having its margin free from cilia. Used of the urn of a moss when the operculum is thrown off. (Thomé.) gym'-nōte, s. [GYMNOTUS.]

* 1. Ord. Lang.: A naked person

† 2. Ichthy.: A fish of the genus Gymnotus (q.v.).

gym-nō-tĕt-rą-spĕr'-moŭs, a. [Pref. gymno-, and Eng. tetraspermous (q.v.).]

Bot.: Having a four-lobed ovary with four seeds, apparently, but not really, naked. Example, the Labiatæ. [GYMNOSPERMIA.]

gym-nō'-tĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Lat. gymnot(us), and fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ichthy.: A family of soft-finned fishes, sub-order Physostomata, section Apoda. The maxillary bones aid in forming the margin of the upper jaw; there is no dorsal fin, and the anal fin is very long.

gym-nō'-tŭs, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. νῶτος (nōtos), or νωτον (nōton) = the back.]

Zool.: The typical genus of the family Gymnotidæ. Gymnotus electricus is the Electric Eel (q.v.).

gym-nūr'-ą, s. [Pref. gymno-, and Gr. οὐρά (oura) = the tail.]

Zool.: A genus of mammals, probably to be placed under the Centetidæ (Tenrecs). Habitat, Borneo, Sumatra, and the Malay Peninsula. (Nicholson.)

* gymp, s. [GIMP.]

* gyn, v.t & i. [GIN v.]

gyn-, pref. [GYNO-.]

gyn-æ'-çĕ-ŭm, gyn-æ'-çĭ-ŭm, s. [Gr. γυναικεῖον (gunaikeion) = the women's part of a house; γυνή (gunē) = a woman.]

* 1. Gr. Antiq.: The part or apartments of a house reserved for the females: it was usually the most remote part of the building, lying behind an interior court.

* 2. Roman Antiq.: A manufactory, managed by females, for the making of clothes and furniture for the emperor's family.

3. Bot.: The name given by Röper and others to what is usually called the pistil (q.v.).

* gyn-æ'-çĭ-an, a. [Gr. γυναικεῖος (gunaikeios) = pertaining to women: γυνή (gunē) = a woman.] Of or pertaining to women; feminine, female.

gyn-æ'-çĭ-ŭm, s. [GYNÆCEUM.]

* gyn-æ-cŏc'-rą-çy, * gyn-ĕ-cŏc'-rą-çy, * gyn-aĭ-kŏc'-rą-cy, s. [Gr. γυναικοκρατία (gunaikokratia), from γυνή (gunē), genit. γυναικός (gunaikos) = a woman, and κρατέω (krateō) = to rule.] Female rule or government; government by a woman.

"Bachofen has misinterpreted many of the facts bearing on ancient gynaikocracy."—McLennan: Studies in Primitive History, p. 419.

gyn-æ-cŏl'-ō-gy, gyn-ĕ-cŏl'-ō-gy, s. [Gr. γυνή (gunē), genit. γυναικός (gunaikos) = a woman, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse or treatise.]

Med.: A treatise on, or the doctrine of, the nature and diseases of women.

gyn-æ-cō-măs'-ty, s. [Gr. γυνή (gunē), genit. γυναικός (gunaikos) = a woman, and μαστός (mastos) = a breast.]

Physiol.: The abnormal condition of a man who has breasts as large as those of a woman and functionally active.

gyn-æ-ŏc'-rą-çy, gyn-ĕ-ŏc'-rą-çy, s. Gr. γυνή (gunē) = a woman, and κρατέω (krateō) = to rule.] The same as GYNÆCOCRACY (q.v.).

* gyn-aĭ-kŏc'-rą-çy, s. [GYNÆCOCRACY.]

* gyn-aĭ-kō-crăt'-ĭ-cal, a. [Eng. gynaikocra(cy), t connective, and suff. -ical.] Pertaining to female rule or government.

"The rise and consolidation of gynaikocratical power in the Greek area."—McLennan: Studies in Primitive History, p. 415.

† gyn-ăn'-dĕr, s. [GYNANDRIA.]

Bot.: A plant of the class Gynandria (q.v.).

gyn-ăn'-drĭ-ą, s. pl. [Gr. γυνή (gunē) = a woman; ἀνήρ (anēr), genit. ἀνδρός (andros) = a man, and Lat. neut. pl. adj. suff. -ia.]

Bot.: The name given by Linnæus to the twentieth class of his artificial system, in which he considered that the stamens were on the pistil. He divides the Gynandria into eight orders: Disndria, Triandria, Tetrandria, Pentandria, Hexandria, Decandria, Dodecandria, and Polysndria.

†gȳn-ăn'-drĭ-an, a. [Mod. Lat. gynandri(a); Eng. &c. suff. -an.]

Bot.: Having the structure of the Gynandria (q.v.).

gȳn-ăn'-droŭs, a. [Mod. Lat. gynandr(ia); Eng. suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having the stamens and pistil connate, gynandrian.

gȳn-ăn'-thĕr-oŭs, a. [Pref. gyn-; Eng. anther, and suff. -ous.]

Bot.: Having the anomalous characteristic that the stamens are converted into pistils.

gȳn'-ar-chy, s. [Gr. γυνή (gunē) = a woman; and ἀρχη (archē) = rule, government.] Government by a female; gynæcocracy.

"I have always some hopes of change under a gynarchy."—Lord Chesterfield.

gȳn-ē'-çĭ-ŭm, s. [Gynæceum.]

gȳn-ē'-çĭ-an, a. [Gynæcian.]

gȳn-ĕ-cŏc'-ra-çy, s. [Gynæcocracy.]

gȳn-ĕ-cŏl'-ō-ġy, s. [Gynæcology.]

gȳn-ĕ-ŏc'-ra-çy, s. [Gynæocracy.]

gȳn-ēr'-ĭ-ŭm, s. [Gr. γυνή (gunē) = a female, and ἔριον (erion) = wool.]

Bot.: A genus of grasses, tribe Arundineæ. Gynerium saccharoides, a Brazilian grass, produces sugar, though it is not the genuine sugar-cane (q.v.). A decoction of the root of G. parviflorum, another Brazilian species, is used to strengthen the hair. G. argenteum, the Pampas-grass, growing sometimes 50 feet high, has been introduced from South America into Britain.

gȳn-ō-, gȳn-, pref. [Gr. γυνή (gunē) = a woman.]

1. Sociol., &c.: A woman.

2. Anat., Zool., &c.: Anything distinctively feminine.

3. Bot.: A pistil.

ġȳn'-ō-bāse, s. [Pref. gyno-, and Gr. βάσις (basis) = a base.]

Bot.: A fleshy receptacle with but a single row of carpels, obliquely inclined towards the axis of the flower. It is seen in the fruit of Geranium, in that of Nelumbium, &c.

gȳn-ō-bās'-ĭc, a. [Eng. gynobas(e); -ic.]

Bot.: Pertaining to or possessing a gynobase.

gȳn-ŏc'-ra-çy, s. [Gr. γυνή (gunē) = a woman, and κρατέω (kroteō) = to rule, from κράτος (kratos) = might.] The same as Gynæcocracy (q.v.).

"Oligarchy, limited monarchy, and even gynocracy."—Scott: Fortunes of Nigel, ch. xvii.

gȳn-ō-car'-dĭa, s. [Pref. gyno-, and Gr. καρδία (kardia) = the heart.]

Bot.: A genus of Pangiaceæ. The seeds of Gynocardia odorata, after being freed from their integuments, are beaten up with clarified butter, and then applied by the natives of India to the skin on parts affected by cutaneous diseases.

gȳn'-ō-phŏre, s. [Pref. gyno-, and Gr. φορός (phorŏs) = bearing.]

1. Zool. (Pl.): The generative buds or gonophores of Hydrozoa, which contain only ova.

2. Bot.: The long stalk of the ovary in such genera as Cleome and Passiflora. It is really a lengthened receptacle bearing the petals, the stamens, and the pistils, but not the calyx.

gȳn-ō-plăs'-tĭc, a. [Pref. gyno-, and Eng. plastic (q.v.).]

Surg.: Opening the genital aperture if closed, dilating it if contracted.

gȳn-ō-stē'-mĭ-ŭm, s. [Pref. gyno-, and Gr. στήμων (stēmōn) = the warp in an upright loom at which the weaver stood; here used for a stamen.]

Bot.: The name given by Richard to the column of combined stamens in the Orchids.

ġȳp (1), ġĭp, s. [Abbrev. of gipsy.] A swindle or a swindler. (U. S. Slang.) ġȳp (2), s. [Ety. doubtful.] At Cambridge (England) University the cant term for a servant, as a scout is at Oxford, and a skip at Dublin.

ġȳp-ā-ĕ-tī'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gypaet(us), and Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: Bearded Vultures; a sub-family of Vulturidæ (Vultures), in which the head and neck are clothed with feathers, and the under mandible provided with a bunch of setaceous bristles, diverted forwards. There is only one known species. [Gypaetus.]

ġȳp-ā'-ĕ-tŭs, s. [Gr. γύψ (gups) = a vulture, and ἀετός (actos) = an eagle.]

Ornith.: The typical genus of the sub-family Gypaetinæ (q.v.). Gypaetus barbatus is the Bearded Vulture, Griffon, or Lammergeyer of the Alps. [Griffon.]

ġȳp-ō-ġĕr-ăn'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gypogeran(us); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Ornith.: A family of diurnal birds of prey, containing only one known genus, Gypogeranus. The legs are long, slender, and with an unfeathered tarso-metatarsus, so as to resemble a wader, while in other respects the structure is like that of a raptorial bird.

ġȳp-ō-ġĕr'-a-nŭs, s. [Gr. γύψ (gups), genit. γυπός (gupos) = a vulture, and γέρανος (geranos) = a crane.]

Ornith.: The typical and only known genus of the family Gypogeranidæ (q.v.). Gypogeranus serpentarius is the Secretary Bird of South Africa. [Secretary-bird.]

ġȳps (1), s. [Gr. γύψ (gups) = a vulture.]

Ornith.: A genus of Vulturidæ, sub-family Vulturinæ. Gyps fulvus is the Tawny or Griffin Vulture. It is about four feet long, and is found in Western Asia, Dalmatia, the Tyrol, the Alps, the Pyrenees, Spain, the North of Africa, &c., straggling occasionally to Britain.

ġȳp'-sĕ-oŭs, a. [Eng. gyps(um); -eous.] Of the nature of gypsum; resembling or having the qualities of gypsum.

gypseous-marl, s.

Geol.: A mixture of gypsum and marl. (Lyell.) [Gypseous-series.]

gypseous-series, s.

Geol.: The Lower freshwater limestone and marl constituting the Upper beds of the Middle Eocene in the vicinity of Paris. [Gypsum, 2.] They are of white and green marls with subordinate beds of gypsum. At the Hill of Montmartre is a quarry of gypsum valuable for the manufacture of plaster of Paris. Splendid fossil remains of Eocene mammals have been found in it. The examination of these by Cuvier, and the evidence thus afforded that they were of extinct genera and species, constituted an epoch in the history of geology. Similar gypseous marls are worked for gypsum at St. Romain, on the right bank of the Allier. (Lyell.) ġȳp'-seȳ, ġȳp'-sȳ, s. & a. [Gipsy.]

ġȳp-sĭf'-ĕr-oŭs, a. [Lat. gypsum = gypsum; fero = to bear; Eng. adj. suff. -ous.] Bearing or producing gypsum. (Q. J. Geol. Soc., i. 576.)

ġȳp'-sĭne, a. [Eng. gyps(um); -ine.] The same as Gypseous (q.v.).

ġȳp-sŏg'-ra-phy, s. [Gr. γύψον (gupson) = gypsum, and γράφω (graphō) = to write, to engrave.] The art of engraving on gypsum.

ġȳp-sŏl'-ō-ġĭst, s. [Eng. gypsy = gipsy, and Gr. λόγος (logos) = a discourse.] One who has studied the history, manners, customs, and language of the gipsies.

ġȳp-sŏl'-ō-ġy, s. [Gypsologist.] The study of the history, manners, customs, and language of the gipsies.

ġȳp'-sō-plăst, s. [Gr. γύψον (gupson) = gypsum, and πλάσσω (plassō) = to mould.] A cast taken in plaster of Paris or white lime.

ġȳps-or'-nĭs, s. [Gr. γύψος (gupsos) = gypsum, and ὄρνις (ornis) = bird.]

Palæont.: A bird, believed to be a gigantic Rail, from the Eocene gypsum of Paris.

ġȳp'-sŭm, s. [Lat. = plaster of Paris, gypsum, from Gr. γύψος (gupsos) = (1) chalk, (2) gypsum.]

I. Min.: A monoclinic mineral, transparent to opaque; its colours white, gray, flesh-coloured, yellow, blue, or, when impure, sometimes reddish-brown or even black. Streak white; lustre various, from dull earthy to pearly or glistening on exposed faces of the crystals. Hardness 1·5 to 2; sp. gr. 2·3. Compos.: sulphuric acid 44·2 to 46·6; lime 29·4 to 33·9; water 19·9 to 21·6; silica 0 to 6·40, &c. Varieties (1) Crystallized Gypsum, in which case it constitutes Selenite, and occurs in flattish crystals which are oblique parallelopipeds of lamellar structure, the crystals occasionally containing sand; (2) Fibrous Gypsum (a) Satin Spar, (b) a plumose sub-variety, (3) Massive Gypsum, the same as Alabaster (q.v.). When there is no water in its composition, it is called Anhydrous Gypsum. Extensive beds of it occur in many parts of the United States, particularly in Ohio and Michigan. It is also found in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Ontario, England, France, &c.

2. Geol.: Technically Gypsum is regarded as a mineral deposit, in some places constituting rock masses. It may be of any age. Near Paris it is Middle Eocene. Fraspoli says that some gypsums were originally carbonates instead of sulphates of lime, and that they underwent metamorphism by the action of volcanic sulphurous or sulphuro-hydrous vapours. Von Buch, Murchison, and most other geologists, agree with this view. Mr. Sterry Hunt believes that other gypsums may have been produced by the action of bicarbonate of lime upon a solution of sulphate of magnesia. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., v., p. lxiii., vi., p. xlix., xvi. 152.) [Gypseous-series.]

3. Chem. & Comm.: Calcium sulphate crystallized with two molecules of water $CaSO_4{\cdot}2H_2O$. It is often found by the decomposition of pyrites when lime is present. Gypsum calcined is called plaster of Paris, and is used for taking casts of statues. It has been found that the addition of potassium sulphate causes it to harden more quickly. Gypsum is used as a manure; it facilitates the decomposition of rocks containing alkaline silicates.

ġȳp'-sy, s. & a. [Gipsy.]

¶ For the compounds, see under Gipsy.

gyr-a-căn'-thŭs (yr as ĭr), s. [Lat. gyratus, pa. par. of gyro, to turn round in a circle; Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a ring, a circle, and Lat. acanthus (q.v.).]

Palæont.: A genus of fish spines, from the carboniferous formation. The fish probably belonged to the Cestraphori.

gyr'-al (yr as ĭr), a. [Eng. gyre; -al.] Moving in a circle; revolving, whirling.

gyr'-āte (yr as ĭr), a. [Lat. gyratus, pa. par. of gyro = to move or turn round; gyrus = a circle.]

* I. Ord. Lang.: Moving or going round in a circle.

2. Bot.: Bent like the head of a crosier. Called more generally Circinate (q.v.). Used specially of the vernation of ferns.

gyr'-āte (yr as ĭr), v.t. [Gyrate, a.] To move round a central point; to revolve; to turn round.

gyr-ā'-tion (yr as ĭr), s. [Low Lat. gyratio, from Lat. gyratus, pa. par. of gyro = to turn round.] The act or state of turning or whirling round.

"The artificial gyrations, and other singular curiosities observed in the latter." — Derham: Physico-Theology, bk. iv., ch. iii.

¶ Centre of gyration: [Centre, ¶ 22].

gyr'-a-tŏr-y (yr as ĭr), a. [Eng. gyrate; -ory.] Moving or turning in a circle; gyrating, revolving.

gyre (yr as ĭr), s. [Lat. gyrus = a circle, a circuit, from Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a ring (s.), round (a.).] A circle described by a moving body; a turn, a revolution.

"Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres." Dryden: Ovid; Metamorphoses viii.

gyre-carling, s. A hag; a weird-sister; an ogress. (Scotch.)

"To hae keepit awa . . . the elves and gyre-carlings." —Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. iii.

gyre (yr as ĭr), v.t. & i. [Gyre, s.]

A. Trans.: To turn round; to whirl; to twist round.

"His stockings loose, Ungartered, and down gyred to his ankle."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 1. (Quarto.)

B. Intrans.: To turn or move in a circle; to revolve.

"The gyring planets, with their starry train."
Drayton: Noah's Flood.

gyre'-fûl, *gyro'-fûl (yr as ïr), a. [Eng gyre; -ful(l).] Abounding in gyres or circles.

"Toe the flame fits gyreful awarding."
Stanyhurst: Conceites, p. 138.

gyr-ĕn-çĕph'-ą-lą (yr as ïr), s. pl. [Gr. γυρόω (guroō) = to round, to bend, and ἐγκέφαλον (engkephalon) = the brain.]

Zool.: The second of the four sub-classes, founded on brain-modifications, into which Owen divides the mammalia, because, "save in very few exceptional cases of the smaller and inferior forms of Quadrumana, the superficies is folded into more or less numerous gyri or convolutions." The Gyrencephela are sub-divided into Unguiculata (Quadrumana, Carnivora); Ungulata (Artiodactyla, Perissodactyla, Proboscidia, and the extinct order Toxodontia); and Mutilata (Sirenia and Cetacea). (Owen: Class. of the Mammalia.)

gyr-ĕn-çĕph'-ą-lāte (yr as ïr), a. [Gyrencephalous.]

gyr-ĕn-çĕph'-ą-lŏus (yr as ïr), a. [Eng., &c. gyrencephal(a); -ous.] Belonging to or having the characteristics of Owen's Gyrencephala (q.v.).

"These limb-characters can only be rightly applied to the gyrencephalous sub-class."—Owen: Class of the Mammalia, p. 35.

gŷr-fâl'-cŏn (l silent), s. [Gerfalcon.]

Ornith.: Falco gyrfalco. It is a large and powerful falcon, used to pursue cranes, wild geese, &c. It is common in the colder parts of North America, and has been found in Britain. Called also the Jerfalcon or Iceland Falcon.

gyr'-ī (yr as ïr), s. pl. [Gyrus.]

gyr-īn'-ĭ-dæ (gyr as gïr), s. pl. [Lat. gyrin(us); fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: Whirligigs; a family of Coleoptera, tribe Pentamera. Two genera and eleven species are British.

gŷr-ī'-nŭs, s. [Lat. gyrinus; Gr. γυρῖνος (gurinos) = a tadpole.]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Gyrinidæ. The antennæ are short and retractile within a cavity in front of the eyes, the second joint with hair-like processes; the remaining seven clavate. Sharp enumerates ten species as British. Gyrinus natator, the Common Whirligig, is often seen in groups performing gyrations on the surface of water. The larva has thirteen segments, including the head, and resembles a centipede.

gyr-ō- (yr as ïr), pref. [Lat. gyrus = a circle, especially one performed by a horse; Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a ring, a circle; γυρός (guros) = round.] Circular, spiral.

gyr-ō-car'-pĕ-æ (yr as ïr), s. pl. [Mod. Lat. gyrocarp(us); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: A tribe of Combretaceæ (Myrobalans). The corolla is wanting, the cotyledons are convolute, the anthers burst by recurved valves.

gyr-ō-car'-pŭs (yr as ïr), s. [Pref. gyro-, and Gr. καρπός (karpos) = fruit.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Gyrocarpeæ (q.v.). When the natives of the Coromandel coast can obtain it, they use it for making catamarans.

gŷr-ō'-dŭs, s. [Pref. gyro-, and Gr. ὀδούς (odous) = a tooth.

Palæont.: A genus of Pycnodont fishes, chiefly from the Oolite.

gŷ-rŏg'-ō-nīte, s. [Pref. gyro-, and Gr. γόνος (gonos) = seed.]

Palæobot.: The sporangium, or seed-vessel, of the flowerless plant-genus Chara. It is very rough and hard, consisting of a membranous nut, covered by an integument, both of which are spirally streaked or ribbed. The integument is composed of fine spiral valves of a quadrangular form. The number of spiral rings varies in different species of Chara, but are constant in each.

gŷ-rō'-ĭd-ăl, a. [Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a circle; εἶδος (eidos) = form, appearance; Eng. adj. suff. -al.]

gyr-ō-lĕp'-ĭs (yr as ïr), s. [Pref. gyro-, and Gr. λεπίς (lepis) = a scale.]

Palæont.: A genus of fossil fishes, order Lepidoidei. Professor Morris enumerates three species—one from the Carboniferous Shales, and the others doubtfully from the Trias. Dr. Ramsay Traquair considers it a doubtful genus, and would cancel the name. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xxxiii. 567.)

gyr'-ŏ-lite (yr as ïr), s. [Gurolite.]

gŷ-rō'-ma, s. [Gr. γυρόω (guroō) = to round, to bend.]

Botany:

1. (Of ferns): The annulus, or ring, in polypodiaceous ferns. (Lindley.)

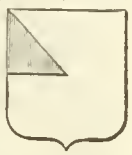
2. (Of lichens): A shield, the surface of which is coursed with sinuous concentric furrows. Called also Trica.

 gyr'-ō-măn-çy (yr as ïr), s. [Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a ring, a circle, and μαντεία (manteia) = prophecy, divination.] A kind of divination performed by walking round in a circle or ring.



OYRON.

gŷr'-ŏn (yr as ïr), s. [Fr.]

Her.: An ordinary, consisting of two straight lines, drawn from any given part of the field, and meeting in an acute angle in the fesse point.

gŷ'-rŏn-nŷ, gī'-rŏn-nŷ, a. [Eng. gyron; -y.]

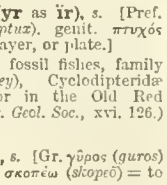
Her.: An epithet applied to a field divided into gyrons or triangular parts of different tinctures.



OYRONNY.

gyr-ŏph'-ŏr-ą (yr as ïr), s. pl. [Pref. gyro-, and Gr. φορός (phoros)= bearing. So called from their convoluted fruit.]

Bot.: A genus of Lichens, order Pyxinei. The species grow on rocks and boulders in the Polar Regions, and furnish the Tripe de Roche on which Aretic voyagers have sometimes been obliged to subsist for a time. Gyrophora deusta and G. pustulata are used in dyeing.

gyr-ō-ptŷch'-ĭ-ŭs (yr as ïr), s. [Pref. gyro-, and Gr. πτύξ (ptux). genit. πτυχός (ptuchos) = a fold, leaf, layer, or plate.]

Palæont.: A genus of fossil fishes, family Glyptodipterini (Huxley), Cyclodipteridæ (Traquair). They occur in the Old Red Sandstone. (Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., xvi. 126.) (Nicholson, &c.)

gyr'-ō-scōpe (yr as ïr), s. [Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a ring, or circle, and σκοπέω (skopeō) = to look at, or behold.]

Astron. Mech.: An instrument constructed by a Frenchman, called M. Foucault, to make the rotation of the earth visible. The principle on which it proceeds is this—that, unless gravity intervene, a rotating body will not alter the direction in which its permanent axis points. In the gyroscope there is a rotating metallic disc, the middle point of whose axis is also the centre of gravity of the machine. By this device the action of gravity is eliminated. The instrument, moreover, is so constructed that the axis of rotation can be made to point to some star in the sky. Then, as the heavy disc whirls round, it is found that the axis continues to point to the moving star, though, in consequence of this, apparently altering its direction relatively to bodies on the earth. If, again, the axis be pointed to the celestial pole, which is fixed, no alteration in its position relative to bodies on the earth takes place. The only feasible explanation of these appearances is that the earth is revolving on its axis. (Airy: Popular Astronomy, 8th ed., pp. 78, 89, 282-285.)

gyr'-ōse (yr as ïr), a. [Lat. gyrus = a circle.]

Botany:

1. Marked with wavy lines.

2. The same as Gyrate (Bot.) (q.v.).

gŷ'-rō-stăt, s. A modification of the gyroscope by Lord Kelvin.

gŷ-rō-stăt'-ĭc, a. Pertaining to the gyrostat or to the principle it illustrates.

gyr'-ŭs (pl. gyr'-ī), (yr as ï), s. [Gr. γῦρος (guros) = a ring, a circle.] [Gyro-.]

1. Anat.: A convolution; as, the angular gyrus of the cerebrum, the gyri of the brain.

2. Bot.: The annulus or ring of a polypodiaceous fern. Called also gyroma (q.v.)

 gȳte, s. [Goat.]

* 1. A goat.

2. A child. (Used in contempt.)

gȳte, a. [Etym. doubtful, probably connected with giddy (q.v.).] Crazy; ecstatic; senselessly extravagant; delirious.

"Edie stopped his hand, exclaiming, 'Lord saket he's gaun gyte!'"—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xliii.

gȳve, * gīve, s. [Wel. gefyn = a fetter, a gyve; Gael. & Ir. geimheal, from Irish, geibhim = to get, to receive, to take.] A fetter a shackle, a chain (generally for the legs).

¶ Obsolete except in the plural.

 gȳve, v.t. [Gyve, s.]

1. Lit.: To fetter, to shackle, to enchain.

2. Fig.: To ensnare.

"Ay, smile upon her do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship."—Shakesp.: Othello, ii. 1.

H.

H, The eighth letter of the English alphabet is commonly classed amongst the consonants, though not strictly such. It is frequently called the aspirate, although other letters are also aspirated in English. Its distinctive or proper sound is that which it has at the beginning of a word, as help, hard, hope, &c. This sound it also has when following w, as in whither, where, in which cases it originally preceded the w, as in Old Eng. hwidir, hwer Its sound is produced far back in the throat by an unchecked emission of the breath, the root of the tongue being very slightly approximated to the back of the throat. H has disappeared from many words, especially before l, n, r: as, Old Eng. hlaf = loaf; Old Eng. hnecca = neck; Old Eng. hring = ring; Old Eng feoh = fee. It has been intruded into some words, as wharf, whelk, whelm. It has become gh in many cases: as, Old Eng. theoh = thigh; Old Eng. heah = high; Old Eng. cniht = knight; in these cases serving only to lengthen the preceding vowel. In some words h has first become gh, and afterwards f: as, Old Eng. genoh = enough; Old Eng. droht = draught, draft. H is commonly joined to other consonants to form digraphs representing sounds for which there are no symbols in the alphabet: as, ch in child, chill; sh in shin, ship; th in this, that, thine; joined with p it forms the sound of f: with g it sometimes forms the sound of f, as in enough, tough; sometimes the digraph is silent, as in bough, plough. The combination rh is found only in words derived from the Greek, where the h represents the rough breathing of the original (ῥ). Ch is common in words derived from the Greek, and in such cases is generally hard, as chemistry, chyle, &c. It sometimes represents the Latin c. Greek κ, as in Eng. horn = Lat. cornu, Gr. κέρας (keras). In Anglo-Saxon it had initially the same sound as at present, as hē = he; medially and finally it had the sound of the German and Scotch ch in loch.

H As a symbol is used:

1. As a numeral for 200, and with a dash over it (H̄) for 200,000.

2. In music for the tone B natural in the German system of nomenclature, the letter B being only used for B flat.

3. In chemistry for the monad element hydrogen.

H As an initial is used for his or her, as in H.R.H. = His (or Her) Royal Highness; for half, as in H.P. = half-pay; for horse, as in H.P. = horse-power.

ha, interj., s., & v.i. [From the sound.]

A. As interj.: An exclamation denoting surprise, wonder, joy, satisfaction, or other audden emotion. When repeated, as ha! ha! it denotes laughter.

"Have you eyes?
Could you on this fair mountain cease to feed,
And batten on this moor? Ha! Have you eyes?"
Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 4.

B. As subst.: An exclamation of surprise, wonder, joy, &c.

"These shrugs, these hum's and ha's."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

C. As verb: To express surprise, wonder, &c.; to hesitate: as, He hummed and ha'd.

ha', s. [See def.] A hall. (Scotch.)

"To look for his honour at the dark hag, and tell him there was a gentleman from the south had arrived at ha'."—Scott: Waverley, ch. ix.

ha'-Bible, s. The great Bible that lies in the hall.

"The big ha'-Bible, ance his father's pride."
Burns: The Cotter's Saturday Night.

haaf, s. [Icel. haf = the sea; Ger. haff = a gulf, a bay.] A fishing ground in Shetland.

haaf-fishing, s. Deep-sea fishing in Shetland for cod, ling, tusk, &c.

haak, s. [HAKE.]

haar, s. [A.S. hâr = hoary, hoar.] A fog, a dull east wind. (Scotch.)

† Haar'-kĭēs, s. [Ger.]

Mineralogy:

1. The name given by Werner to Capillary Pyrites, now called Millerite.

2. The capillary variety of Marcasite.

* hăb, * hăbbe, v.t. [HAVE.]

hab-nab, hab or nab, hob-nob, adv. [HABNAB.]

Ha-băk'-kŭk, s. [Heb. חֲבַקּוּק (Chhabhaqquq) = Habakkuk, meaning an embrace, from חָבַק (chhabhaq) = to embrace.]

1. Scrip. Hist.: The writer of the book described under 2. Nothing is known of his history.

2. Scrip. Canon: The eighth of the Minor Prophets. It was composed when the Chaldean invasion was imminent, probably in the early part of the reign of Jehoiakim, about 610 B.C. The prophet's poetic genius is of a high order, the third chapter of his work being one of the finest compositions in the whole Old Testament. Several passages are quoted in the New Testament, the thrice repeated doctrine that "the just shall live by faith" (Rom. i. 17; Gal. iii. 11; and Heb. x. 58), which excited so powerful an influence on Luther's mind, being derived originally from Hab. ii. 4. Hab. i. 5 is quoted in Acts xiii. 40, 41.

* hăb'-bĕn, v.t. [HAVE.]

hăb'-bĕr, v.i. [Etym. doubtful.] To stutter; to stammer. (Scotch.) hăb'-bĕr, s. [HABBER, v.] A stutter, a stammer.

hā'-bĕ-ăs cor'-pŭs, s. [Lat. = you may have the body.]

1. Law: A writ (more fully habeas corpus ad subjiciendum) directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, subjiciendum, et recipiendum, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the judge or court awarding such writ shall consider in that behalf. It is applicable in all cases where a person in custody claims to be illegally detained, or wrongfully refused bail, or who desires to be removed from one court to another.

"The day of that prorogation, the twenty-sixth of May, 1679, is a great era in our history. For on that day the Habeas Corpus Act received the royal assent. From the time of the Great Charter, the substantive law respecting the personal liberty of Englishmen had been nearly the same as at present: but it had been ineffectious for want of a stringent system of procedure. What was needed was not a new right, but a prompt and searching remedy; and such a remedy the Habeas Corpus Act supplied."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. ii.

2. Hist.: Magna Charta (A.D. 1215) provided that no freeman should be taken or imprisoned but by the lawful judgment of his equals, or by the law of the land. Two old writs, one De homine replegiando and the other Capias in Withernam, designed to guard the liberty of the subject, were found ineffective, especially against the Crown. Chitty mentions also various Acts in force in A.D. 1320 in the title of which the words Habeas corpus occur. For instance, there were the Habeas corpus cum causa (that you have the body with a cause), Habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum (that you have the body to do and receive), &c. More of these were designed to remove cases from court to court. There was one, however, Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum (that you may have the body to answer) destined to become much more important. Early in the reign of Charles I. the judges decided that they could not, upon such a Habeas corpus, bail or deliver a prisoner committed to prison without assigned cause, if he were placed in custody by the special command of the King or by the Judge of the Privy Council. The Petition of Right (A.D. 1628) sought to have this state of things altered, and 16 Charles I., c. 10, accorded the change of law desired, but obstructions to the carrying out of the enactment rendering it less effective than had been expected, the enactment, 31 Charles II., c. 2, called pre-eminently the Habeas Corpus Act, was passed. For its nature, see the extract under No. 1. Only Parliament can suspend the Habeas Corpus Act. It has frequently done so at times of public peril or anxiety. The Act was suspended in Britain during the two Stuart rebellions of 1715 and 1745, also in 1777-79, during the American war, and in 1794, while the first French revolution was at its height. It has been repeatedly suspended in Ireland during periods of rebellion. The protection of habeas corpus is secured to all citizens of the United States by the Constitution, and is also included in the Constitutions of most of the states. It has been suspended in the United States on critical occasions, but it is questioned whether the power of suspension can be exercised by the President, or belongs only to Congress. The law of habeas corpus does not extend to Scotland.

hă-bē'-nă, s. [Lat., = a thong, from habeo = to hold.]

Surg.: A bandage for the purpose of keeping the opposite sides of wounds together.

hăb-ĕ-năr'-ĭ-ă, s. [From Lat. habena = a thong or strap, which the lip sometimes resembles (Hooker & Arnott). Etym. doubtful (Sir Joseph Hooker).]

Bot.: Butterfly orchid; a genus of orchids, tribe Ophreæ, family Gymnadenidæ. It resembles orchids in its general character, but has the glands of the pollen masses free, distant, and exposed. A hundred species are known. Three are British: (1) Habenaria bifolia, a very fragrant plant, generally with two, rarely with three, leaves, and whitish flowers, the spur twice as long as the ovary. It appears from June to August. (2) H. viridis, and (3) H. albida; these are rarer and more local.

hă-bĕn'-dŭm, s. [Lat., = a thing to be held or possessed.]

Law: That clause of a deed which determines what estate or interest is granted by the deed.

* hăb'-ĕn-rў, s. [Etym. doubtful.] An architectural decoration of some sort, but the exact meaning of the word is uncertain.

* hăb'-ĕr-dăsh, a. [HABERDASHER.] Petty, peddling, small.

"He set vp his shop with haberdash ware."
The Wife lapped in Morel's Skin, v. 596.

* hăb'-ĕr-dăsh, v.i. [HABERDASH.] To deal in haberdashery or small wares; to peddle.

"To haberdash in earth's base ware." Quarles.

hăb'-ĕr-dăsh-ĕr, s. [O. Fr. hapertas = a kind of stuff, or, more probably, pedlars' wares, from the bag in which they were carried; cf. Icel. happtask, haftask = a haversack. (Skeat.)]

* 1. A dealer in small wares; a pedlar; a batter.

"Haberdasher, a batter, or seller of hattes; also, a dealer in small wares."—Kersey.

2. A dealer in drapery goods of various descriptions, as ribbons, laces, silks, &c.

hăb'-ĕr-dăsh-ĕr-ĕss, s. [Eng. haberdasher; -ess.] A woman who deals in small wares; a female huckster. (T. Brown: Works, ii. 272.)

hăb'-ĕr-dăsh-ĕrў, s. [Eng. haberdasher; -y.]

1. The wares sold by a haberdasher.

"Making a shoe, or retailing cheese and haberdashery."—Knox: Essays, No. 55.

2. The shop or establishment of a haberdasher.

hăb'-ĕr-dīne, s. [O. Fr. habardeu, probably a corruption of Aberdeen in Scotland, where the fish were prepared.] A dried salted cod.

ha-bĕr'-ĕ fā'-çĭ-ăs pŏs-sĕs-sĭ-ō'-nĕm, phr. [Lat., = you may cause (him) to have possession.]

Law: A writ directed to the sheriff of a county, commanding him to give actual possession to the claimant of land recovered in a suit.

* ha-bĕr'-ġeon, * ha-ber-gyn, * ha-bŭr-i-on, s. [Fr., from O. Fr. haubegeon, hauberjon = a small hauberk, dimin. of hauberc = a hauberk (q.v.).]

1. In old armour a short coat or garment worn over the quilted gambeson or haqueton, HABERGEON, AND DETAIL OF LINKS.

and under the jupon. It was composed either of plate or chain-mail, without sleeves; its purpose was to protect the neck and breast.

"The habergyns that they bears shall nat defende them."—Berners: Froissart; Cronycle, vol. i., ch. cccexiv.

2. Any defence, or protection.

"Clothid in the haburion of feith, and of charite."—Wycliffe: 1 Thess. v.

3. Applied to the elytra of a beetle.

"The scalie beetles with their habergeons
That make a humming murmur as they fly."
Ben Jonson: Sad Shepherd, ii.

* ha-ber-jects, s. [Norm. Fr. habergier = haubergers, a coarse sort of cloth. (Kelham.)] A cloth of a mixed colour (Magna Charta). (Wharton, &c.)

* hăb'-ĭl-ă-ble, a. [Fr. habil(ler) = to clothe; -able.] Capable of being clothed.

"The whole habitable and habilable globe."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. i., ch. v.

* ha-bĭl'-ă-tŏr-ў, a. [Fr. habil(ler) = to clothe; -atory.] Pertaining to habiliments or clothing; wearing clothes.

"Is not the dandy culottic, habilatory, by law of existence?"—Carlyle: Fr. Revol., pt. iii., bk. viii., ch. ii.

* hăb'-ĭle, * ha-ble, a. [Lat. habilis = fit, proper, manageable.] Fit; proper; ready; apt; skilful; handy; qualified.

"Habile and ready to every good work."—Walter.

ha-bĭl'-ĭ-mĕnt, * ha-bil-li-men, * ha-byl-y-ment, s. [Fr. habillement, from habiller = to dress, clothe; originally = to get ready, from Lat. habilis.] [HABILE.] A dress; a garment; an article of dress or clothing. (Usually in the plural.)

"Thus plated in habiliments of war."
Shakesp.: Richard II., i. 3.

* ha-bĭl'-ĭ-mĕnt-ĕd, a. [Eng. habiliment; -ed.] Dressed, clothed, equipped.

* ha-bĭl'-ĭ-tāte, a. [Lat. habilitas = aptness, fitness, from habilis = fit, apt.] [HABILE.] Qualified, entitled.

"They were attainted, and thereby not legall, nor habilitate to serue in Parliament."—Bacon: Henry VII.

* ha-bĭl'-ĭ-tāte, v.t. [HABILITATE, a.] To make fit, to qualify, to entitle.

* ha-bĭl-ĭ-tā'-tion, s. [HABILITATE, a.] A qualification.

"What is habilitation without intention and act?"—Bacon: Essays; Of Kingdoms & Estates.

* ha-bĭl'-ĭ-tў s. [Fr. habilité.] Ability (q.v.).

hăb'-ĭt, * ab-it, * ab-itc, * ha-bite, s. [Fr. habit = a garment, a dress, from Lat. habitus = (s.) a condition, habit, or dress, (a.) held in a certain condition, from habeo = to have or hold.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. A state or condition of the body, either natural or acquired; constitutional temperament of the body.

* 2. Practice, use, usage ; a tendency towards any state or course of action arising from frequent repetition of the same acts.

"How use doth breed a habit in a man."
Shakesp. : Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 4.

3. A peculiar practice, use, or custom, acquired by frequent repetition.

"He hath a better had habit of frowning than the count Palatine."—Shakesp. : Merchant of Venice, i. 2.

4. A way or acting ; a course or line of conduct.

"And a sinful habit differs from a sinful act but as many differ from one, or as a year from an hour."—Bp. Taylor : On Repentance, ch. iv., § 2.

5. Dress, garb, apparel ; specif., the loose dress worn by ladies while riding ; a riding-habit.

"There we stood in our habite, bare-footed and bare-headed."—Hackluyt : Voyages, i. 109.

6. Outward appearance, carriage, deportment.

"Put on a sober habit."
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice, ii. 2.

II. Technically :

1. Metaphysics : Facility in doing and an inclination to do a thing acquired by doing it frequently. Reid and Hartley regard the operations resulting from our acquired dexterities and habits as merely mechanical or automatic ; Dugald Steward allows to each several motion a separate act of conscious volition ; and Sir W. Hamilton accords to the mind a conscious volition over the series, but denies it a consciousness and deliberate volition in regard to each separate movement.

¶ Habit differs from disposition in this, that while both are tendencies to action, disposition properly denotes a natural, habit an acquired tendency.

2. Bot. : The general appearance and mode of growth in a plant, without attention to the details of the subject.

3. Biol. : Changed habits either in man or the lower animals produce an inherited effect. [USE.] (Darwin.)

¶ For the difference between habit and custom, see CUSTOM.

¶ Habit and repute :

Scots Law & Ord. Lang. : Common reputation ; used of anything held and reputed to be true. Thus, in Scotland, one may be by habit and repute a thief, and habit and repute goes a considerable length in proving a Scotch marriage between persons who cohabit, and are by common rumour man and wife. (Bell, vi.)

hăb'-ĭt (1), v.t. [HABIT, s.]

1. To accustom ; to habituate ; to fix by custom or habit.

2. To dress, to clothe, to accoutre ; to array.

"She shall be habited, as it becomes The partner of your bed."
Shakesp. : Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

* hăb'-ĭt (2), v.t. [Lat. habito.] To inhabit, to dwell in.

"Happely you may come to the citie Siberia, or to some other towne or place habited vpon or neer the border of it."—Hackluyt : Voyages, vol. i., p. 435.

* hăb-ĭt-ą-bĭl'-ĭ-tў, s. [Eng. habitable ; -ity.] The quality or state of being habitable ; habitableness.

"To continue the state and habitability thereof throughout all ages."—Derham : Astro-Theology, bk. vi., ch. ii.

hăb'-ĭt-ą-ble, a. [Fr., from Lat. habitabilis, from habito = to inhabit.] That may or can be inhabited or dwelt in ; fit for the residence of human beings.

"Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or, knowing it, pursue."
Dryden : Juvenal, sat. x.

hăb'-ĭt-ą-ble-nĕss, s. [Eng. habitable ; -ness.] The quality or state of being habitable ; fitness or capacity for being inhabited.

"Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the habitableness of the torrid zone."—Ray : On the Creation, pt. i.

* hăb'-ĭt-ą-blў, adv. [Eng. habitab(le) ; -ly.] In a habitable manner ; so as to be inhabited.

* hăb'-ĭt-ăc-le (le as ęl), s. [Lat. habitaculum, from habito = to dwell in.] A place to dwell in ; a residence ; a dwelling-place.

"An holye habitacle vnspotted from all synnes."—Udal : Ephesians ii.

* hăb'-ĭt-ąnce, * hab-ĭt-aunce, s. [Lat. habitans, pr. par. of habito = to inhabit, to dwell in.] A habitation ; a dwelling ; an abode.

"What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
That here in desart hast thine habitance?"
Spenser : F. Q., II. vii. 7

* hăb'-ĭt-ąn-çy, s. [HABITANCE.] The condition or state of an inhabitant ; permanent residence in a town, city, or parish ; inhabitancy.

hăb'-ĭt-ąnt, s. [Fr., pr. par. of habiter ; Lat. habito = to inhabit.]

* 1. An inhabitant ; a dweller ; a resider.

"Drones, oppressive habitants of hives Owe to the labour of the bees their lives."
Cooke : Hesiod, 880.

2. A name applied to the inhabitants of Lower Canada, who are of French origin.

hăb'-ĭ-tāt, s. [Lat. = he, she, or it dwells or lives ; 3rd pers. sing. pres. indic. of habito = to inhabit, to dwell.]

Biol. : The place in which any particular animal lives when wild, or any wild plant grows. When descriptions were in Latin, such expressions as the following, taken from Linnæus's Systema Naturæ, continually occurred :—"Habitat in America" = "It dwells in America." Here "habitat" is the third person singular present indicative of the Latin verb habito, but when the term grew familiar it came to be used also as an English noun.

"Naturalists distinguish between the habitats or geographical localities of species, and the stations or circumstances in which they are found."—S. P. Woodward : Mollusca (ed. 1875), p. 186.

hăb-ĭ-tā'-tion, * hab-ĭ-ta-ci-on, * hab-ĭ-ta-cĭ-oun, s. [Fr. habitation, from Lat. habitatio, from habitatus, pa. par. of habito = to inhabit.]

1. The act of inhabiting or dwelling in a place.

"It [arson] is an offence against that right of habitation, which is acquired by the law of nature as well as by the laws of society."—Blackstone : Commentaries, bk. iv., ch. 16.

2. The state of being inhabited.

"Every star perhaps a world
Of destined habitation ; but thou know'st Their seasons."
Milton : P. L., viii. 622.

3. A place to dwell in ; a place of abode ; a dwelling-place ; a house or other place in which a person or animal lives.

"If any clime perhaps Might yield them easier habitation."
Milton : P. L., ii. 573.

* hăb'-ĭ-tā-tŏr, s. [Lat. from habitatus, pa. par. of habito = to inhabit.] An inhabitant, a dweller.

"The sun's presence is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators."—Browne : Vulgar Errours, bk. vi., ch. x.

hăb'-ĭt-ĕd, a. [Eng. habit ; -ed.]

* 1. Accustomed, habituated.

"O y' are a shrewd one ; and so habited
In taking heed."
Chapman : Homer ; Odyssey v.

2. Dressed ; arrayed ; wearing a habit.

"Or is it Dian habited like her?"
Shakesp. : Titus Andronicus, ii. 3.

hą-bĭt'-ų-ąl, * ha-bit-u-all, a. [O. Fr. habitual : Fr. habituel ; from Low Lat. habitualis ; from Lat. habitus = a habit (q.v.).]

1. Formed or acquired by habit, use, or custom.

"That habitual restlessness of foot."
Wordsworth : On the Naming of Places, vi.

2. Accustomed, usual.

"Now in body, and to dwell
"Habitual habitant."
Milton : P. L., x. 588.

3. According to habit or custom ; done habitually.

"The habitual practice of any one sin or neglect of one known duty."—Paley : Philosophy, bk. i., ch. vii.

4. Caused or formed by use ; rendered permanent or lasting by use ; as, an habitual colour of the skin.

¶ Habitual Criminals Act :

Law : The Act 32 and 33 Vic., c. 99. It gives power to re-arrest ticket-of-leave men, provides for the regulation of criminals, and for the supervision by the police of those convicted of felony, besides making more stringent regulations with regard to the receivers of stolen goods.

hą-bĭt'-ų-ąl-lў, adv. [Eng. habitual ; -ly.] In a habitual manner ; customarily ; by habit, use, or custom.

"A religion whose creed they do not understand, and whose precepts they habitually disobey."—Macaulay : Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

* hą-bĭt'-ų-ąl-nĕss, s. [Eng. habitual ; -ness.] The quality or state of being habitual ; use.

"In the uprightness, the universality, and habitualness of our obedience."—Clarke : Sermons, vol. ii., ser. 144.

* hą-bĭt'-ų-ąr-ў, a. [Eng. habitua(te) ; -ry.] Habitual, customary.

"Nature . . . made habituary by custom."—Hist. of Edward II., p. 2.

hą-bĭt'-ų-āte, v.t. [HABITUATE, a.]

1. To accustom ; to make one accustomed to anything by use or frequent repetition ; to make familiar.

"It is neither reasonable nor possible that men should be saved, who have never habituated themselves to the practice of any virtue."—Clarke : Sermons, vol. iii., ser. 126.

* 2. To settle as an inhabitant in any place.

"Many nobles and gentlemen left their families habituated in these countries."—Sir W. Temple.

* hą-bĭt'-ų-ąte, a. [Lat. habituatus, pa. par. of habituo = to bring into a certain state or condition ; habitus = a state ; Sp. & Port. habituar ; Fr. habituer.]

1. Given to the habitual practice of any thing.

"The habituate sinner hath not yet given over his habit."—Hammond : Works, iv. 679.

2. Inveterate ; become habitual ; formed by habit.

"The constitution of men's bodies may be either native or habituate."—Sir W. Temple.

* hą-bĭt'-ų-ā'-tion, s. [Lat. habituatus, pa. par. of habituo = to bring into a certain state.] The act of habituating ; the state of being habituated.

* hăb'-ĭt-ūde, s. [Fr., from Lat. habitudo, from habilus = a habit (q.v.).]

1. Relation, respect ; state with regard to something else.

"Names being supposed to stand perpetually for the same ideas, and the same ideas having immutably the same habitudes one to another ; propositions concerning any abstract ideas, that are once true, must needs be eternal verities."—Locke : Human Understanding, bk. iv., ch. ii.

2. Familiarity, converse ; frequent intercourse.

"To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company."—Dryden.

3. Long custom, habit, inveterate use.

"His own moral and intellectual habitudes, and those of his age."—J. S. Brewer : English Studies, p. 44.

4. The customary mode or manner of living, acting, &c. ; habits, customs.

"In all the habitudes of life,
The friend, the mistress, and the wife,
Variety we still pursue."
Swift.

5. Aptitude for doing anything.

"It is impossible to gain an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice."—Dryden.

hą-bĭt'-ų-ê, s. [Fr., pa. par. of habituer = to accustom.] One who habitually frequents any place, especially a place of amusement or recreation.

* hăb'-ĭt-ūre, s. [Prob. a misprint for habitude (q.v.).]

"Without much ado or far-fetched habiture."—Marston.

* ha-ble, a. [HABILE.] Apt, able, competent.

* ha-ble, v.t. [HABLE, a.] To make fit or suitable ; to suit, to fit, to accommodate.

"To thentent the said weorkes might be the better habled to the readers."—Udal : Actes. (Dedic.)

* ha-ble-ness, s. [Eng. hable ; -ness.] Fitness, capacity, competence.

"I cannot of my selfe promesse any hablenes to take suche a province in hande."—Udal : Luke. (Pref.)

* hăb'-năb, * hŏb'-nŏb, adv. [Eng. hab = have ; nab = ne hab = have not.]

1. Without order ; promiscuously.

"Although set down habnab at random."
Butler : Hudibras, pt. ii., c. iii.

2. By hook or by crook ; by fair means or foul.

"Philautus determined habnab to send his letters."—Lilly : Euphues, p. 109.

hą-brăn'-thŭs, s. [Gr. ἁβρός (habros) = graceful, pretty, and ἄνθος (anthas) = flower.]

Bot. : A genus of Amaryllids, tribe Amarylleæ. It consists of pretty South American bulbous plants, about twenty species of which have been introduced into green-houses.

hą-brŏc'-ŏ-mą, s. [Gr. ἁβρός (habros) = graceful, pretty, and κόμη (komē) = hair.]

Zool. : A genus of rodent animals, family Hystricidæ. Mr. Darwin discovered two species, Habrocoma Cuvieri and H. Bennetti, near Valparaiso.

hăb-rō-mā'-nĭ-ą, s. [Gr. ἁβρός (habros) = pretty, pleasant, and μανία (mania) = madness.] A form of madness in which the delusions are pleasant and gay.

hăb'-rō-nēme, a. [Gr. ἁβρός (habros) = graceful, delicate, and νῆμα (nema) = yarn.]

Min.: Having the form of fine threads. (Webster, ed. 1848.)

hăb-zĕl'-ĭ-ą, s. [From habzeli, its native name.]

Bot.: A genus of Anonaceæ, tribe Xylopeæ. It is sometimes made a synonym of Xylopia. The dried fruits of Habzelia æthiopicum, formerly called Piper æthiopicum, constitute the Negro-pepper, Guinea pepper, or Ethiopian pepper of Western Africa. Those of H. aromatica, a native of woods in Guyana, are used by the negroes as a condiment. H. undulata, and perhaps others of the genus, have the same pungent qualities.

hăc-çō'-ĭ-tў, s. [Lat. hæc = this, and Eng. suff. -ity.] The quality or state of being a certain thing; the relation of individuality conceived by the schoolmen as a positive attribute or essence.

hăçh'-ĕl, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A sloven; a dirty, untidy person.

hăçh'-ūre, s. [Fr., from hacher = to hack.]

Engrav., &c.: Short lines employed to represent half-tints and shadows, as in representing mountains on maps. Simple hachures are those in which the lines, whether curved or straight, are all parallel; double hachures are those in which the lines cross each other.

hăçh'-ūre, v.t. [Hachure, s.] To cover or mark with hachures.

ha-cĭ-ĕn'-dą (c as th), s. [Sp.; O. Sp. facienda, from Lat. facienda, pl. of faciendum = a thing to be done; facio = to do.] An estate; an isolated farm or farm-house; an establishment in the country for stock-raising, mining, manufacturing, &c.

hăck (1), hak-ken, v.t. & i. [A.S. haccan: cogn. with Dut. hakken; Dan. hakke; Sw. hacka; Ger. hacken.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To cut irregularly and into small pieces; to chop, to notch; to mangle by repeated blows of a cutting instrument; to cut unskilfully.

"Nor the hacked helmet, nor the dusty field."
Addison: Ovid; Metamorphoses iii.

2. To cut a jag or channel in a tree, for the purpose of bleeding it.

3. To kick a player's shins at football.

II. Fig.: To mangle in uttering; to chop up.

"Let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 1.

B. Intransitive:

1. To cut or chop away at anything.

"The man, not at all discouraged, fell to cutting and hacking."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. i.

2. To kick on the shins at football.

hăck (2), v.t. & i. [Hack (2), s.]

A. Trans.: To let out for hire: as, To hack a horse.

B. Intransitive:

1. Lit.: To be let out for hire; to be used commonly.

2. To be common or vulgar; to turn prostitute.

 hăck (3), v.i. [Hawk, v.] To try to bring up phlegm.

hăck (1), s. [Hack, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. An irregular cut; a notch; a dent.

"Look you what hacks are on his helmet."—Shakesp. Troilus & Cressida, i. 2.

 2. A blunt axe.

3. A large pick used by miners in breaking stone.

4. A tool for cutting jags or channels in trees for the purpose of bleeding them. Pines are hacked for turpentine; maples tapped for sap, or sugar-water as Western farmers prefer to call it.

 5. A hesitation or stammering in speaking.

"He speaks with so many hacks and hesitations."—Dr. H. More.

II. Football: A kick on the shins.

"We all wear white trousers to show 'em we don't care for hacks."—T. Hughes: Tom Brown's School-days, pt. i., ch. v.

hăck-log, s. A chopping-block.

hăck (2), s. & a. [An abreviation of hackney (q.v.); Sp. haca.]

A. As substantive:

I. Literally:

1. A horse kept for hire; a hackney.

2. A horse kept for rough and every-day riding.

 3. A hackney carriage.

"I was the other day driving in a hack thro' Gerard Street."—Steele: Spectator, No. 510.

II. Figuratively:

1. A writer who hires himself out for any kind of literary work; a literary drudge; a poor writer.

"Here lies poor Ned Purdon, from misery freed,
Who long was a bookseller's hack."
Goldsmith: Epitaph to Edward Purdon.

 2. A procuress; a prostitute.

B. As adj.: Hired; mercenary; worn out or used up like a horse let for hire; hackneyed; poor.

"Hack preachers employed in the service of defaulters and absentees."—Wakefield. (Ogilvie.) hack-barrow, s. A barrow on which bricks are conveyed from the moulder's table to the drying ground, where they are sun-dried, and temporarily covered with a thatching of straw to protect them from rain. Covered sheds are sometimes used.

hack-file, s.

Lock-smith.: A coarse slitting-file.

hack-hammer, s. A hammer terminating at each end in an obtuse chisel-edge, kept in order on the grindstone. It is used as the peen of an ordinary hammer, but is narrower, and therefore more local and energetic in its effects. The hack-hammer for reducing unequal protuberances on grindstones is shaped like an adze and has a short handle. When the grindstone has worn unequally, it becomes necessary to dress it, and the high places, being marked, are hacked by oblique and crossing chequer lines, which cause it, on the next grinding operation, to wear more at these points, and thus restore equality.

hack-iron, s.

Min.: A miner's pick; a hack.

hack-saw, s. A frame saw of moderate set, tolerably close teeth, and good temper; used in sawing metal. Such a saw is used to cut the nicks in heads of screws, in cutting off bolts, &c.

hăck (3), s. [A doublet of hatch (q.v.); A.S. haca = the bolt of a door; Dut. hek = a fence or rail; Sw. häck = a coop, a rack; Dan. hæk, hække = a rack.] A kind of frame or grating of various kinds, as—

1. A drying-frame for fish; a flake.

2. A pile of bricks arranged in regular order for drying, previous to building up in the clamp or kiln for burning.

3. Wood bars in the tail-race of a mill.

4. A dung-fork.

5. A feeding-rack for cattle.

hăck'-ą-mōre, s. A horse-hair or raw-hide halter with a nose-piece that can be tightened so as to be used for the head-piece of a bridle. (U. S.) hăck'-bĕr-rў, s. [Eng. hack, and berry.]

Bot.: Two species of Celtis, C. crassifolia, and C. occidentalis. [Celtis.]

 hăck'-bŭt (1), s. [Ger. hackbret.] An old name for the dulcimer.

 hăck'-bŭt (2),  hag-but, * haque-but, s. [O. Fr. haquebute, a corruption of haakbus, haeckbusse, from haak = a hook, and bus = a gun-barrel.] An arquebuse (q.v.).

"With hackbut bent, my secret stand, Dark as the purposed deed, I chose."
Scott: Cadyow Castle.

 hăck'-bŭt-tēr, * hăck-bŭt-teër, s. [Eng. hackbut; -er.] A soldier armed with a hackbut.

"Sundrie other capteins, hauing vnder their charge two hundred hackbutters."—Holinshed: Hist. of Scotland (an. 1544).

hăcked, pa. pa., & a. [Hack, v.] hacked-quartz, s.

Min.: A variety of quartz.

hăck'-eē, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Zool.: A name given in the United States to the North American squirrel.

 hacke-naic, s. [Hackney.]

hăck'-ĕr, s. [Eng. hack (1), v.; -er.]

1. A cutting tool used for chopping up or hacking wood.

2. The same as Hack (1), s., 1. 4 (q.v.).

hăck'-ĕr-ў, s. [Hind. chhakra = a cart.] A rude East Indian two-wheeled cart, drawn by bullocks.

hăck'-ĭng, pr. par., a., & s. [Hack (1), v.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adjective:

1. Cutting, notching.

"Still his struggling force he rears,
'Gainst hacking brands and stabbing spears."
Scott: Rokeby, vi. 23.

2. Short and interrupted; wearing out; troublesome: as, a hacking cough.

C. As substantive:

I. Ord. Lang.: The act of cutting, notching, or mangling.

II. Technically:

1. Masonry:

(1) The division of a portion of a course of stones into two of smaller height when the larger stones do not hold out.

(2) A process employed in dressing the faces of rough grindstones by the use of a hack-hammer, an implement resembling an adze. In some cases the faces of metallic or wooden polishing-wheels are similarly treated, a sharper implement being used.

2. Brick-mak.: The piling of moulded bricks to dry.

Hacking-out knife or tool: A glazier's knife for cutting out the old putty from the fillister of a sash, in reglazing.

hăc'-kle, v.t. [Heckle, v.]

1. To dress or comb flax or hemp.

2. To tear asunder.

"The other divisions of the kingdom being hackled and torn to pieces."—Burke: French Revolution.

hăc'-kle, s. [Hackle, v.]

1. A board set with sharp steel spikes for combing or pulling out hemp or flax to dispose the fibres in parallelism, and to separate the tow and harda from the finer fibre. The teeth are of steel from one to two inches in length, and very sharp. They are arranged in quincuncial order, upon a board. The lock of flax is seized by the middle, and one end is thrown over the teeth and drawn through. One end being hackled, the other end is turned to the comb and similarly treated. This separates the ribbons of fibre, removes any remaining traces of the boon or cellular matter, and divides the fibre into two portions, the short and the long, the tow and the line. The process is repeated on a fine hackle whose teeth are more numerous and thickly set. The produce is from forty to sixty per cent. of fine flax or line.

2. Any flimsy substance unspun: as, raw silk, &c.

3. A long shining feather on a cock's neck.

4. A fly for angling, dressed with a feather from a cock's neck.

"This month also a plain hackle, or palmer fly, made, with a rough black body, either of black spaniel's fur, or the whirl of an ostrich feather; and the red hackle of a capon, over all, will kill, and, if the weather be right, make very good sport."—Walton: Angler, pt. iii., ch. vii.

hackle-bar, s. One of the gills or spikes over which the lock of flax or hemp is thrown and drawn to lay the fibres parallel and comb out the refuse.

hăck'-lĕr, s. [Eng. hackl(e); -er.] One who hackles or dresses flax or hemp; a flax-dresser; a heckler.

hăck'-lĕt, hăg'-lĕt, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A kind of sea-bird.

"Gulls, haglets, petrels swim, dive, and hover around."—Emerson: English Traits, ch. ii.

hăck'-lў, a. [Eng. hack; -ly.]

1. Ord. Lang.: Broken as though hacked or chopped.

2. Min. (Of fracture): Breaking with a peculiarly uneven surface, as, for instance, with that of pure copper when fractured.

hăck'-mą tăck, s. [North American Indian.]

Bot.: The American Larch, or Tamarack Tree, Larix americana.

hăck'-neў, * hack-e-neie, * hacke-ney, * hak-nay, * hak-ney, * haque-naie, s. & a. [O. Fr. hequenée, hacquenée, from O. Dut. hackenyee = a hackney; Fr. haquenée; Sp. hacanea; Ital. chinea (from occhinea.) Prob. from Dut. hakken = to hack, chop, mince, and negge = a nag.]

* A. As substantive:

I. Literally:

1. A horse kept for riding or driving; a hack; a nag; a pad.

"His hakeney, which that was al pomeles gris."
Chaucer: C. T., 16,027.

2. A horse kept for hire.

"To bestride, Sursingled to a galled hackney's hide?"
Bp. Hall, bk. iv., sat. 6.

3. A carriage or coach kept for hire; a hackney-carriage. They were introduced about A.D. 1650. (Pepys: Diary, Dec. 14, 1668.)

II. Figuratively:

1. A drudge; a person kept for drudgery or dirty work; a hack-writer.

"Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new pension'd sycophant, pretend
To break my windows?" Pope: Ep. to Sat. 140.

2. A prostitute.

B. As adjective:

I. Lit.: Let out or kept for hire; kept for common use. [HACKNEY-COACH.]

"There they use to put out their women to hire as we do here hakney horses."—Hackluyt: Voyages, i. 400.

* II. Figuratively:

1. Much used; trite; common; commonplace; poor.

"You are a generous author; I a hackney scribler."
—Pope: To Dr. Parnell.

2. Mean; low.

"And I must serve some hackney job."
Lloyd: From Hanbury's Horse.

3. Prostitute.

hackney-carriage, s. A carriage or coach kept for hire; a hackney-coach.

hackney-coach, s. A hackney-carriage.

hackney-coachman, s. The driver of a hackney-coach.

"What charms can a London carman, chair-man, hackney-coachman, fish-woman, and all the numerous tribes of the lowest class, find in an English meeting or a church?"—King: Essays, No. 149.

* hackney-lady, s. A prostitute, a mistress.

"That is no more than every lover Does from his hackney-lady suffer."
Butler: Hudibras, pt. iii., c. i.

hăck'-neў, v.t. [HACKNEY, s.]

* 1. To carry in a hackney-carriage.

"Is hackneyed home unlacqueyed."
Cowper: Task, ii. 652.

* 2. To make common or accustomed; to use much.

"So common, long hackneyed in the eyes of men."
Shakesp.: 1 Henry IV., iii. 2.

3. To make trite, common, or commonplace. (Obsolete except in the pa. par.)

* 4. To wear out.

"Men and horses and leather being hackneyed, jaded, and worn out upon the errand of some contentious and obstinate bishop."—Marvell: Works, iii. 127.

hăck'-neўed, hăck'-nĭed, pa. par. or a. [HACKNEY, v.]

A. As pa. par.: (See the verb).

B. As adj.: Trite, common, commonplace.

"Hackneyed stories of a sensational kind, to meet the public demand for what is called popular science."—Lindsay: Mind in the Lower Animals, i. 20.

* hăck'-neў-măn, * hake-ney-man, s. [Eng. hackney, and man.] One who keeps or lets hackneys for hire.

"To the declaration wherof Vergille leaueth farre behynde hym all breders, hakneymenne, and skorsers."—Sir T. Elyot: Governour, bk. i., ch. x.

* hăck'-stẽr, s. [Eng. hack; suff. -ster (q.v.).] A bully, a ruffian, a bravo.

"He repressed those robbers and hacksters, he visited and surveyed the foresayd prisons."—P. Holland: Suetonius, p. 54.

* hacque'-tŏn (que as k), s. [ACTON.]

hăd, pret. & pa. par. [HAVE.]

* had-I-wist, interj. O that I had known! An interjectional exclamation of regret for something which has happened unexpectedly.

"There's no regard nor feare of had I wist."
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 160.

hâd, v.t. [HOLD, v.] To hold. (Scotch.) hăd'-dęn, had-din, s. [A corruption of HOLDING, s. (q.v.).] A holding; a place of residence; a possession; means of support.

hăd'-dęn, pa. par. [HAD, v.] Holden, kept.

"Ow, man! ye should hae hadden cassel to Kipplettringan."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. i.

* hăd'-dẽr, s. [A corruption of heather (q.v.).] Heath.

"They lay upon the ground covered with skins, as the Redshanks doe on hadder."—Burton: Anat. of Melancholy, p. 542.

hăd'-dĭn, hâud'-ĭng, s. [HADDEN, s.] hăd'-dŏck, * had-dock, had-doke, s. [Of unknown origin. The suff. -ock is perhaps dimin.; the base had- has some similarity to Gr. γάδος (gados) = a cod. Corrupt. of A.S. hacod (?). (Skeat.).]

Ichthy.: A fish, Morrhua æglefinus, of the same genus as the cod, the coal-fish, and the whiting. [MORRHUA.] The back is pale brown, the lateral line black, the under parts silvery white; there is a black, and sometimes greatly extended, patch on the side behind the pectoral fins; the fins and tail are grayish, the dorsal ones darker than the others. It resembles the cod, and, like it, is a valuable food-fish. It is abundant on the Atlantic coast of the United States and Europe.

"On each side, beyond the gills, is a large black spot; superstition assigns this mark to the impression Saint Peter left with his finger and thumb, when he took the tribute out of the mouth of a fish of this species, which has been continued to the whole race of haddocks, ever since that miracle."—Fennant: British Zoology; The Haddock Cod Fish.

hāde, s. [Etym. doubtful, perhaps from Ger. halde = a declivity.]

* 1. Ord Lang.: A ridge; a cliff.

"And on the lower leas, as on the higher hades,
The dainty clover grows."
Drayton: Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

2. Mining:

(1) The dip, inclination, or slope of a vein or stratum. The angle it bears to the horizon. The underlay.

(2) The steep descent of a shaft.

hāde, v.i. [HADE, s.]

Min.: A term applied to a vein in a mine when it deviates from the vertical or perpendicular line of descent.

ha-dē'-na, s. [Gr. ἀδηνής (hadēnēs) = ignorant, inexperienced (Agassiz); from Ἀΐδης (Haidēs), Ἀδης (Hadēs) = the nether world. Named from the colour of some of the species. (McNicoll.)]

Entom.: The typical genus of the family Hadenidæ (q.v.), Hadena oleracea is the Bright-line Brown eye: H. pisi, the Broom-moth; and H. rectilinea the Clouded Brocade. (Stainton.) ha-dĕn'-ĭ-dæ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. haden(a); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -idæ.]

Entom.: A family of Moths, group Nocturna. The antennæ are somewhat long, the abdomen more or less crested, the wings in repose form a very sloping roof, the sub-terminal line often indented. Caterpillar long, generally feeding exposed. Known British species, forty-six. (Stainton.)

Hā'-dēş, s. [Gr. ἄιδης, ἄδης (haidēs, hadēs), from ἀ, priv., and ἰδεῖν (idein) = to see.]

1. Class. Myth.: In Homer the Greek word Ades figures as the name of a god, in large measure corresponding to the Roman Pluto. After Homer it becomes a place to which the dead go. Both Greeks and Romans supposed the infernal regions to be in the centre of the earth. To enter these, in the Roman opinion, the river Styx had to be crossed by the spirits of the dead, Charon, the ferryman, for a very small sum, rowing the boat. If, by any misfortune, the body had been unburied, the soul had to wander a hundred years on the banks of the Styx before it was taken across. Pluto was the king of the spirit world, Rhadamanthus its most noted judge.

2. Jewish belief: The place of the dead; the Hebrew שְׁאוֹל (shcol), which occurs sixty-five times in the Hebrew Bible, and in sixty-one of them is rendered in the Septuagint Ἀδης (Hadēs). In the Authorised Version of the English Bible it is translated in the Old Testament thirty-one times by "grave," thirty-one times by "hell," and three times by "pit." The ancient Hebrews conceived of Sheol as situated below, so that souls had to "go down" or descend before entering it (Num. xvi. 30, 33; Job xvii. 16; Psalm lv., 17; Prov. i. 12; Isa. xiv. 15, xxxviii. 18) as "very deep" (Job xi. 8), as "dark" (x. 21—22); as having different floors or stories (Ps. lxxxvi. 13, lxxxviii. 6), as having "gates" (Isa. xxxviii. 10) and "bars" (Job xvii. 16), as inhabited by the souls of those who have already died (Isa. xiv 9), &c.

3. Christian doctrine: Ἀδης (Hadēs) is one of the two words rendered in the Authorised Version by the ambiguous term "hell" (q.v.). Expressions, most of them obviously figurative, used of Hades represent it as situated beneath (Matt. xi. 23; Luke x. 15), as having gates (Matt. xvi. 18) with keys in the hand of Christ (Rev. i. 18), and as having in a portion of it souls in torment (Luke xvi. 23).

"And in Hades he lifted up his eyes, being in torments."—Luke xvi. 23. (Revised Version.)

hād'-ĭng, s. [HAGE, v.]

Min.: A dip or inclination of a vein from the perpendicular or vertical line of descent.

ha'-dĭs, s. [Arab = new, newly-made.] Traditions, particularly with regard to the sayings and doings of Mohammed. These traditions are divided into two classes: (1) The sayings of the prophet, and (2) the sayings brought by the angel Gabriel from heaven. (Catafago.)

hădj, s. [HAJ.]

hădj'-eē, hădj'-ĭ, s. [HAJEE, HAJ.]

Hăd'-lĕy, s. [John Hadley, F.R.S., who in 1781 described the instrument called after him, the real inventors of which, however, are said to have been Newton and Godfrey.]

Hadley's quadrant or sextant, s

Optics: An instrument for measuring altitudes. (Used principally at sea.) [QUADRANT, SEXTANT.]

hăd-rē-sâu'-rŭs, s. [Gr. ἁδρός (hadros) = thick, stout, large, and σαῦρος (sauros) = a lizard.]

Palæont.: A genus of Dinosaurian reptiles, found in the Cretaceous rocks of North America, and representing the Iguanodon of the Old World.

hădsch'-ў, s. [HASHISH.]

hāe, s. [HAE, v.] Possession, property. (Scotch.) hāe, v.t. [HAVE, v.]

hæ-mą-, hæ-măt-, hæm-ą-tō-, pref. [Lat., from Gr. αἷμα (haima), genit. αἵματος (haimatos) = blood.] Consisting of or containing blood; resembling blood in colour or any other respect. [HEMA-.]

hæ'-mą-chrōme, s. [Pref. hæma-, and Gr. χρῶμα (chrōma) = colour.] [HEMACHROME.]

hæ-mą-dŷn-ą-mŏm'-ĕ-tẽr, s. [Pref. hæma-, and Eng. dynamometer (q.v.).] An instrument for ascertaining the force of the circulation of the blood; hæmatometer, hæmatodynamometer. [SPHYGMOMETER.]

hæ'-mą-gŏgue, s. [Pref. hæma-, and Gr. ἀγωγός (agōgos) = leading, guiding, attracting, evoking; ἄγω (agō) = to lead, to draw out.]

Phar.: A medicine proposed by Nicolaus Myrepsus for promoting the menstrual and hæmorrhoidal discharges; any medicine for those purposes.

hæ'-mal, a. [Gr. αἷμα (haima) = blood; Eng. suff. -al.]

Anat.: Of or belonging to the blood; the blood-vessels or the circulatory system.

hæmal-arch, s.

Anat.: An arch formed by the projection forward of the ribs and the sternum to protect the heart, &c.

hæmal-canal, s.

Anat.: A canal surrounding the central concavity of a vertebra. (Owen.) hæmal-cavity, s.

Anat.: The cavity containing the heart, the great arteries, &c., with the respiratory and digestive apparatus.

hæmal-flexure, s.
Anat.: The bending towards the heart.

hæmal-septum, s.
Anat.: A septum in man partly constituting the linea alba, and elsewhere separated into two, as an investment of the visceral cavity forming the transversalis, iliac, and pelvic fasciæ. (Quain.) hæmal-spine, s.

Anat.: A spine at one extremity of an ideal typical vertebra, that at the other end being the neural spine. (Owen.)

hæ-mal-ō'-pĭ-ą, s. [Gr. αἱμάλωψ (haimalōps), as subst. = a mass of blood; as adj., looking like clotted blood, αἱμαλεός (haimaleos) = bloody, blood-red, and ὄψ (ops) = the eye.]
Pathol.: An affection of the eye, in which everything appears of a red colour.

hæ-măn'-thŭs, s. [Pref. hæma-, and Gr. ἄνθος (anthos) = a blossom, a flower.]
Bot.: A genus of Amaryllidaceæ, tribe Amarylleæ. The Hottentots are said to poison their arrows by dipping them in the viscid juice of the roots of Hæmanthus toxicarius.

hæ-mă-pŏph'-ўs-ĭs (pl. hæ-mą-pŏph'-ў-sēş), s. [Pref. hæm(a)-, and Eng., &c. apophysis (q.v.).]
Comp. Anat.: One of two side portions of a typical vertebra, which are situated between the centrum and the hæmal spine (q.v.).

hæ-mą-stăt'-ĭc, a. & s. [HEMASTATIC.]

hæ-mą-stăt'-ĭcs, s. pl. [HEMASTATIC, B. 2.]

hæ-măt'-, pref. [HÆMA-.]

hæ'-mą-teĭn, s. [Eng., &c. hæmatin, with e inserted simply to distinguish it from that word (?).]
Chem.: $C_{16}H_{12}O_6$. A substance obtained by exposing a solution of hæmatoxylin in ammonia to the air, and decomposing the ammonium salts thus formed by acetic acid. It is a red-brown powder, which gives a blue solution when dissolved in potash.

hæ-mą-tĕm'-ĕ-şĭs, s. [Pref. hæmat- (q.v.), and Gr. ἔμεσις (emesis) = vomiting.]
Pathol.: Blood effused into the stomach, and thence rejected, differing thus from hæmoptysis, hæmorrhage from the lungs (q.v.). It is more frequent in later life than hæmoptysis, but may occur in the acute perforating ulcers of the stomach in young women. It is frequently associated with cancer, and other idiopathic diseases, but is also traumatic, especially from external violence.

hæ-măt'-ĭc, a. & s. [Gr. αἱματικός (haimatikos) = full of blood.]
A. As adj.: Of or pertaining to the blood; sanguine.
B. As substantive:
Medicine:
1. Sing.: A medicine calculated to change the condition of the blood.
2. Pl.: The branch of medical science which treats of the blood.

hæ'-mąt-ĭn, s. [Pref. hæmat-, and suff. -in. (Chem.)]
Chem.: $C_{34}H_{34}FeN_4O_5$. Hæmatosin(?). The colouring matter of the blood. It contains nearly 9 per cent. of iron. Obtained by the action of dilute acids, alkalis, and hæmoglobin, which is decomposed into hæmatin, albuminoids, and fatty acids. Hæmatin is a dark powder, but can be obtained in crystals.

hæ-mą-tĭn'-ĭc, a. [Eng. hæmatin; -ic.] Med.: An agent that augments the number of red corpuscles or the hæmatin of the blood. (Dunglison.)

hæ-măt'-ĭn-ōne, s. [Gr. αἱμάτινος (haimatinos) = bloody; Eng. suff. -one.] A red glass known to the ancients, and used for mosaics, ornamental vases, &c.; it is mentioned by Pliny, and occurs frequently in the ruins of Pompeii. Its fine red colour, intermediate between red-lead and vermilion, is due to red oxide of copper, and is completely destroyed by fusion. Hæmatinone is opaque, harder than common glass, has a conchoidal fracture, and a sp. gr. of 3·5. It contains no tin, and no colouring matter, except cupreous oxide. (Watts: Dict. Chem., iii. 3.)

hæ-măt-ĭn-ūr'-ĭ-ą, s. [Gr. αἱμάτινος (haimatinos) = bloody, and οὖρον (ouron) = urine.]
Pathol.: Urine containing colouring matter and the albumen of blood, but without fibrin or corpuscles.

hæ'-mą-tīte, s. [HEMATITE.]

hæ-mą-tō-, pref. [HÆMA-.]

hæ'-mą-tō-çēle, s. [HEMATOCELE.]

hæ-mą-tō-cŏc'-cŭs, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Mod. Lat. coccus (q.v.).]
Bot.: A genus of Confervaceæ, sub-order Palmelleæ, tribe Protococcidie. Hæmatococcus salinus is one of two confervas which impart a crimson colour to salt-water tanks adjacent to the Mediterranean, and H. Noltii crimsons the marshes of Sleswick. (Lindley.)

hæ-mą-tŏc'-ŏn-īte, s. [Pref. hæmato-; Gr. κόνις (konis) = dust, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]
Min.: A variety of Calcite, coloured blood-red, or brownish-red, by red oxide of iron. Constitutes the Rosso Antico of Italy.

hæ-mą-tŏc'-rў-ą, s. pl. [Pref. hæmato- (q.v.), and Gr. κρυός (cruos) = cold.]
Zool.: The name given by Sir Richard Owen to the primary section of the Vertebrata characterized by having the blood cold. It contains three classes—Reptiles, Amphibia, and Fishes. [HÆMATOTHERMA.]

hæ-mą-tŏc'-rў-al, a. & s. [Mod. Lat. hæmatocry(a) (q.v.); Eng., &c. suff. -al.]
Zoology:
A. As adj.: Of or belonging to the Hæmatocrya, or any one of them.
B. As subst.: A cold-blooded vertebrate. (Owen.)

hæ-mą-tō-crўs'-tal-līne, s. [HÆMATOGLOBIN.]

hæ-mą-tō'-dēş, s. [Gr. αἱματώδης (haimatōdēs) = looking like blood, blood-red; Fr. hématode.] Surg.: A kind of cancer of which the tissue is soft, fungous, and ends in hæmorrhage.

hæ-mą-tō-dў-ną-mŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Eng. dynamometer (q.v.).] The same as HÆMADYNAMOMETER (q.v.).

hæ-mą-tō-glŏb'-ų-līne, s. [HÆMOGLOBIN.]

hæ'-mąt-ŏĭd, a. [Pref. hæmat- (q.v.), and Gr. εἶδος (eidos) = appearance.]
Med., &c.: Having the appearance of blood. Thus there is a hæmatoid cancer. [HÆMATODES.]

hæ-mąt-ŏĭd'-ĭn, hæ-mąt-ŏĭd'-īne, s. [Eng. hæmatoid; suff. -in, -ine (Chem.) (q.v.).]
Chem.: A crystalline substance formed by the decomposition of hæmatin.

hæ-mąt-ŏl'-ō-ğў, hæ-mąt-ō-lō'-ğĭ-ą, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Gr. λόγος = a discourse.]
Med.: A treatise on the blood.

hæ-măt'-ō-ma, s. [Pref. hæma-, and Gr. τομή (tomē) = a cutting, a separation.]
Pathol.: A rare morbid affection of the lungs.

hæ-mąt-ŏm'-ĕ-tĕr, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Gr. μέτρον (metron) = a measure.] The same as HÆMADYNAMOMETER (q.v.).

hæ-mąt-ō-pō-dī'-næ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. hæmatopus, genit. hæmatopod(os); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -inæ.] Ornith.: Oyster-catchers; a sub-family of Charadriidæ (Plovers).

hæ-măt'-ō-pŭs, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Gr. πούς (pous) = a foot.]
Ornith.: The typical genus of the sub-family Hæmatopodinæ. The bill is long, very straight, contracted in the middle, and wedge-shaped at the tip; the feet are three-toed. Hæmatopus ostralegus is a British bird, the Oyster-catcher (q.v.).

hæ-măt'-ō-ş̆ĭn, s. [HÆMATIN.]

hæ-mą-tō'-sĭs, s. [Gr. αἱμάτωσις (haimatōsis) (see def.), from αἱματόω (haimatoō) = to make bloody, to stain with blood, to make into blood; Fr. hématose.]
Physiology:
1. The conversion of chyle into blood.
2. The conversion of venous into arterial blood.

hæ-mąt-ō-stā'-phĭs, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Gr. σταφίς (staphis) = a dried grape, a raisin.]
Bot.: A genus of West African Anacardiaceæ, having grape-like eatable fruits.

hæ-mąt-ō-thĕr'-mą, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Gr. θερμός (thermos) = hot.]
Zool.: The name given by Sir Richard Owen to the primary section of the Vertebrata, characterized by having the blood warm. It contains two classes, Mammalia and Birds. [HÆMATOCRYA.]

hæ-mąt-ō-thĕr'-mal, a. & s. [Mod. Lat. hæmatotherm(a); Eng., &c. suff. -al.]
Zoology:
A. As adj.: Of or belonging to the hæmatotherma (q.v.).
B. As subst.: A warm-blooded vertebrate. (Owen.)

hæ-mąt-ŏx'-ў-lĭn, † hæ-mąt-ŏx'-ў-līne, s. [Mod. Lat. hæmatoxyl(on); suff. -in, -ine (Chem.).]
Chem.: $C_{16}H_{14}O_6$. Also called hematin. A crystalline substance contained in logwood (Hæmatoxylon Campechianum). It is soluble in hot water, alcohol, and ether. It crystallizes in pale yellow prisms, containing three molecules of water. It is the colouring matter of logwood. Hæmatoxylin, fused with caustic potash, yields pyrogallic acid.

hæ-mąt-ŏx'-ў-lŏn, s. [Pref. hæmato-, and Gr. ξύλον (xulon) = wood.]
Bot.: A genus of leguminous plants, sub-order Cæsalpinieæ, tribe Leptolobieæ. Hæmatoxylon Campechianum is a tree of about 40 feet high, with pinnate leaves and racemes of yellow flowers, which grows in the Bay of Campeachy in Yucatan, whence it has been introduced into the West Indies. It furnishes logwood, used as a dye.

hæ-mąt-ō-zō'-ą, s. pl. [Pref. hæmato- (q.v.), and Gr. ζῶα (zōa), pl. of ζῶον (zōon) = a living being, an animal.] Pathol.: Living creatures alleged to have been found in the blood. From the time of Pliny instances have been brought forward of such animals having been found in the blood. Most of these seem to have been founded on erroneous investigations, though some cases of modern date seem to have been established. Thus Bilharz discovered in Egypt, in 1851, an entozoon, the Distoma hæmatobium, since called Bilharzia hæmatobia; and Hexathyridium venarum, called also Polystoma sanguicola, has been found in venous blood.

hæ-mąt-ūr'-ĭ-ą, s. [Pref. hæmat- (q.v.), and Gr. οὖρον (ouron) = urine.]
Med.: Blood in the urine, generally from kidney affections, or from direct injury, or other causes.

hæ'-mĭc, a. [Pref. hæm- (q.v.); Eng., &c. suff. -ic.] Anat., &c.: Of or belonging to the blood.
"A clot in one of the heart's cavities, giving rise to an inorganic or functional hæmic murmur."—Tanner: Practice of Med. (7th ed.), ii. 17.

hæ-mō-, pref. [HÆMA-.]

hæ-mŏd-ōr-ā'-çē-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. hæmodor(um); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -aceæ.] Bot.: Bloodroots; an order of Endogens, alliance Narcissales. It consists of herbaceous plants, with fibrous perennial roots and permanent sword-shaped equitant leaves; perianth generally woolly; the calyx and the corolla undistinguishable; adherent stamens three or six; ovary generally three-celled, each cell one, two, or many-seeded; fruit capsular. They occur in South America, the Cape of Good Hope, Australia, &c. Described species thirteen, known species fifty. The order is divided into three tribes, Hæmodoreæ, Conostyleæ, and Vellozieæ.

hæ-mŏ-dŏr'-ĕ-æ, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. hæmodor(um); Lat. fem. pl. adj. suff. -eæ.]

Bot.: The typical tribe of Hæmodoraceæ. The perianth is smooth and short.

hæ-mŏd'-ôr-ŭm, s. [Pref. hæmo-, and Gr. δῶρον (dōron) = a gift; so named because it produces a red flower.]

Bot.: The typical genus of the tribe Hæmodoreæ, order Hæmodoraceæ (q.v.). The natives of the Swan River eat the roots of Hæmodorum paniculatum and H. spicatum.

hæ'-mō-glō-bĭn, s. [Pref. hæmo-; Lat. glob(us), and suff. -in (Chem.) (q.v.).]

Chem.: An albuminoid substance, which forms the chief part of the red corpuscles of the blood of vertebrata. The defibrinated blood is mixed with dilute alcohol: after twenty-four hours the hæmaglobin separates out in violet-red rhombic octohedra. It is soluble in water, forming a red solution, and is reprecipitated by alcohol. The aqueous solution of hæmaglobin has two absorption bands in its spectrum, by which the presence of blood can be detected. Hæmaglobin unites with oxygen, forming a bright red colour in solution: with carbon monoxide it gives a blue-red colour. The colour of hæmaglobin is due to hæmatin.

hæ'-mŏn-ŷ, s. [Gr. αἱμώνιος (haimonios) = blood-red.]

Bot.: An unidentified plant described by Milton. For def., see the extract. [HEMONY.]

"The leaf was darkish, and had prickles on it,
But in another country, as he said,
Bore a bright golden flower, but not in this soil...
And yet more medicinal is it than that moly
That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave.
He called it hæmony, and gave it me,
And bade me keep it as of sovereign use
'Gainst all enchantments." Milton: Comus, 638.

hæ-mŏ-phĭl'-ĭ-ą, s. [Pref. hæmo-, and Gr. φιλία (philia) = love, affection; Fr. hémophilie.]

Pathol.: The hæmorrhagic diathesis, characterized by an excessive tendency to spontaneous bleedings of various parts from very slight, sometimes inappreciable causes, with excess of red corpuscles, and great diminution of fibrin. H.R.H. the Duke of Albany was affected by hæmophilia, which may have remotely conduced to his sudden death on March 28, 1884.

"The best ascertained cause of hæmophilia is hereditary disposition." — Quain: Dict. of Medicine (1882), p. 568.

hæ-mŏp'-sĭs, s. [Pref. hæm(a)-, and Gr. ὄψις (opsis) = look, appearance.]

Zool.: A genus of Annelids, order Hirudinea. It contains the Horse-leech. Hæmopsis sanguisorba. [HORSE-LEECH.]

hæ-mŏp'-tỹ-sĭs, s. [Pref. hæmo-, and Gr. πτύσις (ptusis) = a spitting, from πτύω (ptuō) = to spit.]

Pathol.: "Spitting of blood" from the lungs, a grave symptom in phthisis and some other diseases. Recurrence is frequent, and the quantity being large, a fatal result generally ensues. Syncope tends to retard this and other hæmorrhages, and ice, gallic and sulphuric acids, &c., are indicated for restraining it, and particularly of late the injection of ergotine.

hæmorrhage (pron. hĕm'-ôr-rĭj), s. [Lat. hæmorrhagia; Gr. αἱμορρηγία (haimorrhagia) (see def.). Gr. αἷμα (haima) = blood, and ῥαγή (rhagē) = a rent; ῥήγνυμι (rhēgnumi) = to break, to burst through.]

Path.: Bleeding from the heart, arteries, capillaries, or veins, capillary hæmorrhage being the commonest form. Generally, though not invariably, the vessels are ruptured. In a solid organ it is called an extravasation, hæmorrhagic infarction (in embolism), or apoplexy. Hæmorrhage from the nose is known as epistaxis; from the lungs, hæmoptysis; from the stomach, hæmatemesis; from the female genitals, menorrhagia; from the urine, hæmaturia; from the bowels, melæna. The general indications for treatment are to stop the bleeding and prevent its recurrence.

hæm-ŏr-rhăg'-ĭc (æ as ĕ), a. [Eng. hæmorrhag(e); -ic.]

Pathol.: Of, belonging, or tending to hæmorrhage.

"The hæmorrhagic diathesis."—Tanner: Pract. of Med. (7th ed.), i. 4.

hæmorrhagic phthisis, s.

Pathol.: Phthisis (consumption) in which there is a disorganization and disintegration of blood-clots after pulmonary extravasation.

hæm-ŏr-rhoĭd (æ as ĕ), s. [Lat. hæmorrhois; Gr. αἱμορροΐς (haimorrhois), genit. αἱμορρόϊδος (haimorrhoidos) = veins liable to discharge blood; hæmorrhoids, piles.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. A venomous worm. (Holland.)

2. (Pl.): In the same sense as II. In the Bible called Emerods (q.v.).

II. Path.: The disease popularly called piles, consisting of tumours, from the lower part of the rectum or around the anus. They frequently discharge blood.

hæm-ŏr-rhoĭd'-al (æ as ĕ), a. [Eng., &c. hæmorrhoid; -al.]

1. Anat.: Of or belonging to the veins in the lower part of the rectum, or to the lower part of the rectum itself. Thus there are hæmorrhoidal arteries, nerves, &c.

2. Path.: Of or belonging to the disease called piles. [HÆMORRHOID.]

hæmorrhoidal-plexus, s.

Anat.: Enlarged and copiously anastomosing veins in the walls of the lower part of the rectum, immediately underneath the mucous membrane. (Quain.) hæ-mŏ-spās'-tĭc, a. [Pref. hæmo-, and Lat. spasticus; Gr. σπαστικός (spastikos) = stretching, drawing, from σπάω (spaō) = to draw.]

Surg. & Med.: Drawing blood. (Used of any therapeutic agent for producing an efflux of blood.)

hæ-mŏ-stā'-sĭ-ą, s. [Gr. αἱμόστασις (haimostasis) = a means of stopping blood.]

Path.: Stagnation of blood arising from plethora.

† hæ-mŏ-stăt'-ĭ-cą, s. [Pref. hæmo- (q.v.), and Gr. ἵστημι (histēmi) = to make to stand.]

Phar.: A medicine designed to stop hæmorrhage; a styptic. [STYPTIC.]

hæ-mŏ-thŏr'-ăx, s. [Pref. hæmo-, and Eng., &c. thorax (q.v.).]

Path.: Hæmorrhage into the pleura; the physical signs are those of pleuritic effusion, pleurisy (q.v.), with the addition of blood in the inflammatory state, generally from rupture of some blood-vessel, as in aneurism, or of carcinoma of the lung giving way into the pleura.

hæ-mŏt'-rŏ-phỹ, s. [Pref. hæmo-, and Gr. τροφή (trophē) = nonrishment; τρέφω (trephō) = to make firm, to make fat, to nourish.]

Path.: Over-richness of the blood.

hæm'-ų-lŏn, s. [Pref. hæma- (q.v.), and Gr. οὖλον (oulon) = the gum. Named from the red colour of the gums of the fish.]

Ichthy.: A genus of Sciæneidæ, one species of which is called in the Antilles Red Gullet.

haen, pa. par. [HAVE, v.]

hāet, s. [Prob. a corrupt. of iota (q.v.).] The least thing; a jot; an iota.

"Deil haet do I expect."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xliv.

* hăf, v.t. [HAVE.]

* hăf, pret. of v. [HEAVE, v.]

haf-en-deale, adv. [HALFEN-DELE.]

hăf'-fĕts, hăf'-fits, s. pl. [A.S. heafod = the head.]

1. The sides of the head; the temples.

"The grey locks that straggled from beneath it down his weatherbeaten haffets."—Scott: Heart of Mid-Lothian, ch. xlii.

2. A blow on the side of the head; a box of the ears.

3. The fixed part of a lid or cover to which the movable part is hinged.

hăf'-fle, v.i. [An imitative word.] To stammer; to speak unintelligibly; to prevaricate; to waver.

hăf'-fĭn, hăf'-lĭn, half-lin, s. & a. [For halfling, from half; suff. -ling.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A stripling; a lad.

2. A half-witted person.

II. Carp.: A tryiog-plane.

B. As adj.: Stripling; half-grown; not fully grown.

"My mother sent me, that was a haffin callant, to show the stranger the gate."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. xl.

haf'-lĭng, half'-lĭngş, adv. [HALFLING.]

hăf-nĕf-jor'-dīte, s. [Named from Hafnefjord, in Iceland, where it occurs.]

Min.: A variety of oligoclase.

haft, hĕft, s. [A.S. hæft = a handle; cogn. with Dut. heft, hecht; Icel. hefti; Ger. heft, from the same root as A.S. habban; Icel. hafa; Goth. haban; Lat. capio = to take hold of.]

1. A handle; that part of an instrument which is taken in the hand, and by which it is used or held; used especially of a knife or tool.

"But yet ne fond I nought the haft, Whiche might unto the blade accorde."
Gower: C. A., bk. iv.

2. A dwelling; custody.

"She came to fetch her out of lil haft and waur guiding."—Scott: Heart of Mid-Lothian, ch. xviii.

haft (1), v.t. [HAFT, s.]

1. To set or fix in a haft or handle.

* 2. To drive or force up to the haft or hilt.

"This mye blade in thye body shonld bee with speedinesa hafted."—Stanyhurst: Conceites, p. 143.

* 3. To settle; to fix; to establish as in a residence.

"Ye preached us . . . out o' this new city o' refuge afore our hinder end was weel hafted in it."—Scott: Old Mortality, ch. viii.

* haft (2), v.t. [Etym. doubtful; cf. Ger. haften = to cling or stick to.] To hesitate; to delay; to cavil; to wrangle.

haft'-ĕr (1), s. [Eng. haft (s.); -er.] A workman who makes and fixes the hafts or handles of knives, tools, &c.

* haft'-ĕr (2), s. [Eng. haft (2), v.; -er.] A caviller; a wrangler.

* haft'-ĭng, * haft-yng, s. [Eng. haft (2), v.; -ing.] Delay; cavilling; wrangling.

"Without any farther hafting or holding off."—P. Holland: Ammianus Marcellinus, p. 275 hăg (1), * hagge, s. [A.S. hægtesse; cogn. with Ger. haxe = a witch; O. H. Ger. hâzissa; M. H. Ger. hacke. The A.S. is probably from haga = a hedge or bush.]

I. Ordinary Language:

* 1. (In the masculine gender): A wizard.

"And that old hag [Silenus] that with a staff his staggering limbs doth stay."
Golding: Ovid; Metamorphoses iv.

2. A witch; a sorceress.

"The buried Prophet answered to the Hag
Of Endor." Byron: Manfred, ii. 2.

3. A fury; a she-monster or devil.

"Fierce fiends and hags of hell their only nurses were." Thomson: Castle of Indolence, i. 73.

4. An ugly old woman.

"But such a hag to paradise conveyed,
Had withered by her looks the blissful shade."
Hoole: Orlando Furioso, xliii. 998.

* 5. A kind of luminous or phosphoric light or fire appearing on horses' manes, hair, &c.

II. Ichthy.: The name given by fishermen to a fish, Myxine glutinosa or Gastrobranchus cæcus, so low in organization that Linnæus considered it a worm in place of a vertebrate animal. The mouth has cirri or tentacles; there is but one tooth, and the eyes are wanting. The Hag is a parasite within the bodies of other fishes. It is believed to bore, hence it is sometimes named the Borer. It occurs in the Atlantic. It is called more fully the Glutinous Hag, from the quantity of mucus which it secretes, and which, could it be obtained in quantities, would be of economic value.

* hag-born, hag-borne, a. Born of a witch or hag. (Shakesp.: Tempest, i. 2.)

hag-fish, s. [HAG (1).]

* hag-ridden, a. Suffering from or afflicted with the nightmare. (Lit. & fig.)

"Was I his Arm, his Thunderbolt? And now, Must I, hag-ridden, pant as in a dream?"
Coleridge: Zapolya, i.

* hag-seed, s The seed or descendant of a hag. (Shakesp: Tempest, i. 2.)

hag-taper, s. [HIG-TAPER.]

hag-weed, s. Besom-weed.

hag's-teeth, hake's-teeth, s. pl.

Naut.: A part of a matting, pointing, &c., interwoven with the rest in an irregular manner, so as to spoil the general appearance and uniformity of the whole.

hăg (2), s. [A variant of hack (q.v.).]

1. A stroke with a sharp and heavy instrument, as an axe or chopping-knife.

2. A notch. "He may strike a hag in the post," is a proverbial phrase applied to one who has been very fortunate.

3. One cutting or felling of a certain quantity of copse wood.

4. The wood so cut down.

"Edward learned from her that the old hag, . . . was simply a portion of oak copse which was to be felled that day."—Scott: Waverley, ch. x.

5. Mossy ground; a quagmire.

"Owre mony a weary hag he limpit."
Burns: Tam Samson's Elegy.

hăg (3), s. [Etym. doubtful.] A bachelor; a fellow.

* hăg (1), v.t. [Hag (1), s.] To frighten; to harass; to torment; to annoy.

"The timorous man, whose nature is thus hagged with frightful imaginations of invisible powers."—Scott: Christian Life, pt. ii., ch. iii., § 2.

hăg (2), v.t. [Hag (2), s.] To cut, fell, or hew down.

ha-ga'-da, s. [Heb. הַגָּדָה (hagadah) = said, reported; Aramaic אַגָּדָא (agadah), from נָגַד (nagad) = in Hiphil, to point out, to announce, to proclaim, to say.]

Hebrew Lit.: A branch of the Midrash, or most ancient Jewish exposition of the Old Testament. It extends over the whole of these sacred books, and is homiletic and poetical. (Ginsburg.) ha-găd'-ĭc, a. [Heb., &c. hagad(a) (q.v.), and auff. -ic.]

Hebrew Lit.: Of or belonging to the hagada.

hagadic-exegesis, s. Homiletic exegesis, or interpretation of the Old Testament, a part of the Midrash. It must be distioguished from the Halachic or Legal exposition. [Halachic.]

"Hence the term Midrashic, or Hagadic-exegesis, so commonly used in Jewish writings, by which is meant an interpretation in the spirit of those national and traditional views."—Ginsburg in Kitto's Ency. (3rd ed.), iii. 167.

hăg'-bĕr-rў, s. [Eng. hag (2) (?), and berry.]

Bot.: (1) Cerasus Padus; (2) Celtis crassifolia.

* hăg'-bŭt, s. [Hackbut.]

* haghut-man, s. A soldier armed with a haghut or arquebuse.

"All the German haghut-men."
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 6.

hăge'-măn-nīte, s. [From Dr. Hagemann, who first described it in 1866.]

Min.: A variety of Thomsenolite, constituting altered cryolite from Greenland. Hagemann describes it as Dimetric Pachnolite, it being found with that mineral. Dana called it Thomsenolite, of which in the Brit. Mus. Cat. it is recognized as a variety.

Hăg'-gă-ī, s. [Heb. חַגַּי (Chhaggai or Haggai). The name means festive, and is from חָג (chhag, or hag) = a festival; Sept. Ἀγγαῖος (Aggaios).]

Scrip. Canon: The tenth of the twelve minor prophets. Of the seer himself nothing is known. His book has always been regarded as canonical. The several datea are all in the Second year of Darius the king—i.e., of Darius Hystaspes, B.C. 520. The prophet aims at inducing the people without delay to resume the rebuilding of the temple which had been commenced in 535, the second year of Cyrus, but had been discontinued, owing to Samaritan and other opposition. Haggai predicted that the glory of the latter temple should be greater than that of its splendid predecessor, a prophecy which most expositors believe to refer to the first advent of Christ (ii. 7, 9). Verse 6 is quoted in Heb. xii. 26.

* hăg'-gard (1), * hag-ard, a. & s. [Fr. hagard = living in a hedge, wild, untamed, from M. H. Ger. hag, O. H. Ger. hac = a hedge.]

A. As adj.: Wild; untamed; fierce; intractable.

"As hagard hawks, presuming to contend With hardy fowle." Spenser: F. Q., I. xi. 19.

B. As substantive:

1. A wild or untrained hawk.

"The falcon, the falcon gentil, and the haggard, are made distinct species."—Pennant: British Zoology; Lanner.

2. Any thing fierce, wild, or intractable.

"I have loved this proud disdainful haggard."
Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, iv. 1.

3. A hag.

hăg'-gard (2), a. [A corrupt. of hagged (q.v.).] Having the appearance of one wasted away by pain or suffering; wan, pale, gaunt.

"The huge and haggard shape."
Longfellow. Discoverer of the North Cape.

hăg'-gard (3), hag-garth, s. [Eng. hay, and Mid. Eng. garth = a yard or inclosure.] A stack-yard.

"All to your haggard brought so cheap in."
Swift: Dr. Delany's Villa.

hăg'-gard-lў, adv. [Eng. haggard (2), a.; -ly.] In a haggard, wan, or gaunt fashion.

"How haggardly soe'er she looks at home."
Dryden: Juvenal, sat. vi..

* hăg'-gĕd, a. [Eng. hag (1), s.; -ed.] Like a hag or witch; hag-like, haggard, ugly.

"The ghostly prudes with hagged face."
Gray: A Long Story.

hăg'-gĭs, hăg'-gĕss, s. [Fr. hachis = a hash; cf. hag, v. = to chop, or cut.]

1. A sheep's head and pluck minced.

2. A Scotch dish, made of liver, lights, heart, &c., minced with onions, boiled in a sheep's stomach. It is round in shape, hence the point of the quotation.

"Even a haggis (God bless her!) could charge down hill."—Scott: Waverley, ch. xlvi.

* hăg'-gĭsh, a. [Eng. hag (1), s.; -ish.] Pertaining to or resembling a hag; hag-like, ugly, deformed, wrinkled.

"But on us both did haggish age steal on."
Shakesp.: All's Well That Ends Well, i. 2.

* hăg'-gĭsh-lў, adv. [Eng. haggish; -ly.] In a haggish or haglike manner.

* hăg'-gle (1), v.t. [A weakened form of hackle, a frequent. from hack (q.v.).] To cut, chop, notch, or hack; to cut unskilfully; to mangle.

"Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er, Comes to him." Shakesp.: Henry V., iv. 6.

hăg'-gle (2), v.i. [Prob. for hackle, a frequent. of hack: cf. Dut. hakkelen = to mangle, to stammer.] To be long or tedious in coming to a bargain; to higgle; to cavil or stick at a price on small matters.

"Haggling with the greedy, making up quarrels."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xx.

hăg'-glĕr (1), s. [Eng. haggl(e) (1); -er.] One who hacks or cuts anything unskilfully; a mangler.

hăg'-glĕr (2), s. [Eng. haggl(e) (2); -er.]

1. One who haggles or is long in agreeing to a price; a higgler.

2. A travelling merchant; a retail dealer; a pedlar.

"Horses, on which haglers used to ride and carry their commodities."—Fuller: Worthies; Dorsetshire.

3. In London vegetable markets a middleman, acting between the producer and the retail dealer.

* haghes, * hagues, s. [Hagois.]

* hăg'-ĭ-ar-chў, s. [Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = holy, and ἀρχή (archē) = government, rule.] The government or rule of holy orders of men; a sacred government.

hăg-ĭ-ŏc'-ra-çў, s. [Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = holy, and κρατέω (kratĕō) = to rule or govern.] A sacred government; a hierarchy; the rule or government of the priesthood.

"The intention of the ancient law was over-stepped in the late days of the hagiocracy."—Ewald: Antiq. Israel (ed. Solly), p. 81.

* hăg'-ĭ-ō-graph, s. [Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = holy, and γραφή (graphē) = a writing.] A holy or sacred writing.

hăg-ĭ-ŏg'-raph-a, s. pl. [Pl. of Gr. ἁγιόγραφος (hagiographos) = written by inspiration; Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = holy, and γράφω (graphō) = to write.]

Script. Canon: A Greek word, signifying sacred writings, first introduced by Epiphanius as the rendering of the Hebrew word כְּתוּבִים (Kethubhim) = writings. The third and last great division of the Old Testament books, the others being Torah (the Law) and Nebiim (the Prophets). The division does not occur in the Old Testament itself. It is probable that the writings were originally called as they are in the prologue to Ecclesiastes, the "other writings." The three-fold division is alluded to in the New Testament, the several parts being described as "the law of Moses," "the Prophets," and "the Psalms" (Luke xxiii. 44). In this passage the Psalms are the Hagiographa. When the division is two-fold, the Law and the Prophets, the Hagiographa are merged in the second category (Matt. v. 17, xi. 13). In our present Hebrew bibles the Hagiographa consist of thirteen books thus arranged: Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and 1 and 2 Chronicles.

hăg-ĭ-ŏg'-ra-phal, a. [Eng. hagiograph(y); -al.] Of or pertaining to hagiography or the hagiographa.

hăg-ĭ-ŏg'-ra-phĕr, s. [Eng. hagiograph(a); -er.] A holy writer; a writer of holy or sacred books of the lives of the saints; one of the writers of the hagiographa.

hăg-ĭ-ŏg'-ra-phў, s. [Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = devoted to the gods, sacred; (of persons) = holy, pious, pure, and γραφή (graphē) = a writing.] A writing or history treating of holy people; hagiology (q.v.).

hăg-ĭ-ŏl'-a-trў, s. [Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = devoted to the gods, holy, pious, and λατρεία (latreia) = worship; λατρεύω (latreuō) = to serve the gods with prayers and sacrifices.]

1. Ch. Hist. & Roman Theol.: [Invocation of Saints].

2. Compar. Religion: The highest form of manes-worship (q.v.), itself one of the great branches of the religion of mankind. Hagiolatry, in some form or other, exists in nearly every religion, and shows how deeply seated and widespread is the belief in the continuity of the human race. In the hagiolatry of the Roman Church, the student of the science of religion sees the agency which prompted the ancient Romans to deify Romulus, and which still leads the Chinese to sacrifice to the spirit of Confucius. The worship of saints answers strictly to the old manes-worship, and they gradually replaced the old local gods and the patron gods of particular crafts. Thus St. Cecilia is the patron of musicians, St. Luke of painters, St. Peter of fishmongers, St. Sebastian of archers, St. Crispin of cobblers. In fact every trade or profession has its patron saint, whilst devotion to certain other saints is declared to be a preservative against certain bodily ills; thus St. Vitus protects his clients from the disease which bears his name; St. Hubert cures the bite of mad dogs, and so on. Tylor (Primitive Culture, ii. 111) relates a curious example, showing how the functions ascribed to Æsculapius were transferred to SS. Cosmas and Damian. They suffered under Diocletian at Ægææ, in Cilicia. That town was celebrated for a temple of Æculapius. The next we hear of these saints is that they appeared in a dream to Justinian, when he was ill at Byzantium, and restored him to health. Legend settles that they were physicians on earth, and they are the patron saints of the profession of medicine to this day. [Hero-worship.]

"As to the actual state of hagiolatry in modern Europe, it is obvious that it is declining among the educated classes."—Tylor: Primitive Culture, ii. 111.

hăg-ĭ-ŏl'-ō-gĭst, s. [Eng. hagiolog(y); -ist.] A writer of hagiology; one who writes or treats of the lives of the saints of any faith.

"Quite consistent with the habits of the Buddhist theologians and hagiologists."—Tylor: Primitive Culture (1871), ii. 199.

hăg-ĭ-ŏl'-ō-gў, s. [Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = holy, and λόγος (logos) = a discourse.] [Hagiography.] Any work on the lives of saints; used specially of the Roman Catholic biographies, legendary or historical, of Christian saints. Nearly the same as Hagiography (q.v.).

* hăg'-ĭ-ō-scōpe, s. [Gr. ἅγιος (hagios) = holy, and σκοπέω (skopeō) = to see.]

Arch.: An opening through the wall of a Roman Catholic Church, in an oblique direction, for the purpose of enabling persons in the transept or aisles to see the elevation of the host at the high altar; a squint (q.v.).

"They do not usually have hagioscopes from which the performance of mass could be seen."—Notes & Queries, Oct. 14, 1882, p. 301.

hăg'-shĭp, s. [Eng. hag; -ship.] The state or condition of a hag; a title applied to a hag.

"Oh, 'tis the charm her hagship gave me."
Middleton: Witch, ii. 2.

hague-but, s. [HACKBUT.]

hah, interj. [Onomatopœtic.] An exclamation or expression denoting surprise, sudden effort, &c.

"She stamps, and then cries hah! at every thrust."
Dryden: Juvenal, sat. vi.

ha'-ha, s. [A redupl. of haw = a hedge.] A sunk fence or ditch; a haw-haw.

hăi dĭng'-ĕr-ite, s. [Named after W. Haidinger.]

Mineralogy:

1. That of Turner: An orthorhombic, white, transparent or translucent, sectile mineral of vitreous lustre. Hardness, 1·5 to 2·5; sp. gr., 2·85. Compos.: arsenic acid, 58·1; lime, 28·3; water, 13·6 = 100. From Baden or Joachimsthal. (Dana.)

2. That of Berthier: The same as BERTHIERITE (q.v.).

haï'-dûck, hey'-dûck, hey'-dûc, s. [Hung. hayduk = drovers.] A name given to the halberdiers of Hungarian nobles and attendants in German courts; formerly a mercenary foot soldier in Hungary.

"I learned the art from a Polonian heyduck."—Scott: Legend of Montrose, ch. xiii.

hāle, s. [HAY.] A hedge.

hāik, s. [Arab. hâik, from hâko = to weave.] A piece of woollen or cotton cloth worn by Arabs over the tunic, and under the burnoose; a hyke.

hāil, *haile, *hayl, *hayle, s. [A.S. hagol, hagol; cogn. with Icel. hagl; Ger., Dut., Dan., & Sw. hagel.]

Physics & Metcorol.: Ice, generally of globular form, or consisting of various globules cemented together, showers of which fall from the sky. Its descent is heralded and accompanied by a peculiar noise. It does not often fall at night. Ordinarily it is most frequent in spring and summer; if it falls in winter, it is at the beginning and end of it rather than during its depth. It is often the precursor of storms. As a rule it acts within a line of considerable length, but of very limited breadth. The exact method of the formation in the sky is not quite understood.

 hail-mixed, a. Mingled with hail.

"The drifted turbulence Of hail-mixed snows." Mallet.

hāil (1), *haile, *hail-en, *hayl, v.i. & t. [HAIL, s.]

A. Intrans.: To pour down hail.

"My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, when it shall hail."—Isaiah xxxii. 19.

B. Trans.: To pour down or out, as hail.

"He hailed down oaths that he was only mine."
Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, i. 1.

hāil (2), *heile, *heil-en, *heyl-yn, v.t. & i. [Formed from Icel. heill = hale, sound.]

A. Transitive:

1. To call to, as to a person at a distance to arrest his attention; specif., of a ship for purposes of communication.

"But ere he came, like one that hails a ship, Cried out with a big voice, 'What, is he dead?'"
Tennyson: Geraint & Enid, 1,389.

2. To designate; to call; to address as.

"I gained a son,
And such a son as all men hailed me happy."
Milton: Samson Agonistes, 354.

3. To welcome, to salute.

"The ravished crowds shall hail their passing lord."
Pitt: Vida; Art of Poetry, bk. i.

B. Intransitive:

Naut.: Applied to a vessel with respect to the port from which she sails: as, A ship hails from London; hence, generally, to come: as, He hails from New York.

hāil, a., interj., & s. [HALE, a.]

* A. As adj.: Hearty, whole, and sound.

B. As interj.: An exclamation of greeting, welcome, or salutation.

"Hail, sable power,
To me more dear than riches and renown!"
Smollett: Regicide, iii. 1.

C. As subst.: A salutation, a greeting, a welcome.

Hail-Mary, s.

Eccles. & Ch. Hist.: The best known and most general form of prayer which the Roman Church makes use of in honour of the Blessed Virgin. It consists of three parts: the Salutation of the angel, "Hail, Mary! full of grace, the Lord is with thee" (Luke i. 28); and the words of Elizabeth, "Blessed art thou amongst women, blessed is the fruit of thy womb" (Luke i. 42), to which has been added the word Jesus; and the conclusion, "Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death. Amen." Some theologians have held that the latter part was added by the Council of Ephesus (A.D. 431), that the petition as far as "sinners" dates from 1508, and that the remainder is of still later date, and of Franciscan origin. (Geschler.) The Hail Mary now finds a place in many Ritualistic books of devotion.

hāil (2), s. [HAIL (2), v.] A call; an address of welcome or salutation.

¶ Within hail: Within the reach of the voice; within call.

 hail-fellow, s. An intimate acquaintance; one in intimate companionship.

¶ At hail-fellow: Very intimate; on terms of the closest intimacy.

hāill, a. [HALE.] Whole, sound, entire.

"An ye wad ever hae a haill bane in your skin, let's out man, let's out."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. xlviii.

 hāilse, v.t. [Icel. heilsa = to salute, to say hail to; Sw. helsa.] To salute, to hail, to greet, to embrace.

"I hailsed him kindly, als i kowth,
He answerd me mildeli with mowth."
Ywaine & Gawine. (Ritson, vol. i.)

 hāil'-shŏt, s. [Eng. hail, and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail. (P. Holland: Plutarch, p. 477.)

hāil'-sŏme, hāle'-sŏme, a. [Eng. hail, hale; -some.] Wholesome; contributing to health.

hāil'-stone, s. [Eng. hail, and stone.] One of the stony-like bodies consisting of frozen water, which, descending from the sky, constitute hail.

"You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun."
Shakesp.: Coriolanus, i. 1.

hāil'-storm, s. [Eng. hail, and storm.] A storm or heavy fall of hail.

hāil'-ў, a. [Eng. hail (1), s.; -y.] Consisting of or resembling hail.

"A rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to haily showers."
Pope: Statius; Thebais i. 495.

hāin, v.t. & i. [Icel. hagna = to hedge, to enclose, to protect.]

A. Transitive:

1. To set aside or inclose for mowing.

2. To spare, to save.

"Wi' tentie care I'll fit thy tether,
To some hain'd rig."
Burns: Auld Farmer's Salutation.

B. Intrans.: To be sparing, saving, or parsimonious.

hāin'-oŭs, a. [HEINOUS.]

hāir, *haire, *heer, *her, *here, s. [A.S. hær, her; cogn. with Dut. haar; Icel. hár; Dan. haar; Sw. hår.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II. 1.

"The Indians of Tancuylabo weare their haire long downe to their knees."—Hackluyt: Voyages, iii. 463.

*(2) A kind of cloth or garment made of haircloth.

"And therto she had on an haire."
Romaunt of the Rose.

(3) A single filament of hair.

"And beauty draws us with a single hair."
Pope: Rape of the Lock, ii. 28.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Anything proverbially small or fine; a very small distance or degree. [HAIRBREADTH.]

"If I swerve a hair from truth."
Shakesp.: Troilus & Cressida, iii. 2.

*(2) Course, direction, order, tendency, grain (from the hair naturally falling in a certain direction).

"If you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 3.

II. Technically:

1. Anat. & Phys.: The structure is analogous to that of the teeth, the hair-follicle being an inversion of the skin, as the tooth-follicle is of the mucous membrane, and is formed like dentine by the conversion of pulp enclosed in a follicle, the external and densest part being the bulb, the soft interior the pulp. Hairs, like the nails, are horny protuberances from the epidermis, and show two parts, the cortical or investing (horny), and the medullary (the pithy interior), varying in different animals, from the hedge-hog and porcupine to the musk-deer. Human hair is composed of a tube of horny fibrous substance, with a central medulla enclosing pigment cells; outside all are scales like tiles on a roof, forming delicate lines on the hair-surfaces, transverse, oblique, or spiral. Emotion has been known to turn the hair white in a single night, but of all the animal tissues it is the most durable, being found very perfect in Egyptian mummies nearly 4,000 years old.

¶ Darwin points out an apparent correlation between hair and teeth.

2. Bot.: Minute transparent filiform acute processes, composed of cellular tissue more or less elongated, and arranged in a single row. They are formed by the epidermis, and may consist of a single cell, a cell-row, a cell-surface, or a cell-mass. They may, on the one hand, be simple or lymphatic; or, on the other, may be glandular. They are of various types: thus there may be stellate, scabrous, uncinated hairs, &c.

